Thursday 27th, Portofino – Elba 6.45 in the morning and we are about 2 hours out of Portofino en route to Elba. [...] The ship ploughs sturdily and I suppose steadily on to the beginning of Boney's One Hundred Days.²⁵³ Have just finished reading White's The Making of the President 1968 which I found very readable.²⁵⁴ He, White, is obviously a good man. I am at the moment re-reading Machiavelli and it is extraordinary how all his dicta apply to the letter to the American Elections. A man must never lie to himself but must, if necessary, lie to the people if he thinks it is good for them. This both Humphrey, Nixon and Wallace did time and time again if only by omission. Lies that are lies repeated endlessly with adulatory listeners who believe the lies even if they were told the same lies in a bar by a friend who know them to be lies. [...] Elizabeth has gone back to bed reading Coward's Hay Fever which they've asked us to play on the stage and then make a film of. I've never read the play or seen it but Coward doesn't sound like our cup of tea. Mugs of beer or should I say ales are more in my line as an actor than pink champagne which is what Noel produces so beautifully. Still, I shall read it after Elizabeth and see if I can compromise and be black velvet.²⁵⁵

Thursday 27th continued, at Sea [...] Yesterday was as mad as usual in Portofino – scores of small craft and one biggish one – about fifty feet, a largeish cabin-cruiser with a decadent looking white haired Italian owner about 55 years old or perhaps a well preserved 65 with lots of young girls – women – in bikinis, all very brown who had obviously come to look us over. We retreated inside to the salon. They got fed up in about an hour and a half and left. No people look quite as dissipated dissolute and handsomely debased as the rich middle-aged Latin. Vulpine creatures all coldly arrogant and generally with seedy titles and a powerful ambience of orgy. The women too with their lithe hard-eyed gigolos in disdainful condescending tow. They are virtually incapable of being affronted except by a whispered enormity from me in my vilest Italian as I pass within muttering distance. They are great fun to insult, because men of that age (I'm now talking only of the French and Italian Roués) remember only too painfully still the humiliations of the 39–45 war.

Gianni had a nasty little accident yesterday. He saw what he thought was a new kind of ball-point pen and fiddled with it to see how it worked. It was 'Mace' and he gave himself a faceful of it.²⁵⁶ He cried gas tears for about an hour. It was our fault for leaving it lying about without telling everybody what it was. It was the kind that ladies carry in their handbags and had been accidentally unpacked by the stewardess Eugenie. Could have been much nastier. [...]

Friday 28th, San Ferraio, Elba²⁵⁷ I slept for 10 hours last night. I have rarely felt so tired. We got here about 3 o'clock after a smooth journey. [...] This is the little place from which Napoleon set out for Waterloo. It's a bustling, beautifully sheltered little port with not a throng of tourists but enough to make the stroll past the yacht and the stare at its occupants worth a walk they think. There are lots of those gaily decorated horse and carriages which trot back and forth which afford the dogs – our dogs – great opportunities for barking. I was so tired last night that I had a vodka martini but it was of no avail and I struggled through a modest dinner almost too tired to eat and went to bed at nine! We are moored right opposite a Bar Roma which is next door to a Hotel Darsena Ristorante announcing itself in large yellow letters. Higher above are the words 'Grand Hotel Darsena.' I love the little port already and hopefully we will only have people and no paparazzi which will make it a little heaven, and we must go and see Napoleon's Prison or whatever they call it.²⁵⁸ Almost all the houses are pale yellow and all the shutters are green – without exception.

John Heyman found us here last night having come by Motoscafola from Piombino.²⁵⁹ His news was that he had commissioned John Osborne to write two plays – a sort of Rashomon 1970 for E and I to do on TV for Harlech, which should get that lot off my back.²⁶⁰ Osborne starts work on Monday. I wrote him a short delighted note. I hope it's some good. We passed a barren little rock half way here yesterday called Gargoni a most inhospitable looking place and a place of terror I've no doubt in earlier days and a haven for pirate vessels.²⁶¹ [...]

Saturday 29th, Portoferraio [...] We had lunch yesterday in a charming sea-side trattoria called very originally Ristorante della Mare – unhonoured by the Michelin Guide. The food was magnificent. We all decided to go off our various diets and to hell with it. We had mussels to start, dipping into hearts of artichoke, button-mushrooms, salami and other sausages the while, followed by a sort of thick clam and tomato soup followed by spaghetti with a sauce called something like ‘pesti’ – I mean something that sounded like that. It is a local herb, apparently, this ‘pesti’ slightly bitter but delicious – quite unlike any other taste that I can think of. I had four glasses of the local wine.

We bought in Portofino an immobile bicycle – one of those contraptions which when assembled presents you with a little bicycle on its own stand. One can adjust the height of handlebars and seat to one's own satisfaction. It has a kilometre attached which records your speed and after you've finished how much you have theoretically travelled.²⁶² Also attached is a clock which you set before you begin at the amount of time you wish to travel. When that time is up a bell rings. I started off four days ago with five minutes and am now doing 15 minutes. It seems a long and boring time and I am trying to find a music stand or something of that sort here in town which I can set up in front of the bike so that I can read. The problem is that as you pedal so the handlebars move forward and back. I might try reading by holding a book with one hand for five minutes and then changing to the other, in order to give each arm its own work-out. Because the arms work too. But more satisfactorily it would be a stand from which to read turning over the occasional page. I will try something this evening. Am now reading in tandem The Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson with Machiavelli.²⁶³ The parallels are again very amusing. I will try and record some. [...]

Sunday 30th The sun is temporarily out but generally it looks like a continuation of yesterday, grey and dull. We went dutifully to Napoleon's house which was very pleasant and middle-class, not at all grand. A garden that could be lovely and a magnificent view of the ocean. The only place of real interest to me was the library but naturally, as in all such musées it was roped off. The bike is a marvellous idea. I ‘rode’ for twenty minutes this morning, sweated like a bull, and hot and cold showered for a further twenty. Makes one feel magnificently virtuous and fit. We are going by car, not our own – hired Hertz – to Rio Marina today and stopping somewhere en route for lunch.²⁶⁴ [...] I have read so many books recently about Lyndon Johnson and nowhere does he seem a likeable man, with an ego so vast that it almost approaches mania, genuine madness. We are getting the English papers again and as before, after a long absence, they seem so stiflingly parochial. Huge headlines announce 'Mutiny in the Navy' and it turns out to be 1/2 dozen seamen who got stoned drunk and refused to obey orders and re-enacted Bligh and the Bounty taking all the parts between them.²⁶⁵ Mutiny indeed. Picture of Onassis kissing Callas and a snidey-snidey article accompanying it. It is monstrous that such a magnificent pulpit as the press could be has such moronic preachers. Apart from a couple of sportswriters and the occasional political article and the literary critics there is hardly anybody who can write a plain English sentence. Even the Times has become a bit of a rag with gossip columns yet! One can always rely of course on the crossword puzzles which maintain their standards!

SEPTEMBER

Tuesday 1st, Calvi, Corsica Missed yesterday as I was more less stupefied with drink all day long. We left Elba at 1 o'clock in the morning and the sea was as smooth as a dream. We watched the departure and the slowly disappearing lights of Portoferraio and then went to bed. Suddenly we were awoken by heavy pitching and an occasional combinatory roll and pitch. We dozed but were kept more or less awake by the occasional huge dip until suddenly again a particularly heavy wave broke over the bows and we had omitted to shut our forward port-holes as the sea had been so smooth when we set out and our air-conditioning had broken down – it is being repaired today here we hope – and burst into the bed-room so that our highly expensive pure wool carpet was awash. By this time the sea was really throwing us around and it was quite an effort to close the portholes against further inundation. We went out on the poop deck and or sat in the lounge. And that began my day of drinking. I had several straight martinis and goodbye yesterday. However I did my ten kilometres on the bike sweating like the tropics and then drank endless restoratives, alka salzer [sic] and some Italian equivalent that Gianni carries around with him. The day was superb, as indeed it is today, and the carpets are hanging out to dry having been washed again with fresh water, so that the damage might be negligible. One lesson learnt and a lesson that I knew but didn't apply. Never take the sea for granted. She can change from the sweetest smoothest lady into a mad termagant in two minutes. So always keep the port-holes closed while travelling – especially at night. We acquired however a new passenger, with the great wave into our bedroom came a tiny creature, some kind of sea-snail known already as Ari – after Onassis. He lives in a glass of salt water on the living-room table. This morning we found him outside the glass having obviously climbed out through the night. I was afraid I might kill him if I tore him away from the glass's side as he clung on very tenaciously, so Gianni found a jug which we filled with salt water and put the entire glass and snail inside. If this goes on we'll have to build him an entire aquarium all to himself.

We went to Rio Marina and had lunch in a restaurant 5km outside. It was a splendid lunch of antipasto followed by spaghetti alla marinara followed by delicious chicken flambée with brandy followed by the local cheese and grapes. I drank no wine but the others said it was delicious and they gave us a case for the yacht. Another restaurant not included in the Michelin Guide. Today we are going to lunch in town where we had a very good steak au poivre the last time we were here. I hope it's as good today.

[...] I discovered a way of passing the time while cycling. You prop a crossword against the shaving mirror in the boys' room and do it in your head. The time flies by.

Read nothing yesterday – simply stared about in a generally stunned way. E was sweet and handled me with great affection and wisdom. She really is a superb woman. What I was suffering from was of course a slight case of guilt at not having closed those damned portholes. The drink compounded my irritation so that I was snarling at everybody. [...]

Wednesday 2nd, Calvi-Ajaccio [...] Went out for lunch yesterday to a hotel that we'd been to before called Les Aloes, I think.²⁶⁶ Had what we hoped would be the same steak au poivre but the chef had obviously moved on to better places because the steak was indifferent. Bought a hammock for Elizabeth to lie on. Odd that we never had one before. Back in our own bedroom but it still ponks a little from the sea-depths. Afraid we'll have to have it all changed. Perhaps we can do it cheaply and temporarily in Ajaccio and do it up properly when we get to London. Little boats, mostly lobster fishers passing us all the time. Thought we might stop at Porto for lunch.²⁶⁷ We have never visited the place, so it will be nice to see it.

Still hard at Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson. Surprisingly fat book. He does not get any more attractive [...]

Tuesday 8th, La Verniaz, Evian²⁶⁸ We arrived here on Sunday having felt that we needed to be alone together if the paradox is pardoned – for a couple or three days before the hurly-burly of London and work again. A horrendous night on the yacht much compounded by a mighty sullen drunkenness on my part prompted us after hours of accusation and counter-accusation to a reconciliation and finally to a resolution that we were both happier when we are utterly alone. This done and agreed we ordered the jet and got out of Ajaccio and off the boat and into Geneva and onto a helicopter and are here at our favourite little hotel with our favourite little chef who flatters Elizabeth so. When we arrived and walked through the ‘tea garden’ we were applauded! [...] We have a little house – 3 bedrooms and a sitting room, standing in its own ground – about 200 yards from the main body of the hotel. It is a perfect place, the only nuisance being that we have to leave tomorrow to go and see Ivor and fly to London the following day as I have to be fitted with costumes etc. and begin the film with dread at the pit of my stomach – on Monday.²⁶⁹ Be glad when the first day or so is over. Don't quite know what I'm going to do until I do it. It's about the only time when I miss rehearsals as in the theatre – the slow assimilation of the part, the pub in the breaks, the occasional small explosion of realization of what it's all about in a general mumbling of stage marks and lines imperfectly learned, the discarding of the book after a couple of weeks or three and BANG the whole thing falls into place. That's where it should end of course in a perfect actors' world, right there at the final dress rehearsal, no performance in front of an audience, no critics, three days' holiday and begin again on the next play. Or perhaps just one performance for friends. But on Monday, by 9.30am acting a strange part, peculiarly foreign to me, with actors that I think I've never met, there will be 30 seconds of my performance indelibly in the can, as they say. Perhaps I could persuade Elliott to persuade the director to persuade the actors to have a ‘read-through’ before Monday.²⁷⁰ It will make me very unpopular with my fellow ‘professionals’ who want to play golf or screw women or each other but at least I'll know who everybody is. In the last couple of films I knew at least two or three of the company. In this one none.²⁷¹

1971

[Richard ceased making entries in his 1970 diary in early September as he was about to start making Villain in London. On 6 October Richard and Elizabeth attended the wedding of Michael Wilding Jr and Beth Clutter at Caxton Hall Registry in London, Richard acting as Michael's best man. In the same month they appeared with Joseph Losey at the Round House Cinema City Exhibition before a showing of Boom!, after which they discussed their work with the audience. Conversations took place at this time between Burton and Laurence Olivier, about the possibility of Burton succeeding Olivier as Director of the National Theatre. On 10 November 1970 Burton attended Buckingham Palace to receive his CBE. Elizabeth's long-serving secretary, Dick Hanley, died in Los Angeles in January 1971, but Taylor, then filming X, Y and Zee in London, was unable to attend the funeral. Burton and Taylor spent part of January 1971 filming Under Milk Wood in the vicinity of Fishguard, Pembrokeshire, Wales. In May Richard and Elizabeth began filming Hammersmith Is Out in Cuernavaca in Mexico. Richard began his 1971 diary in late June.]

JUNE

Sunday 27th, Gstaad Feel inordinately lazy and somewhat disappointed as the Tito treatment is not very good.¹ A series of loud bangs like any other old war film. I will attempt to get them to make it more Tito than guns and local partisan heroics, which, though probably true, have been seen in every Hollywood film ever made. If they do not I shall have to withdraw. I will still struggle away with learning Serbo-Croat. I find it fascinating. [...]

Monday 28th Have been up since seven. Two cups of coffee and it is now eight-thirty. Can't get up steam to do anything except loaf around. I am going through that period which I call my crossword-puzzle time. Can't read a book of any kind except illustrated art books and such stuff. Times, Telegraph and a collected edition of double-crossics from the Saturday Review and the puzzles from the Times and Telegraph are the present limit of my intellectual activity.² And a bit of Serbo-Croat thrown in for good measure.

Liza is at the most irritating and silly stage of her teens – at least I hope she is. It would be intolerable if it got worse. [...] Am getting another extra day off from Heathfield for Liza.³ Don't like to do it but she is so persistent that I give in just for a quiet life. Like W. C. Fields I really have no patience with young people.⁴ I find them all inordinately boring.

Must do something about Tito today or tomorrow. On reflection I think I could do something with it if I can persuade the writers to agree.

Wednesday 30th Missed yesterday as I have a gouty or arthritic left wrist, exquisitely uncomfortable. Usually I get it in the left ankle and foot. Better today but still uncomfortable and since Christy Brown wrote a whole and good book typing one letter at a time with one toe I argue that I should manage with one finger and an elbow.⁵ Or rather two fingers.

Raymond found the lost volumes of diaries in the wine cellar where I had put them before leaving Gstaad last time for England and Villain which I think is a goodish film but so far isn't doing very well in the States but has not yet opened in Britain and the Commonwealth where it should do better I hope.

Liza left for school yesterday inevitably forgetting to take her passport and ticket. A car was sent after her with the documents but she missed the plane and took the next one. It is a good 2½ hour drive to Geneva from here. I hope Mrs Ladas (known and named by me 'Snakes and Ladas') will not be too cross.⁶

Have just had an offer, by letter, from Stan Stennett (very broad Welsh comedian) to play the Baron in a Cinderella pantomime to be staged in Porthcawl!⁷ Must say I'd love to be in a panto. I've done practically everything else. Impossible of course. [...]

JULY

1st, Gstaad [...] I was so uncomfortable last night that in bed the slightest movement made me to groan as if demented. Elizabeth says that I am the world's champion 'conyn' which is Welsh for moaning hypochondriac. [...]

To my delight we were able to watch the Wimbledon male semi-finals on our TV set here all bright and beautiful in colour on eurovision. The matches themselves were badly one-sided – Gorman losing to Stan Smith and the formerly great Rosewall losing to Newcombe.⁸ The French announcer said they would, most of them, be playing at Gstaad next week so let us hope the weather keeps good.⁹ [...]

It looks as if I will do a film written by Tony Shaffer, twin brother of the other playwright Shaffer, in September instead of Tito.¹⁰ Perhaps the Jugs can shift the Tito affair to next spring when they could have a script with dialogue. If not will have to forgo same. Oddly enough Joe Losey called yesterday and asked if I would play Trotsky.¹¹ Trotsky and Tito in one week and both world famous communists. [...]

9th, Gstaad Wrote the [...] article for Vogue and at the behest of the editor, a lady called Beatrix Miller, who cornered me at the Snowdons' party a couple of weeks ago.¹² Left hand and wrist still gouty so am still typing with two fingers though can now use left hand for short periods. E did something bad to her back and is in agony. [...] We went out gouty and lumbered for half an hour to a cocktail party at the Palace hotel given for the tennis festival. There were no tennis players there as far as we could see but hordes of stupid middle-aged autograph hunters. E insisted on taking the masseur (Ulrich Behrens) and his wife to the party. They were frostily received by the management Messrs Scherz until they saw they were with us when their lofty scowls turned into beaming smiles of welcome. The Swiss are as snobbish as the British. You see Herr Behrens is a visiting masseur to the Palace Hotel. [...]

Sunday 11th Liza arrived yesterday evening accompanied by a large thunderstorm. [...] The weather until about four o'clock yesterday has been superb and I do most of my writing, Italian, French and Serbo-Croat in the sun. [...]

We go to see the tennis finals this morning. And then to lunch at the Palace perhaps. E's back much better. Liza looking like a cabbage out of which rises a beautiful face and wearing the most unflattering dress I've ever seen.

Monday 12th Went to see the men's singles finals. Newcombe of Australia and Okker of Holland. Newcombe won in five sets.¹³ Half a dozen good rallies but mostly serve and volley. [...]

Played table tennis with Liza after breakfast and again after lunch. Her conversation is entirely standard cliché and platitude out of Heathcliff, I mean Heathfield. Her accent is awful at the moment, a terrible amalgam of Berks and Kensington refrained. She is quite puppy fatted and pretends to be going on a diet with me and E but I don't think she'll stand it for very long. What she needs is a thumping lot of exercise. She went horse riding this morning and plays a couple of hours of ping pong a day with me which is a good thing for all concerned.

Wrote five letters yesterday and actually sent them off. Usually I write letters, which I like doing when in the mood and then find them in my briefcase six months later.

[...] Still not in a bookreading mood. Anything else will do. National Geographic, Encyclopedia Britannica, Larousse, painful reading of French and Italian. Well Italian is painful. French is ok reading one Maigret after another but not a sustained word in English. Heard in Cadonau's this morning that Julie Andrews is in town also that John Kenneth Galbraith has just left.¹⁴ Wish it were the other way round.

15th It's afternoon and am sitting on the lawn outside the library. Julie Andrews and Blake Edwards (husband, film director) came to dinner. They seemed very nice together. He had sent a book the day before by Kingsley Amis called the Green Man.¹⁵ It is, as one expects from Amis, expertly written but has 'don' written all over it. About ghosts which is never my cup of tea. But this one held my interest to the end which considering my inability to read at the moment is a fair old feat. They may use the house, this one at Xmas. Have ordered a lock-up filing cabinet to put away all the papers and diaries etc. Good idea anyway, even if we don't have visitors. Answered [...] letter from George Thomas, MP and wrote to David Harlech, Stan Baker and James Wishart passing on the message.¹⁶ [...] Why do we send such obvious mediocrities to the Commons when there are such brilliant chaps on every street corner at home? I suppose we are all so bloody lazy that we let the dull and insignificant – like Lord Llew Heycock for Christ's sake – who are prepared to go to party meetings in vestries and half-empty halls, do the job for us.¹⁷ [...]

16th Received [...] telegram yesterday from the editor of Vogue.¹⁸ Why do notices and things similar about what little writing I do thrill me and notices for acting leave me totally indifferent? I was on air for the rest of the day after getting Miller's cable regardless of whether she has any judgement or not. Elizabeth played a trick on me which for a moment took me in completely. I [...] was awoken from a fairly deep nap by E brandishing the telegram and saying 'Your first rejection slip. I'm sorry Rich.' She said that my face for a second was a pathetic sight and 'all scrunchled up' as if I were about to burst into tears. Cheeky devil.

[...] I am slowly recording on a Philips tape machine the whole of Assimil in English for our German masseur and his wife who are very anxious to learn English.¹⁹ The English is somewhat archaic – I imagine the text must be several decades old but it is good enough to start with. Also it means that I am getting a rough knowledge of German as I read the German listening to the English.

Sunday 18th [...] Very sad article yesterday in Ici Paris about the death of Maria's grandmother and the torment her mother and father have been suffering since allowing her to go for adoption.²⁰ Why don't the miserable French gutter press leave them alone. I have kept the article hidden away. Perhaps Maria will want to see such things one day.

Headlines in all the papers and front page that Nixon is going to meet Mao Tse Tung in Peking before next May.²¹ Fancy Nixon graduating to statesmanship. Perhaps the office has made yet another man though I find it hard to believe. I dislike drunkards (and he was drunk as the devil the last time I saw him – before becoming President) having dominion over palm and pine and me and mine.²²

Lovely down here in the library with the fire going and the beautiful books all around in disciplined ranks. [...]

We have our neighbours – who have been so generous with Maria, in for drinks tonight. They are Germans I think. [...]

Monday 19th [...] The German neighbours called Kehl, he's a banker in Dusseldorf and comes here for weekends only. She very outdoorsy looking, blonde and a little weathered though she can only be in her thirties. Skiers, horse-riders, early morning swimmers etc. and mountain walkers and picknickers. Nice enough. He with a loud cracked voice which seems typically Germanic and suggests an underlying nervousness. Perhaps hysteria. They must have a fair amount of money as the chalet next door, though smallish, must have cost a pretty penny and he flies to Gstaad from Dusseldorf every Friday and flies back again every Monday morning. Made fun of the German Swiss. Naturally. So did we rather lamely and affectionately. [...] Shall go shopping for odds and ends in a minute. I'm getting to the stage where I have a hatred of being stared at so the time for shopping for me is the early morning while the tourists are still a-bed and only the Swiss are around who couldn't give a cuss who you are. [...]

Wednesday 21st Spent most of yesterday with Yugoslavians about the Tito film. Lots of fascinating talk about Communism and Russia but mostly about Tito. Talked to Aaron who said it would be alright to postpone the other film²³ [...] We go, at Tito's invitation, to see him on the 28th instant. Should be very interesting to say the least. [...]

I start the film on the 15th of next month and the other film about the 15th of the month after. The former near Dubrovnik and the latter in Jersey.²⁴ Both places will be new to me and E.

[...] Have become very busy with my hands – gout and all – and managed to find out how to operate a very elaborate and very expensive Japanese TV machine which takes instant movies. Great fun fiddling about with it taking pictures of Liza and Maria on the trampoline, swings etc. [...]

Saturday 24th, Gstaad Leaving this morning by helicopter and plane for Nice and the Kalizma. [...]

Just discovered to my fury that Toronado, in perfect shape sold for 5000 Swiss francs. And who to? To Solowicz who was in charge of its sale.²⁵ Must investigate further.

Sat in sun yesterday and did nothing much except read the Tribune de Genève and listened to the Italian records.²⁶ Took Liza to the manege and walked E'en So for an hour while Liza went over the jumps.²⁷

The pound of chocolate that I ate the day before last has had no effect on my weight as far as the scales go. Still around 174. Should drop before long to 170.

Am seeing Mazlanski, Shaffer, Berkeley and uncle Tom Cobly on the Kalizma on Tuesday re Absolution, the film.²⁸ [...]

Sunday 25th, Kalizma Journey here, both copter and plane very smooth and very fast. [...] E moaned all day long about the condition of the boat. Only two glasses out of scores left. Must have all been smashed I suppose. Big stain on the back of one of the chairs and two more on the bed-head and the facing wall. E tamping.²⁹ Raymond with a face as long as a yard of ale because quite clearly the steward and stewardess don't know their jobs. The former at least doesn't know how to serve table and his wife says, if you please that she doesn't launder. There is a perfectly good laundry on board. All she has to do is stick the stuff in the machine hang it on the line and iron it. The new cook is amiable and good so far and oldish but Raymond says he is dirty around the kitchen. We shall see. Moved the yacht immediately from Monaco to Villefranche to avoid the gawkers who were slowly gathering.³⁰ Parked a few hundred yards from the shore at Villefranche. Very pretty. Niarchos' 'Creole' is a hundred yards away.³¹ E says that some one has bought it from him and he's going to buy another. [...]

Monday 26th, Monte Carlo Beth's baby was born yesterday at 2am.³² A girl, as yet nameless. We didn't know until this morning as we spent Saturday and Sunday moored off Villefranche. Great excitement and I broke my drinking fast for the first time since June 15. Had a glass of nasty champagne and two or was it three stiffish martinis. Knocked me sideways and I slept for three or more hours this afternoon. We are off to London tomorrow morning and will stay until Thursday to muck about with the parents and baby.

Watched a very spectacular fireworks display tonight. This one put on by the Germans. The Portuguese and English still to come. They'll have to be good to beat the Germans. But then the Germans never play at anything and are always at war.

Telegram from Popovic to say we are expected in Pula at 10am Saturday 31st to meet Tito etc.³³ [...]

Tuesday 27th, Kalizma, Carlo Beautiful morning and early. [...] Excited at seeing the baby. Monte Carlo with all its new apartment blocks is becoming an eyesore. Towering block after towering block and also has become very noisy. [...]

There are a lot of things I can do in London – the meeting with Shaffer et al. Find out from Wishart and Eagles what the hell is going on at 2, Squire's Mount.³⁴ See Ivor and Gwen and depress myself. Call Kate if possible. Call Frosch if possible.

Both E and I in good humour so far. Will continue if she's on time. [...]

Have just received Deakin's book on Yugoslavia and the battle of Sutjeska.³⁵ Shall read it in London and on plane, though probably will do French and Italian via cassettes Assimil. Passes the time wonderfully.

Only one mention in the Express yesterday of the baby's birth. Thought there would be far more fuss. Might happen today with our arrival at London Airport. Just as well if there is none. [...]

Wednesday 28th, Dorchester [...] Yesterday, apart from the little baby – six pounds born – was a terrible day. Michael started it by announcing point-blank that he had no intention of continuing as Gianni Bozzacchi's assistant and that he was going to be a pop-group musician. Since he plays no known instrument with anything like proficiency and neither do any of his friends this is a hazardous prospect at the best. When he hurts and disappoints E as he does time after time I sometimes really feel physically violent. [...] The house is a mess apparently and is full of spongers and drifters. This we settle for but it hardly seems a fair place to take a child who is exquisite and Beth, also exquisite, who quite clearly loathes the atmosphere [...]. There is nothing to do but wait for him to grow up and think for himself. And the gaps in his knowledge are alarming. I had hoped that, when he quit school, that he would fill up the crevices by self-education but he still reads only what's currently fashionable among his friends. Mad Magazine and the inevitable Hesse, a phony, and Alistair Crowley, who is a joke.³⁶ He had professed a fascination with the Book of Revelations which I had talked to him about in Cuernavaca – particularly the 13th chapter.³⁷ He couldn't wait to read it he said. Yesterday I asked him if he'd thought about it any more, or if he'd read more Blacke.³⁸ Nothing. He had done nothing.

Ivor is very near the end. Death is written all over his face. He did not know me when I saw him yesterday. He can barely speak. He is already dead. I wish he were. The sight of Ivor, after the emotional disturbance of baby and Beth and Michael, finally reduced E to tears and she sobbed all the way back to the Dorchester and sometime afterwards. Liza was an angel to Elizabeth and cwtched her as the positions were reversed as 'twere and Liza was the mother and E the child. I love that child. She can be a bit of a bastard at times but she is fundamentally an angel and great in a crisis. So that was something splendid out of the day. Oddly enough the day had started in Monte Carlo by Liza and E having a quarrel about clothes which ended with E slapping Liza. Liza is going through a period where she thinks she is fat and ugly. Everybody but she thinks she is ravishing but there's no way of persuading her. And so to business and meeting Kate at Ivor's and buying books and thank the good God back to the Kalizma in the morning.

Thursday 29th, Dorchester A long long day. I waited for the Brass to turn up at 11 o'clock yesterday morning but they didn't and when I finally called I gave Ron Berkeley a severe tongue-lashing for making such a mess of the appointment.³⁹ I saw them at 6 instead and they were pleasant enough and it seems we shall go ahead with the film on September 15th as planned. Shaffer is a fat man biggish with prematurely grey hair and something wrong with his left eye. He told strange stories of being a Bevin boy in the last war but by no means an ordinary one – he was in intelligence and was a counter spy, he says, on the look out for infiltratory agents intent on sabotage.⁴⁰ Did you catch anybody asked somebody and if so what did you do with them? I shot them he said, or rather arranged for them to be killed. This is very easy in the mines he said. I didn't believe a word of it and said so. He said he had written it up he said but was not allowed to publish because of the official secrets act etc.⁴¹ I shall see a lot of him in the next few weeks and shall delve further. It all seems a little too fantastic. But it could it seems be true. The British Secret Service is famous for its amateur idiocies. He insisted that it was still top secret and should not be repeated. But, I said, you have just told it openly to four perfect strangers. Yes but you must promise me not to tell any one else. I shall tell everybody immediately I said.⁴²

Christopher Miles – brother of Sarah Miles, the actress – and the director of the film is a tiny fellow with bright sharp humouress eyes.⁴³ He looks as if he knows what he wants and will insist that he gets it. The film is to be shot in Jersey where I understand the natives are bilingual. It will be interesting I hope. The snaps they showed me of the locations seem quite right. Mazlanski seems to be out of his depth in the film world of high finance.

The delightful Kate was with us from noon on and was her usual charming self. Giggles a great deal and pretends to be appalled by my occasional irreverencies. She is a joy and went to the hospital to see the nameless one while I went to Claude Gill's to buy books for the yacht.⁴⁴ Maria came with me and I bought a very catholic selection of books. A couple of Dickens and a few thrillers and horror stories for Liza and Hornblower for Chris and a few volumes of poetry in French, Welsh and English for myself. The French ones have prose translations which will save me a lot of bother. Also brought a lot of pocket dictionaries French Italian Spanish German. Also brought books for the chauffeur Charles Simpson's sons who are showing interest in school work.

Another telegram from Sarajevo [...] God knows what to expect in Brioni with Tito and his lads.⁴⁵ [...]

Saturday 31st, en Route to Lupa, Yugoslavia [...] Lupa which was variously announced as being 2¹/₂ hours by air then 1¹/₂ and now we are told 65 minutes away.⁴⁶ [...] Reading, in proof, Deakin's book about the partisans which is full of good stories. Must see him (Deakin) when we get back. [...]

Arrived safely and were taken by car – Mercedes-Benz – to and through Pula where a boat awaited us. A mass of photographers and journalists and TV people at the airport to meet us. Usual questions – ‘What's it feel like to play a great man?’ ‘How much do you know about Tito?’ They have given us a villa not far from Tito's. Very hot – no air conditioning. [...]

Madame Broz (she prefers to be called that to ‘Tito') was at the villa to meet us.⁴⁷ Big woman and very peasant looking and utterly charming with a devastating smile. Speaks a little English and understands more. We were offered canapés (which I ate, removing the bread), and champagne which I refused and delicious Turkish coffee which I didn't refuse.

Our 'apartment' upstairs consists of a large bedroom and large sitting room with two huge bathrooms. We understand that this was Jane Swanson's family house when this belonged to Italy up to 1945. Jane Swanson is our secretary who lives on 1/2 pay when she doesn't work for us. We shall take pictures of the house to show her. Now off to lunch with Tito.

AUGUST

Sunday 1st, Brioni A long but enjoyable day spent apart from a short nap in the afternoon and until 7.30pm – with Tito. We went to his house – a few minutes from ours about midday. He and wife and cameras were waiting for us. (Later we saw ourselves on TV being greeted). We sat in one corner of a large room, one end of which was the dining area. There were two tables. We sat at one with the President and Madame Broz and two interpreters and a couple of other unidentified people. We presented the President and wife with our present from Van Cleef and Arpels – a chunk of pyrite (?) with a clock set into it.⁴⁸ I told Tito, after being asked what I thought of the script, that I thought he was weakly presented in it and should be stronger and that the part was too small. He said it was OK to make it larger which pleased the director Deli to no end.⁴⁹ So perhaps I'll have something better to do than just stand around and look like a man of destiny.

The President is surprisingly small and delicate. Little short arms and legs and a small head with little features. He wears slightly tinted glasses and I can't really tell the colour of his eyes. He has quite a pot-belly but the rest of him is slim – no bottom and thin chest and legs. He walks slowly and with short steps. When he sits down behind a table he seems most formidable. I'm slightly put out by the nervousness with which the servants serve us all. They live in remarkable luxury unmatched by anything else I've seen and [I] can well believe Princess Margaret who says the whole business makes Buck House look pretty middle-class. After lunch the President and I talked a great deal about the war and Sutjeska in particular. I asked him if he liked Stalin. He took a long time to answer and finally said he 'liked him or rather admired him as a politician but disliked him as a man.' Most of the time he talked Serbo-Croat but when we were alone talked slow but adequate English. I said I had read that he was fluent in French and perhaps he would prefer to speak in that tongue but he appeared not to have heard me and continued in English until, with obvious relief, the interpreter rejoined us, and he rattled away in Serbo-Croat again.

He called for us at 4pm in a convertible Lincoln-Continental – ‘a present from the people of Zagreb’ I think he said – and started to drive – E in front beside him and me behind with Madame Broz. He immediately punctured the front right tyre by driving over a very sharp curbstone not 50 yards from the house. Instead of stopping and cutting the engine he revved-up and we jerked and jolted about for a nerve-racking 10 seconds or so. We left the car and went on foot to visit a small zoo with an elephant and ibex and elands etc. Gazelles too. He suddenly looked very old and even smaller after the car incident but was soon his old confident self again. He seemed a little apprehensive of the elephant when feeding it. To my horror – after about 15 minutes (and to E's horror too I found out later) – the Continental turned up again all mended and we took up the drive once more. He drove at a funeral's pace but my (and E's) heart was in my mouth for the rest of the journey, which was a tour of the entire island. I was very glad to get back to his villa. He was obviously used to power-steering and power-brakes and we all threatened to go through the windscreen every time he stopped to show us something or other. But he and Madame were so charming that one forgives them anything. He loves animals and trees and has a huge collection of both on the island and elsewhere, we gathered.

At one point I asked him what he would have done had Churchill had his way and instead of opening a Second Front gone straight up through the Balkans and Austria etc. and cut off the Russian advance.⁵⁰ He answered without hesitation: ‘We would have stopped you. We had, by this time, 35 divisions, all battle trained, and a great deal of arms taken from the Italians and Germans.’ I suppose he would have, at that and another war would have developed. Almost in the same breath he said that he trusted Churchill but not the British. Nobody it seems trusts the British. We really are, to the foreigner, ‘perfidious albion.’⁵¹

We finally got home about seven and had yet another enormous meal. This time I weakened and had some ice-cream. Later, having already weakened, I ate two bars of choc while watching S. Tracy in a film – rather good – called Bad Day at Black Rock.⁵² Scales show 79kg this morning 174lbs nearly. Saw many stills this morning. I looked very haggard. Perhaps I'm getting too thin. Tito looked rubicund and toby-juggish in comparison. I should film well though. Will certainly look hungry!

Monday 2nd Another day spent almost entirely with the President. I woke late – for me, 7.40. – and had breakfast down by the sea. As usual it was too much. Cold meats, ham, salami etc. Tea. An omelette. Hot sausage. Many sweet cakes. More tea. Then at 9.30 saw Deli Ć, Popovi Ć and a P.R. man who asked me a lot of questions about why I was doing it all etc. For the umpteenth time I went through my stock verbiage. ‘Great man’, ‘great opportunity’. ‘Hope I can do justice’ etc. I hope, more aptly, that they can do justice to me. Give me the tools, i.e. part, and I’ll get on with the job.⁵³ Were it not, actually, for E’s delight in the power and glory of it all I would do my best to cut and run – so great is the strain of boredom – especially the interminable translated conversation. Both Tito and Madame Broz tell long stories which they don’t allow the interpreters to interrupt result being that by the time the latter have finished one couldn’t care less what the story is about. Madame has a very penetrating voice which, after a time, becomes extremely tiresome. And protocol demands that I’m always with her and the President with E. And they have a professional interpreter whereas I have a minister’s wife whose English leaves a lot to be desired. Mrs Broz smiles all the time and so does the interpreter.

In the morning at precisely 9.50 we left the house for the President’s villa. Then straight on to a small powerful yacht – 35 knots top speed, 160 tons, 120 feet – and went belting off down through all the hundreds of islands in this part of the world. Lovely towns and hundreds of spanking new hotels. The beaches, mostly rock, were crawling with tourists. They average 30,000,000 a year they kept on saying. Almost everybody waved at the Presidential Yacht and he waved back. So did E and Raymond. As soon as we were aboard drinks were served – whisky for the President and wife and E and local red wine for the others and a gin marguerita for some and the inevitable water for me. From then on the same booze was produced at regular intervals for the rest of the day. We disembarked at the President’s villa after about two hours at sea during all of which time we were escorted by two torpedo boats and a police launch. The President proudly told me that his coast was the best defended in Europe and that guns, submarines and gunboats were hidden under all the cave-infested islands.

Occasionally through the binoculars which were amply supplied I would glimpse a sailor at attention on some remote hillock rigidly saluting. We had lunch on a little island facing Brioni, not without the excruciating examination of the house and grounds. ‘This is from Indonesia from Sukarno himself.’⁵⁴ ‘This is work from the people of Macedonia.’ ‘This is from the Sudan.’ I noticed that most faces bore fixed smiles of boredom long before the end of lunch and despite the fact that they were drinking. E's face of course, was an exception. She is having a ball. It is as well that I'm not drinking or I might be asking some very awkward questions. There were occasional bright moments. Tito in English: 'I was very glad when my grandmother died.' E: 'Why?' Tito: 'Because it meant she stopped beating me.' E: 'That's an awful thing to say.' Tito: 'She was small but strong and always angry.' He met Churchill who was in the vicinity on Onassis's yacht. Winston C. accepted a very small whisky. Tito had his usual large one. 'Why so small a portion?' asked Tito. 'You taught me to drink large ones.' 'That was when we both had power,' said Winston C. 'Now I have none and you still have yours.'

Power does corrupt. I doubt whether Tito sees the ordinary Joe Soap from whom he came except when the latter waves a flag and carries a banner. At least he doesn't keep his people waiting. Last night we went to see a film in the Roman Theatre at Pula. The streets were lined with sailors rigidly at attention behind them being masses of people who applauded the whole route. E was the star of the evening – much more so, or at least equal to Tito. When we entered the coliseum – 6000 people capacity – they all stood up and gave an ovation. E deeply thrilled. Me cynical as ever. The film was fun. The inevitable tray of drinks was presented at the same intervals throughout the film. We had earphones with an English translation. [...]

Tuesday 3rd Have just come back from the minute island of 'La Madonna' which is just off the front of our villa which I discover is called 'Jadaranda' I think. We see the President and Madame for the last time this trip at noon. It is now 11.30. We had a swim and breakfast on Madonna. I eat nothing and have, in fact, eaten nothing since lunch yesterday except one plum and a vitamin pill. Rarely have I stuffed myself as much as I did at lunch yesterday on the President's island – not Brioni, the other little retreat. Madame Broz likes to play practical jokes, so I understand but is restrained by the Marshal.

Had a 3 hour discussion with Tito about Sutjeska, Mihailovi , , , British, Churchill, Allies, Stalin and Uncle T. Cob. which I will type up later when I get back to the Kaliz this afternoon.⁵⁵ [...] Am still worried by the atmosphere of dread which surrounds Tito. Cannot understand it. Neither can the rest of us.

Thursday 5th, Villefranche Have been back since Tuesday. [Monte] Carlo a nuisance as usual so nipped over here for a slice of quiet. Michael Caine on board from his rented yacht – a veritable tub that bobs like a cork.⁵⁶ He has a nice girl with him called Suzy Kendall who is married and presumably separated from her husband who is a comedian called Dudley Moore.⁵⁷ Michael speaks in a shout which becomes a bit hard in a small room. He is very funny and very cockney most of his 'wit' being a regular and repeated pattern of catch-phrases. 'Black as your hat,' 'A turkish religion with a tip-up seat' etc. All repeated at various times during the day. Spends his time going to discotheques and parties of which, down here, there are hundreds. Many good reports of XYZ from all kinds of sources so E might have a big one again. [...]

Wednesday 11th, Kalizma We left Monte Carlo two or three days ago and went to Portofino which is as enchanting as ever and where of course we inevitably met Rex Harrison and his future wife Elizabeth Rees-Williams. She was married to an actor – very good I believe, though I have never met him or seen him – called Richard Harris. Professional Irish type I gather, getting drunk and fighting when sufficiently so. Rex came on the K at cocktail time and was already paralysed with booze. So was the Rees-Williams. Acutely painful hour or so with Rex being endlessly repetitive and eventually tottering on the brink of outright rudeness. We all agreed after they had left that this couple were among the most unattractive we'd come across in a long time and the thought of their getting married before the end of the month a monstrous joke. She is a kind of brazen blonde type with a veneer of finishing school. I feel very protective about Rex as I fear this woman is not just a harum-scarum shouter and bawler like Rache but a devious minx on the make. She looked ugly with dissipation and so did Rex. His casual elegance was noticeably lacking and he has put on a lot of weight – tremendous pot and jowls. E and I sat up in bed after they had gone and after dinner and had a smug hour telling each other how lucky we are in that we have each other and that we like each other. And so on. And by god we are lucky in virtually every way. E kept on saying: How lucky we are to love each other. Too right.

We were hoping to get away from M.C. days before we did because there is no peace there and we were inundated with visitors. Niven, Van Cleef and Arpels from whom I bought a 'Leo' necklace with a lion pendant for E as a 'granny present'. It is very pretty and cost $27,000. She loves it. 'Leo' is the child's Zodiac sign. M. Caine and Suzy Kendall. Messages from Grace and Rainier asking us to come to the Red Cross Ball held outside the Opera. Tried like mad to get out of it but couldn't very well and anyway it turned out to be an entertaining evening. I had Grace one side of me and a young baroness the other who is Paul Gallico's daughter – or rather step-daughter – who was very sweet and thrilled and is going to be an actress.⁵⁸ She calls herself, for the stage, Ludmilla Kova I think.⁵⁹ Shouldn't think she'll get anywhere. Gallico, who is 74 and looks 55, impressed E very much but her favourite Rainier was as much fun as ever she tells me. He is an extraordinarily nice man and very bright which for some reason always surprises me in royalty.

We are half way between Portofino and Porto Santo Stefano where I shall see Losey as I've decided to do Trotsky. Absolution, for which I had high hopes has fallen through financially and I was forced to give it up and do Trotsky in between 'Tito' shooting. Got rid of Hugh French in as nice a way as possible and asked John Heyman to revert to his old job of agent for a while. He is in Belgrade at this moment chatting the Slav money boys up.

Thursday 12th En route to Porto Santo Stefano where we should have some or will have some word from Heyman. If all goes well I shall be playing Tito on Monday though I'm so lazy and enjoying the bateau so much that wouldn't be averse to a few days or even a couple of weeks postponement. Wouldn't actually be suicidal if the whole thing were scrapped until next Spring, say, or scrapped altogether for that matter.

[...] Children and E watched a film of mine called Prince of Players which I made about seventeen years ago.⁶⁰ [...] I remember the high hopes I had of that film and my disappointment at its indifferent reception. The original script by Moss Hart was very good when I agreed to do it but a year later when I actually did it had been murdered by Zanuck and his hacks.⁶¹ Some of it was saveable however which accounts for what little success we had. It seems to me that I was outrageously pretty in those days and much prefer my present hard and ravaged countenance. [...] Like last year, I am enjoying not drinking though there have been one or two close calls. [...] It is easy when I am alone with E as she rarely gets drunk. About the only time I get testy with E is when she has had a couple of drinks and has taken a 'pink' pill (a pain-killer) or prematurely taken a sleeping pill which are mild enough but in conjunction with the booze makes her speech funny and gives her a kind of false euphoria and she becomes sentimental and a bit reminiscent of her mother. Since her mother is the bore of all epochs this can be a bit hard.

We have had a tremendous amount of unsought for publicity in the last few weeks and publicity of the world-wide kind. The daggers incident.⁶² The grandchild, Tito – which was news-reeled all over the world I understand – and guests-of-honour at Grace and Rainier's Red Cross Ball. One Italian newspaper yesterday said that La Taylor continues to astonish the world and can say to all her rivals that she is still the greatest headline maker of them all. Rubbish but pleasant. It is phenomenal the continued attention we get. Literally there must be millions of words written about us and hundreds of thousands of photographs. Once the girls thought that they would save all the photos of E or me or both on the covers of magazines and plaster them all over the wall of the games room in Gstaad – but there were so many, even in a short time, that they abandoned the idea as they decided they, the covers, would cover the whole house. [...]

Friday 13th, Porto Santo Stefano⁶³ Confusing telegram and messages from John Heyman. [...] Cable from Heyman says something like Expect conclude satisfactory deal this weekend. Popovi ć says you (meaning me, RB) not interested in money and doing film because you are such a great fan of Tito's. You expected Dubrovnik Monday, and then four question marks. ???? [...] We are parked outside Stefano Harbour – there are two actually –and will go in with E and Raymond at 9 o'clock to phone [...] and find out what I can.

The other reason for going in is to visit the café where we had our first and near-fatal drink one near-dawn morning on our way to the next bay for a clandestine weekend. I had driven E from Rome in the small hours in a rented car – a small two-seater Fiat as I remember – in order to escape the paparazzi. The town was a grave at that hour and in the bar-café were only a couple of people and a boy and a dog and a waiter. All the world press were searching for us. We thought we had got clean away. One of the anonymous gentlemen in the bar was a newspaper man on a humdrum assignment to cover the arrival of Dutch royalty. And lo and behold there in front of his eyes were the 'hottest' and most scandalous couple in the world. We left the place after a coffee and cognac apiece or perhaps we had two and drove in smug blissfulness to the hotel who had set aside for us a half-finished and small villa which was half a mile from the hotel, looked stupendously over the sea and was completely isolated. We gambolled like children, scrambling down the rocks to the sea and enjoying ourselves as if it was the last holiday. We found out soon enough that every bush – and there were hundreds of them – contained a paparazzo. We were well and thoroughly trapped. The weekend turned immediately from an idyll into a nightmare. We drank to the point of stupefaction and idiocy. We couldn't go outside. We were not married. We were impregnated with guilt. We tried to read. We failed. We couldn't go out. We made a desperate kind of love. We played gin rummy. E kept on winning and oddly enough out of this silly game came the crisis. For some reason – who knows or remembers the conversation that led up to it? – E said that she was prepared to kill herself for me. Easy to say, I said, but no woman would kill herself for me etc. with oodlings of self-pity. Who knows what other kind of rubbish was said. Who remembers from so long ago with everything shrouded in a miasma of alcohol what was said. Out of it all came E standing over me with a bottle or box of sleeping pills in her hand saying that she could do it. Go ahead, I said, or words along those lines, whereupon she took a handful and swallowed them with gusto and no dramatics. I didn't believe that they were sleeping pills at first. For all I knew they could be Vitamin C or anything else. She then, I think, took herself off to bed in an adjoining room. From then I hardly remember any detail. Vague memories of trying to get her awake, of realizing that she wasn't joking, running around looking for that awful 'contessa' who, I discovered later was having an affair with our sometimes chauffeur Mario, searching also for the latter. Loading E into a car and a hair-raising drive to Rome and a hospital and hiding at home because officially E had a tummy complaint or some other excuse which the press told immediately to the Marines. Not being able to go to the hospital because of the snappers and not answering the telephone to all the disaster-lovers like Roddy McDowall and Manciewicz and almost everybody.⁶⁴

So now we have just come back from the very same café where E had a cafe latte and a cognac as she did that time ago, and I noticed that it was Friday the 13th. I mean today and decided that I didn't want any repetition of that awful Easter. By God, what if she'd died. Worse, what if she'd lived with an impaired brain? I'm perfectly sure that I am incapable of suicide so presumably I would still be alive. What would I be doing? Maybe I would have drowned myself in booze by this time. Anyway, it's all over though never forgotten. It certainly has cured any thoughts of suicide from this family. In that year also Sybil had a go at knocking herself off. I was furious with her but not furious oddly enough with E. I suppose I must have been thinking of Kate being motherless and didn't think similarly of Liza, Maria et al. being likewise because they were still little-seen-known or loved by me at the time. [...]

Still Friday 13th, Approaching Anzio⁶⁵ [...] Tito told me that he never ever raised his voice above ordinary conversational level during his whole life, except where distances were involved – shouting across a valley for instance – and that he had always found it infinitely more effective and on occasions much deadlier than a Hitlerian or Mussolinian storm.

Kate and I discussed the day-to-day aspect of our lives and how strange it must be for people in ordinary jobs with a regular pay-packet to understand a life where, like today, we don't know whether we shall be in Yugoslavia tomorrow or Naples or both. Hopefully it will be Naples, or rather Ischia which is or was one of our favourite places.⁶⁶ I'm told though that it is now over-run with German tourists.

Almost in Anzio. Lovely dirty little port. And a working one to boot which I always love.

Saturday 14th, Anzio So at last the Tito deal has been fixed. I start a week on Monday – i.e. the 23rd of August and I am to be paid $50,000 expenses and $250,000 cash and vast percentages, starting at 10% of the first dollar and working up to 50% of the world grosses. I should end up with several hundred thousand dollars with an average return. A big hit of course could bring in untold monies though we are perfectly content with what we have. Heyman had just flown from the States which means that in less than a week, a week which he considers normal, he has flown from London to Nice, Nice to Rome, Rome to Belgrade, Belgrade to NY and New York to Rome and to us.⁶⁷ He flies back to Belgrade today and then from there to Messina (where we shall be) on Monday.⁶⁸ He is a very fast moving young man. He said the other day that he wants to retire from this business at 45, he is about 35, go into politics when his aim will be to abolish all forms of prejudice by way of a complete top to bottom revolution in education.⁶⁹ You might say he is a little ambitious.

My favourite kind of present, albeit a working present, was brought today by one of Losey's aides – a fat three volume paperback edition of Isaac Deutscher's Trotsky.⁷⁰ Days of splendid reading. And on a yacht too, at sea, with no telephone calls, no cables and all work set up for the next half year. Bliss.

[...] My refresher course in Italian has worked wonders and I find myself chatting away like mad. The Serbo-Croat has come to a stop as the discs they sent me have been completely fouled up in Nice by the man who transferred them to cassettes. Half the way through the first cassette the speakers go mad and jump from lesson to lesson like a back-played soundtrack.

Sunday 15th, Capri [...] E saw Cleopatra last night with all the kids. I popped in at one point for about ten seconds and went away and slept for another couple of hours. No reflection on the film! As a matter of fact E said this morning that the film is not at all bad – marvellous spectacle and all that. My lack of interest in my own career, past present or future is almost total. All my life I think I have been secretly ashamed of being an actor and the older I get the more ashamed I get. And I think it resolves itself into a firm belief that the person who's doing the acting is somebody else. That accounts presumably for my fury if anybody shows me anything about my acting in the magazines and journals. I don't mind the gossip stuff like 'seen walking on the Via Veneto last night' or 'The Burtons on their luxury yacht' etc. And I am equally angry whether I am praised or damned though mostly I'm praised. The press have been sounding the same note for many years – ever since I went to Hollywood in the early fifties, in fact – that I am or was potentially the greatest actor in the world and the successor to Gielgud Olivier etc. but that I had dissipated my genius etc. and 'sold out' to films and booze and women. An interesting reputation to have and by no means dull but by all means untrue. [...]

Monday 16th, Ischia-Messina Sitting on the poop with a mug of real coffee [...] and the Kalizma steaming flat out with not a quiver on the waves. [...] Italians are shrieking on the radio and E is sitting opposite me having her 'breakfast' consisting of vodka and orange juice. A habit she picked up from me in my drinking days. A good start to the day if confined to one. In my case, sadly it had become as much as three and even more if there was anyone game enough to join me. A bottle before lunchtime was by no means unusual and a pleasant but ruined morning behind me.

We left Capri, the Marina Grande, about 4 o'clock [in the] afternoon and sailed to Ischia where we parked off-shore from the Isabella Regina where we used to live in sin while locating for Cleopatra.⁷¹ We went ashore to the pizzeria which we used to do then. Everybody had his or her pizza and then we attempted to do some shopping. I say attempted because the crowds became so great that we had to abandon it and run for the Riva and the Kalizma. [...]

As usual I am beginning to have butterflies in the belly at the thought of starting work again and don't even have the nerve-deadener of a script to learn as I know it is being entirely re-written. At least, I hope it is. So I continue with Italian and French and Frances Stevenson's [diary] re Lloyd George and Trotsky's life.⁷² My ignorance of the latter was monumental. I didn't know that he was one of the Mensheviks, for instance, or that he vilified Lenin so harshly.⁷³ As for Frances Stevenson, her diary is sweet but she sometimes makes Lloyd George sound like a boastful little nothing.⁷⁴ Writing only his version of events and being constantly challenged by history in the shape of dry little footnotes by the editor, A. J. P. Taylor. [...]

Tuesday 17th, Ionian Sea [...] E read the diary yesterday and said I'd forgotten to mention the cig-holder given to her by Tito. It is the famous one, much cartooned, which he used to flourish a lot at the UN and other convocations holding it as if it were a pencil with hot end up. She passed many many remarks on its unusual beauty assuring him it must be a Fabergé.⁷⁵ It seems to me that no one there knew what a Fabergé was or is. However after two days of subtle brow-beating he gave it to her. She kissed him on both cheeks which gratified him enormously. He gave me a bunch of flowers. He also gave us a lot of his own home-produced wine made in his own vineyards. [...] There is some trouble brewing up again on his borders with Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. Doubtless he'll be able to handle it. Geographically of course, he has that coveted access to the sea which all the land-locked have greedy eyes on. I understand a sight more about Russia's behaviour between the wars since reading Trotsky and for the first time Stalin's pogroms and purges take on a kind of historical inevitability. [...]

Wednesday 18th, Adriatic [...] Am still deep in Trotsky and so far the man who comes out as the most enigmatically fascinating is Stalin. I must get Deutscher's book about him as soon as I get back to an English library.⁷⁶ I could order it to be sent to Rome for the start of the Trotsky film.

[...] We are due in Dubrovnik in about four hours and am beginning to feel nervous again about Tito. Jesus I hope they have a part for me to get hold of. I have all rights outside Jug[oslavia] so I must do my best to get things done so that I can re-cut and if necessary cut out some of the things they might get up to. That is, if the director is as average as he seems to be. We shall soon find out. How splendid it will be if the director is very good.

I want to persuade them – I have done so partially – to included a great [deal] more stuff about the British Military mission's reaction to Tito and his struggle. A lot more emphasis on his refusal to try and merely talk the British – Deakin principally – into getting Allied support but to show them by the deeds of his partisans that they were really fighting the German and Italian and Bulgarian armies. I also want to show in as low-key a fashion as possible Tito's life-long refusal to shoot captured enemies, even Četnik traitors. He told me of one terribly bitter story. He had a few hundred German prisoners and was at a point where he was forced to retreat. To carry the prisoners with him would have been a tremendous strain on his ever-slender resources. So he informed the senior German officer that he was releasing them to find their own way back to their commands. They were astonished but delighted, naturally. The usual treatment in that kind of warfare was to shoot all prisoners. He also hid his own injured men who were not able to move in what he thought was a safe place. He found out later that the released Germans returned as soon as he had disappeared and slaughtered the helpless partisans. Even so, he never wreaked vengeance. The other day, I noticed that Mihaaelovic [sic], the Royalist Četnik leader died of old age.⁷⁷ He had not been shot when he was caught but given a trial, found justly guilty of collaboration with the enemy and sentenced to life imprisonment (I believe) but not shot. When we were with Tito he said how sorrowful he was that one of his favourites in the Sudan coup which was happening then had shot out of hand scores of political and military prisoners.⁷⁸ This had turned him off completely. I asked him if he had ever lost his temper during those harrowing years of ravenous warfare. He said he had only done so twice. Once when he and some of his men were trapped in a cave and one by one tried to break out against heavy and concealed enemy fire. He said he blazed away at a helplessly trapped company of Germans who were in a captured jeep. Once when Deakin came to him to tell him that, after the capitulation of Italy, all captured Italian arms, ammunition, tanks etc. should be held and handled over to the Allies. Deakin mentions this in his book too saying it was the first time he, Deakin had seen the Marshal go mad with rage.⁷⁹ Among many little oddities I found from Tito [was] that he shaved everyday of the war except one day, the one day, when he was wounded in the left upper arm by bomb splinters. And that he dressed as impeccably as was possible throughout the whole madness. Another bit: he had sent a message to Stalin telling him of his release of the German prisoners. He received a brutally nasty telegram from Stalin in reply to which he sent a cold reply saying the unless Stalin could send him, Tito, material assistance, or at least the morale-lifting presence of a military mission, he should mind his own business. When later Tito went to Moscow to see Stalin there was a small party at which, among many others, was the dreaded Beria, chief of the Secret Police.⁸⁰ Many toasts were drunk and all inevitably to Stalin. Tito had not had a drink of any alcoholic kind during four years and the eternal vodka was hitting him very hard. When his turn to toast came he toasted the inevitable Stalin, whereupon Stalin said with deadliness ‘Why do you toast me now after sending me that insulting telegram?’ Tito mumbled some placatory answer but the atmosphere was charged with menace. Later feeling sick from the vodka Tito went out into the grounds to throw up. A shadow appeared among the trees. It was Beria who said: 'Don't worry, it is only your friendly policeman!'

Thursday 19th, Dubrovnik We arrived off Dubrovnik at 5.15 yesterday afternoon and waited for the pilot for whom we continued to wait and wait. [...] When the pilot finally appeared before our puzzled eyes he explained that there was an hour time difference between Italian and Jugoslavian time. Hence the muck-up.

To our surprise, puzzlement and delight there wasn't a soul to meet us. The wharf was a desert [...] After about half an hour the inevitable little John Howard appeared telling us that everybody was on tenterhooks waiting for us to come.⁸¹ The radio and TV had been on about it for days. Were we coming by jet, private, or our yacht. We were due on Wednesday morning, Wednesday evening, we were coming by sea-plane on Thursday! Within half an hour they descended on us like Assyrians. Popovi Ć, Deli Ć, Stepanjek, yet another interpreter a General in full get-up – didn't get his name but sounded like Vuko something – the press representative.⁸² [...] The Slavs seem unexpectedly to have a manana sense of time except so far Tito.⁸³ He was as fanatically on the dot as I am. [...]

Friday 20th [...] The house is enormous and totally impersonal and it seems that we are the first people to sleep [there]. Despite its vastness it only contains four bedrooms, two of them gigantic and containing two equally gargantuan study-offices adjoining. The other two are your large but not awe-inspiring bedrooms. The groundfloor 'lounge' and dining-room which leads off from it is about the size of a tennis court. There are 17 servants only one of whom speaks English or Italian and badly at that. So I have temporarily married my Serbo-Croat phrase book. Have you ... and nouns nouns nouns. Coffee, tea, onions, tomatoes.

Everybody means well but we shall quietly move back to live on the yacht. It is cooler and there is no language problem for E when I'm not around and the beloved books are ambient.

The yacht is parked very precariously near the steps leading up to the house and is potentially dangerous in case of a sudden sirocco so on local advice we are moving today to a little harbour about three miles away. Since leaving the yacht here is inviting everybody, and there are many many people around, to a perpetual 'open house', it is a good idea to get away. Yesterday we had Hardy Krüger and wife and children and the nanny and a Jug actress very young and a bit 'cute' called Neddy pronounced Naydee and probably written Nedj or something.⁸⁴ Krüger and wife are very German and very serious and determinedly intellectual. Somebody mentioned Visconti's Death in Venice and I said I hadn't seen it and – politely and totally without interest – asked if Mrs Krüger had seen it.⁸⁵ She had. What did she think of it? I said like a fool. Foolish, because then she proceeded to tell me and at length with a wealth of perfectly predictable criticisms of it because I too had read a few of the notices by accident, and saw them all coming like a Teutonic juggernaut. Phwew! Krüger himself who is one of those measured mental pipe-smoking meerschaums went on for an equally long time about the vast problem of whether E should or should not play a small part in the film of a partisan lady-doctor who is conventionally brave and loses her legs in a battle and suitably dies heroically and so on. I said that I wouldn't dream of asking a major star like E or Loren or A. Hepburn to play such a minute and conventional role and that it demanded nothing of her while she, being a professional, would demand a great deal of them.⁸⁶ Well, Mr Krüger went on, now Stanislavski (There are no small parts. Want a bet Stan?) Freud and Stephen Haggard (I would rather play a bad part in a good play than a good part in a bad play) and charity, as 'twere, her, E's contribution to the heroism of the Slav peoples by playing a small part for nothing.⁸⁷ My syntax is all to hell as I am sitting on the poop and am continually distracted by Liza, Kate and E and Raymond.

I awoke this morning [...] and went downstairs to read the 'new' script. It is as far as I can remember the same as the previous one with the addition of a few large extracts from Tito's memoirs or speeches which read like memoirs or speeches and which I will change myself into believable jargon. As for the rest of it I have suggested that they employ a standard and inexpensive writer of English to put the translation into speakable terms. Example: young Partisan girl shouting to her companions in the midst of battle 'Remember the Dalmatians' which conjures up an image of a frenzied pack of Disney hounds.⁸⁸ I read out E's part to her as it came up. She is in 14 out of 214 which we have decided is not a dominating role especially as she is never mentioned throughout the other 200 pages. We have just heard from Ron that they are terribly disappointed but will search immediately for somebody else. Who do they have in mind, they were asked? Oh people like Jane Fonda, Simone Signoret, Vanessa Redgrave etc. They are breathtakingly unrealistic. But their innocence is so total that they might surprise us all by actually getting someone like that.

Anyway, and perfectly selfishly, if the film is a bust they have only one of us

to blame because they always blame us for the failures and praise the director for our successes. I have lost count of the number of times I've read that 'Director X managed to wrest a brilliant performance out of Elizabeth Taylor.' This is particularly surprising to us because E and I in our combined careers don't recollect more than a dozen lines of direction all told from all directors. And specifically, since I reached my majority, so to speak, as an actor I don't remember any particular direction at all. The only people I remember actually evoking something in me as an actor which I didn't know was there are Phil, Emlyn and John Gielgud. All of which invaluable stuff I learned before I was 23 or so. Since, and sometimes with sad results, I have directed myself. The last man to give me direction which I found interesting and followable and sometimes enthrallingly brilliant was Mike Nichols and that was in the comedy sequences in Woolf. A lot of people have said that my very long speech in that same film under the tree and on the swing outside the house is one of the best pieces of acting etc. I did it, I remember, in one take and without direction from Mike apart from things like 'maybe you should move from the swing to the tree'. And as for other 'great directors' like Marty Ritt, Mankiewicz, Babblin' Tony Richardson etc. I don't remember anything they said except idiocies which I ignored.

Saturday 21st Beautiful morning as indeed all the mornings are here so far. Am sitting in a very smelly very noisy helicopter which is our transport to work in the mountains. The journey takes approx 45 minutes and unlike the many copters I have flown in hitherto there are only tiny little windows so there is – without a lot of contortion – no way of watching the lovely land underneath. Looking at it from above I wonder again at the tenacity of the Germans in being able to fight at all in these dreadful places. Crag and crevice, precipice and ravine, choked pass after choked pass, natural ambushes by the thousands and a people of murderous courage, and no victory to show for it as the Slavs would never face them in straightforward battle – hit and run, sabotage and hide, in and out of these endless hills. And what an admirable people the Yugoslavians are. Loveable and naive and quite clearly very different from the Latin and Anglo-Saxon. There is a lot of Asiatic fatalism combined with an almost Italian élan. I would guess.

[...] When I arrived in the mountains, a place called Zablijia pronounced Jabla (French 'J'), there were about a hundred press people, perhaps more.⁸⁹ This seemed odd as the copter landed in a field – actually it was a grass runway for light planes – and a scene one normally associates with big international airports took place on farm land. There were endless questions and only one which I'd never been asked before on this trip. To my carefully hidden astonishment a very sharp lady asked me how I felt playing Tito and was I also nervous because I was working with a director who'd never directed a film before. Since the Popović had given me the impression that Deli Ć, the metteur, had done about 50 films and was the number one in Yugoslavia I was a little taken aback. I pointed out quite rightly that I had made three or four films with previously unknown directors and all those films had been successful: Wolf with Nichols, Shrew with Zeffirelli, Anne with Charles Jarrott and now Villain with whassisname.⁹⁰ Received a cable, incidentally, from Nat Cohen saying the notices for latter superb and great box-office, and another cable said we expect a million pounds from UK alone. That means about $1½m for me if I remember correctly.

There is no accounting for the differing tastes of Yanks and English critics. Villain was received badly in the US and with rapture in the UK. I know it is cockney and therefore difficult for Yanks to follow but one would have thought the critics to be of sufficiently wide education to take it in their stride. The English critics, after all, are not embarrassed when they see a film made in Brooklynese. Anyway I am so delighted that it is doing well in UK. Otherwise I would have doubted E's and my judgement in such matters. I thought it was good and she said she knew it was good. The American reaction was therefore a surprise.

22nd, Zablj Came up last night in a helicopter to stay in a small house in this village. We have worked here for three days though me only for two as I have Sundays off. E [...] asked Gianni and Claudye to say with us though, thankfully they are going to the hotel today. Apart from the house being very small and despite the fact that they are nice people, neither of them are readers and E and I are. Also it means four people, all of whom get up at the same time, sharing one minute bathroom. [...] On Friday, I mean Saturday I spent my time apart from one tiny scene which contained dialogue narrowly escaping being blown up. Don't know what they'll look like on the screen but they – the explosions – looked bloody effective in reality. They had real planes too, trying to look like stukas – about 20 of them. Must have cost a fortune. And will look no better I suspect than an old Anglo-Saxon mock-up. At least to the ordinary public. [...]

It is magnificent country up here in the mountains – the famed Montenegrin mountains – and I could live here a long time if asked to. It is apparently cut off from the rest of the world completely in the depths of winter. I would like that. [...]

To my astonishment the actor with whom I have most to do in the film doesn't speak a word of English and was prepared to speak all his dialogue in Serbo-Croat. I refused to do this saying it would give the dubber into English an impossible task and ruin the film for distribution in the Western world. As it is, I don't see it having a chance even with them speaking all the dialogue in broken English with me speaking in perfect Oxford. We can, I think write this film off before we start. The Jugs are also particularly thick when one tries to explain this to them and I have almost given up. Even the Englishmen, Deakin, Stewart et al. are Serbs. It's hair-tearing. I plead with them that Deakin and Stewart are upper class British, one of them, Deakin, being an actual Oxford professor. But to no avail. Actually, assuming that they speak the English lines reasonably well they could be dubbable without it being too obvious but it will still look cheap.

I would willingly have learned my part in Serbo-Croat if they'd given me time but I cannot do it at short notice. I am in with a bunch of child-amateurs and must settle for it.

However it is lovely up here and the people are charming and willing and I must regard the whole thing as a working holiday. I'll do my best and hope for the best. [...]

23rd, Zablja [...] Have given up the film as a film and will now concentrate on doing my bit as well as possible. [...] If I'm not happy in a film it affects my whole attitude to everything. I am beginning to dislike this place and can't wait to get away from it though it is unquestionably delightful. There was a party given, I suppose, in honour of the film company which was friendly enough but my sour reaction was that all the actors there should be home learning their lines in English. Why the hell didn't they do it all in Serbo-Croat including an Yugoslav actor playing Tito instead of this half-assed thing that will appeal to neither the Slavs or the English audience? [...] I left the party early, unable to stand any longer the false bonhomie induced by showing off to the foreigners and the drunkenness. Being sober among a horde of drunks is exquisite torture. I slid quietly home and talked with Claudye for a while who had been as bored as I was and then tucked myself into bed with, surprisingly, a bad book by John D. Macdonald who usually can be relied on in his mock-tough-sentimental holier-than-thou way to be readable. [...]

24th, Cavtat-Stefani We are on the Kalizma en route to Stefani (I believe) where, we understand, Carlo Ponti and Sophia have a house.⁹¹ It's supposed – the island I mean, not the Pontis' place – to be a location of staggering beauty. It is typical of us to be sailing in the dark to anchor at Stefani when we haven't yet seen the world-famous Dubrovnik which is a spit and a yard away from where we're living in Kupari.⁹²

When we arrived at the Kalizma which is, was, moored at Cavtat there were a couple of hundred people standing on the pavement simply staring at the boat. They were delighted when we arrived and we were applauded royally. I was feeling terrible and for a second I had a feeling of panic but the crowd were so nice and friendly that I was alright immediately. E was very touched. We talked to Pedro who consulted the harbour pilot who told us that Stefani was about 3 hours away. We untied and left as soon as we could. The people waved and shouted us away as we stood beside the bridge. It was a good moment and we were both in a mood of divine content. [...] E is a magnificent midwife for the birth of the blues – it was her idea to go to the yacht as soon as we came down from the mountains. She didn't even consult me. And I was at bursting point. I had been very cruel to Liza this morning – viciously so. She had said that I ought to keep the film dog with me at all times while I was doing the work.⁹³ I said the bloody dog was so infatuated by his master that he would whine and scratch all night and in any case I said the bloody master was reluctant even to have me tickle his ears. Liza said 'But he's your dog.' And out of that cesspool of cold cruelty which some people call a brain came 'Don't be bloody stupid. He's no more my dog than you are my daughter.' Liza was as brave as hell and said with a strained little laugh 'That was very nice.' E was quite rightly livid and I wanted to cry or slit my jugular. I did neither except compound the crime by snarling at E upstairs that Liza was so insensitive that she was probably impervious to such an insult. I am so ashamed of myself for saying such a terrible thing to a creature that I love so blindingly and love her in a crazily compounded fashion. I love her for being Elizabeth's alter ego, for being lovely and so loving, for her pretty ruthless determination to get what she can get away with, for her genuine and occasionally staggering beauty and for the fact that though like me she cannot express it in so many words from some inborn refusal to give herself away I am pretty certain that she loves me. I could have cut out my vile tongue with a blunt razor. From what twisted root did that bastard tree grow? I do it again and again. In most cases where I maul and savage a victim I can generally account for it in some way. How can I attack myself so unbelievably – it is I who insists that she be Liza Todd Burton. It is I who boast about her beauty, her horsemanship, her good reports at school and even her bad ones. 'Her spelling is sometimes amusingly phonetic.' Just like her bloody mother to the T.

Eventually, I made it up with them both. But 'taint good enough.

Friday 27th, Kupari We spent yesterday in the bay of Kotor which Princess Margaret was so enthusiastic about.⁹⁴ [...] We entered through the straits of Verige – my little book tells me – so named because the locals would block the entrance in the middle ages with a chain and 'verige' is apparently the local word for chain.⁹⁵ The Turks appear to be the most persistent marauders and I wouldn't have thought that chains would have proved a very formidable obstacle to so tough a people. Anyway it appears that nobody over the centuries ever succeeded in penetrating into the city of Kotor. According to my little book Bernard Shaw thought it the most beautiful place on earth.⁹⁶ [...]

Wolf Mankowitz has arrived and has already re-written my part and simplified it. Good and hard-working man. But I think all to no avail. [...]

Sunday 29th, Fiord of Kotor [...] I said, at one point yesterday, that I thought the 'bungalow' arrangements were fine for an actor on location but that I found it surprising accommodation for the President of the country. Ah, they said, so do we, but it is to impress the people that he is still one of us. I said I thought it didn't work as far as I could see as the people are more impressed by our, E and me, display of enormous wealth – as they thought – and would be far less interested by a Ford, an arrival by Air Italia and a simple cotton frock than they are by a gleaming white yacht, a private jet and a giant Rolls-Royce. Of the scores of newspapers and magazines they bring to me occasionally which generally contain lots of pictures of me as Tito, E and me, E and me and Tito etc. there is invariably a very glam shot of the Kalizma and the Phantom 6 with a description of its inside, its TV etc. [...]

We steamed from Cavtat last evening as soon as I'd had time to arrive home from Sutjeska take my make-up off and shower and shampoo and get to the yacht. Liza left for England with wet eyes and much kissing from Mum and daughter, so Mum tells me, and weeping servants and all. We miss her already, rather more than usual as she has become more of a companion than hitherto and now, God be praised, has started to become our favourite thing – a book worm. The Gabrielle Hounds by Mary Stewart and Rosemary's Baby by Ira Levin which is a considerable advance over no books at all for thirteen years.⁹⁷ [...]

There is a big house opposite us that seems to be at least pre-war and has an air of neglect. Our Chekhovian imaginations run riot.⁹⁸ It could be very handsome if done up.

Monday 30th, Sutjeska There is no such definite locale as Sutjeska – the latter is the name of a river over which the Germans and the partisans fought so bitterly. Also here were the Italians but they are very much neglected both in history and in our script so I presume their contribution to the German slaughter of the partisans was probably as negligible as it was in every other theatre of the last war. Nearby – a short walk from this ‘villa’ which we are living in – is a very impressive monument to the Sutjeska dead, some 25,000 or 20–40,000 depending on which authority you listen to last, which is to be unveiled by Marshal Tito this week.⁹⁹ [...] There are many soldiers about who sing a lot around fires – a bit like my old Welsh lot. They seem very contented, or at least as contented as one can expect conscripted soldiers to be. [...]

Kathy Green, the giant daughter of Johnny Green – for many years head of the Music Dept of MGM – appeared on the set today with a man called Richard Chase.¹⁰⁰ I think the latter is a musician. However, while we were all waiting for the helicopter to arrive with E and Maria and Claudye aboard, she, Kathy, found a half-blind kitten, minute, in a hedge and kept it and gave it to E as she arrived. So now we have another member of the family, it seems [...]. It is already the centre of everybody's attention and is being fed with sugared water and milk and is being house-trained. It is a tom we think but no name has yet been chosen. I want to call it Jack. I've always like the name Jack. Dunno why really but possibly because it sounds honest and strong and masculine. Jack Stevens the Fruiterer who always thought the English language inadequate and added ‘strengthening syllables’ like colossal, majestic and monumental etc. And Jack Jones Edwards, a rogue, smalltown politician in Cwmavon, and innumerable over-masculine Jack Joneses and Jack Jameses four square and brutally forward and overbearing affronters of pomposity and weak arguments. It looks however as if it might be called ‘Sutjeska’. [...]

Tuesday 31st, Tjentiste I finally told Elizabeth this morning how ill her mother has been for the last nine days. I couldn't even confide my worry to this diary as E dips into it sporadically. Anyway her mother was operated on two days ago and the telegram we received yesterday said the five days following the operation are critical so now it's three days. [...] The latest telegram mentioned above was signed by some people called Karl and Mary Frances Voldeng, and of course Valerie who has been the signee for the past week and a bit.¹⁰¹ [...] E has taken it all badly as she has a quite unjustified guilt complex re her mother. Nothing that can be reasoned out so I don't try. Also, I feel that I genuinely do not have the capacity for suffering that other people have and in particular Elizabeth. I am as dispassionate as it is possible for a human being to be and not be a machine, and what compassion I do have I find almost impossible to express. God knows what will be my feelings if anything happens to someone I greatly love but I generally console myself that I will have gone to my long home long before they. I am prepared for Ivor, even for Cis. But not for the children and above all E. If anything happens to E I am fairly positive that I won't be long after since I cannot believe that life will be worth living without her and indeed cannot believe that I ever did. I mean live without her. It was such a dreary plain with only an occasional high peak of excitement. [...]

SEPTEMBER

Wednesday 1st, Tjentiste [...] Yesterday was brilliant sunshine until lunch-time when a huge wind sprang up and by the time I finished work – about 4.30 – it began to rain and has continued to do so ever since with very few let-ups. It is pouring in torrents now at this moment and has been all night [...] I wonder if they can shoot in this monsoon weather. [...] I'd like to work because (a) I feel guilty when I don't as I cost so much money and (b) because I like these Yugoslavs so very much. I do not suffer any guilt pangs at all when working for a big studio though then I simply feel frustration at not getting the damned film finished as soon as possible. The thought of bad weather or bad luck causing a Zanuck a Warner or a Wasserman to cry into his Scotch gives me infinite pleasure.¹⁰²

And still it rains and there are all our soldiers under canvas. Shades of Alun Lewis.¹⁰³ Unlightable fires and damp matches. Blue-cupped hands. Give us a light mate. [...]

It is now eight at night and still it rains and confuse it not with a drizzle. It is an unremitting Dickensian God-despairing world-ending Noachian deluge promising the end of the world by dawn. [...]

Thursday 2nd [...] The rain is coming down comme une vache qui pisse, a charming simile I learned yesterday from Claudye, and is not raining so much cats and dogs but mastodons and megathings and other prehistoric reptiles. [...]

Yesterday, while E stayed sensibly in bed and wrapped up, I went with Claudye, Gianni, Brook and E'en So to view the 'villa' up on the mountain called Bare. The situation is breathtaking. The house, very alpine looking on the very edge of a lovely little lake about 150 yards by 100. The road was unpaved and occasionally very dangerous, avalanche-prone, and interminable, hairpin after hairpin and in this torrential weather a real monster. We took no chances in the Phantom 6 and crept up. This meant a journey in pouring rain, of course, of just over an hour. Nevertheless I would have settled for the extra hour or so a day getting to work were it not for the fact that the interior of the house was a complete shambles. No heating except for a huge fireplace which could be jolly enough. No hot water, wood-burning kitchen stove, no electricity and no prospect of getting any as far as I could gather. Filthy, rusty bath and a blocked shower with a fin de siècle wood-burning stove to heat the water presumably. One of the ladies spoke a little French and was totally flabbergasted at the prospect of anybody staying there. But, we said, tout le monde dit que le President reste ici quelque fois. 'Jamais,' she said, 'he once came here and killed a bear, of whom the forest is full. But he has never stayed here.'¹⁰⁴ So thereby is killed another lie or, to be charitable, another bit of misinformation. [...]

Thursday 2nd, Kupari [...] Better and better news of Sara and hopes are now that it will not be necessary for either of us to fly to Arizona. We had more or less decided that E and Claudye would fly tomorrow. Temporarily, at least, that possibility is now in abeyance. [...]

Friday 3rd The Hitler War started 32 years ago today. A fine day like this I remember and a Sunday morning I think. I was excited, like all the other boys – I was 13 years old – and pleased enough that there was a real war, never dreaming that it would last long enough for me to be in the RAF toward the end of it.¹⁰⁵ The only disappointment was that I was quickly assured that the war meant I'd lost my chance for a schoolboy rugby 'cap' for Wales. I was an obvious certainty having been there or thereabouts the season before and was massive for my age – 12 stone and 5ft 8 or 9. I've hardly grown since. I might have got one as a grown-up largely through personality rather than genuine first class ability. I was a natural Captain wherever I played and might have sneaked a cap or two when one of the standard boys was crooked or something. I regret it a lot less than I used to do when I saw so many of my contemporaries getting caps while I was playing Shakespeare. Too late cock, too late. [...]

James Wishart expected any minute from London for me to sign some papers anent Harlech TV. It goes public shortly. I could make a fortune and pull out now but I suppose I shouldn't. Wait and see what James has to say. I wish he were a younger man and I wish he hadn't been so ill. Always affects people's judgements one way or the other.

Since writing the above we have been in to Dubrovnik again. [...] Bought books – not much choice but took everything unread. [...]

A letter from Liza [Todd]. How sophisticated her fist has become. Also one from Lil Williams who says that notices for Milk Wood are 'fabulous' and that one has to queue up to see Villain everywhere. Now if, as I expect, XYZ hits the jackpot too we shall have had a very good year. Even the joke film Raid on Rommel is surprising everybody. There's life in these old dogs yet.

Wishart's plane three hours late so shall see him tomorrow sometime. Going back up to Tjentiste tomorrow [...] to see Tito. Apparently he wants to see us before he sees all the other odds and sods. [...] And so, Samuel Pepys, to bed.¹⁰⁶

Saturday 4th, Kupari James Wishart came with me [to Tjentiste] to tell me all the tales of Harlech TV. He seemed in good form and rubicund and jolly like an animated doll's head. He told me that the Harlech shares which we paid 2/6d a share for are likely to open on the market at a quid.¹⁰⁷ We could if we wished sell half the shares and pick up a half a million or so and still be rich holders – at the moment we are the principal shareholders by a considerable amount. I am accustomed to earning vast monies but they were earned. Picking up millions from an investment which was, I think, about £100,000 is fairy tale stuff. So after the horror of the first four days of this week everything is turning out golden again. Sara is going to be alright, God Willing, Milk Wood has had magnificent notices not only in London and Italy but now too in NY, Villain is packing them in in Britain and Raid on Rommel is doing likewise in Paris, Rome and Milan. And, most importantly of all E has come back to life again after being moribund for these horrific last few days.

In the car on the way up Wishart told me that he had guessed from various snippets of stock-exchange gossip that Stan Baker is having some financial difficulties.¹⁰⁸ I can't believe that hard-headed old Stan hasn't salted some nice sums away somewhere. He must have got himself into trouble with the tax people. He'll whistle his way out I'm sure.

We arrived at Tjentiste about 20 minutes early for Tito [...]. Then at eleven on the dot it seems we were summoned to the presence. For the first half hour or so it was just Tito and Madame and Popovi Ć and Deli Ć and of course Tito's interpreter. We – Deli Ć, Popovi Ć and I – all told Tito how good everything was. I said how efficient Popovi Ć was and he said how professional I was and I said what a splendid director Deli Ć was and Deli Ć said what a magnificent actor I was etc. Tito was in a very jolly mood putting what seemed like the fear of God or a firing-squad into the other two blokes when he said that he expected me to be in his old uniform tomorrow for the ceremony. They took him quite seriously until I said 'Come on, the President is pulling your leg!' Which of course he was. Afterwards all the other actors were presented to us and a dozen or so old comrades and I presume local big-wigs. From then on it was hard work for Tito, looking across the valley and at the mountains where he and his lads had fought so desperately 28 years ago, naturally began to reminisce and was so far gone in memories that he rarely gave his interpreter a chance to speak. This meant long periods of listening to stories in a completely alien tongue, only some of which were translated.

Sunday 5th Here we are again ready to set off for the dreaded Tjentiste by helicopter we hope this time. Today has all the hall-marks of being dreadful. Many thousands of people. Speeches. National Anthem. The Internationale.¹⁰⁹ And on top of it all they want me to work! Just so that Tito can see a bit of action. After all that they want us to fly to a place called Niš (pron Neesh) to the annual beano of the Yugoslav theatrical profession.¹¹⁰ We are expected to stay the night and come back tomorrow morning for work again. Strange behaviour. The film sometimes seems to be very much in second place to all kinds of social activities. [...]

Later Today:

Well, as prognosticated by Dr and Mrs Burton, it was a dreadful day though not as boring as I thought it might be. [...] First of all, we arrived in plenty of time to see Tito at eleven o'clock only to find out that His Excellency didn't expect to see us at all. It was the ineffable Popovi Ć who had insisted that we were there so early because of the danger of being delayed en route. [...] However we hung around the unfinished hotel and I drank coffee while E had a drink or two. Then suddenly there was a flurry of Generals and we were hastily put into cars and driven across fields where we were presented to the Marshal and Wife. Some bloke made a speech introducing the Tito I presume, whereupon the old man tore off up some steps to the podium, battered with mikes and let us all have it for about 30 minutes. The crowd was huge. I guessed 50,000 trying vaguely to fit them into Cardiff Arms Park in my mind's eye.¹¹¹ 'Many more than that,' said the Generalissimo in English and quite sharply. In fact Tito seemed much less friendly today than he was yesterday. E remarked on it feeling a trifle miffed I suppose. I can only assume that his attitude changes subtly but definitely from public to private. There was none of the hugging and kissing of Brioni. Fact is that I was pretty well pissed off with the man-o-the-people because he didn't make more fuss of Elizabeth. He and Madame Broz did at least ask about her mother and at the end of the day when we had done a very actionful shot for their Majesties, Madame sent E her love and Tito said something which was I suppose 'hear hear' or something. And at the final handshake he said in English 'Hope to see you again.' You'll be lucky, mate. I swear to God there is more nonsensical protocol than with English royalty. [...]

After the speech which was apparently full of platitudes [...] about the heroism of the mighty dead and that the world and even their 'allies' – meaning Russia apparently – still did not believe the extent of the Yugoslavian sacrifice – we went back to the hotel not knowing whether we were invited to lunch with Tito or not. Not quite sure whether we wanted to be or not we put three tables together and ordered lunch at the hotel-restaurant. Five minutes later there was yet another panic and they came [...] in a sweat to say that we were expected to have lunch with Tito and the surviving partisans of the battle of Sutjeska. Furious [...] we got into the ever-present Mercedes and drove about 10 miles to the place. It was an open restaurant, obviously just shoved up for the day. We stood there, E and I and Maria and Vessna the new interpreter for 45 minutes signing endless autographs waiting for Tito to arrive. After all that we found we were not sitting with him but stuck with the scintillating Popovi Ć and Hardy Krüger. The latter obviously has a very nasty attack of jealousy and resentment of the red carpet treatment I get everywhere. He too is a bore and I hear from the other lads who live around the hotel with him that, typical Teuton, he bullies defenceless people like waiters etc. He works without cease on Wolf to write in flashbacks of Tito and himself enlarging his part and enabling him to get to grips with R. Burton etc. and Wolf refuses and Krüger persists with Wolf saying: I wasn't paid to re-write the plot mate. I was hired to put the translation into palatable English. The insults began according to Ron and Brook. One sample:

Krüger: 'You are a stupid man.' Wolf: 'And you're the Nazi Tab Hunter.'¹¹²

E is in the worst state of lassitude I ever remember of her. She has always been naturally somewhat indolent – not the kind of girl one finds rushing off to play golf and tennis, God Forbid – but now, I mean for the last couple of days, she can barely move one foot in front of the other. It's largely of course the reaction from the tension of the past week but it's bloody worrying. [...]

Monday 6th [...] The helicopters yesterday were the usual farce. For once we left on time but only seven people allowed again. From the air we could see huge concourses of people milling about before we landed and endless streams of buses. And thousands of cars. We landed on the football field where there was of course no one to meet us. [...] However [...] we were escorted to a car and drove off through dense crowds to the new hotel. [...] To add to the mania, incidentally, when E, bright with fury at the whole mess-up of the lunch came with me to location she sat down in my trailer on one of the banquettes and went right through it, legs kicking in the air. Nobody dared laugh or they would have been brained with a hand-bag but it was unquestionably funny. Ron had to leave the cabin. Once I knew she hadn't hurt her very vulnerable back I became faintly cracked myself. That sort of thing only happens when an entire day turns out to be a bastard.

Tuesday 7th, Tjentiste Am in Tito's hut and shall tonight sleep in his bed. For the first time it is really cold and fortunately the two little heaters from the other hut are with us and are going full blast. If the electricity fails again it will be mittens and woollen stockings all around. [...] As I say, once this lot get going they are very efficient but getting them going is torture. I doubt whether I've had more than five minutes on film in two weeks, and I have a definite stop-date. I am playing the part of a patient actor and hope to God I don't have to lose my temper. [...]

And now to await lunch and work and my lovely old E in the evening. It's not a bad life. Not really. Not like the other morning when I was figuring out the repercussions of my suicide on the people who like me.

Wednesday 8th [...] A miserable night in Tito's bed which for some reason, what I'm beginning to believe is typically Yugoslavian, refuses to have sheets or blankets which adequately cover the bed. This meaning a freezing shoulder or a damp calf. Went in to get Maria's mug this morning – the only adequate drinking vessel we have – and she was completely covered with the clothes. Woke up with an awful feeling of deja vu. I was back in my cold damp childhood without even the prospect of a fire to light and leap and dance of burning anthracite. I shudder to be reminded of anything that happened to me before the age of about thirty and though I had a fantastically happy childhood I don't want to be reminded of Caradoc Street and that awful bathroom window which was broken by Rhys Oates' daughter when she was taking her monthly bath and which was never mended throughout my children [sic], and what is more ludicrous never allowed to be mended.¹¹³ What a monster that Elfed was. Eleven years with the same broken window which would have cost sixpence and fifteen minutes to replace. If anybody had mended it he would have broken it again. What a foony mann. It is hard to remember that that idiot of my childhood is now a benign and elderly man. Had a bitter little contretemps with E this morning. [...] Ended up by her saying she would go on the boat and me saying good idea and her saying that when I was sober I was a pain in the ass and perhaps I should start drinking again. So you're damned if you do and you're damned if you don't. [...] We had the Bozzacchis all evening. They mean sweetly and Claudye helps to unpack etc. but it means eternal conversations and no long readings of books. I must have dropped hints by the thousand that my favourite occupation is sitting alone in a room with E drinking tea, me, and drinking, her or not drinking and simply and simple-mindedly reading books or occasionally chatting. But one might as well drop a canister of water on a prairie fire. [...]

Thursday 7th, Tjentiste¹¹⁴ [...] Last night we sat and made our own supper. I looked up the various articles in the dictionary and asked for everything in Serbo-Croat. What's more, almost everything arrived as asked. I was flushed with success. E made some soup with an egg broken into it. Very good. I desserted on chocolate and fancy biscuits. [...]

Have just written a telegram to Kate who has a birthday on the 10th. She will be 14 years old. How she goes the time. And how she grows the girl. She is a head taller than Liza and as tall if not taller than E which makes her around 5'4". I hope she doesn't grow too tall. 5'6" is enough I think.

[...] How much happier E and I are when we are left alone. Last night, apart from the waiter, we saw nobody and it was delicious. People get on our collective nerves and as one attacks one of them the other defends. E attacks Brook. I defend. I attack Raymond. E defends etc. Fact is that we're wearing them all out. Raymond's relief when I say or we say that we shan't need him for a few days is palpable. He can't wait to get away. He is rapidly getting old. Any minute or dark day now he is going to look his age. Terrible to be a middle aged pouff. He's actually 50 odd. I hope he's no longer in our employ when he's 60 odd. Still ogling fellow travellers. Creeps-giving. [...]

Received a cheque yesterday from Ron's Vicky for $3,350 which means $10,000 return on a $40,000 investment in about six years which is not bad. She is certainly the only one of our friends who has ever paid back anything. John Sullivan – over $100,000 and not a cent return. Heyman, ditto. Tim Hardy £12,000 and nil return. etc. etc. Including our various friends we must be owed a million dollars. Alexandre of Paris too yet owes us about $125,000. No sign of repayment – not even the interest. [...]

Friday 8th, Tjentiste¹¹⁵ [...] Yesterday having sat around in make-up all day long I worked in Foca at 5.30pm. Did a scene with the girl who plays Vera who, of course, doesn't speak a word of English.¹¹⁶ She shall be dubbed. However she was obviously experienced and had a go and was very nice. She had a 'film face' – a dark haired girl of about 30 that I'm pretty sure I shan't remember when next I see her where I saw her before. I mean if I saw her in the street. Or at a party or something like that. An oval face, regular features, a good standard voice. about 5'4", standard build. In short, like a thousand other actresses everywhere. [...]

We had sent Maria back to Kupari with Raymond the day before yesterday as she was quite clearly and understandably bored up here when the rain came down without stop. [...] So with everybody else congregating in the other hut and waiting for the call we sat and read all day. E reading thriller after thriller and me alternating between a 'Bony' thriller and a book called Bridge over the Drina described as Yugoslavia's 'greatest novel by Nobel Prizewinner Ivo Andrić' and good it is too though it's not a novel at all in the ordinary sense of the word so far anyway.¹¹⁷ More a series of anecdotes loosely woven in and around the history of the bridge over a period of 300 years. I doubt if I would have read it with the same interest were it not that I am close to the actual scene of events. There is a description of an impalement, in detail, which horrified me. I didn't know that impaling was so exact a science. The 'master' impaler was able to so do his job that though the pointed stick went right through the body from bottom to shoulder through the anus it must avoid all the essential organs so that the poor bastard would live as long as possible, some for a few hours, some for as long as a day. [...]

Saturday 9th, Kupari¹¹⁸ [...] Am going into Dubrovnik to buy things. Don't quite know what. Lighters and lighter fluid and a book or two peut etre. [...]

Walked for an hour in Dubrovnik looking for a baccho shop. Finally found one and bought a gas lighter, cheap, and a pen-and-pencil case for E as an encouragement for her sudden letter-writing. Doubt if it will be used much but you never know.

Dubrovnik is made ugly by all its tourists. There are always thousands and I had an audience the whole time swelling to a hundred or so when I stopped to buy the lighter. I with Maria got out fast. Went in the mini-moke which is made for these narrow winding roads. I wish it had a little more power however. When I came back I saw John Heyman who stayed for a couple of hours chatting of this business and that business finally ending up chatting of cricket in the old days – i.e. the thirties. I told him of the enormous excitement of the 'bodyline' tour of my childhood when cricket made headlines not only on the sports pages but on the front pages and was the subject of editorials in solemn journals.¹¹⁹ We shall never look upon its like again. Bradman and Larwood, Macabe and Voce, Ponsford and Hammond and Gubby Allen and Bowes bowling Bradman middle stump. And the imperturbable Jardine.¹²⁰

Everybody, which means E principally, in a foul mood about going to Niš this afternoon for the bloody actors' do when we are presented with awards etc. and have to meet mayors and presidents of republics and cocktail parties and supposed to see a film in Serbo-Croat yet which we are determinedly holding out against seeing. And another cocktail party tomorrow morning at 10am if you please before flying back here. All the things in fact that we loathe most in this world but which have to be done. Sometimes.

If it were anything but a communist country, especially a nice one like this, they would be told in no uncertain fashion where to stuff their awards and cocktail parties and mayors and presidents. But we are being fixed-smile-diplomats. Shit.

Found about three books by unknown authors which will plough through if things get bad.

Heyman told me that everyone is agreed that The Burtons are as easy as pie to handle but that The Burtons' Entourage is a pain in the ass and every producer, when they are mentioned, hopes fervently that they will all die in the night of galloping heart attacks. Too bad, I said, though I agree about some. The great exception is of course Ron and though I like the others I don't think that any of them are necessary to me. I like Bob Wilson to be around and be barman and man of distinction and Jim is useful with mail but lacks the charm so essential when handling so many different kinds of people. He's no Dick Hanley. Raymond, Claudye and Gianni actively bore me if they are around for any length of time. Brook is intelligent but is now so circumscribed by something, possibly E's and my hidden but perhaps not hidden enough distaste, that all his wit and humour seem to have fled except sporadically. He used to be very amusing.

Saturday 11th, Niš Same day and late at night – about 11.30 – and I've changed the date on the heading above as everybody assures me that it's not the 9th but the 11th. That means that all the dates for the last several days must be skew-whiff also. Probably came from making two entries on the same day – as today – and getting distracted or something.

Any road [...] the dreaded visit here didn't go too badly. At least we're home and safe. [...] there was the time-honoured conglomerate of stick mikes and TV cameras. They pounced and preyed on us of course immediately but we went straight into our car and then watched with astonishment the almost ludicrously old-fashioned posing of the German actor Hardy Krüger who really and truly struck dramatic attitudes – looking up at the sky and showing now this profile now the other. I could hardly credit my eyes while E had some very XYZ remarks to make re that particular kraut. When my baby don't take no fancy to somepoorbody she sure don't take no fancy. And the poor-spirited son of envy compounds his lack of charm at every opportunity. He can barely speak to or look at either of us. He reminds me oddly enough of a chap called Raymond St Jacques. A very handsome and some say homosexual American Negro actor who said in Cotonou that the waiters (all coal black) in the Hotel Croix de Sud were discriminating against black clients as for instance 'whenever the Burtons appear we might as well not exist even though we might have been sitting and waiting for 10 or 15 minutes.' 'Ah my friend,' said the delicious Roscoe Lee Browne, also a blackman, and who speaks as pedantically as a professor, 'Royalty itself has been known to wait when the Burtons are around. It is a fact of nature this attraction, like the moon's effect on the tide.'

Sunday 12th [...] After watching Krüger baring his profile, we left the airport, a military one by the look of it with no flare path and a dozen helicopters, we roared through the traffic with a police car leading us with its light flashing and its hooter going (the roof-top light being blue not red) and with a cop leaning out of one door with a round object on a stick waving all traffic to the side we swept into the oddest looking hotel that I'd ever seen. It was peculiar only in that it wasn't the hotel but a totally unannounced halt where we were made a speech to by a nervous and at the same time pompous manager about 'workers wanting to see other workers like ourselves even though the two workers her with them were a little better known than Jasha in the canteen' etc. He gave us some presents and the factory workers presented E with lots of flowers and they pressed in on us from all sides feeling our faces and smoothing our hair, particularly E's. It was all terribly embarrassing as the factory had arranged a table with drinks, including Scotch, on it and there were canapés and cigs in boxes etc. all ready for a little cocktail party. All this time the TV cameras were going and the mikes and before we could attempt to make any sort of thank yous and how delighted we were to be one with the people we were whisked away [...] without giving us a chance to show something other than startled and bewildered shock. [...] From there we went to the hotel which was another mad-house, the police not being able to control the crowds at all. [...] After 45 minutes or so we were summoned down to the cocktail floor where the crowd outside in the square chanted our names. We stood there for some time on the balcony with E bravely and regally waving and me like some dumb Prince Albert giving an occasional half-hearted waggle myself.¹²¹ We met the Mayor and I think two governors and other people who were never explained and then totally without warning there was a sort of native nightclub act. A horrible boy said into a mike that he represented the children of the world and proceeded to beat a funny little drum and hop around. There was no applause when he finished. Then a fat girl sang a couple of songs accompanied by a sort of flautist, a concertina, the boy on the small drum and a guitar. [...] After that [...] we went down to dinner. There was a long table seating about forty. We sat next to each other. E had the organizer of the Festival on her right and I had an actress-judge who spoke reasonable French on my left. Next to the actress, who seemed a nice woman there was a critic who spoke English. He was a crasher and talked about British theatre all the time. Since I've only seen two plays in England in 10 years I wasn't able to make much contribution. [...]

Airplane Sitting in the plane [...] having had yet another encounter with TV and radio and all its appurtenances. To my delight the Heavy Luger is late.¹²² Presumably he wasn't informed. Have just been told that Luger has now got a snapper with him too just like Burtons have G. Bozzacchi. Am beginning to enjoy this. The poor sod has no chance of winning this somewhat unequal battle.

Others have tried and failed. I learn now from E that the snapper is here to do the film, including me tomorrow he hopes, and not just the Bertha Krupp. They just happen to be all Germans together. The Panzer leutenant duly arrived and greeted everyone with a broad gesture and a 'Hi there'. There was no apology of any kind according to Radie Louella Hedda Taylor Burton.¹²³ [...]

After the dinner [...] we set off for the award-giving. I had also said that the best plan would be for us to arrive, be announced, and go straight onto the stage to take our bows and accept our awards which are called 'Constantines' the male award being called the Czar and the female the Czarina. And then, complete again with escort, bugger off back to the Hotel Ambassador and faint a lot.¹²⁴ [...] We were announced by the Festival's director and went on stage to a standing ovation. There were two microphones and the poor bloody Mayor read a speech of welcome to the great world renowned couple and then I was invited to give them a few deathless words. I was thinking of a few words rather on the lines of the Gettysburg Address but settled for 'Comrades, I am very nervous at the idea of my playing the greatest Yugoslavian (ovation) and probably the greatest Yugoslavian who ever lived. (Ovation) Especially as, if my work is not good today, he can have me deported tomorrow. (Laughter and applause) Thank you.'¹²⁵ Then came Female Lib herself, the Mrs Pankhurst of Culver City, who said: 'I love your country and your people.'¹²⁶ (tumultuous rapture) I love your president and his lady (ecstasy) and would like to live here forever, if you would accept us.' (End of speech partially drowned by the ultimate in cosmic approval and the music of the spheres.) There goes, we both thought, our American visas! Quite genuinely though the audience were really moved. We then received our awards – E from a very good actor who had won the Grand Prix that night and I got mine from the actress equivalent. [...]

Monday 13th, Kalizma [...] Yesterday received a long and incoherent letter from Larry Olivier re the National Theatre.¹²⁷ He must have been very drunk the last times we talked to him as nobody could have turned down the job with more firmness. But he has obviously been persisting so I wrote a long letter, long-ish anyway, explaining that he mustn't worry about his not being able to get me the job and that I wouldn't take it if offered. Not at least unless there were drastic changes. That is to say, I couldn't see myself being overruled by a board of governors over some project I had in mind. As Larry was over the Hochhuth Churchill play.¹²⁸ Granted the play was a travesty and badly written or translated or both but I would have resigned. He also said in the letter that they hadn't been allowed the money to put on Guys and Dolls.¹²⁹ Well, what sort of National Theatre is that? Those Old Etonians etc. would drive me mad in five months.¹³⁰ I love Larry but he really is a shallow little man with a very mediocre intelligence but a splendid salesman. But it is quite clear that when he is not active in the productions themselves the National loses all its glamour. It is impossible to get over-excited about people like Robert Stephens and his wife.¹³¹ They are good but lack 'glamour'. And I don't mean 'glamour' in the vulgar sense of the word. I mean the sweeping grandeur of Edith or Gielgud or Larry himself.¹³² The National should be full of the towering oaks of the profession. Scofield, Guinness, Redgrave should be permanent members of the company while those anonymous 'stars' like Stephens et al. should play the supporting parts with their usual brilliance. I saw both Stephens and Maggie Smith in the film of Jean Brodie and thought they were the dullest couple I've ever seen in an important film.¹³³ Also, alas, the National has lost its initial excitement and has become the Old Vic again – upsydownsy and again slowly being invaded by a younger generation of Paul Rogers and William Squires.¹³⁴ No offence to either of them but they do not illuminate Shakespeare with flashes of lightning. I told Larry also, to ease his conscience if any, that when I went back it would probably be to do something with the Drama Faculty at Oxford if and when it's created out of the Faustus monies. And indeed the latter is an attractive idea and a nice thing to do in my fifties. Keep me active but not too active and I would delegate like mad.

Evening

Sitting on the poop deck with my infinitely beloved wife who has acquired an even greater weight of love. I keep on mentally looking around to make sure she's there. For why this new and massive re-affirmation of adoration and worship and a promise to myself that I shall never be nasty to her ever again? I will tell you for why. For because for about three minutes this afternoon I thought that I was about to be killed instantaneously and at once, without time to re-tell her how much I love her, to apologize for breaking my contract to look after her forever, for letting her down with a bang (hysterical pun intended), and for having no time to tell her the million things yet to be told and for not realizing and demonstrating my full potential as husband, provider, lover and all.

I did not work today which is rapidly becoming the norm for this piece [...]

finally and of course inevitably word came that work was over for the day and that it was 'a wrap' and so we set off back to the copter and Kupari. I settled in on the port side right behind the pilot while Vessna, the interpreter, sat beside me with Brook on her other side. Ron sat in the rear row with Gianni. And off we went. There was a low cloud ceiling which we went into immediately we'd gained some height and, as so many times before, we threaded our way through the vicious peaks to right and left. Suddenly and without warning we were completely blacked-out though I believe the technical description is 'whited out'. There was nothing to be seen outside the cabin of the chopper except nothing. A white nothing. On top of this it began to rain torrentially and the windscreen wipers whipped back and fore like insane crickets sharpening their legs. The co-pilot frantically tried to turn himself into a human demister. We flew like this for perhaps half a minute though it seemed like half an hour when there it was! We were going at an angle of about 45 degrees into a peak. The pilot, god bless his marvellous reflexes, flung the copter to the right and there appallingly was another rock face. The co-pilot slapped the pilot on the arm and we pulled away again to the left. I don't know how close we actually were but it seemed to be the length of a rotor-arm and six feet. Whatever the distance it must have been very very close otherwise we wouldn't have seen the two peaks at all. Still we ploughed on with everyone except Gianni and I – and the pilots of course – with their eyes closed tight. Ron I saw curl himself into a ball and cover his head and ears, with his knees on the floor waiting in what they say is the classical position for a plane crash. I stared to the side with hand ready poised to warn the pilot if anything appeared on our side. The pilot was straining his eyes forward. The co-pilot was rubbing his side window with hand also poised to warn the pilot. Gianni just stared over Ron's semi-kneeling position like a man who saw nothing except eternity. Apart from my saying Holy Shit in a strangled whisper nobody uttered a sound. No sound, at least, that could be heard. So we continued to fly blind for another aeon (possibly a minute, possibly two, who knows?) dreading the head-on how-de-do from which there would be [no] way of turning. Then, the machine began to lose height pretty quickly. I could feel it though I daren't take my eyes away from the window to check the altimeter. I thought the pilot had gone mad. Later I found out why and how right he was. We dropped and dropped until there suddenly and miraculously was the much maligned road curling around the mountains. Rarely have I ever seen such a beautiful road, a masterpiece of the roadmaker's art, an example to the Romans of ancient time, I could not think how I had ever said that the road was a fucking

nightmare and an elongated version of a shit-house, a ruined shit-house. I could have gladly apologized to every kilometre of its lovely length. The pilot had lost height, he said, to be able to see, to try and go above the clouds was certain suicide because in order to gain height quickly he would have had to circle and he knew, as indeed we all knew, that there were a hundred peaks of a different height width [sic] and also there was no knowing how high the cloud was. He was however fairly sure that the cloud base would not cover the bed of the valley. What is nightmarish on recollection is how many close shaves we must have had during those two or three minutes. Glimpses of eternity we have never seen.

What is also frighteningly revelatory [sic] too is the number of levels on which the mind functions at moments of imminent catastrophe. 'Believe me sir,' said Dr Johnson, 'when a man knows he is to be hanged tomorrow morning it concentrates the mind wonderfully.'¹³⁵ There was one blazing mental image that seemed to last right through the enormity. It was E lying in bed on the yacht with a book open at the page where she'd stopped reading with the title front cover and publisher's blurb on the other face up on the bed near her right hand which was out of the covers. She was wearing one of my favourite nightgowns, a blue thing and shorty which she may have been wearing this morning when I said good bye to her. (I've just asked her and she was.) She had one leg bent and the other straight. On another level I was telling her over and over again that I loved her, I loved her. At one fractioned [sic] point I kept trying to remember a line of Alun Lewis' – 'If I should go away, beloved, do not say ...' and I couldn't remember the rest which I've known for 25 years or so. Immediately the crisis was over I remembered it immediately.

If I should go away,

Beloved,

Do not say,

He has forgotten me.

Forever you abide.

A singing rib within my dreaming side.¹³⁶

The mind is a remarkable instrument. If I wrote down everything I could remember from those interminable seconds it would be a million words. It is in fact what James Joyce's Ulysses is all about except he took a whole day for Bloom while he could have taken three minutes because the mind concentrates so wonderfully.¹³⁷ A shorter catastrophe of this kind happened to me before when I was perhaps 19–20 years old but I hadn't learned to love then and to love obsessively. Going to stop now until tomorrow morning. I must read Ulysses again.

Wednesday 15th, Kalizma–Cavtat Spent most of yesterday in a car – the Rolls-Royce. The weather was too bad to land in Tjentiste so we drove up. I sat in the back, put up the partition and settled down to The Gingerbread Lady a successful play by Neil Simon.¹³⁸ Simon is one of those playwrights who rarely is considered 'significant' by the critics, largely because he isn't, but who writes success after success. He also writes 'well-made plays' à la Rattigan.¹³⁹ In fact, he might be loosely described as a younger American version of Terry but much funnier. Some of the stuff I read in the car yesterday made me laugh out loud, which is very rare for me. They want E to it [sic] and she could have a good time in it and be very good to boot and also people forget how very funny her comedy is. Beloved old Maureen Stapleton played it on the stage and very brilliantly apparently and I can imagine her being very good. It's very sad that she photographs like a sack of potatoes. The story too is the story more or less of Maureen's life. A woman of superb talent – if she were British she would become an automatic dame – she is also a drunk and, like the woman in the play, it kills her career. Like the woman in the play she also becomes enormously fat and also has to go to a home to have a rest cure. Orkin and I watched her in and out of more alcoholic crises than one can imagine. I remember too, many years ago in Hollywood, her discovery of the joys of masturbation. 'Why the hell didn't someone teach me all about it when I was in that fucking convent?' she demanded. 'Think of all the emotional involvements I could have saved myself instead of having to get myself laid by guys I didn't even like just because I was horny. For Christ's sake I spent my youth looking for big cocks when I could have screwed myself with a brush handle.' And so on. All this revelatory [sic] talk took place in an apartment hotel, rather shabby, where most of the New York actors used to stay, on Sunset Boulevard. I think it's still going and is called the Sunset Towers.¹⁴⁰ In the middle fifties it was the thing to do if you were a New York stage actor, and to show your contempt for the contract stars, to stay there in that stucco monstrosity making it quite clear that you were your own man and not owned by some studio and the minute the fucking lousy film you were in was over you were going back to the great New York THEATRE where you re-found your soul as an artist and where the Real Work was done. I, because I was a real stage actor and had played your standard classics, was accepted there despite the fact that I had a million-dollar contract with Fox. Marlon and Monty Clift were habitués too for a time because they were always going to go back on the stage (and actually did for a second – Marlon did a couple of months in summer stock playing Arms and the man and Monty went back off-Broadway to do The Seagull) but gradually Marlon shifted further and further away until he eventually had a permanent house of his own.¹⁴¹ For Marlon, it must have been a harrowing time because he was their natural leader. They all worshipped him and comforted their own failure with ‘Marlon is the greatest goddamn actor in the world and the greatest goddamn film star too but he’s one of us and next season for Chrissake he’ll be playing Richard III and Hamlet and fuck ‘em all here in this shitty phony town.’ But he never did and slowly he also began to fail even as a film star and the great disillusionment set in. Then it became fashionable to denigrate Marlon. ‘He’s sold out.’ ‘Let’s face it, Marlon isn’t any good unless Gadge [Kazan] is there to tell him what to do.’ Etc. Arguments with which I’m only too familiar because I was the British version of Marlon. In my case it was even worse because I was, from the beginning, held up against Paul Scofield. We were the natural heirs to Gielgud and Olivier. Paul being Gielgud and me being Larry. ‘But Burton let the side down etc.’ What they don’t seem to realize is that Paul tried like mad to be a film star. I remember him testing for film after film and being turned down largely because nobody knew how to photograph that magnificent face. It was the era of pretty boys: Rock Hudson, Jimmy Dean, Paul Newman and even Marlon and myself.¹⁴² But, largely out of a kind of obligation to my background and because I felt that I owed it to Phil Burton to become a great classical actor I continually destroyed my film career by going back again and again to the theatre. And I did it against all odds. It was still, up to my middle thirties, ‘Scofield and Burton’. But then everything changed. I went to live in Geneva, made me a million dollars quickly, did anything to get out of the contract with Fox even to the extent of doing two truly appalling films called Bramble Bush and Ice-Palace and, at last I was free to do anything I wanted and, more importantly, not do anything I didn’t want to do. I spent a whole summer in Céligny blackening in the sun – it was a particularly splendid summer all over Europe – turning down film after film. I remember turning down an offer of $350,000 to play Christ in a film called The King of Kings that summer.¹⁴³ It was very tempting. Five months in my beloved Spain and though the script was unspeakable it was to be directed by Nick Ray who had after all made one good film Rebel without a cause and might pull it off again.¹⁴⁴ But I turned it down and just as well. Both Stratford and The Old Vic offered me whole seasons to myself. Play anything you like. Turned them down. I was offered plays by the score. The only thing I did for a whole year was the film of Look Back in Anger which was a flop and a TV special of another short Osborne play called A Subject of Scandal and Concern for the BBC. I stayed at the Savoy during rehearsals. It was for BBC TV and it seems ludicrous now to think that we had to hold a press conference with Tony Richardson, Osborne and myself while we defended the BBC against the fact that they were paying me £1000 – £1000 indeed to God – for an hour's play and three weeks rehearsal. The most ever paid before was 500. The thing was a huge success and I must try and get a copy for the boat. It seems odd too nowadays to think that the BBC solemnly warned all its viewers that the play was being put on deliberately late at night to give them, the viewers, a chance to put their young ones to bed as the play was about a man 'who didn't believe in God'.¹⁴⁵ Wow!

The fact is that I was in a very enviable position. Though I was knocked about by the press – British press particularly – for being a bloated millionaire and a traitor to my country for deserting a sinking British Empire on which the sun was at last setting, I was more courted than almost any actor in the world. I knew bloody well that I was not considered box-office after Bramble Bush, Ice Palace and Anger but I also knew that any film submitted to Marlon and turned down was automatically submitted to me and of course any play of significance came to me first and then went down another line of stage actors. I had an adorable girl baby, I was very fond of my wife, I was a millionaire, I had a sweet estate in Céligny. I had a superb convertible Cadillac (still among the favourite cars I ever had) a large library, an insatiable thirst for knowledge and the means to satisfy it and every opportunity to play anything I wanted and I was terribly unhappy.

And it was nothing to do with anything that I could fathom. Though the possibilities were endless, I had no ambitions at all in my own field of drama. I wrote a lot but never submitted anything for publication though I was asked to. The only piece I published was a couple of thousand words on Meredith Jones for the Sunday Times and I'm not sure whether I wrote that before or after my self-imposed exile.¹⁴⁶ Did I, deep down, regret having left England and all the things that would automatically come from a steady series of jobs in theatre and films? The inevitable knighthood perhaps. It, whatever it was, was not despair, nothing as dramatic as that. It was a strange vacuum. I wasn't interested in anything ordinary. That is to say that I wasn't interested in playing, shall we say, Richard III but might have been in Richard II in which I would have been very mis-cast. I did the Prince in Anouilh's Time Remembered in New York simply because everybody said that I didn't have the elegance to play a top-hat-and-tails part and because Paul had played it in London with considerable success.¹⁴⁷ I lost weight, cut down on my drinking, insisted on Sullivan and Williams flying over from London to make me the tails (I was sufficiently clever not to wear the top-hat) and the black riding-breeches and jacket. I went every morning to the New York Athletic Club and 'worked out' and the play, which was supposed to be a vehicle for the new American Duse, Susan Strasberg, was a success for me but certainly not for her (in fact, it ended her career on the spot) and was a success for everyone except her.¹⁴⁸ Even Helen Hayes, who must be among the worst 'great' actresses ever, had good notices and I was nominated for a 'Tony' etc. and I was the only one who knew that 'they' were quite right. I am not a top-hat-and-tails actor.

My sense of chronology is hopeless and sometimes I put some plays and films in the wrong order but the next step I think was a film called Bitter Victory – a very good script – to be done with Alec Guinness and again Nick Ray directing. This was to be done in Libya, for the most part, with the studio work in Nice. Apart from its being a good script and a good director and the magnificent Guinness as co-star I had never been to the Sahara. So we were on. Alec couldn't do it at the last moment. I must ask him one of these days if he was ever offered it as people are so devious. Curt Jurgens stupendously miscast did it instead. There, at one stroke, went the film and following closely on Anger. I was at my lowest ebb as a film star. I didn't care very much – I won best-actor-of-the-year award somewhere, I think Venice – though I wasn't exactly pleased and was heart-broken by Anger's failure – and then one day Lerner and Loewe and Moss Hart came en masse to see me. It was in Hollywood. Tower Road. They said they wanted me to play the lead in their new musical. It was based on T. H. White's The Once and Future King one volume of which – The Sword and the Stone – was and is among my favourite books.¹⁴⁹ With the condescension that seems axiomatic when writers talk to actors they started to tell me about the story. Quick as a flash I told them also saying that I personally knew Tim White. 'Tim?' they said. 'Why yes,' I said. 'His full name is Terence Hanbury White, but to his friends he is known as "Tim".' Squelch. In fact, I had never met Tim White but I knew a great deal about him from friends who knew him. I knew that he lived on the Channel Isle of Alderney. That he was a melancholic, that he drank himself into a stupor throughout the winters and sobered up in the Spring, started to bath again, and wrote during the summer. And that he was poor. I said that I would do it. They were thrilled. They asked me if I would sing something for them so that Fritz Loewe could note the range of my voice. I said sure thing and sat down very poshly at the piano and played a Welsh song and sang to my own accompaniment. They were pleased and said I was a natural baritone and the potential of my singing voice was immense and indeed I could have, with proper vocal training, made a living as a classical opera singer. 'Sure,' I said. 'Sure, kiddoes'. Would I go to so-and-so in London, or whassisname in Geneva, or ditto in Paris etc. wherever I might be in the next couple of years? It would be a good idea too, since my voice was so rich so superbly natural Christ what a gift, an actor with such extraordinary vocal gift, such warmth such colour. So would I undergo voice training with any or all of the various names they had suggested? They would pay, of course. Would I do this as Rex Harrison had done.¹⁵⁰ 'NO' I said.

Now, two years later, not having heard a note of the music and not having read a word of the script, I was on my way to New York on the Queen Mary to play the piece.¹⁵¹ I arrived in Manhattan to find (five weeks before the opening night in the O'Keefe Centre in Toronto) no script except a sort of treatment with occasional bits of dialogue thrown in. I went raving mad. Moss, sweet man that he was, tried his damndest to calm me down. I called them every vile name I could think of. And it seems to me, even now, that I had justification. Lerner, Loewe and Hart's last collaboration had been My Fair Lady – the greatest success on any level and by any standards that had ever been. Rex had made the greatest success in his life. My leading lady was Julie who had also made the success of her life in Lady.¹⁵² Our poor bloody piece, for God's sake, didn't even have a title!

Thursday 16th [...] For some reason, even more than usual, I made my entry in the diary yesterday like the beginning of a rather portentous autobiography, an apologia. Must save such fragments, properly written for the real thing which is about the only thing I'm ever likely to write – apart from the usual occasional snippet written for mags.

I read all day apart from the diary entry. Changing from the biography of Mussolini by somebody called John Collier – very journalisticky – with lots of ludicrous bits read out to E, and the first volume of Toynbee's History to Spengler's Decline of the West to a detective story by Erle S. Gardner.¹⁵³ [...] Have decided too, though whether I keep it up or not I don't know, that life is infinitely more rewarding without booze. At least my kind of boozing. It's been approx three months now I think though unless I look back in the diary, which I never do and can't anyway in this case as the preceding volume is in Gstaad, my estimation of time like estimating distances over water is absurdly inaccurate.

[...] the Italians are a race of opera-comics. [...] I pointed out to E that the more the Nazis bombed Britain the tougher morale became, and the more we bombed the Reich the tougher they became, but in the Musso book it says that when the first raid on Rome occurred, and compared with Dresden, Cologne and Berlin it was a nothing, thousands of Italians ran out into the streets waving white flags improvised from pieces of stick and vests, shirts etc. but not, I'm sure, underpants which by this time would have been the wrong colour. I once saw a group of teenage Italians set on a lone colleague and finally get him on the ground. When he was down he put one hand over his face and one over his testicles and submitted. The others then proceeded to kick him but the kicks were unbelievably ineffective as they took turns to do running kicks at him but in their anxiety in case the man who was down happened to grab an ankle and pull one of them down with him they kicked from as far away as possible so that they couldn't possibly get any purchase, any power into the kicks. This was in or rather outside a bar somewhere in Rome many years ago and I was with Johnny Sullivan and a lot of other stuntmen who would have enjoyed joining in but the whole thing was so balletic and coy that all we could do was laugh. Of course the stories of Italian cowardice are legion – they even tell them against themselves – and indicate a highly civilized and very witty and healthy respect for life especially their own lives but, childishly, it's not a reputation I would like the British, and certainly not the Welsh to have. I was informed from birth that the toughest thing on earth was a Welsh miner. I believed it and it got me into more fights than one would have thought possible. I'm still likely to have a go though I know that at my age and condition I stand not a chance. I suppose that's what happens to the Irish too. The Scots are far more sensible, like the English they just know they are the best and don't bother to prove it.

Friday 17th [...] We sat and read again all day. [...] I finished off Mussolini. What an ignoble end to a fairly ignoble life. And extraordinary how his weaknesses, inferiority complexes, had the effect in other people's eyes, of giving him strength. He had the unthinking cruelty of a child and it seems that any really dirty work was unconsciously delegated and atrocities were committed without his knowledge. Fundamentally he was a weak but decent man. This man, Collier, though he mentions Mussolini's physical ailments, does not give them the importance they should have had in the book. Quite clearly, and I believe it more and more after that slight but important book The Pathology of Leadership, his physical illness had a great impact on his conduct of the war and in fact his going in to it at all.¹⁵⁴ I'm sure that Hitler wasn't at all pleased that Mussolini joined him in the war at all. It would have suited him much better to have Italy on the sidelines and supply him with materials, raw and finished. Some German General is asked before the war: 'Which side is going to win?' and the answer was 'The side that doesn't have Italy as an ally.' This gem is quoted in the book.¹⁵⁵ Yet another Italian-cowardice joke? Well let's see. If it were not for Italy's, or rather Mussolini's idiotic adventure into Greece – a blatant piece of idiocy to show Hitler that he too could go to war without informing his partner – there would have been no need for the Germans having to go into Yugoslavia to get at Greece. He could have chosen his own time later. Greece might never have come into the war at all as Turkey never did.¹⁵⁶ If the Etyies had not marched on the British and Egypt, Hitler need never have wasted his great troops in the long desert war.¹⁵⁷ When they were involved in the Russian War they were also having to defend Italy after her capitulation against the Allies. If Italy had stayed out of the war or come in on our side after she was sure, and everybody was, that the Democracies were going to win she would have had herself a seat at the carve-up table as a belligerent member of the winning side. She might even have kept Ethiopia. And Mussolini would have ended up with a state funeral amidst the weeping of a nation instead of being urinated on by Italian women in a square in Milan.¹⁵⁸

Perhaps because it's my own time but this century's politics and wars seem to me to be the most fascinating of all time. Never in history have events followed so fast on each others' heels, never have politics been so copiously documented and never before has the final move, potential move so far meant the destruction of the entire human race and indeed all living things. Indeed the year of my birth is as good a time as any to begin a modern history. Because although the Great War was terrible and horrendous – more so perhaps than the second – the great disintegration of world values didn't begin until after the dust of the war had settled and the monsters began to appear. The new monsters.

[...] E still asleep and now must wake her up as she, at least, has to work today. She models for a furrier-artist so called, called Soldano who furs out of Genoa as one might say and who afterwards gives her the furs, and others, that she models.¹⁵⁹ Bozzacchi calculates that the furs on the market would bring in $150,000. I wonder what happened to the pledge that E signed in common with other famed ladies that she would never wear the furs of anything in future except pest furs and vermin. Must ask her and will record the answer tomorrow.

And now back to The Decline of the West.

Saturday 18th [...] E said that her declaration about furs, done through John Springer, was carefully worded. It said that she would continue to wear furs from vicious creatures like mink who were specially bred to be de-furred but would ban the buying, advertising or wearing of fur that came from genuinely wild creatures since, as a result of the trade in furs, they were in danger of extinction. She pointed out that she would wear Persian lamb since she still eats lamb chops. Personally, I said, I couldn't care less about the fate of wild animals and that I was far more concerned with the fate of wild human beings. And particularly with the fate of my wild human family. [...]

E did her fur reportage yesterday under great difficulties as they couldn't shoot out of doors as there was a continual downpour. I went over about 1.30 and was fitted for Trotsky and had a bite to eat. Couldn't wait to come back here to the warm intimacy of the yacht and with the two volumes of the Shorter Oxford on the sofa and Decline of the West across my knees I settled down together with endless cups of tea to a long read until E came home, quite late and slightly the worse for wear, about 7.30. She has just given me a graphic description of the delight of over-eating kippers and the particular joy of their repeating. She is the only person, certainly the only woman who will tell you – not anybody I mean, just me – details of the internal workings of her body. She knows it appals me which is why perversely she enjoys telling me. Liz la Perverse.

I'd forgotten how readable Spengler is even in translation or maybe the translation makes it more readable than the original. He really comes out with all guns firing. The fury in the professional philosopher world must have been joyful to watch. What, I wonder, did people like Bertrand Russell and lesser lights like C. E. M. Joad and economists like Keynes feel like when they read the cold dismissal of them all by our friend Oswald.¹⁶⁰ To turn from the vigorous dynamics of Spengler to the distant urbanity of Toynbee is almost comical. And so it was Spengler all afternoon and evening and Toynbee in bed and A. A. Fair for a night-cap.¹⁶¹ [...]

Monday 20th [...] Did not write in this yesterday but spent a thoroughly lazy day reading Palmerston a biography by Jasper Ridley.¹⁶² I didn't know much about Palmerston before and didn't know how loathsome he was. The kind of English

that causes me bright fury and arouses all my usually sleeping hatred of the English. And now poor bastards they are worse than ever, their two or three centuries of arrogance as a right having turned into pathos. They flared up for a year or two as a result of Churchill and the war but the post-war debacles killed them stone dead. How I enjoyed Suez and the fools they made of themselves. How I enjoyed De Gaulle and his more English than the English 'NO' to the Common Market.¹⁶³ I watch their every humiliation with great pleasure though I don't much like reading other people writing about them as I am now. [...]

Have worked and, as usual on this film, rather eccentrically. [...] Took off 9.50. [...] We understood from the pilot that we were flying right to the mountain-top for the location. However, to our surprise, he landed us at the bungalows and immediately took off again leaving us with three locked bungalows. Brook eventually found keys at the hotel. We opened up, put the heaters on, boiled water for coffee and sat in the sun by the window and I continued to read Solzhenitsyn's One day in the life of when the helicopter returned about 11.50 and we set off again.¹⁶⁴ It was a short trip as we circled the valley and landed again. Why? They wouldn't need me for another hour. More Solzhenitsyn and off we went again about 1.30 I suppose. Finally to work which consisted of being strafed by planes and explosions going off all over the place and is indeed the scene when I am supposed to be, i.e. Tito is supposed to be injured. Did it umpty-nine times. Became tetchy again when they pegged the poor Alsatian down and chloroformed it so that it would lie dead in the shot.

Home at last about 5 covered in mud and artificial blood. [...] was told that I too have to fly to Belgrade tomorrow to see Tito. I don't mind really but I feel guilty about the film again, though there is no way, short of insult, of getting Tito to let me off. We are taking him an Alsatian puppy of superior breeding from England.

Tuesday 21st, Aboard Presidential Plane On our way to see Tito complete with Alsatian dog [...]. The plane is very posh, very presidential – two apartments with beds and sitting accommodation for about 40 people I suppose.

This all came about when Tito told us in Tjentiste that his old Alsatian 'Tiger' had died and E suggested we get him a pup from England. He is very highly bred – the descendant of many champions including a few 'best dog of any breed at Crufts' and other 3 stars.¹⁶⁵ He is very good looking – a very blacky sort of brown.

It is also a good coincidence as Tito told us of Tiger II snarling and attacking

the Russian Ambassador when he, the latter, brought the ultimatum from Stalin. Brezhnev arrives tomorrow for a state visit which I'm told by CBS and NY Times is a thinly disguised look-around for a possible puppet successor to Tito when the old man dies. So now he'll have another Tiger around. The western correspondents I've talked to – and because of the nature of the film and the part I'm playing all seem to be political rather than film commentators – say they expect a big explosion after Tito dies. All are worried that the various republics will want autonomy in which case they'll be dead ducks for Hungary, Roumania Albania etc. and ultimately, of course, Russia. We shall watch with more than fascination as we love this lot a lot and would hate to see them involved in another 'Hungary' or – even worse – another Czechoslovakia.¹⁶⁶ [...]

Wednesday 22nd, Kalizma–Cavtat A horrendous journey back from Belgrade as E was in great pain throughout the journey. Bite-on-bullet, tearful type pain. [...] One of the famed pink pills seemed to help which I've told her to take even if she does get woozy oh willy-nilly-she's-a-ruby. Brilliant morn and God's in his heaven all's right with the world. [...]

Tito was obviously pleased with the puppy and chuckled richly when he saw it. The poor thing [...] followed him in from the garden once so that pleased him no end. I think he was genuinely moved. And so was the Madame Broz. He talked about Brezhnev coming today and how hard the work was going to be. E insisted that he, Tito, speak English for a while. He protested that he confused it with German but she would have none of it and indeed for about 10 minutes he laboured on in English. A few days and a few books and he'd be speaking it very well. We asked him the form for such visits and he sighed and said it would start with an hour or two tete a tete followed by lunch followed by a mass exchange between delegates from both countries. After this Brezhnev would lay a wreath on their cenotaph or visit a factory and then there would be a banquet in the evening. Fool! I would go mad. Three whole days of that with neither of them really saying anything and inferring mightily between the lines. He asked about the film and I told him that we'd been held up etc. but that the work we had done seemed to be good and that friends from London who'd seen the rushes dreamt of dollar signs. He said wickedly that dollar-signs weren't what they were. Well then I said 'Deutschmarks'. Must confess that I didn't think 20 years ago or even 20 weeks that I would choose to be paid in DMs rather than dollars. Oh what a fall was there my countrymen.¹⁶⁷ I asked him about the Fitzroy Maclean story that 'you do this, and you that' was Ti, To and thereby came his name. I persisted and asked him if he'd told that to Maclean as a joke. No, he said, he'd never said anything of the kind but somebody else may have. He said that Tito was quite a common name in some parts, maybe his part of Yugoslavia. He mentioned some other name which was equally short like Nikki or taka or something which he could easily have become.

They want us to come back on Sunday to visit the War Museum but museums ought, as Dylan once said, to be put into museums and I can't think of anything more boring. One of the men there, a very suave under-secretary of the Foreign Office said that some ambassador had been to visit and after a couple of hours said that he had tears in his eyes. Lying bastard, I thought. Unless they were tears of boredom.

[...] E wrote two letters last night while I read Dombey and Son. Years since I read it but page after page comes back to my memory. We had several volumes of Dickens at home. They were won by my brothers, principally Ivor I think, for good attendance at Sunday School or day school.

Friday 24th Exhausting work up in the mountains, physically exhausting. Running about at a half crouch and diving into fox-holes at 9000 feet is not only wearying but boring. Seemingly endless explosions go off all around us and at the end of each day I am covered with dirt, some artificial put on by Ron and some, the most uncomfortable kind put on by nature in all the bombing and slithering about. By evening time I am a mass of aches from the use of unaccustomed muscles. So much so that I missed two days in this diary. Too stiff to be bothered. [...]

Still with Dombey and Son. Must confess that Dickens could do with some editing. Sometimes his discursiveness is charming but sometimes one is minded to skip. One can see him beginning a chapter with 'now let's start this with some fine writing!' Little Dombey is, let's face it, a bit of a pain in the ass. And the famous 'death of little Dombey' very contrived.¹⁶⁸ I'd forgotten how often people cry in Dickens. Tears are for ever starting from people's eyes. But it's all good reading nevertheless. [...]

We are going to go to an island supposedly very beautiful and sub-tropical 70% wooded etc. with interior lakes called Mljet.¹⁶⁹ We shall paddle around it. Tea and off again in the egg-beater. [...]

E told me tonight that she was always perfectly assured of herself in the early fifties when she knew that she was a sort of second string to Jean Simmons, Grace Kelly and Colleen Gray and Audrey Hepburn variously because deep down she could fall back on a sort of cultural or artistic background.¹⁷⁰ She is vague as to exactly what she means and so am I [...] but she thinks that growing up as she did surrounded as she was by great works of art, by your Van Goghs, Monets, Renoirs etc. gave her a sense of proportion about the relative insignificance of whether she played 'Young Bess' or whether somebody else did – in this case Jean Simmons.¹⁷¹ E thinks that makes her sound like some kind of intellectual egotist but I don't think so at all. I was and to a certain extent still am, an awful academic snob. There was no mind, if G. B. Shaw will forgive the paraphrase, that I didn't despise in the film business when I compared it with my own.¹⁷² There was nothing much to compare it with. One can hardly describe Darryl Zanuck, Lew Schreiber, L. B. Meyer, Jack Warner and all their little satellites as being the owners of towering brains.¹⁷³ As E says, for her it was a harbour in which she could watch with some dispassion the busy toing and froing while for me, much more arrogantly, it was a mountain peak on which I could look down on the despicable ants.

I have been a little put out by something that Ron Berkeley told me and which I have yet to verify. I have predicated my still unwritten article or what ever it might turn out to be about Tito on the belief that he never ever ordered anyone, including captured Germans who had behaved with atrocity to his defenceless people and Chetniks who betrayed and murdered the partisans, to be shot. Now Ron tells me that he was in a bar in Dubrovnik the other night and in the course of conversation with a group of Yugoslavs he said that I was particularly fascinated by Tito because of this. Whereupon two men immediately stood up from the table and left the cafe-bar without a word. Ron asked why this, as Yugoslavs are generally polite. The proprietor who is a cockney Slav believe it or not said that the fathers of the two men had been shot in the Yugoslavian 'purge' of 1948.¹⁷⁴ I must now try and find out if these two killings (altogether, Ron says 41 people from Dubrovnik were shot at that time) were personal settling of scores or whether the orders came from the top. If so I shall be a disappointed man. I mean if the orders came from Belgrade. I must also find out if the people are willing to talk. So far, after countless conversations with all kinds of people I have never heard one bad word about Tito and very few pejorative remarks about communism, though quite a lot about bureaucracy and its attendant evils – particularly nepotism and the fact that a member of the party, though inferior in merit to a cardless Slav, will always get the vote. I asked Branko, a veteran Slav actor who speaks good English, why nobody, but simply nobody, spoke ill of Tito.¹⁷⁵ Was it caution or fear perhaps. Branko said that it was neither, that Tito was still a father-figure. To the older generation – people of my age and his (57? 62?) – he and Sava had been the legendary saviours and to the younger generation – those of 30 and under – there had never been any other President.¹⁷⁶ Tito and President had become synonymous. Rather, I suppose, the way in which Caesar came to mean King. Kaiser and Czar are probably etymologically derived from Julius and his namesakes. The young ones know that he saved them from [the] Boche beast and the Red Bear and those who might have opposed him in the crisis of 1948 – if Ron's story in the pub is to be credited – were presumably knocked off or incarcerated. I must ask more of Branko and find out if I can detect in him any signs of caution or fear when next he chats at my instigation. I think I'll be able to tell. I must ask about Djilas and whether it would be possible for me to meet him or even whether it would be advisable of me to ask somebody like Popovi ć who is a member of the party.¹⁷⁷

Saturday 25th, Kalizma [...] I'd forgotten that Dombey was written in serial form which accounts, a great deal I imagine, for the incredibility of the plot which is really beyond belief. No question but that E. M. Forster was right (he is quoted in the afterword by Alan Pryce Jones) when he said that Dickens was the most popular novelist of the nineteenth century and its greatest humourist.¹⁷⁸ He is not however a great novelist because I don't believe half he says and his obvious 'set-pieces' set my nerves on edge and were it not for the fact that I am congenitally unable to skip passages I would have read the book in half the time. But he is good entertainment and ideal for reading on the daily helicopter trips and between shots on the film – something I was never able to do before. [...]

Having seen Tito on Tuesday we were more than interested in the report in yesterday's Tribune of the meetings between Tito and Brezhnev.¹⁷⁹ Looks like the old man is as tough and intractable as ever. He refuses to accept the idea of 'limited sovereignty' which is an absurd contradiction in terms anyway. Sovereignty is sovereignty and limited is limited and never the twain shall meet. The Orwellian double-think is evident in every arrogant word that Brezhnev says.¹⁸⁰ He denies that he meant by 'limited sovereignty' the status under which Czechoslovakia lived and the excuse for the invasion. It says that Mr Brezhnev and Tito were going on a hunting trip but owing to 'a slight cold' affecting Brezhnev the trip had been cancelled. How the Russian bosses must hate Tito and how they will exult when he dies. And there is no ear nose and throat specialist who can prescribe for the kind of cold that Brezhnev has. [...]

Monday 27th, Cavtat [...] Flew by copter to the location – took about 40 minutes. Then were asked by Popovi Ć to go to Sarajevo to have a look at the inevitable ‘Tito’ house. It is the usual thing. A house divided into two floors the top one of which is two suites comprised of bathroom, bedroom with two single beds stuck together, and two minute sitting rooms for each suite. Why two? The helicopter attempted a landing in the grounds but it was impossible so we went off to the airport. [...] Knocked off three scenes as fast as I could and we were back on board the copter by 8.30pm. [...]

Tuesday 28th, Sarajevo Sitting here in my ‘suite’ in the house in Sarajevo. It is as far as one can get from the city without being in the country. The mountains go straight up a couple of hundred yards away. It is, this house and the surrounding ones, again one of those little estates which we have found by now everywhere we go which contain hotels and adjacent houses for the exclusive use of VIPs of the Party. Last night, for instance, one of the boys said that two men appeared unexpectedly and were shown into rooms on the ground floor. That floor has about 8 small bedrooms. So I suppose the VIPs don't bother to book into hotels when on business outside the big cities; they simply report to the nearest Commie-complex.

I finished work ridiculously early [...] about mid-day and was back here in the house by 1pm. Called E immediately at the house but it appears that she'd decided to stay on the Kalizma. Called again this evening after I'd been out shopping but couldn't get through. Will call again later. I feel terribly lonely without Elizabeth. Last night I had dinner as already said in previous entry and today I had lunch – wienerschnitzel, not bad, – just one course when Poppo [Popovi Ć] [...] turned up again with a very splendid brochure of an exhibition here called ‘Art on the soil of Yugoslavia from prehistoric times to the present.’ He is most insistent that E and I should pay a sort of state visit to it. I loathe the idea of a conducted tour around a museum. I loathe museums anyway and in my case they are a waste of time. The last one I went to was the big one in NY called the Metropolitan I think – it's on the east side of Central Park.¹⁸¹ There were a lot of large Rodins about I seem to remember and I wandered about dutifully enough and was stopped by only one thing – a painting of a large forest, the shot, as ‘twere, taken from one mountain top to another and in the far tree-covered mountain was a long thin waterfall. It was so excellently done that one wasn't sure whether it was smoke coming up from the bed of the valley or water streaming down. The woman I was with, a journalist who was supposed to be an aficionada, said it was a 'nothing picture'. And by a 'nobody'. So that was that. Next time I'm in New York I'll see if I can find it again.

The shops close from noon to 4 and so this afternoon I read a book called The French Connection which is about the narcotics trade generally and about one case specifically.¹⁸² Not very well written but informative and though written with the co-operation of the NY Police Department showed the Police up in an unattractive light. They seem to be so stupid. A clever man would be able to defeat them every time. The only reason they were successful in this particular case was, it seems to me, because the criminals were equally stupid.

Went out with Brook, Ron and Vessna the interpreter to buy books if any and biscuits and choc etc. for snacking. Found both. The bookshop, a small one was right near the University and was typical. There were many volumes of Ulysses, collected works of MacNeice, Auden, Keats, Byron, Shelley etc.¹⁸³ Many Fowler's English Usage and dictionaries and Roget's and to my delight two Rex Stouts which I don't think I've read and even more delightful four different Anthony Powells.¹⁸⁴ Also two Ngaio Marsh and The Confidence Man by Herman Melville which I've never read.¹⁸⁵ So for a small shop in the middle of Jugoslavia it was a considerable haul. Why do the idiotic profs in universities recommend Ulysses – you must know your Ulysses and your Eliot and Pound in your English course here, I gather from Vessna and Yasmin – which, unless you have a really wide and fairly deep knowledge of the language in which it is written must be impossibly difficult to read and certainly to enjoy. They'd even have difficulty with that last sentence of mine. [...]

Wednesday 29th Talked to E at last yesterday evening about 9 and we exchanged loneliness – one for the other. Ate many sweetmeats and drank much water and read Nero Wolfe. He writes so urbanely that after a diet of ordinary thriller writers he cuts the palate with a nice astringency, a neat pungency. [...]

I have decided, even though this is my first visit to a communist country, that the Slav is not made for Communism – at least, not the South Slav. I think it must be as atavistically alien to them as Puritanism would be to the South Irish. It doesn't seem to fit somehow. They seem uncomfortable in it. I have heard so many tales now of the really staggering rudeness of shop-keepers to people, particularly foreigners, that I can only think that they are a very unhappy lot. Raymond, for instance, went into a shop to buy something and when his turn came to be served he was asked for whatever it was he wanted and the shopkeeper said, What nationality are you and Raymond said Italian. Why don't you go and buy it in your own bloody country? was the gracious response. They are just as bad to their own countrymen. Vessna went to buy some drawing pins in a shop and was kept waiting 1½ hours. The shop wasn't particularly crowded. The assistants simply took endless time, sometimes disappearing into a back room for 15 minutes in the middle of someone's order. Apart from the rudeness on the shopkeeper's part, where was Vessna's and the other people's independence? Where was the shouting and bawling which would have been automatic in any western country? She just shrugs. They also seem a most uncurious people. Though they have never been to the West, they have no curiosity about it. And those who have been to England or Italy or even, one or two like Vessna, to the USA, they never talk about it. [...]

I did a longish scene with two hopeless Jugo actors – hopeless in both languages – and then waited for hours for Heavy Luger to turn up. He had driven from Kupari and it had taken him about seven hours. In the meantime I finished my Nero Wolfe and started Anthony Powell's A Question of Upbringing which is very droll so far.¹⁸⁶ I've only read a chapter and a bit and I seem to remember that 'Witherspoon' or whatever his name is comes up again very largely in the later volume of The Music of Time.¹⁸⁷ It must be quite some time since I read that volume. I had a lot of coffee and had forgotten how shaky it makes you feel. However, nobody noticed and I used it in the scene to give a tensity to it which I hope will work. [...]

Thursday 30th [...] Finished the Powell and started another – got a little tired of that, I mean his style, – and changed to Life at the Top by John Braine.¹⁸⁸ Tired of that quickly too so tried a detective thriller. Got tired of that. So put out the light at 10 and went to sleep immediately. [...] Vessna and the chauffeur went out last night and bought two kinds of coffee and two tin jugs to boil water in and some strange looking tea so we'll be able to brew up on the mountain top. Also, from my memory of the bookshop, I wrote out a list of books for Vessna to buy which I suddenly decided would be a neat addition for the library on the Kalizma. I asked her to make it paperbacks as much as she could as 'good' books become mildewed from the salt air. So we now have a complete Shakespeare in separate paperbacked volumes, complete Keats, Shelley, Wilfred Owen, Louis MacNeice, Wystan Auden and a Larousse English dictionary which I can keep in the bedroom on the ship.¹⁸⁹ And a fat Penguin paperback of Ulysses which I read this morning and immediately after only four or five pages it brought back bleak memories of having to read it so many years ago. I have never looked at it since it was part of the syllabus laid out for me by Phil Burton. It's such a pleasure to read now knowing I won't have to answer questions about it. Having re-tasted it this morning, merely an aperitif of five pages, I shall devour it from time to time.

Ron came back by car last night as we were forced out of courtesy to invite Hardy (Heavy Luger) Krüger and wife to fly down with us in the copter and with Ron as well we would have been overloaded. [...]

Poppo has spent all day trying to persuade Brook, Vessna and Ron to persuade me to go to the Exhibition of Jug Art through the Ages. Normally I suppose I would have gone, but his persistence is so great and his urgency to have the Mayor there together with TV and snappers while I look at the exhibits has made me as recalcitrant as a wild horse. [...]

OCTOBER

Friday 1st, Sarajevo Have read myself into a stupor and practically a standstill. I tried all kinds of books last night and settled for thinking instead after throwing them all aside. I can't remember what I thought about altogether but I remember thinking how much I would like to have E there. I had gone for a walk through the forest – a planned walk laid out by the gardeners in gravel – and thought that much as I liked walking it is not quite as interesting if when you come back there is nobody to confide in. [...]

Sunday 3rd, Kalizma–Cavtat [...] it's a beautiful morning and I'm in love with my wife and apart from seeing a chap called Terence Baker at 10 o'clock I have a whole day with E and books ships and cabbages and kings.¹⁹⁰ It is also a sparkingly lively lovely day. And my rheumatically anthroidic but beautiful child is still a-slumber and E'en So is snoring and the boat moves in a slow circle on its anchor and now you see Dubrovnik and now you see the hotel here and the church-bells are ringing and a plane is coming in to land at Dub airport and I shall have a cup of tea or coffee and smoke a cig and read and waste myself indolently down the day.

Monday 4th Terence Baker, a large man with a lean face and a fat belly, somewhere in his thirties I suppose, came on board yesterday morn as expected and told me, as expected, that the company had not been paying me. I told him to tell the company that we had heard many tales of Yugoslavian perfidy in re the non-payment of actors or delayed payments of as much as 3 to 5 years that unless my money was in the bank on Monday (today) I would not work on Tuesday (tomorrow) and until the money has been paid would continue not to work. So that should be clear enough even to Poppo's muddly intelligence. [...] It is a shame that our dislike of the Poppo could mean a dislike of the entire Yugoslavian race were we dense enough to allow such an enormity. But from Tito on down we have found the South Slavs to be the most enchanting people it has been our pleasure to meet. They have only two rivals but the Italians are untrustworthy and will do almost anything for a fast lira and the Mexicans are so sad, so melancholy. And although the Yugoslavians are chauvinistic, they do not practise it as offensively as the French – particularly – and the English, Germans and Americans. [...]

Terence Baker is the brother of an actor – English – called George Baker who for a time was thought to be a promising piece of beef-cake but had no talent, even for that, and has drifted into obscurity.¹⁹¹ T. Baker is a very different cup of cocoa and seems to live up to his reputation as a hard man with a contract. He is John Heyman's partner or assistant or co-producer or something of those and gives the impression that he will do well. He instructed Wolf Mankowitz to stay at home and not complete his assignment to finish writing the film as Wolf too has received not a penny-piece. In addition we have discovered that none of the lesser people, those being paid less money I mean, like Brook, Ron, Raymond, Gianni Bozz and, I expect, Vessna have been paid either. That is unforgivable. I could, after all, sell my paintings or E her jewels or something but what is Ron going to sell? His make-up box?

I have now finished three of the first four volumes of Anthony Powell's Dance to the Music of Time and have just started the fifth called Casanova's Chinese Restaurant.¹⁹² He gives the impression of a deliberately distant artist. His canvas is large but he stands a long way off and paints with a remote brush only in the corners and only miniatures. He is not exciting and his poetic impulse is firmly controlled. So much so, that it is rarely apparent. But he sticks with you and it is an interesting experiment in autobiography.

I wonder if I could use that form. I couldn't use the style which is abhorrent to me. He over-punctuates and is at times otiose and I cannot really believe Widmerpool. I cannot believe that a man so stupid could be so successful. But there are another five volumes to go I think. He is not a writer for any mood. There are times when I find him impossible to read and have to put him aside for a day. Also, his coincidences are too pat and occur too often. Though Evelyn Waugh pointed this out and then apologized on thinking of similar coincidences in his own and Powell's life, I think that Waugh was right in the first instance.¹⁹³ A coincidence that's true to life is not necessarily true to fiction. Also, another weakness it seems to me is that the coincidences are predictable. 'Two people came into the room. Molly Blaides was going to marry a much younger man. The man turned and I saw it was ... Widmerpool.'¹⁹⁴ Don't believe you Tony bach.

A brilliant morning again. [...] It is very hot in the sun and people from the seafront hotels swim from morn 'til night. One massive German woman swam around the yacht yesterday for a couple of hours. She smiled at me so I waved at her and she answered me with a few gutturals and a wave that, perhaps accidentally, looked like a Nazi salute I swear to God. Who knows that the gutturals didn't contain a 'Heil Hitler' somewhere there.

E is a much cleverer reader than I am. She is currently reading a book called Smith and Jones by Nicholas Monsarrat.¹⁹⁵ It is quite a clever piece but she is asking me questions about certain anomalies in the writing which I don't remember asking myself. I read the book a week or so ago. I'll comfort myself by saying that she has a suspicious mind and I don't. I remember giving her The Murder of Roger Ackroyd of A. Christie and telling her that she would never guess the murderer.¹⁹⁶ She got it at the end of the second or third chapter. I was amazed and furious.

[...] There is a big 'spy' defector story in all the papers. A Russian has defected to the British.¹⁹⁷ Yesterday, I said he had 'defecated', which is a good Freudian slip.

[...]I did a scene this afternoon in which six planes, two at a time, dive-bombed us while we were crossing a very flimsy bridge across a roaring river. Explosions went off right, left and centre and were, of course, centred on me – we have to show the old man being under intense bombardment. So the bombs went off all over the place and many people were hit by 'shrapnel' one chap quite badly in the face and two men on the cameras were hit – Pinter in the belly – and several others got odd wounds while I, four times in the centre of the maelstrom, was only splashed with water. My family always told me from the toddling stage 'Ma' lwc y diafol arnat ti.' Touched with the Devil's luck. Keep it up oh diavolo!

Tuesday 5th, Mostar¹⁹⁸ [...] I went to sleep last night to the accompaniment of a very raucous 'group' playing the awful noise that passes for 'Mersey' sound I suppose.¹⁹⁹ [...]

I am obviously still only half awake. Some of the sentences above are very oddly constructed. Beautiful day with a blue sky and a few white clouds. The moon was going down when I got up. The river, a very hurly-burly one is green in colour, like certain seas.

Wednesday 5th, Mostar²⁰⁰ E arrived last evening earlier than I expected and all the better for that. She looked ravishing or perhaps she always looks startlingly beautiful when one hasn't seen her for even as short a time as 36 hours. Suddenly a bright room looks drab as she makes it by contrast. Received a message by phone which said: Terrance (sic) asks you to please not work Tomorrow or leave Mostar – Money not in Belgrad (sic). I was being interviewed by my Jugoslavian actor friend Basi Ć (Pronounced Basheetch) when the urgently awaited message arrived. I was very disappointed as the less I do now the more I shall have to do in December and bang goes Xmas in Vallarta for a start besides which I really am very sorry for the Director and all the other very nice people despite the fact that I was told [...] after I'd explained the situation, that they [...] would perfectly understand. [...] I had been warned [...] through Hugh French by Deakin that though he, Deakin, was greatly enamoured of the Slavs he was also very aware that in business they can be devious almost to the point of skulduggery. [...] What finally renders us all speechless is that the cost of sitting around with thousands of people on call must cost them far more than the relatively paltry sums they owe me and the rest of the lads. I am furious, all the same that I'm not working. How different it would be if I was holding up production on some cute little killer like Zanuck or Jack Warner or L. B. Meyer. I would give parties.

Last night after dinner Gianni Bozzacchi reduced me to tears of laughter when he told me some of the items put on our weekly bill at the house. Now, the number of people staying at the house is five – Gianni, Claudye, Raymond, E and myself, though E and I have spent very little time there as we usually stay at Cavtat in the Kalizma – and of those five only Elizabeth drinks but she drinks only booze brought from the boat, Smirnoff and Jack Daniels both of which products are unobtainable in Jugoslavia. So, in effect, nobody at the house of our party drinks at all. The bill however for one week had us down for 5,000 dinars, new dinars and the following week it had jumped to 8,000. I asked how much a bottle of Scotch was in dinars. Johnny Walker Red Label is 100 dinars. It therefore follows that if we were all drinking and if we drank only the most expensive drink obtainable which is Johnny Walker and other whiskies we would have drunk 50 bottles the first week and 80 the second. Again assuming we all drank the same amount it would mean that the first week we drank 1 and 3/7ths of a bottle per day, and in the second week 2 and 2/7ths of a bottle per day. Only five raving alcoholics of the classic pattern could keep up such a pace. I have in my time and at my best put away I'm sure the occasional 3 bottles of vodka a day but not for two or three days in a row and certainly not for a week or a fortnight. Otherwise it would be Dead Dad. No, that kind of consumption demands the presence of Bobby Newton, Bernie Lee, Trevor Howard, Errol Flynn and Jason Robards to name but a few of my friends only two of whom oddly enough are dead.²⁰¹ If we had taken the local, and apparently very drinkable wine which costs 10 dinars a bottle we would in two weeks have put away [...] 1,300 bottles. As for the food, it is a riot of over-charging. It is reminiscent of the time when Dick Hanley found that the monthly bill in the house in Rome on the Via Appia Pignatelli for bread alone was $500.

I wrote letters to Liza, Kate, Maria and Gwen and Ivor yesterday while E wrote two! One each to Liza and Maria. The pen-and-pencil set is practically smoking from use. [...]

Went to work at 12 noon as asked and did two shots both involving huge explosions and neither of which I enjoyed as I swear to God I am becoming shell-shocked. Also, it must be confessed that the explosions on this film are the heaviest by far of any film I've ever been on and I have made quite a few very noisy war-films – Where Eagles Dare must have the all time top of the decibel rating so far. But if this one is as loud in the cinema as it is to the naked ear Eagles will have to take second place. If it makes as much money as Eagles it can, for my part, get even noisier and I'll take a chance on being shell-shocked. For the first time in my life in war-films I jumped involuntarily at one particularly near and shattering explosion. Out of the corner of my eye I saw everybody else twitch too but they are not Tito and impassive. During the first series of explosions I am sending out a carefully worded call to Moscow to relay to 'Free Yugoslavia' a message to 'crush the vital forces of the enemy' with all the sang-froid of the typical Walter Mitty Englishman.²⁰² In this case I hope it's interpreted by the audience as Slavic fatalism. One of the decisions I had to make before the film started – a personal one, as the director doesn't speak or understand English – was what accent to use for Tito. To speak English with a Slavic roll and rumbles was a temptation as critics and audiences tend to think of that as 'good acting' but I decided it was too obvious and might even, unless I was very careful, become comical in the wrong way. So I asked a lot of educated middle-class Yugoslavians whether there was a 'standard educated accent' in Serbo-Croat and they said yes and did Tito speak with such an accent and they said no but he was slightly off centre. Therefore I thought I would speak my standard accent with the Welsh lilt occasionally thrown in as a shade, an almost elusive innuendo. I hope it will do. I was interviewed today for about half an hour by somebody [...] from Newsweek who was from Prague or Vienna or Budapest or somewhere in mittel europe with a mittel-european accent I think though it was so slight that it was difficult to place. [...] He was a political correspondent. What a relief they are after film writers. He asked me whether I thought the film had any political significance and I answered that of course it had. Apart from showing the fanatical courage of the Yugoslavian people it also showed its terrifying terrain and presumably, after seeing it, regardless of its artistic merit, anybody who planned Czechoslovakia here in my adopted country might well have second thoughts. The juggernaut could roll over the grass of Yugoslavia if it wished perhaps, but the grass would soon grow tall again and the Idol of Krishna would have to roll back and fore from coast to border for all eternity and still this particular grass would not lie down.²⁰³ I also pointed out that I had the feeling that these people, like a certain kind of Celt – the industrial South Welsh, the Irish and the Scots – liked fighting, looked forward to fighting and even revelled in fighting. Not entirely comfortable people for a dove to live with but I would rather join them than fight them. If the Nazi Army, at the height of its power and already battle-hardened, couldn't defeat this, at first, People's Army accoutred with pitchforks and scythes and of course hammers and sickles, if the Germans – the formidable Army of modern times couldn't beat them and were indeed defeated by these same people eventually then, short of some new diabolical genocidal weapon, nobody could.

What will come out in the article as the reporter and I agreed after the automatons at Newsweek get at it is going to be of course something of stupendous banality attributed to me. Was it true, he asked me, that I was going to do a scene in front of Brezhnev which mentioned in more cryptic form the sentiments expressed above. I said that there was some talk of this but that something happened – perhaps the Russians got hold of it – and anyway it didn't come about. I said I regretted greatly that it hadn't.

Since the entire crew and all the actors were chuckling fiendishly at the idea of this sharp little sticloc [sic] to the vitals of Russian arrogance I have no doubt that the Russians did hear of it. I talked the standard replies to whether I liked Tito and Yugoslavia and so on and I said yes we had been with Tito the day before he had his 3 day meeting with Brezhnev and that no we hadn't had the temerity to ask Tito how he was going to handle the affair which was not strictly true.

[...] E will go back to Kupari tomorrow and I will get back on Saturday night which is going to be a charming six or seven hour drive in the dark down those interminably twisted roads. That will mean not getting back to the yacht before midnight possibly, then to Rome the following day and drawing a couple of hasty breaths hard and fast into Trotsky on Monday morning. I expect Joe will give me an easy first day or, with a bit of luck, it may be possible that I, or rather, they may not be ready to shoot so quickly after their long bout in Mexico. [...]

Thursday 7th [...] A lot of things happened to me – and us – in Rome and the old city is very much in my mind this morning. Perhaps because we are going there in three days' time. The first time I went there, sometime in the early fifties, everybody was on foot or push-bikes or bussed it or trammed. The second time was about '56 and push-bikes were losing out to Vespas and Corgis buzzing around the city like so many angry bees while the next time – the time of Cleopatra – the petrol bikes were being replaced by small, indeed the smallest, Fiats and Volkswagens all seemingly determined to become Fangios or Stirling Moss.²⁰⁴ Now there are just as many of the latter I suppose but owned perhaps by the same people who have graduated to bigger and more middle-income cars while a lower group have taken over the Fiats etc. and the push-bikers to the Vespas have moved – why the German and Welsh syntax? – though the trams and buses must still be full. Since we were there last the Romans have passed laws restricting the traffic in some parts of the city. I think that some of the Piazzas are free from traffic – notably the Navona – but I wonder if the Vias Veneto and Sistinas and that street below the Spanish Steps are for pedestrians only. I shall find out by walking on Sunday mornings disguised in my John Heyman cap. I have been in only two towns where traffic is forbidden. One is Portofino and the other Dubrovnik. A traffic-less Rome would be a joy and an impossibility too since taxis and buses are essential.

Jane Swanson called yesterday from Rome to say that if I wanted my old dressing-room back at the De Laurentiis Studios I would have to pay $150 a week but that she didn't think it worth it as I spent most of the film on location! Nonsense, said I, Trotsky never leaves his house or hardly ever. Meanwhile I looked through the script and discovered that almost every scene I do takes place on 'The Patio of Trotsky's house'. So it appears that they must have taken a real house somewhere in the suburbs I presume and we will shoot it there. That will suit me fine if it's not too far from the city. It can't be in the heart because of the terrific traffic noise but also it can't be in the country as Trotsky's house was very definitely in Mexico City I think.²⁰⁵ I'm not sure but I think I am looking forward to the film. Much more will depend on its ambience but I enjoy playing 'character' parts much more than 'straight' ones. Instance my intense enjoyment playing the bald homosexual in Staircase. I feel much more secure for some reason when the person played is not simply an extension of me. Also I feel that I'm a better character actor than a straight man. I loved doing Toby Belch and Caliban in my days at the Old Vic except for the laborious make-up, especially the latter.²⁰⁶ Another good thing is that apart from 3 scenes I don't have to work with Delon who is so non-actor that I think I would be embarrassed.²⁰⁷ He should be ok though in this part as E says he is marvellous at playing killer-gangsters and so on. Reading the script again this morning I think that Joe will have to move the camera around a lot in the big scenes – there are two of them – between Delon and Romy Schneider (odd that her name in German means Taylor – I mean Tailor) as they are very static non-committal scenes. Am also pleased that I have only one scene with Miss Schneider as from what I hear she is uneasy to work with.²⁰⁸ [...] Ron, with his usual look of dark foreboding, says that she ruined the film they did in Israel for John Heyman with Richard Harris playing the star male lead and directing which Ron says was meant to be a sweet film about a small boy's adoration for a great veteran footballer but, he said, with more and more and darker and darker foreboding, she raped Mr Harris and by means of the bedroom literally fucked the film up into a love story between herself and Mr Harris, the footballer.²⁰⁹ 'Keep,' says Ron, 'your eyes open and your wits about you. Beware the ides of October.' 'But surely Ron,' I say with wide-eyed innocence, 'it's Joe Losey who'll have to keep his hands on his zip-fly, I mean he's the director not me!' 'No offence, Rich,' he says with a look of age-old wisdom, 'you're an attractive guy and all that but Romy would give her eye-teeth to get you away from Elizabeth Taylor.' 'Very well Ron,' I say, 'I will have Elizabeth on set whenever I work with the dreaded Brunhilde and since I only work with her for two days at most and it's only one scene, I think we can safely say that we can consider that particular Biscay safely navigated.'²¹⁰ 'Ah,' he says, 'she's the kind who will come in on her days off like pretending that she wants to watch you work because you're a great actor and all that I'm telling you Rich you've got to watch it.' 'But Ron. I've met the woman and I thought she was pretty dog-like and wouldn't have been interested in her even in the old days.' 'Ah! But she has become very beautiful in the last few years. You wait 'til you see her.' 'OK Ron, OK.'

[...] Miss Schneider impressed me so much, and I saw her a lot when we were doing Sandpiper in Paris and she was doing Pussycat with the Peters O'Toole and Sellers and she was for ever in the bar and so were we, that I simply can't remember what she looks like. I have a vague memory of someone small, I think, and blonde but that's about all. I think Ron would be on more securely prophetic grounds if he warned me of Delon who apparently will go with a Swan to get on.²¹¹ Now there's a bloke who would like to get Elizabeth Taylor away from Richard Burton if you like. And don't think Ron that he won't try. Look at the publicity for Chrissake, and in Rome too of all places. I mean, he would love to do a Burton on Burton. And I mean, this feller had a go at Elizabeth through an emissary when E and I were lovers in Rome and at the pinnacle of our scandal. Here is a man who will stop at very little. I don't know him and neither does E but I have an idea that I know his type very well. A sort of perennial juvenile delinquent who gets vicarious kicks out of hob-nobbing with the underworld. Very attractive to women. Not unlike Frank Sinatra and George Raft and Stanley Baker in their various milieux but without, in Frank's case at least, their talent. Actually, I know very little about his acting as I have, as far as I know, only seen him once in a film called Rocco and his brothers which must have been made about 1960.²¹² A Visconti film, I think, in which Delon seemed as queer as an Arab but very very pretty and Visconti (with who, I hear, he set up house for a few years) and the camera lingered lovingly and almost lasciviously over his exquisite little bones in vast close-up after vast close-up. He must have had something though as he is the only thing I remember about the film despite the fact that it was another actor who made the biggest success in the film and won all the Awards and was critics pet etc. Recently – that is a year or two ago – he was involved with an underworld killing of some kind. His chauffeur-companion, a bad lot with a record who was Delon's 'bodyguard' as well was shot dead in Delon's house in Paris or maybe it was an apartment. It was news in France – front page stuff for Paris Presse, Ici Paris, France Soir etc. – but it all died down after a while and I don't know exactly how deeply Delon was compromised. Anyway, he wasn't locked up or anything but spent a lot of time being questioned by the police.²¹³

Later.

Brook came upstairs in the house in Mostar this morning and gave me a twitch of the head indicating that he had something to tell me he didn't want E to hear. His face was ashen and he trembled. My heart stopped. What had happened? He led me into an office facing our suite where E was reading a book, closed the door and said that Mick Smith had just called from England to say that Liza had been thrown by her horse and was in hospital with a fractured skull and concussion but that she was alright and was conscious and was in no danger they thought but was very tearful and sorry for herself and asking for E. I was stupendously shocked. Despite Brook's playing down of the accident all I could see was his white face and all I could hear were the words 'fractured skull'. My first reaction was to literally tear my hair, a phenomenon which I'd heard of and read of but never seen and here was I putting the words into living practice. All I said was 'that horse, that fucking horse, why did I buy it for her?' I stopped behaving like Medea after a few seconds and asked Brook to tell me everything again.²¹⁴ Then my mind started functioning reasonably again. I asked Brook to phone Raymond and order the jet from Geneva and if unavailable at such short notice to get E on the plane from Dub to Rome at 2.20 and from Rome to London at 4. Failing that, try Jugoslavian charter. Failing that try Jane Swanson and Olympia jets in Rome and failing everything to try as a last resort to get Tito's Mr Protocol and an army jet or anything. In the meantime while waiting for the call I went in to tell Elizabeth, I prefaced everything by saying that there was no danger though, at that time, I was convinced that there was. E stared at me as if I was a stranger, her face went red then snow white. She moaned and cried but never became hysterical and never screamed or any of the things that lesser women do. We clung to each other and slowly, like a sleep-walker she began dressing and putting on her make-up. I made her a Jack Daniels and wrote Liza a letter for E to take with her and finally Raymond [Vignale] came on the blower. This was about 45 minutes after the news had come. Raymond was on the Kalizma and unreachable by phone. In the meantime E was ready to go and packed. We cleaved to each other again for a long time and then she was gone, her sweet eyes puffed with tears hidden by dark glasses. In that long hour before she left we hardly spoke at all. E wondered if she'd been thrown while crossing that dreaded road outside the school. I said I didn't think so. And it wasn't until after E had gone and I sat alone in my room did I begin to work out the timetable of the disaster saying to myself, quite logically: it happened yesterday obviously. Liz had tried to call us all morning and finally had left from the hospital leaving Mick to attempt the call which he succeeded in doing.²¹⁵ If therefore Liza was seriously injured and in a coma and all that they would somehow or other have got through last night. Liz and Mick had seen her conscious and though weepy and though the skull was fractured and though she had concussion she was unquestionably alright. On the way up in the car I reasoned all this out loud with Brook. We agreed that she was ok but all the time thinking – were they telling the truth. How can someone with a fractured skull be alright? [...] And then, oh happy day, I called E in Kupari. She had a jet for 6.15. She had talked to Liza! And Liza sounded as chipper as a chipmunk and couldn't think what all the fuss was about! She obviously doesn't remember how she felt when she was concussed. So now I'm back to reading again. For this relief muchas grazias.

Friday 9th, Sarajevo²¹⁶ [...] I have been reading all day a book which I started weeks ago and put down and remembering that I am Trotsky on Monday thought to take up again. It is or they are The Memoirs of a Revolutionary by Victor Serge.²¹⁷ A Russian by blood and temperament and a Belgian by birth and upbringing his is a depressing picture of man's inhumanity to man and nobody in my eyes, or capitalist, monarchist, Fascist or Communist comes out of it with any virtue. There are many tales of unfathomable courage for false or mistaken ideals but all it hammers home is pungent sentence after barbed comment.

After scathing sarcasm is the hopelessness of this frightful world – a world which has been so good to me personally and demanded so little in exchange that I hardly recognize the filthy reality of the evidence of my own mind and reading. In the book I came across the following passage: 'Sergei Yesenin, our matchless poet, has committed suicide ... said good-night to his friends. "I want to be alone. ..." In the morning he awoke depressed, and felt the urge to write something. No pencil or fountain pen was at hand, and there was no ink in the hotel inkwell: only a razor blade, with which he slashed his wrist. And so, with a rusty pen dipped in his own blood, Yesenin wrote his last lines:

Au revoir, friend, au revoir ...

... There is nothing new about dying in this life

But there is surely nothing new about living either.'

Then Mr Yesenin hanged himself.²¹⁸ What a banal line to write with your own blood and how juvenile how undergraduate and in his own blood yet! I find it unspeakably vile to die with such lack of taste or genuine and proper despair. Yesenin was supposed to be a great lyric poet which judgement I shall never be able to test as I will never be able to read in the original. He was married 8 times so if he wasn't perhaps the greatest poet of all time, he must surely have been the most married. Since he died when he was only 30 years old perhaps all those marriages were behind the last line. Mr Serge says that it was the failure of the Glorious Revolution which drove him to suicide. Silly fool.²¹⁹ I imagine that by the time I finish with Trot and have come back here to finish with Tit I shall have had all this communist childishness up to my eyebrows. I am so far steeped in in Communistic lives and literature that all the capitalism in the rough rude West will be necessary to wash it out.

E is my only ism and a very nice purpose in life. Elizabethism. Do you have any firmly held belief or creed or politic Mr Burton? Yes, I believe in Elizabethism. Elizabeth the Great of course. Of course. End of interview. Next day's Headlines: BURTON CONFESSES TO BEING AN ELIZABETHIST.

E is in London and tomorrow, assuming I finish early enough and a plane can be found I shall be with her at the Savoy or the Dorchester. [...]

Saturday 10th²²⁰ [...] Last day on the film and it's such a beautiful day that I think I will fly to London this afternoon, assuming that I finish in time and fly to Rome tomorrow morning. Talking of eccentricity, that is fairly good and since I am sick of reading about poverty and its accompanying miseries I shall behave like a mindless bloated plutocrat and scream from Sarajevo to Rome to London to Rome in 24 hours. Think of the money I'd save if I went by commercial jet to Rome only. How much would I save I wonder? About $400 I guess and what would I do with it? Give it to Marian. But I've already given her vast sums and she has a dead husband.²²¹ Add it to her Christmas Box. [...]

I talked to E last night. She sounded as disgruntled as a miner on a Monday morning and was obviously annoyed that I wasn't going to London which I was not last night, but have thought this morning that I really ought to see my daughter and want to see them both, I mean mother and daughter, and I will tell The Trot Company and M. Losey that I will do the make-up tests on Sunday evening. Good thinking Richard. Why can't a make-up test be done just as well in the evening as in the afternoon?

I tried to read a detective story last night in bed – one of my favourite men called Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte of the Australian Police. These books by a man called Upfield, an Englishman, are more than ordinarily interesting whodunits as there is a lot of cumulative bits and pieces about the Australian Aborigines. As far as I know he, Upfield, is the only popular writer who writes about them all the time. Therefore, for a lazy mind like mine he educates painlessly and entertainingly. But I think I have read so much about modern politics in the last three months that I find it difficult to switch to anything else. I felt awful last night and E didn't make me feel any better. Instead of being delighted about Liza being OK and being happy after having seen her she spent most of the time complaining about the hotel, about its distance to the hospital (45 minutes she said and since she is at Sunning and if it is the place I remember near Reading there must be some bad navigation on the chauffeur's part for it to be that long) that there was no telephone in her room but only in the bar and that the whole thing was unpleasant.²²² Also if people weren't so melodramatic E could have gone to see Liza at her leisure and certainly we would have both been spared half a day's spiritual agony because it turns out that, thank God the baby had not 'fractured her skull' but had taken a very heavy bump on the noggin and was correspondingly concussed. The words 'fractured skull' are so horrendous. One thinks of brain damage and smashed grey cells and all that while she has actually sustained an injury which, again thank God, is infinitely less dangerous than a broken arm or collar-bone etc. I know perfectly well and was therefore perfectly happy to know, that Liza was an island of content as long as her mother was there and since 'they' wanted me in Rome tomorrow afternoon and since last night I felt bone weary I thought there was no point in my going to London. But the weather is so lovely and I really want to see Elizabeth more than Liza I am ashamed to confess and I felt so much better this morning that I will flip over to London after all. It will be odd to start a film without E being there to give me moral support. I don't think it has happened in ten years. Ah! Yes it has. The immortal Raid on Rommel was started alone and also, double oddity, sober. [...]

[...] Ron is very nervous about the make-up and is beginning to make me so. He says, and I suppose, quite rightly, that the make-up is half the performance and that this is one film where I really should have been there a week or a few days before starting. It might take him, he says, 3 days to get the make-up exactly correct. [...] Also, he says morosely, that 'Joe doesn't like me you know, Rich'. He still believes, says Ron, 'that I poured that bottle of champagne over his head when we were all stoned in Cappelletti when it was McDonald all the time.'²²³ 'Don't be silly Ron'. Ron may be right at that because I remember Joe coming to see me in some film or other, Anne perhaps, and saying 'Still keep your friends around you, I see.' Only Ron, who was making me up, was there at the time. It's true of course that Joe has no humour at all and is, apart from his work, hard going as a conversationalist. Time to go to work.

Later. London.

Flew today from Sarajevo directly to London – we were going to drop Ron at Rome but the pilot said that if we did we would almost certainly end up in Paris Amsterdam or Brussels or somewhere as there was a fog warning for London for planes landing after dark. So despite Ron's anxiety to get to Rome because of somebody's – probably Joe's panic – I insisted he came to London with us and fly back with me in the morning. I can't understand this mad urgency for a make-up test. Ron is the best there is and has made old man make-ups on me before. I am very nervous about this film. John H[eyman]. suggests that Joe is drinking heavily. I wonder if Joe, in his middle sixties, has allowed the success of Go-Between to go to his old head.²²⁴ 'Twould be funny. [...]

Sunday 10th, London Airport This morning, to my dismay, I awoke to find it was 10 to 8 and not my usual 6 or 6.30. Dismay because I had promised Gwen that I would be up in NW3 to see her and Ivor at 8.30. The shower in the Dorchester ran weak and cold (the hotel is really falling apart) and so I abandoned all thought of a shower and [...] tore off after a quick shave and a 'swill' and was up in 2, Squire's Mount a few mins after 8.30. Gwen looked much better than she did a couple of months ago and so, astonishingly did Ivor though for many weeks he has not been able to keep his food down and has an almost permanent high temperature. Any normal man would have been dead a long time but Ivor's stoical will to live is, and the doctors agree, phenomenal. His mind is still as lucid as ever. I started this page on the runways and now am half way to Rome [...]

Landed without incident at Ciampino, [...] I went immediately to the set which is about 10 minutes from the Studio and there was Rome as lovely mad as ever

[...]. All seems well with the film and Joe was gentle and nervous and showed no signs of booze. Ron very seriously and very nervously did the make-up and though I think it looks as if I am a close relative of Ho Chi Minh everybody else was pleased as punch so assuming it pleases them as well on the screen as it did in the flesh that's one problem out of the way.²²⁵ They will be able, miracles, to see the results tomorrow morning at 7 o'clock. I am called to rehearse at 9 without make-up. I am somewhat taken aback as it's so long since I've done a film in which I am required to rehearse. Got home about 6 and [...] I called E who sounded very chipper and was about to settle down and watch herself play The Cat on the Hot Tin Roof on TV in England.²²⁶ I shall call her in 1/2 an hour or so to find out how she likes it and how she likes her pre-Burton self.

On the plane today Ron gave forth with yet another Jeremiad regarding the femme fatale Romy Schneider. This was, of course, after a couple of heavy libations which were by no means his first of the day I suspect. [...] Just talked to E who was watching Laugh-In and told her my love and devotion and she, hers.²²⁷ And now to read my favourite fairy-stories – the sports pages of the Sunday Times.

Monday 11th, Rome [...] Still don't know whether to play with an accent or not. What with the Frenchman and the German with accents and my wife – who is played by an actress who was somewhat distinguished in my early days – will play with an accent too. She is Valentina Cortese.²²⁸ Much older than I, I would guess. Middle 50s or so betcha. So with all around me making mit the accent will I stick out like a sore thumb. I'll try both, that's what I shall do and see how it feels. That's three nights in a row without a proper sleep and it must be because E is not here. I go off like a log when she is. Extraordinary hold she has over me.

[...] Am about to have my second cuppa and will then read myself to work. I hate my work.

Saturday 16th Awoke at 5.30. Thought of getting up but decided to wait 1/2 an hour or so thereby falling asleep and not waking 'til 8.30. I was destined to meet a lady called Rosemary Bain – I mean Romany Bain – at 9 so called Bob Wilson on to put her off until 9.30. I showered, shaved and shampooed and had a cuppa before she arrived. She is not the most stimulating lady in the world but then her job is not exactly conducive to brilliance. She writes for Woman's Own and other such diabolically tedious mags though this interview was for Cosmopolitan, an

American mag which is starting an English version. I answered the unanswerable questions like 'In what ways would you say you've changed since your first meeting and falling in love with Elizabeth 10 years ago in this very city?' with my usual non-committal circuitous tergiversation. She then interviewed E and she did more or less the same. Infinitely humdrum and heavy with humbug.²²⁹ [...]

Monday 18th, Grand Hotel [...] Finished yet another volume of Powell's Music of Time and it's the first one that has made me laugh out loud. All that 'richly comic' stuff that I read in the extracts from notices is simply not there. I would say that he is quietly and perhaps cumulatively amusing. I still have difficulty in believing his coincidences.

Back to Trotsky this morning and that horrible scratchy beard with the gum offensively smelly and, even worse, the moustache. A real beard and moustache is bad enough – or in truth better than the false one during the day – but at least one can take the mock one off at the end of the day with that equally horrible acetone, the smell of which would make a drinking me throw up.

A lovely day so I hope we'll be getting on with the film at a smart pace. I have to go back to Jugo after this and the sooner the better and the longer the holiday. Jugoslavia seems a long way off and already a long time ago. I'm looking forward to seeing it in the winter. Must wear long-johns or combs as the British call them. Since all these years with Elizabeth I am never quite certain whether a phrase, sometimes, is American or English. That's probably what's been happening to Wodehouse – about whom there is a great deal of fuss in the papers on his 90th birthday – for I find in his umpty-ninth 'Jeeves and Bertie' book that someone was 'as imperious as a traffic cop.'

Home now and it's evening. Have had a funny day. Called for 9.30 didn't work until 1.30 and not again until 5.30. Wrote letters to Kate and Val and started on Powell's Military Philosophers.²³⁰ I don't yet have the last volume and I'm missing two of the others though I think I read one of them some time ago. [...]

Tuesday 19th, Rome Another scintillating day. [...] We shot, on my second day an establishing shot which covered a wide area and included my two co-stars Delon and Schneider. The sky was overcast. This means that all the following shots have to be in similar weather until I get inside the house. But the weather continues to sparkle. [...]

We were invited to have lunch with the King and Queen of Greece anytime

we like this week or next Monday. I suppose they should be described as the ex-King and Queen.²³¹ I said that E and I would be delighted to meet them and have a noggin but that going to a lunch was awkward as I was covered with false beard and moustache. I wonder why they want to meet us. I am very suspicious of political royalty. Perhaps like the Shahrina of Persia they are simply star-struck but usually royalty are not. They've usually met so many. Talking of the Shahrina it appears that she reads everything about E and knows all the children's names and where they go to school and all that publicity in the journals.²³²

[...] My memory for words which has always been phenomenal had, in the last couple of years, become suspect. I found that I was taking longer than usual to learn lines but – probably as a result of abstinence – it has come back with all the tenacity of a steel trap. Very nice feeling. I have always said that if ever I got to the Noel Coward or Rex Harrison stage I would stop acting even if I wanted to.

Powell is a great user of archaisms. Yesterday I read 'the smell of eld'.²³³ I rather like their use them myself.

The Soviet Premier, Kosygin, was physically attacked yesterday in Ottawa.²³⁴ What, I wonder, would have been the effect on Anglo-Russian politics if he had been assassinated? A lot of big-sounding threats I expect gradually simmering down to cold tea.

Wednesday 20th, Grand Hotel I should not have spoken so soon about my memory being like a steel trap and all that mild boasting, as today I dried up in the middle of a long scene at least 15 times. Most unlike me. Actually the speech which threw me was an actual quote from Trotsky which Joe who has a predilection for such behaviour suddenly introduced into the scene. But that is no excuse really as I can normally learn a ten line speech in as many minutes. My real excuse is that it was a translation and the syntax was 'throwing'. The speech itself was easy apart from one line 'What aim could I possibly pursue in venturing on so monstrous so dangerous an enterprise.' Every so often I am – and all actors are – defeated by a speech. For years and God knows it is years – I must have learned it when I was about 15 – I have never been sure that I ever got my favourite speech from Hamlet absolutely correct. 'I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth foregone all custom of exercise etc.' God knows too how often I've said it and been paid to say it. There must have been with both the Old Vic and Gielgud NY production around 400 performances. Let's see if I can write it out correctly now and I'll check up when I go down to the yacht.

I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, foregone all custom of exercise, and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame the earth look you, this brave o'er hanging firmament, this majestic roof fretted with golden fire, why it seems no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man, in action how like an angel in apprehension how like a God in form in moving how express and admirable, the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals. And yet to me what is this quintessence of dust. How infinite in faculty in form in moving how express. should go after 'is a man.' Oh to hell with it. It should go after '... is a man. How infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension.' Now I really don't know.²³⁵

We are now having a dreadful time with Michael [...] Now he has assured Beth that he has got everybody out of the house in Hampstead and that he wishes to live with Beth and the baby alone. So, the innocent and her baby are flying back to the new Michael tomorrow. Elizabeth doesn't trust Michael an inch when he's under the influence of drugs which is now practically all the time. Just hoping and praying is all we can do. We both talked to Beth in Portland tonight and gave her what advice and blessings we could. I suggested that she go with the baby to London (she was going anyway) and that if Mike and his friends started his shenanigans again, they should go – she and the baby – hop on a plane to Rome. E is in a far worse emotional state than I as I, unlike E, am more optimistic about Michael keeping his word. [...]

And so to bed ere long. I feel very achy and I am expectorating great gobs.

Thursday 21st, Rome [...] I read a script called The Savage is Loose last night.²³⁶ It is a very doable film but would need a very imaginative director with great patience with a boy actor and with many different animals including a panther, a python and a crane. A brilliant cameraman would also be top priority. E would have to lose weight and I would have to put on some muscle. The end is wrong but could be fixed. Will wait for E to read it and decide with her. It would certainly be a pleasant film to make and we could, according to Heyman, shoot it at home in P.V. [Puerta Vallarta] Having read the piece now I don't see why not. All you need is jungle a beach and an ocean all of which we have in abundance in P.V.

Have just started another piece – the long-promised play for TV of John Osborne's called Separation. Actually it's two pieces, one called 'His' and the other 'Hers'.²³⁷ I gather it's about a marriage break-up, one play of an hour from her point of view and the other from his. We must do something for Harlech especially as it's made us some money, though that's incidental, and see if we can help keep the franchise or consortium or whatever they call it. Off to work. In case I hadn't mentioned it before I hate my work. Too strong a word – I dislike it.

Home from work at 6.00. Got through everything in takes one all day including a new scene with Valentine Cortese. Tomorrow I have yet another new scene to do with Cortese and two actors who play the Rosmers in the film.²³⁸ The 'Rosmer' couple brought my (Trotsky's) grandson from Europe to see me in Mexico.²³⁹

There's been a man called Jeffrey Archer, MP plaguing the life out of me through Raymond for weeks.²⁴⁰ I've always refused to talk to him and have told Raymond to tell him to tell Raymond what he wants to talk to me about. This he has refused to do as it was very important stuff and had to do with Princess Margaret, HRH. Then would he write it as Mr Burton will not speak on the telephone? So the stuff comes. It is, if you please a Royal Command (according to Mr Archer) to appear in a TV play for Sir Lew Grade – a 90 minutes one – play under separate cover – and at the receipt of our agreement to perform this so far unread play, which incidentally we hear is dreadful, Sir Lew Grade would make over a cheque for £100,000 to the St John's Ambulance lot.²⁴¹ We would be paid nothing. Grade would have the right to sell it all over the world. I am absolutely staggered by Grade's effrontery. I await the play and John Heyman on Sunday. Her Majesty and His Royal Highness will find that they have commanded the wrong couple. I shall say that I'll do it for a KBE! Mr Archer hinted at it apparently to Raymond over the phone. He sounds a very ambitious little MP. We shall see.

Friday 22nd, Rome I am a very ignorant man. The front page of the Rome Daily American announces that the Nobel Prize for Literature for 1971 goes to a poet-politician called Pablo Neruda. He is 67 years old and the Chilean ambassador to Paris. A Communist and has the usual revolutionary's awful luck and life until of course the Communists under Allende attained power in Chile.²⁴² Having read a description of his poetry I have an idea that it wouldn't interest me very much – the content I mean. I can never really understand the poetry of another language, Welsh and English only. I suppose few men who are not genuinely bi or multi-lingual from birth can. I generally know the important writers of other cultures even if I've never read them but Signor Neruda is a new one. I was surprised to read that only 6 S. Americans have won Nobel Prizes. That includes that vast half continent from Mexico down and I seem to remember that the Americans and British between them have won over 200. I lump them together because frequently the British and Americans have shared Nobel Prizes like the two British and one Yank who created or discovered the design of a molecule or whatever it was about 10 years ago.²⁴³ The Nobel Prize is a very funny one from the start. First of all Alfred Nobel, who started it all, was a Swede, I think, who invented gun-powder!²⁴⁴ It has given some hilarious awards. One of the funniest was to Winston Churchill. He won the 'Peace Prize'. Never has a politician, despite his outraged protestations, loved war as much as the old man. Peace Prize indeed!²⁴⁵

Sunday 23rd, Rome²⁴⁶ We worked late last night and I didn't get home til after 7. E very impatient to see me as she'd had news that she valued from Brian Hutton who directed her in XYZ. He is normally a wry pessimist and not given, as most Americans in the film business are, to superlatives but E says that exhibitors are fighting for the privilege to show XYZ and that Harry Saltzman who had the taste to produce Anger and the lucky judgement to produce the James Bond films, has offered $6m for the film.²⁴⁷ All this according to Hutton. I trust they won't accept the offer from Saltzman – I don't think that they can anyway without E's agreement – for if he offers 6 he must think it will gross more. Perhaps much more. At a sale of $6m I think that E could get about $1m guaranteed but at the end, since her percentage is of the gross absolute and for ever, Saltzman would still have to pay E the percentage. I must ask Aaron if E should persuade them to sell, pick up her guaranteed million and then sit back and – hopefully – watch the money roll in. We'll watch the outcome with great interest. There is even talk of Oscars and my lady must – if one can believe this pre-showing enthusiasm – should at least be nominated. That will bring her level with me said he with a sneering and somewhat bitter laugh. It is interesting to think that if one – only one – of the films we have made in the last 12 months or so hits the jackpot, the rewards will be fantastic. If XYZ, Hammersmith, Tito or Trotsky are blockbusters like Cleo, Wolf and Eagles the returns will have to be counted, for us, in many millions. Even if they are merely very big grossers – in the 10 to 20 million bracket – like Becket, Sandpiper, Shrew, VIPs it will still be considerable – far more than the old days of a million in front and 10% against the gross. I've worked out that if we'd no money in front and the same percentage deals as we've been having in the last 12 months, we would have made more money than we did on the old deals even with non-huge-grossing pics like Ceremony, Spy and Iguana all of which did 8–10 mils. It's more exciting this way all around. Against this argument is of course that for Staircase and Only Game we would only have received, as they were both massive flops, our expenses and, with luck a couple of 100 thousand.

The halcyon days for almost all actors except for the very very big stars or somebody who's had a recent big smash hit are over. I am being paid 5 thousand more in expenses for this film Trotsky than Rex Harrison is being paid in salary with no expenses and no percentage. This latter is an enormous drop from Rex's high time which was as recent as Staircase for which he was paid $\frac{3}{4}$ of a million and 10 against the gross. Rex is by no means alone. Anybody who is not in the 'superstar' category is getting the same kind of money or even less than the norm in the middle fifties – 150 to 250 thousand and no percentage.

The most important thing of all from our point of view is of course that we try to do, at least, rewarding films in terms of the films themselves and not their financial returns. We are both rich enough for ever even despite an economic world-catastrophe. I would much prefer, for instance, that E and I won Oscars than that a film should gross like Eagles and have no importance at all. The fact is though that Oscars also, almost inevitably, go hand in hand with good box-office. Of all the films we've done since we were free of contracts, only two can I remember that we knew before starting were not serious. Sandpiper for both of us and Raid on Rommel for me. All the rest have been honest attempts at good movies including the flops au cinema like Boom!, Staircase, Comedians and Only Game. Sandpiper we did because we were afraid that we were going to be out of work and we wanted to work together, while Raid on Rommel was a joke. A joke that paid though. So did the other joke Sandpiper.

So enough of films. This was prompted by my excitement about XYZ [that it] will be a 'big one' for E. By talk of distinction and by talk of Oscars. I know she is brilliant in the film and I know the film is good but I thought almost as highly of Boom! and that went BOOM. [...]

Reading the Times this morning I came across a, to me, strange use of the word utter. In effect 'to utter' is to pass counterfeit coins. He uttered a lie now takes on more meaning.

[...] Yesterday's work was very strange as again – I thought I'd left all that kind of thing in Yugoslavia – for the second time this week I played a scene with two people who couldn't speak a word of English and who were found to be incapable of learning, even like parrots, the few lines they had to say. It was an all day agony of frayed nerves for everybody, including Joe, though we all kept our tempers and were very patient. But why did Joe cast them in the first place. Usually he is so keen on even the extras being accurate. Very odd indeed. I don't know whether Joe is ill or regards this piece as a failure before it starts or has simply run out of gas, but he is passing performances in this film which an amateur director of the annual church pageant would turn down with a shudder. With judicious cutting I don't suppose it will matter but it would be so much more professional not to have to depend on that. It is bad enough with Valentina Cortese who is a good enough actress but acts in clichés and because of her discomfort with the language makes the quoted banalities she is forced to utter even more banal. A line like the following when the Rosmers lament the fall of France becomes yawning chasm of boresville as a result of her infinitely slow and yet uncertain reading. 'Neither Weep Nor Laugh But Understand.'²⁴⁸ I am beginning to wonder if the stuff they shot in Mexico with Delon and Schneider is equally bad. And that Joe has sort of given up. Because of its very nature the piece is rife with communist catch-phrases and the actors' job is to make them sound fresh and desperately intense. You can't do this unless your command of English is complete. I hope to God I'm being unduly pessimistic.

There was one very funny incident. Joe came in to me while I was being made up and said that the English of the two French actors was so bad that we might have to do it all in French or partly in French. As soon as he'd gone I translated my lines very quickly into French and with Gaston's help got the idioms and grammar right. When, about an hour later, Joe called me to shoot after rehearsing I told him that I knew it in French now. OK. So I started off in that language, going at a mile a minute, which is the way apparently Trotsky talked and was astounded to find that the French people were as bad in French as in English. Finally we stuck to English completely which they failed to get right. It is not even good enough to dub. They will have to [be] off-camera for almost every line they speak and on presumably when I speak. Shit and unnecessary shit and Joe Losey's mother. Anyway, it's a gorgeous day and we are off to lunch on the Via Appia Antica at L'escargot where they have a very good starter dish called Bouchee Caruso which is not too good for diets but undeniably this is a day off and I can watch waists tomorrow. Anyway I am back down to 165 and a bit. I might have a couple of glasses of Mouton or Lafitte or something.

Monday 25th, Rome I talked to Princess Margaret last night at about 7.25 – she had said 7.15 but not too bad for royalty, and amazingly for the Italian Telephone

Service which gave us a very good line. She asked me whether [the] Lew Grade thing was acceptable and I told her that in principle the idea was fine though we thought the plays were not very good and we had two far better ones by John Osborne (I hope we have) and that we would do them in March next year and that the £100,000 would come anyway only simply from a different source. What did I mean? she asked. Well, I said, we had already contracted to do the two Osborne plays for Harlech TV and therefore Harlech had a prior call on our services and the plays were being, had already been financed by USA TV and that the 100,000 would come from us and not Lew Grade. Do you mean from Harlech, she asked? No, I said, from Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Good Heavens, M said, how very generous of you. I am absolutely staggered. Not at all, I said feebly. Pleasure I assure you. Delighted I'm sure and other fatuities. Then we went on to talk banalities about Tito and we must simply spend some time together when we were all back in England swap family albums and stories about Tito and Yugoslavia. She told me she had lost her voice and I thought that it was rather a good idea as she sounded so gentle and long-suffering. That's how I feel, she said. She sent her love to Elizabeth and I sent E's and mine back and to Tony as well I said. I shall give it to him when he comes back from America she said. Well goodbye I still can't get over your extraordinary generosity. Not at all. Goodbye. It was nice talking to you. Nice talking to you too. Goodbye then. Goodbye your Highness.²⁴⁹

I read a review in the Paris Tribune of a marvellous new-old book. Someone has published the entire Oxford Dictionary – all 17 volumes or whatever it is – in two microscopic volumes with a pull-out magnifier so that one can read the minute print.²⁵⁰ E is buying me three sets for my birthday. One for Mexico, one for the yacht and one for Gstaad. I am genuinely excited. What a superb idea. The review goes on to say that the page titles can be seen with the naked eye and it's only the definitions that need magnification. What an even better idea if someone could do the Britannica as well. One would need nothing else on a desert island. I am waiting to see the OED with all the anticipatory pleasure of a small boy waiting for that engine-and-rails or this pair of ball-bearing roller-skates.

Suddenly bethought me that a few days ago the papers all carried front-page announcements that the royals were to get increases in salary and that Maggie's was to go up to £100,000. So we nonchalantly give away without so much as a wrinkled brow the equivalent of her annual income. I wonder if that crossed her mind and whether there might be a little pique that two commoners could be that rich.

Another superb day and Joe (Lucky) Losey should be happy. After my jeremiad the other day I had a letter from him Sat morn in which he said how marvellous it all looked – even the scene he wasn't sure about was splendid and he was herewith enclosing extra speeches about the theory of Art and the State which he had promised to find for me. I haven't looked at them yet but will.

Tuesday 26th, Rome A good day yesterday in which I did a long long speech while circumnavigating the lawn outside the house. Joe had made a sort of circular railway out of the tracks and the camera did a full 360 degrees. What one might call a typical Losey shot. To my delight Joe said that it was my only shot of the day, and it was. The shot demanded a nice series of movements on my and the camera's part but we got it correctly after a couple of false starts. Choreography in films. This took place in the morning and E was coming to lunch with Heyman and the new prospect as agent – a young man called Michael Linnit – nephew of Linnit (& Dunfee) who is the impresario.²⁵¹ He seems nice enough and we've decided to try him for 6 months or so. Bob called E for me and told her to wait for me at the Grand as I was finishing and I would take her out to the Flavia or whatever place she fancied. We went to the Rallye restaurant which is inside the hotel and probably has one of the best cuisines in Rome. I'd forgotten how good it was. Again I had two glasses of wine. It was fine but I fear the thin edge of the wedge. No more except for special occasions. Apart from anything else, it seems such a waste of good wine – and I only have the best – to have merely two glasses. The young potential agent pretended to a savoir faire at first which was somewhat and vaguely irritating but after a time the veneer disappeared and he became more himself. This was after E had sat beside him in the restaurant and applied her totally un-self-conscious charm. After that he didn't try to compete with the ambient worldliness but settled for it. I don't think he's very gifted – not in the same league as Heyman for instance – and will doubtless remain an agent all his life, probably not even having his own agency.

After finishing my film work for yesterday I did 15 minutes for the BBC Tonight programme or maybe it was 24 hours. I talked at a mile a minute the usual guff about Tit and Trot. Then I shouted and bawled into a mike lots of speeches of Trotsky's for the background 'music' of some of the scenes. Joe still seems remarkably distraut. [...]

I started reading Steppenwolf which is very hard going.²⁵² I suppose it is more interesting in the original but in translation it seems so clichéd and juvenile and pseudo. He talks, for instance, of the importance of humour and how its possession is a potent weapon in the battle against the bourgeoisie and the smugly satisfied middle-class all the while demonstrating that he has none. Not a glimmer. Not a giggle. [...]

Wednesday 27th, Rome [...] Message from E came to say that Michael Beth and baby Leyla were coming to Rome [...]. Michael's philosophy is a complete balls-up at the moment. He doesn't want our money he says, but he lives in our house rent free. Again he wants to live the 'free life' without our money but with presumably Robin's.²⁵³ So he is prepared to use us as suckers – his and his friends' use of the word – in taking the house. Then finding us not adequate he then uses his friend Robin as a 'sucker'. He is so exactly like his father that one cannot really blame him. It's bred in the bone. Whose money does he think he is using to fly to Rome? Whose money flew his wife to London? What a funny feller! Let's hope that there is enough of E's pride in him to adopt a more practical approach to life when he is older. Nobody expects him any more to do anything. We don't expect anything of him at all and will keep him in fags and pot forever if necessary as long as he doesn't hurt himself or others, particularly the baby. Now Chris is going to spend a week with him in London. Chris should hold his own I think and hope – a much more intelligent and stronger character altogether, but one can never tell.

Yesterday, we worked well. [...] I worked with Romy Schneider for the first time. She is very arch. She displayed none of the 'temperament' which apparently manifests itself in screaming at the hairdresser, make-up man etc. and was, on the contrary the soul of modesty. [...]

Wednesday 27th, Rome Michael Beth and baby Leyla duly arrived having had a goodish journey I understand though an hour late. The baby doesn't like planes very much unlike Kate I remember at the same age who adored them – especially a rough ride. Gurgles galore while the adults tightened their sphincters. I did two scenes today one with Schneider and one with Delon. Delon is surprisingly small. From a distance he looks six feet but close to he is only about 5' 8". I finished with a close-up around 4.30 and was home before M and B and Leyla had arrived from the airport. They both, as usual with modern hippy clothes look unkempt and dirty but that's par for the course. The baby is a beauty and very well behaved and a mess of toothless grins and waving tight fists. She is very brown, and not from the sun. Some dark blood from one side of the family or other. [...]

Thursday 28th, Rome²⁵⁴ What an enchanting evening yesterday's was. It was as if we'd turned the calendar back five years and Michael was himself again. He was loving with the baby, fun to talk to and to listen to. Elizabeth was as happy as only a grandmother can be. Beth was in good form. Even I was pleasant and though I longed to I daren't touch the baby as my cold [...] might have been given to her. She is the kind of baby that everyone should have. It kicks little legs and makes minute fists and blows spit-bubbles and smiles a lot but hardly ever cries. Everybody hates a crying baby – in fact distraught mothers, generally from the working classes have been known to kill them – and everybody loves a charmer as Leyla unquestionably is.

Elizabeth stopped her drinking dead in its tracks – or practically, as she did have one beer but that was not out of crying despair for alcohol but because it fitted with her food. You can't, after all, have orange juice or Pepsi Cola with pizza. I am marking the diary headings in red for every day she refrains from the demon drink. I am delighted. I've always wanted her to stop drinking occasionally as it must be good for the health and the mental well-being. The latter because it's good to know that one can stop, that one hasn't become an alcoholic, that one does not live by for and through booze. Usually, I take several days of cutting down before I stop altogether but E seems to be able to do it in one.

In addition to all yesterday's pleasantness came the news from New York and California that the showing of XYZ was received smashingly and all the distributors fought for it.

Another brilliant day and my call is for rehearsal at 9.30 and a continuation of the scene we did yesterday and then presumably I go into the first of my two scenes with Delon in the first of which he comes to kill me but doesn't, and the second when he does. Joe is definitely not himself. He doesn't seem to know the script as well as he usually does. Time and time again I, or the continuity girl, have to remind him of things that are very obvious. For instance: in one of the scenes I am pacing up and down and around the garden dictating. Every so often I pause as I hear myself talking to the now dead Sheldon Harte, killed in my defence.²⁵⁵ I am remembering my last conversation with him. Joe asked me why I was pausing. I told him why. Oh really let me look at the script. Yes you're quite right. Yes. Very Odd.

Thursday 28th, Rome Worked all day until the light went. It's now 8.10am and delight of delights our Liza is arriving tonight at 10 o'clock and should be here about 11ish. Shall wait up. E has had three beers so far today but since I don't really consider beer a 'drink' unless many pints are taken I am allowing her a 'red' titled day. Mike and Beth and the luminous Leyla are still here and everything seems to go swimmingly. Oddly enough E had had only two beers when she saw that I had written three and decided to make the presumption a fact. Right now I mean.

Friday 29th, Rome E had a long heart-to-heart talk with Michael yesterday. Perhaps that's too intimate a word when one considers that Mike is in such a potentially explosive state that Elizabeth has to play him like a fish and every conversation has to be extremely circuitous and thin-ice-skating. [...]

Saturday 30th, Rome Very short entries. Largely because I'm not getting up early enough in the morning. [...] I worked with Delon all day yesterday. He is a much better actor than I believed. Quite sensitive and all that. Pleasurable surprise. Liza is here a little overweight with puppy-fat and a trifle spotty but all part of puberty or is it adolescence? Giggles a lot at bluish jokes which for some reason eggs me on to make endless juvenile and harmless and very bad sex jokes. Yesterday, I found a Time mag for April 1940 which was fascinating to read. Winston Churchill was described as 'Sandy Winston Churchill'.²⁵⁶ One never thinks of Churchill with any particular hair or that it would be described as 'sandy'. One realizes what a silly magazine Time is. Their attitudes, even then, were of the most superficial. They had no more idea of the coming holocaust than I did. Just had a long talk with Liza about masturbation – prompted by a Dear Abby column she is just reading.²⁵⁷ I told her that it was a perfectly normal part of growing up – especially I said in boys. Why especially in boys? Because I said I knew about boys, having been one believe it or not but never having been a girl I wasn't too sure. I told her some of the frightful and stupid things I was told and heard as a kid. That you'd go blind and bald before you're 21 etc. All rubbish. Also told her that excessive masturbation might lead to an onanism which might spoil one for more normal sex though I wasn't too sure about that either.

NOVEMBER

Monday 1st, Anzio [...] I wonder if this film I'm doing is any good? I am not possessed by its success as E is with XYZ but would like it nevertheless. Don't really care though. Dangerous attitude to have. Where's your ambition man? Went and lost it a long time ago, sir. Tut-tut.

We moped around all day reading and eating and talking. We took a nap in the afternoon. I asked Liza whether, since she was so enamoured of horses, she would or had consider or considered spending the rest of her life with them. Would she like to breed them for instance? Or train them? I said that we could probably see her to a farm and stake her to a few livestock. I would rather, I said, like a farm in the family. Nice to visit. Smell of horses and brass and leather and a book-lined room for Dad and a large quiet bedroom for Liz and me with a good shower for Dad, very important a good shower, and walks along the woodland ride wearing white for Eastertide, and the morning men stumble out with their spades and all the woken farm at its white trades, and tea and crumpets and cucumber sandwiches in the summer, and a local quiet pub with cool beer frothed and quaffable and a nice walk before dinner and doubtless dogs in the yard, and a couple of superior cats, and why not have a farmhouse of mellowed brick with a chiming clock over the stables, and a rich smell of dung, and could we, do you think, get a couple of giant slow-moving dray horses and harness them up on occasions to some sort of shafted car and go for rides drawn by Dobbin and Robbin, with a market town nearby associated with minor history, with a wide main street and a graveyard beside the church where I could sit and read while waiting for E to finish shopping or examine the headstones and ponder on the monotony of death, and it would be nice to have a bustling W.H. Smith's with a serious nervous young man, thin with an Adam's Apple, weak-chinned and a-bristle with insignificance, a bad second at Oxford writing articles for the country newspaper. And a lot of local gossip and a scandal or two to titillate and who would have thought that the vicar's wife would have run away with a garage-hand 10 years her junior. He wasn't giving it to her, the vicar, couldn't get it up. Don't be disgusting from E and Oh Dad from Liza. There ought to be a train to London to see a play and the last train home after supper at the Savoy Grill or maybe we'll take the Harlequin Suite at the Dorchester and stay for a week while E raids Harrods and Selfridges and Cartiers with Liza and I rape Foyles and Cecil Gees looking for a second hand copy of the sermons of John Elias o Fon, and back to the farm and 7 o'clock breakfasts with the accentless tones of the BBC news at 7 and old films on the telly and Frankie Howerd getting older and dirtier with his odd air of soiled innocence, and Liza might get a child or two for me to shout at and spoil.²⁵⁸

Liza, in fact, has just arrived from the bowels of the ship and I've read her out the bit about the farm. I hope I've put the right idea into her head. [...]

Tuesday 2nd, Rome Worked a full day yesterday [...]. Bettina and her boy friend and Roddy Mann from the Sunday Express came to lunch with, as usual, E not turning up 'til 2pm. Fortunately I was able to squeeze in enough time between shots to go with them. [...] Today I do a scene with Val Cortese and then the mucky assassination starts with Delon. False blood all over the place.

We had one of those evenings yesterday. Liza was going back to school. She was arriving at London airport at 11 o'clock. Liz (Williams) was going to be there to meet her. Wouldn't it be better, E said, since Liza was going on a later plane than expected by Liz to have Charles Simpson pick her up in the chauffeured Rolls as Lil was a very busy woman and London airport was a monstrous thief of time making Dickens' procrastination a mere petty thief in comparison.²⁵⁹ No, it's alright, said Liza flippantly, Lil will wait for me. She has to go up to London anyhow. But, we said, the airport is not in London, it is a long way from London. The upshot was that she became so adamant that she wanted Lil to pick her up that E became incensed and pinched Liza's arm. Liza dissolved in tears and left the room to sulk. She continued to sulk for 3 hours. Tear-stained face. Monosyllabic answers. Air of Tragedy. The only thing in this world I find totally unforgivable is the silent sulks. The sulker only looks a fool, and a stupid one, gets – from me at least – no sympathy at all after the 1st five minutes, and generally speaking is a crashing bore. E and I made a long-ago pact that regardless how flaming the quarrel, how bitter the recriminations that neither of us would ever mope and sulk. I remember Joy Parker telling me in the days of our friendship that she once had a quarrel with her husband Paul (Scofield) and that he sulked for a whole year. A whole year in which he never said anything outside the absolute necessities. Good morning. Good night. Shan't be home for supper. I would have shot him dead. Once I had a quarrel with E so vicious that I went for a long walk to cool my anger. I didn't sulk though. When I went back, we made it up immediately. That was in Aston Clinton, I think, at the Bell Inn. [...]

Wednesday 3rd [...] Yesterday, had, as per usual its little crisis: Liza boarded a plane at Fumicino after a prolonged delay while officials went through every piece of baggage meticulously in the search for an IRA bomb.²⁶⁰ Nothing found

and off they went to England but not London airport. More IRA threats to blow up London airport had forced its closure so planes were being diverted to Stansted instead.²⁶¹ Widespread fury and I fancy the IRA are rapidly losing their romantic aura of Freedom Fighters for the ould sod.²⁶² Nobody likes a coward and the popular myth of fighting a merciless tyrant – the poor ineffectual English, if you please – is somewhat tarnished by acts of distant time-bombing. The Post Office tower was blown about a bit a couple of days ago, and shops and post offices in Ulster are forever going up in atoms.²⁶³ I often wonder what I'd do if my Welsh extremists started the same thing. I wouldn't object very much to blowing up installations though I think it pretty childish but if they hurt anybody except themselves I would be red fury. I don't expect much from the Irish – a lot that I know so well that I despise them, everything about them, their posturing, the silly soft accents, their literature, especially Joyce, Synge but not including Yeats who writes like a great anglo – original spare strange – yes Hopkins – and I hate their genius for self-advertisement, their mock-belligerence, their obvious charm.²⁶⁴ For the opposite of all these reasons I love the Scots and the South Welsh and even prefer the English b'god, especially the taciturn midlands and north country.

[...] With every excuse yesterday, E only had a beer and a glass of wine and so after a week of 'wagon' she has had a total of one glass of wine, one delicious Martini on Sunday as a reward from her proud spouse and about 10 bottles of beer. Somewhat of a drop from $\frac{1}{2}$ or more of a bottle of hard liquor a day. As she says, the habit of drinking had become simply that – an odious habit in which the excitement of a good old booze-up was dissipated by the habit. We both agreed that the ice-cold vodka Martini on Sunday before lunch was all the better for being looked forward to and so on. E has just corrected me and reminded me that she had a vodka and orange sometime yesterday. So it's two vodkas in a week. Big deal.

[...] Tonight when I came home about 6 E was waiting for me and aglow with contentment. She had been out shopping to Gucci's and had a good time and there we were as happy as you like and looking forward to a nothing lovely evening, me with a crossword and E with a book and discussing whether we should go to Gstaad, Vallarta or – a sudden idea of mine – Quogue for Xmas. We also agreed to go the Rothschilds' (Ferrières) for a party on November 2nd which Guy and Marie-Hélène were giving, one of their truly posh ones which can be very amusing. Last time I sat with Madame Pompidou at dinner and drank with President Pompidou afterwards in the days of course when he was merely an ex-Prime Minister and in mild disfavour with De Gaulle. That night too I saw Brigitte Bardot for the first time since she was a young girl and married to or living with Vadim and not even remotely as famous as she is now.²⁶⁵ I told Ron afterwards that I found it hard to believe that it was the same girl, so much so that I was almost tempted to think I had mis-remembered her name and that it was some other starlet of the time. Ah, Ron said, I expect you knew her when she still had projecting teeth. And that, of course, was probably the answer.

Thursday 4th, Grand Hotel [...] I read Les Fleurs du Mal of Baudelaire ... Tout là-haut, tout là-haut, loin de la route sûre ... Sous mes pieds, sur ma tête et partout, le silence, le silence qui fait qu'on voudrait se sauver, Le silence éternel ... I slept fitfully and awoke every hour but I must have slept happily as E reports that I laughed a lot in my dreams.²⁶⁶ I awoke to the alarm clock – a new and very expensive one which Frank Sinatra gave us for last Xmas. It makes a strange ullulating noise which is not very pleasant and is yet not harsh. I was very very sleepy and practically slept under the shower. I am dressed in outrageously expensive new trousers from some posh shop here in Rome. That's money that I do not like to spend – my idea of clothes is Ohrbachs or Vallarta where you can clothe yourself from top to toe, white thin shirt, white thin trousers and white sandals for an extravagant $8.²⁶⁷ I wonder why Sinatra gave us so unexpectedly that expensive clock? What motive prompted the gift? What was going on in the poor man's Mafia mind? Had he realized perhaps at last that the painting we gave him – I've forgotten what it was – cost a great deal of money and told himself that he hadn't thanked us with sufficient grace? Whatever it was, the reason is likely to be vulgar.

Thursday 3rd, Grand²⁶⁸ I wonder how long Frank will stay 'retired'.²⁶⁹ What is he planning? I doubt that he can write and he doesn't have the sort of mind that makes you think so. Some people, Bob Mitchum and Marlon and Monty Clift and sometimes O'Toole in my profession, give me the feeling – in Monty's case past tense – that were they to set their minds to it and if they had discipline – that they are natural writers but the old Sinatra, the old sinner will I bet have to be ghosted though if I know Francis as I think I do the ghost will be the most ephemeral of all his craft. Nobody will claim well actually I wrote it, it wasn't Frank at all. It is odd that Frank who interprets lyrics from common songs better than any of his rivals and is as I call him a fine interpreter of street corners poetry – one for my baby and one more for the road and other such good songs he can trick in such a way that they seem brilliant minor poetry but when faced with something massive – like for instance Hamlet – he is completely bewildered. I mention Hamlet because once when he was in the doldrums, becalmed in the ocean of Hollywood and unable to get work (somewhere in the early 50s) he asked me to read Hamlet with him as he was going to make a comeback through the classics yet and he'd show the mother-fuckers.

Friday 5th E said last night that I am very snobby about Sinatra and that he's really nice and means well. [...]

I had a most uncomfortable day yesterday. I did the assassination scene which involves a lot of blood. Ron clipped and concealed in my hair a thin rubber tube which went down my back to the floor. Delon strikes the blow and as I stand up and start screaming Ron, lying on the floor pumps the artificial blood through the tube. After one false start when Joe foolishly called cut after the false red stuff started to come through which meant an infuriating hour of cleaning up and re-doing the make-up, we did the whole bloody business in one. During it of course – because I am so lazily unfit – I pulled a muscle in my back or strained something with the result that this morning I am barely able to move. In addition the blood got into my eyes and I also swallowed some so that for a few hours afterwards my eyes were inflamed and my voice was practically lost and my throat was very sore. My eyes and throat are still sore this morning but not too badly. There will be more blood this morning though I fervently hope I don't have to do what we did yesterday all over again.

A group of Italians want me to play Mussolini!

I have been reading, in the last few weeks a lot of novels and enjoying them which is unusual for me – I mean the reading of novels not so much their enjoyment. The set which is a copy of Trotsky's house contains hundreds of books bought, I'm sure, in lots. I started reading them, some of them, at work between shots. I read for the first time Adventures of The Scarlet Pimpernel which I discovered is not the same as the famous book by Baroness Orczy which is simply The Scarlet Pimpernel.²⁷⁰ Very entertaining, supremely snobbish rubbish. Romance, by Conrad and Ford Maddox Hueffer (later Ford Madox Ford), Many Latitudes by a vaguely familiar name F. Tennyson Jesse, a book of novelettes.²⁷¹ Adam Bede of Geo Eliot, Malice Aforethought by Francis Iles and at home I've read a novel by Oxford colleague – we once played Shakespeare together – John Wain.²⁷² Another by the lady who wrote The Severed Head – a name I can never remember, Anglo-Irish, fiercesome looking – and a novel so old-fashioned, so Woman's Own and Peg's Paper that I found it hard to believe that anybody would seriously publish it, called Virginia Perfect.²⁷³ Honest to God. My reading of novels is a change for me. Apart from reading my few modern favourites – Waugh, Greene, Powell, Huxley and Snow – my novel-reading is generally confined to re-reading books that I knew years ago. But now suddenly I want to read again books that I found unsympathetic to me but considered masterpieces by everybody else. I want to read, and will, Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Proust, and I want to read, and will, Balzac, Dumas, Stendhal in the original.²⁷⁴ Perhaps I will find the first three more to my liking than hitherto while the others I enjoyed in English and I thrill to the thought of reading them in the writer's own tongue. So much to do and not so little a time. I hope.

Just remembered the lady-writer's name. It is Iris Murdoch.

My chief joy at the moment is in reading Baudelaire. It is a magnificent thing to discover poetry in middle age. Most men take their quota of verse before the age of 25 and live on it for the rest of their lives – those, that is, who have a feeling for it at all. I mean, of course, to discover new poetry, new at least to them and not simply regurgitate the old and well-known. Baudelaire I had, of course, read in English, in which language he is unrecognizable. Why was I not properly educated in French in my early years though perhaps I should prefer it this way round. It is pretty astounding to find a whole new world of literature, discovering it, I may say, with all the enthusiasm of an undergraduate, at the ripe old age of 46 next week. Think of all those unworked seams of gold. Think of the incomparable treasure-trove to be still discovered in the immense store-house of French Literature. I can't wait for my next day off to augment my library. [...]

The blood didn't get into my eyes today so much though they are smarting again, and managed to keep it out of my mouth too so am in far better order than yesterday. [...] The screaming scene and the wrestle with Delon seems to be very effective so, thank the Lord, we don't have to do it again. [...]

Saturday 6th [...] Had lunch in a place called Passetto's. We apparently chose badly. My lamb – grilled and tasteless and dry. E's calf's liver and bacon – uninspired. I had cozze marinera to begin which was delicious. We shared a bottle of Lafite 63. That was good. We had a couple of glasses each. It would seem that I have got the problem of drink licked, as they say. Yesterday is the fourth time in a month that I've had a glass or two of wine at lunch, and on one occasion a martini, without feeling it necessary to go on and drink down the day as in the old days.

The book about me by Cottrell and Cashin entitled simply Richard Burton arrived yesterday.²⁷⁵ Again I tried to read it but could do no more than flick through the snaps and make fun of Claire Bloom. With the book came a letter from their agent suggesting that I might like to review it for a 'quality' weekly. I shall write back and say that from the bits I've looked at I feel certain that my review would be unfavourable and since I like the two writers and want them to have a success, it would be better if I kept silent. From the pictures in the book I found that the tiny boy in the middle of the back row in the under-14s Sec School Rugby Team is Freddy Williams who was the Speedway Motorbike Champion of the world some years ago. I'd forgotten that he was at the Sec. I thought we were at the Elementary School together – The Eastern. The only effect the book has had on me is to make me mildly determined to write my own story one of these days – in several volumes. I often think, when I'm reminded of my schooldays of a boy in school who seemed to us all at the time to be a god-given actor. His name was Morgan Griffiths I think. He was tall I believe and had a beautiful mellifluous voice, a real 'actor's voice' as we thought, tho there is no such thing of course. Actors' voices are as wide in variety as other people's and are equally badly produced from the lungs. Other than his acting, the boy was totally unmemorable, as dull as dust and as square as a table-top. But he played Magnus in The Apple Cart and Richard II with remarkable authority. At least, so it seemed to us. He had the look of someone who would go bald young. I wonder if he did. I believe he became a bank clerk. I believe also that he wrote to me about 10 years or so ago, no more than that, say 15, asking me to help him become an actor. I believe I replied as I've replied to all such letters that I would not encourage him to take the plunge and give up his security and pensions etc. but that once he had made the plunge I would help him in every way I could. The plunge was obviously never made as I would have heard from him again. But what dreams does that boy dream? What impossibilities disturb that middle-aged, bald gentleman. Is he the manager of the bank now. Did he continue to act with the YMCA or The Strolling Players or The Thespian Society. Does he dream of holding a great house in the palm of his hand and reducing it to his creature as he tots up the accounts. Does he lust for the standing ovation after a particularly electrifying performance as he stands in magnificent solitude against the front curtain of The Old Vic as a dirty old man lusts for the caress of voluptuous hands and the succulence of young breasts. Perhaps not. I hope not. I wonder if he knows how monstrously unfair the business is. The man of thirty, his ambition still burning, bewildered by frustration when tall and graceful and full-voiced and handsome stands well-lighted on the stage and realizes, knows, that the audience are totally uninterested in him but in that other man, that thick graceless pockmarked man with a cracked voice. Why do the audience look at Alec Guinness and not me? Or Marlon Brando. Or Alan Badel. Or Paul Scofield. I mean look at Scofield. He walks like a pimp, he's got a patently false voice, he's elephant-arsed and thin-chested and minute-shouldered and here stand I the shining and superb son of a hundred earls and yet they look at Scofield and his apology for acting. And Larry, my dear, a Lord yet. I mean it's absurd. He's practically a dwarf. He has the most contrived voice, all affectation. And that vulgar streak in him is shaming. As Othello I couldn't look at him. The audience could, of course. But then audiences are sheep, they believe the critics. Fools. And Brando. Have you honestly ever understood a word he's ever said? Be honest now. And as for Burton. Words almost fail me.

Sunday 7th, Rome [...] The virtual cessation of drink has made a terrific difference to E. She is more active, more spirited and at the same time more relaxed. And she looks even more beautiful than before. Her face has thinned very subtly and her ever present baby double chin is much less. Even with E there is bound to be a certain amount of bloat from booze. If she loses 5 or 6lbs with the diet she will look 25 again. And there is no doubt that less grey in the hair takes a few years off too. (For the first time in her life and after years of my refusing to let her have it done she has dyed her hair a bit, that is to say it has been 'streaked' leaving some of the grey). In the last two or three years and for the first time in her life E has looked a bit blotchy in the mornings when she first awoke. I told her so and for the first times ever had to suggest that she put some make-up on if someone was coming to visit us early. But now again the morning face is as fresh and glowing as the one that went to bed. I was going to say 'as a young girl's' but remembered that Liza and Kate too, both a mere 14 years old, look pretty ghastly in the mornings. We have to tell Liza frequently to go and splash water on her face. Mind you, in all fairness Liza's complexion is very different from E's, for E, tho she is Celtic dark has an underlying pigmentation of red whereas Liza tends to sallowness. Faintly yellow. Most women look fairly diabolical in the a.m. Syb was pretty good but a lot of other ladies I knew under those circumstances looked awful, even in their teens. Jean [Simmons] was alright, as I remember, and like E had no need of make-up at all tho she did wear it. Clara Cluck had to wear make-up all the time and not just in the morning.²⁷⁶

She had, like so many women, a faintly ‘bald’ look without it. Some girls I knew looked so frightful under those circumstances that the ‘intimacy’ stopped right there. Hasty retreats in the cold cruel light of morning was often-times the order of the day. The most rebarbative I ever remember was in Winnipeg, Canada. I had been stationed for 6 months at a place called Portage la Prairie, some 60 miles from Winnipeg.²⁷⁷ I was 20 years old and it seemed to me that I had a permanent erection and could think of little else. Since a bad education had given me a guilt-fear of masturbation I only allowed myself recourse to it when I was truly desperate as, apart from the fore-written guilt fear, my own dignity screamed ‘shame’ at the prospect of frantically stroking myself in the squalid communal lavatory or in the RAF bed with thirty other men asleep around me. And the few women that were available were already spoken for. The WAAFs on the station and the women in the town, those who were ready and willing, had been serving the RAF for five years – it was 1945 – and were not likely to change a permanent member of the Station staff for chaps like us who were there only for a short course and then sent back to England.²⁷⁸ It didn't matter that the girls were almost all vilely unattractive, all they had to be was clean and not actually cross-eyed and they were considered to be Hedy Lamarr.²⁷⁹ Even with this collection of affronts to their own sex there was no hope. The incumbents exercised their territorial imperative with ruthlessness, and we hot boys had to content ourselves with wet dreams. Every 10 days we were given a 36 hour pass to Winnipeg and 60 panting young men walking on three legs would invade the infinitely dull city of Peg. Why, Oh Why could we not be stationed near Montreal. Why this town, clean and wide-avenued and built on grain, a great deal of which the citizens must have eaten as they all looked unattractively healthy, glowing with good thoughts and all descended from the British, not nice and dirty and hairy like French Canada. Since we were almost all Oxford and Cambridge undergrads we were ‘placed’ with good rich families who lived in wealthy suburbs with ‘Aunties’. These were generally pretty well-to-do Canadian ladies with lovely Norman Rockwell houses with porches and rocking chairs and unfenced lawns sweeping down to the side-road on which they lived, mail-box on a pole, mosquito screens around the porch, decent ‘best seller’ libraries with, in one house, bound copies of the Reader's Digest, and they would invite round pretty blonde undergraduettes from the University who invariably either wanted to talk seriously about college subjects or – death of deaths and hell's destruction – would bring their boy-friends around with them.²⁸⁰ It was a dry province so there was never any alcohol to help reduce any defences and in any case there was simply no time. Thirty-six hours was cruelly inadequate. Once, at Aunt Elinor's – I had two aunts and alternated between them, the other one being Aunt Sally. Swear to God – she had a girl from the University who during the vac was jobbing as Elinor's maid – a nice sexy looking girl that I nearly managed to seduce but at the crucial moment she started to cry and I realized that the whole thing was too near home and gave up. One weekend however I decided to ignore Sally and Elinor and prowled the streets. Nothing, absolutely nothing doing. I tried parks and cinemas and the main streets. About 11 at night when I finally decided that the fucking town was hopeless and that it was the bloody YMCA after all I was walking down a side street of pretty lower-class houses when I heard the astonishing sound of revelry at night. Winnipeg went to bed at 10 o'clock in those days and was never given to revelry at any time and therefore the sound of singing and laughing at 11 at night was the equivalent of a wild party at 3 o'clock anywhere else. I located the heady sound finding that it came from a house with the blinds down but the lights on. I decided to 'crash' the party. There were about 8 people, all drunk and all older than grass – in those days that was about my age now, 45 or so – all soft with that peculiar North American obesity – and they greeted me with delight. I hadn't had a drink since arriving in Canada and was delirious with delight too when they told me to help myself. They were all drinking beer out of quart bottles. I was of course wearing my RAF uniform with a forage cap with the white band informing anyone that I was air-crew and a cadet officer. Usually Canadians hated RAF bods as we had been there for five years and like the GIs in Britain had more money and more glamour than the stay-at-homes and were thoroughly detested so I was surprised at their welcoming me so cordially. The reason for this change of heart was soon realized. We were sitting in a kitchen on kitchen chairs and a couple of chairs were brought in from another room. I was sitting on the draining board with my feet dangling. I asked what they were celebrating, whose birthday or what. Well we just fired off our new little 22 Browning, he said. I was completely bewildered though I pretended to know what they were talking about. Finally it dawned on me that we had dropped the Atom Bomb.²⁸¹ They then told me, when I asked, some of the details. I was delighted and wished I'd learned the news in better company the Canadians in that house being loathsome. I had only a vague idea of course in those days of its true horror. The evening wore on and eventually, about 12.30 I suppose I left and walked towards the city centre. I was fairly drunk. In one of the main streets I saw a woman alone. With the false effrontery of the drunk and the relieved – on the whole I decided that not having to fight the Japs was a good idea. A guaranteed life was somewhat more on the cards than a guaranteed medal to go with it. I don't remember the exchange with the lady but I seem to remember that she looked reasonable enough and was I thought about 30. Old but not all that old. I had been told that there were no whores in Winnipeg and she was probably one of the many servicemen's wives who were celebrating the atom bomb and the imminence of the war's end. She took me home. It was a bed-sitter. We screwed. Can't very well say 'made love' under the circumstances. And slept. She also had some beer I think. The room was small and it was a double bed that dwarfed the room and there was no room for any other furniture except an upright chair. I awoke to the crying of a baby. It was very early in the morning and still only $\frac{1}{2}$ light. I was for a long time unable to work out where I was. I then remembered. I turned and looked at the creature lying beside me. She was horrifically filthy. Vile. And old. Not thirty but fifty. And an old fifty. Under the dim street lights of the street and the darkness of her room she hadn't looked too bad. Also, I suppose, booze and indiscriminating lust had seen her with distorted myopia. Also she was heavily layered with a pound or so of make-up. Now there she lay in nightmare vomit, unspeakably repulsive. There was a minute bathroom which I had used the night before. I arrived there in time to be sick. After that and after dressing I pretended to a bonhomie that I didn't have and asked where the sound of the baby's crying had been coming from, it seemed very near. One corner of the room was curtained off. She withdrew the curtain. Behind the curtain was a cradle on a stand. In the cradle was her baby. I gave her some money and left.

Monday 8th, Rome Yesterday was for the most part unsatisfactory. Brook Williams came at 10 o'clock and J. Heyman at 11.20 [...]. It seems that I can delay going back to Yugoslavia until January and we have decided to do so and take a long seven week holiday. John Heyman's long disappearance can be attributed to – I had guessed so – to woman chasing. A particular woman called Suzy Kendall who is the girl who stayed with us on the yacht last summer with Mike Caine. We approve of her thoroughly though I am now finding it difficult to believe that neither Caine or Heyman (so he swears) have been to bed with her. She must either be that rare thing indeed – a truly chaste and virtuous girl – or that not so rare child – a girl who's not going to give herself unless the man is going to marry her, or that very common and to-be-pitied thing – frigid. Anyway, there goes Heyman with his tongue hanging out. Rather you nor me Johnny, rather you nor me. I must never have people around again on a Sunday morning.

They destroyed the rhythm of the perfect Sunday, the reading of the papers with E reading me out choice bits from the cheap papers especially the News of the World while I work my way through the sports sections – Longhurst and McIlvanney and Parkinson and on to the politico pages with a final luxurious orgy in the book reviews with pencil and paper at the ready for books to buy immediately or shall we wait for them to come out in paperback.²⁸² I have long given up reading the theatre and film sections. I find them, and always have unless they concerned me, unreadable. When Tynan stopped flashing his naughtiness at us I stopped being interested. Apart from Hobson in theatre and Dilys Powell in films I don't even know the critics' names and I only know the two forementioned because they've been there ever since I was very young.²⁸³ I've always been astounded actually that Hobson kept his job. He followed Agate and has always been considered a poor joke.²⁸⁴ A good notice from Hobson was almost certainly the kiss of death unless you were already established. He is a tiny near-dwarf horribly disfigured by some cruel crippling thing or perhaps he was born that way. He walks with the aid of two sticks and seemed when I met him some years ago on a brains trust to be well under five feet. I was immensely nasty to him that night I remember. It was at Wyndham's Theatre. He had said in a recent article that though I was a great actor I was too short. Nobody else had thought I was too short either before or since and I am in fact the perfect size for an actor. At 5'10" I can be tall or shortish depending on what is wanted. Nevertheless I was still annoyed. When I met him, I said 'You are a bright bugger to describe someone as "lacking inches" aren't you. I must tell Mr Andrews about your breath-taking proportions when next I see him.' The very Sunday previous to this meeting he had described Harry Andrews as having the biggest chin in London with the possible exception of Mr Jack Hulbert.²⁸⁵ And I knew Harry was very hurt, particularly so as Harry is a homosexual and like most of that company inordinately vain. He was, of course, still desperately trying – Hobson I mean – to match the much-quoted Agate's acid wit. Agate had described Neil Porter's nose as 'effectively bridging the gap between Roman and Modern times' in a performance of Julius Caesar.²⁸⁶ And of another actor who was very fat and playing the Merchant of Venice: 'Mr So-and-so could very well afford to lose a pound of flesh.' And so on. Mr Hobson should have stayed in his former job which was, so I believe, soccer correspondent. Ken Tynan on the other hand was so good that Paul Scofield and I practically committed them to memory. He was at his very best when he began on the Evening Standard. Miss Anna Neagle took out her voice and shook it at the audience like a tiny fist.²⁸⁷

There is nothing in Miss Audley's performance that fasting won't cure.²⁸⁸ Except for flashes he never was that funny again and sadly ever as penetrating again. He is still though an exceptional writer and very disappointing at the same time. He should never have allowed himself to be taken up with and by The National Theatre. He is now known as Ken (Oh! Calcutta!) Tynan.²⁸⁹ A sad obituary.

I read David Niven's autobiography yesterday in one sitting.²⁹⁰ It is very funny though not very well written and is, like all actors' biographies, very anecdotal and full of 'and then Mike Todd called me and said "Get your ass over here"' etc.²⁹¹ He describes one scene on Bogart's yacht which is not what happened at all as I was there. He describes Sinatra singing all through the night on a motor yacht with a lot of other yachts around 'awe-struck' he says.²⁹² Frankie did sing all through the night it's true and a lot of people sat around in boats and got drunk it's true but Bogie and I went out lobster-potting with Dumbum [...] while Frankie was singing kept on making cracks about Betty [Bacall] sitting on Sinatra's feet etc. and Frankie got really pissed off with Bogie and David Niv who describes himself as bewitched all through the night was trying to set fire to the Santana at one point, because nobody could stop Francis from going on and on and on.²⁹³ I was drinking 'boiler-makers' with Bogie Rye Whiskey with canned beer chasers so the night is pretty vague but I seem to remember a girl having a fight with her husband or boy friend in a rowing dinghy and being thrown in the water by her irate mate. I don't know why but I would guess that she wanted to stay and listen to Frankie and he wanted to go. And Bogie and Frankie nearly came to blows next day about the singing the night before and I drove Betty home because she was so angry with Bogie's cracks about Frankie's singing. At that time Frankie was out of work and was peculiarly vulnerable and Bogie was unnecessarily cruel. But any way it is not at all like Niv's description. He's very sweet about E and indeed about practically everybody.

Alexandre has just arrived with a message from Marie Hélène Rothschild inviting us

Tuesday 9th, Rome (continued from yesterday) to a party at Ferrières on December 2nd and to stay the night before, which is a Wednesday, and to stay on over the following weekend. Now with the news about Yugoslavia, we are able to go. I had made it a condition of the party that we stayed at Ferrières the night before and after. Two reasons: I love Ferrières. And I don't have to worry about E being on time.

The first is the real reason. The vastness of the chateau and, at the same time, its cosiness gives me immense satisfaction. The grounds, seemingly endless, laked and forested and bridle-pathed are a huge world of their own and I walk around and about it for miles. Also I like the Rothschilds very much. I am not much given to 'Society' but Marie Helene and Guy will always command my respect and loyalty as they were so nice to us when nobody else was. During the time of the Scandale they went out of their way to be warmly polite to us when we were front-page and vulgar sensationalism every other day and every paper. Much lesser people cut us dead, even, if you please, people from our own profession. An idiot like Audrey Hepburn, for instance, a supposedly long time friend of E's was unobtainable on the phone and refused to acknowledge flowers that were sent her for her birthday. David Niven was toffee-nosed too, though he has apologized since. Grace wouldn't have been seen dead in our company though I'm sure now that Rainier didn't give a bugger. We didn't give a bugger either and were perfectly content to be left alone and therefore the nice attitude of Guy and M-H was of no real importance personally to our happiness, but it was a splendid smack in the eye for the black crows crowing at our 'disgrace'.

I gather that the party is in honour of the centenary of Proust's birth. Christ, he was dead in 1922 at 51 years of age and here I am only 5 years away from his death age without a book to my name. I have never liked his 7 volumes of A la Recherche but nevertheless recognize the enormity of the attempt.²⁹⁴ Perhaps I will understand him and enjoy him better than I did when first I read him. I must have been in my teens. I will have another go when we get back to Gstaad.

The ladies are asked to dress in the style of the period with their hair in the period adorned only with 'flowers, feathers or diamonds'. The men are asked to wear tails! Marie Helene nearly got a 'go and take a running jump into Ferrières Lake' message in reply to the last request but E persuaded me otherwise. I am actually looking forward to it.

Yesterday was a blood and sweat day. Me being wheeled, dying from a terrible wound in my head, down a hospital corridor and in to the emergency operating theatre. A thoroughly messy day with false blood drying tackily in my hair and on my face and Cortese crying at my dying even in rehearsals. How I shrink from people who really 'act' like that. They are always so bad too. But they think they are being great instead of bloody idiots, self-indulgent idiots. Creepily embarrassing. E came in the afternoon to cheer me up. We worked at what was the Jewish hospital on the Isola Tiberina, a diabolical place to get to as the bridges Fabricio and Cestio are one permanent traffic jam. No wonder they've abandoned it as a hospital – an emergency patient would be killed by the traffic. Ponte Fabricio was built [in] 62BC with modern traffic not being its main concern. The Ponte Cestio was built in AD192 and rebuilt last in 1890 so that too was made for horse and cart and pedestrians. We work there again today.

Brook told us on Sunday that Emlyn [Williams] wanted to sell his cottage at South Moreton and I immediately said we'd buy it. They want £16,000. It's a bit steep but is worth every penny and will be worth more in the years to come. Liza can have it when she's older. It is perfect for us for a weekend cottage. It is not far from a railway station and there is a good pub within walking distance and shops in the main street only a couple of hundred yards away and unlike Brook's cottage it is off the main street so that dogs and small children are fairly safe. A railway line runs between London and the West Country and Wales about a mile away and I've always loved the sound of trains at night. I prefer it to Sussex and Paul Scofield's part of the country while Kent, though lovely is a monster to get to. It is pretty convenient too for Shepperton and not outrageous for Elstree. All in all, I can't wait to work in England again. As long as it's summer time. I wrote to Emlyn this morning and Brook will take the letter back with him. I've told Emlyn that he can use the cottage whenever he likes for as long as he likes. We shall be there so seldom anyway. Did not note that on Sunday E and I had a martini each and two glasses of wine while yesterday E had a jack daniels. [...]

Wednesday 10th, Rome I am 46 years old today. I am sometimes surprised that I got so far. I always had the feeling that I would die in my thirties and in my twenties was firmly convinced that I would die at the age of 33. This belief was induced in me by an Irish (Welsh-Irish) idiot many years ago in the ML Club in London on a wet Sunday afternoon, late afternoon, when we were having a break from poetry reading. Dylan was there and Constant Lambert, Louis MacNeice and Esmé Percy – by God all of them are dead – and we were drinking well with no particular thought for the fact that we were broadcasting 'live' in an hour's time some intricate verse – at least Esmé and I were.²⁹⁵ No we weren't, we were doing Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey.²⁹⁶ The ML Club was and is a most unattractive, badly run, filthy hole in a wall just off Upper Regent Street. I have never found out if I was a member though I must surely be one now as I 'loaned' them £500 last winter via John Dearth.²⁹⁷ Its only use was as a place to drink when the pubs were closed. One never dreamt of going there if the 'George' was open a hundred yards away.²⁹⁸ Anyway this particular afternoon we had the usual 'break 'til 6.30, run through until 7.30, the red light comes on at 8' injunction and Esmé and I repaired to the ML. It was my idea of total bliss. A Sunday in London at the BBC on the Third Programme – surely the best radio channel in the world – playing Shelley in Peacock's marvellous piece, surrounded by a melodrama of brilliant English actors – Esmé himself, Count Robert Farquarson of The Holy Roman Empire who was reputed to be a Satanist, Ernest Thesiger, Andrew Cruikshank, Robert Speaight, Michael Hordern and sometimes Dylan and James Crock of Gold Stephens and always the BBC stock company one of whom was, if such a thing is possible on radio, a truly great actor – James McKechnie.²⁹⁹ So there you are in my drab paradise of magnificent language for the speaking of which you were actually paid money, on a Sunday in Studio 8 of the BBC Portland Place, the Sunday papers strewn hither and thither and much chat between the boys who matched story after story and, because the competition is so intense, no one person was able to hold the floor for too long even if Dylan was there for Dylan – the most compelling talker I've ever met – was oddly constricted by these precise cold English actors with their impeccable accents. Lunch was at someone's club – I would sometimes go with Esmé to the Savile – but more often it was in the BBC canteen a hellish place appositely placed in the sub-basement of the huge building.³⁰⁰ It was a serve-yourself cafe and a pretty sight it was to see the august Count Farquarson, cloaked like a bandit, and all the other great presences queueing up for the appalling BBC fare. The drinking men however lunched out of a bottle at the George or – not quite so popular as it was that bit further away – The Stag or The Roebuck or some such name. But it was the work itself that was the wonder. The audience was a minor consideration as it was so small. Apart from the fact that the channel for the Third Programme was unfindable in most of Great Britain this brainchild of the BBC would play plays in the original Greek and was indeed deliberately steered away from the mass audience. If they accidentally hit on a smash success it was almost always replayed on the Home Service or Light Programmes. The best work I have ever been associated with was with that programme. I did endless poetry readings there and every kind of adaptations from great works, particularly the lesser known stuff. Your Hamlets and Henry Vs were common fare and one did those on the vulgar airwaves but 'Tis Pity She's a Whore and Love Peacock and Bussy D'Ambois and Chaucer and Jones' In Parenthesis and Anathemata and Joyce's Finnegan's Wake and Ulysses etc. were all done on 'our' programme.³⁰¹

Anyway this Cardiff Welshman – a feature of the sleazy drinking houses in those days and vividly remembered though I can't remember his name – a writer

who never published and an actor who never acted elected to tell us from our hands when we were going to die. My father was up for a week from Wales and I'd taken him to the BBC to have a look at it and was going to send him back to Hampstead after the afternoon drinking session was told he was going to die when he was 81, Dylan when he was 39, Lambert when he was 55 and me when I was 33. I was very impressed – so much so that I have remembered it to this day. It was made more frightening as Dylan did die when I was 29 at the age of 39 and Dic my father died when I was about the same age at 81. My brothers say that my father was 83 but there has always been some confusion re the old man's age and in my case he was, the prophet, only a couple of years out.³⁰² Lambert died but I don't know at what age and I can't remember whether he foretold Esmé's death date, but Esmé also died. My behaviour to anyone who didn't know during my 33rd year to heaven was high comedy. I went by car and train and boat whenever I had to travel. I turned down a film in Durango with Burt Lancaster and Audrey Hepburn and directed by Huston because of the unavoidable flying.³⁰³ Were it not for the fact that I was ashamed to tell anyone I would not have worked that year at all and celebrated my 34th birthday with a stupendous booze-up. I was already very rich and kept on saying to myself as the offers came up 'why should I risk my life for a mere $150,000 when I have a million in the bank, why don't I settle here in Céligny and never leave the grounds of the house even until the year is up. I can learn Hebrew or something. The thing is not to give the gods of retribution the slightest chance.' The anomaly is that I am not even mildly superstitious ordinarily and am certainly not a fatalist. I must find out, as a matter of mild interest at what age Lambert died. I wonder too if in death Lambert is still considered to be the genius he was thought to be when he was alive.

I have the day off today and tomorrow I think. I have received beautiful presents. E has given me two cigarette lighters – an exquisite one, very light and thin, of gold and polished walnut and a sturdier one for everyday use of heavy gold made for her especially by Braun of Germany – the best lighters in the world unfortunately. How the British have lost out to everybody not only in quantity but quality. Claudye and Gianni had a large brief-case made for me out of antique leather with many neat and practical compartments. My favourite kind of things.

E is still being a good drinker. Yesterday she had only a glass of wine at lunchtime and a Jack Daniels at night. She continues to look like several dreams of avarice and is happy.

Two books arrived from Jane Swanson and her daughter Sarah and Bob gave me a sweater from Battistoni's.³⁰⁴ Several telegrams including one from Grace and Rainier and we realized that we haven't sent one to her and her birthday is about now too.³⁰⁵

I did an interview for L'Express yesterday for their cover story. My interviewer was an earnest young man with spectacles who spoke no English and talked a mile a minute and I virtually had to ask him to repeat every single question he asked me. This went on for an hour until I was practically screaming. In desperation I asked them to play some of the recording back for him to realize how impossible he was. He then confessed that he had never been so nervous in his life as he heard that I was an extremely dangerous person! [...]

Thursday 11th, Rome The discerning scanner will realize immediately that the title heading is not in red letters. My birthday was a semi-drunken one for both of us. The rot set in when I made a large martini each about 1 o'clock. Then I went down below to chat it up with a reporter from the Daily Mirror called Donald Zec.³⁰⁶ Elizabeth was unbelievably late even for her and Mr Zec is very hard going so, fatally as it turned out, I had a 2nd Martini. Off we went to Valentino's for lunch. The latter is apparently a very swank haute couturier and is making E's frock for the Rothschild Ball.³⁰⁷ I had invited myself together with Zec who was completely out of his depth and betrayed his discomfort by being a silly kind of smart-aleck while I, not unpleasantly, pretended with the assistance of several glasses of wine to anti-semitism, negro, anglo-saxon, American and anything else I could think of. In deference to my host I excluded the Italians and, for Claudye, Corsicans. The reaction set in later when I got back home refusing to fit for my new suits and slumping off to bed where I slept for a few hours. I was suitably grumpy and snarled at E a lot – one more indication that life is sweeter off the sauce. Today therefore I feel somewhat fragile while E, who decided that if you cannot fight 'em you might as well join 'em, has a monumental hangover. We both agree that heavy drinking doesn't suit us anymore at all.

Presents: Apart from the above-mentioned I was given a large soft leather travelling bag by Joe Losey and Patricia and a lot of Cashmere sweaters from Ron and Bob and Ray Stark who is in town trying to persuade E to do a film for him but the present of presents is the Complete Oxford Dictionary in micro-print, the 17 (I think) volumes being reduced to two with a magnifying glass on a little wooden stand. You have to close one eye. To a bibliomaniac it is a thrilling present. Not to be all stingy about it E gave me three sets, one for Gstaad, one for the yacht and one for Vallarta.

An effusive letter came from Princess Maggie yesterday. About the £100,000. Of course. Must write back.

We are all going to see XYZ at the Columbia private theatre tonight. We are trying to get a few people together to see it who have never seen it before, in the hope of finding out where the laughs come, but the place only holds 30 people.

Friday 12th, Grand Hotel Another non-red headline as E had a few beers and a bloody mary (at my insistence) and two Jack Daniels while I had a bloody mary. (E, I remember said she had only 1½ beers). This has been one of those mornings where through haste everything goes haywire. I didn't take a shower as not having been to bed until 3 I awoke by courtesy of E at 9 to be told immediately by Bob that I was wanted toute de suite. On opening the diary I dropped it and all the loose leaves fell out and had to be painstakingly put back in again. I tried to extract my vitamin pills from the box while holding a cigarette which dropped and burned my fingers while all the pills fell out on the bathroom floor. I managed to cut myself shaving – mildly it's true – but a considerable feat with an electric razor. I always order tea for two in the hope that E might join me. This morning I ordered only one – because I was in a hurry I guess – whereupon E arrived from the bedroom and asked for her tea. Not only had I not ordered my usual two teas but this morning she had asked for one. I hadn't heard her. The sun was brilliant when I first got out but is gone in again and today we must I think have sun. If Joe's and my luck hold we shall finish that shot today. If not it means working tomorrow and possibly even on Monday unless they can devise a shot without the sun's assistance. It is an awkward shot using a technique that I had never heard of. I talk of Stalin and pause to think and the technicians throw an image of Stalin onto space, suspended over my shoulder. I hope it's not too tricky. Those are – there are a few such shots – the 'almost subliminal' shots described in the script and which I made so much fun of to Joe. So to work. Will write about the film which is, to me and will be I think to many people, absolutely shattering. I thought about it for several hours after the thing was over.

Evening. 308

Well, we had the luck and I finished the film with two 'almost subliminal' shots in glorious technicolour and sunshine. Then the weather turned round and now it is grey-black and threatening again. There is a company party tonight down at Tor Vaianica but at the last moment we have decided not to go as (a) company parties are invariably as flat as pancakes especially as the company has to work some more tomorrow and the main reason is (b) it is 40 minutes in normal end-of-business-day traffic and likely to be much more on a Friday. Hence nous resterons chez nous tranquillement avec des livres, des journaux et cette machine à écrire.³⁰⁹

The film I'm talking about above is of course XYZ which on seeing for the first time with everything finished – matching, music, titles (which I adored) and end titles etc. – I found more rewarding than ever. I am not much of a judge as I see so few films but I shall be very surprised if other people don't think E's performance to be one of the best ever given by anybody at any time. She runs the entire gamut from high comedy to knockabout prat-falls to pathos and near tragedy with dazzling brilliance. The film itself too is very and intriguingly beautiful I think and at one or two moments I had most unusual (for me) lumps in my throat. Especially when E was lonely and frightened. The remarkable thing too is that E emerges very sympathetically despite her stop-at-nothing ruthlessness to keep her man at any price. The others are good too but E completely out-dazzles them. Now watch for the reaction and I just hope we're not disappointed. I have never got Staircase and Anger out of my system. E's film Gingerbread Lady is postponed for a time – don't know how long – and Donen has been signed and E said that I shouldn't object too much as Donen's only good work has been with musicals. All this came from Swifty Lazar par telephone talk tonight.³¹⁰ I said if they could let me know in a week or so and if the music and script were ok I would try and fit it in next year. And so I will. It is a shame to do it with Donen who so thoroughly buggered up Staircase, no pun. And so to books.

Saturday 13th³¹¹ [...] Awoke at 8 ordered tea and finished a long letter to Liza who has cleverly chosen Tito as her historical character for this term. She asked me for 'any information' on him so I tapped out three pages or so of a rough outline. Also told her that her penmanship was appalling and would alienate any examiner regardless of the excellence of her writing otherwise. A very slapdash young woman.

[...] Every day here seems to be a day of demonstrations. Yesterday it was something to do with the Coca-Cola factories which, presumably in despair with the endless strikes, have closed down entirely. This morning there was a tremendous hullabaloo about 'no repression in schools' which I don't understand and, since the local papers never or hardly ever mention the demonstrations (so many of them I suppose) I don't know what the protest marches are about. Italian friends confess to being equally baffled though one can hardly expect couturiers like Valentino and Tiziani to be much interested in social disputes. They only deal with the very rich. I must ask Carlo Cotti tonight when he comes.³¹² He is the second assistant on the film and appears to be a cut above the average in intelligence. He wants to talk to me re Benito Mussolini I think for whom, I'm told, he has a great and relatively unfashionable admiration. He is anxious for me to play the last days of Mussolini in a film. Never know, it might be interesting and with E possibly playing his mistress Clara Petacci it would certainly set all Italy by the ears.³¹³ If we shot it cheaply and if it was well done it might be a knock-out. Why not one asks oneself? Why not? This Carlo is reputedly a very rich young man. He is certainly very richly dressed for a 2nd Assistant. [...]

Sunday 14th A black day again. E and I had martinis before lunch though E only drank half of hers and we shared a bottle of Gewarstraminer at lunch [...] with which [...] we washed down caviar blinis in my case, and some sort of delicious veal with mushrooms in Elizabeth's.³¹⁴ After that I drank no more for the rest of the day while E had a Jack Daniels and some wine at Joe Losey's where we went for dinner. E is in rare form acting the goat and mucking about and is generally very droll. [...]

Carlo Cotti came to see me yesterday to talk of Mussolini and he obviously does know his subject and he is a neo-fascist. He made the point that since Mussolini left us the Italians have not been governed at all and that Italy really does need a strong central character, another Mussolini, another benevolent dictator for they, the Italians, understand nothing else. He said that the cupidity and villainy of his race demanded a police state and that the people demanded by their very nature an organization which instilled fear. He wouldn't mind, he said, if there was a strongly repressive Communist Government if only they promised ruthlessness to tax evaders, brought back the death penalty and more importantly corporal punishment – the lash, the cat, the birch. All this from a young man of 32 with a sweet round face and curly hair and eyes of liquid brown and a charming self-deprecating grin. The communists however had behaved so stupidly and were so utterly alien to the Italian temperament and, as a consequence, so weak, that he was constrained to advocate more drastic means. He loved his people but they were en masse a silly mob of disorganized undisciplined schoolchildren and like schoolchildren must be threatened by dire punishment.

I sat back aghast. So much so that it took me 10 minutes to marshal my liberal arguments against his. Better, I said, to have the economy collapse and millions out of work and near starvation than the knout and the boot in the face and the dreadful raid on your house in the small hours and imprisonment without trial and back to the torture chambers and the kneeling position and the bullet through the brain in secret executions. He was unmoved.

Deep in my heart of course I know he has a ruthless point but, like Communism, it is inapplicable to the Italians. I pointed out to him something that he had conveniently forgotten which is that Mussolini's Italy was as corrupt as the present Italy and that like this country today the Italy of the late thirties was also on the edge of bankruptcy.

Carlo later showed us a mink overcoat he'd made for himself and was not sure how his mother would take it and whether she would allow him to wear it. This information, together with his confession of wry idolatry for Franco Zeffirelli and his age and his bachelor status led us to suspect that he is either a Mama's boy or a homosexual. Oddly and perversely enough, with every pun intended, this belief was further strengthened by his political statements. Torture and manacling and gagged mouths being quite unfairly associated in my mind with sexual inversion.

We went to Joe Losey's last night for dinner. They live quite near the Tiber in a dark narrow street, three floors up which we laboriously climbed only to discover that there was a spanking new lift. It was a typical Roman apartment with very large rooms and glazed terra-cotta tiles, two feet square, on the floor, sparsely furnished and lofty ceilinged and as chilly as a hospital corridor. We imagined it being very cold in winter, for me uncomfortably cold and especially as Joe said the fireplace was ornamental only. They had a charming bearded long-haired male cook who went, as is the wont of all servants everywhere, into conniptions at sight of Elizabeth. He was a very good cook though and why can't we ever find a cook like that instead of either lousy ones like the chap on the yacht or fellers who can only stay for 3 months and then have to go to the army or back to college or something equally frustrating. Mind you, I would rather not have a cook at all as one of us is always dickering with a diet and cooks become very put out if their creations are not eaten. Another thing with cooks is that they find it impossible to believe that one only wants one course. Their only virtue is when one has a large family gathering or a lot of people coming to eat. Eating with the Loseys alone or simply going to their home for a drink is always, to me, sort of Chekhovian. The conversation seems to have undertones and strange experiences between the lines, unspoken but guessed at. Joe is a bad conversationalist, a slow speech pattern with many pauses while he searches his vocabulary for the bon mot and a great deal of er-er-ers while Trapicia (E's spoonerism for Patricia years ago and which has stuck) talks in a mellifluous monotone the whole time with that kind of delivery that puts me – if I'm in a certain mood – into a species of trance where one listens, doesn't want the speaker to stop and where one doesn't want to interrupt in case the trance is broken. One gets it sometimes from a barber while one is getting a short-back-and-sides and the barber babbles cosily on and on. Minute and pleasant pulses tick softly in the temples as if there's pressure, very slight and euphoric pressure from soft strong fingers. I am very susceptible to this kind of mesmerism this kind of removal from the world. [...]

Joe has great charm despite his lack of humour especially about himself, a lack which was perfectly exemplified last night when he told us of a very savage telegram which he's sent off to a man called Bernard Delfont who 'produced' The Go-Between and who had put on the bill-boards his name in GIGANTIC LETTERS while Joe's name was tiny and Harold Pinter's wasn't on at all.³¹⁵ The telegram was something like 'What is the use of spending one's life producing artistic creations if in the end a shit like you has control etc.' Joe, like other humourless gents like Bill Wilder and Joe Manciewicz, will not realize that the general public do emphatically not go to see a Joe Losey Picture or a Joe Mank Picture or a Billy Wilder Picture but go to see that marvellous actor so-and-so or that great actress such-and-such or that screamingly funny whatchermaycallit.³¹⁶ It is true that there is a minute percentage who go more to see the director's work, the intelligentsia and other people in the profession who go more to see the director's work, the sort of people who belong to film clubs and love movies in foreign languages, than the actor's, but they don't need to see bill-boards to know it's a Losey picture. They will have read the information in Sight and Sound.³¹⁷ But there's no persuading them otherwise and I've long given up.

Monday 15th³¹⁸ A completely lazy day yesterday. Only 4 newspapers arrived: News of the World, Express, Observer and Telegraph. We always have bad luck with the Observer and wherever we are abroad we invariably seem to get the

Scottish and Irish editions which means that the sports pages are devoted to Linfield versus Shamrock or whatever and not Arsenal v Leeds and Glasgow Academicals v Heriot F.P. instead of Harlequins v London Welsh or Blackheath. Very irritating. The Sunday Times is the most satisfying buy seeming to have more body to it than any other papers and I don't mean bulk but a way of presenting news in a chunkier form. There seem to be more solid columns and fewer snippets than others. Wilfred Wooller for instance in the Telegraph was given yesterday no more space than I have occupied writing this entry this morning.³¹⁹ That means, unless you write a sonnet, no space at all. But Parkinson and Longhurst and others have a thousand words and the political columns and literary boys a fair space too. The Express also is a cut above the other rags and for the same reason. Hoby and Blanchflower have sizeable portions though I do wish they'd get someone other than Danny Boy to occupy that very desirable space – he so bristles with mediocrity and holier-than-thou humourless pretentiousness, pretending to a long range long viewed wisdom and a tedious philosophy where he is forever comparing the game of soccer with the 'game of life'.³²⁰ Whereas Hoby is straightforward purple adjectived sensationalism. Peregrine Worsthorne has a beautiful lump in the Sunday Telegraph and is worth reading because of his almost amateur enthusiasm. A week ago he exultantly announced and explained the 'Death of the Labour Party' and that, short of a miracle, the Tories were going to be the masters for several generations. This week he threatened the Irish with Britain's hatred if they continued to tar and feather young girls who went a-courting with British soldiers. The British, he said, didn't hate easily but when they did ... Oh Boy look out! Astonishingly, he said that during the last war the British didn't hate the Germans – quote – until we heard of the atrocities of the prison camps. Indeed, Worsthorne, indeed. Then, Cyril Connolly has a lot of space in the Sunday Times and Brandon from Washington while Toynbee and A. J. P. Taylor and Muggeridge get fair cracks of the whip too.³²¹ I wish though that the 'qualities' had proper, separate books sections like the NY Times and the old Herald-Tribune. The sort of thing you can keep in volumes and not the flimsy 4 pages the British have which includes travel and good food and wines and TV and theatre and films and art and ballet. The Express always has the unbelievable Mrs Grundy yclept John Gordon who is so ineffably self-righteous that he has the funniest column of the lot.³²² He has had several 'gos' at me over the years and I find it well-nigh impossible to be angry with him. 'Must we have again and again so much space in our newspapers devoted to the unimportant doings of Mr

Richard Burton and his wife the much married Elizabeth Taylor. What are they after all but film stars who don't even have the sense of duty to pay their taxes. Who, after all, cares that Miss Taylor has a million dollar ring. I, for one and all of my friends find such ostentation boring and vulgar.' And then I'm very fond of Cross-Bencher in the Express who gnat-bites here thither and yon at front and back benchers alike with snide innuendo and arch imputation. 'Who is John Parrish who has been creating so much excitement in the drawing rooms of Conservative salons with his "I will stake my whole political future on the blazing belief that we must, if we are not to commit political suicide, go whole heartedly into Europe." Why it is none other than Lord Ass-hole who before rejecting his hereditary title to sit in the Commons said on a famous occasion "As far as I'm concerned the Wogs begin at Calais."'

We are going to have dinner tonight with Peter Sellers and an Indian Mystic who tells the future and who, Peter says, is called Gandhi.

Tuesday 16th, Rome We both fell off the waggon yesterday, me with a profound bump resulting in a pretty enjoyable but silly evening on my part. The usual drunken devil of impish perversity dominated my talk which since I didn't allow other people to talk much meant that I teetered on the edge of spoiling the night. However I wrote a letter of apology to Sellers and friends this morning together with the micro-Oxford Dictionary which E had promised to Peter last night.

Mr Gandhi was short and dark and spoke with the classic Indian-Welsh accent so outrageously impersonated by Peter in that record years ago.³²³ I find it hard to believe that Peter cannot go back into England to see his wife in hospital who is suffering apparently from a severe attack of cerebral meningitis.³²⁴ I told him that he should go ahead and do it quickly – in and out before anybody knows it – but I have a suspicion that he didn't want that advice. I hope I'm wrong but that marriage like his other two looks on the rocks. There was one startling moment which was missed unfortunately by E who was in the bedroom when, talking about the various legal suits we have all had against us he said that he and his former wife, Britt Ekland, were sued by Fox for breaking her contract which, he said, she broke at his insistence because 'I told her that I needed at least a year to educate her and teach her how to act and give her a knowledge of great world drama, before she was fit to face a major career.'³²⁵ Neither E nor I think that little Miss Ekland needed much instruction from M. Sellers.

They talked, when I allowed them to, a lot about Yoga and meditation and vegetarianism and I told Pietro that I wanted to talk more about it and we are meeting tomorrow night on the yacht and will show, if we have it – it's in customs – Under Milk Wood which we have yet to see and which has been received so well. [...] I am genuinely interested in Yoga having read 3 or 4 books on the subject – only primitive stuff about weight and physical well being and diet and stuff – and would like to know more.

Zoe Sallis came too to the little party and it seems that she and Sellers hit it off very well indeed as we've just discovered from a phone conversation with Peter as he asked if she could be invited also tomorrow night.

I had a vodka and orange and a bloody mary at lunch time and have a martini in the fridge to titch me up before dinner – it's about 7.30 – and will revert to my sober behaviour tomorrow. I really don't like drinking at yesterday's pace and I'm silly to do it.

Zoe Sallis is a very attractive girl who has been John Huston's mistress for 10 years or so and we have known her since doing the film Night of the Iguana when she was living with John and their baby – then about 6 months old and now getting on for 9 and a breathless reminder of tempus will fugit – in Vallarta.³²⁶ She now looks like a grown-up and not the child she looked then. She is about 30 I suppose and very dark and Indian looking. I think she said last night that she was Eurasian or perhaps she was only saying that to impress Sellers and 'Bert' (Seller's companion) and Ganh, Gandhi rather, who obviously are Indian lovers.³²⁷ Shades of Anna Kashfi who used to be Marlon's wife and firmly convinced him that she was Indian when it turned out – to Marlon's fury and immediate divorce – that she was Cardiff Welsh.³²⁸ I knew the minute I met her just after Marlon had married her that she was Welsh and said so to her and Marlon. She affected not to know what 'Welsh' was and asked if we were like the Irish and all that kind of rubbish. Marlon wasn't interested and only became so when he found out that he had been lied to – a heinous crime in Marlon's book. I still smile when I remember a picture of Kashfi's mother in the Daily Express or Mail with a real Celtic peasant look and wearing a 'pinny' and formidably Welsh look, sort of arms akimbo, with the caption 'Do I look Indian?' I laughed for a week. Later I teased Marlon about it until I realized that old fatty was not inclined to regard it or her in a humorous light. I haven't tried him on that affair since. I wonder how he would take it now. [...]

Wednesday 17th, Grand [...] There has been a great deal of fuss and bother around the hotel for the last couple of days because President Franz Jonas of Austria is here on a state visit which consists of tea at the Quirinale with Saragat

and tremendous traffic jams.³²⁹ The streets around the hotel are one continuous cacophony of despairing horns and policemen's whistles and remarkably often the penetrating screams of ambulances. The Romans it seems are always in a rush to the grave. Yesterday too the sound of many horses set our dogs a-barking and there indeed was a pretty sight as one would want to see – several hundred horses riding four abreast caparisoned with riders dressed by Ivor Novello and all of them placed as to colour, a mass of whites, a mass of blacks and a mass of browns.³³⁰ E and Jane Swanson were watching it with delight from our balcony when Jane realized that all the onlookers had their binoculars trained on E and not the horses. Since E was in a dressing gown she fled inside. The concourse was endless and created, of course, the mother and father of all traffic jams. It was typical, I remarked to Jane, of the Romans to have a procession during the peak of the rush hour. She said that it was probably deliberate and that Italians love a mess so that they can have an excuse for tantrums. They are all natural thespians she said. Orson [Welles] once said that the Italians were the best actors in the world but unfortunately only the worst of them became professionals.

I'd forgotten to say that Robin Stafford of the Express came to visit us at the same time as Sellers.³³¹ He was the only journalist allowed at our wedding, not because he was a particular friend but because he was so quietly and charmingly persistent. It wasn't until we'd chatted for a long time that I thought to ask him if he were on a job or purely social visit. He is normally a diplomatic correspondent, political, and if there's a war, a war correspondent. It was clear that the job he's proudest of was the Six Day War. He told me many funny stories about it. The Israelis are a frighteningly pragmatic lot.

Thursday 7th, Yacht³³² [...] Sellers and 'Bert' whose other name is Mortimer and Zoe came on board as expected and dined and chatted a lot about Yoga.³³³ Peter is surprisingly hard going to me with a strange self deprecation when telling a story – not necessarily about himself – in which he says things like, 'My boat is small, you know, and so I don't bother to have an extension for the telephone into the like this you know the thing where we're sitting now you know the er er salon because my boat well the er bridge is so er er thing you know and when Sam Spiegel came on the yacht he said can you get NY and thing and so on and how quick are you getting through to thing and thing ...' and so on. Oddly irritating and smacking of false modesty as if to say I could of course speak with classic syntax and superb vocabulary but you know I could so I take that as read. It is now though a manner which he probably cannot get out of and therefore perfectly natural. I must deep down be a two-faced prude as I've quite gone off Zoe Sallis since she seems to be a lady of fairly easy virtue and is quite obviously having a er thing er you er know with er thing you know. Peter and Bert made a lot of sense about Yoga and we must try and find out more about it from a professional teacher when we get the chance – probably next year in Vallarta. He demonstrated a slow head-stand for us which seems absolutely beyond us both at this stage and possibly at any stage. Must try though.

Under Milk Wood came through as something mysteriously else called Daybreak at Sundown or something equally funny and we consequently saw no film. [...]

Saturday 20th, Rome [...] This is our last few hours here in Rome. We leave at midday for Paris and from the airport straight to the clinic where the good doctor will remove a cyst from E's nose and a mole from my cheek. [...] After that to the Ritz at which we have never stayed as far as we can remember.³³⁴ Since we have the original diamond as big as the Ritz it will be interesting to see if we can get inside.³³⁵ We shall stay in Paris until Tuesday and then do a run for Gstaad which I'm longing to see.

A late birthday present arrived from Liza. Two books – one called Roman Mythology and one called the Age of Revolution. The first hard cover and expensive and the second a paperback. I was very moved and went around showing it to everyone. I was absurdly pleased that the return address was – in her own hand – Todd-Burton. The second has a note inside from Liza saying: See page 237. It was an index to Trotsky. I love that child surpassingly.

[...] I have put the title of this page in black since E is so anticipatorily anxious about her operation that I decided she should have the occasional drink until the ordeal is over. And yesterday I had a bloody mary and the day before a martini and a couple of glasses of wine.

Am reading for the first time for twenty years or more A la recherche du temps perdu. In English. I shall find a paperback French version in Paris and read them side by side. Scott Moncrieff together with the lesser known Gerard Hopkins are the best French translators I've come across.³³⁶ I am enjoying the Proust far more than I remember from the last time – and I think it must have been at Oxford when I ploughed through him before. And 'ploughed through' is the operative word. It was deliberate labour as part of my education and all I can remember is that the only person I knew who had the complete set was Emlyn Williams who said I had to read them in his house as he was not letting them out of his sight. Under those circumstances it is not surprising perhaps that I thought the work pedestrian. They are anything but that as I read them now.

Bob has just brought me a telegram from Tony Richardson asking me to play with Vanessa Redgrave in Antony and Cleopatra 'early next year'. I said no. Politely. That man must have the thickest skin in and out of Christendom. This is his 2nd offer to me this year – the other being to do the film of I, Claudius.³³⁷ After our bitter debacle about Nabokov's Laughter in the Dark one would think that he would be scared witless to approach me to play Scrabble.³³⁸ But not our Tony. It's almost admirable. The fact that I was right about Laughter and he was shown to be catastrophically wrong should have made him even more shy in approaching me for anything else ever again as my attitude to him in any future co-labour would be savagely contemptuous. But ever since he first emerged from the OUDS he has shown total and ruthless selfishness in everything he has ever done. I know of no one who confesses either admiration or affection for him. Everyone is convinced that his good films have been accidents and that his bad ones are a just reflection of his abysmal talent. The cutter saved Tom Jones, they say while Ossie Morris and the continuity girl directed Anger.³³⁹ He is slightly better than that. Totally unworthy of anyone's serious consideration, however, I would say. Certainly mine. [...]

Sunday 21st, Ritz Hotel, Paris³⁴⁰ [...] E looks as if she's had a long gruelling 15 rounds with Clay while I simply have a bandage on my face which makes me look as if I have a huge wound when in actual fact – apart from the stitch there is nothing except a little hole to see. [...] We dined off 'Haddock poche a l'Anglaise et des pommes nature' and delicious it was.

Monday 22nd³⁴¹ [...] For the third time in my life I began to learn Spanish yesterday. Third time lucky I hope. It means wiping Italian out of my mind. No easy task. I am doing a grammar which is differently pronounced from Mexican but I can transfer the noises as I go along. I shall have every opportunity to use it at the new place in Bucerias and this time I shall do sternly what I do with the other tongues – which is to read a newspaper a day. Painful at first it soon becomes fluent.

There has been increasing pressure on me of late to play the last days of Mussolini and there are three different firms vying with each other. One neo-fascisti lot are after me and another lot Shaftel are running after me and Marlon while a third are trying for George Scott.³⁴² Soldati is writing one for me, he says, with Elizabeth for Clara Petacci.³⁴³ Presumably nothing will come out of my participation. Tito, Trotsky and Mussolini would be a bit much in one year I guess. It would certainly be foolish to have three different Mussolinis come out together. The comparisons would give those covetous critics a field day.

I am going through one of my non-fiction-reading moods again and apart from the always with me Fleurs du Mal I have nothing but fiction to read. Today, if E thinks my face good enough I shall dive across to W. H. Smith's and do one of my raids. There may be something downstairs in the foyer of this hotel. This is the first time I've ever stayed here so I know little about it. E too. So far I find it better than the Plaza Athénée and the Lancaster. The service is swift and the food, so far, of a good standard. I shall order me another cuppa immediately.

A letter was given us when we arrived from Hebe Dorsey who is an Arab French lady we have known for some time and who writes fashion columns for the Herald Trib here and 'fashionable' articles for many magazines about Princess Grace and Jackie Onassis and E and a few others. The letter complains of non-payments from a firm called Forum which is Gianni Bozzacchi's. She complains of non payments. She appeals to us as mutual friends to sort it out. Now, dear lady, what can I do?

[...] I have decided that Sunday Papers must arrive fairly early in the morning to be properly accorded the title – Sunday Papers. When they arrive, as they did yesterday, in the afternoon, they lose their status and are simply newspapers. One should read nothing but the Sundays on Sunday. The day is lost if one has started reading all manner of other things before they've arrived. The only Sundayish thing about yesterday's Sunday was that I turned on the hotel, in-built radio and found the BBC and a terrible voice saying: 'It is no use saying to one's conscience "go away you silly person, I have no wish to listen to you" because you are saying in effect "go away God, you are too awkward a customer and make too many demands on me."' For God's sake, said E, turn that bloody thing off. And so I did. It's hard to believe that such drivel is still being pumped out by the mile all over the country. The message is banal enough but the language it's clothed in is unspeakably arch, knowing and coy and stupendously vulgar. [...]

Tuesday 23rd³⁴⁴ [...] Kurt (Stormtrooper) Frings came in about 6 and we discussed the script which I'd read in the afternoon. It's rubbish but it's something I've never done which is a 'horror film' and which the kids have been anxious for one or the other of us to do for many years. I play Bluebeard, a German or mittel-European Count or Marchese or something complete with Ruritanian or perhaps Transylvanian would be better castle. Booted and spurred and tails-clothed and impotent and kill eight wives – all of great beauty – the moment they expect me to go bed with them. There is a great deal of horror though everywhere. Can't make up my mind whether I should do it or not. Any road, if they wish to do it in January as they say they do, I must decline. Its other attraction is that they shoot in Hungary, to which country I've never been, and I could do with a little lightness after Tit and Trot. Am supposed to have lunch at Fouquet's with the director – one called Dmytryk who – I've only just discovered this morning – I've been confusing for years with a man called Siodmak.³⁴⁵ Both have their similarities in that they started off well and then tapered off into the usual mediocrity.

I ambled through my Spanish lessons both in the morning and late at night – both of those times being the best possible time for me to learn things as I discovered in my examination-riddled childhood and youth. I should be able to read newspapers in about a month though probably the best thing to do would be to get hold of one of those Penguin dual language books which save you a hell of a lot of dictionary work. I love the latter so much that they are dangerous for me to use if I am really 'working' as I cannot resist scanning the page for another interesting word which may be lying around. This kills the pace. I shall go to Smith's after lunch perhaps and search me around. While I'm at it I might as well get a stock of holiday reading for Gstaad. [...]

Dirty Brian Hutton also popped in with Oscar Mayer bacon from the States. [...] He has brought a script for E by a man called Gibson – a better than average playwright who has written a couple of successful pieces or more the only one of which I can remember being Two for the Seesaw – called A Cry of Players.³⁴⁶ I'm sure it was first written as a play and was sent to me 15 years ago perhaps with a view to my playing William Shakespeare and is indeed a play about Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway. Will and Anne. It has obviously been rewritten with modern 'permissiveness' in mind for E tells me that some of the dialogue is somewhat blue. I shall read this morn after my Spanish. Now, he sobbed, I am too old.

Frings wants to represent E again and me too now. We said he can go ahead with Bluebeard and Under the Volcano – the latter of particular import if there is a reasonable script.³⁴⁷ The latter would be a good velocipede for us both. If well adapted, acted and directed, it could be a film of major interest – even perhaps as good as Lowry's novel which is a massive piece of work and, as I discovered when reading it again this year, ages magnificently. It needs a very fine director.

[...]

Thursday 25th A pleasant enough day. I read E's script by W. W. Gibson.³⁴⁸ It is the one I was sent 15 years ago and it is still not worth E's attention as it wasn't mine then. We went to lunch at the grill here in the hotel called L'Espadon which is a cosy little restaurant and the food is very good. We had a superb Coquille St Jaques to start which almost spoiled the equally splendid steak au poivre which followed. We had forgotten the joys of people-watching since we've been out so seldom. It is not easy to be a personality-watcher actually if you yourselves are so intently watched but there are some good things to be seen before you go to Paradise by way of Kensal Green.³⁴⁹ There was a nervous high-pitched English, frightfully English lady of a certain age who talked out of nerves at the top of her voice. Unfortunately we were, I mean she was alone so we didn't hear as much as we should. She was placed in the middle of the room, having come in after us. After a time the waiter suggested that she should change her table to one against the window. She greeted this suggestion with a high pitched almost breathless enthusiasm – 'What a good idea, most frightfully thoughtful of you, my nerves were beginning to shriek, positively shriek, there in the midst of everybody and I did send a telex from London reserving my table. It's awfully good of you and frightfully intelligent. I shall enjoy myself so much more here. You are so terribly kind and I did send a telex all the way from London.' Why had she sent a telex to reserve a table in a not very popular and therefore hardly likely to be full restaurant. Why indeed had she flown from London to have lunch alone in L'Espadon, The Swordfish, in the Ritz Hotel Paris. She was about my age, brunette, with an aquiline nose that might have been Jewish but I don't think she was a Hebrew, and she used a lorgnette to study the menu. She was expensively but quietly dressed and was unquestionably a lady. E guessed she was a writer, and I agree that she looked very like all those unattractive lady-writers whose photos one sees on the backs of Penguins. Not unattractive exactly but one guesses at the unused flesh, the untidy bathing, the Times Crossword, and shrill conversations on the telephone and literary luncheons and all angularly sharp and feminist. Ugh somehow. There was another woman, American we guessed, with a ferocious face-lift, hard and predatory, vulpine and totally ignoring her husband staring, staring staring at E with malevolence, meanness, and murderous, envious hatred. E said that the loathing was so intense that it was tangible. She would have felt it, E went on, even were her back turned. Then there was a comic turn which E couldn't really see. A party of six came in dominated by a tall, dew-lapped loud-mouthed 60 year old central European speaking perfect and idiomatic English and French with a barely noticeable accent who said something like 'I guess we'll have one woman there and a guy there and another woman there and you Phil go there and that should about do it.' One of the women, a girl actually, writhed and suiggled and manoeuvred herself desperately towards a chair where she would be breathtakingly close to a profile shot of my fabled E. But there was another woman, ruthlessly middle-aged, very American, who stolidly held her ground. So at the next table were these two women, one in the awful position of being able to lust her eyes on E's profile but in doing so would look me straight in the eyes, while the other tried to turn into rubber to get fugitive glimpses at the back of E's head. Each time they managed either, they were faced with a knowing half-smile from me. At about this time, the Basilisk with the ignored and indifferent husband, she of the tight skull and the vicious envy left her husband calculating the pourboire and walked very deliberately and with no attempt at dissembling, straight across the room and turned the full glare of her gorgon gaze on Elizabeth. She left expressionlessly, her impassivity only matched by Elizabeth's.

[...] I am on my fifth Spanish lesson as well as listening to discs from the Assimil method.

Friday 26th, Ritz It was Thanksgiving Day yesterday and, foreign as I am, I eat turkey and giblet gravy and sweet corn and yams but not cranberry sauce. Delicious. Much debate as to whether the Americas had any original food. They argued that turkey, potatoes corn and cranberries were indigenous to the States and unknown in Europe. I agree with potato and corn but disagreed with turkey and cranberries. Must look it up at home. I seem to remember that 'cranberry' is originally Greek. My new Oxford will tell me all – and the Britannica. Brian Hutton and his girlfriend Tamara something came to dinner with us. Nice girl and surprisingly unflashy and that rare thing to me – a native Californian. I know only one other and that's Val Douglas. Ah yes, Budd Schulberg too but I don't count him as he has lived away from there so long.³⁵⁰ Tamara who inevitably in this literate family creeps in with petty pace from day to day is that thoroughly nice thing – a well-educated clean looking intelligent middle-class girl finished educationally in Paris.³⁵¹ Almost old-fashioned. I would have thought that Brian would have more sultry ladies around, more obviously sexy and faintly dirty looking. I suspect though that underneath his talk of pot and 'taking trips' etc. that he is as square as a board. He says that the teaching system in his school in

NY was so abominable that he was more or less illiterate until he was about 17 and didn't read his first book until he was 18. For somebody of his obvious intelligence it seems incredible to me. By that age I'd read and sometimes learned by heart half the world's classics. Perhaps he exaggerates a bit but he also averred that he was given an IQ test when he was about 15 and got a score of 5 points below 'Moron'. That I find hard to believe too. He may be over-compensating for slightly below average marks in exams by pretending he was an idiot. He failed to get his first job because he could not spell the opening words of an application 'To whom it may concern'. He got through 'whom' all right but couldn't be certain of 'may'. Was it 'mae' like Mae West or 'may' like the month or was it sneaky and neither of those but 'mai'. He gave up and left. [...]

I drank several glasses of nouveau Beaujolais last night at the Thanksgiving and though it seems innocuous it is not. I feel ghastly this morning despite tea and toast and copious swallows of coffee. Just had the bill from the hotel – $3000 approx. Staggering for just less than a week. They put up a buffet in Gianni's room for all the visiting couturiers and Van Cleef's and Alexandre etc. and it cost $500! Granted there were about 15 or 20 people but how could they eat and drink $500 worth of viands and vins especially when you think they barely had time to eat at all. Daylight bleeding robbery!

I wouldn't have had E's day yesterday for anything. She spent the entire day being dressed in what seems countless dresses and innumerable hair-dos. She looks dishy though and I pity those other poor bastards like Marie Helene. The latter is, if you please flying in Di Rossi from Italy (Rome) to do her make-up.³⁵² Nothing can help druan Rothschild – dim ond yr arglwydd.³⁵³ A hopeless task.

E infuriatingly as bright as a button and aglow with youthful joie de vivre. I am tempted to kick her in the teeth. And so to Gstaad.

Saturday 27th, Gstaad The journey by Trans Europe Express was lovely. [...] We took some wine and, rare for me, a whiskey. We had a second half bottle in our seats. The various TEEs must be the most successful trains in the world – I have never seen an empty seat. But nevertheless, whether by train or plane, unless the helicopter is available, the last two hours or so depending on whether we car it from Geneva or Lausanne is tedious beyond words. By the time we'd arrived we had begun to get edgy with each other and by bedtime a flaming and quite childish row was in high dudgeon. Twice, I stormed off to the alternate bedroom. Twice I went back. All manner of little things were exacerbating our natural weariness. [...] The shutter to my room, the dreamt-of library was broken and therefore the room is in darkness and one of the things I looked forward to was seeing the library the next (this) morning with the sun striking along the edge of the garden beyond. [...] I'm writing this very slowly as I find myself so bewitched by the mountains and the brilliant sun on the virgin snow that I can't tear my eyes away from it. [...]

A bunch of letters (copies) from Aaron via Jane in Rome. One talks of a Mr Charles who, according to the biography of me now out, tried with the connivance of the rest of the village of Pontrhydyfen to 'soak me for £5000' for the purchase of 2, Danybont – the house where I was born and spent my happiest hours. The entire village and Mr Charles are furious and no wonder. I must do something about it.³⁵⁴ But what. A letter to the Guardian and the Gazette?³⁵⁵ A letter to the village? A letter to Mr Charles? Since I had nothing to do with the attempted purchase of the house – Graham's big mouth at work again I expect – it puts me in a funny position. I'd better do something. A letter to Hilda would probably be the best way of letting everybody know in Ponty, but apologies like Justice must not only be made but be seen to be made. I could kill those two stupid failures who wrote the book. The only thing I asked them to do was to make sure that nobody in the book was to be hurt by it except myself. Bloody clowns of hell. [...]

Sunday 28th, Gstaad [...] It is very bright this morning but not the brilliant sun of yesterday as expected. I sat and read in the sun yesterday wearing only a light sweater for over an hour and was as warm as on a summer's day. The sun must be pretty far away however as I only picked up a little colour whereas in a hot sun one hour would turn me into a Mohican. I shall try the sun-lamp. About my only vanity is to be tanned – on the face and upper body if possible. For some reason it makes me feel better and healthier. If someone could or would invent a really practical sunlamp I would use it summer and winter rather than submit to the boredom of sun-worshipping. [...] Did not do my espanol yesterday. Start again today.

Monday 29th [...] I had difficulty sleeping last night so – not to disturb E who was quickly asleep – I slipped out to the kitchen made myself a sandwich of ham and cheese and a cup of tea, then reading a book of John D. MacDonald's I went into the other room and desserted on Rowntree's Pastilles, one and a half packets no less and a packet of some other Swiss fruit pastilles. Result is that on one scale I am 70 and the other 69. A long time since I was that weight so will knock off a few pounds in the coming days. That means for me, strict Drinking Man's Diet without the drink. I have been giving myself black titles for too long a time anyway. I have got back into the habit of a drink before lunch and dinner. So full stop again. Also I want to have my wits about me for the Proust Ball for there will be fine things to see and a lot to be heard and I want to see and listen and not be seen and listened to.

E and I are in the library which should always be the morning place as it gives our old maid – I don't mean that she's not married, I mean that she's old and a maid – Celina a chance to really 'do' the living room which she shows a curious reluctance to do when we are about. Actually as to a question of age – she is probably no more than about 50 but like most working-class Swiss women seems much older. She is certainly as strong as an ox. She surprised me yesterday when having asked where the two girls – Maria and Inge were – I replied that they had gone first to church and then to school. To Church she said with great surprise and then 'ah but then all you Catholics have different hours from us Protestants.' What on earth supposed her to think we are Catholic? We have E – Jewish, Liza – nothing but Jewish by birth and C of E by school, Maria – wherever the school takes her which I believe is Protestant, Michael – nothing but a sort of Jesus lover mixed very woollily with anybody currently fashionable among his age-group like Hesse Tolkien and that huge idiot Alistair Crowley, Chris – non-committal but probably nothing.³⁵⁶ Me – nothing. [...]

The devil over my shoulder, E, is trying to press me to have a martini before lunch because she wants one and doesn't like drinking alone. I'm dickering with the idea but think I will have one this evening if at all. As I've explained to E ad nauseam I find one drink simply not enough. I guess two or three stiff ones are what I'd find satisfactory but that means slowly reverting to being a drunkard again and I simply will not tolerate a return to that. [...]

Tuesday 30th³⁵⁷ Raymond has arrived from London to sort out the chaos in the clothes dept. He has been a very ill man for a long time with absolutely crippling sciatica. After trying endless doctors of every nationality including Yugos, Italians, British, Yanks, French, Swiss and indeed every nationality in the various places we've been in the last few years he allowed himself at our continual insistence to submit, if necessary to surgery. He was very frightened as indeed why shouldn't he be – he is 52 and not brave anyway – but went through it. To our and his delight he didn't have to have surgery but last Friday he went to a hospital [...]. By, he gathers, using enormous pressures and bending his uncomplaining body hither, thither and yon they had forced the offending bone – whatever it was – smartly back into place. The acute, almost unbearable pain had gone and nothing remains but a mild ache in his left leg. The relief apparently enormous. Several times to me in the past few weeks he had thought of suicide if the horror persisted. Since he is a sprightly sort of feller normally with all the gaiety of the race this must have been pain indeed.

By his race I mean of course not his Italian-Swiss-French-German blood but the night-club dressed-up-to-the-tens-in-tight-tight-I-will-go-to-the-ball clothes and camping around with every conceivable signal of blatant homosexuality. [...]

Searching desperately, well not desperately but continually, for a book to write that would not be autobiographical, at least not overtly, I have come upon an excuse. I have been much impressed by a Yugoslav ‘novel’ called The Bridge on the Drina which I think I must have mentioned before in this haphazard daily exercise. For it is not a novel at all but a series of semi-legendary stories purporting to take place in and around the bridge. By this means the author gives one a saga of the many invasions and changes of family and fortune, in small, of the entire south South Slavs of Yugoslavia. I thought of our pearl the famous or infamous Peregrina, and its extraordinary history.³⁵⁸ Found by a slave in the sixteenth century or perhaps even the late fifteenth it was part of an argosy that took it to the Court of Spain. The slave who found it was given his freedom. Who was the slave? Are there any traceable descendants? Were the sons of slaves free too? Where were my ancestors at the time? Where were Elizabeth's? The tracing of the pearl's history will be complicated but much easier I would think but I shall have to imagine my and E's ancestors, unless E's mother's story that she is descended from Mary, Queen of Scots could be substantiated!³⁵⁹ That would be a great coup for the book. The thing would of course take years to write and would demand a great deal of specialized reading and almost certainly the employment of searchers, I believe they call them. It has been done before. There was a rather good film on the subject I remember – the object being a tail-coat. But the Pearl involved famous dynasties and is authentic history in itself. I could elaborate on my cynical-comical views of mankind and a small page or two of its history. The whole and vast personal question is do I have the intellectual stamina to sustain such a big undertaking and is my writing good enough? I shall need to be fairly near a great library which means Oxford or London. Not all the time but from time to frequent time at least. I think the first person to consult would be Nevill Coghill who would introduce me to the methods of scholarship, what sort of people to employ and consult. Now I will sleep on it for 6 months until we get to England again. [...]

DECEMBER

Wednesday 1st, Gstaad³⁶⁰ A cold, very cold morning, with the sun just coming round the corner and I have just lighted the fire in the library and put the kettle on and the dogs E'en So and Daisy Mae are having a mock fight having been in the snow and all would be idyllic were it not for the fact that at 2pm we fly to Paris to the Ritz and tomorrow to the Rothschilds. The latter part is ok. It is simply the fact of disturbing the serenity of this place and being able to do what ever one wants without care to be social and having everything to hand. Still and however when we come back next Monday short of a death in the family which is, with Ivor and E's mother so perilously balanced between life and death, not at all unlikely, we should be here without interruption until the middle of January when it's Yugoslavia again. Also, yesterday, I took the decision to do Bluebeard. I said I could do it in Feb–March-bit of April but that after that it would take too much chopping and changing for all concerned. They said they were prepared to shoot 'anywhere I want but preferably Hungary and next to that Spain and that I could make any changes I liked!' Well, well, I thought this is the lot who were so adamant that it must be shot in January. I said I thought Hungary would be the favourite as neither E nor I had ever been there but that we loved Spain too. I am to see Frings tomorrow morning. What I really must get after is Under the Volcano. That, if any film can be considered so, is an important piece.

Yves le Tourneur who is a salesman for Van Cleef and Arpel and 'covers' Switz, came from Geneva where he lives and mostly works bringing with him about $3m of gems. E had changed a gold belt she had bought from them – or I had rather when she was doing XYZ and he had come up with the new belt-cum-neck-lace in exchange. With us of course, and probably with everybody, he brought as I said an extra two or three millions in temptations. I was not to be drawn however except for a pair of matching earrings for the already bought necklace which E had been 'loaned' for some time and was naturally (sarcastically) attached to. That, by the way, is a good play of such people as Yves le Tourneur. They let you have a splendid but not overwhelmingly expensive piece on loan, or for a specific occasion, an opening night or the Rothschild party for instance, and hope that the wearer or the spectator, me, decides to buy it what the hell. The necklace and earrings are a perfect example since I bought the earrings. They cost about $6,000. [...]

Thursday 2nd, Ritz³⁶¹ We left the chalet at 1pm and were in Paris at 2.45pm. [...] Gianni and two Cadillacs were waiting and we were away to the Ritz. The radios and TVs told us or rather told them, Parisians I mean, that Le Grand Bal, le Bal du Siecle would be graced with unaccountable wealth and that there would be 500 guards around the house and la Reine elle-meme Elizabeth Taylor was apportioning $3m from the neck up. True too, but who told them so exactly, they described the exact placing of all the nonsense. Van Cleef? Valentino? Alexandre? We arrived at the Ritz to find the place absolutely surrounded by large black bumper-to-bumper cars and found a hurly-burly reception on inside for the Republic of Congo and a great many black sleek gentlemen in diplomats' uniform, both the latter and the former as black as your hat in a coal-pit. And bowing and scraping and midst a brouhaha of c'est Liz Taylor et son mari Burton we entered the lift and ran up to the 3rd floor and found ourselves in a penthouse suite though the lift numbers definitely stated there was a 4th floor and therefore, having got off on the third and not having gone up a lot of stairs, how was it possible to be in the penthouse. The hotel is built oddly that's why. Some bits of it have 3 floors and some four. Carl Ritz who built it and whose son – very old I suppose – still lives here wanted to build a home from home for Gentlemen and obviously didn't have Conrad Hilton in mind as the corridors run in Euclidean nightmares and Pythagoras metempsychosis. This form would be turned into a brutish conglomeration of filled in erector set by a boy with a tidy mind and no imagination.³⁶² The suite was sweet and much prettier than the one we had last time and this one even includes a grand piano which I bet needs tuning though I haven't played it yet but will and E has just awoken and invaded the salon where I am typing this which is one reason why the other suite is more practical as I had a room between where I typed and where Elizabeth slept. But there, we are only here for one night this time, but if we stayed here a lot, I mean for a long time – as when making a fillum – I would ask for the room next door the other direction from the living room. That would stop my typing waking E too early and also give us a second bathroom. Very desirable this latter as after a day or two E reduces any bathroom to chaos. She carries around with her a cornucopian 'make-up' case that Malthea and Jupiter might have envied.³⁶³ It measures a foot high to a foot wide to a foot and a few inches long I would guess and is 'hard'. That is to say it is not one of those bags that are soft-sided and topped and zipped but is solid and rigid and yet seems to contain endless things – eyebrow pencils, pens, the usual make-up things and deodorants and perfumes and what seems to be pills for any disease and malaises and balms and elixirs and you name it and that box contains it. It may even contain spare parts for the Rolls. Anyway the point is that after a day or two they gradually over-flow the bathroom like lava and there is no room for my pathetic collection of toothpaste and two brushes and deodorant and after-shave and razor and comb.

We established our corners, which means the small guest bedroom for me and my books and clothes, ordered tea and settled down to my Spanish Grammar which I am finding a bit of a bugger as I mix it up continually with Italian. Esta Questa Esto Questo. [...] E paraded in and out showing me the diamond headdress which she will wear tonight. Even my tasteless eye thought it superb. It was made especially for E by Van Cleef and Arpels and actually does cost well over £1m. Not dollars, POUNDS. Damned if I won't buy it one of these far-off days. It will always be a staggering sight and the knowledge of its cost adds to its beauty regardless of such Philistinism.

There were many telephone conversations twixt E and Marie H  l  ne and E and Grace who says that Rainier is going shooting and not at Ferri  res and feels too shy to go alone to house Ferri  res so would Elizabeth, asked Marie-H  l  ne, call Grace and ask her to come down with us and we still don't know whether Rainier doesn't want to go to the do and Grace does but won't go without him or whether Grace is uncertain of the protocol in case Mags shows up and Marie-H  l  ne said rather frantically at one point to E 'you simply must make her come, I mean I've even got a chair for her' which meant that she (Grace) was to sit on Guy's right.³⁶⁴ And my E told M-H that if she (M-H) put E with a bunch of non-English-speaking idiots she (E) would never speak to MH ever again. Grace said she would call E back before 11pm and tell her what but she didn't and E, by this time fed up to the eyebrows being MH's soc. sec'y said to hell with it and why didn't I (me) call up Grace and talk her into coming. Why me? But I suppose I shall have to have a go. I just asked where Grace was staying and to my astonishment they told me she was staying at the Embassy. What Embassy asks I? The Monaco one. The Monaco one! Anyway I just called and asked for Son Altesse but she is on the blower so the lady said. She may decide to be 'occupie' all day. Fact is, I don't think either of them, Rainier or Grace, feel too happy outside their realm as they can never be sure how they are going to be treated, both of them terrified of being comic-opera. Niven, all of whose stories have to be heard with suspicion and delightfully so, says that once on the C  te d'Azur in some restaurant or other a waiter didn't appear to have the proper deference and even though they were supposedly incognito Rainier became extremely violent. I've forgotten in what or which way but really nasty-violent.

About 7 late night we suddenly realized that we had not eaten all day and were mad with hunger so food was procured. [...] After which we watched Inter-Milan play a German team in the quarter-finals of the European Cup.³⁶⁵ A nasty ill-tempered little match. Soccer seems to me a very boring spectacle unless you see a genius at his best or you are desperate for one side to win. In this case I couldn't have cared less about either team though the Germans blond and clean looking looked nicer than the Eyeties, squat and hairy and dark and thick thighed like pocket Welsh front-row forwards. And the incessant writhing about on the ground after every tackle, foul or fair, is stupefying in its monotony. To my relief I have just heard that Grace is coming and is coming with us. So that's that. Phew! as they say in the comics. And it is comical.

Friday 3rd – Saturday 4th, Ferrières³⁶⁶ So the Ball was had. It was had until 7am when the music at last stopped and the do-or-die-ers crawled into their cars and lumbered off with early morning traffic to Paris. We had come up from the party about 4.30am but, after packing away the 'big' jewellery and putting it in the house coffre, we sat and chatted desultorily away until the orchestra stopped at 7. I managed, though I was sorely tempted during dinner, not to have the mildest form of alcohol so despite only about 4 hours' sleep I feel as bright as a button. We have just had tea, as indeed we did at 5 this morn also. It is 1.15.

We picked up Grace at 32, Avenue Foch which doesn't seem to be the Embassy and I forgot to ask Son Altesse if it was or not. A very amiable Rainier brought Grace to the gate carrying her two small bags – a considerable difference from son altesse ETB even despite the fact that Grace was not staying the night. [...] Grace and E chatted away at the back of the car while I sat in front beside the driver. Grace was nice and relaxed and, after the initial awkwardness which I always feel with people like Grace who are in a somewhat false position and know it, everybody talked freely. Grace went into a blow by blow description of the Shah of Iran's famous or infamous party.³⁶⁷ Grace defended its extravagance with extraordinary obtuseness though neither of us attacked it. It was meant, she said, as a tribute to the people of Persia and as self-advertisement for the Shah's magnificent governing which was bringing literacy to the illiterate and hygiene to the unwashed and culture to the brutish. She described the Shah as a marvellous man and once called him a great man which is going a titch too far. She said how monstrous it was of the Western Press to be so vulgarly cynical of the whole show, all of them she said she knew for a fact writing their stuff before the thing had really got going. E was sweet and said that yes I mean Tito and the Hungarians and other communist countries were there and didn't seem to be particularly put out by the obvious 'capitalism' of the whole thing. Absolutely said Grace and said it was a marvellous thing to see people of such enormous disparity in religions politics and races finally warming to each other after the birth-pangs of meeting and how a little chinaman who was stiff and unsmiling and reserved and talked only through an interpreter was by the last day chatting a mile a minute radiant with smiles in impeccable English to all and sundry. So there. It all goes to show that we are brothers under the skin. And why for heaven's sake doesn't the Western Press attack its own spending of zillions a year on advertisements, corrupting the minds of the young and the stupid with their idiotics. And so on. One didn't suggest that it might perhaps have been more helpful to his appallingly poor people if he had promoted a sort of World's Fair, an Expo 71 or something and have the other people pay for the advertising. The 'do' of the Shah's was supremely silly under any circumstances and if it was to celebrate the extraordinary advances made for the benefit of his people then it was inane to the point of simple-mindedness.

Enough of the car journey. As we approached the last few miles to Ferrières there were policemen, mostly motorbiked every few hundred yards and learned later that Guy had arranged for a policeman or van every $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from Paris. All the way from Paris!

Now President Pompidou used to be employed by Guy de Rothschild before and after he became Prime Minister and the new Prime Minister was also to be here last night but was unable to come and rang M-H this afternoon while we were there to apologize not only to M-H for not being able to come and telling the reason why but also asked the names of his two side by side companions in order to apologize to them too. Toujours la politesse. So it is no wonder that Guy can commandeer the entire Parisian Police force if he so wishes. As we turned into the drive the entire house faced us and for the first time since we've been coming here was lighted up. It looked magnificent and were it the clop-clop of horses and the smell of saddle leather and blankets round the knees and not the low hum of a heated Cadillac we could have been back a hundred years. The main entrance however was only for the herd – we entered by the side door as we usually do and went straight up to our rooms having some difficulty in finding out where was which and who was where. Sorted out finally we found ourselves in the Chambre Rose while Grace used the Chambres Balcon to change in and do her hair. We are changing from our chambre to the Balcon tonight while at dinner. The Rose while very nice and suitably rosy with all the decoration à la Wedgwood, panelling and all, has an outside bathroom which though exclusively for our use meant having to put on a dressing gown, if you happen to be in shorts in case of running into M. Olivier who lived next door and shared our little hallway. Also, to our surprise, we could hear everything in the two adjacent rooms quite clearly, it therefore following that everybody could hear us. So it will be nice to gossip at normal voice.

I sat around and waited for the girls to be ready – my girls including the Duchess of Windsor and The Princess of Monaco and of course my very own ‘girl’. Grace was ready and waiting about 10 minutes before time and came to our room for a drink. E would have been ready but Alexandre, the hairdresser, took forever to arrive and longer to do M-H's hair-do. We had been told that we were to descend strictly at 9.10 and sit down to dinner at 9.30. We descended at 10.30 and sat down at 11pm. The great hall had been made into a dining room for the occasion and was impossible before we began. It took me 15 minutes to get to my table from the door – I timed it – and after having trod on endless trains and knocked aside several expensive coiffures, virtually climbing over half a dozen people, I found myself at table no 11 with madam de Montesquieu on my left and the former Mme Louis Malle on my right both of whom, thank God, I knew.³⁶⁸ Now for an hour or more of absolute agony. The waiters simply had no way of being able to get round the tables so most tables including ours elected one person to receive all the services and pass them on from hand to hand. The food was divine, or perhaps I was so hungry that it seemed better than it was, and I made an arrangement with Mme Malle who is a very beautiful but giant of a woman for her to pass me all her refills of water while I passed her all my wines. She must have a powerful head for she must have had well over a dozen glasses of various wines – champagne, a white wine, the inevitable Lafitte and a second white wine which I guessed from its viscousness was Chateau d'Yquem and it was. My attention was however riveted from the first by a man sitting opposite me.³⁶⁹ He looked like a cadaver when still and a failure of plastic surgery when he moved which was seldom. He was eyebrow-less and eyelash-less and atrociously wigged or dyed with snow white hair at the front of his head and to the crown and nondescript brownish, rather like mine, hair at the back. His face was hideously pasted with make-up and had odd lumps on it, a face made of funny putty by an inept child. I had just asked in Mme Malle's ear who was that extraordinary thing over there when he leaned forward and said

‘Where's my Elizabeth?’ Ah, I said, well now, she is ah, over the other end of this ah sitting and ah eating indeed at the ah corresponding table to this but ah at the ah other end if you know what I mean. I wish she was here, said he, the inference being that far better her than me. So, as a matter of fact, do I, I said with a speed which would have done the Rev Sydney Smith no harm to admire.³⁷⁰ [...]

After the strangely delivered question from Andy Warhol for that is who the horror film gentleman was, we all settled down to the battle of the food. I discussed on my left with Madame de Montesquieu who is indeed descended from the great Charles Louis Secondat, Baron de la Brede et de Montesquieu who wrote L'Esprit des Lois, poetry which all started by her saying that she had been at somebody's house and they had played records of me speaking The Ancient Mariner and how this woman who had given the party and played the record said that she had heard me speak poetry at the Rothschilds’ ‘and even Guy listened’ and that she (the hostess) had gone out and found all the records she could find of me speaking verse.³⁷¹ I asked Montesquieu twice who the woman was and twice she told me but I should have written it down as I have forgotten it already, but would like to know who this lady is. Just out of curiosity. It wasn't Lili Rothschild who I know has some of my poetry things. So we talked about French poetry which I told her I was only just beginning to read and enjoy. She was rife with platitudes and has quite clearly inherited nothing from the great Baron except his name. She was, is, tall and blonde and retrousse-nosed and about 35. Mme Malle and her sideman were much more amusing and I think that E would like Malle. She, the latter is nicely unhappy, almost desperate I would guess and she and I and the man on her right discussed painting. I said my usual and quite true things about Art, that I didn't understand it at all and derived pleasure only from the occasional picture but that, quite clearly, I was artistically ‘tone-deaf’. I said that we had what was by common consent a very fine Van Gogh but that though I was impressed by it I didn't know why it was remarkable and that to me the most impressive thing about it was its estimated value in cash which was enormous. Apart from the written and spoken word – preferably the former – the only other art-form that genuinely could disturb me was music, some cheap some deep. Malle and the man protested that music at its greatest was so much like painting at its greatest that I must try again with painting. I said I would.

Meanwhile at the other table E and Grace were having a marvellous time. The lucky bastards had Guy, the Duchess of Windsor, Maurice Herzog, Jean-Paul

Binet and a few others.³⁷² The star turn according to E and Grace was the Duchess who is perhaps getting slightly ga-ga. She has an enormous feather in her hair which got into everything, the soup, the gravy, the ice-cream, and at every vivacious turn of her head it smacked Guy sharply in the eyes or the mouth and at one time threatened to get stuck in Guy's false moustache which was glued on. She made one bon mot which had Grace in tears. After having got her incredible feather into everything possible she then called in her very penetrating voice, having a desire to write down her tel no for E and me which has changed since they sold their house, *Est-ce-que quelle-qu'n qui a une plume?*³⁷³ She was most insistent that E and I should see the Duke before we left for Gstaad giving E the feeling that he is probably on his last legs. We are going to dine with them on Monday night. Binet flirted blatantly with E but in the best French manner and they had the same hysteria with the serving of the food – Grace being the hander-over.

After the dinner, Guy asked E if she would help him remove his moustache which was now becoming a bore. They went into a gents lav, or rather a lav for either sex while a servant stood on guard outside. Bettina elected to choose this time to try and get into the same loo not knowing that E and Guy were inside. E had removed the moustache and was cleaning around Guy's mouth when Bettina finally burst past the servant and found them in this situation. It looked for all the world as if E and Guy had been having a necking session and E was now removing the evidence. Bettina was delighted by the whole thing.

By this time the rest of the guests, as it were the 'b' list were arriving. They were announced in a stentor voice by a gentleman with a large voice and a large intricately carved staff – I've forgotten what they call those things – with which he pounded the floor and boomed that Madame et Monsieur Harry Dogface to which fascinating information nobody except the people who had just whispered their names to him paid the slightest attention. I squeezed past them followed by Mme Malle and her friend and Elsa Martinelli and somebody else (uninvited) to take them to the lav of our room.³⁷⁴ E was already in the room repairing her maquillage with Bettina. I sat thankfully and smoked before we went back into the whirlpool below. We both sat for a time with Grace and Ricardo? of Madrid in the normally intimate corner of the first room. Scores, perhaps hundreds of people flocked past on some pretext or other to view E and Grace. I wandered about after a time talking to this one and that including Jaqueline de Ribes, Pierre Salinger and wife, Sam Spiegel and M-H's lovely big brother that we call 'Broken-nose' and occasionally I caught glimpses of E being avidly though covertly gazed at wherever she went.³⁷⁵ And I congratulated Salinger on the success of his book and how much I'd enjoyed it and that I had read it in one sitting and had he yet sold it for a film and he had – to CBS – and we then talked of the splendid night in LA when Bobby Kennedy and I insulted each other's races bloody Irish v bloody Welsh and the usual Kennedy–Burton quotation match, and Rudi Nureyev and his wickedness and how horrified and struck dumb we all were by Bobby's assassination and how much we all loved him and later I found de Ribes flinging herself flatteringly into my arms socially acting as ever the Grande Dame with lovers and asked her how her love life was and she said she had a fantastic new lover and where was he said I and she looked and couldn't find him and how he had made her feel 18 again and I didn't say that 18 she might feel but 80 she looked, beautiful 80 but 80, and Broken-nose told me that Sam's film Nicholas and Alexandra was a slow film and very long but nevertheless very beautiful in it.³⁷⁶ [...]

Have had a lunch, a too-much lunch for me of soup, lamb cutlets and boiled new pots in their jackets and string beans followed by a splendid gateau, and a sit-down. I told a lot of stories about the theatre and about British royalty. And after tisane which I drink here all the time, E and I and a lovely young girl, an English actress called Charlotte something went for a walk around the lake.³⁷⁷ It was lovely and there were millions of birds chattering in a copse – what kind of birds I have no way of knowing and the walk though pleasant didn't succeed in burning away my dinner.

... many other people told me of Sam's film and all of them reacted in more or less the same way. It is quite clearly an honest but rather dull film.

After a time wandering about Grace asked me to see her upstairs and help her remove her borrowed choker and get her to her car. I suppose it was about 1.30. This I did nearly strangling Grace to death while trying to get the necklace off. For a minute she was in bad trouble as the necklace got twisted up as a result of my inept handling of the clasp as the bloody thing was too tight in the first place and, in fact, I had told her before we went down to the ball that she ought to remove it telling her she didn't need it. However, we finally twisted it around so that she herself could see it in the mirror and finally we released her. Even when off it took considerable strength to unclasp it. So down the stairs we went together. At the bottom, alone, was Sam Spiegel. 'Where are you going you two?' 'For God's sake', said G, 'don't Sam say a word to Elizabeth. She's at the Ball, she's dancing, she's happy, let us go. Richard will let Elizabeth know. It's going to be a shock but ... these things happen.' Etc. For a full 1½ minute Sam, because of Grace's normal seriousness and because of her very good piece of acting and my deliberately stricken-with-guilt face, was taken in. We made off. Found Grace's car after a lot of waiting in the piercing cold and she was gone. She was quite the nicest she's ever been and David Rothschild expressed astonishment that she could be so gay.³⁷⁸ She had always he said been a bit of a dead weight. On the contrary, we said, but she does need a little drawing out. Actually it is the nicest she has been in all the years since we've known her as a Princess. At one moment during the choking choker episode I saw mental front-pages in France Soir's and News of the World's lurid headlines. Famed Actor Strangles Princess in Bedroom at Rothschild Mansion During Grand Ball.

For the rest of the evening we wandered about and ran into Audrey Hepburn and her ludicrously named Italian psychiatrist husband Doctor Dotti who is not very nice I think.³⁷⁹ We had snaps taken of us by Cecil Beaton who is also not very nice in a different way.³⁸⁰ Then in another room we had snaps with Audrey Hepburn and M Dotti and Doctor Troques and his wife and after an encounter, very strange, with M-H's sister-in-law Gabby Van Svillen who insisted that she was the Tsarina of All the Russias.³⁸¹ Did she, I asked politely feel this because she had in fact some Romanov blood – Mike Romanov blood, I added. No, she said, everybody is someone else and I am the Tsarinevitch. What about you? she said. I want to be a fellow of All Souls, I said.³⁸² A what? she asked and lost interest. I was saved by a man called Valery who is the son of the poet.³⁸³ He was charming and again we discussed poetry. He told me of the time when everybody assured his father that he was a dead certainty to win the Nobel Prize for Literature that year and with what excitement, sitting in the garden, the maid came out in a hurry to say there was a long-distance call from Stockholm for him, he went bounding into the house to hear the great news only to find it was a wrong number. He never did get the Nobel Prize.

Then there was a young man with long blonde curly hair who followed E everywhere struck all of a heap with a mighty passion, dog-like in his adoration, looking a bit I thought like the American Pianist Van Cyburn, slavering at the jowls – of which he had none – in hopeless lust and writing her a note promising to dedicate his next novel to her.³⁸⁴ His name is Francois-Marie Banier who has already made something of a stir with his second novel which he promised to send me or bring me I can't remember which to the Ritz on Monday.³⁸⁵ He was engagingly eager and I shall read with interest.

At one moment Marie-Hélène came up to me at the bar where I was talking to Salinger's wife about Tours and the surrounding country which I love and blind as a bat as she looked me straight in the face at a distance of 1½ feet and said 'Where's Richard? There's a woman who's dying to meet him.' 'It is I, Hamlet, the Dane,' said I whereupon she screamed a little and went off at a tremendous pace forgetting to take me with her, and I never did meet the woman who was dying to meet me and Marie-Hélène has already forgotten who it was and indeed the entire incident. Salinger's wife asked me if people were always so cruel to Marie-Hélène. Cruel in what way, I asked, puzzled. Oh you know, she said, everybody thinks that she's a tremendous hypochondriac and once she fainted and fell off a chair in a restaurant and everybody carried on eating and talking as if nothing had happened and nobody picked her up. How, I said, extraordinary. Where did this happen? But then we were interrupted by someone and I never heard the details. I must find out next time I see her or Pierre.

Then at an earlier point of the evening that stupendous bore who is married to the sister of Guy's first wife I think came up to us and kissed E's hand with great unction and then Grace's very condescendingly and said – and there is nothing so intimidating – do you remember me, the many times we used to go to Lulatch's house. Who? asked Grace, genuinely puzzled. Lulatch, Lulatch, Lulatch, she loved you more than life, Lulatch, I'm terribly sorry said Grace but I'm sure I would remember that name. Lulatch, Lulatch, Lulatch, he said, she loved you and she died a terrible death eight years ago on the 27th of July but you have forgotten, it doesn't matter, ah if only we were here for 2000 years. Rather than just 1000 I said. Yes Yes Yes and I remember the night you and your superbe wife came to Eli Rothschild's house and we stayed up all night. And you made passes at me, said Elizabeth. And you and your superbe wife argued about poetry and she was right and you were wrong and it was a memorable evening. And you cried about the German Economic Miracle, I said. My god you're right, he said. What a memory. Quelle Memoire extraordinaire. What a memory, what a memory, the German economic miracle. What a memory. We got away from him somehow. A loathsome feller.

Sunday 5th, Ritz³⁸⁶ Back at last at the Ritz though I could stay forever at Ferrières, and am feeling rather as if we've been on a personal appearance tour for the promotion of a film. This I supposed because one feels when there are a few strangers about, even though perfectly amiable, that something is expected of one and there is a slight suggestion of mildly self-conscious projection of oneself. There was a late lunch today – one of those splendid upper-class English brunches complete with small sausages on plats chauffand and big sausages and eggs labelled 2 minutes or 3 or 4 or 5, boiled of course and haddock poche a l'anglaise though the English could never do them so well and endless varieties of breads and biscuits and toasts (very un-Anglo-Saxon except for the last) and confitures – marmalade, strawberry – and fried bacon and fried bread but in croutons (also non English) and coffee and tea. Alex Rede and a beautiful Eurasian-looking lady was there as well as Etienne (reputedly M-H's lover though he may just be 'a good friend') and the blonde man – Olivier?³⁸⁷ We talked of poetry again. Possibly because last night after dinner in the cosy corner room they asked me to speak some and I did and E says they were very impressed and talked of it when I left the room to go to the lavatory to pee which I seemed to be doing all evening. They seem, apart from the man called Etienne, to enjoy poetry when it is spoken for them but rarely to search it out themselves. I was a little cautious of speaking even a minute snippet from Hamlet with an audience consisting, among others, of two professional actresses – David's girlfriend, Marisa and Marisa's friend Charlotte – but E assured me that they too were held and agog. So that's alright. Also, both E and I are mean customers if there's ever the slightest suggestion of 'singing for our suppers'. Which there never is at the Rothschilds'. They really have – every one of them, including Philip (16) and the other 14 year old one – exquisite manners.³⁸⁸ We discussed manners as an art in itself the night before for a time and we all agreed that the man with the most exquisite manners of any person we all of us knew was the Duke of Windsor. It was Guy who put him forward as the claimant. And, though I'd never thought of him before as being so superbly well-mannered, I immediately agreed. It is a fact said I that manners are not the result of good breeding or intelligence for we know many well born and highly intelligent people who are boors, and that I personally knew many miners who have superb and quite un-self-conscious good manners and that manners, true good manners like charm you have or you don't. You cannot teach people to be charming and though manners may seem to be a question of opening and closing doors and holding chairs and standing up when a lady comes into the room etc. merely it is something that has to be done with an indefinably unobtrusive grace. Tim Hardy, for instance, whose manners are meticulous nevertheless manages to make himself faintly obtrusive, you are aware of his manners. So delicious were the Duke's that I hadn't thought of his being so until Guy pointed it out. I myself am incapable of such behaviour – and I am not being false cavalier – for I am simply not made properly. In fact, both Elizabeth's and my manners are appalling but E's obvious good nature and natural charm (if she likes you) and of course stunning beauty carry her through whereas I pretend to a gruff peasantness which (if I like you) carries me through. I hope. [...]

Monday 6th, Ritz³⁸⁹ After having arrived back last afternoon I read papers and did yesterday's entry and read a book by Ross MacDonald and half watched TV and talked to Kurt Frings agreeing to see him and his lot today at 5 o'clock downstairs to 'discuss the script and read a note from a boy called Richard Sterne who addressed his note 'Most noble Richard of Burton' and ended 'Richard of Sterne'.³⁹⁰ Surprising, this, as he has always struck me as being a most solemn feller and not given to even mild flights of fancy of this kind but he has been in Paris for a year or so as he says 'a great year here in Paris at the school of Marcel Marceau'. That's the mime chap I think.³⁹¹ And perhaps the air of Paris has gone to his head. He kept a diary and tape-recorded a book called John Gielgud directs Richard Burton which I couldn't read but which other people obviously could as he says it is going into a second edition. He said he was below with 'Joanna the Piana' whoever that may be. Was there a girl in Hamlet called Joanna. Don't think so. The Sterne man played an infinitely small part but I can't remember which. He left his tel no. and I shall call him sometime if we stay longer in Paris as we may now as Losey wants me to do dubbing on Trot on the 13th in Rome and we are trying to get him to change it to here. Going home to Gstaad and then packing again for Rome a couple of days later would be another trauma and drama. [...]

Tuesday 7th, Ritz³⁹² We shall be going to Rome, tomorrow night on the sleeper train leaving here at 6 and arriving in Rome at 9 the following morning. The motto is 'Bon soir, Paris – Bonjour Rome.' The Roman people said that they couldn't possibly get the loops ready by Thursday whereupon E said then very well he won't be able to come until the middle of January. Promptly they called back and said they'd be ready by Thursday.

Yesterday was one of those bitty days and today promises to be the same. [...] I went downstairs at 5 o'clock to talk to Dmytryk and about six other people including Frings who was the only one I knew and I said that E thought the end of the film too portentous and idiotic but that I didn't think a horror film should be taken too seriously either way as long as it was well done. We agreed on a venue outside Budapest and that we would live in a house if possible and a hotel if not. And they told me they had Virna Lisi and almost had Andress and Ann-Margret.³⁹³ I couldn't care less but just to test their veracity Gianni called Lisi and I asked her if indeed she was in the film as I didn't trust anyone and she said yes but that she wanted to play the biggest part but they had said they had to have an American star for that because the man was probably going to be unknown and they needed Box Office but that now that I was the star who needed, she said and wanted an American star and would I mind if she tried for the biggest part now. Go ahead. Go ahead. And then there was talk about Brian doing a film with E and the TV films of Osborne's seem to be very confused. Nobody seems to know what is going on and there's a TV thing about Tennessee Williams directed by Hutton who is rapidly becoming a part of our lives and he wants and we want him to do the Osborne plays so we are all three likely to walk down the aisle before long and plight eternal troth.³⁹⁴ And Stanley Donen of the squeaky voice called on the phone asking Comment va tu and I said Bene gracie and he's coming today at 2 o'clock for discussion re Little Prince which they want to do in the Spring and it all has to be fitted in with E and then there's also Absolution and I may kill myself on Christmas Day and screw everybody.³⁹⁵

We went to the Duke and Duchess' house last night for dinner with half a dozen of the most consummate bores in Paris. I don't know their names but I shall never need to remember them for I have an idea they are people who only go to the Windsors and one of them – probably the old Duke – must die very soon – though it is she who is now nearly completely ga-ga. It was a sad and painful evening and needs a long time to write about and I haven't got the time. They both referred continually to the fact that he was once the King. 'And Emperor,' I said at one point. 'And Emperor,' she repeated after me, 'And Emperor, we always forget that. And Emperor.' He is physically falling apart, his left eye completely closed and a tremendous limp and walks with a stick. Her memory has gone completely and then comes back vividly in flashes. She derided Grace Kelly all night as being a boring snob. I defended but she would have none of it. I finally gave up as I knew that half the time she didn't know what she was saying. There was one woman there a French woman who protested violently that she was not Swiss – what's so wrong with being Swiss – and who is married to a Hungarian Count who obviously didn't realize that the Duchess was gone away from us and attempted pathetic rational argument. I gave the word. Her husband said that Tito was the natural son of a Hungarian Count who had exercised his Droit de Seigneur or whatever that's called over Tito's mother's family. I said I would tease him with it when next we saw him. I doubt it. Both the allegation and that I would tease him.³⁹⁶

Wednesday 8th, Ritz³⁹⁷ The Hungarian and his French wife were quite serious about Tito's illegitimacy and his being the natural son of a Hungarian nobleman as last night at Baron de Rede's supper for Liza Minnelli the wife slipped me a note with the name of Tito's father on it.³⁹⁸ The father was a Count Erdody with an umlaut above the o, and he had fancied Tito's mother who supposedly a maid at Erdody chateau or castle or whatever the hell Hungarians have, was a pretty little thing, and was snapped up by the lechy count. Josip Erdody Tito. Pronounced Err-durdy. It might be possible to introduce it into conversation with Tito by saying something like 'My God, the Capitalist West and its decaying aristocracy claim even the foremost living Communist. D'you know sir, that they said of you quite seriously that ...' and then duck or wait for the firing squad. The Count, the Parisian one I mean and not the dirty one who fathered Tito, said to me 'Has it ever occurred to you to wonder why these peasants, these Brozzes, managed to have such a beautiful family home? You must have seen it.' 'No,' I said, 'I haven't seen it but on reflection it does seem to be rather grand for poor people but I assumed that it had been tarted up by Tito after he became President. I have only seen still snaps of it in books.' 'My dear Burton, go and look at the house the next time you and Mrs Burton are in Yugoslavia. It's an easy trip after all. It has the best road in Yugoslavia leading to the god's birthplace. And it is not smartened up at all, except perhaps its immediate surroundings. It is as it was.' We will go if we have the chance. I'm sure that the Slavs will lay it on for us. It would weaken Tito immensely with the out and out extremely Lenin-Stalin Marxists to find him so tainted but I have an idea that any documentation will have been erased from all slates including living memory, if any. [...]

We went, E in a Caftan of Slav-Turkish origin and as heavy as lead with me in a dinner jacket with an all-black ruffled shirt with one brilliant diamond pin borrowed from Van Cleef mounting firmly to the chin. [...] Liza's opening numbers were frighteningly and intensely nervous and with the exception of Lena Horne (and possibly myself when boozing in a heat-wave) I have never seen anybody sweat so much.³⁹⁹ After a time she settled down though I suffered agonies for the first 15 minutes. Rocky Brynner (Yul's son) sat in front of me and was so nervous for her, being her follower since childhood apparently, that he made me more nervous. However her shattering nervous energy finally communicated itself to her hopelessly dull audience until they went too far and would not let her leave the stage with a steady unisonic handclap and she did another number and still the now really silly audience asked for more and I told Rocky to wave her off – she was right near him – and off she went.

Alex de Rede's house is a museum and ought to be in one.⁴⁰⁰ It was as intimate as a Maples show-window, but all done with superb and detailed taste.⁴⁰¹ It's a shame as well as a surprise to find out that it's not his house but is leased by him for 60 years so all that labour, and labour it is – he must have spent millions and travelled the world – will eventually fall under the auctioneer. Apart from some very discreet ceiling lights the whole place was lighted by candles and these were endlessly multiplied by mirrors. I sought the far room as soon as I arrived and sat there alone for ten minutes savouring a glass of Perrier – still liquor-less after an intensive 6 days of society – and I mean ‘savouring’ as I was terribly thirsty for some reason – and but for those concealed ceiling lights I could have been back in time a couple of hundred years. The same faces appear at all the parties. We talked to Salvador Dali for a time who clowned about charmingly as usual giving us his Catalanese pronunciation of ‘butterfly’ which cannot be impersonated in print.⁴⁰² The English live in fogs and therefore everything, including their language is rife with imprecision, including their language, he said, but our Catalan is sharp-edged and everywhere defined and sharply dominant, like our language. Nonsense I said. Your language with all its esses elided in eths sounds is liquid but not limpid, it is muddy like your minds. He left saying ‘butterfly’. With him was a striking looking blonde, tall and thin, who stared at me all the time while at dinner and Guy (blonde hair always falling over his forehead) Barrault(?) was helpless with stoned laughter saying Tu as ton ticket, c'est drôle, tu as ton ticket et la dame est un homme.⁴⁰³ And so she was. The girl was a man. [...]

We are off to Rome tonight on the train and I'm looking forward to it. I've had enough of French society. Also their faces were beginning to become familiar to me and indeed some of them began to acquire names as the same faces are seen at all parties. I want to retreat now into the silent world of the Alps and bury myself in walks and books and dogs and hibernate until the holidays, so loathed by me, are over. Messy Xmas trees that shed and the house running with people.

And now to meet someone called Robert (I think) Hakim, one of the innumerable Hakim (Egyptian) bros re Under the Volcano.⁴⁰⁴

Friday 10th, Grand⁴⁰⁵ To work at 9 this a.m. and with a bit of luck I might be finished by lunchtime but I may become word-drunk around midday and it might be better to take a break before the final and last lap. Also I remember I have to do a lot of off-stage talking – nothing specific but the sort of diatribic stuff that Joe can shove in anywhere. Joe says that the visions over my shoulder things don't work and that he has cut them all out. Just badly done he says, the machine incompetently handled as he saw the same technique used on British TV only two nights ago absolutely brilliantly. Comes to something when the poor relation does technically better stuff than the rich Uncle. I thought at the time that the technical boys on the process were all too familiar to me, faces that I'd seen around for years in Italian films and guessed then that such a new process would demand, normally, new men – particularly the men who invented it, and usually young men. They were all old. That is at least my age – middle aged-ish.

E is eating as if she is about to acquire some dreadful disease which will include a loss of appetite, and so that while she is hungry she will eat and eat and eat. I keep on telling her that she is as round as she is tall which is a complete lie as apart from her impossible stomach and her hereditary double chin she is not really all that tubby. She is well covered though. She is one of those who can only diet when the mood takes her and then she goes too far. Since she doesn't have a weight problem of any consequence she could eat very well, not dieting and still remain trim without too much trouble, but milady has all the discipline of a mountain pony. I enjoy self imposed discipline, there must be a masochist hidden here somewhere, though in the matter of dieting I find it hardly any trouble at all. [...]

Evening

I finished my so called two days' work in less than a day since yesterday we worked only from three 'til 5.45 and today I cleared the lot by lunchtime. Much private rejoicing as I hate that aspect of the work. After it was over I saw a reel of the film leading up to and including the assassination. It will look good I'm sure when all the thuds and noises are put in and the blood is very effective and will be more so in a good print.

Trap and Joe [Joseph and Patricia Losey] and the children are coming for dinner and I have just seen a pair of diamond earrings for a cool million dollars. They were two pendant diamonds 30 carats each and very beautiful and superbly cut but I told Gianni Bulgari's man that the price was outrageous and that I would find it nasty to buy them even at $\frac{1}{2}$ half that cost.⁴⁰⁶ Bet you an offer nearer the latter than the former will come through ere long.

Saturday 18th, Ariel⁴⁰⁷ I stayed in bed for as long as I could bear it but finally – foot or no foot – I got me up and with cunning contortions managed to dress myself, sat me in a chair in the bedroom, placed another chair as a table and wrote yesterday's entry. I then began [...] the article for the Mail. I have a vague shape of it in my head and I did about 200 words though they have yet to be polished and balanced. At the moment I have only the vaguest idea as to how long it will be – anything from 1000 words to 3000 would be my guess.⁴⁰⁸ [...]

Chris arrived last night very late and I was so bushed that I simply couldn't wait up for him. [...] Chris looks magnificent and is his usual sarcastic denigrating nothing-is-any-good self. Ron and E say that last night he excelled himself and Ron said, 'You'd better get him the hell out of that school in Krautland Richard – they're turning him into a Nazi.' I replied that nobody had to worry about his turning into Attila the Hun but Attila was the bloke to worry about. What did he say or do, I asked. They said that after he arrived Vicky asked him if he wanted to play Yahtzee and he replied: No, it's a boring repetitive and stupid game. Well, said I, in Chris' defence he's right and it is. However, I agreed he might have been slightly more non-committal as everybody else there was obviously enjoying the game. In any case I would prefer, in anybody, more jaundice and cynicism than over-sentimentality.

Sunday 19th, Gstaad⁴⁰⁹ I went out last night to the Olden which was very crowded [...] Ron became sweetly and uncomfortably drunk very quickly and by uncomfortable I mean that I was afraid he was going to do something disastrous like fall off his chair or something. [...] we limped out and home in the car. Astonishingly after about 15 minutes at home and two games of table-tennis with Mike, Ron became merely pissed again instead of paralysed. [...]

Tuesday 21st, Ariel⁴¹⁰ Yesterday's entry is missing because I worked all day long, as I had most of the previous day and far into the night, on the story for the Mail. I read the first rough unhesitant plunging in up to the neck to Elizabeth who told me, though I was piqued at the time, but only for a second, that I must simplify it. So back I went to work, balancing and measuring and for the only time in my nothing writing life I looked up something in Roget's which I have never done before except for crossword puzzles and amusement. I can't remember what the word was that I was having difficulty with but in any case Roget's was no help and I ploughed on with my own built in one. I did almost all the work in long-hand, and not having written with pen and ink or pencil for many years I had the forgotten writer's cramp. It's very evident in the script, the writing starting off so neat and trim and mathematical and ending in huge drunken sprawling hieroglyphics. The deadline was this morning and assuming that I could send it by telex from the Palace Hotel I typed it laboriously out. Inevitably as I typed I deleted and added and changed the structure of sentences. I have never written anything so long (for publication I mean) in so short a time. The previous shortest for 2 or 3 thousand words was about 6 weeks. This one was 3,400 approx and in 3 days. Phew. I would have liked another week on it. E thinks it marvellous so that's ok and the Editor was bubbling over with words like Scoop. We all think it is a scoop. The staff are delighted etc. which is ok too. [...] I am worried about my sweet E. She doesn't seem to be at all well and her back is kicking up again like fury. It's a dreadful thing to think when we love this house so much but I am beginning to have the horrifying suspicion that the altitude is too much for her. She sparkled in Dubrovnik, she was radiant in Rome, she was a young girl in Paris but here she seems listless and slightly bored all the time, not just with me, but with everybody and everything. I think that already she is wishing that we were here just the two of us. We must use this time as a testing period for if it is the altitude then we must simply go lower down.

David Niven and wife Hjordis came up for an after lunch (at the Olden) drink and were in very good form and David, as usual, made us laugh a lot. He is tremendously excited about the success of his autobiography which is lovely to see and enjoy with him.

I feel so relaxed and almost smug about having got the article in on time and the Mail's liking it, but above all and especially E.

Brook and Liza arrived last afternoon and Claudye and Gianni arrived today so the house is now bursting at the seams though the latter couple are not staying with us but at the Olden.

Liza is a bundle of energy and I spoil her with shamelessness though I have to mentally belt her now and again.

Brook is irremediably sad and lonely. And he is still a drunk though he claims that at home he only drinks at weekends and then only wine. I feel so sorry for him and wish I could help him more.

1971

[Richard ceased making entries in his 1970 diary in early September as he was about to start making Villain in London. On 6 October Richard and Elizabeth attended the wedding of Michael Wilding Jr and Beth Clutter at Caxton Hall Registry in London, Richard acting as Michael's best man. In the same month they appeared with Joseph Losey at the Round House Cinema City Exhibition before a showing of Boom!, after which they discussed their work with the audience. Conversations took place at this time between Burton and Laurence Olivier, about the possibility of Burton succeeding Olivier as Director of the National Theatre. On 10 November 1970 Burton attended Buckingham Palace to receive his CBE. Elizabeth's long-serving secretary, Dick Hanley, died in Los Angeles in January 1971, but Taylor, then filming X, Y and Zee in London, was unable to attend the funeral. Burton and Taylor spent part of January 1971 filming Under Milk Wood in the vicinity of Fishguard, Pembrokeshire, Wales. In May Richard and Elizabeth began filming Hammersmith Is Out in Cuernavaca in Mexico. Richard began his 1971 diary in late June.]

JUNE

Sunday 27th, Gstaad Feel inordinately lazy and somewhat disappointed as the Tito treatment is not very good.¹ A series of loud bangs like any other old war film. I will attempt to get them to make it more Tito than guns and local partisan heroics, which, though probably true, have been seen in every Hollywood film ever made. If they do not I shall have to withdraw. I will still struggle away with learning Serbo-Croat. I find it fascinating. [...]

Monday 28th Have been up since seven. Two cups of coffee and it is now eight-thirty. Can't get up steam to do anything except loaf around. I am going through that period which I call my crossword-puzzle time. Can't read a book of any kind except illustrated art books and such stuff. Times, Telegraph and a collected edition of double-crossics from the Saturday Review and the puzzles from the Times and Telegraph are the present limit of my intellectual activity.² And a bit of Serbo-Croat thrown in for good measure.

Liza is at the most irritating and silly stage of her teens – at least I hope she is. It would be intolerable if it got worse. [...] Am getting another extra day off from Heathfield for Liza.³ Don't like to do it but she is so persistent that I give in just for a quiet life. Like W. C. Fields I really have no patience with young people.⁴ I find them all inordinately boring.

Must do something about Tito today or tomorrow. On reflection I think I could do something with it if I can persuade the writers to agree.

Wednesday 30th Missed yesterday as I have a gouty or arthritic left wrist, exquisitely uncomfortable. Usually I get it in the left ankle and foot. Better today but still uncomfortable and since Christy Brown wrote a whole and good book typing one letter at a time with one toe I argue that I should manage with one finger and an elbow.⁵ Or rather two fingers.

Raymond found the lost volumes of diaries in the wine cellar where I had put them before leaving Gstaad last time for England and Villain which I think is a goodish film but so far isn't doing very well in the States but has not yet opened in Britain and the Commonwealth where it should do better I hope.

Liza left for school yesterday inevitably forgetting to take her passport and ticket. A car was sent after her with the documents but she missed the plane and took the next one. It is a good 2½ hour drive to Geneva from here. I hope Mrs Ladas (known and named by me 'Snakes and Ladas') will not be too cross.⁶

Have just had an offer, by letter, from Stan Stennett (very broad Welsh comedian) to play the Baron in a Cinderella pantomime to be staged in Porthcawl!⁷ Must say I'd love to be in a panto. I've done practically everything else. Impossible of course. [...]

JULY

1st, Gstaad [...] I was so uncomfortable last night that in bed the slightest movement made me to groan as if demented. Elizabeth says that I am the world's champion 'conyn' which is Welsh for moaning hypochondriac. [...]

To my delight we were able to watch the Wimbledon male semi-finals on our TV set here all bright and beautiful in colour on eurovision. The matches themselves were badly one-sided – Gorman losing to Stan Smith and the formerly great Rosewall losing to Newcombe.⁸ The French announcer said they would, most of them, be playing at Gstaad next week so let us hope the weather keeps good.⁹ [...]

It looks as if I will do a film written by Tony Shaffer, twin brother of the other playwright Shaffer, in September instead of Tito.¹⁰ Perhaps the Jugs can shift the Tito affair to next spring when they could have a script with dialogue. If not will have to forgo same. Oddly enough Joe Losey called yesterday and asked if I would play Trotsky.¹¹ Trotsky and Tito in one week and both world famous communists. [...]

9th, Gstaad Wrote the [...] article for Vogue and at the behest of the editor, a lady called Beatrix Miller, who cornered me at the Snowdons' party a couple of weeks ago.¹² Left hand and wrist still gouty so am still typing with two fingers though can now use left hand for short periods. E did something bad to her back and is in agony. [...] We went out gouty and lumbered for half an hour to a cocktail party at the Palace hotel given for the tennis festival. There were no tennis players there as far as we could see but hordes of stupid middle-aged autograph hunters. E insisted on taking the masseur (Ulrich Behrens) and his wife to the party. They were frostily received by the management Messrs Scherz until they saw they were with us when their lofty scowls turned into beaming smiles of welcome. The Swiss are as snobbish as the British. You see Herr Behrens is a visiting masseur to the Palace Hotel. [...]

Sunday 11th Liza arrived yesterday evening accompanied by a large thunderstorm. [...] The weather until about four o'clock yesterday has been superb and I do most of my writing, Italian, French and Serbo-Croat in the sun. [...]

We go to see the tennis finals this morning. And then to lunch at the Palace perhaps. E's back much better. Liza looking like a cabbage out of which rises a beautiful face and wearing the most unflattering dress I've ever seen.

Monday 12th Went to see the men's singles finals. Newcombe of Australia and Okker of Holland. Newcombe won in five sets.¹³ Half a dozen good rallies but mostly serve and volley. [...]

Played table tennis with Liza after breakfast and again after lunch. Her conversation is entirely standard cliché and platitude out of Heathcliff, I mean Heathfield. Her accent is awful at the moment, a terrible amalgam of Berks and Kensington refrained. She is quite puppy fatted and pretends to be going on a diet with me and E but I don't think she'll stand it for very long. What she needs is a thumping lot of exercise. She went horse riding this morning and plays a couple of hours of ping pong a day with me which is a good thing for all concerned.

Wrote five letters yesterday and actually sent them off. Usually I write letters, which I like doing when in the mood and then find them in my briefcase six months later.

[...] Still not in a bookreading mood. Anything else will do. National Geographic, Encyclopedia Britannica, Larousse, painful reading of French and Italian. Well Italian is painful. French is ok reading one Maigret after another but not a sustained word in English. Heard in Cadonau's this morning that Julie Andrews is in town also that John Kenneth Galbraith has just left.¹⁴ Wish it were the other way round.

15th It's afternoon and am sitting on the lawn outside the library. Julie Andrews and Blake Edwards (husband, film director) came to dinner. They seemed very nice together. He had sent a book the day before by Kingsley Amis called the Green Man.¹⁵ It is, as one expects from Amis, expertly written but has 'don' written all over it. About ghosts which is never my cup of tea. But this one held my interest to the end which considering my inability to read at the moment is a fair old feat. They may use the house, this one at Xmas. Have ordered a lock-up filing cabinet to put away all the papers and diaries etc. Good idea anyway, even if we don't have visitors. Answered [...] letter from George Thomas, MP and wrote to David Harlech, Stan Baker and James Wishart passing on the message.¹⁶ [...] Why do we send such obvious mediocrities to the Commons when there are such brilliant chaps on every street corner at home? I suppose we are all so bloody lazy that we let the dull and insignificant – like Lord Llew Heycock for Christ's sake – who are prepared to go to party meetings in vestries and half-empty halls, do the job for us.¹⁷ [...]

16th Received [...] telegram yesterday from the editor of Vogue.¹⁸ Why do notices and things similar about what little writing I do thrill me and notices for acting leave me totally indifferent? I was on air for the rest of the day after getting Miller's cable regardless of whether she has any judgement or not. Elizabeth played a trick on me which for a moment took me in completely. I [...] was awoken from a fairly deep nap by E brandishing the telegram and saying 'Your first rejection slip. I'm sorry Rich.' She said that my face for a second was a pathetic sight and 'all scrunchled up' as if I were about to burst into tears. Cheeky devil.

[...] I am slowly recording on a Philips tape machine the whole of Assimil in English for our German masseur and his wife who are very anxious to learn English.¹⁹ The English is somewhat archaic – I imagine the text must be several decades old but it is good enough to start with. Also it means that I am getting a rough knowledge of German as I read the German listening to the English.

Sunday 18th [...] Very sad article yesterday in Ici Paris about the death of Maria's grandmother and the torment her mother and father have been suffering since allowing her to go for adoption.²⁰ Why don't the miserable French gutter press leave them alone. I have kept the article hidden away. Perhaps Maria will want to see such things one day.

Headlines in all the papers and front page that Nixon is going to meet Mao Tse Tung in Peking before next May.²¹ Fancy Nixon graduating to statesmanship. Perhaps the office has made yet another man though I find it hard to believe. I dislike drunkards (and he was drunk as the devil the last time I saw him – before becoming President) having dominion over palm and pine and me and mine.²²

Lovely down here in the library with the fire going and the beautiful books all around in disciplined ranks. [...]

We have our neighbours – who have been so generous with Maria, in for drinks tonight. They are Germans I think. [...]

Monday 19th [...] The German neighbours called Kehl, he's a banker in Dusseldorf and comes here for weekends only. She very outdoorsy looking, blonde and a little weathered though she can only be in her thirties. Skiers, horse-riders, early morning swimmers etc. and mountain walkers and picknickers. Nice enough. He with a loud cracked voice which seems typically Germanic and suggests an underlying nervousness. Perhaps hysteria. They must have a fair amount of money as the chalet next door, though smallish, must have cost a pretty penny and he flies to Gstaad from Dusseldorf every Friday and flies back again every Monday morning. Made fun of the German Swiss. Naturally. So did we rather lamely and affectionately. [...] Shall go shopping for odds and ends in a minute. I'm getting to the stage where I have a hatred of being stared at so the time for shopping for me is the early morning while the tourists are still a-bed and only the Swiss are around who couldn't give a cuss who you are. [...]

Wednesday 21st Spent most of yesterday with Yugoslavians about the Tito film. Lots of fascinating talk about Communism and Russia but mostly about Tito. Talked to Aaron who said it would be alright to postpone the other film²³ [...] We go, at Tito's invitation, to see him on the 28th instant. Should be very interesting to say the least. [...]

I start the film on the 15th of next month and the other film about the 15th of the month after. The former near Dubrovnik and the latter in Jersey.²⁴ Both places will be new to me and E.

[...] Have become very busy with my hands – gout and all – and managed to find out how to operate a very elaborate and very expensive Japanese TV machine which takes instant movies. Great fun fiddling about with it taking pictures of Liza and Maria on the trampoline, swings etc. [...]

Saturday 24th, Gstaad Leaving this morning by helicopter and plane for Nice and the Kalizma. [...]

Just discovered to my fury that Toronado, in perfect shape sold for 5000 Swiss francs. And who to? To Solowicz who was in charge of its sale.²⁵ Must investigate further.

Sat in sun yesterday and did nothing much except read the Tribune de Genève and listened to the Italian records.²⁶ Took Liza to the manege and walked E'en So for an hour while Liza went over the jumps.²⁷

The pound of chocolate that I ate the day before last has had no effect on my weight as far as the scales go. Still around 174. Should drop before long to 170.

Am seeing Mazlanski, Shaffer, Berkeley and uncle Tom Cobly on the Kalizma on Tuesday re Absolution, the film.²⁸ [...]

Sunday 25th, Kalizma Journey here, both copter and plane very smooth and very fast. [...] E moaned all day long about the condition of the boat. Only two glasses out of scores left. Must have all been smashed I suppose. Big stain on the back of one of the chairs and two more on the bed-head and the facing wall. E tamping.²⁹ Raymond with a face as long as a yard of ale because quite clearly the steward and stewardess don't know their jobs. The former at least doesn't know how to serve table and his wife says, if you please that she doesn't launder. There is a perfectly good laundry on board. All she has to do is stick the stuff in the machine hang it on the line and iron it. The new cook is amiable and good so far and oldish but Raymond says he is dirty around the kitchen. We shall see. Moved the yacht immediately from Monaco to Villefranche to avoid the gawkers who were slowly gathering.³⁰ Parked a few hundred yards from the shore at Villefranche. Very pretty. Niarchos' 'Creole' is a hundred yards away.³¹ E says that some one has bought it from him and he's going to buy another. [...]

Monday 26th, Monte Carlo Beth's baby was born yesterday at 2am.³² A girl, as yet nameless. We didn't know until this morning as we spent Saturday and Sunday moored off Villefranche. Great excitement and I broke my drinking fast for the first time since June 15. Had a glass of nasty champagne and two or was it three stiffish martinis. Knocked me sideways and I slept for three or more hours this afternoon. We are off to London tomorrow morning and will stay until Thursday to muck about with the parents and baby.

Watched a very spectacular fireworks display tonight. This one put on by the Germans. The Portuguese and English still to come. They'll have to be good to beat the Germans. But then the Germans never play at anything and are always at war.

Telegram from Popovic to say we are expected in Pula at 10am Saturday 31st to meet Tito etc.³³ [...]

Tuesday 27th, Kalizma, Carlo Beautiful morning and early. [...] Excited at seeing the baby. Monte Carlo with all its new apartment blocks is becoming an eyesore. Towering block after towering block and also has become very noisy. [...]

There are a lot of things I can do in London – the meeting with Shaffer et al. Find out from Wishart and Eagles what the hell is going on at 2, Squire's Mount.³⁴ See Ivor and Gwen and depress myself. Call Kate if possible. Call Frosch if possible.

Both E and I in good humour so far. Will continue if she's on time. [...]

Have just received Deakin's book on Yugoslavia and the battle of Sutjeska.³⁵ Shall read it in London and on plane, though probably will do French and Italian via cassettes Assimil. Passes the time wonderfully.

Only one mention in the Express yesterday of the baby's birth. Thought there would be far more fuss. Might happen today with our arrival at London Airport. Just as well if there is none. [...]

Wednesday 28th, Dorchester [...] Yesterday, apart from the little baby – six pounds born – was a terrible day. Michael started it by announcing point-blank that he had no intention of continuing as Gianni Bozzacchi's assistant and that he was going to be a pop-group musician. Since he plays no known instrument with anything like proficiency and neither do any of his friends this is a hazardous prospect at the best. When he hurts and disappoints E as he does time after time I sometimes really feel physically violent. [...] The house is a mess apparently and is full of spongers and drifters. This we settle for but it hardly seems a fair place to take a child who is exquisite and Beth, also exquisite, who quite clearly loathes the atmosphere [...]. There is nothing to do but wait for him to grow up and think for himself. And the gaps in his knowledge are alarming. I had hoped that, when he quit school, that he would fill up the crevices by self-education but he still reads only what's currently fashionable among his friends. Mad Magazine and the inevitable Hesse, a phony, and Alistair Crowley, who is a joke.³⁶ He had professed a fascination with the Book of Revelations which I had talked to him about in Cuernavaca – particularly the 13th chapter.³⁷ He couldn't wait to read it he said. Yesterday I asked him if he'd thought about it any more, or if he'd read more Blacke.³⁸ Nothing. He had done nothing.

Ivor is very near the end. Death is written all over his face. He did not know me when I saw him yesterday. He can barely speak. He is already dead. I wish he were. The sight of Ivor, after the emotional disturbance of baby and Beth and Michael, finally reduced E to tears and she sobbed all the way back to the Dorchester and sometime afterwards. Liza was an angel to Elizabeth and cwtched her as the positions were reversed as 'twere and Liza was the mother and E the child. I love that child. She can be a bit of a bastard at times but she is fundamentally an angel and great in a crisis. So that was something splendid out of the day. Oddly enough the day had started in Monte Carlo by Liza and E having a quarrel about clothes which ended with E slapping Liza. Liza is going through a period where she thinks she is fat and ugly. Everybody but she thinks she is ravishing but there's no way of persuading her. And so to business and meeting Kate at Ivor's and buying books and thank the good God back to the Kalizma in the morning.

Thursday 29th, Dorchester A long long day. I waited for the Brass to turn up at 11 o'clock yesterday morning but they didn't and when I finally called I gave Ron Berkeley a severe tongue-lashing for making such a mess of the appointment.³⁹ I saw them at 6 instead and they were pleasant enough and it seems we shall go ahead with the film on September 15th as planned. Shaffer is a fat man biggish with prematurely grey hair and something wrong with his left eye. He told strange stories of being a Bevin boy in the last war but by no means an ordinary one – he was in intelligence and was a counter spy, he says, on the look out for infiltratory agents intent on sabotage.⁴⁰ Did you catch anybody asked somebody and if so what did you do with them? I shot them he said, or rather arranged for them to be killed. This is very easy in the mines he said. I didn't believe a word of it and said so. He said he had written it up he said but was not allowed to publish because of the official secrets act etc.⁴¹ I shall see a lot of him in the next few weeks and shall delve further. It all seems a little too fantastic. But it could it seems be true. The British Secret Service is famous for its amateur idiocies. He insisted that it was still top secret and should not be repeated. But, I said, you have just told it openly to four perfect strangers. Yes but you must promise me not to tell any one else. I shall tell everybody immediately I said.⁴²

Christopher Miles – brother of Sarah Miles, the actress – and the director of the film is a tiny fellow with bright sharp humouress eyes.⁴³ He looks as if he knows what he wants and will insist that he gets it. The film is to be shot in Jersey where I understand the natives are bilingual. It will be interesting I hope. The snaps they showed me of the locations seem quite right. Mazlanski seems to be out of his depth in the film world of high finance.

The delightful Kate was with us from noon on and was her usual charming self. Giggles a great deal and pretends to be appalled by my occasional irreverencies. She is a joy and went to the hospital to see the nameless one while I went to Claude Gill's to buy books for the yacht.⁴⁴ Maria came with me and I bought a very catholic selection of books. A couple of Dickens and a few thrillers and horror stories for Liza and Hornblower for Chris and a few volumes of poetry in French, Welsh and English for myself. The French ones have prose translations which will save me a lot of bother. Also brought a lot of pocket dictionaries French Italian Spanish German. Also brought books for the chauffeur Charles Simpson's sons who are showing interest in school work.

Another telegram from Sarajevo [...] God knows what to expect in Brioni with Tito and his lads.⁴⁵ [...]

Saturday 31st, en Route to Lupa, Yugoslavia [...] Lupa which was variously announced as being 2¹/₂ hours by air then 1¹/₂ and now we are told 65 minutes away.⁴⁶ [...] Reading, in proof, Deakin's book about the partisans which is full of good stories. Must see him (Deakin) when we get back. [...]

Arrived safely and were taken by car – Mercedes-Benz – to and through Pula where a boat awaited us. A mass of photographers and journalists and TV people at the airport to meet us. Usual questions – ‘What's it feel like to play a great man?’ ‘How much do you know about Tito?’ They have given us a villa not far from Tito's. Very hot – no air conditioning. [...]

Madame Broz (she prefers to be called that to ‘Tito') was at the villa to meet us.⁴⁷ Big woman and very peasant looking and utterly charming with a devastating smile. Speaks a little English and understands more. We were offered canapés (which I ate, removing the bread), and champagne which I refused and delicious Turkish coffee which I didn't refuse.

Our 'apartment' upstairs consists of a large bedroom and large sitting room with two huge bathrooms. We understand that this was Jane Swanson's family house when this belonged to Italy up to 1945. Jane Swanson is our secretary who lives on 1/2 pay when she doesn't work for us. We shall take pictures of the house to show her. Now off to lunch with Tito.

AUGUST

Sunday 1st, Brioni A long but enjoyable day spent apart from a short nap in the afternoon and until 7.30pm – with Tito. We went to his house – a few minutes from ours about midday. He and wife and cameras were waiting for us. (Later we saw ourselves on TV being greeted). We sat in one corner of a large room, one end of which was the dining area. There were two tables. We sat at one with the President and Madame Broz and two interpreters and a couple of other unidentified people. We presented the President and wife with our present from Van Cleef and Arpels – a chunk of pyrite (?) with a clock set into it.⁴⁸ I told Tito, after being asked what I thought of the script, that I thought he was weakly presented in it and should be stronger and that the part was too small. He said it was OK to make it larger which pleased the director Deli to no end.⁴⁹ So perhaps I'll have something better to do than just stand around and look like a man of destiny.

The President is surprisingly small and delicate. Little short arms and legs and a small head with little features. He wears slightly tinted glasses and I can't really tell the colour of his eyes. He has quite a pot-belly but the rest of him is slim – no bottom and thin chest and legs. He walks slowly and with short steps. When he sits down behind a table he seems most formidable. I'm slightly put out by the nervousness with which the servants serve us all. They live in remarkable luxury unmatched by anything else I've seen and [I] can well believe Princess Margaret who says the whole business makes Buck House look pretty middle-class. After lunch the President and I talked a great deal about the war and Sutjeska in particular. I asked him if he liked Stalin. He took a long time to answer and finally said he 'liked him or rather admired him as a politician but disliked him as a man.' Most of the time he talked Serbo-Croat but when we were alone talked slow but adequate English. I said I had read that he was fluent in French and perhaps he would prefer to speak in that tongue but he appeared not to have heard me and continued in English until, with obvious relief, the interpreter rejoined us, and he rattled away in Serbo-Croat again.

He called for us at 4pm in a convertible Lincoln-Continental – ‘a present from the people of Zagreb’ I think he said – and started to drive – E in front beside him and me behind with Madame Broz. He immediately punctured the front right tyre by driving over a very sharp curbstone not 50 yards from the house. Instead of stopping and cutting the engine he revved-up and we jerked and jolted about for a nerve-racking 10 seconds or so. We left the car and went on foot to visit a small zoo with an elephant and ibex and elands etc. Gazelles too. He suddenly looked very old and even smaller after the car incident but was soon his old confident self again. He seemed a little apprehensive of the elephant when feeding it. To my horror – after about 15 minutes (and to E's horror too I found out later) – the Continental turned up again all mended and we took up the drive once more. He drove at a funeral's pace but my (and E's) heart was in my mouth for the rest of the journey, which was a tour of the entire island. I was very glad to get back to his villa. He was obviously used to power-steering and power-brakes and we all threatened to go through the windscreen every time he stopped to show us something or other. But he and Madame were so charming that one forgives them anything. He loves animals and trees and has a huge collection of both on the island and elsewhere, we gathered.

At one point I asked him what he would have done had Churchill had his way and instead of opening a Second Front gone straight up through the Balkans and Austria etc. and cut off the Russian advance.⁵⁰ He answered without hesitation: ‘We would have stopped you. We had, by this time, 35 divisions, all battle trained, and a great deal of arms taken from the Italians and Germans.’ I suppose he would have, at that and another war would have developed. Almost in the same breath he said that he trusted Churchill but not the British. Nobody it seems trusts the British. We really are, to the foreigner, ‘perfidious albion.’⁵¹

We finally got home about seven and had yet another enormous meal. This time I weakened and had some ice-cream. Later, having already weakened, I ate two bars of choc while watching S. Tracy in a film – rather good – called Bad Day at Black Rock.⁵² Scales show 79kg this morning 174lbs nearly. Saw many stills this morning. I looked very haggard. Perhaps I'm getting too thin. Tito looked rubicund and toby-juggish in comparison. I should film well though. Will certainly look hungry!

Monday 2nd Another day spent almost entirely with the President. I woke late – for me, 7.40. – and had breakfast down by the sea. As usual it was too much. Cold meats, ham, salami etc. Tea. An omelette. Hot sausage. Many sweet cakes. More tea. Then at 9.30 saw Deli Ć, Popovi Ć and a P.R. man who asked me a lot of questions about why I was doing it all etc. For the umpteenth time I went through my stock verbiage. ‘Great man’, ‘great opportunity’. ‘Hope I can do justice’ etc. I hope, more aptly, that they can do justice to me. Give me the tools, i.e. part, and I’ll get on with the job.⁵³ Were it not, actually, for E’s delight in the power and glory of it all I would do my best to cut and run – so great is the strain of boredom – especially the interminable translated conversation. Both Tito and Madame Broz tell long stories which they don’t allow the interpreters to interrupt result being that by the time the latter have finished one couldn’t care less what the story is about. Madame has a very penetrating voice which, after a time, becomes extremely tiresome. And protocol demands that I’m always with her and the President with E. And they have a professional interpreter whereas I have a minister’s wife whose English leaves a lot to be desired. Mrs Broz smiles all the time and so does the interpreter.

In the morning at precisely 9.50 we left the house for the President’s villa. Then straight on to a small powerful yacht – 35 knots top speed, 160 tons, 120 feet – and went belting off down through all the hundreds of islands in this part of the world. Lovely towns and hundreds of spanking new hotels. The beaches, mostly rock, were crawling with tourists. They average 30,000,000 a year they kept on saying. Almost everybody waved at the Presidential Yacht and he waved back. So did E and Raymond. As soon as we were aboard drinks were served – whisky for the President and wife and E and local red wine for the others and a gin marguerita for some and the inevitable water for me. From then on the same booze was produced at regular intervals for the rest of the day. We disembarked at the President’s villa after about two hours at sea during all of which time we were escorted by two torpedo boats and a police launch. The President proudly told me that his coast was the best defended in Europe and that guns, submarines and gunboats were hidden under all the cave-infested islands.

Occasionally through the binoculars which were amply supplied I would glimpse a sailor at attention on some remote hillock rigidly saluting. We had lunch on a little island facing Brioni, not without the excruciating examination of the house and grounds. ‘This is from Indonesia from Sukarno himself.’⁵⁴ ‘This is work from the people of Macedonia.’ ‘This is from the Sudan.’ I noticed that most faces bore fixed smiles of boredom long before the end of lunch and despite the fact that they were drinking. E's face of course, was an exception. She is having a ball. It is as well that I'm not drinking or I might be asking some very awkward questions. There were occasional bright moments. Tito in English: 'I was very glad when my grandmother died.' E: 'Why?' Tito: 'Because it meant she stopped beating me.' E: 'That's an awful thing to say.' Tito: 'She was small but strong and always angry.' He met Churchill who was in the vicinity on Onassis's yacht. Winston C. accepted a very small whisky. Tito had his usual large one. 'Why so small a portion?' asked Tito. 'You taught me to drink large ones.' 'That was when we both had power,' said Winston C. 'Now I have none and you still have yours.'

Power does corrupt. I doubt whether Tito sees the ordinary Joe Soap from whom he came except when the latter waves a flag and carries a banner. At least he doesn't keep his people waiting. Last night we went to see a film in the Roman Theatre at Pula. The streets were lined with sailors rigidly at attention behind them being masses of people who applauded the whole route. E was the star of the evening – much more so, or at least equal to Tito. When we entered the coliseum – 6000 people capacity – they all stood up and gave an ovation. E deeply thrilled. Me cynical as ever. The film was fun. The inevitable tray of drinks was presented at the same intervals throughout the film. We had earphones with an English translation. [...]

Tuesday 3rd Have just come back from the minute island of 'La Madonna' which is just off the front of our villa which I discover is called 'Jadaranda' I think. We see the President and Madame for the last time this trip at noon. It is now 11.30. We had a swim and breakfast on Madonna. I eat nothing and have, in fact, eaten nothing since lunch yesterday except one plum and a vitamin pill. Rarely have I stuffed myself as much as I did at lunch yesterday on the President's island – not Brioni, the other little retreat. Madame Broz likes to play practical jokes, so I understand but is restrained by the Marshal.

Had a 3 hour discussion with Tito about Sutjeska, Mihailovi , , , British, Churchill, Allies, Stalin and Uncle T. Cob. which I will type up later when I get back to the Kaliz this afternoon.⁵⁵ [...] Am still worried by the atmosphere of dread which surrounds Tito. Cannot understand it. Neither can the rest of us.

Thursday 5th, Villefranche Have been back since Tuesday. [Monte] Carlo a nuisance as usual so nipped over here for a slice of quiet. Michael Caine on board from his rented yacht – a veritable tub that bobs like a cork.⁵⁶ He has a nice girl with him called Suzy Kendall who is married and presumably separated from her husband who is a comedian called Dudley Moore.⁵⁷ Michael speaks in a shout which becomes a bit hard in a small room. He is very funny and very cockney most of his 'wit' being a regular and repeated pattern of catch-phrases. 'Black as your hat,' 'A turkish religion with a tip-up seat' etc. All repeated at various times during the day. Spends his time going to discotheques and parties of which, down here, there are hundreds. Many good reports of XYZ from all kinds of sources so E might have a big one again. [...]

Wednesday 11th, Kalizma We left Monte Carlo two or three days ago and went to Portofino which is as enchanting as ever and where of course we inevitably met Rex Harrison and his future wife Elizabeth Rees-Williams. She was married to an actor – very good I believe, though I have never met him or seen him – called Richard Harris. Professional Irish type I gather, getting drunk and fighting when sufficiently so. Rex came on the K at cocktail time and was already paralysed with booze. So was the Rees-Williams. Acutely painful hour or so with Rex being endlessly repetitive and eventually tottering on the brink of outright rudeness. We all agreed after they had left that this couple were among the most unattractive we'd come across in a long time and the thought of their getting married before the end of the month a monstrous joke. She is a kind of brazen blonde type with a veneer of finishing school. I feel very protective about Rex as I fear this woman is not just a harum-scarum shouter and bawler like Rache but a devious minx on the make. She looked ugly with dissipation and so did Rex. His casual elegance was noticeably lacking and he has put on a lot of weight – tremendous pot and jowls. E and I sat up in bed after they had gone and after dinner and had a smug hour telling each other how lucky we are in that we have each other and that we like each other. And so on. And by god we are lucky in virtually every way. E kept on saying: How lucky we are to love each other. Too right.

We were hoping to get away from M.C. days before we did because there is no peace there and we were inundated with visitors. Niven, Van Cleef and Arpels from whom I bought a 'Leo' necklace with a lion pendant for E as a 'granny present'. It is very pretty and cost $27,000. She loves it. 'Leo' is the child's Zodiac sign. M. Caine and Suzy Kendall. Messages from Grace and Rainier asking us to come to the Red Cross Ball held outside the Opera. Tried like mad to get out of it but couldn't very well and anyway it turned out to be an entertaining evening. I had Grace one side of me and a young baroness the other who is Paul Gallico's daughter – or rather step-daughter – who was very sweet and thrilled and is going to be an actress.⁵⁸ She calls herself, for the stage, Ludmilla Kova I think.⁵⁹ Shouldn't think she'll get anywhere. Gallico, who is 74 and looks 55, impressed E very much but her favourite Rainier was as much fun as ever she tells me. He is an extraordinarily nice man and very bright which for some reason always surprises me in royalty.

We are half way between Portofino and Porto Santo Stefano where I shall see Losey as I've decided to do Trotsky. Absolution, for which I had high hopes has fallen through financially and I was forced to give it up and do Trotsky in between 'Tito' shooting. Got rid of Hugh French in as nice a way as possible and asked John Heyman to revert to his old job of agent for a while. He is in Belgrade at this moment chatting the Slav money boys up.

Thursday 12th En route to Porto Santo Stefano where we should have some or will have some word from Heyman. If all goes well I shall be playing Tito on Monday though I'm so lazy and enjoying the bateau so much that wouldn't be averse to a few days or even a couple of weeks postponement. Wouldn't actually be suicidal if the whole thing were scrapped until next Spring, say, or scrapped altogether for that matter.

[...] Children and E watched a film of mine called Prince of Players which I made about seventeen years ago.⁶⁰ [...] I remember the high hopes I had of that film and my disappointment at its indifferent reception. The original script by Moss Hart was very good when I agreed to do it but a year later when I actually did it had been murdered by Zanuck and his hacks.⁶¹ Some of it was saveable however which accounts for what little success we had. It seems to me that I was outrageously pretty in those days and much prefer my present hard and ravaged countenance. [...] Like last year, I am enjoying not drinking though there have been one or two close calls. [...] It is easy when I am alone with E as she rarely gets drunk. About the only time I get testy with E is when she has had a couple of drinks and has taken a 'pink' pill (a pain-killer) or prematurely taken a sleeping pill which are mild enough but in conjunction with the booze makes her speech funny and gives her a kind of false euphoria and she becomes sentimental and a bit reminiscent of her mother. Since her mother is the bore of all epochs this can be a bit hard.

We have had a tremendous amount of unsought for publicity in the last few weeks and publicity of the world-wide kind. The daggers incident.⁶² The grandchild, Tito – which was news-reeled all over the world I understand – and guests-of-honour at Grace and Rainier's Red Cross Ball. One Italian newspaper yesterday said that La Taylor continues to astonish the world and can say to all her rivals that she is still the greatest headline maker of them all. Rubbish but pleasant. It is phenomenal the continued attention we get. Literally there must be millions of words written about us and hundreds of thousands of photographs. Once the girls thought that they would save all the photos of E or me or both on the covers of magazines and plaster them all over the wall of the games room in Gstaad – but there were so many, even in a short time, that they abandoned the idea as they decided they, the covers, would cover the whole house. [...]

Friday 13th, Porto Santo Stefano⁶³ Confusing telegram and messages from John Heyman. [...] Cable from Heyman says something like Expect conclude satisfactory deal this weekend. Popovi ć says you (meaning me, RB) not interested in money and doing film because you are such a great fan of Tito's. You expected Dubrovnik Monday, and then four question marks. ??? [...] We are parked outside Stefano Harbour – there are two actually –and will go in with E and Raymond at 9 o'clock to phone [...] and find out what I can.

The other reason for going in is to visit the café where we had our first and near-fatal drink one near-dawn morning on our way to the next bay for a clandestine weekend. I had driven E from Rome in the small hours in a rented car – a small two-seater Fiat as I remember – in order to escape the paparazzi. The town was a grave at that hour and in the bar-café were only a couple of people and a boy and a dog and a waiter. All the world press were searching for us. We thought we had got clean away. One of the anonymous gentlemen in the bar was a newspaper man on a humdrum assignment to cover the arrival of Dutch royalty. And lo and behold there in front of his eyes were the 'hottest' and most scandalous couple in the world. We left the place after a coffee and cognac apiece or perhaps we had two and drove in smug blissfulness to the hotel who had set aside for us a half-finished and small villa which was half a mile from the hotel, looked stupendously over the sea and was completely isolated. We gambolled like children, scrambling down the rocks to the sea and enjoying ourselves as if it was the last holiday. We found out soon enough that every bush – and there were hundreds of them – contained a paparazzo. We were well and thoroughly trapped. The weekend turned immediately from an idyll into a nightmare. We drank to the point of stupefaction and idiocy. We couldn't go outside. We were not married. We were impregnated with guilt. We tried to read. We failed. We couldn't go out. We made a desperate kind of love. We played gin

rummy. E kept on winning and oddly enough out of this silly game came the crisis. For some reason – who knows or remembers the conversation that led up to it? – E said that she was prepared to kill herself for me. Easy to say, I said, but no woman would kill herself for me etc. with oodlings of self-pity. Who knows what other kind of rubbish was said. Who remembers from so long ago with everything shrouded in a miasma of alcohol what was said. Out of it all came E standing over me with a bottle or box of sleeping pills in her hand saying that she could do it. Go ahead, I said, or words along those lines, whereupon she took a handful and swallowed them with gusto and no dramatics. I didn't believe that they were sleeping pills at first. For all I knew they could be Vitamin C or anything else. She then, I think, took herself off to bed in an adjoining room. From then I hardly remember any detail. Vague memories of trying to get her awake, of realizing that she wasn't joking, running around looking for that awful 'contessa' who, I discovered later was having an affair with our sometimes chauffeur Mario, searching also for the latter. Loading E into a car and a hair-raising drive to Rome and a hospital and hiding at home because officially E had a tummy complaint or some other excuse which the press told immediately to the Marines. Not being able to go to the hospital because of the snappers and not answering the telephone to all the disaster-lovers like Roddy McDowall and Manciewicz and almost everybody.⁶⁴

So now we have just come back from the very same café where E had a cafe latte and a cognac as she did that time ago, and I noticed that it was Friday the 13th. I mean today and decided that I didn't want any repetition of that awful Easter. By God, what if she'd died. Worse, what if she'd lived with an impaired brain? I'm perfectly sure that I am incapable of suicide so presumably I would still be alive. What would I be doing? Maybe I would have drowned myself in booze by this time. Anyway, it's all over though never forgotten. It certainly has cured any thoughts of suicide from this family. In that year also Sybil had a go at knocking herself off. I was furious with her but not furious oddly enough with E. I suppose I must have been thinking of Kate being motherless and didn't think similarly of Liza, Maria et al. being likewise because they were still little-seen-known or loved by me at the time. [...]

Still Friday 13th, Approaching Anzio⁶⁵ [...] Tito told me that he never ever raised his voice above ordinary conversational level during his whole life, except where distances were involved – shouting across a valley for instance – and that he had always found it infinitely more effective and on occasions much deadlier than a Hitlerian or Mussolinian storm.

Kate and I discussed the day-to-day aspect of our lives and how strange it must be for people in ordinary jobs with a regular pay-packet to understand a life where, like today, we don't know whether we shall be in Yugoslavia tomorrow or Naples or both. Hopefully it will be Naples, or rather Ischia which is or was one of our favourite places.⁶⁶ I'm told though that it is now over-run with German tourists.

Almost in Anzio. Lovely dirty little port. And a working one to boot which I always love.

Saturday 14th, Anzio So at last the Tito deal has been fixed. I start a week on Monday – i.e. the 23rd of August and I am to be paid $50,000 expenses and $250,000 cash and vast percentages, starting at 10% of the first dollar and working up to 50% of the world grosses. I should end up with several hundred thousand dollars with an average return. A big hit of course could bring in untold monies though we are perfectly content with what we have. Heyman had just flown from the States which means that in less than a week, a week which he considers normal, he has flown from London to Nice, Nice to Rome, Rome to Belgrade, Belgrade to NY and New York to Rome and to us.⁶⁷ He flies back to Belgrade today and then from there to Messina (where we shall be) on Monday.⁶⁸ He is a very fast moving young man. He said the other day that he wants to retire from this business at 45, he is about 35, go into politics when his aim will be to abolish all forms of prejudice by way of a complete top to bottom revolution in education.⁶⁹ You might say he is a little ambitious.

My favourite kind of present, albeit a working present, was brought today by one of Losey's aides – a fat three volume paperback edition of Isaac Deutscher's Trotsky.⁷⁰ Days of splendid reading. And on a yacht too, at sea, with no telephone calls, no cables and all work set up for the next half year. Bliss.

[...] My refresher course in Italian has worked wonders and I find myself chatting away like mad. The Serbo-Croat has come to a stop as the discs they sent me have been completely fouled up in Nice by the man who transferred them to cassettes. Half the way through the first cassette the speakers go mad and jump from lesson to lesson like a back-played soundtrack.

Sunday 15th, Capri [...] E saw Cleopatra last night with all the kids. I popped in at one point for about ten seconds and went away and slept for another couple of hours. No reflection on the film! As a matter of fact E said this morning that the film is not at all bad – marvellous spectacle and all that. My lack of interest in my own career, past present or future is almost total. All my life I think I have been secretly ashamed of being an actor and the older I get the more ashamed I get. And I think it resolves itself into a firm belief that the person who's doing the acting is somebody else. That accounts presumably for my fury if anybody shows me anything about my acting in the magazines and journals. I don't mind the gossip stuff like 'seen walking on the Via Veneto last night' or 'The Burtons on their luxury yacht' etc. And I am equally angry whether I am praised or damned though mostly I'm praised. The press have been sounding the same note for many years – ever since I went to Hollywood in the early fifties, in fact – that I am or was potentially the greatest actor in the world and the successor to Gielgud Olivier etc. but that I had dissipated my genius etc. and 'sold out' to films and booze and women. An interesting reputation to have and by no means dull but by all means untrue. [...]

Monday 16th, Ischia-Messina Sitting on the poop with a mug of real coffee [...] and the Kalizma steaming flat out with not a quiver on the waves. [...] Italians are shrieking on the radio and E is sitting opposite me having her 'breakfast' consisting of vodka and orange juice. A habit she picked up from me in my drinking days. A good start to the day if confined to one. In my case, sadly it had become as much as three and even more if there was anyone game enough to join me. A bottle before lunchtime was by no means unusual and a pleasant but ruined morning behind me.

We left Capri, the Marina Grande, about 4 o'clock [in the] afternoon and sailed to Ischia where we parked off-shore from the Isabella Regina where we used to live in sin while locating for Cleopatra.⁷¹ We went ashore to the pizzeria which we used to do then. Everybody had his or her pizza and then we attempted to do some shopping. I say attempted because the crowds became so great that we had to abandon it and run for the Riva and the Kalizma. [...]

As usual I am beginning to have butterflies in the belly at the thought of starting work again and don't even have the nerve-deadener of a script to learn as I know it is being entirely re-written. At least, I hope it is. So I continue with Italian and French and Frances Stevenson's [diary] re Lloyd George and Trotsky's life.⁷² My ignorance of the latter was monumental. I didn't know that he was one of the Mensheviks, for instance, or that he vilified Lenin so harshly.⁷³ As for Frances Stevenson, her diary is sweet but she sometimes makes Lloyd George sound like a boastful little nothing.⁷⁴ Writing only his version of events and being constantly challenged by history in the shape of dry little footnotes by the editor, A. J. P. Taylor. [...]

Tuesday 17th, Ionian Sea [...] E read the diary yesterday and said I'd forgotten to mention the cig-holder given to her by Tito. It is the famous one, much cartooned, which he used to flourish a lot at the UN and other convocations holding it as if it were a pencil with hot end up. She passed many many remarks on its unusual beauty assuring him it must be a Fabergé.⁷⁵ It seems to me that no one there knew what a Fabergé was or is. However after two days of subtle brow-beating he gave it to her. She kissed him on both cheeks which gratified him enormously. He gave me a bunch of flowers. He also gave us a lot of his own home-produced wine made in his own vineyards. [...] There is some trouble brewing up again on his borders with Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. Doubtless he'll be able to handle it. Geographically of course, he has that coveted access to the sea which all the land-locked have greedy eyes on. I understand a sight more about Russia's behaviour between the wars since reading Trotsky and for the first time Stalin's pogroms and purges take on a kind of historical inevitability. [...]

Wednesday 18th, Adriatic [...] Am still deep in Trotsky and so far the man who comes out as the most enigmatically fascinating is Stalin. I must get Deutscher's book about him as soon as I get back to an English library.⁷⁶ I could order it to be sent to Rome for the start of the Trotsky film.

[...] We are due in Dubrovnik in about four hours and am beginning to feel nervous again about Tito. Jesus I hope they have a part for me to get hold of. I have all rights outside Jug[oslavia] so I must do my best to get things done so that I can re-cut and if necessary cut out some of the things they might get up to. That is, if the director is as average as he seems to be. We shall soon find out. How splendid it will be if the director is very good.

I want to persuade them – I have done so partially – to included a great [deal] more stuff about the British Military mission's reaction to Tito and his struggle. A lot more emphasis on his refusal to try and merely talk the British – Deakin principally – into getting Allied support but to show them by the deeds of his partisans that they were really fighting the German and Italian and Bulgarian armies. I also want to show in as low-key a fashion as possible Tito's life-long refusal to shoot captured enemies, even Četnik traitors. He told me of one terribly bitter story. He had a few hundred German prisoners and was at a point where he was forced to retreat. To carry the prisoners with him would have been a tremendous strain on his ever-slender resources. So he informed the senior German officer that he was releasing them to find their own way back to their commands. They were astonished but delighted, naturally. The usual treatment in that kind of warfare was to shoot all prisoners. He also hid his own injured men who were not able to move in what he thought was a safe place. He found out later that the released Germans returned as soon as he had disappeared and slaughtered the helpless partisans. Even so, he never wreaked vengeance. The other day, I noticed that Mihaaelovic [sic], the Royalist Četnik leader died of old age.⁷⁷ He had not been shot when he was caught but given a trial, found justly guilty of collaboration with the enemy and sentenced to life imprisonment (I believe) but not shot. When we were with Tito he said how sorrowful he was that one of his favourites in the Sudan coup which was happening then had shot out of hand scores of political and military prisoners.⁷⁸ This had turned him off completely. I asked him if he had ever lost his temper during those harrowing years of ravenous warfare. He said he had only done so twice. Once when he and some of his men were trapped in a cave and one by one tried to break out against heavy and concealed enemy fire. He said he blazed away at a helplessly trapped company of Germans who were in a captured jeep. Once when Deakin came to him to tell him that, after the capitulation of Italy, all captured Italian arms, ammunition, tanks etc. should be held and handled over to the Allies. Deakin mentions this in his book too saying it was the first time he, Deakin had seen the Marshal go mad with rage.⁷⁹ Among many little oddities I found from Tito [was] that he shaved everyday of the war except one day, the one day, when he was wounded in the left upper arm by bomb splinters. And that he dressed as impeccably as was possible throughout the whole madness. Another bit: he had sent a message to Stalin telling him of his release of the German prisoners. He received a brutally nasty telegram from Stalin in reply to which he sent a cold reply saying the unless Stalin could send him, Tito, material assistance, or at least the morale-lifting presence of a military mission, he should mind his own business. When later Tito went to Moscow to see Stalin there was a small party at which, among many others, was the dreaded Beria, chief of the Secret Police.⁸⁰ Many toasts were drunk and all inevitably to Stalin. Tito had not had a drink of any alcoholic kind during four years and the eternal vodka was hitting him very hard. When his turn to toast came he toasted the inevitable Stalin, whereupon Stalin said with deadliness ‘Why do you toast me now after sending me that insulting telegram?’ Tito mumbled some placatory answer but the atmosphere was charged with menace. Later feeling sick from the vodka Tito went out into the grounds to throw up. A shadow appeared among the trees. It was Beria who said: 'Don't worry, it is only your friendly policeman!'

Thursday 19th, Dubrovnik We arrived off Dubrovnik at 5.15 yesterday afternoon and waited for the pilot for whom we continued to wait and wait. [...] When the pilot finally appeared before our puzzled eyes he explained that there was an hour time difference between Italian and Yugoslavian time. Hence the muck-up.

To our surprise, puzzlement and delight there wasn't a soul to meet us. The wharf was a desert [...] After about half an hour the inevitable little John Howard appeared telling us that everybody was on tenterhooks waiting for us to come.⁸¹ The radio and TV had been on about it for days. Were we coming by jet, private, or our yacht. We were due on Wednesday morning, Wednesday evening, we were coming by sea-plane on Thursday! Within half an hour they descended on us like Assyrians. Popovi Ć, Deli Ć, Stepanjek, yet another interpreter a General in full get-up – didn't get his name but sounded like Vuko something – the press representative.⁸² [...] The Slavs seem unexpectedly to have a manana sense of time except so far Tito.⁸³ He was as fanatically on the dot as I am. [...]

Friday 20th [...] The house is enormous and totally impersonal and it seems that we are the first people to sleep [there]. Despite its vastness it only contains four bedrooms, two of them gigantic and containing two equally gargantuan study-offices adjoining. The other two are your large but not awe-inspiring bedrooms. The groundfloor 'lounge' and dining-room which leads off from it is about the size of a tennis court. There are 17 servants only one of whom speaks English or Italian and badly at that. So I have temporarily married my Serbo-Croat phrase book. Have you ... and nouns nouns nouns. Coffee, tea, onions, tomatoes.

Everybody means well but we shall quietly move back to live on the yacht. It is cooler and there is no language problem for E when I'm not around and the beloved books are ambient.

The yacht is parked very precariously near the steps leading up to the house and is potentially dangerous in case of a sudden sirocco so on local advice we are moving today to a little harbour about three miles away. Since leaving the yacht here is inviting everybody, and there are many many people around, to a perpetual 'open house', it is a good idea to get away. Yesterday we had Hardy Krüger and wife and children and the nanny and a Jug actress very young and a bit 'cute' called Neddy pronounced Naydee and probably written Nedj or something.⁸⁴ Krüger and wife are very German and very serious and determinedly intellectual. Somebody mentioned Visconti's Death in Venice and I said I hadn't seen it and – politely and totally without interest – asked if Mrs Krüger had seen it.⁸⁵ She had. What did she think of it? I said like a fool. Foolish, because then she proceeded to tell me and at length with a wealth of perfectly predictable criticisms of it because I too had read a few of the notices by accident, and saw them all coming like a Teutonic juggernaut. Phwew! Krüger himself who is one of those measured mental pipe-smoking meerschaums went on for an equally long time about the vast problem of whether E should or should not play a small part in the film of a partisan lady-doctor who is conventionally brave and loses her legs in a battle and suitably dies heroically and so on. I said that I wouldn't dream of asking a major star like E or Loren or A. Hepburn to play such a minute and conventional role and that it demanded nothing of her while she, being a professional, would demand a great deal of them.⁸⁶ Well, Mr Krüger went on, now Stanislavski (There are no small parts. Want a bet Stan?) Freud and Stephen Haggard (I would rather play a bad part in a good play than a good part in a bad play) and charity, as 'twere, her, E's contribution to the heroism of the Slav peoples by playing a small part for nothing.⁸⁷ My syntax is all to hell as I am sitting on the poop and am continually distracted by Liza, Kate and E and Raymond.

I awoke this morning [...] and went downstairs to read the 'new' script. It is as far as I can remember the same as the previous one with the addition of a few large extracts from Tito's memoirs or speeches which read like memoirs or speeches and which I will change myself into believable jargon. As for the rest of it I have suggested that they employ a standard and inexpensive writer of English to put the translation into speakable terms. Example: young Partisan girl shouting to her companions in the midst of battle 'Remember the Dalmatians' which conjures up an image of a frenzied pack of Disney hounds.⁸⁸ I read out E's part to her as it came up. She is in 14 out of 214 which we have decided is not a dominating role especially as she is never mentioned throughout the other 200 pages. We have just heard from Ron that they are terribly disappointed but will search immediately for somebody else. Who do they have in mind, they were asked? Oh people like Jane Fonda, Simone Signoret, Vanessa Redgrave etc. They are breathtakingly unrealistic. But their innocence is so total that they might surprise us all by actually getting someone like that.

Anyway, and perfectly selfishly, if the film is a bust they have only one of us

to blame because they always blame us for the failures and praise the director for our successes. I have lost count of the number of times I've read that 'Director X managed to wrest a brilliant performance out of Elizabeth Taylor.' This is particularly surprising to us because E and I in our combined careers don't recollect more than a dozen lines of direction all told from all directors. And specifically, since I reached my majority, so to speak, as an actor I don't remember any particular direction at all. The only people I remember actually evoking something in me as an actor which I didn't know was there are Phil, Emlyn and John Gielgud. All of which invaluable stuff I learned before I was 23 or so. Since, and sometimes with sad results, I have directed myself. The last man to give me direction which I found interesting and followable and sometimes enthrallingly brilliant was Mike Nichols and that was in the comedy sequences in Woolf. A lot of people have said that my very long speech in that same film under the tree and on the swing outside the house is one of the best pieces of acting etc. I did it, I remember, in one take and without direction from Mike apart from things like 'maybe you should move from the swing to the tree'. And as for other 'great directors' like Marty Ritt, Mankiewicz, Babblin' Tony Richardson etc. I don't remember anything they said except idiocies which I ignored.

Saturday 21st Beautiful morning as indeed all the mornings are here so far. Am sitting in a very smelly very noisy helicopter which is our transport to work in the mountains. The journey takes approx 45 minutes and unlike the many copters I have flown in hitherto there are only tiny little windows so there is – without a lot of contortion – no way of watching the lovely land underneath. Looking at it from above I wonder again at the tenacity of the Germans in being able to fight at all in these dreadful places. Crag and crevice, precipice and ravine, choked pass after choked pass, natural ambushes by the thousands and a people of murderous courage, and no victory to show for it as the Slavs would never face them in straightforward battle – hit and run, sabotage and hide, in and out of these endless hills. And what an admirable people the Yugoslavians are. Loveable and naive and quite clearly very different from the Latin and Anglo-Saxon. There is a lot of Asiatic fatalism combined with an almost Italian élan. I would guess.

[...] When I arrived in the mountains, a place called Zablijia pronounced Jabla (French 'J'), there were about a hundred press people, perhaps more.⁸⁹ This seemed odd as the copter landed in a field – actually it was a grass runway for

light planes – and a scene one normally associates with big international airports took place on farm land. There were endless questions and only one which I'd never been asked before on this trip. To my carefully hidden astonishment a very sharp lady asked me how I felt playing Tito and was I also nervous because I was working with a director who'd never directed a film before. Since the Popović had given me the impression that Deli Ć, the metteur, had done about 50 films and was the number one in Yugoslavia I was a little taken aback. I pointed out quite rightly that I had made three or four films with previously unknown directors and all those films had been successful: Wolf with Nichols, Shrew with Zeffirelli, Anne with Charles Jarrott and now Villain with whassisname.⁹⁰ Received a cable, incidentally, from Nat Cohen saying the notices for latter superb and great box-office, and another cable said we expect a million pounds from UK alone. That means about $1½m for me if I remember correctly.

There is no accounting for the differing tastes of Yanks and English critics. Villain was received badly in the US and with rapture in the UK. I know it is cockney and therefore difficult for Yanks to follow but one would have thought the critics to be of sufficiently wide education to take it in their stride. The English critics, after all, are not embarrassed when they see a film made in Brooklynese. Anyway I am so delighted that it is doing well in UK. Otherwise I would have doubted E's and my judgement in such matters. I thought it was good and she said she knew it was good. The American reaction was therefore a surprise.

22nd, Zablj Came up last night in a helicopter to stay in a small house in this village. We have worked here for three days though me only for two as I have Sundays off. E [...] asked Gianni and Claudye to say with us though, thankfully they are going to the hotel today. Apart from the house being very small and despite the fact that they are nice people, neither of them are readers and E and I are. Also it means four people, all of whom get up at the same time, sharing one minute bathroom. [...] On Friday, I mean Saturday I spent my time apart from one tiny scene which contained dialogue narrowly escaping being blown up. Don't know what they'll look like on the screen but they – the explosions – looked bloody effective in reality. They had real planes too, trying to look like stukas – about 20 of them. Must have cost a fortune. And will look no better I suspect than an old Anglo-Saxon mock-up. At least to the ordinary public. [...]

It is magnificent country up here in the mountains – the famed Montenegrin mountains – and I could live here a long time if asked to. It is apparently cut off from the rest of the world completely in the depths of winter. I would like that. [...]

To my astonishment the actor with whom I have most to do in the film doesn't speak a word of English and was prepared to speak all his dialogue in Serbo-Croat. I refused to do this saying it would give the dubber into English an impossible task and ruin the film for distribution in the Western world. As it is, I don't see it having a chance even with them speaking all the dialogue in broken English with me speaking in perfect Oxford. We can, I think write this film off before we start. The Jugs are also particularly thick when one tries to explain this to them and I have almost given up. Even the Englishmen, Deakin, Stewart et al. are Serbs. It's hair-tearing. I plead with them that Deakin and Stewart are upper class British, one of them, Deakin, being an actual Oxford professor. But to no avail. Actually, assuming that they speak the English lines reasonably well they could be dubbable without it being too obvious but it will still look cheap.

I would willingly have learned my part in Serbo-Croat if they'd given me time but I cannot do it at short notice. I am in with a bunch of child-amateurs and must settle for it.

However it is lovely up here and the people are charming and willing and I must regard the whole thing as a working holiday. I'll do my best and hope for the best. [...]

23rd, Zablja [...] Have given up the film as a film and will now concentrate on doing my bit as well as possible. [...] If I'm not happy in a film it affects my whole attitude to everything. I am beginning to dislike this place and can't wait to get away from it though it is unquestionably delightful. There was a party given, I suppose, in honour of the film company which was friendly enough but my sour reaction was that all the actors there should be home learning their lines in English. Why the hell didn't they do it all in Serbo-Croat including an Yugoslav actor playing Tito instead of this half-assed thing that will appeal to neither the Slavs or the English audience? [...] I left the party early, unable to stand any longer the false bonhomie induced by showing off to the foreigners and the drunkenness. Being sober among a horde of drunks is exquisite torture. I slid quietly home and talked with Claudye for a while who had been as bored as I was and then tucked myself into bed with, surprisingly, a bad book by John D. Macdonald who usually can be relied on in his mock-tough-sentimental holier-than-thou way to be readable. [...]

24th, Cavtat-Stefani We are on the Kalizma en route to Stefani (I believe) where, we understand, Carlo Ponti and Sophia have a house.⁹¹ It's supposed – the island I mean, not the Pontis' place – to be a location of staggering beauty. It is typical of us to be sailing in the dark to anchor at Stefani when we haven't yet seen the world-famous Dubrovnik which is a spit and a yard away from where we're living in Kupari.⁹²

When we arrived at the Kalizma which is, was, moored at Cavtat there were a couple of hundred people standing on the pavement simply staring at the boat. They were delighted when we arrived and we were applauded royally. I was feeling terrible and for a second I had a feeling of panic but the crowd were so nice and friendly that I was alright immediately. E was very touched. We talked to Pedro who consulted the harbour pilot who told us that Stefani was about 3 hours away. We untied and left as soon as we could. The people waved and shouted us away as we stood beside the bridge. It was a good moment and we were both in a mood of divine content. [...] E is a magnificent midwife for the birth of the blues – it was her idea to go to the yacht as soon as we came down from the mountains. She didn't even consult me. And I was at bursting point. I had been very cruel to Liza this morning – viciously so. She had said that I ought to keep the film dog with me at all times while I was doing the work.⁹³ I said the bloody dog was so infatuated by his master that he would whine and scratch all night and in any case I said the bloody master was reluctant even to have me tickle his ears. Liza said 'But he's your dog.' And out of that cesspool of cold cruelty which some people call a brain came 'Don't be bloody stupid. He's no more my dog than you are my daughter.' Liza was as brave as hell and said with a strained little laugh 'That was very nice.' E was quite rightly livid and I wanted to cry or slit my jugular. I did neither except compound the crime by snarling at E upstairs that Liza was so insensitive that she was probably impervious to such an insult. I am so ashamed of myself for saying such a terrible thing to a creature that I love so blindingly and love her in a crazily compounded fashion. I love her for being Elizabeth's alter ego, for being lovely and so loving, for her pretty ruthless determination to get what she can get away with, for her genuine and occasionally staggering beauty and for the fact that though like me she cannot express it in so many words from some inborn refusal to give herself away I am pretty certain that she loves me. I could have cut out my vile tongue with a blunt razor. From what twisted root did that bastard tree grow? I do it again and again. In most cases where I maul and savage a victim I can generally account for it in some way. How can I attack myself so unbelievably – it is I who insists that she be Liza Todd Burton. It is I who boast about her beauty, her horsemanship, her good reports at school and even her bad ones. 'Her spelling is sometimes amusingly phonetic.' Just like her bloody mother to the T.

Eventually, I made it up with them both. But 'taint good enough.

Friday 27th, Kupari We spent yesterday in the bay of Kotor which Princess Margaret was so enthusiastic about.⁹⁴ [...] We entered through the straits of Verige – my little book tells me – so named because the locals would block the entrance in the middle ages with a chain and 'verige' is apparently the local word for chain.⁹⁵ The Turks appear to be the most persistent marauders and I wouldn't have thought that chains would have proved a very formidable obstacle to so tough a people. Anyway it appears that nobody over the centuries ever succeeded in penetrating into the city of Kotor. According to my little book Bernard Shaw thought it the most beautiful place on earth.⁹⁶ [...]

Wolf Mankowitz has arrived and has already re-written my part and simplified it. Good and hard-working man. But I think all to no avail. [...]

Sunday 29th, Fiord of Kotor [...] I said, at one point yesterday, that I thought the 'bungalow' arrangements were fine for an actor on location but that I found it surprising accommodation for the President of the country. Ah, they said, so do we, but it is to impress the people that he is still one of us. I said I thought it didn't work as far as I could see as the people are more impressed by our, E and me, display of enormous wealth – as they thought – and would be far less interested by a Ford, an arrival by Air Italia and a simple cotton frock than they are by a gleaming white yacht, a private jet and a giant Rolls-Royce. Of the scores of newspapers and magazines they bring to me occasionally which generally contain lots of pictures of me as Tito, E and me, E and me and Tito etc. there is invariably a very glam shot of the Kalizma and the Phantom 6 with a description of its inside, its TV etc. [...]

We steamed from Cavtat last evening as soon as I'd had time to arrive home from Sutjeska take my make-up off and shower and shampoo and get to the yacht. Liza left for England with wet eyes and much kissing from Mum and daughter, so Mum tells me, and weeping servants and all. We miss her already, rather more than usual as she has become more of a companion than hitherto and now, God be praised, has started to become our favourite thing – a book worm. The Gabrielle Hounds by Mary Stewart and Rosemary's Baby by Ira Levin which is a considerable advance over no books at all for thirteen years.⁹⁷ [...]

There is a big house opposite us that seems to be at least pre-war and has an air of neglect. Our Chekhovian imaginations run riot.⁹⁸ It could be very handsome if done up.

Monday 30th, Sutjeska There is no such definite locale as Sutjeska – the latter is the name of a river over which the Germans and the partisans fought so bitterly. Also here were the Italians but they are very much neglected both in history and in our script so I presume their contribution to the German slaughter of the partisans was probably as negligible as it was in every other theatre of the last war. Nearby – a short walk from this ‘villa’ which we are living in – is a very impressive monument to the Sutjeska dead, some 25,000 or 20–40,000 depending on which authority you listen to last, which is to be unveiled by Marshal Tito this week.⁹⁹ [...] There are many soldiers about who sing a lot around fires – a bit like my old Welsh lot. They seem very contented, or at least as contented as one can expect conscripted soldiers to be. [...]

Kathy Green, the giant daughter of Johnny Green – for many years head of the Music Dept of MGM – appeared on the set today with a man called Richard Chase.¹⁰⁰ I think the latter is a musician. However, while we were all waiting for the helicopter to arrive with E and Maria and Claudye aboard, she, Kathy, found a half-blind kitten, minute, in a hedge and kept it and gave it to E as she arrived. So now we have another member of the family, it seems [...]. It is already the centre of everybody's attention and is being fed with sugared water and milk and is being house-trained. It is a tom we think but no name has yet been chosen. I want to call it Jack. I've always like the name Jack. Dunno why really but possibly because it sounds honest and strong and masculine. Jack Stevens the Fruiterer who always thought the English language inadequate and added ‘strengthening syllables’ like colossal, majestic and monumental etc. And Jack Jones Edwards, a rogue, smalltown politician in Cwmavon, and innumerable over-masculine Jack Joneses and Jack Jameses four square and brutally forward and overbearing affronters of pomposity and weak arguments. It looks however as if it might be called ‘Sutjeska’. [...]

Tuesday 31st, Tjentiste I finally told Elizabeth this morning how ill her mother has been for the last nine days. I couldn't even confide my worry to this diary as E dips into it sporadically. Anyway her mother was operated on two days ago and the telegram we received yesterday said the five days following the operation are critical so now it's three days. [...] The latest telegram mentioned above was signed by some people called Karl and Mary Frances Voldeng, and of course Valerie who has been the signee for the past week and a bit.¹⁰¹ [...] E has taken it all badly as she has a quite unjustified guilt complex re her mother. Nothing that can be reasoned out so I don't try. Also, I feel that I genuinely do not have the capacity for suffering that other people have and in particular Elizabeth. I am as dispassionate as it is possible for a human being to be and not be a machine, and what compassion I do have I find almost impossible to express. God knows what will be my feelings if anything happens to someone I greatly love but I generally console myself that I will have gone to my long home long before they. I am prepared for Ivor, even for Cis. But not for the children and above all E. If anything happens to E I am fairly positive that I won't be long after since I cannot believe that life will be worth living without her and indeed cannot believe that I ever did. I mean live without her. It was such a dreary plain with only an occasional high peak of excitement. [...]

SEPTEMBER

Wednesday 1st, Tjentiste [...] Yesterday was brilliant sunshine until lunch-time when a huge wind sprang up and by the time I finished work – about 4.30 – it began to rain and has continued to do so ever since with very few let-ups. It is pouring in torrents now at this moment and has been all night [...] I wonder if they can shoot in this monsoon weather. [...] I'd like to work because (a) I feel guilty when I don't as I cost so much money and (b) because I like these Yugoslavs so very much. I do not suffer any guilt pangs at all when working for a big studio though then I simply feel frustration at not getting the damned film finished as soon as possible. The thought of bad weather or bad luck causing a Zanuck a Warner or a Wasserman to cry into his Scotch gives me infinite pleasure.¹⁰²

And still it rains and there are all our soldiers under canvas. Shades of Alun Lewis.¹⁰³ Unlightable fires and damp matches. Blue-cupped hands. Give us a light mate. [...]

It is now eight at night and still it rains and confuse it not with a drizzle. It is an unremitting Dickensian God-despairing world-ending Noachian deluge promising the end of the world by dawn. [...]

Thursday 2nd [...] The rain is coming down comme une vache qui pisse, a charming simile I learned yesterday from Claudye, and is not raining so much cats and dogs but mastodons and megathings and other prehistoric reptiles. [...]

Yesterday, while E stayed sensibly in bed and wrapped up, I went with Claudye, Gianni, Brook and E'en So to view the 'villa' up on the mountain called Bare. The situation is breathtaking. The house, very alpine looking on the very edge of a lovely little lake about 150 yards by 100. The road was unpaved and occasionally very dangerous, avalanche-prone, and interminable, hairpin after hairpin and in this torrential weather a real monster. We took no chances in the Phantom 6 and crept up. This meant a journey in pouring rain, of course, of just over an hour. Nevertheless I would have settled for the extra hour or so a day getting to work were it not for the fact that the interior of the house was a complete shambles. No heating except for a huge fireplace which could be jolly enough. No hot water, wood-burning kitchen stove, no electricity and no prospect of getting any as far as I could gather. Filthy, rusty bath and a blocked shower with a fin de siècle wood-burning stove to heat the water presumably. One of the ladies spoke a little French and was totally flabbergasted at the prospect of anybody staying there. But, we said, tout le monde dit que le President reste ici quelque fois. 'Jamais,' she said, 'he once came here and killed a bear, of whom the forest is full. But he has never stayed here.'¹⁰⁴ So thereby is killed another lie or, to be charitable, another bit of misinformation. [...]

Thursday 2nd, Kupari [...] Better and better news of Sara and hopes are now that it will not be necessary for either of us to fly to Arizona. We had more or less decided that E and Claudye would fly tomorrow. Temporarily, at least, that possibility is now in abeyance. [...]

Friday 3rd The Hitler War started 32 years ago today. A fine day like this I remember and a Sunday morning I think. I was excited, like all the other boys – I was 13 years old – and pleased enough that there was a real war, never dreaming that it would last long enough for me to be in the RAF toward the end of it.¹⁰⁵ The only disappointment was that I was quickly assured that the war meant I'd lost my chance for a schoolboy rugby 'cap' for Wales. I was an obvious certainty having been there or thereabouts the season before and was massive for my age – 12 stone and 5ft 8 or 9. I've hardly grown since. I might have got one as a grown-up largely through personality rather than genuine first class ability. I was a natural Captain wherever I played and might have sneaked a cap or two when one of the standard boys was crooked or something. I regret it a lot less than I used to do when I saw so many of my contemporaries getting caps while I was playing Shakespeare. Too late cock, too late. [...]

James Wishart expected any minute from London for me to sign some papers anent Harlech TV. It goes public shortly. I could make a fortune and pull out now but I suppose I shouldn't. Wait and see what James has to say. I wish he were a younger man and I wish he hadn't been so ill. Always affects people's judgements one way or the other.

Since writing the above we have been in to Dubrovnik again. [...] Bought books – not much choice but took everything unread. [...]

A letter from Liza [Todd]. How sophisticated her fist has become. Also one from Lil Williams who says that notices for Milk Wood are 'fabulous' and that one has to queue up to see Villain everywhere. Now if, as I expect, XYZ hits the jackpot too we shall have had a very good year. Even the joke film Raid on Rommel is surprising everybody. There's life in these old dogs yet.

Wishart's plane three hours late so shall see him tomorrow sometime. Going back up to Tjentiste tomorrow [...] to see Tito. Apparently he wants to see us before he sees all the other odds and sods. [...] And so, Samuel Pepys, to bed.¹⁰⁶

Saturday 4th, Kupari James Wishart came with me [to Tjentiste] to tell me all the tales of Harlech TV. He seemed in good form and rubicund and jolly like an animated doll's head. He told me that the Harlech shares which we paid 2/6d a share for are likely to open on the market at a quid.¹⁰⁷ We could if we wished sell half the shares and pick up a half a million or so and still be rich holders – at the moment we are the principal shareholders by a considerable amount. I am accustomed to earning vast monies but they were earned. Picking up millions from an investment which was, I think, about £100,000 is fairy tale stuff. So after the horror of the first four days of this week everything is turning out golden again. Sara is going to be alright, God Willing, Milk Wood has had magnificent notices not only in London and Italy but now too in NY, Villain is packing them in in Britain and Raid on Rommel is doing likewise in Paris, Rome and Milan. And, most importantly of all E has come back to life again after being moribund for these horrific last few days.

In the car on the way up Wishart told me that he had guessed from various snippets of stock-exchange gossip that Stan Baker is having some financial difficulties.¹⁰⁸ I can't believe that hard-headed old Stan hasn't salted some nice sums away somewhere. He must have got himself into trouble with the tax people. He'll whistle his way out I'm sure.

We arrived at Tjentiste about 20 minutes early for Tito [...]. Then at eleven on the dot it seems we were summoned to the presence. For the first half hour or so it was just Tito and Madame and Popovi Ć and Deli Ć and of course Tito's interpreter. We – Deli Ć, Popovi Ć and I – all told Tito how good everything was. I said how efficient Popovi Ć was and he said how professional I was and I said what a splendid director Deli Ć was and Deli Ć said what a magnificent actor I was etc. Tito was in a very jolly mood putting what seemed like the fear of God or a firing-squad into the other two blokes when he said that he expected me to be in his old uniform tomorrow for the ceremony. They took him quite seriously until I said 'Come on, the President is pulling your leg!' Which of course he was. Afterwards all the other actors were presented to us and a dozen or so old comrades and I presume local big-wigs. From then on it was hard work for Tito, looking across the valley and at the mountains where he and his lads had fought so desperately 28 years ago, naturally began to reminisce and was so far gone in memories that he rarely gave his interpreter a chance to speak. This meant long periods of listening to stories in a completely alien tongue, only some of which were translated.

Sunday 5th Here we are again ready to set off for the dreaded Tjentiste by helicopter we hope this time. Today has all the hall-marks of being dreadful. Many thousands of people. Speeches. National Anthem. The Internationale.¹⁰⁹ And on top of it all they want me to work! Just so that Tito can see a bit of action. After all that they want us to fly to a place called Niš (pron Neesh) to the annual beano of the Yugoslav theatrical profession.¹¹⁰ We are expected to stay the night and come back tomorrow morning for work again. Strange behaviour. The film sometimes seems to be very much in second place to all kinds of social activities. [...]

Later Today:

Well, as prognosticated by Dr and Mrs Burton, it was a dreadful day though not as boring as I thought it might be. [...] First of all, we arrived in plenty of time to see Tito at eleven o'clock only to find out that His Excellency didn't expect to see us at all. It was the ineffable Popovi Ć who had insisted that we were there so early because of the danger of being delayed en route. [...] However we hung around the unfinished hotel and I drank coffee while E had a drink or two. Then suddenly there was a flurry of Generals and we were hastily put into cars and driven across fields where we were presented to the Marshal and Wife. Some bloke made a speech introducing the Tito I presume, whereupon the old man tore off up some steps to the podium, battered with mikes and let us all have it for about 30 minutes. The crowd was huge. I guessed 50,000 trying vaguely to fit them into Cardiff Arms Park in my mind's eye.¹¹¹ 'Many more than that,' said the Generalissimo in English and quite sharply. In fact Tito seemed much less friendly today than he was yesterday. E remarked on it feeling a trifle miffed I suppose. I can only assume that his attitude changes subtly but definitely from public to private. There was none of the hugging and kissing of Brioni. Fact is that I was pretty well pissed off with the man-o-the-people because he didn't make more fuss of Elizabeth. He and Madame Broz did at least ask about her mother and at the end of the day when we had done a very actionful shot for their Majesties, Madame sent E her love and Tito said something which was I suppose 'hear hear' or something. And at the final handshake he said in English 'Hope to see you again.' You'll be lucky, mate. I swear to God there is more nonsensical protocol than with English royalty. [...]

After the speech which was apparently full of platitudes [...] about the heroism of the mighty dead and that the world and even their 'allies' – meaning Russia apparently – still did not believe the extent of the Yugoslavian sacrifice – we went back to the hotel not knowing whether we were invited to lunch with Tito or not. Not quite sure whether we wanted to be or not we put three tables together and ordered lunch at the hotel-restaurant. Five minutes later there was yet another panic and they came [...] in a sweat to say that we were expected to have lunch with Tito and the surviving partisans of the battle of Sutjeska. Furious [...] we got into the ever-present Mercedes and drove about 10 miles to the place. It was an open restaurant, obviously just shoved up for the day. We stood there, E and I and Maria and Vessna the new interpreter for 45 minutes signing endless autographs waiting for Tito to arrive. After all that we found we were not sitting with him but stuck with the scintillating Popovi Ć and Hardy Krüger. The latter obviously has a very nasty attack of jealousy and resentment of the red carpet treatment I get everywhere. He too is a bore and I hear from the other lads who live around the hotel with him that, typical Teuton, he bullies defenceless people like waiters etc. He works without cease on Wolf to write in flashbacks of Tito and himself enlarging his part and enabling him to get to grips with R. Burton etc. and Wolf refuses and Krüger persists with Wolf saying: I wasn't paid to re-write the plot mate. I was hired to put the translation into palatable English. The insults began according to Ron and Brook. One sample:

Krüger: 'You are a stupid man.' Wolf: 'And you're the Nazi Tab Hunter.'¹¹²

E is in the worst state of lassitude I ever remember of her. She has always been naturally somewhat indolent – not the kind of girl one finds rushing off to play golf and tennis, God Forbid – but now, I mean for the last couple of days, she can barely move one foot in front of the other. It's largely of course the reaction from the tension of the past week but it's bloody worrying. [...]

Monday 6th [...] The helicopters yesterday were the usual farce. For once we left on time but only seven people allowed again. From the air we could see huge concourses of people milling about before we landed and endless streams of buses. And thousands of cars. We landed on the football field where there was of course no one to meet us. [...] However [...] we were escorted to a car and drove off through dense crowds to the new hotel. [...] To add to the mania, incidentally, when E, bright with fury at the whole mess-up of the lunch came with me to location she sat down in my trailer on one of the banquettes and went right through it, legs kicking in the air. Nobody dared laugh or they would have been brained with a hand-bag but it was unquestionably funny. Ron had to leave the cabin. Once I knew she hadn't hurt her very vulnerable back I became faintly cracked myself. That sort of thing only happens when an entire day turns out to be a bastard.

Tuesday 7th, Tjentiste Am in Tito's hut and shall tonight sleep in his bed. For the first time it is really cold and fortunately the two little heaters from the other hut are with us and are going full blast. If the electricity fails again it will be mittens and woollen stockings all around. [...] As I say, once this lot get going they are very efficient but getting them going is torture. I doubt whether I've had more than five minutes on film in two weeks, and I have a definite stop-date. I am playing the part of a patient actor and hope to God I don't have to lose my temper. [...]

And now to await lunch and work and my lovely old E in the evening. It's not a bad life. Not really. Not like the other morning when I was figuring out the repercussions of my suicide on the people who like me.

Wednesday 8th [...] A miserable night in Tito's bed which for some reason, what I'm beginning to believe is typically Yugoslavian, refuses to have sheets or blankets which adequately cover the bed. This meaning a freezing shoulder or a damp calf. Went in to get Maria's mug this morning – the only adequate drinking vessel we have – and she was completely covered with the clothes. Woke up with an awful feeling of deja vu. I was back in my cold damp childhood without even the prospect of a fire to light and leap and dance of burning anthracite. I shudder to be reminded of anything that happened to me before the age of about thirty and though I had a fantastically happy childhood I don't want to be reminded of Caradoc Street and that awful bathroom window which was broken by Rhys Oates' daughter when she was taking her monthly bath and which was never mended throughout my children [sic], and what is more ludicrous never allowed to be mended.¹¹³ What a monster that Elfed was. Eleven years with the same broken window which would have cost sixpence and fifteen minutes to replace. If anybody had mended it he would have broken it again. What a foony mann. It is hard to remember that that idiot of my childhood is now a benign and elderly man. Had a bitter little contretemps with E this morning. [...] Ended up by her saying she would go on the boat and me saying good idea and her saying that when I was sober I was a pain in the ass and perhaps I should start drinking again. So you're damned if you do and you're damned if you don't. [...] We had the Bozzacchis all evening. They mean sweetly and Claudye helps to unpack etc. but it means eternal conversations and no long readings of books. I must have dropped hints by the thousand that my favourite occupation is sitting alone in a room with E drinking tea, me, and drinking, her or not drinking and simply and simple-mindedly reading books or occasionally chatting. But one might as well drop a canister of water on a prairie fire. [...]

Thursday 7th, Tjentiste¹¹⁴ [...] Last night we sat and made our own supper. I looked up the various articles in the dictionary and asked for everything in Serbo-Croat. What's more, almost everything arrived as asked. I was flushed with success. E made some soup with an egg broken into it. Very good. I desserted on chocolate and fancy biscuits. [...]

Have just written a telegram to Kate who has a birthday on the 10th. She will be 14 years old. How she goes the time. And how she grows the girl. She is a head taller than Liza and as tall if not taller than E which makes her around 5'4". I hope she doesn't grow too tall. 5'6" is enough I think.

[...] How much happier E and I are when we are left alone. Last night, apart from the waiter, we saw nobody and it was delicious. People get on our collective nerves and as one attacks one of them the other defends. E attacks Brook. I defend. I attack Raymond. E defends etc. Fact is that we're wearing them all out. Raymond's relief when I say or we say that we shan't need him for a few days is palpable. He can't wait to get away. He is rapidly getting old. Any minute or dark day now he is going to look his age. Terrible to be a middle aged pouff. He's actually 50 odd. I hope he's no longer in our employ when he's 60 odd. Still ogling fellow travellers. Creeps-giving. [...]

Received a cheque yesterday from Ron's Vicky for $3,350 which means $10,000 return on a $40,000 investment in about six years which is not bad. She is certainly the only one of our friends who has ever paid back anything. John Sullivan – over $100,000 and not a cent return. Heyman, ditto. Tim Hardy £12,000 and nil return. etc. etc. Including our various friends we must be owed a million dollars. Alexandre of Paris too yet owes us about $125,000. No sign of repayment – not even the interest. [...]

Friday 8th, Tjentiste¹¹⁵ [...] Yesterday having sat around in make-up all day long I worked in Foca at 5.30pm. Did a scene with the girl who plays Vera who, of course, doesn't speak a word of English.¹¹⁶ She shall be dubbed. However she was obviously experienced and had a go and was very nice. She had a 'film face' – a dark haired girl of about 30 that I'm pretty sure I shan't remember when next I see her where I saw her before. I mean if I saw her in the street. Or at a party or something like that. An oval face, regular features, a good standard voice. about 5'4", standard build. In short, like a thousand other actresses everywhere. [...]

We had sent Maria back to Kupari with Raymond the day before yesterday as she was quite clearly and understandably bored up here when the rain came down without stop. [...] So with everybody else congregating in the other hut and waiting for the call we sat and read all day. E reading thriller after thriller and me alternating between a 'Bony' thriller and a book called Bridge over the Drina described as Yugoslavia's 'greatest novel by Nobel Prizewinner Ivo Andrić' and good it is too though it's not a novel at all in the ordinary sense of the word so far anyway.¹¹⁷ More a series of anecdotes loosely woven in and around the history of the bridge over a period of 300 years. I doubt if I would have read it with the same interest were it not that I am close to the actual scene of events. There is a description of an impalement, in detail, which horrified me. I didn't know that impaling was so exact a science. The 'master' impaler was able to so do his job that though the pointed stick went right through the body from bottom to shoulder through the anus it must avoid all the essential organs so that the poor bastard would live as long as possible, some for a few hours, some for as long as a day. [...]

Saturday 9th, Kupari¹¹⁸ [...] Am going into Dubrovnik to buy things. Don't quite know what. Lighters and lighter fluid and a book or two peut etre. [...]

Walked for an hour in Dubrovnik looking for a baccho shop. Finally found one and bought a gas lighter, cheap, and a pen-and-pencil case for E as an encouragement for her sudden letter-writing. Doubt if it will be used much but you never know.

Dubrovnik is made ugly by all its tourists. There are always thousands and I had an audience the whole time swelling to a hundred or so when I stopped to buy the lighter. I with Maria got out fast. Went in the mini-moke which is made for these narrow winding roads. I wish it had a little more power however. When I came back I saw John Heyman who stayed for a couple of hours chatting of this business and that business finally ending up chatting of cricket in the old days – i.e. the thirties. I told him of the enormous excitement of the 'bodyline' tour of my childhood when cricket made headlines not only on the sports pages but on the front pages and was the subject of editorials in solemn journals.¹¹⁹ We shall never look upon its like again. Bradman and Larwood, Macabe and Voce, Ponsford and Hammond and Gubby Allen and Bowes bowling Bradman middle stump. And the imperturbable Jardine.¹²⁰

Everybody, which means E principally, in a foul mood about going to Niš this afternoon for the bloody actors' do when we are presented with awards etc. and have to meet mayors and presidents of republics and cocktail parties and supposed to see a film in Serbo-Croat yet which we are determinedly holding out against seeing. And another cocktail party tomorrow morning at 10am if you please before flying back here. All the things in fact that we loathe most in this world but which have to be done. Sometimes.

If it were anything but a communist country, especially a nice one like this, they would be told in no uncertain fashion where to stuff their awards and cocktail parties and mayors and presidents. But we are being fixed-smile-diplomats. Shit.

Found about three books by unknown authors which will plough through if things get bad.

Heyman told me that everyone is agreed that The Burtons are as easy as pie to handle but that The Burtons' Entourage is a pain in the ass and every producer, when they are mentioned, hopes fervently that they will all die in the night of galloping heart attacks. Too bad, I said, though I agree about some. The great exception is of course Ron and though I like the others I don't think that any of them are necessary to me. I like Bob Wilson to be around and be barman and man of distinction and Jim is useful with mail but lacks the charm so essential when handling so many different kinds of people. He's no Dick Hanley. Raymond, Claudye and Gianni actively bore me if they are around for any length of time. Brook is intelligent but is now so circumscribed by something, possibly E's and my hidden but perhaps not hidden enough distaste, that all his wit and humour seem to have fled except sporadically. He used to be very amusing.

Saturday 11th, Niš Same day and late at night – about 11.30 – and I've changed the date on the heading above as everybody assures me that it's not the 9th but the 11th. That means that all the dates for the last several days must be skew-whiff also. Probably came from making two entries on the same day – as today – and getting distracted or something.

Any road [...] the dreaded visit here didn't go too badly. At least we're home and safe. [...] there was the time-honoured conglomerate of stick mikes and TV cameras. They pounced and preyed on us of course immediately but we went straight into our car and then watched with astonishment the almost ludicrously old-fashioned posing of the German actor Hardy Krüger who really and truly struck dramatic attitudes – looking up at the sky and showing now this profile now the other. I could hardly credit my eyes while E had some very XYZ remarks to make re that particular kraut. When my baby don't take no fancy to somepoorbody she sure don't take no fancy. And the poor-spirited son of envy compounds his lack of charm at every opportunity. He can barely speak to or look at either of us. He reminds me oddly enough of a chap called Raymond St Jacques. A very handsome and some say homosexual American Negro actor who said in Cotonou that the waiters (all coal black) in the Hotel Croix de Sud were discriminating against black clients as for instance 'whenever the Burtons appear we might as well not exist even though we might have been sitting and waiting for 10 or 15 minutes.' 'Ah my friend,' said the delicious Roscoe Lee Browne, also a blackman, and who speaks as pedantically as a professor, 'Royalty itself has been known to wait when the Burtons are around. It is a fact of nature this attraction, like the moon's effect on the tide.'

Sunday 12th [...] After watching Krüger baring his profile, we left the airport, a military one by the look of it with no flare path and a dozen helicopters, we roared through the traffic with a police car leading us with its light flashing and its hooter going (the roof-top light being blue not red) and with a cop leaning out of one door with a round object on a stick waving all traffic to the side we swept into the oddest looking hotel that I'd ever seen. It was peculiar only in that it wasn't the hotel but a totally unannounced halt where we were made a speech to by a nervous and at the same time pompous manager about 'workers wanting to see other workers like ourselves even though the two workers her with them were a little better known than Jasha in the canteen' etc. He gave us some presents and the factory workers presented E with lots of flowers and they pressed in on us from all sides feeling our faces and smoothing our hair, particularly E's. It was all terribly embarrassing as the factory had arranged a table with drinks, including Scotch, on it and there were canapés and cigs in boxes etc. all ready for a little cocktail party. All this time the TV cameras were going and the mikes and before we could attempt to make any sort of thank yous and how delighted we were to be one with the people we were whisked away [...] without giving us a chance to show something other than startled and bewildered shock. [...] From there we went to the hotel which was another mad-house, the police not being able to control the crowds at all. [...] After 45 minutes or so we were summoned down to the cocktail floor where the crowd outside in the square chanted our names. We stood there for some time on the balcony with E bravely and regally waving and me like some dumb Prince Albert giving an occasional half-hearted waggle myself.¹²¹ We met the Mayor and I think two governors and other people who were never explained and then totally without warning there was a sort of native nightclub act. A horrible boy said into a mike that he represented the children of the world and proceeded to beat a funny little drum and hop around. There was no applause when he finished. Then a fat girl sang a couple of songs accompanied by a sort of flautist, a concertina, the boy on the small drum and a guitar. [...] After that [...] we went down to dinner. There was a long table seating about forty. We sat next to each other. E had the organizer of the Festival on her right and I had an actress-judge who spoke reasonable French on my left. Next to the actress, who seemed a nice woman there was a critic who spoke English. He was a crasher and talked about British theatre all the time. Since I've only seen two plays in England in 10 years I wasn't able to make much contribution. [...]

Airplane Sitting in the plane [...] having had yet another encounter with TV and radio and all its appurtenances. To my delight the Heavy Luger is late.¹²² Presumably he wasn't informed. Have just been told that Luger has now got a snapper with him too just like Burtons have G. Bozzacchi. Am beginning to enjoy this. The poor sod has no chance of winning this somewhat unequal battle.

Others have tried and failed. I learn now from E that the snapper is here to do the film, including me tomorrow he hopes, and not just the Bertha Krupp. They just happen to be all Germans together. The Panzer leutenant duly arrived and greeted everyone with a broad gesture and a 'Hi there'. There was no apology of any kind according to Radie Louella Hedda Taylor Burton.¹²³ [...]

After the dinner [...] we set off for the award-giving. I had also said that the best plan would be for us to arrive, be announced, and go straight onto the stage to take our bows and accept our awards which are called 'Constantines' the male award being called the Czar and the female the Czarina. And then, complete again with escort, bugger off back to the Hotel Ambassador and faint a lot.¹²⁴ [...] We were announced by the Festival's director and went on stage to a standing ovation. There were two microphones and the poor bloody Mayor read a speech of welcome to the great world renowned couple and then I was invited to give them a few deathless words. I was thinking of a few words rather on the lines of the Gettysburg Address but settled for 'Comrades, I am very nervous at the idea of my playing the greatest Yugoslavian (ovation) and probably the greatest Yugoslavian who ever lived. (Ovation) Especially as, if my work is not good today, he can have me deported tomorrow. (Laughter and applause) Thank you.'¹²⁵ Then came Female Lib herself, the Mrs Pankhurst of Culver City, who said: 'I love your country and your people.'¹²⁶ (tumultuous rapture) I love your president and his lady (ecstasy) and would like to live here forever, if you would accept us.' (End of speech partially drowned by the ultimate in cosmic approval and the music of the spheres.) There goes, we both thought, our American visas! Quite genuinely though the audience were really moved. We then received our awards – E from a very good actor who had won the Grand Prix that night and I got mine from the actress equivalent. [...]

Monday 13th, Kalizma [...] Yesterday received a long and incoherent letter from Larry Olivier re the National Theatre.¹²⁷ He must have been very drunk the last times we talked to him as nobody could have turned down the job with more firmness. But he has obviously been persisting so I wrote a long letter, long-ish anyway, explaining that he mustn't worry about his not being able to get me the job and that I wouldn't take it if offered. Not at least unless there were drastic changes. That is to say, I couldn't see myself being overruled by a board of governors over some project I had in mind. As Larry was over the Hochhuth Churchill play.¹²⁸ Granted the play was a travesty and badly written or translated or both but I would have resigned. He also said in the letter that they hadn't been allowed the money to put on Guys and Dolls.¹²⁹ Well, what sort of National Theatre is that? Those Old Etonians etc. would drive me mad in five months.¹³⁰ I love Larry but he really is a shallow little man with a very mediocre intelligence but a splendid salesman. But it is quite clear that when he is not active in the productions themselves the National loses all its glamour. It is impossible to get over-excited about people like Robert Stephens and his wife.¹³¹ They are good but lack 'glamour'. And I don't mean 'glamour' in the vulgar sense of the word. I mean the sweeping grandeur of Edith or Gielgud or Larry himself.¹³² The National should be full of the towering oaks of the profession. Scofield, Guinness, Redgrave should be permanent members of the company while those anonymous 'stars' like Stephens et al. should play the supporting parts with their usual brilliance. I saw both Stephens and Maggie Smith in the film of Jean Brodie and thought they were the dullest couple I've ever seen in an important film.¹³³ Also, alas, the National has lost its initial excitement and has become the Old Vic again – upsydownsy and again slowly being invaded by a younger generation of Paul Rogers and William Squires.¹³⁴ No offence to either of them but they do not illuminate Shakespeare with flashes of lightning. I told Larry also, to ease his conscience if any, that when I went back it would probably be to do something with the Drama Faculty at Oxford if and when it's created out of the Faustus monies. And indeed the latter is an attractive idea and a nice thing to do in my fifties. Keep me active but not too active and I would delegate like mad.

Evening

Sitting on the poop deck with my infinitely beloved wife who has acquired an even greater weight of love. I keep on mentally looking around to make sure she's there. For why this new and massive re-affirmation of adoration and worship and a promise to myself that I shall never be nasty to her ever again? I will tell you for why. For because for about three minutes this afternoon I thought that I was about to be killed instantaneously and at once, without time to re-tell her how much I love her, to apologize for breaking my contract to look after her forever, for letting her down with a bang (hysterical pun intended), and for having no time to tell her the million things yet to be told and for not realizing and demonstrating my full potential as husband, provider, lover and all.

I did not work today which is rapidly becoming the norm for this piece [...]

finally and of course inevitably word came that work was over for the day and that it was 'a wrap' and so we set off back to the copter and Kupari. I settled in on the port side right behind the pilot while Vessna, the interpreter, sat beside me with Brook on her other side. Ron sat in the rear row with Gianni. And off we went. There was a low cloud ceiling which we went into immediately we'd gained some height and, as so many times before, we threaded our way through the vicious peaks to right and left. Suddenly and without warning we were completely blacked-out though I believe the technical description is 'whited out'. There was nothing to be seen outside the cabin of the chopper except nothing. A white nothing. On top of this it began to rain torrentially and the windscreen wipers whipped back and fore like insane crickets sharpening their legs. The co-pilot frantically tried to turn himself into a human demister. We flew like this for perhaps half a minute though it seemed like half an hour when there it was! We were going at an angle of about 45 degrees into a peak. The pilot, god bless his marvellous reflexes, flung the copter to the right and there appallingly was another rock face. The co-pilot slapped the pilot on the arm and we pulled away again to the left. I don't know how close we actually were but it seemed to be the length of a rotor-arm and six feet. Whatever the distance it must have been very very close otherwise we wouldn't have seen the two peaks at all. Still we ploughed on with everyone except Gianni and I – and the pilots of course – with their eyes closed tight. Ron I saw curl himself into a ball and cover his head and ears, with his knees on the floor waiting in what they say is the classical position for a plane crash. I stared to the side with hand ready poised to warn the pilot if anything appeared on our side. The pilot was straining his eyes forward. The co-pilot was rubbing his side window with hand also poised to warn the pilot. Gianni just stared over Ron's semi-kneeling position like a man who saw nothing except eternity. Apart from my saying Holy Shit in a strangled whisper nobody uttered a sound. No sound, at least, that could be heard. So we continued to fly blind for another aeon (possibly a minute, possibly two, who knows?) dreading the head-on how-de-do from which there would be [no] way of turning. Then, the machine began to lose height pretty quickly. I could feel it though I daren't take my eyes away from the window to check the altimeter. I thought the pilot had gone mad. Later I found out why and how right he was. We dropped and dropped until there suddenly and miraculously was the much maligned road curling around the mountains. Rarely have I ever seen such a beautiful road, a masterpiece of the roadmaker's art, an example to the Romans of ancient time, I could not think how I had ever said that the road was a fucking

nightmare and an elongated version of a shit-house, a ruined shit-house. I could have gladly apologized to every kilometre of its lovely length. The pilot had lost height, he said, to be able to see, to try and go above the clouds was certain suicide because in order to gain height quickly he would have had to circle and he knew, as indeed we all knew, that there were a hundred peaks of a different height width [sic] and also there was no knowing how high the cloud was. He was however fairly sure that the cloud base would not cover the bed of the valley. What is nightmarish on recollection is how many close shaves we must have had during those two or three minutes. Glimpses of eternity we have never seen.

What is also frighteningly revelatory [sic] too is the number of levels on which the mind functions at moments of imminent catastrophe. 'Believe me sir,' said Dr Johnson, 'when a man knows he is to be hanged tomorrow morning it concentrates the mind wonderfully.'¹³⁵ There was one blazing mental image that seemed to last right through the enormity. It was E lying in bed on the yacht with a book open at the page where she'd stopped reading with the title front cover and publisher's blurb on the other face up on the bed near her right hand which was out of the covers. She was wearing one of my favourite nightgowns, a blue thing and shorty which she may have been wearing this morning when I said good bye to her. (I've just asked her and she was.) She had one leg bent and the other straight. On another level I was telling her over and over again that I loved her, I loved her. At one fractioned [sic] point I kept trying to remember a line of Alun Lewis' – 'If I should go away, beloved, do not say ...' and I couldn't remember the rest which I've known for 25 years or so. Immediately the crisis was over I remembered it immediately.

If I should go away,

Beloved,

Do not say,

He has forgotten me.

Forever you abide.

A singing rib within my dreaming side.¹³⁶

The mind is a remarkable instrument. If I wrote down everything I could remember from those interminable seconds it would be a million words. It is in fact what James Joyce's Ulysses is all about except he took a whole day for Bloom while he could have taken three minutes because the mind concentrates so wonderfully.¹³⁷ A shorter catastrophe of this kind happened to me before when I was perhaps 19–20 years old but I hadn't learned to love then and to love obsessively. Going to stop now until tomorrow morning. I must read Ulysses again.

Wednesday 15th, Kalizma–Cavtat Spent most of yesterday in a car – the Rolls-Royce. The weather was too bad to land in Tjentiste so we drove up. I sat in the back, put up the partition and settled down to The Gingerbread Lady a successful play by Neil Simon.¹³⁸ Simon is one of those playwrights who rarely is considered 'significant' by the critics, largely because he isn't, but who writes success after success. He also writes 'well-made plays' à la Rattigan.¹³⁹ In fact, he might be loosely described as a younger American version of Terry but much funnier. Some of the stuff I read in the car yesterday made me laugh out loud, which is very rare for me. They want E to it [sic] and she could have a good time in it and be very good to boot and also people forget how very funny her comedy is. Beloved old Maureen Stapleton played it on the stage and very brilliantly apparently and I can imagine her being very good. It's very sad that she photographs like a sack of potatoes. The story too is the story more or less of Maureen's life. A woman of superb talent – if she were British she would become an automatic dame – she is also a drunk and, like the woman in the play, it kills her career. Like the woman in the play she also becomes enormously fat and also has to go to a home to have a rest cure. Orkin and I watched her in and out of more alcoholic crises than one can imagine. I remember too, many years ago in Hollywood, her discovery of the joys of masturbation. 'Why the hell didn't someone teach me all about it when I was in that fucking convent?' she demanded. 'Think of all the emotional involvements I could have saved myself instead of having to get myself laid by guys I didn't even like just because I was horny. For Christ's sake I spent my youth looking for big cocks when I could have screwed myself with a brush handle.' And so on. All this revelatory [sic] talk took place in an apartment hotel, rather shabby, where most of the New York actors used to stay, on Sunset Boulevard. I think it's still going and is called the Sunset Towers.¹⁴⁰ In the middle fifties it was the thing to do if you were a New York stage actor, and to show your contempt for the contract stars, to stay there in that stucco monstrosity making it quite clear that you were your own man and not owned by some studio and the minute the fucking lousy film you were in was over you were going back to the great New York THEATRE where you re-found your soul as an artist and where the Real Work was done. I, because I was a real stage actor and had played your standard classics, was accepted there despite the fact that I had a million-dollar contract with Fox. Marlon and Monty Clift were habitués too for a time because they were always going to go back on the stage (and actually did for a second – Marlon did a couple of months in summer stock playing Arms and the man and Monty went back off-Broadway to do The Seagull) but gradually Marlon shifted further and further away until he eventually had a permanent house of his own.¹⁴¹ For Marlon, it must have been a harrowing time because he was their natural leader. They all worshipped him and comforted their own failure with ‘Marlon is the greatest goddamn actor in the world and the greatest goddamn film star too but he’s one of us and next season for Chrissake he’ll be playing Richard III and Hamlet and fuck ‘em all here in this shitty phony town.’ But he never did and slowly he also began to fail even as a film star and the great disillusionment set in. Then it became fashionable to denigrate Marlon. ‘He’s sold out.’ ‘Let’s face it, Marlon isn’t any good unless Gadge [Kazan] is there to tell him what to do.’ Etc. Arguments with which I’m only too familiar because I was the British version of Marlon. In my case it was even worse because I was, from the beginning, held up against Paul Scofield. We were the natural heirs to Gielgud and Olivier. Paul being Gielgud and me being Larry. ‘But Burton let the side down etc.’ What they don’t seem to realize is that Paul tried like mad to be a film star. I remember him testing for film after film and being turned down largely because nobody knew how to photograph that magnificent face. It was the era of pretty boys: Rock Hudson, Jimmy Dean, Paul Newman and even Marlon and myself.¹⁴² But, largely out of a kind of obligation to my background and because I felt that I owed it to Phil Burton to become a great classical actor I continually destroyed my film career by going back again and again to the theatre. And I did it against all odds. It was still, up to my middle thirties, ‘Scofield and Burton’. But then everything changed. I went to live in Geneva, made me a million dollars quickly, did anything to get out of the contract with Fox even to the extent of doing two truly appalling films called Bramble Bush and Ice-Palace and, at last I was free to do anything I wanted and, more importantly, not do anything I didn’t want to do. I spent a whole summer in Céligny blackening in the sun – it was a particularly splendid summer all over Europe – turning down film after film. I remember turning down an offer of $350,000 to play Christ in a film called The King of Kings that summer.¹⁴³ It was very tempting. Five months in my beloved Spain and though the script was unspeakable it was to be directed by Nick Ray who had after all made one good film Rebel without a cause and might pull it off again.¹⁴⁴ But I turned it down and just as well. Both Stratford and The Old Vic offered me whole seasons to myself. Play anything you like. Turned them down. I was offered plays by the score. The only thing I did for a whole year was the film of Look Back in Anger which was a flop and a TV special of another short Osborne play called A Subject of Scandal and Concern for the BBC. I stayed at the Savoy during rehearsals. It was for BBC TV and it seems ludicrous now to think that we had to hold a press conference with Tony Richardson, Osborne and myself while we defended the BBC against the fact that they were paying me £1000 – £1000 indeed to God – for an hour's play and three weeks rehearsal. The most ever paid before was 500. The thing was a huge success and I must try and get a copy for the boat. It seems odd too nowadays to think that the BBC solemnly warned all its viewers that the play was being put on deliberately late at night to give them, the viewers, a chance to put their young ones to bed as the play was about a man 'who didn't believe in God'.¹⁴⁵ Wow!

The fact is that I was in a very enviable position. Though I was knocked about by the press – British press particularly – for being a bloated millionaire and a traitor to my country for deserting a sinking British Empire on which the sun was at last setting, I was more courted than almost any actor in the world. I knew bloody well that I was not considered box-office after Bramble Bush, Ice Palace and Anger but I also knew that any film submitted to Marlon and turned down was automatically submitted to me and of course any play of significance came to me first and then went down another line of stage actors. I had an adorable girl baby, I was very fond of my wife, I was a millionaire, I had a sweet estate in Céligny. I had a superb convertible Cadillac (still among the favourite cars I ever had) a large library, an insatiable thirst for knowledge and the means to satisfy it and every opportunity to play anything I wanted and I was terribly unhappy.

And it was nothing to do with anything that I could fathom. Though the possibilities were endless, I had no ambitions at all in my own field of drama. I wrote a lot but never submitted anything for publication though I was asked to. The only piece I published was a couple of thousand words on Meredith Jones for the Sunday Times and I'm not sure whether I wrote that before or after my self-imposed exile.¹⁴⁶ Did I, deep down, regret having left England and all the things that would automatically come from a steady series of jobs in theatre and films? The inevitable knighthood perhaps. It, whatever it was, was not despair, nothing as dramatic as that. It was a strange vacuum. I wasn't interested in anything ordinary. That is to say that I wasn't interested in playing, shall we say, Richard III but might have been in Richard II in which I would have been very mis-cast. I did the Prince in Anouilh's Time Remembered in New York simply because everybody said that I didn't have the elegance to play a top-hat-and-tails part and because Paul had played it in London with considerable success.¹⁴⁷ I lost weight, cut down on my drinking, insisted on Sullivan and Williams flying over from London to make me the tails (I was sufficiently clever not to wear the top-hat) and the black riding-breeches and jacket. I went every morning to the New York Athletic Club and 'worked out' and the play, which was supposed to be a vehicle for the new American Duse, Susan Strasberg, was a success for me but certainly not for her (in fact, it ended her career on the spot) and was a success for everyone except her.¹⁴⁸ Even Helen Hayes, who must be among the worst 'great' actresses ever, had good notices and I was nominated for a 'Tony' etc. and I was the only one who knew that 'they' were quite right. I am not a top-hat-and-tails actor.

My sense of chronology is hopeless and sometimes I put some plays and films in the wrong order but the next step I think was a film called Bitter Victory – a very good script – to be done with Alec Guinness and again Nick Ray directing. This was to be done in Libya, for the most part, with the studio work in Nice. Apart from its being a good script and a good director and the magnificent Guinness as co-star I had never been to the Sahara. So we were on. Alec couldn't do it at the last moment. I must ask him one of these days if he was ever offered it as people are so devious. Curt Jurgens stupendously miscast did it instead. There, at one stroke, went the film and following closely on Anger. I was at my lowest ebb as a film star. I didn't care very much – I won best-actor-of-the-year award somewhere, I think Venice – though I wasn't exactly pleased and was heart-broken by Anger's failure – and then one day Lerner and Loewe and Moss Hart came en masse to see me. It was in Hollywood. Tower Road. They said they wanted me to play the lead in their new musical. It was based on T. H. White's The Once and Future King one volume of which – The Sword and the Stone – was and is among my favourite books.¹⁴⁹ With the condescension that seems axiomatic when writers talk to actors they started to tell me about the story. Quick as a flash I told them also saying that I personally knew Tim White. 'Tim?' they said. 'Why yes,' I said. 'His full name is Terence Hanbury White, but to his friends he is known as "Tim".' Squelch. In fact, I had never met Tim White but I knew a great deal about him from friends who knew him. I knew that he lived on the Channel Isle of Alderney. That he was a melancholic, that he drank himself into a stupor throughout the winters and sobered up in the Spring, started to bath again, and wrote during the summer. And that he was poor. I said that I would do it. They were thrilled. They asked me if I would sing something for them so that Fritz Loewe could note the range of my voice. I said sure thing and sat down very poshly at the piano and played a Welsh song and sang to my own accompaniment. They were pleased and said I was a natural baritone and the potential of my singing voice was immense and indeed I could have, with proper vocal training, made a living as a classical opera singer. 'Sure,' I said. 'Sure, kiddoes'. Would I go to so-and-so in London, or whassisname in Geneva, or ditto in Paris etc. wherever I might be in the next couple of years? It would be a good idea too, since my voice was so rich so superbly natural Christ what a gift, an actor with such extraordinary vocal gift, such warmth such colour. So would I undergo voice training with any or all of the various names they had suggested? They would pay, of course. Would I do this as Rex Harrison had done.¹⁵⁰ 'NO' I said.

Now, two years later, not having heard a note of the music and not having read a word of the script, I was on my way to New York on the Queen Mary to play the piece.¹⁵¹ I arrived in Manhattan to find (five weeks before the opening night in the O'Keefe Centre in Toronto) no script except a sort of treatment with occasional bits of dialogue thrown in. I went raving mad. Moss, sweet man that he was, tried his damndest to calm me down. I called them every vile name I could think of. And it seems to me, even now, that I had justification. Lerner, Loewe and Hart's last collaboration had been My Fair Lady – the greatest success on any level and by any standards that had ever been. Rex had made the greatest success in his life. My leading lady was Julie who had also made the success of her life in Lady.¹⁵² Our poor bloody piece, for God's sake, didn't even have a title!

Thursday 16th [...] For some reason, even more than usual, I made my entry in the diary yesterday like the beginning of a rather portentous autobiography, an apologia. Must save such fragments, properly written for the real thing which is about the only thing I'm ever likely to write – apart from the usual occasional snippet written for mags.

I read all day apart from the diary entry. Changing from the biography of Mussolini by somebody called John Collier – very journalisticky – with lots of ludicrous bits read out to E, and the first volume of Toynbee's History to Spengler's Decline of the West to a detective story by Erle S. Gardner.¹⁵³ [...] Have decided too, though whether I keep it up or not I don't know, that life is infinitely more rewarding without booze. At least my kind of boozing. It's been approx three months now I think though unless I look back in the diary, which I never do and can't anyway in this case as the preceding volume is in Gstaad, my estimation of time like estimating distances over water is absurdly inaccurate.

[...] the Italians are a race of opera-comics. [...] I pointed out to E that the more the Nazis bombed Britain the tougher morale became, and the more we bombed the Reich the tougher they became, but in the Musso book it says that when the first raid on Rome occurred, and compared with Dresden, Cologne and Berlin it was a nothing, thousands of Italians ran out into the streets waving white flags improvised from pieces of stick and vests, shirts etc. but not, I'm sure, underpants which by this time would have been the wrong colour. I once saw a group of teenage Italians set on a lone colleague and finally get him on the ground. When he was down he put one hand over his face and one over his testicles and submitted. The others then proceeded to kick him but the kicks were unbelievably ineffective as they took turns to do running kicks at him but in their anxiety in case the man who was down happened to grab an ankle and pull one of them down with him they kicked from as far away as possible so that they couldn't possibly get any purchase, any power into the kicks. This was in or rather outside a bar somewhere in Rome many years ago and I was with Johnny Sullivan and a lot of other stuntmen who would have enjoyed joining in but the whole thing was so balletic and coy that all we could do was laugh. Of course the stories of Italian cowardice are legion – they even tell them against themselves – and indicate a highly civilized and very witty and healthy respect for life especially their own lives but, childishly, it's not a reputation I would like the British, and certainly not the Welsh to have. I was informed from birth that the toughest thing on earth was a Welsh miner. I believed it and it got me into more fights than one would have thought possible. I'm still likely to have a go though I know that at my age and condition I stand not a chance. I suppose that's what happens to the Irish too. The Scots are far more sensible, like the English they just know they are the best and don't bother to prove it.

Friday 17th [...] We sat and read again all day. [...] I finished off Mussolini. What an ignoble end to a fairly ignoble life. And extraordinary how his weaknesses, inferiority complexes, had the effect in other people's eyes, of giving him strength. He had the unthinking cruelty of a child and it seems that any really dirty work was unconsciously delegated and atrocities were committed without his knowledge. Fundamentally he was a weak but decent man. This man, Collier, though he mentions Mussolini's physical ailments, does not give them the importance they should have had in the book. Quite clearly, and I believe it more and more after that slight but important book The Pathology of Leadership, his physical illness had a great impact on his conduct of the war and in fact his going in to it at all.¹⁵⁴ I'm sure that Hitler wasn't at all pleased that Mussolini joined him in the war at all. It would have suited him much better to have Italy on the sidelines and supply him with materials, raw and finished. Some German General is asked before the war: 'Which side is going to win?' and the answer was 'The side that doesn't have Italy as an ally.' This gem is quoted in the book.¹⁵⁵ Yet another Italian-cowardice joke? Well let's see. If it were not for Italy's, or rather Mussolini's idiotic adventure into Greece – a blatant piece of idiocy to show Hitler that he too could go to war without informing his partner – there would have been no need for the Germans having to go into Yugoslavia to get at Greece. He could have chosen his own time later. Greece might never have come into the war at all as Turkey never did.¹⁵⁶ If the Etyies had not marched on the British and Egypt, Hitler need never have wasted his great troops in the long desert war.¹⁵⁷ When they were involved in the Russian War they were also having to defend Italy after her capitulation against the Allies. If Italy had stayed out of the war or come in on our side after she was sure, and everybody was, that the Democracies were going to win she would have had herself a seat at the carve-up table as a belligerent member of the winning side. She might even have kept Ethiopia. And Mussolini would have ended up with a state funeral amidst the weeping of a nation instead of being urinated on by Italian women in a square in Milan.¹⁵⁸

Perhaps because it's my own time but this century's politics and wars seem to me to be the most fascinating of all time. Never in history have events followed so fast on each others' heels, never have politics been so copiously documented and never before has the final move, potential move so far meant the destruction of the entire human race and indeed all living things. Indeed the year of my birth is as good a time as any to begin a modern history. Because although the Great War was terrible and horrendous – more so perhaps than the second – the great disintegration of world values didn't begin until after the dust of the war had settled and the monsters began to appear. The new monsters.

[...] E still asleep and now must wake her up as she, at least, has to work today. She models for a furrier-artist so called, called Soldano who furs out of Genoa as one might say and who afterwards gives her the furs, and others, that she models.¹⁵⁹ Bozzacchi calculates that the furs on the market would bring in $150,000. I wonder what happened to the pledge that E signed in common with other famed ladies that she would never wear the furs of anything in future except pest furs and vermin. Must ask her and will record the answer tomorrow.

And now back to The Decline of the West.

Saturday 18th [...] E said that her declaration about furs, done through John Springer, was carefully worded. It said that she would continue to wear furs from vicious creatures like mink who were specially bred to be de-furred but would ban the buying, advertising or wearing of fur that came from genuinely wild creatures since, as a result of the trade in furs, they were in danger of extinction. She pointed out that she would wear Persian lamb since she still eats lamb chops. Personally, I said, I couldn't care less about the fate of wild animals and that I was far more concerned with the fate of wild human beings. And particularly with the fate of my wild human family. [...]

E did her fur reportage yesterday under great difficulties as they couldn't shoot out of doors as there was a continual downpour. I went over about 1.30 and was fitted for Trotsky and had a bite to eat. Couldn't wait to come back here to the warm intimacy of the yacht and with the two volumes of the Shorter Oxford on the sofa and Decline of the West across my knees I settled down together with endless cups of tea to a long read until E came home, quite late and slightly the worse for wear, about 7.30. She has just given me a graphic description of the delight of over-eating kippers and the particular joy of their repeating. She is the only person, certainly the only woman who will tell you – not anybody I mean, just me – details of the internal workings of her body. She knows it appals me which is why perversely she enjoys telling me. Liz la Perverse.

I'd forgotten how readable Spengler is even in translation or maybe the translation makes it more readable than the original. He really comes out with all guns firing. The fury in the professional philosopher world must have been joyful to watch. What, I wonder, did people like Bertrand Russell and lesser lights like C. E. M. Joad and economists like Keynes feel like when they read the cold dismissal of them all by our friend Oswald.¹⁶⁰ To turn from the vigorous dynamics of Spengler to the distant urbanity of Toynbee is almost comical. And so it was Spengler all afternoon and evening and Toynbee in bed and A. A. Fair for a night-cap.¹⁶¹ [...]

Monday 20th [...] Did not write in this yesterday but spent a thoroughly lazy day reading Palmerston a biography by Jasper Ridley.¹⁶² I didn't know much about Palmerston before and didn't know how loathsome he was. The kind of English

that causes me bright fury and arouses all my usually sleeping hatred of the English. And now poor bastards they are worse than ever, their two or three centuries of arrogance as a right having turned into pathos. They flared up for a year or two as a result of Churchill and the war but the post-war debacles killed them stone dead. How I enjoyed Suez and the fools they made of themselves. How I enjoyed De Gaulle and his more English than the English 'NO' to the Common Market.¹⁶³ I watch their every humiliation with great pleasure though I don't much like reading other people writing about them as I am now. [...]

Have worked and, as usual on this film, rather eccentrically. [...] Took off 9.50. [...] We understood from the pilot that we were flying right to the mountain-top for the location. However, to our surprise, he landed us at the bungalows and immediately took off again leaving us with three locked bungalows. Brook eventually found keys at the hotel. We opened up, put the heaters on, boiled water for coffee and sat in the sun by the window and I continued to read Solzhenitsyn's One day in the life of when the helicopter returned about 11.50 and we set off again.¹⁶⁴ It was a short trip as we circled the valley and landed again. Why? They wouldn't need me for another hour. More Solzhenitsyn and off we went again about 1.30 I suppose. Finally to work which consisted of being strafed by planes and explosions going off all over the place and is indeed the scene when I am supposed to be, i.e. Tito is supposed to be injured. Did it umpty-nine times. Became tetchy again when they pegged the poor Alsatian down and chloroformed it so that it would lie dead in the shot.

Home at last about 5 covered in mud and artificial blood. [...] was told that I too have to fly to Belgrade tomorrow to see Tito. I don't mind really but I feel guilty about the film again, though there is no way, short of insult, of getting Tito to let me off. We are taking him an Alsatian puppy of superior breeding from England.

Tuesday 21st, Aboard Presidential Plane On our way to see Tito complete with Alsatian dog [...]. The plane is very posh, very presidential – two apartments with beds and sitting accommodation for about 40 people I suppose.

This all came about when Tito told us in Tjentiste that his old Alsatian 'Tiger' had died and E suggested we get him a pup from England. He is very highly bred – the descendant of many champions including a few 'best dog of any breed at Crufts' and other 3 stars.¹⁶⁵ He is very good looking – a very blacky sort of brown.

It is also a good coincidence as Tito told us of Tiger II snarling and attacking

the Russian Ambassador when he, the latter, brought the ultimatum from Stalin. Brezhnev arrives tomorrow for a state visit which I'm told by CBS and NY Times is a thinly disguised look-around for a possible puppet successor to Tito when the old man dies. So now he'll have another Tiger around. The western correspondents I've talked to – and because of the nature of the film and the part I'm playing all seem to be political rather than film commentators – say they expect a big explosion after Tito dies. All are worried that the various republics will want autonomy in which case they'll be dead ducks for Hungary, Roumania Albania etc. and ultimately, of course, Russia. We shall watch with more than fascination as we love this lot a lot and would hate to see them involved in another 'Hungary' or – even worse – another Czechoslovakia.¹⁶⁶ [...]

Wednesday 22nd, Kalizma–Cavtat A horrendous journey back from Belgrade as E was in great pain throughout the journey. Bite-on-bullet, tearful type pain. [...] One of the famed pink pills seemed to help which I've told her to take even if she does get woozy oh willy-nilly-she's-a-ruby. Brilliant morn and God's in his heaven all's right with the world. [...]

Tito was obviously pleased with the puppy and chuckled richly when he saw it. The poor thing [...] followed him in from the garden once so that pleased him no end. I think he was genuinely moved. And so was the Madame Broz. He talked about Brezhnev coming today and how hard the work was going to be. E insisted that he, Tito, speak English for a while. He protested that he confused it with German but she would have none of it and indeed for about 10 minutes he laboured on in English. A few days and a few books and he'd be speaking it very well. We asked him the form for such visits and he sighed and said it would start with an hour or two tete a tete followed by lunch followed by a mass exchange between delegates from both countries. After this Brezhnev would lay a wreath on their cenotaph or visit a factory and then there would be a banquet in the evening. Fool! I would go mad. Three whole days of that with neither of them really saying anything and inferring mightily between the lines. He asked about the film and I told him that we'd been held up etc. but that the work we had done seemed to be good and that friends from London who'd seen the rushes dreamt of dollar signs. He said wickedly that dollar-signs weren't what they were. Well then I said 'Deutschmarks'. Must confess that I didn't think 20 years ago or even 20 weeks that I would choose to be paid in DMs rather than dollars. Oh what a fall was there my countrymen.¹⁶⁷ I asked him about the Fitzroy Maclean story that 'you do this, and you that' was Ti, To and thereby came his name. I persisted and asked him if he'd told that to Maclean as a joke. No, he said, he'd never said anything of the kind but somebody else may have. He said that Tito was quite a common name in some parts, maybe his part of Yugoslavia. He mentioned some other name which was equally short like Nikki or taka or something which he could easily have become.

They want us to come back on Sunday to visit the War Museum but museums ought, as Dylan once said, to be put into museums and I can't think of anything more boring. One of the men there, a very suave under-secretary of the Foreign Office said that some ambassador had been to visit and after a couple of hours said that he had tears in his eyes. Lying bastard, I thought. Unless they were tears of boredom.

[...] E wrote two letters last night while I read Dombey and Son. Years since I read it but page after page comes back to my memory. We had several volumes of Dickens at home. They were won by my brothers, principally Ivor I think, for good attendance at Sunday School or day school.

Friday 24th Exhausting work up in the mountains, physically exhausting. Running about at a half crouch and diving into fox-holes at 9000 feet is not only wearying but boring. Seemingly endless explosions go off all around us and at the end of each day I am covered with dirt, some artificial put on by Ron and some, the most uncomfortable kind put on by nature in all the bombing and slithering about. By evening time I am a mass of aches from the use of unaccustomed muscles. So much so that I missed two days in this diary. Too stiff to be bothered. [...]

Still with Dombey and Son. Must confess that Dickens could do with some editing. Sometimes his discursiveness is charming but sometimes one is minded to skip. One can see him beginning a chapter with 'now let's start this with some fine writing!' Little Dombey is, let's face it, a bit of a pain in the ass. And the famous 'death of little Dombey' very contrived.¹⁶⁸ I'd forgotten how often people cry in Dickens. Tears are for ever starting from people's eyes. But it's all good reading nevertheless. [...]

We are going to go to an island supposedly very beautiful and sub-tropical 70% wooded etc. with interior lakes called Mljet.¹⁶⁹ We shall paddle around it. Tea and off again in the egg-beater. [...]

E told me tonight that she was always perfectly assured of herself in the early fifties when she knew that she was a sort of second string to Jean Simmons, Grace Kelly and Colleen Gray and Audrey Hepburn variously because deep down she could fall back on a sort of cultural or artistic background.¹⁷⁰ She is vague as to exactly what she means and so am I [...] but she thinks that growing up as she did surrounded as she was by great works of art, by your Van Goghs, Monets, Renoirs etc. gave her a sense of proportion about the relative insignificance of whether she played 'Young Bess' or whether somebody else did – in this case Jean Simmons.¹⁷¹ E thinks that makes her sound like some kind of intellectual egotist but I don't think so at all. I was and to a certain extent still am, an awful academic snob. There was no mind, if G. B. Shaw will forgive the paraphrase, that I didn't despise in the film business when I compared it with my own.¹⁷² There was nothing much to compare it with. One can hardly describe Darryl Zanuck, Lew Schreiber, L. B. Meyer, Jack Warner and all their little satellites as being the owners of towering brains.¹⁷³ As E says, for her it was a harbour in which she could watch with some dispassion the busy toing and froing while for me, much more arrogantly, it was a mountain peak on which I could look down on the despicable ants.

I have been a little put out by something that Ron Berkeley told me and which I have yet to verify. I have predicated my still unwritten article or what ever it might turn out to be about Tito on the belief that he never ever ordered anyone, including captured Germans who had behaved with atrocity to his defenceless people and Chetniks who betrayed and murdered the partisans, to be shot. Now Ron tells me that he was in a bar in Dubrovnik the other night and in the course of conversation with a group of Yugoslavs he said that I was particularly fascinated by Tito because of this. Whereupon two men immediately stood up from the table and left the cafe-bar without a word. Ron asked why this, as Yugoslavs are generally polite. The proprietor who is a cockney Slav believe it or not said that the fathers of the two men had been shot in the Yugoslavian 'purge' of 1948.¹⁷⁴ I must now try and find out if these two killings (altogether, Ron says 41 people from Dubrovnik were shot at that time) were personal settling of scores or whether the orders came from the top. If so I shall be a disappointed man. I mean if the orders came from Belgrade. I must also find out if the people are willing to talk. So far, after countless conversations with all kinds of people I have never heard one bad word about Tito and very few pejorative remarks about communism, though quite a lot about bureaucracy and its attendant evils – particularly nepotism and the fact that a member of the party, though inferior in merit to a cardless Slav, will always get the vote. I asked Branko, a veteran Slav actor who speaks good English, why nobody, but simply nobody, spoke ill of Tito.¹⁷⁵ Was it caution or fear perhaps. Branko said that it was neither, that Tito was still a father-figure. To the older generation – people of my age and his (57? 62?) – he and Sava had been the legendary saviours and to the younger generation – those of 30 and under – there had never been any other President.¹⁷⁶ Tito and President had become synonymous. Rather, I suppose, the way in which Caesar came to mean King. Kaiser and Czar are probably etymologically derived from Julius and his namesakes. The young ones know that he saved them from [the] Boche beast and the Red Bear and those who might have opposed him in the crisis of 1948 – if Ron's story in the pub is to be credited – were presumably knocked off or incarcerated. I must ask more of Branko and find out if I can detect in him any signs of caution or fear when next he chats at my instigation. I think I'll be able to tell. I must ask about Djilas and whether it would be possible for me to meet him or even whether it would be advisable of me to ask somebody like Popovi ć who is a member of the party.¹⁷⁷

Saturday 25th, Kalizma [...] I'd forgotten that Dombey was written in serial form which accounts, a great deal I imagine, for the incredibility of the plot which is really beyond belief. No question but that E. M. Forster was right (he is quoted in the afterword by Alan Pryce Jones) when he said that Dickens was the most popular novelist of the nineteenth century and its greatest humourist.¹⁷⁸ He is not however a great novelist because I don't believe half he says and his obvious 'set-pieces' set my nerves on edge and were it not for the fact that I am congenitally unable to skip passages I would have read the book in half the time. But he is good entertainment and ideal for reading on the daily helicopter trips and between shots on the film – something I was never able to do before. [...]

Having seen Tito on Tuesday we were more than interested in the report in yesterday's Tribune of the meetings between Tito and Brezhnev.¹⁷⁹ Looks like the old man is as tough and intractable as ever. He refuses to accept the idea of 'limited sovereignty' which is an absurd contradiction in terms anyway. Sovereignty is sovereignty and limited is limited and never the twain shall meet. The Orwellian double-think is evident in every arrogant word that Brezhnev says.¹⁸⁰ He denies that he meant by 'limited sovereignty' the status under which Czechoslovakia lived and the excuse for the invasion. It says that Mr Brezhnev and Tito were going on a hunting trip but owing to 'a slight cold' affecting Brezhnev the trip had been cancelled. How the Russian bosses must hate Tito and how they will exult when he dies. And there is no ear nose and throat specialist who can prescribe for the kind of cold that Brezhnev has. [...]

Monday 27th, Cavtat [...] Flew by copter to the location – took about 40 minutes. Then were asked by Popovi Ć to go to Sarajevo to have a look at the inevitable ‘Tito’ house. It is the usual thing. A house divided into two floors the top one of which is two suites comprised of bathroom, bedroom with two single beds stuck together, and two minute sitting rooms for each suite. Why two? The helicopter attempted a landing in the grounds but it was impossible so we went off to the airport. [...] Knocked off three scenes as fast as I could and we were back on board the copter by 8.30pm. [...]

Tuesday 28th, Sarajevo Sitting here in my ‘suite’ in the house in Sarajevo. It is as far as one can get from the city without being in the country. The mountains go straight up a couple of hundred yards away. It is, this house and the surrounding ones, again one of those little estates which we have found by now everywhere we go which contain hotels and adjacent houses for the exclusive use of VIPs of the Party. Last night, for instance, one of the boys said that two men appeared unexpectedly and were shown into rooms on the ground floor. That floor has about 8 small bedrooms. So I suppose the VIPs don't bother to book into hotels when on business outside the big cities; they simply report to the nearest Commie-complex.

I finished work ridiculously early [...] about mid-day and was back here in the house by 1pm. Called E immediately at the house but it appears that she'd decided to stay on the Kalizma. Called again this evening after I'd been out shopping but couldn't get through. Will call again later. I feel terribly lonely without Elizabeth. Last night I had dinner as already said in previous entry and today I had lunch – wienerschnitzel, not bad, – just one course when Poppo [Popovi Ć] [...] turned up again with a very splendid brochure of an exhibition here called ‘Art on the soil of Yugoslavia from prehistoric times to the present.’ He is most insistent that E and I should pay a sort of state visit to it. I loathe the idea of a conducted tour around a museum. I loathe museums anyway and in my case they are a waste of time. The last one I went to was the big one in NY called the Metropolitan I think – it's on the east side of Central Park.¹⁸¹ There were a lot of large Rodins about I seem to remember and I wandered about dutifully enough and was stopped by only one thing – a painting of a large forest, the shot, as ‘twere, taken from one mountain top to another and in the far tree-covered mountain was a long thin waterfall. It was so excellently done that one wasn't sure whether it was smoke coming up from the bed of the valley or water streaming down. The woman I was with, a journalist who was supposed to be an aficionada, said it was a 'nothing picture'. And by a 'nobody'. So that was that. Next time I'm in New York I'll see if I can find it again.

The shops close from noon to 4 and so this afternoon I read a book called The French Connection which is about the narcotics trade generally and about one case specifically.¹⁸² Not very well written but informative and though written with the co-operation of the NY Police Department showed the Police up in an unattractive light. They seem to be so stupid. A clever man would be able to defeat them every time. The only reason they were successful in this particular case was, it seems to me, because the criminals were equally stupid.

Went out with Brook, Ron and Vessna the interpreter to buy books if any and biscuits and choc etc. for snacking. Found both. The bookshop, a small one was right near the University and was typical. There were many volumes of Ulysses, collected works of MacNeice, Auden, Keats, Byron, Shelley etc.¹⁸³ Many Fowler's English Usage and dictionaries and Roget's and to my delight two Rex Stouts which I don't think I've read and even more delightful four different Anthony Powells.¹⁸⁴ Also two Ngaio Marsh and The Confidence Man by Herman Melville which I've never read.¹⁸⁵ So for a small shop in the middle of Jugoslavia it was a considerable haul. Why do the idiotic profs in universities recommend Ulysses – you must know your Ulysses and your Eliot and Pound in your English course here, I gather from Vessna and Yasmin – which, unless you have a really wide and fairly deep knowledge of the language in which it is written must be impossibly difficult to read and certainly to enjoy. They'd even have difficulty with that last sentence of mine. [...]

Wednesday 29th Talked to E at last yesterday evening about 9 and we exchanged loneliness – one for the other. Ate many sweetmeats and drank much water and read Nero Wolfe. He writes so urbanely that after a diet of ordinary thriller writers he cuts the palate with a nice astringency, a neat pungency. [...]

I have decided, even though this is my first visit to a communist country, that the Slav is not made for Communism – at least, not the South Slav. I think it must be as atavistically alien to them as Puritanism would be to the South Irish. It doesn't seem to fit somehow. They seem uncomfortable in it. I have heard so many tales now of the really staggering rudeness of shop-keepers to people, particularly foreigners, that I can only think that they are a very unhappy lot. Raymond, for instance, went into a shop to buy something and when his turn came to be served he was asked for whatever it was he wanted and the shopkeeper said, What nationality are you and Raymond said Italian. Why don't you go and buy it in your own bloody country? was the gracious response. They are just as bad to their own countrymen. Vessna went to buy some drawing pins in a shop and was kept waiting 1½ hours. The shop wasn't particularly crowded. The assistants simply took endless time, sometimes disappearing into a back room for 15 minutes in the middle of someone's order. Apart from the rudeness on the shopkeeper's part, where was Vessna's and the other people's independence? Where was the shouting and bawling which would have been automatic in any western country? She just shrugs. They also seem a most uncurious people. Though they have never been to the West, they have no curiosity about it. And those who have been to England or Italy or even, one or two like Vessna, to the USA, they never talk about it. [...]

I did a longish scene with two hopeless Jugo actors – hopeless in both languages – and then waited for hours for Heavy Luger to turn up. He had driven from Kupari and it had taken him about seven hours. In the meantime I finished my Nero Wolfe and started Anthony Powell's A Question of Upbringing which is very droll so far.¹⁸⁶ I've only read a chapter and a bit and I seem to remember that 'Witherspoon' or whatever his name is comes up again very largely in the later volume of The Music of Time.¹⁸⁷ It must be quite some time since I read that volume. I had a lot of coffee and had forgotten how shaky it makes you feel. However, nobody noticed and I used it in the scene to give a tensity to it which I hope will work. [...]

Thursday 30th [...] Finished the Powell and started another – got a little tired of that, I mean his style, – and changed to Life at the Top by John Braine.¹⁸⁸ Tired of that quickly too so tried a detective thriller. Got tired of that. So put out the light at 10 and went to sleep immediately. [...] Vessna and the chauffeur went out last night and bought two kinds of coffee and two tin jugs to boil water in and some strange looking tea so we'll be able to brew up on the mountain top. Also, from my memory of the bookshop, I wrote out a list of books for Vessna to buy which I suddenly decided would be a neat addition for the library on the Kalizma. I asked her to make it paperbacks as much as she could as 'good' books become mildewed from the salt air. So we now have a complete Shakespeare in separate paperbacked volumes, complete Keats, Shelley, Wilfred Owen, Louis MacNeice, Wystan Auden and a Larousse English dictionary which I can keep in the bedroom on the ship.¹⁸⁹ And a fat Penguin paperback of Ulysses which I read this morning and immediately after only four or five pages it brought back bleak memories of having to read it so many years ago. I have never looked at it since it was part of the syllabus laid out for me by Phil Burton. It's such a pleasure to read now knowing I won't have to answer questions about it. Having re-tasted it this morning, merely an aperitif of five pages, I shall devour it from time to time.

Ron came back by car last night as we were forced out of courtesy to invite Hardy (Heavy Luger) Krüger and wife to fly down with us in the copter and with Ron as well we would have been overloaded. [...]

Poppo has spent all day trying to persuade Brook, Vessna and Ron to persuade me to go to the Exhibition of Jug Art through the Ages. Normally I suppose I would have gone, but his persistence is so great and his urgency to have the Mayor there together with TV and snappers while I look at the exhibits has made me as recalcitrant as a wild horse. [...]

OCTOBER

Friday 1st, Sarajevo Have read myself into a stupor and practically a standstill. I tried all kinds of books last night and settled for thinking instead after throwing them all aside. I can't remember what I thought about altogether but I remember thinking how much I would like to have E there. I had gone for a walk through the forest – a planned walk laid out by the gardeners in gravel – and thought that much as I liked walking it is not quite as interesting if when you come back there is nobody to confide in. [...]

Sunday 3rd, Kalizma–Cavtat [...] it's a beautiful morning and I'm in love with my wife and apart from seeing a chap called Terence Baker at 10 o'clock I have a whole day with E and books ships and cabbages and kings.¹⁹⁰ It is also a sparkingly lively lovely day. And my rheumatically anthroidic but beautiful child is still a-slumber and E'en So is snoring and the boat moves in a slow circle on its anchor and now you see Dubrovnik and now you see the hotel here and the church-bells are ringing and a plane is coming in to land at Dub airport and I shall have a cup of tea or coffee and smoke a cig and read and waste myself indolently down the day.

Monday 4th Terence Baker, a large man with a lean face and a fat belly, somewhere in his thirties I suppose, came on board yesterday morn as expected and told me, as expected, that the company had not been paying me. I told him to tell the company that we had heard many tales of Yugoslavian perfidy in re the non-payment of actors or delayed payments of as much as 3 to 5 years that unless my money was in the bank on Monday (today) I would not work on Tuesday (tomorrow) and until the money has been paid would continue not to work. So that should be clear enough even to Poppo's muddly intelligence. [...] It is a shame that our dislike of the Poppo could mean a dislike of the entire Yugoslavian race were we dense enough to allow such an enormity. But from Tito on down we have found the South Slavs to be the most enchanting people it has been our pleasure to meet. They have only two rivals but the Italians are untrustworthy and will do almost anything for a fast lira and the Mexicans are so sad, so melancholy. And although the Yugoslavians are chauvinistic, they do not practise it as offensively as the French – particularly – and the English, Germans and Americans. [...]

Terence Baker is the brother of an actor – English – called George Baker who for a time was thought to be a promising piece of beef-cake but had no talent, even for that, and has drifted into obscurity.¹⁹¹ T. Baker is a very different cup of cocoa and seems to live up to his reputation as a hard man with a contract. He is John Heyman's partner or assistant or co-producer or something of those and gives the impression that he will do well. He instructed Wolf Mankowitz to stay at home and not complete his assignment to finish writing the film as Wolf too has received not a penny-piece. In addition we have discovered that none of the lesser people, those being paid less money I mean, like Brook, Ron, Raymond, Gianni Bozz and, I expect, Vessna have been paid either. That is unforgivable. I could, after all, sell my paintings or E her jewels or something but what is Ron going to sell? His make-up box?

I have now finished three of the first four volumes of Anthony Powell's Dance to the Music of Time and have just started the fifth called Casanova's Chinese Restaurant.¹⁹² He gives the impression of a deliberately distant artist. His canvas is large but he stands a long way off and paints with a remote brush only in the corners and only miniatures. He is not exciting and his poetic impulse is firmly controlled. So much so, that it is rarely apparent. But he sticks with you and it is an interesting experiment in autobiography.

I wonder if I could use that form. I couldn't use the style which is abhorrent to me. He over-punctuates and is at times otiose and I cannot really believe Widmerpool. I cannot believe that a man so stupid could be so successful. But there are another five volumes to go I think. He is not a writer for any mood. There are times when I find him impossible to read and have to put him aside for a day. Also, his coincidences are too pat and occur too often. Though Evelyn

Waugh pointed this out and then apologized on thinking of similar coincidences in his own and Powell's life, I think that Waugh was right in the first instance.¹⁹³ A coincidence that's true to life is not necessarily true to fiction. Also, another weakness it seems to me is that the coincidences are predictable. 'Two people came into the room. Molly Blaides was going to marry a much younger man. The man turned and I saw it was ... Widmerpool.'¹⁹⁴ Don't believe you Tony bach.

A brilliant morning again. [...] It is very hot in the sun and people from the seafront hotels swim from morn 'til night. One massive German woman swam around the yacht yesterday for a couple of hours. She smiled at me so I waved at her and she answered me with a few gutturals and a wave that, perhaps accidentally, looked like a Nazi salute I swear to God. Who knows that the gutturals didn't contain a 'Heil Hitler' somewhere there.

E is a much cleverer reader than I am. She is currently reading a book called Smith and Jones by Nicholas Monsarrat.¹⁹⁵ It is quite a clever piece but she is asking me questions about certain anomalies in the writing which I don't remember asking myself. I read the book a week or so ago. I'll comfort myself by saying that she has a suspicious mind and I don't. I remember giving her The Murder of Roger Ackroyd of A. Christie and telling her that she would never guess the murderer.¹⁹⁶ She got it at the end of the second or third chapter. I was amazed and furious.

[...] There is a big 'spy' defector story in all the papers. A Russian has defected to the British.¹⁹⁷ Yesterday, I said he had 'defecated', which is a good Freudian slip.

[...]I did a scene this afternoon in which six planes, two at a time, dive-bombed us while we were crossing a very flimsy bridge across a roaring river. Explosions went off right, left and centre and were, of course, centred on me – we have to show the old man being under intense bombardment. So the bombs went off all over the place and many people were hit by 'shrapnel' one chap quite badly in the face and two men on the cameras were hit – Pinter in the belly – and several others got odd wounds while I, four times in the centre of the maelstrom, was only splashed with water. My family always told me from the toddling stage 'Ma' lwc y diafol arnat ti.' Touched with the Devil's luck. Keep it up oh diavolo!

Tuesday 5th, Mostar¹⁹⁸ [...] I went to sleep last night to the accompaniment of a very raucous 'group' playing the awful noise that passes for 'Mersey' sound I

suppose.¹⁹⁹ [...]

I am obviously still only half awake. Some of the sentences above are very oddly constructed. Beautiful day with a blue sky and a few white clouds. The moon was going down when I got up. The river, a very hurly-burly one is green in colour, like certain seas.

Wednesday 5th, Mostar²⁰⁰ E arrived last evening earlier than I expected and all the better for that. She looked ravishing or perhaps she always looks startlingly beautiful when one hasn't seen her for even as short a time as 36 hours. Suddenly a bright room looks drab as she makes it by contrast. Received a message by phone which said: Terrance (sic) asks you to please not work Tomorrow or leave Mostar – Money not in Belgrad (sic). I was being interviewed by my Jugoslavian actor friend Basi Ć (Pronounced Basheetch) when the urgently awaited message arrived. I was very disappointed as the less I do now the more I shall have to do in December and bang goes Xmas in Vallarta for a start besides which I really am very sorry for the Director and all the other very nice people despite the fact that I was told [...] after I'd explained the situation, that they [...] would perfectly understand. [...] I had been warned [...] through Hugh French by Deakin that though he, Deakin, was greatly enamoured of the Slavs he was also very aware that in business they can be devious almost to the point of skulduggery. [...] What finally renders us all speechless is that the cost of sitting around with thousands of people on call must cost them far more than the relatively paltry sums they owe me and the rest of the lads. I am furious, all the same that I'm not working. How different it would be if I was holding up production on some cute little killer like Zanuck or Jack Warner or L. B. Meyer. I would give parties.

Last night after dinner Gianni Bozzacchi reduced me to tears of laughter when he told me some of the items put on our weekly bill at the house. Now, the number of people staying at the house is five – Gianni, Claudye, Raymond, E and myself, though E and I have spent very little time there as we usually stay at Cavtat in the Kalizma – and of those five only Elizabeth drinks but she drinks only booze brought from the boat, Smirnoff and Jack Daniels both of which products are unobtainable in Jugoslavia. So, in effect, nobody at the house of our party drinks at all. The bill however for one week had us down for 5,000 dinars, new dinars and the following week it had jumped to 8,000. I asked how much a bottle of Scotch was in dinars. Johnny Walker Red Label is 100 dinars. It therefore follows that if we were all drinking and if we drank only the most expensive drink obtainable which is Johnny Walker and other whiskies we would have drunk 50 bottles the first week and 80 the second. Again assuming we all drank the same amount it would mean that the first week we drank 1 and 3/7ths of a bottle per day, and in the second week 2 and 2/7ths of a bottle per day. Only five raving alcoholics of the classic pattern could keep up such a pace. I have in my time and at my best put away I'm sure the occasional 3 bottles of vodka a day but not for two or three days in a row and certainly not for a week or a fortnight. Otherwise it would be Dead Dad. No, that kind of consumption demands the presence of Bobby Newton, Bernie Lee, Trevor Howard, Errol Flynn and Jason Robards to name but a few of my friends only two of whom oddly enough are dead.²⁰¹ If we had taken the local, and apparently very drinkable wine which costs 10 dinars a bottle we would in two weeks have put away [...] 1,300 bottles. As for the food, it is a riot of over-charging. It is reminiscent of the time when Dick Hanley found that the monthly bill in the house in Rome on the Via Appia Pignatelli for bread alone was $500.

I wrote letters to Liza, Kate, Maria and Gwen and Ivor yesterday while E wrote two! One each to Liza and Maria. The pen-and-pencil set is practically smoking from use. [...]

Went to work at 12 noon as asked and did two shots both involving huge explosions and neither of which I enjoyed as I swear to God I am becoming shell-shocked. Also, it must be confessed that the explosions on this film are the heaviest by far of any film I've ever been on and I have made quite a few very noisy war-films – Where Eagles Dare must have the all time top of the decibel rating so far. But if this one is as loud in the cinema as it is to the naked ear Eagles will have to take second place. If it makes as much money as Eagles it can, for my part, get even noisier and I'll take a chance on being shell-shocked. For the first time in my life in war-films I jumped involuntarily at one particularly near and shattering explosion. Out of the corner of my eye I saw everybody else twitch too but they are not Tito and impassive. During the first series of explosions I am sending out a carefully worded call to Moscow to relay to 'Free Yugoslavia' a message to 'crush the vital forces of the enemy' with all the sang-froid of the typical Walter Mitty Englishman.²⁰² In this case I hope it's interpreted by the audience as Slavic fatalism. One of the decisions I had to make before the film started – a personal one, as the director doesn't speak or understand English – was what accent to use for Tito. To speak English with a Slavic roll and rumbles was a temptation as critics and audiences tend to think of that as 'good acting' but I decided it was too obvious and might even, unless I was very careful, become comical in the wrong way. So I asked a lot of educated middle-class Yugoslavians whether there was a 'standard educated accent' in Serbo-Croat and they said yes and did Tito speak with such an accent and they said no but he was slightly off centre. Therefore I thought I would speak my standard accent with the Welsh lilt occasionally thrown in as a shade, an almost elusive innuendo. I hope it will do. I was interviewed today for about half an hour by somebody [...] from Newsweek who was from Prague or Vienna or Budapest or somewhere in mittel europe with a mittel-european accent I think though it was so slight that it was difficult to place. [...] He was a political correspondent. What a relief they are after film writers. He asked me whether I thought the film had any political significance and I answered that of course it had. Apart from showing the fanatical courage of the Yugoslavian people it also showed its terrifying terrain and presumably, after seeing it, regardless of its artistic merit, anybody who planned Czechoslovakia here in my adopted country might well have second thoughts. The juggernaut could roll over the grass of Yugoslavia if it wished perhaps, but the grass would soon grow tall again and the Idol of Krishna would have to roll back and fore from coast to border for all eternity and still this particular grass would not lie down.²⁰³ I also pointed out that I had the feeling that these people, like a certain kind of Celt – the industrial South Welsh, the Irish and the Scots – liked fighting, looked forward to fighting and even revelled in fighting. Not entirely comfortable people for a dove to live with but I would rather join them than fight them. If the Nazi Army, at the height of its power and already battle-hardened, couldn't defeat this, at first, People's Army accoutred with pitchforks and scythes and of course hammers and sickles, if the Germans – the formidable Army of modern times couldn't beat them and were indeed defeated by these same people eventually then, short of some new diabolical genocidal weapon, nobody could.

What will come out in the article as the reporter and I agreed after the automatons at Newsweek get at it is going to be of course something of stupendous banality attributed to me. Was it true, he asked me, that I was going to do a scene in front of Brezhnev which mentioned in more cryptic form the sentiments expressed above. I said that there was some talk of this but that something happened – perhaps the Russians got hold of it – and anyway it didn't come about. I said I regretted greatly that it hadn't.

Since the entire crew and all the actors were chuckling fiendishly at the idea of this sharp little sticloc [sic] to the vitals of Russian arrogance I have no doubt that the Russians did hear of it. I talked the standard replies to whether I liked Tito and Yugoslavia and so on and I said yes we had been with Tito the day before he had his 3 day meeting with Brezhnev and that no we hadn't had the temerity to ask Tito how he was going to handle the affair which was not strictly true.

[...] E will go back to Kupari tomorrow and I will get back on Saturday night which is going to be a charming six or seven hour drive in the dark down those interminably twisted roads. That will mean not getting back to the yacht before midnight possibly, then to Rome the following day and drawing a couple of hasty breaths hard and fast into Trotsky on Monday morning. I expect Joe will give me an easy first day or, with a bit of luck, it may be possible that I, or rather, they may not be ready to shoot so quickly after their long bout in Mexico. [...]

Thursday 7th [...] A lot of things happened to me – and us – in Rome and the old city is very much in my mind this morning. Perhaps because we are going there in three days' time. The first time I went there, sometime in the early fifties, everybody was on foot or push-bikes or bussed it or trammed. The second time was about '56 and push-bikes were losing out to Vespas and Corgis buzzing around the city like so many angry bees while the next time – the time of Cleopatra – the petrol bikes were being replaced by small, indeed the smallest, Fiats and Volkswagens all seemingly determined to become Fangios or Stirling Moss.²⁰⁴ Now there are just as many of the latter I suppose but owned perhaps by the same people who have graduated to bigger and more middle-income cars while a lower group have taken over the Fiats etc. and the push-bikers to the Vespas have moved – why the German and Welsh syntax? – though the trams and buses must still be full. Since we were there last the Romans have passed laws restricting the traffic in some parts of the city. I think that some of the Piazzas are free from traffic – notably the Navona – but I wonder if the Vias Veneto and Sistinas and that street below the Spanish Steps are for pedestrians only. I shall find out by walking on Sunday mornings disguised in my John Heyman cap. I have been in only two towns where traffic is forbidden. One is Portofino and the other Dubrovnik. A traffic-less Rome would be a joy and an impossibility too since taxis and buses are essential.

Jane Swanson called yesterday from Rome to say that if I wanted my old dressing-room back at the De Laurentiis Studios I would have to pay $150 a week but that she didn't think it worth it as I spent most of the film on location! Nonsense, said I, Trotsky never leaves his house or hardly ever. Meanwhile I looked through the script and discovered that almost every scene I do takes place on 'The Patio of Trotsky's house'. So it appears that they must have taken a real house somewhere in the suburbs I presume and we will shoot it there. That will suit me fine if it's not too far from the city. It can't be in the heart because of the terrific traffic noise but also it can't be in the country as Trotsky's house was very definitely in Mexico City I think.²⁰⁵ I'm not sure but I think I am looking forward to the film. Much more will depend on its ambience but I enjoy playing 'character' parts much more than 'straight' ones. Instance my intense enjoyment playing the bald homosexual in Staircase. I feel much more secure for some reason when the person played is not simply an extension of me. Also I feel that I'm a better character actor than a straight man. I loved doing Toby Belch and Caliban in my days at the Old Vic except for the laborious make-up, especially the latter.²⁰⁶ Another good thing is that apart from 3 scenes I don't have to work with Delon who is so non-actor that I think I would be embarrassed.²⁰⁷ He should be ok though in this part as E says he is marvellous at playing killer-gangsters and so on. Reading the script again this morning I think that Joe will have to move the camera around a lot in the big scenes – there are two of them – between Delon and Romy Schneider (odd that her name in German means Taylor – I mean Tailor) as they are very static non-committal scenes. Am also pleased that I have only one scene with Miss Schneider as from what I hear she is uneasy to work with.²⁰⁸ [...] Ron, with his usual look of dark foreboding, says that she ruined the film they did in Israel for John Heyman with Richard Harris playing the star male lead and directing which Ron says was meant to be a sweet film about a small boy's adoration for a great veteran footballer but, he said, with more and more and darker and darker foreboding, she raped Mr Harris and by means of the bedroom literally fucked the film up into a love story between herself and Mr Harris, the footballer.²⁰⁹ 'Keep,' says Ron, 'your eyes open and your wits about you. Beware the ides of October.' 'But surely Ron,' I say with wide-eyed innocence, 'it's Joe Losey who'll have to keep his hands on his zip-fly, I mean he's the director not me!' 'No offence, Rich,' he says with a look of age-old wisdom, 'you're an attractive guy and all that but Romy would give her eye-teeth to get you away from Elizabeth Taylor.' 'Very well Ron,' I say, 'I will have Elizabeth on set whenever I work with the dreaded Brunhilde and since I only work with her for two days at most and it's only one scene, I think we can safely say that we can consider that particular Biscay safely navigated.'²¹⁰ 'Ah,' he says, 'she's the kind who will come in on her days off like pretending that she wants to watch you work because you're a great actor and all that I'm telling you Rich you've got to watch it.' 'But Ron. I've met the woman and I thought she was pretty dog-like and wouldn't have been interested in her even in the old days.' 'Ah! But she has become very beautiful in the last few years. You wait 'til you see her.' 'OK Ron, OK.'

[...] Miss Schneider impressed me so much, and I saw her a lot when we were doing Sandpiper in Paris and she was doing Pussycat with the Peters O'Toole and Sellers and she was for ever in the bar and so were we, that I simply can't remember what she looks like. I have a vague memory of someone small, I think, and blonde but that's about all. I think Ron would be on more securely prophetic grounds if he warned me of Delon who apparently will go with a Swan to get on.²¹¹ Now there's a bloke who would like to get Elizabeth Taylor away from Richard Burton if you like. And don't think Ron that he won't try. Look at the publicity for Chrissake, and in Rome too of all places. I mean, he would love to do a Burton on Burton. And I mean, this feller had a go at Elizabeth through an emissary when E and I were lovers in Rome and at the pinnacle of our scandal. Here is a man who will stop at very little. I don't know him and neither does E but I have an idea that I know his type very well. A sort of perennial juvenile delinquent who gets vicarious kicks out of hob-nobbing with the underworld. Very attractive to women. Not unlike Frank Sinatra and George Raft and Stanley Baker in their various milieux but without, in Frank's case at least, their talent. Actually, I know very little about his acting as I have, as far as I know, only seen him once in a film called Rocco and his brothers which must have been made about 1960.²¹² A Visconti film, I think, in which Delon seemed as queer as an Arab but very very pretty and Visconti (with who, I hear, he set up house for a few years) and the camera lingered lovingly and almost lasciviously over his exquisite little bones in vast close-up after vast close-up. He must have had something though as he is the only thing I remember about the film despite the fact that it was another actor who made the biggest success in the film and won all the Awards and was critics pet etc. Recently – that is a year or two ago – he was involved with an underworld killing of some kind. His chauffeur-companion, a bad lot with a record who was Delon's 'bodyguard' as well was shot dead in Delon's house in Paris or maybe it was an apartment. It was news in France – front page stuff for Paris Presse, Ici Paris, France Soir etc. – but it all died down after a while and I don't know exactly how deeply Delon was compromised. Anyway, he wasn't locked up or anything but spent a lot of time being questioned by the police.²¹³

Later.

Brook came upstairs in the house in Mostar this morning and gave me a twitch of the head indicating that he had something to tell me he didn't want E to hear. His face was ashen and he trembled. My heart stopped. What had happened? He led me into an office facing our suite where E was reading a book, closed the door and said that Mick Smith had just called from England to say that Liza had been thrown by her horse and was in hospital with a fractured skull and concussion but that she was alright and was conscious and was in no danger they thought but was very tearful and sorry for herself and asking for E. I was stupendously shocked. Despite Brook's playing down of the accident all I could see was his white face and all I could hear were the words 'fractured skull'. My first reaction was to literally tear my hair, a phenomenon which I'd heard of and read of but never seen and here was I putting the words into living practice. All I said was 'that horse, that fucking horse, why did I buy it for her?' I stopped behaving like Medea after a few seconds and asked Brook to tell me everything again.²¹⁴ Then my mind started functioning reasonably again. I asked Brook to phone Raymond and order the jet from Geneva and if unavailable at such short notice to get E on the plane from Dub to Rome at 2.20 and from Rome to London at 4. Failing that, try Jugoslavian charter. Failing that try Jane Swanson and Olympia jets in Rome and failing everything to try as a last resort to get Tito's Mr Protocol and an army jet or anything. In the meantime while waiting for the call I went in to tell Elizabeth, I prefaced everything by saying that there was no danger though, at that time, I was convinced that there was. E stared at me as if I was a stranger, her face went red then snow white. She moaned and cried but never became hysterical and never screamed or any of the things that lesser women do. We clung to each other and slowly, like a sleep-walker she began dressing and putting on her make-up. I made her a Jack Daniels and wrote Liza a letter for E to take with her and finally Raymond [Vignale] came on the blower. This was about 45 minutes after the news had come. Raymond was on the Kalizma and unreachable by phone. In the meantime E was ready to go and packed. We cleaved to each other again for a long time and then she was gone, her sweet eyes puffed with tears hidden by dark glasses. In that long hour before she left we hardly spoke at all. E wondered if she'd been thrown while crossing that dreaded road outside the school. I said I didn't think so. And it wasn't until after E had gone and I sat alone in my room did I begin to work out the timetable of the disaster saying to myself, quite logically: it happened yesterday obviously. Liz had tried to call us all morning and finally had left from the hospital leaving Mick to attempt the call which he succeeded in doing.²¹⁵ If therefore Liza was seriously injured and in a coma and all that they would somehow or other have got through last night. Liz and Mick had seen her conscious and though weepy and though the skull was fractured and though she had concussion she was unquestionably alright. On the way up in the car I reasoned all this out loud with Brook. We agreed that she was ok but all the time thinking – were they telling the truth. How can someone with a fractured skull be alright? [...] And then, oh happy day, I called E in Kupari. She had a jet for 6.15. She had talked to Liza! And Liza sounded as chipper as a chipmunk and couldn't think what all the fuss was about! She obviously doesn't remember how she felt when she was concussed. So now I'm back to reading again. For this relief muchas grazias.

Friday 9th, Sarajevo²¹⁶ [...] I have been reading all day a book which I started weeks ago and put down and remembering that I am Trotsky on Monday thought to take up again. It is or they are The Memoirs of a Revolutionary by Victor Serge.²¹⁷ A Russian by blood and temperament and a Belgian by birth and upbringing his is a depressing picture of man's inhumanity to man and nobody in my eyes, or capitalist, monarchist, Fascist or Communist comes out of it with any virtue. There are many tales of unfathomable courage for false or mistaken ideals but all it hammers home is pungent sentence after barbed comment.

After scathing sarcasm is the hopelessness of this frightful world – a world which has been so good to me personally and demanded so little in exchange that I hardly recognize the filthy reality of the evidence of my own mind and reading. In the book I came across the following passage: 'Sergei Yesenin, our matchless poet, has committed suicide ... said good-night to his friends. "I want to be alone. ..." In the morning he awoke depressed, and felt the urge to write something. No pencil or fountain pen was at hand, and there was no ink in the hotel inkwell: only a razor blade, with which he slashed his wrist. And so, with a rusty pen dipped in his own blood, Yesenin wrote his last lines:

Au revoir, friend, au revoir ...

... There is nothing new about dying in this life

But there is surely nothing new about living either.'

Then Mr Yesenin hanged himself.²¹⁸ What a banal line to write with your own blood and how juvenile how undergraduate and in his own blood yet! I find it unspeakably vile to die with such lack of taste or genuine and proper despair. Yesenin was supposed to be a great lyric poet which judgement I shall never be able to test as I will never be able to read in the original. He was married 8 times so if he wasn't perhaps the greatest poet of all time, he must surely have been the most married. Since he died when he was only 30 years old perhaps all those marriages were behind the last line. Mr Serge says that it was the failure of the Glorious Revolution which drove him to suicide. Silly fool.²¹⁹ I imagine that by the time I finish with Trot and have come back here to finish with Tit I shall have had all this communist childishness up to my eyebrows. I am so far steeped in in Communistic lives and literature that all the capitalism in the rough rude West will be necessary to wash it out.

E is my only ism and a very nice purpose in life. Elizabethism. Do you have any firmly held belief or creed or politic Mr Burton? Yes, I believe in Elizabethism. Elizabeth the Great of course. Of course. End of interview. Next day's Headlines: BURTON CONFESSES TO BEING AN ELIZABETHIST.

E is in London and tomorrow, assuming I finish early enough and a plane can be found I shall be with her at the Savoy or the Dorchester. [...]

Saturday 10th²²⁰ [...] Last day on the film and it's such a beautiful day that I think I will fly to London this afternoon, assuming that I finish in time and fly to Rome tomorrow morning. Talking of eccentricity, that is fairly good and since I am sick of reading about poverty and its accompanying miseries I shall behave like a mindless bloated plutocrat and scream from Sarajevo to Rome to London to Rome in 24 hours. Think of the money I'd save if I went by commercial jet to Rome only. How much would I save I wonder? About $400 I guess and what would I do with it? Give it to Marian. But I've already given her vast sums and she has a dead husband.²²¹ Add it to her Christmas Box. [...]

I talked to E last night. She sounded as disgruntled as a miner on a Monday morning and was obviously annoyed that I wasn't going to London which I was not last night, but have thought this morning that I really ought to see my daughter and want to see them both, I mean mother and daughter, and I will tell The Trot Company and M. Losey that I will do the make-up tests on Sunday evening. Good thinking Richard. Why can't a make-up test be done just as well in the evening as in the afternoon?

I tried to read a detective story last night in bed – one of my favourite men called Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte of the Australian Police. These books by a man called Upfield, an Englishman, are more than ordinarily interesting whodunits as there is a lot of cumulative bits and pieces about the Australian Aborigines. As far as I know he, Upfield, is the only popular writer who writes about them all the time. Therefore, for a lazy mind like mine he educates painlessly and entertainingly. But I think I have read so much about modern politics in the last three months that I find it difficult to switch to anything else. I felt awful last night and E didn't make me feel any better. Instead of being delighted about Liza being OK and being happy after having seen her she spent most of the time complaining about the hotel, about its distance to the hospital (45 minutes she said and since she is at Sunning and if it is the place I remember near Reading there must be some bad navigation on the chauffeur's part for it to be that long) that there was no telephone in her room but only in the bar and that the whole thing was unpleasant.²²² Also if people weren't so melodramatic E could have gone to see Liza at her leisure and certainly we would have both been spared half a day's spiritual agony because it turns out that, thank God the baby had not 'fractured her skull' but had taken a very heavy bump on the noggin and was correspondingly concussed. The words 'fractured skull' are so horrendous. One thinks of brain damage and smashed grey cells and all that while she has actually sustained an injury which, again thank God, is infinitely less dangerous than a broken arm or collar-bone etc. I know perfectly well and was therefore perfectly happy to know, that Liza was an island of content as long as her mother was there and since 'they' wanted me in Rome tomorrow afternoon and since last night I felt bone weary I thought there was no point in my going to London. But the weather is so lovely and I really want to see Elizabeth more than Liza I am ashamed to confess and I felt so much better this morning that I will flip over to London after all. It will be odd to start a film without E being there to give me moral support. I don't think it has happened in ten years. Ah! Yes it has. The immortal Raid on Rommel was started alone and also, double oddity, sober. [...]

[...] Ron is very nervous about the make-up and is beginning to make me so. He says, and I suppose, quite rightly, that the make-up is half the performance and that this is one film where I really should have been there a week or a few days before starting. It might take him, he says, 3 days to get the make-up exactly correct. [...] Also, he says morosely, that 'Joe doesn't like me you know, Rich'. He still believes, says Ron, 'that I poured that bottle of champagne over his head when we were all stoned in Cappelletti when it was McDonald all the time.'²²³ 'Don't be silly Ron'. Ron may be right at that because I remember Joe coming to see me in some film or other, Anne perhaps, and saying 'Still keep your friends around you, I see.' Only Ron, who was making me up, was there at the time. It's true of course that Joe has no humour at all and is, apart from his work, hard going as a conversationalist. Time to go to work.

Later. London.

Flew today from Sarajevo directly to London – we were going to drop Ron at Rome but the pilot said that if we did we would almost certainly end up in Paris Amsterdam or Brussels or somewhere as there was a fog warning for London for planes landing after dark. So despite Ron's anxiety to get to Rome because of somebody's – probably Joe's panic – I insisted he came to London with us and fly back with me in the morning. I can't understand this mad urgency for a make-up test. Ron is the best there is and has made old man make-ups on me before. I am very nervous about this film. John H[eyman]. suggests that Joe is drinking heavily. I wonder if Joe, in his middle sixties, has allowed the success of Go-Between to go to his old head.²²⁴ 'Twould be funny. [...]

Sunday 10th, London Airport This morning, to my dismay, I awoke to find it was 10 to 8 and not my usual 6 or 6.30. Dismay because I had promised Gwen that I would be up in NW3 to see her and Ivor at 8.30. The shower in the Dorchester ran weak and cold (the hotel is really falling apart) and so I abandoned all thought of a shower and [...] tore off after a quick shave and a 'swill' and was up in 2, Squire's Mount a few mins after 8.30. Gwen looked much better than she did a couple of months ago and so, astonishingly did Ivor though for many weeks he has not been able to keep his food down and has an almost permanent high temperature. Any normal man would have been dead a long time but Ivor's stoical will to live is, and the doctors agree, phenomenal. His mind is still as lucid as ever. I started this page on the runways and now am half way to Rome [...]

Landed without incident at Ciampino, [...] I went immediately to the set which is about 10 minutes from the Studio and there was Rome as lovely mad as ever

[...]. All seems well with the film and Joe was gentle and nervous and showed no signs of booze. Ron very seriously and very nervously did the make-up and though I think it looks as if I am a close relative of Ho Chi Minh everybody else was pleased as punch so assuming it pleases them as well on the screen as it did in the flesh that's one problem out of the way.²²⁵ They will be able, miracles, to see the results tomorrow morning at 7 o'clock. I am called to rehearse at 9 without make-up. I am somewhat taken aback as it's so long since I've done a film in which I am required to rehearse. Got home about 6 and [...] I called E who sounded very chipper and was about to settle down and watch herself play The Cat on the Hot Tin Roof on TV in England.²²⁶ I shall call her in 1/2 an hour or so to find out how she likes it and how she likes her pre-Burton self.

On the plane today Ron gave forth with yet another Jeremiad regarding the femme fatale Romy Schneider. This was, of course, after a couple of heavy libations which were by no means his first of the day I suspect. [...] Just talked to E who was watching Laugh-In and told her my love and devotion and she, hers.²²⁷ And now to read my favourite fairy-stories – the sports pages of the Sunday Times.

Monday 11th, Rome [...] Still don't know whether to play with an accent or not. What with the Frenchman and the German with accents and my wife – who is played by an actress who was somewhat distinguished in my early days – will play with an accent too. She is Valentina Cortese.²²⁸ Much older than I, I would guess. Middle 50s or so betcha. So with all around me making mit the accent will I stick out like a sore thumb. I'll try both, that's what I shall do and see how it feels. That's three nights in a row without a proper sleep and it must be because E is not here. I go off like a log when she is. Extraordinary hold she has over me.

[...] Am about to have my second cuppa and will then read myself to work. I hate my work.

Saturday 16th Awoke at 5.30. Thought of getting up but decided to wait 1/2 an hour or so thereby falling asleep and not waking 'til 8.30. I was destined to meet a lady called Rosemary Bain – I mean Romany Bain – at 9 so called Bob Wilson on to put her off until 9.30. I showered, shaved and shampooed and had a cuppa before she arrived. She is not the most stimulating lady in the world but then her job is not exactly conducive to brilliance. She writes for Woman's Own and other such diabolically tedious mags though this interview was for Cosmopolitan, an

American mag which is starting an English version. I answered the unanswerable questions like 'In what ways would you say you've changed since your first meeting and falling in love with Elizabeth 10 years ago in this very city?' with my usual non-committal circuitous tergiversation. She then interviewed E and she did more or less the same. Infinitely humdrum and heavy with humbug.²²⁹ [...]

Monday 18th, Grand Hotel [...] Finished yet another volume of Powell's Music of Time and it's the first one that has made me laugh out loud. All that 'richly comic' stuff that I read in the extracts from notices is simply not there. I would say that he is quietly and perhaps cumulatively amusing. I still have difficulty in believing his coincidences.

Back to Trotsky this morning and that horrible scratchy beard with the gum offensively smelly and, even worse, the moustache. A real beard and moustache is bad enough – or in truth better than the false one during the day – but at least one can take the mock one off at the end of the day with that equally horrible acetone, the smell of which would make a drinking me throw up.

A lovely day so I hope we'll be getting on with the film at a smart pace. I have to go back to Jugo after this and the sooner the better and the longer the holiday. Jugoslavia seems a long way off and already a long time ago. I'm looking forward to seeing it in the winter. Must wear long-johns or combs as the British call them. Since all these years with Elizabeth I am never quite certain whether a phrase, sometimes, is American or English. That's probably what's been happening to Wodehouse – about whom there is a great deal of fuss in the papers on his 90th birthday – for I find in his umpty-ninth 'Jeeves and Bertie' book that someone was 'as imperious as a traffic cop.'

Home now and it's evening. Have had a funny day. Called for 9.30 didn't work until 1.30 and not again until 5.30. Wrote letters to Kate and Val and started on Powell's Military Philosophers.²³⁰ I don't yet have the last volume and I'm missing two of the others though I think I read one of them some time ago. [...]

Tuesday 19th, Rome Another scintillating day. [...] We shot, on my second day an establishing shot which covered a wide area and included my two co-stars Delon and Schneider. The sky was overcast. This means that all the following shots have to be in similar weather until I get inside the house. But the weather continues to sparkle. [...]

We were invited to have lunch with the King and Queen of Greece anytime

we like this week or next Monday. I suppose they should be described as the ex-King and Queen.²³¹ I said that E and I would be delighted to meet them and have a noggin but that going to a lunch was awkward as I was covered with false beard and moustache. I wonder why they want to meet us. I am very suspicious of political royalty. Perhaps like the Shahrina of Persia they are simply star-struck but usually royalty are not. They've usually met so many. Talking of the Shahrina it appears that she reads everything about E and knows all the children's names and where they go to school and all that publicity in the journals.²³²

[...] My memory for words which has always been phenomenal had, in the last couple of years, become suspect. I found that I was taking longer than usual to learn lines but – probably as a result of abstinence – it has come back with all the tenacity of a steel trap. Very nice feeling. I have always said that if ever I got to the Noel Coward or Rex Harrison stage I would stop acting even if I wanted to.

Powell is a great user of archaisms. Yesterday I read 'the smell of eld'.²³³ I rather like their use them myself.

The Soviet Premier, Kosygin, was physically attacked yesterday in Ottawa.²³⁴ What, I wonder, would have been the effect on Anglo-Russian politics if he had been assassinated? A lot of big-sounding threats I expect gradually simmering down to cold tea.

Wednesday 20th, Grand Hotel I should not have spoken so soon about my memory being like a steel trap and all that mild boasting, as today I dried up in the middle of a long scene at least 15 times. Most unlike me. Actually the speech which threw me was an actual quote from Trotsky which Joe who has a predilection for such behaviour suddenly introduced into the scene. But that is no excuse really as I can normally learn a ten line speech in as many minutes. My real excuse is that it was a translation and the syntax was 'throwing'. The speech itself was easy apart from one line 'What aim could I possibly pursue in venturing on so monstrous so dangerous an enterprise.' Every so often I am – and all actors are – defeated by a speech. For years and God knows it is years – I must have learned it when I was about 15 – I have never been sure that I ever got my favourite speech from Hamlet absolutely correct. 'I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth foregone all custom of exercise etc.' God knows too how often I've said it and been paid to say it. There must have been with both the Old Vic and Gielgud NY production around 400 performances. Let's see if I can write it out correctly now and I'll check up when I go down to the yacht.

I have of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, foregone all custom of exercise, and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame the earth look you, this brave o'er hanging firmament, this majestic roof fretted with golden fire, why it seems no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man, in action how like an angel in apprehension how like a God in form in moving how express and admirable, the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals. And yet to me what is this quintessence of dust. How infinite in faculty in form in moving how express. should go after 'is a man.' Oh to hell with it. It should go after '... is a man. How infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension.' Now I really don't know.²³⁵

We are now having a dreadful time with Michael [...] Now he has assured Beth that he has got everybody out of the house in Hampstead and that he wishes to live with Beth and the baby alone. So, the innocent and her baby are flying back to the new Michael tomorrow. Elizabeth doesn't trust Michael an inch when he's under the influence of drugs which is now practically all the time. Just hoping and praying is all we can do. We both talked to Beth in Portland tonight and gave her what advice and blessings we could. I suggested that she go with the baby to London (she was going anyway) and that if Mike and his friends started his shenanigans again, they should go – she and the baby – hop on a plane to Rome. E is in a far worse emotional state than I as I, unlike E, am more optimistic about Michael keeping his word. [...]

And so to bed ere long. I feel very achy and I am expectorating great gobs.

Thursday 21st, Rome [...] I read a script called The Savage is Loose last night.²³⁶ It is a very doable film but would need a very imaginative director with great patience with a boy actor and with many different animals including a panther, a python and a crane. A brilliant cameraman would also be top priority. E would have to lose weight and I would have to put on some muscle. The end is wrong but could be fixed. Will wait for E to read it and decide with her. It would certainly be a pleasant film to make and we could, according to Heyman, shoot it at home in P.V. [Puerta Vallarta] Having read the piece now I don't see why not. All you need is jungle a beach and an ocean all of which we have in abundance in P.V.

Have just started another piece – the long-promised play for TV of John Osborne's called Separation. Actually it's two pieces, one called 'His' and the other 'Hers'.²³⁷ I gather it's about a marriage break-up, one play of an hour from her point of view and the other from his. We must do something for Harlech especially as it's made us some money, though that's incidental, and see if we can help keep the franchise or consortium or whatever they call it. Off to work. In case I hadn't mentioned it before I hate my work. Too strong a word – I dislike it.

Home from work at 6.00. Got through everything in takes one all day including a new scene with Valentine Cortese. Tomorrow I have yet another new scene to do with Cortese and two actors who play the Rosmers in the film.²³⁸ The 'Rosmer' couple brought my (Trotsky's) grandson from Europe to see me in Mexico.²³⁹

There's been a man called Jeffrey Archer, MP plaguing the life out of me through Raymond for weeks.²⁴⁰ I've always refused to talk to him and have told Raymond to tell him to tell Raymond what he wants to talk to me about. This he has refused to do as it was very important stuff and had to do with Princess Margaret, HRH. Then would he write it as Mr Burton will not speak on the telephone? So the stuff comes. It is, if you please a Royal Command (according to Mr Archer) to appear in a TV play for Sir Lew Grade – a 90 minutes one – play under separate cover – and at the receipt of our agreement to perform this so far unread play, which incidentally we hear is dreadful, Sir Lew Grade would make over a cheque for £100,000 to the St John's Ambulance lot.²⁴¹ We would be paid nothing. Grade would have the right to sell it all over the world. I am absolutely staggered by Grade's effrontery. I await the play and John Heyman on Sunday. Her Majesty and His Royal Highness will find that they have commanded the wrong couple. I shall say that I'll do it for a KBE! Mr Archer hinted at it apparently to Raymond over the phone. He sounds a very ambitious little MP. We shall see.

Friday 22nd, Rome I am a very ignorant man. The front page of the Rome Daily American announces that the Nobel Prize for Literature for 1971 goes to a poet-politician called Pablo Neruda. He is 67 years old and the Chilean ambassador to Paris. A Communist and has the usual revolutionary's awful luck and life until of course the Communists under Allende attained power in Chile.²⁴² Having read a description of his poetry I have an idea that it wouldn't interest me very much – the content I mean. I can never really understand the poetry of another language, Welsh and English only. I suppose few men who are not genuinely bi or multi-lingual from birth can. I generally know the important writers of other cultures even if I've never read them but Signor Neruda is a new one. I was surprised to read that only 6 S. Americans have won Nobel Prizes. That includes that vast half continent from Mexico down and I seem to remember that the Americans and British between them have won over 200. I lump them together because frequently the British and Americans have shared Nobel Prizes like the two British and one Yank who created or discovered the design of a molecule or whatever it was about 10 years ago.²⁴³ The Nobel Prize is a very funny one from the start. First of all Alfred Nobel, who started it all, was a Swede, I think, who invented gun-powder!²⁴⁴ It has given some hilarious awards. One of the funniest was to Winston Churchill. He won the 'Peace Prize'. Never has a politician, despite his outraged protestations, loved war as much as the old man. Peace Prize indeed!²⁴⁵

Sunday 23rd, Rome²⁴⁶ We worked late last night and I didn't get home til after 7. E very impatient to see me as she'd had news that she valued from Brian Hutton who directed her in XYZ. He is normally a wry pessimist and not given, as most Americans in the film business are, to superlatives but E says that exhibitors are fighting for the privilege to show XYZ and that Harry Saltzman who had the taste to produce Anger and the lucky judgement to produce the James Bond films, has offered $6m for the film.²⁴⁷ All this according to Hutton. I trust they won't accept the offer from Saltzman – I don't think that they can anyway without E's agreement – for if he offers 6 he must think it will gross more. Perhaps much more. At a sale of $6m I think that E could get about $1m guaranteed but at the end, since her percentage is of the gross absolute and for ever, Saltzman would still have to pay E the percentage. I must ask Aaron if E should persuade them to sell, pick up her guaranteed million and then sit back and – hopefully – watch the money roll in. We'll watch the outcome with great interest. There is even talk of Oscars and my lady must – if one can believe this pre-showing enthusiasm – should at least be nominated. That will bring her level with me said he with a sneering and somewhat bitter laugh. It is interesting to think that if one – only one – of the films we have made in the last 12 months or so hits the jackpot, the rewards will be fantastic. If XYZ, Hammersmith, Tito or Trotsky are blockbusters like Cleo, Wolf and Eagles the returns will have to be counted, for us, in many millions. Even if they are merely very big grossers – in the 10 to 20 million bracket – like Becket, Sandpiper, Shrew, VIPs it will still be considerable – far more than the old days of a million in front and 10% against the gross. I've worked out that if we'd no money in front and the same percentage deals as we've been having in the last 12 months, we would have made more money than we did on the old deals even with non-huge-grossing pics like Ceremony, Spy and Iguana all of which did 8–10 mils. It's more exciting this way all around. Against this argument is of course that for Staircase and Only Game we would only have received, as they were both massive flops, our expenses and, with luck a couple of 100 thousand.

The halcyon days for almost all actors except for the very very big stars or somebody who's had a recent big smash hit are over. I am being paid 5 thousand more in expenses for this film Trotsky than Rex Harrison is being paid in salary with no expenses and no percentage. This latter is an enormous drop from Rex's high time which was as recent as Staircase for which he was paid $\frac{3}{4}$ of a million and 10 against the gross. Rex is by no means alone. Anybody who is not in the 'superstar' category is getting the same kind of money or even less than the norm in the middle fifties – 150 to 250 thousand and no percentage.

The most important thing of all from our point of view is of course that we try to do, at least, rewarding films in terms of the films themselves and not their financial returns. We are both rich enough for ever even despite an economic world-catastrophe. I would much prefer, for instance, that E and I won Oscars than that a film should gross like Eagles and have no importance at all. The fact is though that Oscars also, almost inevitably, go hand in hand with good box-office. Of all the films we've done since we were free of contracts, only two can I remember that we knew before starting were not serious. Sandpiper for both of us and Raid on Rommel for me. All the rest have been honest attempts at good movies including the flops au cinema like Boom!, Staircase, Comedians and Only Game. Sandpiper we did because we were afraid that we were going to be out of work and we wanted to work together, while Raid on Rommel was a joke. A joke that paid though. So did the other joke Sandpiper.

So enough of films. This was prompted by my excitement about XYZ [that it] will be a 'big one' for E. By talk of distinction and by talk of Oscars. I know she is brilliant in the film and I know the film is good but I thought almost as highly of Boom! and that went BOOM. [...]

Reading the Times this morning I came across a, to me, strange use of the word utter. In effect 'to utter' is to pass counterfeit coins. He uttered a lie now takes on more meaning.

[...] Yesterday's work was very strange as again – I thought I'd left all that kind of thing in Yugoslavia – for the second time this week I played a scene with two people who couldn't speak a word of English and who were found to be incapable of learning, even like parrots, the few lines they had to say. It was an all day agony of frayed nerves for everybody, including Joe, though we all kept our tempers and were very patient. But why did Joe cast them in the first place. Usually he is so keen on even the extras being accurate. Very odd indeed. I don't know whether Joe is ill or regards this piece as a failure before it starts or has simply run out of gas, but he is passing performances in this film which an amateur director of the annual church pageant would turn down with a shudder. With judicious cutting I don't suppose it will matter but it would be so much more professional not to have to depend on that. It is bad enough with Valentina Cortese who is a good enough actress but acts in clichés and because of her discomfort with the language makes the quoted banalities she is forced to utter even more banal. A line like the following when the Rosmers lament the fall of France becomes yawning chasm of boresville as a result of her infinitely slow and yet uncertain reading. 'Neither Weep Nor Laugh But Understand.'²⁴⁸ I am beginning to wonder if the stuff they shot in Mexico with Delon and Schneider is equally bad. And that Joe has sort of given up. Because of its very nature the piece is rife with communist catch-phrases and the actors' job is to make them sound fresh and desperately intense. You can't do this unless your command of English is complete. I hope to God I'm being unduly pessimistic.

There was one very funny incident. Joe came in to me while I was being made up and said that the English of the two French actors was so bad that we might have to do it all in French or partly in French. A soon as he'd gone I translated my lines very quickly into French and with Gaston's help got the idioms and grammar right. When, about an hour later, Joe called me to shoot after rehearsing I told him that I knew it in French now. OK. So I started off in that language, going at a mile a minute, which is the way apparently Trotsky talked and was astounded to find that the French people were as bad in French as in English. Finally we stuck to English completely which they failed to get right. It is not even good enough to dub. They will have to [be] off-camera for almost every line they speak and on presumably when I speak. Shit and unnecessary shit and Joe Losey's mother. Anyway, it's a gorgeous day and we are off to lunch on the Via Appia Antica at L'escargot where they have a very good starter dish called Bouchee Caruso which is not too good for diets but undeniably this is a day off and I can watch waists tomorrow. Anyway I am back down to 165 and a bit. I might have a couple of glasses of Mouton or Lafitte or something.

Monday 25th, Rome I talked to Princess Margaret last night at about 7.25 – she had said 7.15 but not too bad for royalty, and amazingly for the Italian Telephone

Service which gave us a very good line. She asked me whether [the] Lew Grade thing was acceptable and I told her that in principle the idea was fine though we thought the plays were not very good and we had two far better ones by John Osborne (I hope we have) and that we would do them in March next year and that the £100,000 would come anyway only simply from a different source. What did I mean? she asked. Well, I said, we had already contracted to do the two Osborne plays for Harlech TV and therefore Harlech had a prior call on our services and the plays were being, had already been financed by USA TV and that the 100,000 would come from us and not Lew Grade. Do you mean from Harlech, she asked? No, I said, from Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Good Heavens, M said, how very generous of you. I am absolutely staggered. Not at all, I said feebly. Pleasure I assure you. Delighted I'm sure and other fatuities. Then we went on to talk banalities about Tito and we must simply spend some time together when we were all back in England swap family albums and stories about Tito and Yugoslavia. She told me she had lost her voice and I thought that it was rather a good idea as she sounded so gentle and long-suffering. That's how I feel, she said. She sent her love to Elizabeth and I sent E's and mine back and to Tony as well I said. I shall give it to him when he comes back from America she said. Well goodbye I still can't get over your extraordinary generosity. Not at all. Goodbye. It was nice talking to you. Nice talking to you too. Goodbye then. Goodbye your Highness.²⁴⁹

I read a review in the Paris Tribune of a marvellous new-old book. Someone has published the entire Oxford Dictionary – all 17 volumes or whatever it is – in two microscopic volumes with a pull-out magnifier so that one can read the minute print.²⁵⁰ E is buying me three sets for my birthday. One for Mexico, one for the yacht and one for Gstaad. I am genuinely excited. What a superb idea. The review goes on to say that the page titles can be seen with the naked eye and it's only the definitions that need magnification. What an even better idea if someone could do the Britannica as well. One would need nothing else on a desert island. I am waiting to see the OED with all the anticipatory pleasure of a small boy waiting for that engine-and-rails or this pair of ball-bearing roller-skates.

Suddenly bethought me that a few days ago the papers all carried front-page announcements that the royals were to get increases in salary and that Maggie's was to go up to £100,000. So we nonchalantly give away without so much as a wrinkled brow the equivalent of her annual income. I wonder if that crossed her mind and whether there might be a little pique that two commoners could be that rich.

Another superb day and Joe (Lucky) Losey should be happy. After my jeremiad the other day I had a letter from him Sat morn in which he said how marvellous it all looked – even the scene he wasn't sure about was splendid and he was herewith enclosing extra speeches about the theory of Art and the State which he had promised to find for me. I haven't looked at them yet but will.

Tuesday 26th, Rome A good day yesterday in which I did a long long speech while circumnavigating the lawn outside the house. Joe had made a sort of circular railway out of the tracks and the camera did a full 360 degrees. What one might call a typical Losey shot. To my delight Joe said that it was my only shot of the day, and it was. The shot demanded a nice series of movements on my and the camera's part but we got it correctly after a couple of false starts. Choreography in films. This took place in the morning and E was coming to lunch with Heyman and the new prospect as agent – a young man called Michael Linnit – nephew of Linnit (& Dunfee) who is the impresario.²⁵¹ He seems nice enough and we've decided to try him for 6 months or so. Bob called E for me and told her to wait for me at the Grand as I was finishing and I would take her out to the Flavia or whatever place she fancied. We went to the Rallye restaurant which is inside the hotel and probably has one of the best cuisines in Rome. I'd forgotten how good it was. Again I had two glasses of wine. It was fine but I fear the thin edge of the wedge. No more except for special occasions. Apart from anything else, it seems such a waste of good wine – and I only have the best – to have merely two glasses. The young potential agent pretended to a savoir faire at first which was somewhat and vaguely irritating but after a time the veneer disappeared and he became more himself. This was after E had sat beside him in the restaurant and applied her totally un-self-conscious charm. After that he didn't try to compete with the ambient worldliness but settled for it. I don't think he's very gifted – not in the same league as Heyman for instance – and will doubtless remain an agent all his life, probably not even having his own agency.

After finishing my film work for yesterday I did 15 minutes for the BBC Tonight programme or maybe it was 24 hours. I talked at a mile a minute the usual guff about Tit and Trot. Then I shouted and bawled into a mike lots of speeches of Trotsky's for the background 'music' of some of the scenes. Joe still seems remarkably distraut. [...]

I started reading Steppenwolf which is very hard going.²⁵² I suppose it is more interesting in the original but in translation it seems so clichéd and juvenile and pseudo. He talks, for instance, of the importance of humour and how its possession is a potent weapon in the battle against the bourgeoisie and the smugly satisfied middle-class all the while demonstrating that he has none. Not a glimmer. Not a giggle. [...]

Wednesday 27th, Rome [...] Message from E came to say that Michael Beth and baby Leyla were coming to Rome [...]. Michael's philosophy is a complete balls-up at the moment. He doesn't want our money he says, but he lives in our house rent free. Again he wants to live the 'free life' without our money but with presumably Robin's.²⁵³ So he is prepared to use us as suckers – his and his friends' use of the word – in taking the house. Then finding us not adequate he then uses his friend Robin as a 'sucker'. He is so exactly like his father that one cannot really blame him. It's bred in the bone. Whose money does he think he is using to fly to Rome? Whose money flew his wife to London? What a funny feller! Let's hope that there is enough of E's pride in him to adopt a more practical approach to life when he is older. Nobody expects him any more to do anything. We don't expect anything of him at all and will keep him in fags and pot forever if necessary as long as he doesn't hurt himself or others, particularly the baby. Now Chris is going to spend a week with him in London. Chris should hold his own I think and hope – a much more intelligent and stronger character altogether, but one can never tell.

Yesterday, we worked well. [...] I worked with Romy Schneider for the first time. She is very arch. She displayed none of the 'temperament' which apparently manifests itself in screaming at the hairdresser, make-up man etc. and was, on the contrary the soul of modesty. [...]

Wednesday 27th, Rome Michael Beth and baby Leyla duly arrived having had a goodish journey I understand though an hour late. The baby doesn't like planes very much unlike Kate I remember at the same age who adored them – especially a rough ride. Gurgles galore while the adults tightened their sphincters. I did two scenes today one with Schneider and one with Delon. Delon is surprisingly small. From a distance he looks six feet but close to he is only about 5' 8". I finished with a close-up around 4.30 and was home before M and B and Leyla had arrived from the airport. They both, as usual with modern hippy clothes look unkempt and dirty but that's par for the course. The baby is a beauty and very well behaved and a mess of toothless grins and waving tight fists. She is very brown, and not from the sun. Some dark blood from one side of the family or other. [...]

Thursday 28th, Rome²⁵⁴ What an enchanting evening yesterday's was. It was as if we'd turned the calendar back five years and Michael was himself again. He was loving with the baby, fun to talk to and to listen to. Elizabeth was as happy as only a grandmother can be. Beth was in good form. Even I was pleasant and though I longed to I daren't touch the baby as my cold [...] might have been given to her. She is the kind of baby that everyone should have. It kicks little legs and makes minute fists and blows spit-bubbles and smiles a lot but hardly ever cries. Everybody hates a crying baby – in fact distraught mothers, generally from the working classes have been known to kill them – and everybody loves a charmer as Leyla unquestionably is.

Elizabeth stopped her drinking dead in its tracks – or practically, as she did have one beer but that was not out of crying despair for alcohol but because it fitted with her food. You can't, after all, have orange juice or Pepsi Cola with pizza. I am marking the diary headings in red for every day she refrains from the demon drink. I am delighted. I've always wanted her to stop drinking occasionally as it must be good for the health and the mental well-being. The latter because it's good to know that one can stop, that one hasn't become an alcoholic, that one does not live by for and through booze. Usually, I take several days of cutting down before I stop altogether but E seems to be able to do it in one.

In addition to all yesterday's pleasantness came the news from New York and California that the showing of XYZ was received smashingly and all the distributors fought for it.

Another brilliant day and my call is for rehearsal at 9.30 and a continuation of the scene we did yesterday and then presumably I go into the first of my two scenes with Delon in the first of which he comes to kill me but doesn't, and the second when he does. Joe is definitely not himself. He doesn't seem to know the script as well as he usually does. Time and time again I, or the continuity girl, have to remind him of things that are very obvious. For instance: in one of the scenes I am pacing up and down and around the garden dictating. Every so often I pause as I hear myself talking to the now dead Sheldon Harte, killed in my defence.²⁵⁵ I am remembering my last conversation with him. Joe asked me why I was pausing. I told him why. Oh really let me look at the script. Yes you're quite right. Yes. Very Odd.

Thursday 28th, Rome Worked all day until the light went. It's now 8.10am and delight of delights our Liza is arriving tonight at 10 o'clock and should be here about 11ish. Shall wait up. E has had three beers so far today but since I don't really consider beer a 'drink' unless many pints are taken I am allowing her a 'red' titled day. Mike and Beth and the luminous Leyla are still here and everything seems to go swimmingly. Oddly enough E had had only two beers when she saw that I had written three and decided to make the presumption a fact. Right now I mean.

Friday 29th, Rome E had a long heart-to-heart talk with Michael yesterday. Perhaps that's too intimate a word when one considers that Mike is in such a potentially explosive state that Elizabeth has to play him like a fish and every conversation has to be extremely circuitous and thin-ice-skating. [...]

Saturday 30th, Rome Very short entries. Largely because I'm not getting up early enough in the morning. [...] I worked with Delon all day yesterday. He is a much better actor than I believed. Quite sensitive and all that. Pleasurable surprise. Liza is here a little overweight with puppy-fat and a trifle spotty but all part of puberty or is it adolescence? Giggles a lot at bluish jokes which for some reason eggs me on to make endless juvenile and harmless and very bad sex jokes. Yesterday, I found a Time mag for April 1940 which was fascinating to read. Winston Churchill was described as 'Sandy Winston Churchill'.²⁵⁶ One never thinks of Churchill with any particular hair or that it would be described as 'sandy'. One realizes what a silly magazine Time is. Their attitudes, even then, were of the most superficial. They had no more idea of the coming holocaust than I did. Just had a long talk with Liza about masturbation – prompted by a Dear Abby column she is just reading.²⁵⁷ I told her that it was a perfectly normal part of growing up – especially I said in boys. Why especially in boys? Because I said I knew about boys, having been one believe it or not but never having been a girl I wasn't too sure. I told her some of the frightful and stupid things I was told and heard as a kid. That you'd go blind and bald before you're 21 etc. All rubbish. Also told her that excessive masturbation might lead to an onanism which might spoil one for more normal sex though I wasn't too sure about that either.

NOVEMBER

Monday 1st, Anzio [...] I wonder if this film I'm doing is any good? I am not possessed by its success as E is with XYZ but would like it nevertheless. Don't really care though. Dangerous attitude to have. Where's your ambition man? Went and lost it a long time ago, sir. Tut-tut.

We moped around all day reading and eating and talking. We took a nap in the afternoon. I asked Liza whether, since she was so enamoured of horses, she would or had consider or considered spending the rest of her life with them. Would she like to breed them for instance? Or train them? I said that we could probably see her to a farm and stake her to a few livestock. I would rather, I said, like a farm in the family. Nice to visit. Smell of horses and brass and leather and a book-lined room for Dad and a large quiet bedroom for Liz and me with a good shower for Dad, very important a good shower, and walks along the woodland ride wearing white for Eastertide, and the morning men stumble out with their spades and all the woken farm at its white trades, and tea and crumpets and cucumber sandwiches in the summer, and a local quiet pub with cool beer frothed and quaffable and a nice walk before dinner and doubtless dogs in the yard, and a couple of superior cats, and why not have a farmhouse of mellowed brick with a chiming clock over the stables, and a rich smell of dung, and could we, do you think, get a couple of giant slow-moving dray horses and harness them up on occasions to some sort of shafted car and go for rides drawn by Dobbin and Robbin, with a market town nearby associated with minor history, with a wide main street and a graveyard beside the church where I could sit and read while waiting for E to finish shopping or examine the headstones and ponder on the monotony of death, and it would be nice to have a bustling W.H. Smith's with a serious nervous young man, thin with an Adam's Apple, weak-chinned and a-bristle with insignificance, a bad second at Oxford writing articles for the country newspaper. And a lot of local gossip and a scandal or two to titillate and who would have thought that the vicar's wife would have run away with a garage-hand 10 years her junior. He wasn't giving it to her, the vicar, couldn't get it up. Don't be disgusting from E and Oh Dad from Liza. There ought to be a train to London to see a play and the last train home after supper at the Savoy Grill or maybe we'll take the Harlequin Suite at the Dorchester and stay for a week while E raids Harrods and Selfridges and Cartiers with Liza and I rape Foyles and Cecil Gees looking for a second hand copy of the sermons of John Elias o Fon, and back to the farm and 7 o'clock breakfasts with the accentless tones of the BBC news at 7 and old films on the telly and Frankie Howerd getting older and dirtier with his odd air of soiled innocence, and Liza

might get a child or two for me to shout at and spoil.²⁵⁸

Liza, in fact, has just arrived from the bowels of the ship and I've read her out the bit about the farm. I hope I've put the right idea into her head. [...]

Tuesday 2nd, Rome Worked a full day yesterday [...]. Bettina and her boy friend and Roddy Mann from the Sunday Express came to lunch with, as usual, E not turning up 'til 2pm. Fortunately I was able to squeeze in enough time between shots to go with them. [...] Today I do a scene with Val Cortese and then the mucky assassination starts with Delon. False blood all over the place.

We had one of those evenings yesterday. Liza was going back to school. She was arriving at London airport at 11 o'clock. Liz (Williams) was going to be there to meet her. Wouldn't it be better, E said, since Liza was going on a later plane than expected by Liz to have Charles Simpson pick her up in the chauffeured Rolls as Lil was a very busy woman and London airport was a monstrous thief of time making Dickens' procrastination a mere petty thief in comparison.²⁵⁹ No, it's alright, said Liza flippantly, Lil will wait for me. She has to go up to London anyhow. But, we said, the airport is not in London, it is a long way from London. The upshot was that she became so adamant that she wanted Lil to pick her up that E became incensed and pinched Liza's arm. Liza dissolved in tears and left the room to sulk. She continued to sulk for 3 hours. Tear-stained face. Monosyllabic answers. Air of Tragedy. The only thing in this world I find totally unforgivable is the silent sulks. The sulker only looks a fool, and a stupid one, gets – from me at least – no sympathy at all after the 1st five minutes, and generally speaking is a crashing bore. E and I made a long-ago pact that regardless how flaming the quarrel, how bitter the recriminations that neither of us would ever mope and sulk. I remember Joy Parker telling me in the days of our friendship that she once had a quarrel with her husband Paul (Scofield) and that he sulked for a whole year. A whole year in which he never said anything outside the absolute necessities. Good morning. Good night. Shan't be home for supper. I would have shot him dead. Once I had a quarrel with E so vicious that I went for a long walk to cool my anger. I didn't sulk though. When I went back, we made it up immediately. That was in Aston Clinton, I think, at the Bell Inn. [...]

Wednesday 3rd [...] Yesterday, had, as per usual its little crisis: Liza boarded a plane at Fumicino after a prolonged delay while officials went through every piece of baggage meticulously in the search for an IRA bomb.²⁶⁰ Nothing found

and off they went to England but not London airport. More IRA threats to blow up London airport had forced its closure so planes were being diverted to Stansted instead.²⁶¹ Widespread fury and I fancy the IRA are rapidly losing their romantic aura of Freedom Fighters for the ould sod.²⁶² Nobody likes a coward and the popular myth of fighting a merciless tyrant – the poor ineffectual English, if you please – is somewhat tarnished by acts of distant time-bombing. The Post Office tower was blown about a bit a couple of days ago, and shops and post offices in Ulster are forever going up in atoms.²⁶³ I often wonder what I'd do if my Welsh extremists started the same thing. I wouldn't object very much to blowing up installations though I think it pretty childish but if they hurt anybody except themselves I would be red fury. I don't expect much from the Irish – a lot that I know so well that I despise them, everything about them, their posturing, the silly soft accents, their literature, especially Joyce, Synge but not including Yeats who writes like a great anglo – original spare strange – yes Hopkins – and I hate their genius for self-advertisement, their mock-belligerence, their obvious charm.²⁶⁴ For the opposite of all these reasons I love the Scots and the South Welsh and even prefer the English b'god, especially the taciturn midlands and north country.

[...] With every excuse yesterday, E only had a beer and a glass of wine and so after a week of 'wagon' she has had a total of one glass of wine, one delicious Martini on Sunday as a reward from her proud spouse and about 10 bottles of beer. Somewhat of a drop from $\frac{1}{2}$ or more of a bottle of hard liquor a day. As she says, the habit of drinking had become simply that – an odious habit in which the excitement of a good old booze-up was dissipated by the habit. We both agreed that the ice-cold vodka Martini on Sunday before lunch was all the better for being looked forward to and so on. E has just corrected me and reminded me that she had a vodka and orange sometime yesterday. So it's two vodkas in a week. Big deal.

[...] Tonight when I came home about 6 E was waiting for me and aglow with contentment. She had been out shopping to Gucci's and had a good time and there we were as happy as you like and looking forward to a nothing lovely evening, me with a crossword and E with a book and discussing whether we should go to Gstaad, Vallarta or – a sudden idea of mine – Quogue for Xmas. We also agreed to go the Rothschilds' (Ferrières) for a party on November 2nd which Guy and Marie-Hélène were giving, one of their truly posh ones which can be very amusing. Last time I sat with Madame Pompidou at dinner and drank with President Pompidou afterwards in the days of course when he was merely an ex-Prime Minister and in mild disfavour with De Gaulle. That night too I saw Brigitte Bardot for the first time since she was a young girl and married to or living with Vadim and not even remotely as famous as she is now.²⁶⁵ I told Ron afterwards that I found it hard to believe that it was the same girl, so much so that I was almost tempted to think I had mis-remembered her name and that it was some other starlet of the time. Ah, Ron said, I expect you knew her when she still had projecting teeth. And that, of course, was probably the answer.

Thursday 4th, Grand Hotel [...] I read Les Fleurs du Mal of Baudelaire ... Tout là-haut, tout là-haut, loin de la route sûre ... Sous mes pieds, sur ma tête et partout, le silence, le silence qui fait qu'on voudrait se sauver, Le silence éternel ... I slept fitfully and awoke every hour but I must have slept happily as E reports that I laughed a lot in my dreams.²⁶⁶ I awoke to the alarm clock – a new and very expensive one which Frank Sinatra gave us for last Xmas. It makes a strange ullulating noise which is not very pleasant and is yet not harsh. I was very very sleepy and practically slept under the shower. I am dressed in outrageously expensive new trousers from some posh shop here in Rome. That's money that I do not like to spend – my idea of clothes is Ohrbachs or Vallarta where you can clothe yourself from top to toe, white thin shirt, white thin trousers and white sandals for an extravagant $8.²⁶⁷ I wonder why Sinatra gave us so unexpectedly that expensive clock? What motive prompted the gift? What was going on in the poor man's Mafia mind? Had he realized perhaps at last that the painting we gave him – I've forgotten what it was – cost a great deal of money and told himself that he hadn't thanked us with sufficient grace? Whatever it was, the reason is likely to be vulgar.

Thursday 3rd, Grand²⁶⁸ I wonder how long Frank will stay 'retired'.²⁶⁹ What is he planning? I doubt that he can write and he doesn't have the sort of mind that makes you think so. Some people, Bob Mitchum and Marlon and Monty Clift and sometimes O'Toole in my profession, give me the feeling – in Monty's case past tense – that were they to set their minds to it and if they had discipline – that they are natural writers but the old Sinatra, the old sinner will I bet have to be ghosted though if I know Francis as I think I do the ghost will be the most ephemeral of all his craft. Nobody will claim well actually I wrote it, it wasn't Frank at all. It is odd that Frank who interprets lyrics from common songs better than any of his rivals and is as I call him a fine interpreter of street corners poetry – one for my baby and one more for the road and other such good songs he can trick in such a way that they seem brilliant minor poetry but when faced with something massive – like for instance Hamlet – he is completely bewildered. I mention Hamlet because once when he was in the doldrums, becalmed in the ocean of Hollywood and unable to get work (somewhere in the early 50s) he asked me to read Hamlet with him as he was going to make a comeback through the classics yet and he'd show the mother-fuckers.

Friday 5th E said last night that I am very snobby about Sinatra and that he's really nice and means well. [...]

I had a most uncomfortable day yesterday. I did the assassination scene which involves a lot of blood. Ron clipped and concealed in my hair a thin rubber tube which went down my back to the floor. Delon strikes the blow and as I stand up and start screaming Ron, lying on the floor pumps the artificial blood through the tube. After one false start when Joe foolishly called cut after the false red stuff started to come through which meant an infuriating hour of cleaning up and re-doing the make-up, we did the whole bloody business in one. During it of course – because I am so lazily unfit – I pulled a muscle in my back or strained something with the result that this morning I am barely able to move. In addition the blood got into my eyes and I also swallowed some so that for a few hours afterwards my eyes were inflamed and my voice was practically lost and my throat was very sore. My eyes and throat are still sore this morning but not too badly. There will be more blood this morning though I fervently hope I don't have to do what we did yesterday all over again.

A group of Italians want me to play Mussolini!

I have been reading, in the last few weeks a lot of novels and enjoying them which is unusual for me – I mean the reading of novels not so much their enjoyment. The set which is a copy of Trotsky's house contains hundreds of books bought, I'm sure, in lots. I started reading them, some of them, at work between shots. I read for the first time Adventures of The Scarlet Pimpernel which I discovered is not the same as the famous book by Baroness Orczy which is simply The Scarlet Pimpernel.²⁷⁰ Very entertaining, supremely snobbish rubbish. Romance, by Conrad and Ford Maddox Hueffer (later Ford Madox Ford), Many Latitudes by a vaguely familiar name F. Tennyson Jesse, a book of novelettes.²⁷¹ Adam Bede of Geo Eliot, Malice Aforethought by Francis Iles and at home I've read a novel by Oxford colleague – we once played Shakespeare together – John Wain.²⁷² Another by the lady who wrote The Severed Head – a name I can never remember, Anglo-Irish, fiercesome looking – and a novel so old-fashioned, so Woman's Own and Peg's Paper that I found it hard to believe that anybody would seriously publish it, called Virginia Perfect.²⁷³ Honest to God. My reading of novels is a change for me. Apart from reading my few modern favourites – Waugh, Greene, Powell, Huxley and Snow – my novel-reading is generally confined to re-reading books that I knew years ago. But now suddenly I want to read again books that I found unsympathetic to me but considered masterpieces by everybody else. I want to read, and will, Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Proust, and I want to read, and will, Balzac, Dumas, Stendhal in the original.²⁷⁴ Perhaps I will find the first three more to my liking than hitherto while the others I enjoyed in English and I thrill to the thought of reading them in the writer's own tongue. So much to do and not so little a time. I hope.

Just remembered the lady-writer's name. It is Iris Murdoch.

My chief joy at the moment is in reading Baudelaire. It is a magnificent thing to discover poetry in middle age. Most men take their quota of verse before the age of 25 and live on it for the rest of their lives – those, that is, who have a feeling for it at all. I mean, of course, to discover new poetry, new at least to them and not simply regurgitate the old and well-known. Baudelaire I had, of course, read in English, in which language he is unrecognizable. Why was I not properly educated in French in my early years though perhaps I should prefer it this way round. It is pretty astounding to find a whole new world of literature, discovering it, I may say, with all the enthusiasm of an undergraduate, at the ripe old age of 46 next week. Think of all those unworked seams of gold. Think of the incomparable treasure-trove to be still discovered in the immense store-house of French Literature. I can't wait for my next day off to augment my library. [...]

The blood didn't get into my eyes today so much though they are smarting again, and managed to keep it out of my mouth too so am in far better order than yesterday. [...] The screaming scene and the wrestle with Delon seems to be very effective so, thank the Lord, we don't have to do it again. [...]

Saturday 6th [...] Had lunch in a place called Passetto's. We apparently chose badly. My lamb – grilled and tasteless and dry. E's calf's liver and bacon – uninspired. I had cozze marinera to begin which was delicious. We shared a bottle of Lafite 63. That was good. We had a couple of glasses each. It would seem that I have got the problem of drink licked, as they say. Yesterday is the fourth time in a month that I've had a glass or two of wine at lunch, and on one occasion a martini, without feeling it necessary to go on and drink down the day as in the old days.

The book about me by Cottrell and Cashin entitled simply Richard Burton arrived yesterday.²⁷⁵ Again I tried to read it but could do no more than flick through the snaps and make fun of Claire Bloom. With the book came a letter from their agent suggesting that I might like to review it for a 'quality' weekly. I shall write back and say that from the bits I've looked at I feel certain that my review would be unfavourable and since I like the two writers and want them to have a success, it would be better if I kept silent. From the pictures in the book I found that the tiny boy in the middle of the back row in the under-14s Sec School Rugby Team is Freddy Williams who was the Speedway Motorbike Champion of the world some years ago. I'd forgotten that he was at the Sec. I thought we were at the Elementary School together – The Eastern. The only effect the book has had on me is to make me mildly determined to write my own story one of these days – in several volumes. I often think, when I'm reminded of my schooldays of a boy in school who seemed to us all at the time to be a god-given actor. His name was Morgan Griffiths I think. He was tall I believe and had a beautiful mellifluous voice, a real 'actor's voice' as we thought, tho there is no such thing of course. Actors' voices are as wide in variety as other people's and are equally badly produced from the lungs. Other than his acting, the boy was totally unmemorable, as dull as dust and as square as a table-top. But he played Magnus in The Apple Cart and Richard II with remarkable authority. At least, so it seemed to us. He had the look of someone who would go bald young. I wonder if he did. I believe he became a bank clerk. I believe also that he wrote to me about 10 years or so ago, no more than that, say 15, asking me to help him become an actor. I believe I replied as I've replied to all such letters that I would not encourage him to take the plunge and give up his security and pensions etc. but that once he had made the plunge I would help him in every way I could. The plunge was obviously never made as I would have heard from him again. But what dreams does that boy dream? What impossibilities disturb that middle-aged, bald gentleman. Is he the manager of the bank now. Did he continue to act with the YMCA or The Strolling Players or The Thespian Society. Does he dream of holding a great house in the palm of his hand and reducing it to his creature as he tots up the accounts. Does he lust for the standing ovation after a particularly electrifying performance as he stands in magnificent solitude against the front curtain of The Old Vic as a dirty old man lusts for the caress of voluptuous hands and the succulence of young breasts. Perhaps not. I hope not. I wonder if he knows how monstrously unfair the business is. The man of thirty, his ambition still burning, bewildered by frustration when tall and graceful and full-voiced and handsome stands well-lighted on the stage and realizes, knows, that the audience are totally uninterested in him but in that other man, that thick graceless pockmarked man with a cracked voice. Why do the audience look at Alec Guinness and not me? Or Marlon Brando. Or Alan Badel. Or Paul Scofield. I mean look at Scofield. He walks like a pimp, he's got a patently false voice, he's elephant-arsed and thin-chested and minute-shouldered and here stand I the shining and superb son of a hundred earls and yet they look at Scofield and his apology for acting. And Larry, my dear, a Lord yet. I mean it's absurd. He's practically a dwarf. He has the most contrived voice, all affectation. And that vulgar streak in him is shaming. As Othello I couldn't look at him. The audience could, of course. But then audiences are sheep, they believe the critics. Fools. And Brando. Have you honestly ever understood a word he's ever said? Be honest now. And as for Burton. Words almost fail me.

Sunday 7th, Rome [...] The virtual cessation of drink has made a terrific difference to E. She is more active, more spirited and at the same time more relaxed. And she looks even more beautiful than before. Her face has thinned very subtly and her ever present baby double chin is much less. Even with E there is bound to be a certain amount of bloat from booze. If she loses 5 or 6lbs with the diet she will look 25 again. And there is no doubt that less grey in the hair takes a few years off too. (For the first time in her life and after years of my refusing to let her have it done she has dyed her hair a bit, that is to say it has been 'streaked' leaving some of the grey). In the last two or three years and for the first time in her life E has looked a bit blotchy in the mornings when she first awoke. I told her so and for the first times ever had to suggest that she put some make-up on if someone was coming to visit us early. But now again the morning face is as fresh and glowing as the one that went to bed. I was going to say 'as a young girl's' but remembered that Liza and Kate too, both a mere 14 years old, look pretty ghastly in the mornings. We have to tell Liza frequently to go and splash water on her face. Mind you, in all fairness Liza's complexion is very different from E's, for E, tho she is Celtic dark has an underlying pigmentation of red whereas Liza tends to sallowness. Faintly yellow. Most women look fairly diabolical in the a.m. Syb was pretty good but a lot of other ladies I knew under those circumstances looked awful, even in their teens. Jean [Simmons] was alright, as I remember, and like E had no need of make-up at all tho she did wear it. Clara Cluck had to wear make-up all the time and not just in the morning.²⁷⁶

She had, like so many women, a faintly ‘bald’ look without it. Some girls I knew looked so frightful under those circumstances that the ‘intimacy’ stopped right there. Hasty retreats in the cold cruel light of morning was often-times the order of the day. The most rebarbative I ever remember was in Winnipeg, Canada. I had been stationed for 6 months at a place called Portage la Prairie, some 60 miles from Winnipeg.²⁷⁷ I was 20 years old and it seemed to me that I had a permanent erection and could think of little else. Since a bad education had given me a guilt-fear of masturbation I only allowed myself recourse to it when I was truly desperate as, apart from the fore-written guilt fear, my own dignity screamed ‘shame’ at the prospect of frantically stroking myself in the squalid communal lavatory or in the RAF bed with thirty other men asleep around me. And the few women that were available were already spoken for. The WAAFs on the station and the women in the town, those who were ready and willing, had been serving the RAF for five years – it was 1945 – and were not likely to change a permanent member of the Station staff for chaps like us who were there only for a short course and then sent back to England.²⁷⁸ It didn't matter that the girls were almost all vilely unattractive, all they had to be was clean and not actually cross-eyed and they were considered to be Hedy Lamarr.²⁷⁹ Even with this collection of affronts to their own sex there was no hope. The incumbents exercised their territorial imperative with ruthlessness, and we hot boys had to content ourselves with wet dreams. Every 10 days we were given a 36 hour pass to Winnipeg and 60 panting young men walking on three legs would invade the infinitely dull city of Peg. Why, Oh Why could we not be stationed near Montreal. Why this town, clean and wide-avenued and built on grain, a great deal of which the citizens must have eaten as they all looked unattractively healthy, glowing with good thoughts and all descended from the British, not nice and dirty and hairy like French Canada. Since we were almost all Oxford and Cambridge undergrads we were ‘placed’ with good rich families who lived in wealthy suburbs with ‘Aunties’. These were generally pretty well-to-do Canadian ladies with lovely Norman Rockwell houses with porches and rocking chairs and unfenced lawns sweeping down to the side-road on which they lived, mail-box on a pole, mosquito screens around the porch, decent ‘best seller’ libraries with, in one house, bound copies of the Reader's Digest, and they would invite round pretty blonde undergraduettes from the University who invariably either wanted to talk seriously about college subjects or – death of deaths and hell's destruction – would bring their boy-friends around with them.²⁸⁰ It was a dry province so there was never any alcohol to help reduce any defences and in any case there was simply no time. Thirty-six hours was cruelly inadequate. Once, at Aunt Elinor's – I had two aunts and alternated between them, the other one being Aunt Sally. Swear to God – she had a girl from the University who during the vac was jobbing as Elinor's maid – a nice sexy looking girl that I nearly managed to seduce but at the crucial moment she started to cry and I realized that the whole thing was too near home and gave up. One weekend however I decided to ignore Sally and Elinor and prowled the streets. Nothing, absolutely nothing doing. I tried parks and cinemas and the main streets. About 11 at night when I finally decided that the fucking town was hopeless and that it was the bloody YMCA after all I was walking down a side street of pretty lower-class houses when I heard the astonishing sound of revelry at night. Winnipeg went to bed at 10 o'clock in those days and was never given to revelry at any time and therefore the sound of singing and laughing at 11 at night was the equivalent of a wild party at 3 o'clock anywhere else. I located the heady sound finding that it came from a house with the blinds down but the lights on. I decided to 'crash' the party. There were about 8 people, all drunk and all older than grass – in those days that was about my age now, 45 or so – all soft with that peculiar North American obesity – and they greeted me with delight. I hadn't had a drink since arriving in Canada and was delirious with delight too when they told me to help myself. They were all drinking beer out of quart bottles. I was of course wearing my RAF uniform with a forage cap with the white band informing anyone that I was air-crew and a cadet officer. Usually Canadians hated RAF bods as we had been there for five years and like the GIs in Britain had more money and more glamour than the stay-at-homes and were thoroughly detested so I was surprised at their welcoming me so cordially. The reason for this change of heart was soon realized. We were sitting in a kitchen on kitchen chairs and a couple of chairs were brought in from another room. I was sitting on the draining board with my feet dangling. I asked what they were celebrating, whose birthday or what. Well we just fired off our new little 22 Browning, he said. I was completely bewildered though I pretended to know what they were talking about. Finally it dawned on me that we had dropped the Atom Bomb.²⁸¹ They then told me, when I asked, some of the details. I was delighted and wished I'd learned the news in better company the Canadians in that house being loathsome. I had only a vague idea of course in those days of its true horror. The evening wore on and eventually, about 12.30 I suppose I left and walked towards the city centre. I was fairly drunk. In one of the main streets I saw a woman alone. With the false effrontery of the drunk and the relieved – on the whole I decided that not having to fight the Japs was a good idea. A guaranteed life was somewhat more on the cards than a guaranteed medal to go with it. I don't remember the exchange with the lady but I seem to remember that she looked reasonable enough and was I thought about 30. Old but not all that old. I had been told that there were no whores in Winnipeg and she was probably one of the many servicemen's wives who were celebrating the atom bomb and the imminence of the war's end. She took me home. It was a bed-sitter. We screwed. Can't very well say 'made love' under the circumstances. And slept. She also had some beer I think. The room was small and it was a double bed that dwarfed the room and there was no room for any other furniture except an upright chair. I awoke to the crying of a baby. It was very early in the morning and still only $\frac{1}{2}$ light. I was for a long time unable to work out where I was. I then remembered. I turned and looked at the creature lying beside me. She was horrifically filthy. Vile. And old. Not thirty but fifty. And an old fifty. Under the dim street lights of the street and the darkness of her room she hadn't looked too bad. Also, I suppose, booze and indiscriminating lust had seen her with distorted myopia. Also she was heavily layered with a pound or so of make-up. Now there she lay in nightmare vomit, unspeakably repulsive. There was a minute bathroom which I had used the night before. I arrived there in time to be sick. After that and after dressing I pretended to a bonhomie that I didn't have and asked where the sound of the baby's crying had been coming from, it seemed very near. One corner of the room was curtained off. She withdrew the curtain. Behind the curtain was a cradle on a stand. In the cradle was her baby. I gave her some money and left.

Monday 8th, Rome Yesterday was for the most part unsatisfactory. Brook Williams came at 10 o'clock and J. Heyman at 11.20 [...]. It seems that I can delay going back to Yugoslavia until January and we have decided to do so and take a long seven week holiday. John Heyman's long disappearance can be attributed to – I had guessed so – to woman chasing. A particular woman called Suzy Kendall who is the girl who stayed with us on the yacht last summer with Mike Caine. We approve of her thoroughly though I am now finding it difficult to believe that neither Caine or Heyman (so he swears) have been to bed with her. She must either be that rare thing indeed – a truly chaste and virtuous girl – or that not so rare child – a girl who's not going to give herself unless the man is going to marry her, or that very common and to-be-pitied thing – frigid. Anyway, there goes Heyman with his tongue hanging out. Rather you nor me Johnny, rather you nor me. I must never have people around again on a Sunday morning.

They destroyed the rhythm of the perfect Sunday, the reading of the papers with E reading me out choice bits from the cheap papers especially the News of the World while I work my way through the sports sections – Longhurst and McIlvanney and Parkinson and on to the politico pages with a final luxurious orgy in the book reviews with pencil and paper at the ready for books to buy immediately or shall we wait for them to come out in paperback.²⁸² I have long given up reading the theatre and film sections. I find them, and always have unless they concerned me, unreadable. When Tynan stopped flashing his naughtiness at us I stopped being interested. Apart from Hobson in theatre and Dilys Powell in films I don't even know the critics' names and I only know the two forementioned because they've been there ever since I was very young.²⁸³ I've always been astounded actually that Hobson kept his job. He followed Agate and has always been considered a poor joke.²⁸⁴ A good notice from Hobson was almost certainly the kiss of death unless you were already established. He is a tiny near-dwarf horribly disfigured by some cruel crippling thing or perhaps he was born that way. He walks with the aid of two sticks and seemed when I met him some years ago on a brains trust to be well under five feet. I was immensely nasty to him that night I remember. It was at Wyndham's Theatre. He had said in a recent article that though I was a great actor I was too short. Nobody else had thought I was too short either before or since and I am in fact the perfect size for an actor. At 5'10" I can be tall or shortish depending on what is wanted. Nevertheless I was still annoyed. When I met him, I said 'You are a bright bugger to describe someone as "lacking inches" aren't you. I must tell Mr Andrews about your breath-taking proportions when next I see him.' The very Sunday previous to this meeting he had described Harry Andrews as having the biggest chin in London with the possible exception of Mr Jack Hulbert.²⁸⁵ And I knew Harry was very hurt, particularly so as Harry is a homosexual and like most of that company inordinately vain. He was, of course, still desperately trying – Hobson I mean – to match the much-quoted Agate's acid wit. Agate had described Neil Porter's nose as 'effectively bridging the gap between Roman and Modern times' in a performance of Julius Caesar.²⁸⁶ And of another actor who was very fat and playing the Merchant of Venice: 'Mr So-and-so could very well afford to lose a pound of flesh.' And so on. Mr Hobson should have stayed in his former job which was, so I believe, soccer correspondent. Ken Tynan on the other hand was so good that Paul Scofield and I practically committed them to memory. He was at his very best when he began on the Evening Standard. Miss Anna Neagle took out her voice and shook it at the audience like a tiny fist.²⁸⁷

There is nothing in Miss Audley's performance that fasting won't cure.²⁸⁸ Except for flashes he never was that funny again and sadly ever as penetrating again. He is still though an exceptional writer and very disappointing at the same time. He should never have allowed himself to be taken up with and by The National Theatre. He is now known as Ken (Oh! Calcutta!) Tynan.²⁸⁹ A sad obituary.

I read David Niven's autobiography yesterday in one sitting.²⁹⁰ It is very funny though not very well written and is, like all actors' biographies, very anecdotal and full of 'and then Mike Todd called me and said "Get your ass over here"' etc.²⁹¹ He describes one scene on Bogart's yacht which is not what happened at all as I was there. He describes Sinatra singing all through the night on a motor yacht with a lot of other yachts around 'awe-struck' he says.²⁹² Frankie did sing all through the night it's true and a lot of people sat around in boats and got drunk it's true but Bogie and I went out lobster-potting with Dumbum [...] while Frankie was singing kept on making cracks about Betty [Bacall] sitting on Sinatra's feet etc. and Frankie got really pissed off with Bogie and David Niv who describes himself as bewitched all through the night was trying to set fire to the Santana at one point, because nobody could stop Francis from going on and on and on.²⁹³ I was drinking 'boiler-makers' with Bogie Rye Whiskey with canned beer chasers so the night is pretty vague but I seem to remember a girl having a fight with her husband or boy friend in a rowing dinghy and being thrown in the water by her irate mate. I don't know why but I would guess that she wanted to stay and listen to Frankie and he wanted to go. And Bogie and Frankie nearly came to blows next day about the singing the night before and I drove Betty home because she was so angry with Bogie's cracks about Frankie's singing. At that time Frankie was out of work and was peculiarly vulnerable and Bogie was unnecessarily cruel. But any way it is not at all like Niv's description. He's very sweet about E and indeed about practically everybody.

Alexandre has just arrived with a message from Marie Hélène Rothschild inviting us

Tuesday 9th, Rome (continued from yesterday) to a party at Ferrières on December 2nd and to stay the night before, which is a Wednesday, and to stay on over the following weekend. Now with the news about Jugoslavia, we are able to go. I had made it a condition of the party that we stayed at Ferrières the night before and after. Two reasons: I love Ferrières. And I don't have to worry about E being on time.

The first is the real reason. The vastness of the chateau and, at the same time, its cosiness gives me immense satisfaction. The grounds, seemingly endless, laked and forested and bridle-pathed are a huge world of their own and I walk around and about it for miles. Also I like the Rothschilds very much. I am not much given to 'Society' but Marie Helene and Guy will always command my respect and loyalty as they were so nice to us when nobody else was. During the time of the Scandale they went out of their way to be warmly polite to us when we were front-page and vulgar sensationalism every other day and every paper. Much lesser people cut us dead, even, if you please, people from our own profession. An idiot like Audrey Hepburn, for instance, a supposedly long time friend of E's was unobtainable on the phone and refused to acknowledge flowers that were sent her for her birthday. David Niven was toffee-nosed too, though he has apologized since. Grace wouldn't have been seen dead in our company though I'm sure now that Rainier didn't give a bugger. We didn't give a bugger either and were perfectly content to be left alone and therefore the nice attitude of Guy and M-H was of no real importance personally to our happiness, but it was a splendid smack in the eye for the black crows crowing at our 'disgrace'.

I gather that the party is in honour of the centenary of Proust's birth. Christ, he was dead in 1922 at 51 years of age and here I am only 5 years away from his death age without a book to my name. I have never liked his 7 volumes of A la Recherche but nevertheless recognize the enormity of the attempt.²⁹⁴ Perhaps I will understand him and enjoy him better than I did when first I read him. I must have been in my teens. I will have another go when we get back to Gstaad.

The ladies are asked to dress in the style of the period with their hair in the period adorned only with 'flowers, feathers or diamonds'. The men are asked to wear tails! Marie Helene nearly got a 'go and take a running jump into Ferrières Lake' message in reply to the last request but E persuaded me otherwise. I am actually looking forward to it.

Yesterday was a blood and sweat day. Me being wheeled, dying from a terrible wound in my head, down a hospital corridor and in to the emergency operating theatre. A thoroughly messy day with false blood drying tackily in my hair and on my face and Cortese crying at my dying even in rehearsals. How I shrink from people who really 'act' like that. They are always so bad too. But they think they are being great instead of bloody idiots, self-indulgent idiots. Creepily embarrassing. E came in the afternoon to cheer me up. We worked at what was the Jewish hospital on the Isola Tiberina, a diabolical place to get to as the bridges Fabricio and Cestio are one permanent traffic jam. No wonder they've abandoned it as a hospital – an emergency patient would be killed by the traffic. Ponte Fabricio was built [in] 62BC with modern traffic not being its main concern. The Ponte Cestio was built in AD192 and rebuilt last in 1890 so that too was made for horse and cart and pedestrians. We work there again today.

Brook told us on Sunday that Emlyn [Williams] wanted to sell his cottage at South Moreton and I immediately said we'd buy it. They want £16,000. It's a bit steep but is worth every penny and will be worth more in the years to come. Liza can have it when she's older. It is perfect for us for a weekend cottage. It is not far from a railway station and there is a good pub within walking distance and shops in the main street only a couple of hundred yards away and unlike Brook's cottage it is off the main street so that dogs and small children are fairly safe. A railway line runs between London and the West Country and Wales about a mile away and I've always loved the sound of trains at night. I prefer it to Sussex and Paul Scofield's part of the country while Kent, though lovely is a monster to get to. It is pretty convenient too for Shepperton and not outrageous for Elstree. All in all, I can't wait to work in England again. As long as it's summer time. I wrote to Emlyn this morning and Brook will take the letter back with him. I've told Emlyn that he can use the cottage whenever he likes for as long as he likes. We shall be there so seldom anyway. Did not note that on Sunday E and I had a martini each and two glasses of wine while yesterday E had a jack daniels. [...]

Wednesday 10th, Rome I am 46 years old today. I am sometimes surprised that I got so far. I always had the feeling that I would die in my thirties and in my twenties was firmly convinced that I would die at the age of 33. This belief was induced in me by an Irish (Welsh-Irish) idiot many years ago in the ML Club in London on a wet Sunday afternoon, late afternoon, when we were having a break from poetry reading. Dylan was there and Constant Lambert, Louis MacNeice and Esmé Percy – by God all of them are dead – and we were drinking well with no particular thought for the fact that we were broadcasting 'live' in an hour's time some intricate verse – at least Esmé and I were.²⁹⁵ No we weren't, we were doing Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey.²⁹⁶ The ML Club was and is a most unattractive, badly run, filthy hole in a wall just off Upper Regent Street. I have never found out if I was a member though I must surely be one now as I 'loaned' them £500 last winter via John Dearth.²⁹⁷ Its only use was as a place to drink when the pubs were closed. One never dreamt of going there if the 'George' was open a hundred yards away.²⁹⁸ Anyway this particular afternoon we had the usual 'break 'til 6.30, run through until 7.30, the red light comes on at 8' injunction and Esmé and I repaired to the ML. It was my idea of total bliss. A Sunday in London at the BBC on the Third Programme – surely the best radio channel in the world – playing Shelley in Peacock's marvellous piece, surrounded by a melodrama of brilliant English actors – Esmé himself, Count Robert Farquarson of The Holy Roman Empire who was reputed to be a Satanist, Ernest Thesiger, Andrew Cruikshank, Robert Speaight, Michael Hordern and sometimes Dylan and James Crock of Gold Stephens and always the BBC stock company one of whom was, if such a thing is possible on radio, a truly great actor – James McKechnie.²⁹⁹ So there you are in my drab paradise of magnificent language for the speaking of which you were actually paid money, on a Sunday in Studio 8 of the BBC Portland Place, the Sunday papers strewn hither and thither and much chat between the boys who matched story after story and, because the competition is so intense, no one person was able to hold the floor for too long even if Dylan was there for Dylan – the most compelling talker I've ever met – was oddly constricted by these precise cold English actors with their impeccable accents. Lunch was at someone's club – I would sometimes go with Esmé to the Savile – but more often it was in the BBC canteen a hellish place appositely placed in the sub-basement of the huge building.³⁰⁰ It was a serve-yourself cafe and a pretty sight it was to see the august Count Farquarson, cloaked like a bandit, and all the other great presences queueing up for the appalling BBC fare. The drinking men however lunched out of a bottle at the George or – not quite so popular as it was that bit further away – The Stag or The Roebuck or some such name. But it was the work itself that was the wonder. The audience was a minor consideration as it was so small. Apart from the fact that the channel for the Third Programme was unfindable in most of Great Britain this brainchild of the BBC would play plays in the original Greek and was indeed deliberately steered away from the mass audience. If they accidentally hit on a smash success it was almost always replayed on the Home Service or Light Programmes. The best work I have ever been associated with was with that programme. I did endless poetry readings there and every kind of adaptations from great works, particularly the lesser known stuff. Your Hamlets and Henry Vs were common fare and one did those on the vulgar airwaves but 'Tis Pity She's a Whore and Love Peacock and Bussy D'Ambois and Chaucer and Jones' In Parenthesis and Anathemata and Joyce's Finnegan's Wake and Ulysses etc. were all done on 'our' programme.³⁰¹

Anyway this Cardiff Welshman – a feature of the sleazy drinking houses in those days and vividly remembered though I can't remember his name – a writer

who never published and an actor who never acted elected to tell us from our hands when we were going to die. My father was up for a week from Wales and I'd taken him to the BBC to have a look at it and was going to send him back to Hampstead after the afternoon drinking session was told he was going to die when he was 81, Dylan when he was 39, Lambert when he was 55 and me when I was 33. I was very impressed – so much so that I have remembered it to this day. It was made more frightening as Dylan did die when I was 29 at the age of 39 and Dic my father died when I was about the same age at 81. My brothers say that my father was 83 but there has always been some confusion re the old man's age and in my case he was, the prophet, only a couple of years out.³⁰² Lambert died but I don't know at what age and I can't remember whether he foretold Esmé's death date, but Esmé also died. My behaviour to anyone who didn't know during my 33rd year to heaven was high comedy. I went by car and train and boat whenever I had to travel. I turned down a film in Durango with Burt Lancaster and Audrey Hepburn and directed by Huston because of the unavoidable flying.³⁰³ Were it not for the fact that I was ashamed to tell anyone I would not have worked that year at all and celebrated my 34th birthday with a stupendous booze-up. I was already very rich and kept on saying to myself as the offers came up 'why should I risk my life for a mere $150,000 when I have a million in the bank, why don't I settle here in Céligny and never leave the grounds of the house even until the year is up. I can learn Hebrew or something. The thing is not to give the gods of retribution the slightest chance.' The anomaly is that I am not even mildly superstitious ordinarily and am certainly not a fatalist. I must find out, as a matter of mild interest at what age Lambert died. I wonder too if in death Lambert is still considered to be the genius he was thought to be when he was alive.

I have the day off today and tomorrow I think. I have received beautiful presents. E has given me two cigarette lighters – an exquisite one, very light and thin, of gold and polished walnut and a sturdier one for everyday use of heavy gold made for her especially by Braun of Germany – the best lighters in the world unfortunately. How the British have lost out to everybody not only in quantity but quality. Claudye and Gianni had a large brief-case made for me out of antique leather with many neat and practical compartments. My favourite kind of things.

E is still being a good drinker. Yesterday she had only a glass of wine at lunchtime and a Jack Daniels at night. She continues to look like several dreams of avarice and is happy.

Two books arrived from Jane Swanson and her daughter Sarah and Bob gave me a sweater from Battistoni's.³⁰⁴ Several telegrams including one from Grace and Rainier and we realized that we haven't sent one to her and her birthday is about now too.³⁰⁵

I did an interview for L'Express yesterday for their cover story. My interviewer was an earnest young man with spectacles who spoke no English and talked a mile a minute and I virtually had to ask him to repeat every single question he asked me. This went on for an hour until I was practically screaming. In desperation I asked them to play some of the recording back for him to realize how impossible he was. He then confessed that he had never been so nervous in his life as he heard that I was an extremely dangerous person! [...]

Thursday 11th, Rome The discerning scanner will realize immediately that the title heading is not in red letters. My birthday was a semi-drunken one for both of us. The rot set in when I made a large martini each about 1 o'clock. Then I went down below to chat it up with a reporter from the Daily Mirror called Donald Zec.³⁰⁶ Elizabeth was unbelievably late even for her and Mr Zec is very hard going so, fatally as it turned out, I had a 2nd Martini. Off we went to Valentino's for lunch. The latter is apparently a very swank haute couturier and is making E's frock for the Rothschild Ball.³⁰⁷ I had invited myself together with Zec who was completely out of his depth and betrayed his discomfort by being a silly kind of smart-aleck while I, not unpleasantly, pretended with the assistance of several glasses of wine to anti-semitism, negro, anglo-saxon, American and anything else I could think of. In deference to my host I excluded the Italians and, for Claudye, Corsicans. The reaction set in later when I got back home refusing to fit for my new suits and slumping off to bed where I slept for a few hours. I was suitably grumpy and snarled at E a lot – one more indication that life is sweeter off the sauce. Today therefore I feel somewhat fragile while E, who decided that if you cannot fight 'em you might as well join 'em, has a monumental hangover. We both agree that heavy drinking doesn't suit us anymore at all.

Presents: Apart from the above-mentioned I was given a large soft leather travelling bag by Joe Losey and Patricia and a lot of Cashmere sweaters from Ron and Bob and Ray Stark who is in town trying to persuade E to do a film for him but the present of presents is the Complete Oxford Dictionary in micro-print, the 17 (I think) volumes being reduced to two with a magnifying glass on a little wooden stand. You have to close one eye. To a bibliomaniac it is a thrilling present. Not to be all stingy about it E gave me three sets, one for Gstaad, one for the yacht and one for Vallarta.

An effusive letter came from Princess Maggie yesterday. About the £100,000. Of course. Must write back.

We are all going to see XYZ at the Columbia private theatre tonight. We are trying to get a few people together to see it who have never seen it before, in the hope of finding out where the laughs come, but the place only holds 30 people.

Friday 12th, Grand Hotel Another non-red headline as E had a few beers and a bloody mary (at my insistence) and two Jack Daniels while I had a bloody mary. (E, I remember said she had only 1½ beers). This has been one of those mornings where through haste everything goes haywire. I didn't take a shower as not having been to bed until 3 I awoke by courtesy of E at 9 to be told immediately by Bob that I was wanted toute de suite. On opening the diary I dropped it and all the loose leaves fell out and had to be painstakingly put back in again. I tried to extract my vitamin pills from the box while holding a cigarette which dropped and burned my fingers while all the pills fell out on the bathroom floor. I managed to cut myself shaving – mildly it's true – but a considerable feat with an electric razor. I always order tea for two in the hope that E might join me. This morning I ordered only one – because I was in a hurry I guess – whereupon E arrived from the bedroom and asked for her tea. Not only had I not ordered my usual two teas but this morning she had asked for one. I hadn't heard her. The sun was brilliant when I first got out but is gone in again and today we must I think have sun. If Joe's and my luck hold we shall finish that shot today. If not it means working tomorrow and possibly even on Monday unless they can devise a shot without the sun's assistance. It is an awkward shot using a technique that I had never heard of. I talk of Stalin and pause to think and the technicians throw an image of Stalin onto space, suspended over my shoulder. I hope it's not too tricky. Those are – there are a few such shots – the 'almost subliminal' shots described in the script and which I made so much fun of to Joe. So to work. Will write about the film which is, to me and will be I think to many people, absolutely shattering. I thought about it for several hours after the thing was over.

Evening. 308

Well, we had the luck and I finished the film with two 'almost subliminal' shots in glorious technicolour and sunshine. Then the weather turned round and now it is grey-black and threatening again. There is a company party tonight down at Tor Vaianica but at the last moment we have decided not to go as (a) company parties are invariably as flat as pancakes especially as the company has to work some more tomorrow and the main reason is (b) it is 40 minutes in normal end-of-business-day traffic and likely to be much more on a Friday. Hence nous resterons chez nous tranquillement avec des livres, des journaux et cette machine à écrire.³⁰⁹

The film I'm talking about above is of course XYZ which on seeing for the first time with everything finished – matching, music, titles (which I adored) and end titles etc. – I found more rewarding than ever. I am not much of a judge as I see so few films but I shall be very surprised if other people don't think E's performance to be one of the best ever given by anybody at any time. She runs the entire gamut from high comedy to knockabout prat-falls to pathos and near tragedy with dazzling brilliance. The film itself too is very and intriguingly beautiful I think and at one or two moments I had most unusual (for me) lumps in my throat. Especially when E was lonely and frightened. The remarkable thing too is that E emerges very sympathetically despite her stop-at-nothing ruthlessness to keep her man at any price. The others are good too but E completely out-dazzles them. Now watch for the reaction and I just hope we're not disappointed. I have never got Staircase and Anger out of my system. E's film Gingerbread Lady is postponed for a time – don't know how long – and Donen has been signed and E said that I shouldn't object too much as Donen's only good work has been with musicals. All this came from Swifty Lazar par telephone talk tonight.³¹⁰ I said if they could let me know in a week or so and if the music and script were ok I would try and fit it in next year. And so I will. It is a shame to do it with Donen who so thoroughly buggered up Staircase, no pun. And so to books.

Saturday 13th³¹¹ [...] Awoke at 8 ordered tea and finished a long letter to Liza who has cleverly chosen Tito as her historical character for this term. She asked me for 'any information' on him so I tapped out three pages or so of a rough outline. Also told her that her penmanship was appalling and would alienate any examiner regardless of the excellence of her writing otherwise. A very slapdash young woman.

[...] Every day here seems to be a day of demonstrations. Yesterday it was something to do with the Coca-Cola factories which, presumably in despair with the endless strikes, have closed down entirely. This morning there was a tremendous hullabaloo about 'no repression in schools' which I don't understand and, since the local papers never or hardly ever mention the demonstrations (so many of them I suppose) I don't know what the protest marches are about. Italian friends confess to being equally baffled though one can hardly expect couturiers like Valentino and Tiziani to be much interested in social disputes. They only deal with the very rich. I must ask Carlo Cotti tonight when he comes.³¹² He is the second assistant on the film and appears to be a cut above the average in intelligence. He wants to talk to me re Benito Mussolini I think for whom, I'm told, he has a great and relatively unfashionable admiration. He is anxious for me to play the last days of Mussolini in a film. Never know, it might be interesting and with E possibly playing his mistress Clara Petacci it would certainly set all Italy by the ears.³¹³ If we shot it cheaply and if it was well done it might be a knock-out. Why not one asks oneself? Why not? This Carlo is reputedly a very rich young man. He is certainly very richly dressed for a 2nd Assistant. [...]

Sunday 14th A black day again. E and I had martinis before lunch though E only drank half of hers and we shared a bottle of Gewarstraminer at lunch [...] with which [...] we washed down caviar blinis in my case, and some sort of delicious veal with mushrooms in Elizabeth's.³¹⁴ After that I drank no more for the rest of the day while E had a Jack Daniels and some wine at Joe Losey's where we went for dinner. E is in rare form acting the goat and mucking about and is generally very droll. [...]

Carlo Cotti came to see me yesterday to talk of Mussolini and he obviously does know his subject and he is a neo-fascist. He made the point that since Mussolini left us the Italians have not been governed at all and that Italy really does need a strong central character, another Mussolini, another benevolent dictator for they, the Italians, understand nothing else. He said that the cupidity and villainy of his race demanded a police state and that the people demanded by their very nature an organization which instilled fear. He wouldn't mind, he said, if there was a strongly repressive Communist Government if only they promised ruthlessness to tax evaders, brought back the death penalty and more importantly corporal punishment – the lash, the cat, the birch. All this from a young man of 32 with a sweet round face and curly hair and eyes of liquid brown and a charming self-deprecating grin. The communists however had behaved so stupidly and were so utterly alien to the Italian temperament and, as a consequence, so weak, that he was constrained to advocate more drastic means. He loved his people but they were en masse a silly mob of disorganized undisciplined schoolchildren and like schoolchildren must be threatened by dire punishment.

I sat back aghast. So much so that it took me 10 minutes to marshal my liberal arguments against his. Better, I said, to have the economy collapse and millions out of work and near starvation than the knout and the boot in the face and the dreadful raid on your house in the small hours and imprisonment without trial and back to the torture chambers and the kneeling position and the bullet through the brain in secret executions. He was unmoved.

Deep in my heart of course I know he has a ruthless point but, like Communism, it is inapplicable to the Italians. I pointed out to him something that he had conveniently forgotten which is that Mussolini's Italy was as corrupt as the present Italy and that like this country today the Italy of the late thirties was also on the edge of bankruptcy.

Carlo later showed us a mink overcoat he'd made for himself and was not sure how his mother would take it and whether she would allow him to wear it. This information, together with his confession of wry idolatry for Franco Zeffirelli and his age and his bachelor status led us to suspect that he is either a Mama's boy or a homosexual. Oddly and perversely enough, with every pun intended, this belief was further strengthened by his political statements. Torture and manacling and gagged mouths being quite unfairly associated in my mind with sexual inversion.

We went to Joe Losey's last night for dinner. They live quite near the Tiber in a dark narrow street, three floors up which we laboriously climbed only to discover that there was a spanking new lift. It was a typical Roman apartment with very large rooms and glazed terra-cotta tiles, two feet square, on the floor, sparsely furnished and lofty ceilinged and as chilly as a hospital corridor. We imagined it being very cold in winter, for me uncomfortably cold and especially as Joe said the fireplace was ornamental only. They had a charming bearded long-haired male cook who went, as is the wont of all servants everywhere, into conniptions at sight of Elizabeth. He was a very good cook though and why can't we ever find a cook like that instead of either lousy ones like the chap on the yacht or fellers who can only stay for 3 months and then have to go to the army or back to college or something equally frustrating. Mind you, I would rather not have a cook at all as one of us is always dickering with a diet and cooks become very put out if their creations are not eaten. Another thing with cooks is that they find it impossible to believe that one only wants one course. Their only virtue is when one has a large family gathering or a lot of people coming to eat. Eating with the Loseys alone or simply going to their home for a drink is always, to me, sort of Chekhovian. The conversation seems to have undertones and strange experiences between the lines, unspoken but guessed at. Joe is a bad conversationalist, a slow speech pattern with many pauses while he searches his vocabulary for the bon mot and a great deal of er-er-ers while Tragicia (E's spoonerism for Patricia years ago and which has stuck) talks in a mellifluous monotone the whole time with that kind of delivery that puts me – if I'm in a certain mood – into a species of trance where one listens, doesn't want the speaker to stop and where one doesn't want to interrupt in case the trance is broken. One gets it sometimes from a barber while one is getting a short-back-and-sides and the barber babbles cosily on and on. Minute and pleasant pulses tick softly in the temples as if there's pressure, very slight and euphoric pressure from soft strong fingers. I am very susceptible to this kind of mesmerism this kind of removal from the world. [...]

Joe has great charm despite his lack of humour especially about himself, a lack which was perfectly exemplified last night when he told us of a very savage telegram which he's sent off to a man called Bernard Delfont who 'produced' The Go-Between and who had put on the bill-boards his name in GIGANTIC LETTERS while Joe's name was tiny and Harold Pinter's wasn't on at all.³¹⁵ The telegram was something like 'What is the use of spending one's life producing artistic creations if in the end a shit like you has control etc.' Joe, like other humourless gents like Bill Wilder and Joe Manciewicz, will not realize that the general public do emphatically not go to see a Joe Losey Picture or a Joe Mank Picture or a Billy Wilder Picture but go to see that marvellous actor so-and-so or that great actress such-and-such or that screamingly funny whatchermaycallit.³¹⁶ It is true that there is a minute percentage who go more to see the director's work, the intelligentsia and other people in the profession who go more to see the director's work, the sort of people who belong to film clubs and love movies in foreign languages, than the actor's, but they don't need to see bill-boards to know it's a Losey picture. They will have read the information in Sight and Sound.³¹⁷ But there's no persuading them otherwise and I've long given up.

Monday 15th³¹⁸ A completely lazy day yesterday. Only 4 newspapers arrived: News of the World, Express, Observer and Telegraph. We always have bad luck with the Observer and wherever we are abroad we invariably seem to get the

Scottish and Irish editions which means that the sports pages are devoted to Linfield versus Shamrock or whatever and not Arsenal v Leeds and Glasgow Academicals v Heriot F.P. instead of Harlequins v London Welsh or Blackheath. Very irritating. The Sunday Times is the most satisfying buy seeming to have more body to it than any other papers and I don't mean bulk but a way of presenting news in a chunkier form. There seem to be more solid columns and fewer snippets than others. Wilfred Wooller for instance in the Telegraph was given yesterday no more space than I have occupied writing this entry this morning.³¹⁹ That means, unless you write a sonnet, no space at all. But Parkinson and Longhurst and others have a thousand words and the political columns and literary boys a fair space too. The Express also is a cut above the other rags and for the same reason. Hoby and Blanchflower have sizeable portions though I do wish they'd get someone other than Danny Boy to occupy that very desirable space – he so bristles with mediocrity and holier-than-thou humourless pretentiousness, pretending to a long range long viewed wisdom and a tedious philosophy where he is forever comparing the game of soccer with the 'game of life'.³²⁰ Whereas Hoby is straightforward purple adjectived sensationalism. Peregrine Worsthorne has a beautiful lump in the Sunday Telegraph and is worth reading because of his almost amateur enthusiasm. A week ago he exultantly announced and explained the 'Death of the Labour Party' and that, short of a miracle, the Tories were going to be the masters for several generations. This week he threatened the Irish with Britain's hatred if they continued to tar and feather young girls who went a-courting with British soldiers. The British, he said, didn't hate easily but when they did ... Oh Boy look out! Astonishingly, he said that during the last war the British didn't hate the Germans – quote – until we heard of the atrocities of the prison camps. Indeed, Worsthorne, indeed. Then, Cyril Connolly has a lot of space in the Sunday Times and Brandon from Washington while Toynbee and A. J. P. Taylor and Muggeridge get fair cracks of the whip too.³²¹ I wish though that the 'qualities' had proper, separate books sections like the NY Times and the old Herald-Tribune. The sort of thing you can keep in volumes and not the flimsy 4 pages the British have which includes travel and good food and wines and TV and theatre and films and art and ballet. The Express always has the unbelievable Mrs Grundy yclept John Gordon who is so ineffably self-righteous that he has the funniest column of the lot.³²² He has had several 'gos' at me over the years and I find it well-nigh impossible to be angry with him. 'Must we have again and again so much space in our newspapers devoted to the unimportant doings of Mr

Richard Burton and his wife the much married Elizabeth Taylor. What are they after all but film stars who don't even have the sense of duty to pay their taxes. Who, after all, cares that Miss Taylor has a million dollar ring. I, for one and all of my friends find such ostentation boring and vulgar.' And then I'm very fond of Cross-Bencher in the Express who gnat-bites here thither and yon at front and back benchers alike with snide innuendo and arch imputation. 'Who is John Parrish who has been creating so much excitement in the drawing rooms of Conservative salons with his "I will stake my whole political future on the blazing belief that we must, if we are not to commit political suicide, go whole heartedly into Europe." Why it is none other than Lord Ass-hole who before rejecting his hereditary title to sit in the Commons said on a famous occasion "As far as I'm concerned the Wogs begin at Calais."'

We are going to have dinner tonight with Peter Sellers and an Indian Mystic who tells the future and who, Peter says, is called Gandhi.

Tuesday 16th, Rome We both fell off the waggon yesterday, me with a profound bump resulting in a pretty enjoyable but silly evening on my part. The usual drunken devil of impish perversity dominated my talk which since I didn't allow other people to talk much meant that I teetered on the edge of spoiling the night. However I wrote a letter of apology to Sellers and friends this morning together with the micro-Oxford Dictionary which E had promised to Peter last night.

Mr Gandhi was short and dark and spoke with the classic Indian-Welsh accent so outrageously impersonated by Peter in that record years ago.³²³ I find it hard to believe that Peter cannot go back into England to see his wife in hospital who is suffering apparently from a severe attack of cerebral meningitis.³²⁴ I told him that he should go ahead and do it quickly – in and out before anybody knows it – but I have a suspicion that he didn't want that advice. I hope I'm wrong but that marriage like his other two looks on the rocks. There was one startling moment which was missed unfortunately by E who was in the bedroom when, talking about the various legal suits we have all had against us he said that he and his former wife, Britt Ekland, were sued by Fox for breaking her contract which, he said, she broke at his insistence because 'I told her that I needed at least a year to educate her and teach her how to act and give her a knowledge of great world drama, before she was fit to face a major career.'³²⁵ Neither E nor I think that little Miss Ekland needed much instruction from M. Sellers.

They talked, when I allowed them to, a lot about Yoga and meditation and vegetarianism and I told Pietro that I wanted to talk more about it and we are meeting tomorrow night on the yacht and will show, if we have it – it's in customs – Under Milk Wood which we have yet to see and which has been received so well. [...] I am genuinely interested in Yoga having read 3 or 4 books on the subject – only primitive stuff about weight and physical well being and diet and stuff – and would like to know more.

Zoe Sallis came too to the little party and it seems that she and Sellers hit it off very well indeed as we've just discovered from a phone conversation with Peter as he asked if she could be invited also tomorrow night.

I had a vodka and orange and a bloody mary at lunch time and have a martini in the fridge to titch me up before dinner – it's about 7.30 – and will revert to my sober behaviour tomorrow. I really don't like drinking at yesterday's pace and I'm silly to do it.

Zoe Sallis is a very attractive girl who has been John Huston's mistress for 10 years or so and we have known her since doing the film Night of the Iguana when she was living with John and their baby – then about 6 months old and now getting on for 9 and a breathless reminder of tempus will fugit – in Vallarta.³²⁶ She now looks like a grown-up and not the child she looked then. She is about 30 I suppose and very dark and Indian looking. I think she said last night that she was Eurasian or perhaps she was only saying that to impress Sellers and 'Bert' (Seller's companion) and Ganh, Gandhi rather, who obviously are Indian lovers.³²⁷ Shades of Anna Kashfi who used to be Marlon's wife and firmly convinced him that she was Indian when it turned out – to Marlon's fury and immediate divorce – that she was Cardiff Welsh.³²⁸ I knew the minute I met her just after Marlon had married her that she was Welsh and said so to her and Marlon. She affected not to know what 'Welsh' was and asked if we were like the Irish and all that kind of rubbish. Marlon wasn't interested and only became so when he found out that he had been lied to – a heinous crime in Marlon's book. I still smile when I remember a picture of Kashfi's mother in the Daily Express or Mail with a real Celtic peasant look and wearing a 'pinny' and formidably Welsh look, sort of arms akimbo, with the caption 'Do I look Indian?' I laughed for a week. Later I teased Marlon about it until I realized that old fatty was not inclined to regard it or her in a humorous light. I haven't tried him on that affair since. I wonder how he would take it now. [...]

Wednesday 17th, Grand [...] There has been a great deal of fuss and bother around the hotel for the last couple of days because President Franz Jonas of Austria is here on a state visit which consists of tea at the Quirinale with Saragat

and tremendous traffic jams.³²⁹ The streets around the hotel are one continuous cacophony of despairing horns and policemen's whistles and remarkably often the penetrating screams of ambulances. The Romans it seems are always in a rush to the grave. Yesterday too the sound of many horses set our dogs a-barking and there indeed was a pretty sight as one would want to see – several hundred horses riding four abreast caparisoned with riders dressed by Ivor Novello and all of them placed as to colour, a mass of whites, a mass of blacks and a mass of browns.³³⁰ E and Jane Swanson were watching it with delight from our balcony when Jane realized that all the onlookers had their binoculars trained on E and not the horses. Since E was in a dressing gown she fled inside. The concourse was endless and created, of course, the mother and father of all traffic jams. It was typical, I remarked to Jane, of the Romans to have a procession during the peak of the rush hour. She said that it was probably deliberate and that Italians love a mess so that they can have an excuse for tantrums. They are all natural thespians she said. Orson [Welles] once said that the Italians were the best actors in the world but unfortunately only the worst of them became professionals.

I'd forgotten to say that Robin Stafford of the Express came to visit us at the same time as Sellers.³³¹ He was the only journalist allowed at our wedding, not because he was a particular friend but because he was so quietly and charmingly persistent. It wasn't until we'd chatted for a long time that I thought to ask him if he were on a job or purely social visit. He is normally a diplomatic correspondent, political, and if there's a war, a war correspondent. It was clear that the job he's proudest of was the Six Day War. He told me many funny stories about it. The Israelis are a frighteningly pragmatic lot.

Thursday 7th, Yacht³³² [...] Sellers and 'Bert' whose other name is Mortimer and Zoe came on board as expected and dined and chatted a lot about Yoga.³³³ Peter is surprisingly hard going to me with a strange self deprecation when telling a story – not necessarily about himself – in which he says things like, 'My boat is small, you know, and so I don't bother to have an extension for the telephone into the like this you know the thing where we're sitting now you know the er er salon because my boat well the er bridge is so er er thing you know and when Sam Spiegel came on the yacht he said can you get NY and thing and so on and how quick are you getting through to thing and thing ...' and so on. Oddly irritating and smacking of false modesty as if to say I could of course speak with classic syntax and superb vocabulary but you know I could so I take that as read. It is now though a manner which he probably cannot get out of and therefore perfectly natural. I must deep down be a two-faced prude as I've quite gone off Zoe Sallis since she seems to be a lady of fairly easy virtue and is quite obviously having a er thing er you er know with er thing you know. Peter and Bert made a lot of sense about Yoga and we must try and find out more about it from a professional teacher when we get the chance – probably next year in Vallarta. He demonstrated a slow head-stand for us which seems absolutely beyond us both at this stage and possibly at any stage. Must try though.

Under Milk Wood came through as something mysteriously else called Daybreak at Sundown or something equally funny and we consequently saw no film. [...]

Saturday 20th, Rome [...] This is our last few hours here in Rome. We leave at midday for Paris and from the airport straight to the clinic where the good doctor will remove a cyst from E's nose and a mole from my cheek. [...] After that to the Ritz at which we have never stayed as far as we can remember.³³⁴ Since we have the original diamond as big as the Ritz it will be interesting to see if we can get inside.³³⁵ We shall stay in Paris until Tuesday and then do a run for Gstaad which I'm longing to see.

A late birthday present arrived from Liza. Two books – one called Roman Mythology and one called the Age of Revolution. The first hard cover and expensive and the second a paperback. I was very moved and went around showing it to everyone. I was absurdly pleased that the return address was – in her own hand – Todd-Burton. The second has a note inside from Liza saying: See page 237. It was an index to Trotsky. I love that child surpassingly.

[...] I have put the title of this page in black since E is so anticipatorily anxious about her operation that I decided she should have the occasional drink until the ordeal is over. And yesterday I had a bloody mary and the day before a martini and a couple of glasses of wine.

Am reading for the first time for twenty years or more A la recherche du temps perdu. In English. I shall find a paperback French version in Paris and read them side by side. Scott Moncrieff together with the lesser known Gerard Hopkins are the best French translators I've come across.³³⁶ I am enjoying the Proust far more than I remember from the last time – and I think it must have been at Oxford when I ploughed through him before. And 'ploughed through' is the operative word. It was deliberate labour as part of my education and all I can remember is that the only person I knew who had the complete set was Emlyn Williams who said I had to read them in his house as he was not letting them out of his sight. Under those circumstances it is not surprising perhaps that I thought the work pedestrian. They are anything but that as I read them now.

Bob has just brought me a telegram from Tony Richardson asking me to play with Vanessa Redgrave in Antony and Cleopatra 'early next year'. I said no. Politely. That man must have the thickest skin in and out of Christendom. This is his 2nd offer to me this year – the other being to do the film of I, Claudius.³³⁷ After our bitter debacle about Nabokov's Laughter in the Dark one would think that he would be scared witless to approach me to play Scrabble.³³⁸ But not our Tony. It's almost admirable. The fact that I was right about Laughter and he was shown to be catastrophically wrong should have made him even more shy in approaching me for anything else ever again as my attitude to him in any future co-labour would be savagely contemptuous. But ever since he first emerged from the OUDS he has shown total and ruthless selfishness in everything he has ever done. I know of no one who confesses either admiration or affection for him. Everyone is convinced that his good films have been accidents and that his bad ones are a just reflection of his abysmal talent. The cutter saved Tom Jones, they say while Ossie Morris and the continuity girl directed Anger.³³⁹ He is slightly better than that. Totally unworthy of anyone's serious consideration, however, I would say. Certainly mine. [...]

Sunday 21st, Ritz Hotel, Paris³⁴⁰ [...] E looks as if she's had a long gruelling 15 rounds with Clay while I simply have a bandage on my face which makes me look as if I have a huge wound when in actual fact – apart from the stitch there is nothing except a little hole to see. [...] We dined off 'Haddock poche a l'Anglaise et des pommes nature' and delicious it was.

Monday 22nd³⁴¹ [...] For the third time in my life I began to learn Spanish yesterday. Third time lucky I hope. It means wiping Italian out of my mind. No easy task. I am doing a grammar which is differently pronounced from Mexican but I can transfer the noises as I go along. I shall have every opportunity to use it at the new place in Bucerias and this time I shall do sternly what I do with the other tongues – which is to read a newspaper a day. Painful at first it soon becomes fluent.

There has been increasing pressure on me of late to play the last days of Mussolini and there are three different firms vying with each other. One neo-fascisti lot are after me and another lot Shaftel are running after me and Marlon while a third are trying for George Scott.³⁴² Soldati is writing one for me, he says, with Elizabeth for Clara Petacci.³⁴³ Presumably nothing will come out of my participation. Tito, Trotsky and Mussolini would be a bit much in one year I guess. It would certainly be foolish to have three different Mussolinis come out together. The comparisons would give those covetous critics a field day.

I am going through one of my non-fiction-reading moods again and apart from the always with me Fleurs du Mal I have nothing but fiction to read. Today, if E thinks my face good enough I shall dive across to W. H. Smith's and do one of my raids. There may be something downstairs in the foyer of this hotel. This is the first time I've ever stayed here so I know little about it. E too. So far I find it better than the Plaza Athénée and the Lancaster. The service is swift and the food, so far, of a good standard. I shall order me another cuppa immediately.

A letter was given us when we arrived from Hebe Dorsey who is an Arab French lady we have known for some time and who writes fashion columns for the Herald Trib here and 'fashionable' articles for many magazines about Princess Grace and Jackie Onassis and E and a few others. The letter complains of non-payments from a firm called Forum which is Gianni Bozzacchi's. She complains of non payments. She appeals to us as mutual friends to sort it out. Now, dear lady, what can I do?

[...] I have decided that Sunday Papers must arrive fairly early in the morning to be properly accorded the title – Sunday Papers. When they arrive, as they did yesterday, in the afternoon, they lose their status and are simply newspapers. One should read nothing but the Sundays on Sunday. The day is lost if one has started reading all manner of other things before they've arrived. The only Sundayish thing about yesterday's Sunday was that I turned on the hotel, in-built radio and found the BBC and a terrible voice saying: 'It is no use saying to one's conscience "go away you silly person, I have no wish to listen to you" because you are saying in effect "go away God, you are too awkward a customer and make too many demands on me."' For God's sake, said E, turn that bloody thing off. And so I did. It's hard to believe that such drivel is still being pumped out by the mile all over the country. The message is banal enough but the language it's clothed in is unspeakably arch, knowing and coy and stupendously vulgar. [...]

Tuesday 23rd³⁴⁴ [...] Kurt (Stormtrooper) Frings came in about 6 and we discussed the script which I'd read in the afternoon. It's rubbish but it's something I've never done which is a 'horror film' and which the kids have been anxious for one or the other of us to do for many years. I play Bluebeard, a German or mittel-European Count or Marchese or something complete with Ruritanian or perhaps Transylvanian would be better castle. Booted and spurred and tails-clothed and impotent and kill eight wives – all of great beauty – the moment they expect me to go bed with them. There is a great deal of horror though everywhere. Can't make up my mind whether I should do it or not. Any road, if they wish to do it in January as they say they do, I must decline. Its other attraction is that they shoot in Hungary, to which country I've never been, and I could do with a little lightness after Tit and Trot. Am supposed to have lunch at Fouquet's with the director – one called Dmytryk who – I've only just discovered this morning – I've been confusing for years with a man called Siodmak.³⁴⁵ Both have their similarities in that they started off well and then tapered off into the usual mediocrity.

I ambled through my Spanish lessons both in the morning and late at night – both of those times being the best possible time for me to learn things as I discovered in my examination-riddled childhood and youth. I should be able to read newspapers in about a month though probably the best thing to do would be to get hold of one of those Penguin dual language books which save you a hell of a lot of dictionary work. I love the latter so much that they are dangerous for me to use if I am really 'working' as I cannot resist scanning the page for another interesting word which may be lying around. This kills the pace. I shall go to Smith's after lunch perhaps and search me around. While I'm at it I might as well get a stock of holiday reading for Gstaad. [...]

Dirty Brian Hutton also popped in with Oscar Mayer bacon from the States. [...] He has brought a script for E by a man called Gibson – a better than average playwright who has written a couple of successful pieces or more the only one of which I can remember being Two for the Seesaw – called A Cry of Players.³⁴⁶ I'm sure it was first written as a play and was sent to me 15 years ago perhaps with a view to my playing William Shakespeare and is indeed a play about Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway. Will and Anne. It has obviously been rewritten with modern 'permissiveness' in mind for E tells me that some of the dialogue is somewhat blue. I shall read this morn after my Spanish. Now, he sobbed, I am too old.

Frings wants to represent E again and me too now. We said he can go ahead with Bluebeard and Under the Volcano – the latter of particular import if there is a reasonable script.³⁴⁷ The latter would be a good velocipede for us both. If well adapted, acted and directed, it could be a film of major interest – even perhaps as good as Lowry's novel which is a massive piece of work and, as I discovered when reading it again this year, ages magnificently. It needs a very fine director.

[...]

Thursday 25th A pleasant enough day. I read E's script by W. W. Gibson.³⁴⁸ It is the one I was sent 15 years ago and it is still not worth E's attention as it wasn't mine then. We went to lunch at the grill here in the hotel called L'Espadon which is a cosy little restaurant and the food is very good. We had a superb Coquille St Jaques to start which almost spoiled the equally splendid steak au poivre which followed. We had forgotten the joys of people-watching since we've been out so seldom. It is not easy to be a personality-watcher actually if you yourselves are so intently watched but there are some good things to be seen before you go to Paradise by way of Kensal Green.³⁴⁹ There was a nervous high-pitched English, frightfully English lady of a certain age who talked out of nerves at the top of her voice. Unfortunately we were, I mean she was alone so we didn't hear as much as we should. She was placed in the middle of the room, having come in after us. After a time the waiter suggested that she should change her table to one against the window. She greeted this suggestion with a high pitched almost breathless enthusiasm – 'What a good idea, most frightfully thoughtful of you, my nerves were beginning to shriek, positively shriek, there in the midst of everybody and I did send a telex from London reserving my table. It's awfully good of you and frightfully intelligent. I shall enjoy myself so much more here. You are so terribly kind and I did send a telex all the way from London.' Why had she sent a telex to reserve a table in a not very popular and therefore hardly likely to be full restaurant. Why indeed had she flown from London to have lunch alone in L'Espadon, The Swordfish, in the Ritz Hotel Paris. She was about my age, brunette, with an aquiline nose that might have been Jewish but I don't think she was a Hebrew, and she used a lorgnette to study the menu. She was expensively but quietly dressed and was unquestionably a lady. E guessed she was a writer, and I agree that she looked very like all those unattractive lady-writers whose photos one sees on the backs of Penguins. Not unattractive exactly but one guesses at the unused flesh, the untidy bathing, the Times Crossword, and shrill conversations on the telephone and literary luncheons and all angularly sharp and feminist. Ugh somehow. There was another woman, American we guessed, with a ferocious face-lift, hard and predatory, vulpine and totally ignoring her husband staring, staring staring at E with malevolence, meanness, and murderous, envious hatred. E said that the loathing was so intense that it was tangible. She would have felt it, E went on, even were her back turned. Then there was a comic turn which E couldn't really see. A party of six came in dominated by a tall, dew-lapped loud-mouthed 60 year old central European speaking perfect and idiomatic English and French with a barely noticeable accent who said something like 'I guess we'll have one woman there and a guy there and another woman there and you Phil go there and that should about do it.' One of the women, a girl actually, writhed and suiggled and manoeuvred herself desperately towards a chair where she would be breathtakingly close to a profile shot of my fabled E. But there was another woman, ruthlessly middle-aged, very American, who stolidly held her ground. So at the next table were these two women, one in the awful position of being able to lust her eyes on E's profile but in doing so would look me straight in the eyes, while the other tried to turn into rubber to get fugitive glimpses at the back of E's head. Each time they managed either, they were faced with a knowing half-smile from me. At about this time, the Basilisk with the ignored and indifferent husband, she of the tight skull and the vicious envy left her husband calculating the pourboire and walked very deliberately and with no attempt at dissembling, straight across the room and turned the full glare of her gorgon gaze on Elizabeth. She left expressionlessly, her impassivity only matched by Elizabeth's.

[...] I am on my fifth Spanish lesson as well as listening to discs from the Assimil method.

Friday 26th, Ritz It was Thanksgiving Day yesterday and, foreign as I am, I eat turkey and giblet gravy and sweet corn and yams but not cranberry sauce. Delicious. Much debate as to whether the Americas had any original food. They argued that turkey, potatoes corn and cranberries were indigenous to the States and unknown in Europe. I agree with potato and corn but disagreed with turkey and cranberries. Must look it up at home. I seem to remember that 'cranberry' is originally Greek. My new Oxford will tell me all – and the Britannica. Brian Hutton and his girlfriend Tamara something came to dinner with us. Nice girl and surprisingly unflashy and that rare thing to me – a native Californian. I know only one other and that's Val Douglas. Ah yes, Budd Schulberg too but I don't count him as he has lived away from there so long.³⁵⁰ Tamara who inevitably in this literate family creeps in with petty pace from day to day is that thoroughly nice thing – a well-educated clean looking intelligent middle-class girl finished educationally in Paris.³⁵¹ Almost old-fashioned. I would have thought that Brian would have more sultry ladies around, more obviously sexy and faintly dirty looking. I suspect though that underneath his talk of pot and 'taking trips' etc. that he is as square as a board. He says that the teaching system in his school in

NY was so abominable that he was more or less illiterate until he was about 17 and didn't read his first book until he was 18. For somebody of his obvious intelligence it seems incredible to me. By that age I'd read and sometimes learned by heart half the world's classics. Perhaps he exaggerates a bit but he also averred that he was given an IQ test when he was about 15 and got a score of 5 points below 'Moron'. That I find hard to believe too. He may be over-compensating for slightly below average marks in exams by pretending he was an idiot. He failed to get his first job because he could not spell the opening words of an application 'To whom it may concern'. He got through 'whom' all right but couldn't be certain of 'may'. Was it 'mae' like Mae West or 'may' like the month or was it sneaky and neither of those but 'mai'. He gave up and left. [...]

I drank several glasses of nouveau Beaujolais last night at the Thanksgiving and though it seems innocuous it is not. I feel ghastly this morning despite tea and toast and copious swallows of coffee. Just had the bill from the hotel – $3000 approx. Staggering for just less than a week. They put up a buffet in Gianni's room for all the visiting couturiers and Van Cleef's and Alexandre etc. and it cost $500! Granted there were about 15 or 20 people but how could they eat and drink $500 worth of viands and vins especially when you think they barely had time to eat at all. Daylight bleeding robbery!

I wouldn't have had E's day yesterday for anything. She spent the entire day being dressed in what seems countless dresses and innumerable hair-dos. She looks dishy though and I pity those other poor bastards like Marie Helene. The latter is, if you please flying in Di Rossi from Italy (Rome) to do her make-up.³⁵² Nothing can help druan Rothschild – dim ond yr arglwydd.³⁵³ A hopeless task.

E infuriatingly as bright as a button and aglow with youthful joie de vivre. I am tempted to kick her in the teeth. And so to Gstaad.

Saturday 27th, Gstaad The journey by Trans Europe Express was lovely. [...] We took some wine and, rare for me, a whiskey. We had a second half bottle in our seats. The various TEEs must be the most successful trains in the world – I have never seen an empty seat. But nevertheless, whether by train or plane, unless the helicopter is available, the last two hours or so depending on whether we car it from Geneva or Lausanne is tedious beyond words. By the time we'd arrived we had begun to get edgy with each other and by bedtime a flaming and quite childish row was in high dudgeon. Twice, I stormed off to the alternate bedroom. Twice I went back. All manner of little things were exacerbating our natural weariness. [...] The shutter to my room, the dreamt-of library was broken and therefore the room is in darkness and one of the things I looked forward to was seeing the library the next (this) morning with the sun striking along the edge of the garden beyond. [...] I'm writing this very slowly as I find myself so bewitched by the mountains and the brilliant sun on the virgin snow that I can't tear my eyes away from it. [...]

A bunch of letters (copies) from Aaron via Jane in Rome. One talks of a Mr Charles who, according to the biography of me now out, tried with the connivance of the rest of the village of Pontrhydyfen to 'soak me for £5000' for the purchase of 2, Danybont – the house where I was born and spent my happiest hours. The entire village and Mr Charles are furious and no wonder. I must do something about it.³⁵⁴ But what. A letter to the Guardian and the Gazette?³⁵⁵ A letter to the village? A letter to Mr Charles? Since I had nothing to do with the attempted purchase of the house – Graham's big mouth at work again I expect – it puts me in a funny position. I'd better do something. A letter to Hilda would probably be the best way of letting everybody know in Ponty, but apologies like Justice must not only be made but be seen to be made. I could kill those two stupid failures who wrote the book. The only thing I asked them to do was to make sure that nobody in the book was to be hurt by it except myself. Bloody clowns of hell. [...]

Sunday 28th, Gstaad [...] It is very bright this morning but not the brilliant sun of yesterday as expected. I sat and read in the sun yesterday wearing only a light sweater for over an hour and was as warm as on a summer's day. The sun must be pretty far away however as I only picked up a little colour whereas in a hot sun one hour would turn me into a Mohican. I shall try the sun-lamp. About my only vanity is to be tanned – on the face and upper body if possible. For some reason it makes me feel better and healthier. If someone could or would invent a really practical sunlamp I would use it summer and winter rather than submit to the boredom of sun-worshipping. [...] Did not do my espanol yesterday. Start again today.

Monday 29th [...] I had difficulty sleeping last night so – not to disturb E who was quickly asleep – I slipped out to the kitchen made myself a sandwich of ham and cheese and a cup of tea, then reading a book of John D. MacDonald's I went into the other room and desserted on Rowntree's Pastilles, one and a half packets no less and a packet of some other Swiss fruit pastilles. Result is that on one scale I am 70 and the other 69. A long time since I was that weight so will knock off a few pounds in the coming days. That means for me, strict Drinking Man's Diet without the drink. I have been giving myself black titles for too long a time anyway. I have got back into the habit of a drink before lunch and dinner. So full stop again. Also I want to have my wits about me for the Proust Ball for there will be fine things to see and a lot to be heard and I want to see and listen and not be seen and listened to.

E and I are in the library which should always be the morning place as it gives our old maid – I don't mean that she's not married, I mean that she's old and a maid – Celina a chance to really 'do' the living room which she shows a curious reluctance to do when we are about. Actually as to a question of age – she is probably no more than about 50 but like most working-class Swiss women seems much older. She is certainly as strong as an ox. She surprised me yesterday when having asked where the two girls – Maria and Inge were – I replied that they had gone first to church and then to school. To Church she said with great surprise and then 'ah but then all you Catholics have different hours from us Protestants.' What on earth supposed her to think we are Catholic? We have E – Jewish, Liza – nothing but Jewish by birth and C of E by school, Maria – wherever the school takes her which I believe is Protestant, Michael – nothing but a sort of Jesus lover mixed very woollily with anybody currently fashionable among his age-group like Hesse Tolkien and that huge idiot Alistair Crowley, Chris – non-committal but probably nothing.³⁵⁶ Me – nothing. [...]

The devil over my shoulder, E, is trying to press me to have a martini before lunch because she wants one and doesn't like drinking alone. I'm dickering with the idea but think I will have one this evening if at all. As I've explained to E ad nauseam I find one drink simply not enough. I guess two or three stiff ones are what I'd find satisfactory but that means slowly reverting to being a drunkard again and I simply will not tolerate a return to that. [...]

Tuesday 30th³⁵⁷ Raymond has arrived from London to sort out the chaos in the clothes dept. He has been a very ill man for a long time with absolutely crippling sciatica. After trying endless doctors of every nationality including Yugos, Italians, British, Yanks, French, Swiss and indeed every nationality in the various places we've been in the last few years he allowed himself at our continual insistence to submit, if necessary to surgery. He was very frightened as indeed why shouldn't he be – he is 52 and not brave anyway – but went through it. To our and his delight he didn't have to have surgery but last Friday he went to a hospital [...]. By, he gathers, using enormous pressures and bending his uncomplaining body hither, thither and yon they had forced the offending bone – whatever it was – smartly back into place. The acute, almost unbearable pain had gone and nothing remains but a mild ache in his left leg. The relief apparently enormous. Several times to me in the past few weeks he had thought of suicide if the horror persisted. Since he is a sprightly sort of feller normally with all the gaiety of the race this must have been pain indeed.

By his race I mean of course not his Italian-Swiss-French-German blood but the night-club dressed-up-to-the-tens-in-tight-tight-I-will-go-to-the-ball clothes and camping around with every conceivable signal of blatant homosexuality. [...]

Searching desperately, well not desperately but continually, for a book to write that would not be autobiographical, at least not overtly, I have come upon an excuse. I have been much impressed by a Yugoslav ‘novel’ called The Bridge on the Drina which I think I must have mentioned before in this haphazard daily exercise. For it is not a novel at all but a series of semi-legendary stories purporting to take place in and around the bridge. By this means the author gives one a saga of the many invasions and changes of family and fortune, in small, of the entire south South Slavs of Yugoslavia. I thought of our pearl the famous or infamous Peregrina, and its extraordinary history.³⁵⁸ Found by a slave in the sixteenth century or perhaps even the late fifteenth it was part of an argosy that took it to the Court of Spain. The slave who found it was given his freedom. Who was the slave? Are there any traceable descendants? Were the sons of slaves free too? Where were my ancestors at the time? Where were Elizabeth's? The tracing of the pearl's history will be complicated but much easier I would think but I shall have to imagine my and E's ancestors, unless E's mother's story that she is descended from Mary, Queen of Scots could be substantiated!³⁵⁹ That would be a great coup for the book. The thing would of course take years to write and would demand a great deal of specialized reading and almost certainly the employment of searchers, I believe they call them. It has been done before. There was a rather good film on the subject I remember – the object being a tail-coat. But the Pearl involved famous dynasties and is authentic history in itself. I could elaborate on my cynical-comical views of mankind and a small page or two of its history. The whole and vast personal question is do I have the intellectual stamina to sustain such a big undertaking and is my writing good enough? I shall need to be fairly near a great library which means Oxford or London. Not all the time but from time to frequent time at least. I think the first person to consult would be Nevill Coghill who would introduce me to the methods of scholarship, what sort of people to employ and consult. Now I will sleep on it for 6 months until we get to England again. [...]

DECEMBER

Wednesday 1st, Gstaad³⁶⁰ A cold, very cold morning, with the sun just coming round the corner and I have just lighted the fire in the library and put the kettle on and the dogs E'en So and Daisy Mae are having a mock fight having been in the snow and all would be idyllic were it not for the fact that at 2pm we fly to Paris to the Ritz and tomorrow to the Rothschilds. The latter part is ok. It is simply the fact of disturbing the serenity of this place and being able to do what ever one wants without care to be social and having everything to hand. Still and however when we come back next Monday short of a death in the family which is, with Ivor and E's mother so perilously balanced between life and death, not at all unlikely, we should be here without interruption until the middle of January when it's Yugoslavia again. Also, yesterday, I took the decision to do Bluebeard. I said I could do it in Feb–March-bit of April but that after that it would take too much chopping and changing for all concerned. They said they were prepared to shoot 'anywhere I want but preferably Hungary and next to that Spain and that I could make any changes I liked!' Well, well, I thought this is the lot who were so adamant that it must be shot in January. I said I thought Hungary would be the favourite as neither E nor I had ever been there but that we loved Spain too. I am to see Frings tomorrow morning. What I really must get after is Under the Volcano. That, if any film can be considered so, is an important piece.

Yves le Tourneur who is a salesman for Van Cleef and Arpel and 'covers' Switz, came from Geneva where he lives and mostly works bringing with him about $3m of gems. E had changed a gold belt she had bought from them – or I had rather when she was doing XYZ and he had come up with the new belt-cum-neck-lace in exchange. With us of course, and probably with everybody, he brought as I said an extra two or three millions in temptations. I was not to be drawn however except for a pair of matching earrings for the already bought necklace which E had been 'loaned' for some time and was naturally (sarcastically) attached to. That, by the way, is a good play of such people as Yves le Tourneur. They let you have a splendid but not overwhelmingly expensive piece on loan, or for a specific occasion, an opening night or the Rothschild party for instance, and hope that the wearer or the spectator, me, decides to buy it what the hell. The necklace and earrings are a perfect example since I bought the earrings. They cost about $6,000. [...]

Thursday 2nd, Ritz³⁶¹ We left the chalet at 1pm and were in Paris at 2.45pm. [...] Gianni and two Cadillacs were waiting and we were away to the Ritz. The radios and TVs told us or rather told them, Parisians I mean, that Le Grand Bal, le Bal du Siecle would be graced with unaccountable wealth and that there would be 500 guards around the house and la Reine elle-meme Elizabeth Taylor was apportioning $3m from the neck up. True too, but who told them so exactly, they described the exact placing of all the nonsense. Van Cleef? Valentino? Alexandre? We arrived at the Ritz to find the place absolutely surrounded by large black bumper-to-bumper cars and found a hurly-burly reception on inside for the Republic of Congo and a great many black sleek gentlemen in diplomats' uniform, both the latter and the former as black as your hat in a coal-pit. And bowing and scraping and midst a brouhaha of c'est Liz Taylor et son mari Burton we entered the lift and ran up to the 3rd floor and found ourselves in a penthouse suite though the lift numbers definitely stated there was a 4th floor and therefore, having got off on the third and not having gone up a lot of stairs, how was it possible to be in the penthouse. The hotel is built oddly that's why. Some bits of it have 3 floors and some four. Carl Ritz who built it and whose son – very old I suppose – still lives here wanted to build a home from home for Gentlemen and obviously didn't have Conrad Hilton in mind as the corridors run in Euclidean nightmares and Pythagoras metempsychosis. This form would be turned into a brutish conglomeration of filled in erector set by a boy with a tidy mind and no imagination.³⁶² The suite was sweet and much prettier than the one we had last time and this one even includes a grand piano which I bet needs tuning though I haven't played it yet but will and E has just awoken and invaded the salon where I am typing this which is one reason why the other suite is more practical as I had a room between where I typed and where Elizabeth slept. But there, we are only here for one night this time, but if we stayed here a lot, I mean for a long time – as when making a fillum – I would ask for the room next door the other direction from the living room. That would stop my typing waking E too early and also give us a second bathroom. Very desirable this latter as after a day or two E reduces any bathroom to chaos. She carries around with her a cornucopian 'make-up' case that Malthea and Jupiter might have envied.³⁶³ It measures a foot high to a foot wide to a foot and a few inches long I would guess and is 'hard'. That is to say it is not one of those bags that are soft-sided and topped and zipped but is solid and rigid and yet seems to contain endless things – eyebrow pencils, pens, the usual make-up things and deodorants and perfumes and what seems to be pills for any disease and malaises and balms and elixirs and you name it and that box contains it. It may even contain spare parts for the Rolls. Anyway the point is that after a day or two they gradually over-flow the bathroom like lava and there is no room for my pathetic collection of toothpaste and two brushes and deodorant and after-shave and razor and comb.

We established our corners, which means the small guest bedroom for me and my books and clothes, ordered tea and settled down to my Spanish Grammar which I am finding a bit of a bugger as I mix it up continually with Italian. Esta Questa Esto Questo. [...] E paraded in and out showing me the diamond headdress which she will wear tonight. Even my tasteless eye thought it superb. It was made especially for E by Van Cleef and Arpels and actually does cost well over £1m. Not dollars, POUNDS. Damned if I won't buy it one of these far-off days. It will always be a staggering sight and the knowledge of its cost adds to its beauty regardless of such Philistinism.

There were many telephone conversations twixt E and Marie H  l  ne and E and Grace who says that Rainier is going shooting and not at Ferri  res and feels too shy to go alone to house Ferri  res so would Elizabeth, asked Marie-H  l  ne, call Grace and ask her to come down with us and we still don't know whether Rainier doesn't want to go to the do and Grace does but won't go without him or whether Grace is uncertain of the protocol in case Mags shows up and Marie-H  l  ne said rather frantically at one point to E 'you simply must make her come, I mean I've even got a chair for her' which meant that she (Grace) was to sit on Guy's right.³⁶⁴ And my E told M-H that if she (M-H) put E with a bunch of non-English-speaking idiots she (E) would never speak to MH ever again. Grace said she would call E back before 11pm and tell her what but she didn't and E, by this time fed up to the eyebrows being MH's soc. sec'y said to hell with it and why didn't I (me) call up Grace and talk her into coming. Why me? But I suppose I shall have to have a go. I just asked where Grace was staying and to my astonishment they told me she was staying at the Embassy. What Embassy asks I? The Monaco one. The Monaco one! Anyway I just called and asked for Son Altesse but she is on the blower so the lady said. She may decide to be 'occupie' all day. Fact is, I don't think either of them, Rainier or Grace, feel too happy outside their realm as they can never be sure how they are going to be treated, both of them terrified of being comic-opera. Niven, all of whose stories have to be heard with suspicion and delightfully so, says that once on the C  te d'Azur in some restaurant or other a waiter didn't appear to have the proper deference and even though they were supposedly incognito Rainier became extremely violent. I've forgotten in what or which way but really nasty-violent.

About 7 late night we suddenly realized that we had not eaten all day and were mad with hunger so food was procured. [...] After which we watched Inter-Milan play a German team in the quarter-finals of the European Cup.³⁶⁵ A nasty ill-tempered little match. Soccer seems to me a very boring spectacle unless you see a genius at his best or you are desperate for one side to win. In this case I couldn't have cared less about either team though the Germans blond and clean looking looked nicer than the Eyeties, squat and hairy and dark and thick thighed like pocket Welsh front-row forwards. And the incessant writhing about on the ground after every tackle, foul or fair, is stupefying in its monotony. To my relief I have just heard that Grace is coming and is coming with us. So that's that. Phew! as they say in the comics. And it is comical.

Friday 3rd – Saturday 4th, Ferrières³⁶⁶ So the Ball was had. It was had until 7am when the music at last stopped and the do-or-die-ers crawled into their cars and lumbered off with early morning traffic to Paris. We had come up from the party about 4.30am but, after packing away the 'big' jewellery and putting it in the house coffre, we sat and chatted desultorily away until the orchestra stopped at 7. I managed, though I was sorely tempted during dinner, not to have the mildest form of alcohol so despite only about 4 hours' sleep I feel as bright as a button. We have just had tea, as indeed we did at 5 this morn also. It is 1.15.

We picked up Grace at 32, Avenue Foch which doesn't seem to be the Embassy and I forgot to ask Son Altesse if it was or not. A very amiable Rainier brought Grace to the gate carrying her two small bags – a considerable difference from son altesse ETB even despite the fact that Grace was not staying the night. [...] Grace and E chatted away at the back of the car while I sat in front beside the driver. Grace was nice and relaxed and, after the initial awkwardness which I always feel with people like Grace who are in a somewhat false position and know it, everybody talked freely. Grace went into a blow by blow description of the Shah of Iran's famous or infamous party.³⁶⁷ Grace defended its extravagance with extraordinary obtuseness though neither of us attacked it. It was meant, she said, as a tribute to the people of Persia and as self-advertisement for the Shah's magnificent governing which was bringing literacy to the illiterate and hygiene to the unwashed and culture to the brutish. She described the Shah as a marvellous man and once called him a great man which is going a titch too far. She said how monstrous it was of the Western Press to be so vulgarly cynical of the whole show, all of them she said she knew for a fact writing their stuff before the thing had really got going. E was sweet and said that yes I mean Tito and the Hungarians and other communist countries were there and didn't seem to be particularly put out by the obvious 'capitalism' of the whole thing. Absolutely said Grace and said it was a marvellous thing to see people of such enormous disparity in religions politics and races finally warming to each other after the birth-pangs of meeting and how a little chinaman who was stiff and unsmiling and reserved and talked only through an interpreter was by the last day chatting a mile a minute radiant with smiles in impeccable English to all and sundry. So there. It all goes to show that we are brothers under the skin. And why for heaven's sake doesn't the Western Press attack its own spending of zillions a year on advertisements, corrupting the minds of the young and the stupid with their idiotics. And so on. One didn't suggest that it might perhaps have been more helpful to his appallingly poor people if he had promoted a sort of World's Fair, an Expo 71 or something and have the other people pay for the advertising. The 'do' of the Shah's was supremely silly under any circumstances and if it was to celebrate the extraordinary advances made for the benefit of his people then it was inane to the point of simple-mindedness.

Enough of the car journey. As we approached the last few miles to Ferrières there were policemen, mostly motorbiked every few hundred yards and learned later that Guy had arranged for a policeman or van every $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from Paris. All the way from Paris!

Now President Pompidou used to be employed by Guy de Rothschild before and after he became Prime Minister and the new Prime Minister was also to be here last night but was unable to come and rang M-H this afternoon while we were there to apologize not only to M-H for not being able to come and telling the reason why but also asked the names of his two side by side companions in order to apologize to them too. Toujours la politesse. So it is no wonder that Guy can commandeer the entire Parisian Police force if he so wishes. As we turned into the drive the entire house faced us and for the first time since we've been coming here was lighted up. It looked magnificent and were it the clop-clop of horses and the smell of saddle leather and blankets round the knees and not the low hum of a heated Cadillac we could have been back a hundred years. The main entrance however was only for the herd – we entered by the side door as we usually do and went straight up to our rooms having some difficulty in finding out where was which and who was where. Sorted out finally we found ourselves in the Chambre Rose while Grace used the Chambres Balcon to change in and do her hair. We are changing from our chambre to the Balcon tonight while at dinner. The Rose while very nice and suitably rosy with all the decoration à la Wedgwood, panelling and all, has an outside bathroom which though exclusively for our use meant having to put on a dressing gown, if you happen to be in shorts in case of running into M. Olivier who lived next door and shared our little hallway. Also, to our surprise, we could hear everything in the two adjacent rooms quite clearly, it therefore following that everybody could hear us. So it will be nice to gossip at normal voice.

I sat around and waited for the girls to be ready – my girls including the Duchess of Windsor and The Princess of Monaco and of course my very own ‘girl’. Grace was ready and waiting about 10 minutes before time and came to our room for a drink. E would have been ready but Alexandre, the hairdresser, took forever to arrive and longer to do M-H's hair-do. We had been told that we were to descend strictly at 9.10 and sit down to dinner at 9.30. We descended at 10.30 and sat down at 11pm. The great hall had been made into a dining room for the occasion and was impossible before we began. It took me 15 minutes to get to my table from the door – I timed it – and after having trod on endless trains and knocked aside several expensive coiffures, virtually climbing over half a dozen people, I found myself at table no 11 with madam de Montesquieu on my left and the former Mme Louis Malle on my right both of whom, thank God, I knew.³⁶⁸ Now for an hour or more of absolute agony. The waiters simply had no way of being able to get round the tables so most tables including ours elected one person to receive all the services and pass them on from hand to hand. The food was divine, or perhaps I was so hungry that it seemed better than it was, and I made an arrangement with Mme Malle who is a very beautiful but giant of a woman for her to pass me all her refills of water while I passed her all my wines. She must have a powerful head for she must have had well over a dozen glasses of various wines – champagne, a white wine, the inevitable Lafitte and a second white wine which I guessed from its viscousness was Chateau d'Yquem and it was. My attention was however riveted from the first by a man sitting opposite me.³⁶⁹ He looked like a cadaver when still and a failure of plastic surgery when he moved which was seldom. He was eyebrow-less and eyelash-less and atrociously wigged or dyed with snow white hair at the front of his head and to the crown and nondescript brownish, rather like mine, hair at the back. His face was hideously pasted with make-up and had odd lumps on it, a face made of funny putty by an inept child. I had just asked in Mme Malle's ear who was that extraordinary thing over there when he leaned forward and said

‘Where's my Elizabeth?’ Ah, I said, well now, she is ah, over the other end of this ah sitting and ah eating indeed at the ah corresponding table to this but ah at the ah other end if you know what I mean. I wish she was here, said he, the inference being that far better her than me. So, as a matter of fact, do I, I said with a speed which would have done the Rev Sydney Smith no harm to admire.³⁷⁰ [...]

After the strangely delivered question from Andy Warhol for that is who the horror film gentleman was, we all settled down to the battle of the food. I discussed on my left with Madame de Montesquieu who is indeed descended from the great Charles Louis Secondat, Baron de la Brede et de Montesquieu who wrote L'Esprit des Lois, poetry which all started by her saying that she had been at somebody's house and they had played records of me speaking The Ancient Mariner and how this woman who had given the party and played the record said that she had heard me speak poetry at the Rothschilds’ ‘and even Guy listened’ and that she (the hostess) had gone out and found all the records she could find of me speaking verse.³⁷¹ I asked Montesquieu twice who the woman was and twice she told me but I should have written it down as I have forgotten it already, but would like to know who this lady is. Just out of curiosity. It wasn't Lili Rothschild who I know has some of my poetry things. So we talked about French poetry which I told her I was only just beginning to read and enjoy. She was rife with platitudes and has quite clearly inherited nothing from the great Baron except his name. She was, is, tall and blonde and retrousse-nosed and about 35. Mme Malle and her sideman were much more amusing and I think that E would like Malle. She, the latter is nicely unhappy, almost desperate I would guess and she and I and the man on her right discussed painting. I said my usual and quite true things about Art, that I didn't understand it at all and derived pleasure only from the occasional picture but that, quite clearly, I was artistically ‘tone-deaf’. I said that we had what was by common consent a very fine Van Gogh but that though I was impressed by it I didn't know why it was remarkable and that to me the most impressive thing about it was its estimated value in cash which was enormous. Apart from the written and spoken word – preferably the former – the only other art-form that genuinely could disturb me was music, some cheap some deep. Malle and the man protested that music at its greatest was so much like painting at its greatest that I must try again with painting. I said I would.

Meanwhile at the other table E and Grace were having a marvellous time. The lucky bastards had Guy, the Duchess of Windsor, Maurice Herzog, Jean-Paul

Binet and a few others.³⁷² The star turn according to E and Grace was the Duchess who is perhaps getting slightly ga-ga. She has an enormous feather in her hair which got into everything, the soup, the gravy, the ice-cream, and at every vivacious turn of her head it smacked Guy sharply in the eyes or the mouth and at one time threatened to get stuck in Guy's false moustache which was glued on. She made one bon mot which had Grace in tears. After having got her incredible feather into everything possible she then called in her very penetrating voice, having a desire to write down her tel no for E and me which has changed since they sold their house, Est-ce-que quelle-qu'n qui a une plume? ³⁷³ She was most insistent that E and I should see the Duke before we left for Gstaad giving E the feeling that he is probably on his last legs. We are going to dine with them on Monday night. Binet flirted blatantly with E but in the best French manner and they had the same hysteria with the serving of the food – Grace being the hander-over.

After the dinner, Guy asked E if she would help him remove his moustache which was now becoming a bore. They went into a gents lav, or rather a lav for either sex while a servant stood on guard outside. Bettina elected to choose this time to try and get into the same loo not knowing that E and Guy were inside. E had removed the moustache and was cleaning around Guy's mouth when Bettina finally burst past the servant and found them in this situation. It looked for all the world as if E and Guy had been having a necking session and E was now removing the evidence. Bettina was delighted by the whole thing.

By this time the rest of the guests, as it were the 'b' list were arriving. They were announced in a stentor voice by a gentleman with a large voice and a large intricately carved staff – I've forgotten what they call those things – with which he pounded the floor and boomed that Madame et Monsieur Harry Dogface to which fascinating information nobody except the people who had just whispered their names to him paid the slightest attention. I squeezed past them followed by Mme Malle and her friend and Elsa Martinelli and somebody else (uninvited) to take them to the lav of our room.³⁷⁴ E was already in the room repairing her maquillage with Bettina. I sat thankfully and smoked before we went back into the whirlpool below. We both sat for a time with Grace and Ricardo? of Madrid in the normally intimate corner of the first room. Scores, perhaps hundreds of people flocked past on some pretext or other to view E and Grace. I wandered about after a time talking to this one and that including Jaqueline de Ribes, Pierre Salinger and wife, Sam Spiegel and M-H's lovely big brother that we call 'Broken-nose' and occasionally I caught glimpses of E being avidly though covertly gazed at wherever she went.³⁷⁵ And I congratulated Salinger on the success of his book and how much I'd enjoyed it and that I had read it in one sitting and had he yet sold it for a film and he had – to CBS – and we then talked of the splendid night in LA when Bobby Kennedy and I insulted each other's races bloody Irish v bloody Welsh and the usual Kennedy–Burton quotation match, and Rudi Nureyev and his wickedness and how horrified and struck dumb we all were by Bobby's assassination and how much we all loved him and later I found de Ribes flinging herself flatteringly into my arms socially acting as ever the Grande Dame with lovers and asked her how her love life was and she said she had a fantastic new lover and where was he said I and she looked and couldn't find him and how he had made her feel 18 again and I didn't say that 18 she might feel but 80 she looked, beautiful 80 but 80, and Broken-nose told me that Sam's film Nicholas and Alexandra was a slow film and very long but nevertheless very beautiful in it.³⁷⁶ [...]

Have had a lunch, a too-much lunch for me of soup, lamb cutlets and boiled new pots in their jackets and string beans followed by a splendid gateau, and a sit-down. I told a lot of stories about the theatre and about British royalty. And after tisane which I drink here all the time, E and I and a lovely young girl, an English actress called Charlotte something went for a walk around the lake.³⁷⁷ It was lovely and there were millions of birds chattering in a copse – what kind of birds I have no way of knowing and the walk though pleasant didn't succeed in burning away my dinner.

... many other people told me of Sam's film and all of them reacted in more or less the same way. It is quite clearly an honest but rather dull film.

After a time wandering about Grace asked me to see her upstairs and help her remove her borrowed choker and get her to her car. I suppose it was about 1.30. This I did nearly strangling Grace to death while trying to get the necklace off. For a minute she was in bad trouble as the necklace got twisted up as a result of my inept handling of the clasp as the bloody thing was too tight in the first place and, in fact, I had told her before we went down to the ball that she ought to remove it telling her she didn't need it. However, we finally twisted it around so that she herself could see it in the mirror and finally we released her. Even when off it took considerable strength to unclasp it. So down the stairs we went together. At the bottom, alone, was Sam Spiegel. 'Where are you going you two?' 'For God's sake', said G, 'don't Sam say a word to Elizabeth. She's at the Ball, she's dancing, she's happy, let us go. Richard will let Elizabeth know. It's going to be a shock but ... these things happen.' Etc. For a full 1½ minute Sam, because of Grace's normal seriousness and because of her very good piece of acting and my deliberately stricken-with-guilt face, was taken in. We made off. Found Grace's car after a lot of waiting in the piercing cold and she was gone. She was quite the nicest she's ever been and David Rothschild expressed astonishment that she could be so gay.³⁷⁸ She had always he said been a bit of a dead weight. On the contrary, we said, but she does need a little drawing out. Actually it is the nicest she has been in all the years since we've known her as a Princess. At one moment during the choking choker episode I saw mental front-pages in France Soir's and News of the World's lurid headlines. Famed Actor Strangles Princess in Bedroom at Rothschild Mansion During Grand Ball.

For the rest of the evening we wandered about and ran into Audrey Hepburn and her ludicrously named Italian psychiatrist husband Doctor Dotti who is not very nice I think.³⁷⁹ We had snaps taken of us by Cecil Beaton who is also not very nice in a different way.³⁸⁰ Then in another room we had snaps with Audrey Hepburn and M Dotti and Doctor Troques and his wife and after an encounter, very strange, with M-H's sister-in-law Gabby Van Svillen who insisted that she was the Tsarina of All the Russias.³⁸¹ Did she, I asked politely feel this because she had in fact some Romanov blood – Mike Romanov blood, I added. No, she said, everybody is someone else and I am the Tsarinevitch. What about you? she said. I want to be a fellow of All Souls, I said.³⁸² A what? she asked and lost interest. I was saved by a man called Valery who is the son of the poet.³⁸³ He was charming and again we discussed poetry. He told me of the time when everybody assured his father that he was a dead certainty to win the Nobel Prize for Literature that year and with what excitement, sitting in the garden, the maid came out in a hurry to say there was a long-distance call from Stockholm for him, he went bounding into the house to hear the great news only to find it was a wrong number. He never did get the Nobel Prize.

Then there was a young man with long blonde curly hair who followed E everywhere struck all of a heap with a mighty passion, dog-like in his adoration, looking a bit I thought like the American Pianist Van Cyburn, slavering at the jowls – of which he had none – in hopeless lust and writing her a note promising to dedicate his next novel to her.³⁸⁴ His name is Francois-Marie Banier who has already made something of a stir with his second novel which he promised to send me or bring me I can't remember which to the Ritz on Monday.³⁸⁵ He was engagingly eager and I shall read with interest.

At one moment Marie-Hélène came up to me at the bar where I was talking to Salinger's wife about Tours and the surrounding country which I love and blind as a bat as she looked me straight in the face at a distance of 1½ feet and said 'Where's Richard? There's a woman who's dying to meet him.' 'It is I, Hamlet, the Dane,' said I whereupon she screamed a little and went off at a tremendous pace forgetting to take me with her, and I never did meet the woman who was dying to meet me and Marie-Hélène has already forgotten who it was and indeed the entire incident. Salinger's wife asked me if people were always so cruel to Marie-Hélène. Cruel in what way, I asked, puzzled. Oh you know, she said, everybody thinks that she's a tremendous hypochondriac and once she fainted and fell off a chair in a restaurant and everybody carried on eating and talking as if nothing had happened and nobody picked her up. How, I said, extraordinary. Where did this happen? But then we were interrupted by someone and I never heard the details. I must find out next time I see her or Pierre.

Then at an earlier point of the evening that stupendous bore who is married to the sister of Guy's first wife I think came up to us and kissed E's hand with great unction and then Grace's very condescendingly and said – and there is nothing so intimidating – do you remember me, the many times we used to go to Lulatch's house. Who? asked Grace, genuinely puzzled. Lulatch, Lulatch, Lulatch, she loved you more than life, Lulatch, I'm terribly sorry said Grace but I'm sure I would remember that name. Lulatch, Lulatch, Lulatch, he said, she loved you and she died a terrible death eight years ago on the 27th of July but you have forgotten, it doesn't matter, ah if only we were here for 2000 years. Rather than just 1000 I said. Yes Yes Yes and I remember the night you and your superbe wife came to Eli Rothschild's house and we stayed up all night. And you made passes at me, said Elizabeth. And you and your superbe wife argued about poetry and she was right and you were wrong and it was a memorable evening. And you cried about the German Economic Miracle, I said. My god you're right, he said. What a memory. Quelle Memoire extraordinaire. What a memory, what a memory, the German economic miracle. What a memory. We got away from him somehow. A loathsome feller.

Sunday 5th, Ritz³⁸⁶ Back at last at the Ritz though I could stay forever at Ferrières, and am feeling rather as if we've been on a personal appearance tour for the promotion of a film. This I supposed because one feels when there are a few strangers about, even though perfectly amiable, that something is expected of one and there is a slight suggestion of mildly self-conscious projection of oneself. There was a late lunch today – one of those splendid upper-class English brunches complete with small sausages on plats chauffand and big sausages and eggs labelled 2 minutes or 3 or 4 or 5, boiled of course and haddock poche a l'anglaise though the English could never do them so well and endless varieties of breads and biscuits and toasts (very un-Anglo-Saxon except for the last) and confitures – marmalade, strawberry – and fried bacon and fried bread but in croutons (also non English) and coffee and tea. Alex Rede and a beautiful Eurasian-looking lady was there as well as Etienne (reputedly M-H's lover though he may just be 'a good friend') and the blonde man – Olivier?³⁸⁷ We talked of poetry again. Possibly because last night after dinner in the cosy corner room they asked me to speak some and I did and E says they were very impressed and talked of it when I left the room to go to the lavatory to pee which I seemed to be doing all evening. They seem, apart from the man called Etienne, to enjoy poetry when it is spoken for them but rarely to search it out themselves. I was a little cautious of speaking even a minute snippet from Hamlet with an audience consisting, among others, of two professional actresses – David's girlfriend, Marisa and Marisa's friend Charlotte – but E assured me that they too were held and agog. So that's alright. Also, both E and I are mean customers if there's ever the slightest suggestion of 'singing for our suppers'. Which there never is at the Rothschilds'. They really have – every one of them, including Philip (16) and the other 14 year old one – exquisite manners.³⁸⁸ We discussed manners as an art in itself the night before for a time and we all agreed that the man with the most exquisite manners of any person we all of us knew was the Duke of Windsor. It was Guy who put him forward as the claimant. And, though I'd never thought of him before as being so superbly well-mannered, I immediately agreed. It is a fact said I that manners are not the result of good breeding or intelligence for we know many well born and highly intelligent people who are boors, and that I personally knew many miners who have superb and quite un-self-conscious good manners and that manners, true good manners like charm you have or you don't. You cannot teach people to be charming and though manners may seem to be a question of opening and closing doors and holding chairs and standing up when a lady comes into the room etc. merely it is something that has to be done with an indefinably unobtrusive grace. Tim Hardy, for instance, whose manners are meticulous nevertheless manages to make himself faintly obtrusive, you are aware of his manners. So delicious were the Duke's that I hadn't thought of his being so until Guy pointed it out. I myself am incapable of such behaviour – and I am not being false cavalier – for I am simply not made properly. In fact, both Elizabeth's and my manners are appalling but E's obvious good nature and natural charm (if she likes you) and of course stunning beauty carry her through whereas I pretend to a gruff peasantness which (if I like you) carries me through. I hope. [...]

Monday 6th, Ritz³⁸⁹ After having arrived back last afternoon I read papers and did yesterday's entry and read a book by Ross MacDonald and half watched TV and talked to Kurt Frings agreeing to see him and his lot today at 5 o'clock downstairs to 'discuss the script and read a note from a boy called Richard Sterne who addressed his note 'Most noble Richard of Burton' and ended 'Richard of Sterne'.³⁹⁰ Surprising, this, as he has always struck me as being a most solemn feller and not given to even mild flights of fancy of this kind but he has been in Paris for a year or so as he says 'a great year here in Paris at the school of Marcel Marceau'. That's the mime chap I think.³⁹¹ And perhaps the air of Paris has gone to his head. He kept a diary and tape-recorded a book called John Gielgud directs Richard Burton which I couldn't read but which other people obviously could as he says it is going into a second edition. He said he was below with 'Joanna the Piana' whoever that may be. Was there a girl in Hamlet called Joanna. Don't think so. The Sterne man played an infinitely small part but I can't remember which. He left his tel no. and I shall call him sometime if we stay longer in Paris as we may now as Losey wants me to do dubbing on Trot on the 13th in Rome and we are trying to get him to change it to here. Going home to Gstaad and then packing again for Rome a couple of days later would be another trauma and drama. [...]

Tuesday 7th, Ritz³⁹² We shall be going to Rome, tomorrow night on the sleeper train leaving here at 6 and arriving in Rome at 9 the following morning. The motto is 'Bon soir, Paris – Bonjour Rome.' The Roman people said that they couldn't possibly get the loops ready by Thursday whereupon E said then very well he won't be able to come until the middle of January. Promptly they called back and said they'd be ready by Thursday.

Yesterday was one of those bitty days and today promises to be the same. [...] I went downstairs at 5 o'clock to talk to Dmytryk and about six other people including Frings who was the only one I knew and I said that E thought the end of the film too portentous and idiotic but that I didn't think a horror film should be taken too seriously either way as long as it was well done. We agreed on a venue outside Budapest and that we would live in a house if possible and a hotel if not. And they told me they had Virna Lisi and almost had Andress and Ann-Margret.³⁹³ I couldn't care less but just to test their veracity Gianni called Lisi and I asked her if indeed she was in the film as I didn't trust anyone and she said yes but that she wanted to play the biggest part but they had said they had to have an American star for that because the man was probably going to be unknown and they needed Box Office but that now that I was the star who needed, she said and wanted an American star and would I mind if she tried for the biggest part now. Go ahead. Go ahead. And then there was talk about Brian doing a film with E and the TV films of Osborne's seem to be very confused. Nobody seems to know what is going on and there's a TV thing about Tennessee Williams directed by Hutton who is rapidly becoming a part of our lives and he wants and we want him to do the Osborne plays so we are all three likely to walk down the aisle before long and plight eternal troth.³⁹⁴ And Stanley Donen of the squeaky voice called on the phone asking Comment va tu and I said Bene gracie and he's coming today at 2 o'clock for discussion re Little Prince which they want to do in the Spring and it all has to be fitted in with E and then there's also Absolution and I may kill myself on Christmas Day and screw everybody.³⁹⁵

We went to the Duke and Duchess' house last night for dinner with half a dozen of the most consummate bores in Paris. I don't know their names but I shall never need to remember them for I have an idea they are people who only go to the Windsors and one of them – probably the old Duke – must die very soon – though it is she who is now nearly completely ga-ga. It was a sad and painful evening and needs a long time to write about and I haven't got the time. They both referred continually to the fact that he was once the King. 'And Emperor,' I said at one point. 'And Emperor,' she repeated after me, 'And Emperor, we always forget that. And Emperor.' He is physically falling apart, his left eye completely closed and a tremendous limp and walks with a stick. Her memory has gone completely and then comes back vividly in flashes. She derided Grace Kelly all night as being a boring snob. I defended but she would have none of it. I finally gave up as I knew that half the time she didn't know what she was saying. There was one woman there a French woman who protested violently that she was not Swiss – what's so wrong with being Swiss – and who is married to a Hungarian Count who obviously didn't realize that the Duchess was gone away from us and attempted pathetic rational argument. I gave the word. Her husband said that Tito was the natural son of a Hungarian Count who had exercised his Droit de Seigneur or whatever that's called over Tito's mother's family. I said I would tease him with it when next we saw him. I doubt it. Both the allegation and that I would tease him.³⁹⁶

Wednesday 8th, Ritz³⁹⁷ The Hungarian and his French wife were quite serious about Tito's illegitimacy and his being the natural son of a Hungarian nobleman as last night at Baron de Rede's supper for Liza Minnelli the wife slipped me a note with the name of Tito's father on it.³⁹⁸ The father was a Count Erdody with an umlaut above the o, and he had fancied Tito's mother who supposedly a maid at Erdody chateau or castle or whatever the hell Hungarians have, was a pretty little thing, and was snapped up by the lechy count. Josip Erdody Tito. Pronounced Err-durdy. It might be possible to introduce it into conversation with Tito by saying something like 'My God, the Capitalist West and its decaying aristocracy claim even the foremost living Communist. D'you know sir, that they said of you quite seriously that ...' and then duck or wait for the firing squad. The Count, the Parisian one I mean and not the dirty one who fathered Tito, said to me 'Has it ever occurred to you to wonder why these peasants, these Brozzes, managed to have such a beautiful family home? You must have seen it.' 'No,' I said, 'I haven't seen it but on reflection it does seem to be rather grand for poor people but I assumed that it had been tarted up by Tito after he became President. I have only seen still snaps of it in books.' 'My dear Burton, go and look at the house the next time you and Mrs Burton are in Yugoslavia. It's an easy trip after all. It has the best road in Yugoslavia leading to the god's birthplace. And it is not smartened up at all, except perhaps its immediate surroundings. It is as it was.' We will go if we have the chance. I'm sure that the Slavs will lay it on for us. It would weaken Tito immensely with the out and out extremely Lenin-Stalin Marxists to find him so tainted but I have an idea that any documentation will have been erased from all slates including living memory, if any. [...]

We went, E in a Caftan of Slav-Turkish origin and as heavy as lead with me in a dinner jacket with an all-black ruffled shirt with one brilliant diamond pin borrowed from Van Cleef mounting firmly to the chin. [...] Liza's opening numbers were frighteningly and intensely nervous and with the exception of Lena Horne (and possibly myself when boozing in a heat-wave) I have never seen anybody sweat so much.³⁹⁹ After a time she settled down though I suffered agonies for the first 15 minutes. Rocky Brynner (Yul's son) sat in front of me and was so nervous for her, being her follower since childhood apparently, that he made me more nervous. However her shattering nervous energy finally communicated itself to her hopelessly dull audience until they went too far and would not let her leave the stage with a steady unisonic handclap and she did another number and still the now really silly audience asked for more and I told Rocky to wave her off – she was right near him – and off she went.

Alex de Rede's house is a museum and ought to be in one.⁴⁰⁰ It was as intimate as a Maples show-window, but all done with superb and detailed taste.⁴⁰¹ It's a shame as well as a surprise to find out that it's not his house but is leased by him for 60 years so all that labour, and labour it is – he must have spent millions and travelled the world – will eventually fall under the auctioneer. Apart from some very discreet ceiling lights the whole place was lighted by candles and these were endlessly multiplied by mirrors. I sought the far room as soon as I arrived and sat there alone for ten minutes savouring a glass of Perrier – still liquor-less after an intensive 6 days of society – and I mean 'savouring' as I was terribly thirsty for some reason – and but for those concealed ceiling lights I could have been back in time a couple of hundred years. The same faces appear at all the parties. We talked to Salvador Dali for a time who clowned about charmingly as usual giving us his Catalanese pronunciation of 'butterfly' which cannot be impersonated in print.⁴⁰² The English live in fogs and therefore everything, including their language is rife with imprecision, including their language, he said, but our Catalan is sharp-edged and everywhere defined and sharply dominant, like our language. Nonsense I said. Your language with all its esses elided in eths sounds is liquid but not limpid, it is muddy like your minds. He left saying 'butterfly'. With him was a striking looking blonde, tall and thin, who stared at me all the time while at dinner and Guy (blonde hair always falling over his forehead) Barrault(?) was helpless with stoned laughter saying Tu as ton ticket, c'est drôle, tu as ton ticket et la dame est un homme.⁴⁰³ And so she was. The girl was a man. [...]

We are off to Rome tonight on the train and I'm looking forward to it. I've had enough of French society. Also their faces were beginning to become familiar to me and indeed some of them began to acquire names as the same faces are seen at all parties. I want to retreat now into the silent world of the Alps and bury myself in walks and books and dogs and hibernate until the holidays, so loathed by me, are over. Messy Xmas trees that shed and the house running with people.

And now to meet someone called Robert (I think) Hakim, one of the innumerable Hakim (Egyptian) bros re Under the Volcano.⁴⁰⁴

Friday 10th, Grand⁴⁰⁵ To work at 9 this a.m. and with a bit of luck I might be finished by lunchtime but I may become word-drunk around midday and it might be better to take a break before the final and last lap. Also I remember I have to do a lot of off-stage talking – nothing specific but the sort of diatribic stuff that Joe can shove in anywhere. Joe says that the visions over my shoulder things don't work and that he has cut them all out. Just badly done he says, the machine incompetently handled as he saw the same technique used on British TV only two nights ago absolutely brilliantly. Comes to something when the poor relation does technically better stuff than the rich Uncle. I thought at the time that the technical boys on the process were all too familiar to me, faces that I'd seen around for years in Italian films and guessed then that such a new process would demand, normally, new men – particularly the men who invented it, and usually young men. They were all old. That is at least my age – middle aged-ish.

E is eating as if she is about to acquire some dreadful disease which will include a loss of appetite, and so that while she is hungry she will eat and eat and eat. I keep on telling her that she is as round as she is tall which is a complete lie as apart from her impossible stomach and her hereditary double chin she is not really all that tubby. She is well covered though. She is one of those who can only diet when the mood takes her and then she goes too far. Since she doesn't have a weight problem of any consequence she could eat very well, not dieting and still remain trim without too much trouble, but milady has all the discipline of a mountain pony. I enjoy self imposed discipline, there must be a masochist hidden here somewhere, though in the matter of dieting I find it hardly any trouble at all. [...]

Evening

I finished my so called two days' work in less than a day since yesterday we worked only from three 'til 5.45 and today I cleared the lot by lunchtime. Much private rejoicing as I hate that aspect of the work. After it was over I saw a reel of the film leading up to and including the assassination. It will look good I'm sure when all the thuds and noises are put in and the blood is very effective and will be more so in a good print.

Trap and Joe [Joseph and Patricia Losey] and the children are coming for dinner and I have just seen a pair of diamond earrings for a cool million dollars. They were two pendant diamonds 30 carats each and very beautiful and superbly cut but I told Gianni Bulgari's man that the price was outrageous and that I would find it nasty to buy them even at $\frac{1}{2}$ half that cost.⁴⁰⁶ Bet you an offer nearer the latter than the former will come through ere long.

Saturday 18th, Ariel⁴⁰⁷ I stayed in bed for as long as I could bear it but finally – foot or no foot – I got me up and with cunning contortions managed to dress myself, sat me in a chair in the bedroom, placed another chair as a table and wrote yesterday's entry. I then began [...] the article for the Mail. I have a vague shape of it in my head and I did about 200 words though they have yet to be polished and balanced. At the moment I have only the vaguest idea as to how long it will be – anything from 1000 words to 3000 would be my guess.⁴⁰⁸ [...]

Chris arrived last night very late and I was so bushed that I simply couldn't wait up for him. [...] Chris looks magnificent and is his usual sarcastic denigrating nothing-is-any-good self. Ron and E say that last night he excelled himself and Ron said, 'You'd better get him the hell out of that school in Krautland Richard – they're turning him into a Nazi.' I replied that nobody had to worry about his turning into Attila the Hun but Attila was the bloke to worry about. What did he say or do, I asked. They said that after he arrived Vicky asked him if he wanted to play Yahtzee and he replied: No, it's a boring repetitive and stupid game. Well, said I, in Chris' defence he's right and it is. However, I agreed he might have been slightly more non-committal as everybody else there was obviously enjoying the game. In any case I would prefer, in anybody, more jaundice and cynicism than over-sentimentality.

Sunday 19th, Gstaad⁴⁰⁹ I went out last night to the Olden which was very crowded [...] Ron became sweetly and uncomfortably drunk very quickly and by uncomfortable I mean that I was afraid he was going to do something disastrous like fall off his chair or something. [...] we limped out and home in the car. Astonishingly after about 15 minutes at home and two games of table-tennis with Mike, Ron became merely pissed again instead of paralysed. [...]

Tuesday 21st, Ariel⁴¹⁰ Yesterday's entry is missing because I worked all day long, as I had most of the previous day and far into the night, on the story for the Mail. I read the first rough unhesitant plunging in up to the neck to Elizabeth who told me, though I was piqued at the time, but only for a second, that I must simplify it. So back I went to work, balancing and measuring and for the only time in my nothing writing life I looked up something in Roget's which I have never done before except for crossword puzzles and amusement. I can't remember what the word was that I was having difficulty with but in any case Roget's was no help and I ploughed on with my own built in one. I did almost all the work in long-hand, and not having written with pen and ink or pencil for many years I had the forgotten writer's cramp. It's very evident in the script, the writing starting off so neat and trim and mathematical and ending in huge drunken sprawling hieroglyphics. The deadline was this morning and assuming that I could send it by telex from the Palace Hotel I typed it laboriously out. Inevitably as I typed I deleted and added and changed the structure of sentences. I have never written anything so long (for publication I mean) in so short a time. The previous shortest for 2 or 3 thousand words was about 6 weeks. This one was 3,400 approx and in 3 days. Phew. I would have liked another week on it. E thinks it marvellous so that's ok and the Editor was bubbling over with words like Scoop. We all think it is a scoop. The staff are delighted etc. which is ok too. [...] I am worried about my sweet E. She doesn't seem to be at all well and her back is kicking up again like fury. It's a dreadful thing to think when we love this house so much but I am beginning to have the horrifying suspicion that the altitude is too much for her. She sparkled in Dubrovnik, she was radiant in Rome, she was a young girl in Paris but here she seems listless and slightly bored all the time, not just with me, but with everybody and everything. I think that already she is wishing that we were here just the two of us. We must use this time as a testing period for if it is the altitude then we must simply go lower down.

David Niven and wife Hjordis came up for an after lunch (at the Olden) drink and were in very good form and David, as usual, made us laugh a lot. He is tremendously excited about the success of his autobiography which is lovely to see and enjoy with him.

I feel so relaxed and almost smug about having got the article in on time and the Mail's liking it, but above all and especially E.

Brook and Liza arrived last afternoon and Claudye and Gianni arrived today so the house is now bursting at the seams though the latter couple are not staying with us but at the Olden.

Liza is a bundle of energy and I spoil her with shamelessness though I have to mentally belt her now and again.

Brook is irremediably sad and lonely. And he is still a drunk though he claims that at home he only drinks at weekends and then only wine. I feel so sorry for him and wish I could help him more.

1972

JANUARY

Friday 28th, Phoenix¹ Yesterday we went to Sara's house for lunch and for the last time, thank God. It was the first time for me to see the place in daylight and it could be a very pleasant little abode were some money and taste expended on it. Sara's brother (80 next September) and his wife were there. He is a thin spare man with marvellous high Indian-looking cheek bones and Howard said of him: If you dip him in a barrel of salt water – clothes and all – then put him out in the sun to dry, he might approximate to looking like Sam. Sam was the pioneering adored grandfather.² [...]

Last night I had a unique experience – for me that is. I went to have dinner with the Voldengs in the swankiest country club in Phoenix, or the richest, or both. However, the uniqueness was that I discovered towards the end of the dinner that the Club was restricted to gentiles only. NO JEWS ALLOWED. Mary Frances told me so.³ She said that they, the Club, had told them, the Jews that there are just too many of you and before long you'll be running the place so why don't you form a club of your own. I was flabbergasted. I should have immediately announced this to the rest of the family and we would have undoubtedly swept out en masse. However I thought of Sara and that the only reason why we were dining with the Voldengs was to get her out as easily and unrancorously as possible, but I simply couldn't sit there and say nothing. She promptly gave me an opportunity to salvage my conscience as she said with twinkling glee 'And do you know Richard they ran into financial difficulties and had to appeal to us gentiles for help. What about that!' I swooped. 'How strange to hear that,' I said, 'our lot doesn't usually get into that kind of difficulty.' She took the blow with an air of not knowing quite whether I was making a little British joke or not. I now laid it on. 'Elizabeth, as you obviously don't know is a convert to Judaism and our daughter is of course a Jewess and my grandfather was a Jew'. She was helpless. She said 'Yes' but it had several additional vowels in it, impossible to write down but it was something like 'Yeaaeahowes.'

To reiterate here the platitudinous idiocies of their conversation would be tedious. E and I and Howard and Mara had gone there knowing what to expect but so exactly did they react to any given suggestion that they were little different from Pavlovian dogs. One rang the bell of this idea and they tolled the precisely expected answer. To the very anticipated word. We all agreed afterwards that they were so brain-washed that nothing, no argument, no appeal to intelligence, could possibly change them. For instance, and only one example will I give, Dr Voldeng said that the thing that had made this country great was that it was a melting pot for all the peoples of the world. Yawn. Yawn. But they had just said that Jews were not allowed in their club! There was therefore absolutely no point in asking about the blacks.

We reduced ourselves to hysteria in the course of the post mortem in our suite but under it all we were sick at heart. [...]

Saturday 29th, Beverly Hills Hotel An eventful day. One of those that despite much incident manage to be tedious. We left Phoenix at 2.14 in the GS2 [...] and we took 45 minutes to get to Air Research airport.⁴ There, there was a hell of a problem with Sara who refused to lie down in the ambulance. I said I would ride with her if she would lie down but she wouldn't so I snapped off smartly into the Cadillac. She tried to get Howard and E to ride with her [...] but H nipped off as smartly as I and joined me in the car – then tore back to the ambulance which still refused to leave, grabbed E and brought her back and finally [...] we were under way. We arrived in the underground garage and I fled fast to the safety of Bungalow 5. The others came swiftly afterwards. Howard and E were already somewhat sloshed by this time but only my experienced eye could tell while Mara was trying to catch up. Howard and Mara told me that they never have a drink until the evening when they're at home and I know E barely has a drink before 6pm normally but seeing and being around Sara, said Howard, drink was the only defence. Yes sir. My way out was to eat ten lbs of chocolates and liquorice etc. washed down with many cups of tea. By about 8 o' clock at night all three were pixilated [...].

At one time Paul Newman came in and Howard and Mara carried on talking as if he was not there. I asked him what he was doing in town and he said he was there to see John Huston. 'Oh, I know him,' said Mara, 'he came to Kuwaii once. He's got a patch over his eye and he's a film producer or something.' 'No,' says I, 'you're thinking of John Ford.'⁵ That's right, she said. Sometimes I wonder whether Mara's defence mechanism against being impressed when she meets a famous and very distinguished man like Newman is a pretence of ignorance about all things filmic. She sees more films in three months than I see in ten years so it can't be ignorance. Paul is what I call a real actor. A nice man, extraordinarily youthful looking with a complexion so peaches and cream that at first I thought he had make-up on. Every move he makes is like one practising – with no need to look any more – in front of a mirror. I don't mean that unkindly. He doesn't even know he's doing it. He is a keep fit fanatic and my God the results are remarkable. He must be at least my age and yet with a little care around the eyes and a dye-job on the hair he could still pass for 24 or so.⁶ I would hate to look like him. I did once before acne re-mapped my face and I hated it. I abhor mere prettiness.

Voldeng, while we were on the plane, quite blatantly asked E if she would contribute $5000 to the Orchestral Fund of Phoenix. E, caught in a corner said OK. In a minute he was sitting next to me in the rear compartment where he asked me the same. I said that we gave a considerable amount to charities but only with great suspicion and only to the lame and [...] the blind and the retarded etc. but that I would ask Aaron if it were possible to make an exception. I have no intention of giving $5000 to a group of anti-semitic idiots. What appalling effrontery.

I did something this morning which gave me immense satisfaction. I took the two dogs for a run on the lawns in front of the bungalows. [...] Suddenly I was aware that I was being shadowed from tree to bush to tree by some idiot photographer who fondly believed that I couldn't see him. I started to throw the ball harder and harder, followed by new friend. Suddenly I whirled and with all my strength threw the rubber ball with a baseball pitcher's action straight at the snapper hoping to hit the camera, instead of which I hit him square in the middle of his forehead. It's quite a heavy hard rubber ball with a bell inside it. It was only later that I realized that I could have taken his eye out if I'd hit him there and that if I'd missed I would have had to suffer the ignominy of having to cross the road to retrieve the ball. He said nothing but stared at me with under-privileged hatred. I stared back and said 'you're on private property, get off it.' He left.

Sunday 30th We ran XYZ yesterday afternoon and though I'd seen the film twice before (once a rough cut) and had seen sections of it ¹/₂ a dozen times I was still fascinated, though not so much when E was off-screen. There are always little subtleties in E's performance to be discovered anew whereas Caine and the girl are always carefully studied but obvious. What is that girl's name?⁷ [...] I went to bed at 10.30 or thereabouts simply not being able to keep awake. [...] I awoke slightly in the middle of the night to find E snoring gently [...] and tipped her chin to stop her. She stopped.

Kurt Frings and his vapid little girlfriend came to the film and Alex Lucas and his wife (?) very very nervous girl Rex Kennamer (who again got pissed) and of course Sara and the two nurses and Jim and George. Half – more than half – the audience were seeing it for the first time and we at last got some idea of where the laughs come. I'm afraid that we have made a mistake with Frings. I cannot bring myself to like that man. He is monumentally ill-mannered and thick as a trunk. All he had to say about the film was that he wished that Maggie Leighton had a bigger part. Rex was staggering about with either drink or pot and endlessly cornered me (and before me Elizabeth) saying equally endlessly 'I know John Q Public better than you or Frings or anybody in the business. I listen to those old ladies talking and they say, "Is Liz Taylor really really beautiful?" and I think your John Springer should run a campaign saying, "Go and see the most beautiful woman in the world at her most beautiful," because these old ladies say, "you know, is she really beautiful or has she got old and fat," and I'm telling you Richard this is the most ravishing I've ever seen Elizabeth and I've seen everything she's ever done. You've gotta get Springer to do this because I know my John Q Public and I know them better than ...' He doesn't know his John Q Public. Nobody does. If the film is a hit it's a hit and if it's a flop it's a flop and nobody can persuade John Q to go or not go by a piece of advertising. The most important advertisement in the business is unbuyable and it's called Word of Mouth. We shall not know for about three weeks whether – in the USA – we have a hit or a miss. I have an idea that the film will be immensely successful with sophisticated audiences but the hick may still be puzzled by the ending. Say and write what you will the small townner, the uneducated sticks, still don't know about lesbians. Howard and Mara Jim and George Alex Lucas know all about it and appreciated the ultimate horrendous trick that Zee plays but I can't see my brothers and sisters getting it. They'll just think that Zee has said something awful to Stella and be frustrated at not knowing what.⁸ I may have underestimated the spread of sexual knowledge – God knows the papers never stop writing about sex and its aberrations – but I don't think so.

Mara and E came into the bedroom last night when they all got back from Sara's bungalow with some tale about the condescending rudeness of the room service manager as they had waited for over an hour for the food to come [...] I wasn't sure of what exactly went on. I'll get it straightened out this morning. [...]

Once the waiters get their knives into you you might as well pack up and move to another hotel because they can make your life very uncomfortable. They can forget the sauce for the steak and the dressing for the salad and a million little inconveniences and since Sara relies on the room service to an unprecedented degree the waiters must be kept sweet. [...] I remember Ivor and I once in the Negresco being so fed up with the lousy waiter's lousy service combined with a 'fuck you' attitude that Ivor poured a bowl of chips over his head and while he was shouting and bawling I skatted him with a carafe of water.⁹ We had the police an' all. Syb was pregnant with Kate at the time and while I had been at work apparently this waiter had been giving Gwen and Syb a rough time because they spoke no French and he didn't know who they were. Just two plain ladies from Wales I suppose he thought they were. We sorted him out alright. He was fired by the management for calling the police but, having withdrawn his charges I – against everybody's will – insisted that he was reinstated and that he continued to serve our suite. He became devoted to everybody and indeed used to send us postcards for a time until, not getting any back, he fell away.

Edie Goetz came with Mr and Mrs Arthur Hornblow to visit us last night at about 7.15.¹⁰ The Hornblows left after half an hour [...] Edie stayed on. She looked alive and very well kept though she had on a pair of frightful eyelashes. [...] She, surprisingly to E and I both, boasted about the cost of her sable coat. It's Crown Sable she said and added $10,000 to the bill. After she left we both said how much we liked her whereupon Rex Kennamer, soberer now than he had been, began to attack her. It was all-embracing in its viciousness. He wouldn't allow her a single virtue. He said she thought of nothing but money and herself. That neither she nor Bill had ever given a penny to charity and that he had seen them stand up at fund-raising dinners and pledge money and then dishonour the pledge. That she has a daughter who has been desperately ill for two years and to whom she has given nothing except porcelain vases with potted plants inside, and that the girl is married to a not very successful agent and she needs money for hospital bills here are astronomical and don't we know that, and that she has fought for years to be LA's top hostess but has been out-ranked, flanked and buggered-up by a Mrs May (of May Company) who gives copiously to hospitals and was the force behind the building of the huge new cultural centre, and that she is obsessed by Frank Sinatra who, said Rex, pointing to his temples, is a sick man and if Frank ever drops her she will kill herself and that her obsession with Sinatra had made the last few years of her husband's life a torment as Frank had done a film for Goetz called Capture of Queen or something and that Frank had behaved so atrociously that he quadrupled the cost of the picture which was a majestic flop and he would normally never have had anything to do with Sinatra ever again but Edie ignored him and became Frank's slave despite Bill's protestations and so on and on and on.¹¹ [...] I said rather feebly [...] that she had always seemed very nice to me. If I'd had a few argumentative drinks I would have challenged Rex all along the line but I decided he was drunk and therefore not a compos opponent. I shall ask him again when he is more measured in judgement. It was all fascinating – particularly the social aspect and it all seems so second class compared with Parisian society. Christ I'm a snob! How about, as they say, that?

Monday 31st 8am and we've all been up since 7 to see off Howard and Mara who have a pleasant 5 hour journey to Hawaii while we have an unpleasant 5 hours to NY on Wednesday and an equally unpleasant 7–8–9 hours to Rome the following day. [...] We went to see a James Bond film yesterday afternoon [...] called Diamonds are Forever which was good fun but surprisingly ill-acted and amateurish.¹² There are some good sequences – notably a car chase – but the plot, which as far as I can remember has nothing to do with the original, is very silly indeed.¹³ It makes Eagles [...] look realistic by comparison. Sean has got potty and now really looks like a miner going to seed.¹⁴ Which he is. [...] His Scots accent was more pronounced than ever – perhaps deliberately – perhaps indicating Home Rule for Scotland. He has become a devout nationalist. Anyway it was all good clean fun.

[...] I cannot make up my mind about Mara. One thing I'm certain of and that is that I couldn't live with her for more than two days. If one could only gag her it would be alright. E tells me how her father told her that he had long ago tuned off whenever her mother talked. Howard goes at it the other way. When Mara talks he talks, but louder, and the shriller she gets the more thunderous he becomes. I'm beginning to doubt whether they've had a proper conversation together for twenty years. In fact I can't imagine them having an ordinary chat as we have. The point about Mara is: is she stupid or not? Don't know. Is she silly or nasty or not? Don't know. If it were not for Howard I am pretty certain that E and I would make bloody certain that we were never in the same place as that most uncomfortable woman ever again. And it is not that I dislike her, it is simply that her manner and the content of her observations on life are so tremendously BORING. To the point of screaming. If only she could acquire the virtue of silence or force herself to listen when somebody anybody else is talking, she might be tolerable. There have been times when I longed to say ‘shut your bloody trap for just 15 minutes, only 15 little minutes, while Howard talks or Elizabeth finishes that story’. She also has the most unfortunate accent and intonation. Sometimes I have – in the past week – asked her a direct question and listened to the answer and have realized after 10 minutes that I haven’t known what she’s been saying for the past five. My mind has wandered off. Some teachers and lecturers and most pulpit preachers were like that. That’s the criminal thing about having children – they keep incompatible people together. I believe that I heard vaguely that Howard took off once with another woman maybe, or just took off. I bet that he would never have gone back were it not for the children. The same with Francis too, I guess. There must have been a time, before he got too old, when he wanted out. It’s funny that both father and son married two non-stop talkers. You’d think that Howard would have chosen a quiet woman for a partner after a lifetime of Sara’s endless gabble but he chose a lady who could if anything out-talk Sara. [...]

I’ve had a bellyful of the USA already and am ripe to go back to Europe though I will doubtless regret that after a few days behind the curtain and be lusting for the States again. Phoenix was a tremendous disappointment. I had a totally different picture of it in my mind. And I had no idea that it was such a huge city. I thought in terms of a 150,000 and not a million population as it is. When we left it we could see its great sprawl and there was the unmistakable smog. I had visions of Norman Rockwell far west with local drugstores and shops on the corner and the Town Hall with a church and a square and a drugstore and all that Andy Hardy stuff.

I talked to Kate last night. She sounded flip and cocky and I soon found out that the reason for that was that there was a girlfriend there so a little showing-off was going on. We will probably see her on Wednesday [...].

FEBRUARY

Tuesday 1st, Los Angeles A nice day yesterday. Howard and Mara arrived safely and I read and wrote practically all day long. The only cessation was in the afternoon when I talked with McWhorter and later with Alex Lucas. The first about the Canterbury Tales and the second about Hammersmith.¹⁵ The former says he has three millions to do the former and the latter wants to get some control of Hammersmith. Good luck to both.

I popped up for about 15 minutes to see Sara with Elizabeth. The lady is still bonkers without any question. The entire bungalow apart from Sara's bedroom and sitting room [...] is stacked to the ceilings with bric a brac in boxes. And what rubbish! E found a packing case that appeared to contain nothing but tin-foil TV dinner plates [...]. Staggering idiocy. When E remonstrated with her about this she burst into large and, if E knows her, crocodile tears. [...] I told E last night that we must regard her as if she were a child of 10 years old and a very spoiled one. She must do what we – her parents say – and not what she whimsically feels like doing. [...] Val says that Robbie is weaving a web – his own words – around Sara to get her back to Phoenix. Well, in the immortal words of Zee, Scarlett, I couldn't give a sheeit.¹⁶ [...]

Wednesday 2nd, Beverly Hills Hotel [...] We leave at 11 for NY and tomorrow night we leave NY for Rome in the evening. So we haul our indifferent bodies from yet one more continent to another. In a few days we shall be in Budapest and I am agog with curiosity. What will Hungary be like? It is impossible to find any literature on modern Hungary. Only a Fodor travel book which is hopeless and stops at '56. Will try again in NY. I can't believe that there is so little stuff about a famous modern state. Lack of interest must be the answer. Books on the impenetrable Red Chinese are all over the stalls, two of which I bought yesterday together with $150 worth of other books, mostly paperbacks with at least half being whodunits for the long stay in Budapest. The Cadogan diaries, the closing circle, the something foxes – highly recommended tome on international espionage – ecological books.¹⁷ Barbara Tuchman's Stilwell and the American experience in China or some such title and a mass of Simenons and Creaseys and Helen Macguiness and A. A. Fairs and godknows what other readable rubbish.¹⁸ But I guess that if there's so little about Hungary outside the country there'll be little about the West inside Hungary and without books of some kind E and I pine.

The one possible pleasure of the journey is that we may get a few hours of Kate in NY if Aaron can spring her from school for tomorrow. [...]

I am getting nearer and nearer to an attempt to give up cigarettes, not out of fear of cancer but simply because a) it's a filthy habit and b) I want to try and prove to myself that – as with booze – I am Henley and the master of my fate etc.¹⁹ As for the fear of cancer I am one of those who believes they will either have found a cure by the time I get it or that, like my heavily smoking father, I won't get it at all but die like him at 83 of a stroke. I am determined to do it and will decide, after a suitable time period not yet decided precisely whether the effort is worth it. With alcohol it unquestionably is. [...]

Both of us are very glad to be on our way out of the States. Phoenix was the final straw that broke our camel's back. We had thought the American malaise to be possibly confined to big industrial centres, business centres, NY, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles etc. But it's everywhere. [...]

Thursday 3rd, New York Airport We are at something called the International Hotel five minutes from the airport [...]. We are surrounded by a mass of Aaron's Praetorian guards, Tom Horan, Steve, Dug senior and junior and Rosemary, taking all the rooms around us and making sure that no wicked ones from the terrible city of NY will attack the Burtons. With justice too. The last time we were here we were very lucky to get safely away with our baubles intact. The gang – still at large and still operating – have pulled several jobs since they missed on us.

The journey was smooth [...]. There was a film called Kotch on which I could only watch for a time though E watched it all the way and said afterwards that it was beautifully done. After ten minutes however I could see the whole course of the movie and found reading more congenial.²⁰ [...] There were hordes of snappers when we came off the ship and they backed and clicked and attracted crowds so that the journey to the car went on and on for about what seems a good $\frac{1}{2}$ mile but was probably only a $\frac{1}{4}$. I would have become angry in the old days were I drunk but I merely looked blank instead.

Tonight we're off again to Rome. [...] Have just read some more notices for XYZ which are all highly praised stuff for E but not so much for the film. The film is good so don't understand the carping at the film.

Have just been sent the script of a horrifying book of police corruption which I was sent to read three or four months ago. Will read it and decide. Rather like playing cockney thugs even though this one is supposed to be a policeman.

Friday 4th, Rome Late afternoon in a raining Rome. We flew from NY last night into the teeth of a howling 90mph gale. [...] The film we saw was called The French Connection which was done in a very mystifying fashion.²¹ Elizabeth, who hadn't like me read the book, confessed herself utterly lost in the plot from time to time and because of the looseness of the direction wasn't sure sometimes who were cops and who were the baddies. Also the director having obviously decided that the original story was too quiet and tame, quite arbitrarily put in two episodes – a hair raising car versus electric train race with a mad killer aboard the latter, which had nothing to do with the film, and the final showdown was the olde classical gun-fight while in the original documented book, as I remember, there was no gunfight at all. Not one single shot fired as far as I can remember. Still, it was fast moving and interesting enough.

[...] I feel better already since coming back. I really am a little old European. We leave on Monday for Budapest. [...] I also have to ice skate, a little exercise I haven't done for years, and the return to that mildish form of exercise and balance is going to be very interesting.

Damnedest thing about E's chimerical looks. She looked, in the USA the worst I've ever seen her. Tending to bloat, uncertain complexion, bags under the eyes – particularly the left, probably as a result of the cyst operation which is developing an internal keloid, and now suddenly this morning, in the plane she was back to being ravishing again when after two days of nightmarish travel she should have looked her all time worst. Funny woman. Actually I think that, at last, E now shows the effects of heavy drinking whereas Howard – apart from slightly bloodshot eyes in the first waking – still looks as if he's just come back from a health farm. Mara and I still look – as we always have – like the end of the earth. [...]

Saturday 5th [...] The top ten box office things have just come out in the States where I am not No 1 as in Europe but number 6 or 7.²² E is ahead of me there so there must have been releases of some of her previous pictures. Any way the old firm is still way up there. My phraseology is becoming more and more transatlantic. That's what comes from being married to an American and being in America for ten days and reading American books.

I read a script in NY – the book of which I have already read – called Sir, you bastard and which is very and horribly compelling (about police corruption) but suffers from the same weakness as Villain.²³ It will not be understood by the yanks. And one can't make pictures nowadays for London only. [...]

Sunday 6th [...] I have so lost count of time and days that I had a lovely surprise – paradoxically an expected surprise if I'd known what day it was and that we were playing Scotland at Cardiff yesterday. Anyway, there were the lovely headlines. 'Welsh Crush Scots', 'King For A Day Gareth smashes Scotland', etc. We had beaten the Scots, strongly fancied in some quarters after beating the French by 20 points 4 weeks ago, by 35 to 12. Wales scored 5 tries to Scotland's one and three of the Welsh tries, one by Gerald Davies and two by Gareth

Edwards had to be seen apparently to be believed.²⁴ I feel very strange about this Welsh team. It would appear that they are the greatest all round team since the 'Golden Age' from about 1900 to 1910 and like the golden men of that age, talked about with breathless awe by those who saw them, and again like those immortal ghosts, I have never seen them play.²⁵ I believe that I saw Gareth Edwards play for Millfield in a 'Sevens' many years ago but apart from him and possibly John Dawes playing for London Welsh I have never even seen them play as individuals.²⁶ The Welsh this century, apart from a mediocre patch in the 20s, have always been able to produce very sound teams and nearly always hard to beat with an occasional match winner or two in the side, men out of the common mould like Bleddyn and the Cliffs Morgan and Jones, Tanner, Wooller, Watkins the forward before the 2nd War and Watkins the fly-half since, but since the Golden Age I cannot remember – on paper at least – a team that contained such a heavy percentage of 'geniuses' at the same time.²⁷ Morris of Neath, Mervyn Davies and John Taylor in the pack, Edwards and John at half back, John Williams at fullback, Gerald Davies on the wing and – in full cry – a virtually unstoppable Bevan on the other wing.²⁸ I have to guess that Bergiers and Lewis in the centre are sound, especially in defence.²⁹ What I should do is write to Cliff Jones and ask if I can buy 16mm copies of the matches played in the last 3 years including the tests against New Zealand and have myself a punny ball.³⁰ Must do so.

Tomorrow to Hungary. I am looking forward to it with excitement. The very name Budapest smacks of romance and tragedy and wild Magyar music. It cannot, simply cannot be dull, regardless of friends' warnings that it is the most depressing capital in Europe. I shall start out, at least, refusing to be talked into disliking it before I find out for myself. And again the Communist experiment is eternally fascinating. There must be some alternative to the idiocy and rat-race murderousness of 'democracy' and I'm pretty sure that Communism is not it but it is different so one more look at one more communist country.

I went to the 'Lion' book shop yesterday and bought yet another pile of books for the ten week stay in Buda and Pest. Cadogan's diaries, A. L. Rowse's two vols The Early Churchills and The Later Churchills, Solzhenitsyn's Full Circle, Chosen Words by Ivor Brown.³¹ Two dual-language Penguins of Mallarmé and French Poetry of the 19th Century.³² A book by Auberon Waugh – son of Evelyn.³³ Isaac Deutscher Red China Russia and the USA – I think it's called.³⁴ A Hungarian Grammar. And a handful of thrillers. So we should have more than enough to get through ten weeks.

Monday 7th We leave this afternoon for Budapest flying at 3.30. The people are so adamant that we depart and arrive at the border, at the exact time over the border rather, that one gets the impression that if we are too early or too late we will be buzzed or shot down. This must be a very nervous frontier anyway since 1956 but particularly since they have a very nervous Yugoslavia nearby.³⁵ Joe and Patricia came for drinks and dinner last night and Joe, who has just come back from Jugland, said that the talk is that the dissident communists in Croatia are being financed and armed by either Nazi Yugoslavian exiles operating behind great wealth from South America or by Russia or both.³⁶ [...] I wonder if the old man is going to be forced to start shooting a few blokes at last.³⁷ If he doesn't and things get worse the Russians may come over the border 'to help out' as they did in Hungary in 56. Who knows? Merely taking political prisoners may not be enough. A few public trials and death sentences or forced exile may be called for. I hope the old man clears everything up shortly for out of sheer affection I'd not like to see his majestic and reasonably humane leadership of his marvellous little country fizzle out into a bewildered and helpless kow-tow to the Muscovites. Taking the long view it won't much matter historically if Yugoslavia becomes yet another satellite of the Kremlin's for nobody is going to be able to keep those people down for long.³⁸ It is writ down in corporal in the books for all to read, They cannot be a subject race for long. With the Mexicans I have never fallen so violently in love with a nation at first sight, as I have with the Yugoslavians. As for Hungarians, the only ones I have consciously known have been successful exiles – George Tabori and he who gave me his word and a contract for £100 per week while I was still slogging away in the theatre – the incomparable Alex Korda.³⁹ When I think of Hungarians I emblemize them in the person of that great scoundrel of ineffable charm, huge generosity and large lies, of living grandiosely beyond his means, of telling me of poverty in Paris where he lived at one time – he solemnly assured me – on one gigantic cake sent him by his mother, for 6 weeks. When, out of the blue, I was invited to have lunch with him at 146 Piccadilly which turned out not to be lunch at all but coffee and cigars, and he said in his growling Hoongarrian English, 'Would you like to work with me?' I stammered a sort of 'Yes, but of course I have to...' 'It will hardly inconvenience your stage career. In fact I insist that the theatre must come first. I am going to give you £100 a week for five years. I have never seen you act but I have heard from a friend or two that you are going to be an actor of importance. My friend and colleague Laurence Olivier told me that you are a natural aristocrat and now that I have seen you I know that he is right. I am therefore investing £5000 on a belief that Olivier and I are right. So learn all you can in the theatre. Try not to get in long runs, do as many plays as you can. Go to Stratford. Buy a car, get your wife a mink. Enjoy yourself.' I was in a daze of delight. I was about 24 – no 23 years old – and the most I'd ever earned was £12 a week. 'Sign this,' he said indicating one sheet of paper with only one side worded. I began to read it. 'Good,' he said: 'never sign any paper you haven't read and understood.' It said roughly that I was to be available to Sir Alexander Korda for a maximum of 12 weeks a year at my convenience, for a maximum of 5 years during which time – if I did a film for anyone else – I was to get my usual 5000 plus half of whatever price the other film company were prepared to pay. The other half was to go to Korda's company 'London Films'. I danced down Piccadilly to the nearest pub and phone. I called home and told Syb. I called Stanley Baker. I told the publican – a complete stranger. I called Ivor through Dai John Philips.⁴⁰ When the pub closed at 3 I suppose it was, I took a taxi, undreamt of extravagance, to the ML Club near the BBC where I was sure that there would be a few congenial well-wishing friends. To cap it all the late and beloved Dylan was there and the even later and equally beloved Louis MacNeice both of them well on the way to stupefaction. Vague figures loomed in the haze of smoke and alcohol and I had pretty well run through my first week's salary by the time I arrived home in the little hours.

This was an astonishing step forward. Many young actors, some of them good like Dirk Bogarde, Donald Houston, Andrew Crawford, Jimmy Granger – I think – and Jean Simmons were under horrible contracts to the Rank Organization but I was under contract to Sir Alexander Korda and his other contract actors were Olivier, Vivien Leigh, Ralph Richardson and a host of other giant names. A very much posher and distinguished lot than the Rank 'stable'. In the end I never did do a film for Alex. He loaned me out to Emlyn Williams and Tolly de Grunwald and then to Fox for a film called My Cousin Rachel with Olivia de Havilland as my leading lady.⁴¹ I was still agent-less (unless one considers Korda as my agent) and Fox offered me $50,000. I had told Syb and the family that I was going to stick out for £7000. When the Fox representative, whose name oddly enough was Freddie Fox, offered me roughly twice what I was so ruthlessly determined to hold out for I agreed at once. I must confess to lying about it all to my friends and saying that I had fought them every inch of the way to get that enormous sum. To ice the cake Korda said he was not going to take his cut but that I should go out and buy a Rolls-Bentley immediately. I bought a Mark 8 Jaguar instead.

But there was more to come. The man who insisted I played in the film was George Cukor, an infinitely wicked and loveable man as well as being, at his best, one of the very fine directors. He has seen me and was seeing me in a play of Lillian Hellman's yclept Montserrat.⁴² I didn't think much of the book or the script but I thought a lot of Cukor and my leading lady was, he assured me, to be either Garbo (who told me mendaciously but charmingly some months later, having seen the film, that she would have done it had she known I was so good) or Vivien.⁴³ So I left with Syb and her brother Dai Mogs – just down from Cambridge with a deliberately indifferent degree – who was supposed to be my secretary though I ended up answering not only my own post but his too – on the Queen Mary first call and all found.⁴⁴

By the time we got to NY 5½ days later Cukor had been either fired or had withdrawn (I never did find out which) and my leading lady was Olivia de Havilland who had just won two Oscars in three years and was in the language of Hollywood 'hot, hot, hot.'⁴⁵ She was married to a very eccentric man, very forgettable, who thought that his wife was the mid-century Duse and had a notice put on the board that all members of the crew and cast were no longer to call Olivia 'Livvy' which was her long-established diminutive in the industry, but as Miss De Havilland at all times.⁴⁶ I was also told by Zanuck's hatchet man [...] Lew Schreiber that Miss De Havilland would not permit me to have co-starring billing with her. I didn't mind about the billing a bit and to this day I have never cared about it but I did get the impression, later confirmed, that they were hoping I would do a Rex Harrison and arrogantly walk out as they wanted somebody else, or Miss De Havilland wanted somebody else – I seem to remember it was Greg Peck – to play my part.⁴⁷ I said somewhat testily to Schreiber that I had worked with the greatest living actors and actresses and they hadn't fussed about billing. So I stayed but with a little murder in my heart for Miss De H. The film, for some forgotten reason was delayed for 7 weeks and we lived in a small – large to us – duplex apartment on Charleville Boulevard. It was during those seven weeks that I started the hunt for Jean.⁴⁸ It didn't take long. What has this to do with Hungary? Well, eventually it will lead back to the loveable larcenous Sir Alex Korda. [...]

Tuesday 8th, Budapest We arrived yesterday at exactly 5pm [...] when I arrived a pimply bloke with a mike asked me why I had come to Budapest. I said 'You mean you don't know. I have come to do a film.' Yes please, he said, and what is the name of the film? 'Don't you read the papers?' I queried, and then, at a nudge and a look from E, added 'I have to do a film called Bluebeard.' 'What are you doing here Mrs Burton?' 'I am being Richard's wife' said E. End of interview. Budapest was shrouded in Danube damp, ghostlike like London sometimes and is still the same this morning. Pretty cold too, but the suite – The Presidential Suite of course – is about the best appointed of its kind I've ever seen anywhere.⁴⁹ It is enormous with an indoor garden and a massive balcony on which one could play tennis practically, certainly two games of table tennis. Additionally there is a heated indoor, glassed-in terrace. Two bedrooms, two bathrooms, a dining room, a largeish kitchen and enough space for all of E's clothes. Sensational. Its only drawback, which I shall try to rectify today is that at night the lights are so low powered that it is difficult to read. One has to sit directly under the lamps to read.

[...] There was much talk last night from Gianni, who is Jonah's half brother I swear, and Claudye about the recalcitrant intransigence of one of my ladies in the film. A lady I'd never heard of before this film called Joey Heatherton.⁵⁰ She has refused to work until her clothes which she wore in Paris and approved have all been re-done by someone other than Vicky who designed the first lot.⁵¹ She sounds a frump but I shall be interested to find out if she carries on when I'm around. The probability is that she's talentless and knows it and is therefore frightened and hides behind a defensive cloak of 'temperament'. Why couldn't they get a good actress? There are a lot about.

The Danube – certainly not blue in this London weather – lies beneath us. It is as wide as the Thames at Westminster at this point I would guess. Perhaps a little less though I am a hopeless judge of water distances. The far 'Buda' side is thick with ice floes which are moving almost imperceptibly down river. It must be cold up in them thar hills.

So far all the Hungarians I've met are very solemn though I did get our evening waiter to crack a somewhat pained smile. The tragedy of '56 must still be a giant sorrow. I shall get to know them better once I start work. Gaston says they are much nicer than the Jugs. That must be very nice indeed.

But back to Korda. As a result of the enormous success of the Rachel film and the one following it – a terrible thing called The Robe – Fox offered me a million dollars for 7 years for 7 films. It was only later that I found out that in addition to paying me a million they had – forced to because I was still under contract to Korda – paid him a 1/2 million on the side. A few years later, after I'd found this out, I went to have dinner with Alex in Millionaires' Row to which he had moved after living for years at Claridges taking his new wife with him. His brother had found a Canaletto and when I admired it Alex said, 'Enjoy it my boy, you paid for it.'⁵² The new wife incidentally after Alex died married a tall thin chap with an enormous nose, very lah-di-dah and possibly titled, and, poor thing, committed suicide a few years ago. She was very rich apparently, very beautiful certainly while Lah-di-dah married a quite dishy French Countess later.⁵³ I always think of him with great suspicion as a sort of murderer once removed. Quite unjustified I suppose.

[...] I am cunningly, stealthily, thief-in-the-nightly trying to make the ultimate personal sacrifice. Today I am smoking only with a filtered cigarette holder – I have forgotten twice out of ten cigs so far this morning – and after some days I shall try and cut down to after breakfast, then after 10, then 11, then 12 and so on. If my desire to do it is great enough I should succeed unless some catastrophe intervenes. But can I do it while working? [...] Yes, of course Richard, you can do anything if you try hard enough except certain things like running 100 yards in even time. [...]

Wednesday 9th, Duna, Budapest [...] I am as happy as a scientist until Tommy Thompson of Life magazine and Eddie Dmytryk came to chat. It was alright for a bit but they – particularly Tommy sated us by staying on and on and we finally didn't have our pörkölt until nearly 10 o'clock.⁵⁴

Both E and I did our going to bed exercises last night together. It is difficult to keep a straight face when she is doing her numbers as she goes at it with a solemn ferocity which is hilarious. It is especially droll when we do running on the spot as she has to hold her breasts – one hand on each – for firm as they are, really like a thirty-year-old's more than a nearly forty-year-old's, they are pretty big and the resultant wiggle-waggle would be pretty odd as well as bad for her. It's a very fetching sight and were it open to the public would fetch a lot of people. Like 10 million.

[...] yesterday I started out on the Hungarian language. It is the kind of potted grammar which I adore, somewhat like 'Hugo's' grammars, which have little vocabs and exercises at the end of each lesson with the answers in the back half, third, of the volume. And all my answers were alright. Since it is neither a slav or romance language the acquisition of the vocab alone is a formidable task. It has, the vocab, no association with anything I know.

I was up at 5.30 [...]. The bridges and the morning mist looked for all the world like a Whistler Nocturne except it was the Danube and not the Thames.⁵⁵

Apparently, according to Dmytryk, the girl Heatherton is as good as gold and the reason for her tantrums is simply nerves. To my surprise, on the other hand, they said that Raquel Welch is a monster of egoism and difficulty.⁵⁶ For some reason, not ever except by accident reading the show pages of the various newspapers and mags I had the impression she was a nice and very pretty somewhat bewildered Marilyn.⁵⁷ According to Tommy Thompson and Dmytryk she is an arch fiend. Everybody expects me to control her. How? My only defence against 'temperament' – though oddly enough I have ever hardly come across it – is to laugh and leave the set until everybody has cooled off. They expect me to awe her and frighten her into good behaviour. I have no intention of doing anything of the kind unless she really does behave boringly in which case I will turn all my ice-cold intellectual guns on her. [...]

To my delight I got very good reception from the BBC on my little Philips Radio [...] I've looked again and it's not a Philips it's something called a Grundig. Inevitably German of course. When I turned it on at 6 there was a discussion going on about pornography. It was curious that the attackers were all lah-di-dah and cut-glass and chiffon and very pukka while the defenders – those who sold and published porno and made and showed the films were all provincially, mostly educated cockney accented. The pro-pornos in fact sounded dirty and salacious while the others with their Oxford and 'County' accents sounded faintly disgusted that they had to talk about such things at all may deah. It sounded in fact so funny that it might quite easily have been the Goon Show boys of delicious memory doing a send-up.⁵⁸

E has been up, had a glass of grapefruit juice, read my last two entries, walked on the terrace and gone back to bed. [...]

Thursday 10th, Budapest I did not go to the studio at all yesterday. Elizabeth had to have a chat with Tommy Thompson of Life mag before her being snapped today by a very tall elegant – over elegant Englishman called Norman Parkinson (call me 'Parks' my dear) of whom neither of us had ever heard but who is apparently well known as a society photographer or something.⁵⁹ At least I presume so as he snapped Princess Anne for the same distinguished mag a month ago.⁶⁰ He reminded us separately and together that we had all met some years ago. [...] Thompson is a nice enough man but a bad interviewer so just as he was due I sloped off into the smaller of the two bedrooms to read while he interviewed.

[...] Today I have to work. There is but no question that I am the laziest actor in the world with the possible exception of Marlon. My first scene today is merely to sit in front of the stage at the 'Moulin Rouge' and show myself attracted by the – as yet – unknown Miss Heatherton. I go to work at 11.30 to be ready at 1pm. I am so much more interested in Volcano that when I do think about my work at all it is always for the time being at least something that's in the future and not what I am presently doing. It has always been the case in my case. At Oxford if Chaucer was our task for that term I read Shakespeare, if Shakespeare I read the Metaphysicals, if the Romantics I read Eliot and Pound.⁶¹ Yesterday I read – switching from one to t'other Smokin' Joe a book, very bad, about Frazier the current world heavyweight champ, a bit of Volcano and, in bed, Hag's Nook by Dr Fell, a John Dickson Carr whodunit.⁶² The script stared at me from the coffee table all day long. It is still staring at me so will stop staring back and attack it at last. [...]

Saturday 11th⁶³ [...] I read in the local German–English paper that Sarah Jane Todd, wife of Mike Junior, had died suddenly of a heart attack. Totally unfair as unfairness goes in this world. Never drank, never smoked, adored and lived for by her husband, 6 children the oldest of whom must be about 16–17. She died on Monday but we got the news today only. Also we have to wait until tonight or late this afternoon to attempt at least to call him. Helpless feeling all round. I hope, no cynicism intended that he gets married in a couple of years.⁶⁴ He's a very married type and since he chose well the first time he probably will the second. [...]

I worked yesterday. It involved me sitting in a box and looking at a girl dancer on the stage played by the hitherto anonymous Heatherton and with her looking uncertainly back up at maniac with the blue beard.

Heatherton seems unbelievably ordinary which might be good for the part. She has one of those one-on-every-street-corner blonde rather common and at the drop of an insult I'm sure vicious bitchy faces. However the film comes first and I will do what I can to help her be good, because if she ain't good we only have half a picture. Dmytryk is very little and very brisk and light-voiced and intelligent and pretends to knowledge that he doesn't really have or has forgotten. The girl said that she had never been so nervous in her life at meeting anyone and that she had worshipped me ever since, as a schoolgirl (she was careful to point out) she had seen me in Anger and – wait for it – Bramble Bush. The first put her up in my estimation, the second sank her without trace. [...] Talk is that she is having a ding-dong, as the vernacular goes, with Dmytryk. I wouldn't be at all surprised as however else did she get the part? I mean, who had heard of her? And Ann-Margret who is currently fashionable, having made a success in Mike Nichols' film Carnal Knowledge, had offered to play in Bluebeard.⁶⁵ [...]

I dwell on 'Joey' as she is yclept, as until I read the script again yesterday I had forgotten what an enormous part and opportunity it is and gives. Also I've got to learn to act this kind of Maria in the Red Barn melodrama.⁶⁶ It has to be done with immense tongue in cheek. I try to remember how the master – whassisname – Vincent Price plays it. [...] Even voiced, measured in speech, purposeful in movement with the occasional violence in voice and movement. Must be funny serious. Shall know the minute I begin how to do it I hope. [...]

Keep on thinking about poor Mike Junior. His mother died when young as E pointed out.⁶⁷ His father died shockingly in an air-crash and they were very great friends. His wife dies after a skiing holiday at 41 years old. Rough on the poor little sod. Must try and talk to him tonight. And he's such a nice man. [...]

Sunday 13th [...] Had a telegram yesterday saying that Jim Benton was in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital having a bad case of infectious hepatitis and since we had [been] in contact with him 10 days ago it was necessary for us to have a shot of Gamma Globulin – if that's the word I'm searching for as Bertie Wooster might say – an operation that I always dread ever since I had a mass of typhoid, tetanus, yellow fever, Gdang fever and other assorted shots to go to work in Morocco in 1964 and lo and behold – after being as sick as a dog for a week with each inoculatory disease as they took turns, and having to work at the same time at the Vic I suppose – we shot the film (Alex the Great) in Madrid – in and around Madrid – instead.⁶⁸ [...]

I worked, as 'twere, for the first time yesterday. That is to say I did a full scene with the girl and her partner though he had nary a word to say and it seems to be alright. She has a natural hardness that might become effective as she is the only lady of the 8 who manages to turn the tables on me and escape. I might enjoy this film and one of the ways is to work hard at it and not 'eef' it or 'wing' it as I had thought to do. First of all I can, I think, improve my dialogue by paraphrasing what they already have – I don't mean on the spot, waiting for the inspiration paraphrasing but pre-planned re-writing. Keeping it to myself and simply doing it when the time comes for I know that directors dearly love to 'kick it around a bit' when you suggest a change of dialogue. That can – and I'm pretty sure it applies to this man – mean a couple of wasted hours mucking about [...].

The minute people go away and leave E alone she is a different woman. She came to the studio yesterday afternoon and waited until the end and we went home together, and for the first time spent an evening together without interruption from anybody except the waiter who unfortunately will hang around while we eat and though I'm sure he is not trying to listen to our conversation or any of that kind of spies everywhere rubbish it is still uncomfortable. We smile and nod and say that will be fine thank you, we'll help ourselves from now on and though he understands English perfectly, nevertheless it is cribbing cabining and confining.⁶⁹ [...]

We had our shots and E's left a lump like a goose egg whereas mine left nothing at all except a lot of blood on my underpants and pyjamas. I forgot to tell the Doctor that I am a bleeder. Whatever will the laundry think. [...]

Monday 14th [...] I am still slowly persisting with the Lingua Magyar but it is not so sweet now as twas before and I had asked the young doctor who comes in now regularly – whether asked or not it seems – if he could spare five minutes, to record some ordinary phrases into my tape-recorder which he did and I thanked him but on playing it back I must have buggered up the device as he sounds as if he's speaking Turkish on a bad line from Istanbul via Vladivostok.⁷⁰ I shall try again. [...] I don't ask much. I want to be able to ask for food and drink in the native tongue, acquire the numbers and the monetary system, and learn like a parrot about a page about any given current topic and show off. If anybody replies, I shall revert to English or if there's nobody around to understand it, Welsh.

Saw last night many lovely snaps of E taken by Norman Parkinson who turns out to be a very amusing and nice man and, indeed, of the scores of photographs, only about 5 or 6 made E's face look a little full. He must be used again. Those old aristos – Beaton and Parkinson, really know what they're doing. I suddenly realized the difference in quality between a Parkinson or a Beaton and a Gianni Bozzacchi and his kind. Not a brush of touch-up is necessary. Partly by his lighting and mostly from E's having lost 8lbs or so I would say, the fullness of the chin – the underchin is never obtrusive.

He didn't make me look very fetching but I gather that he's not very good with gents. Anyway I've never been – at least not for 20 years or so – and am never likely to be the pin-up type. Too many excrescences and twisted bones. My hair is at last getting very thin though it still covers my whole scalp but when wet, soaking wet one can see its barrenness. Since it's such a bore to have Ron pencil in lines all over the place I think I might one of these days try one of those transplants. It won't be like those idiots who are really bald and on whom it is still obvious and I only need a few strands around the crown of the head. I don't think however that I will get a face lift like that abject Rod Steiger who not only admits to it but it makes him look like one half of a naked ass-hole.⁷¹ In addition to which, he says, he can't get any jobs and will soon be broke. It might be because people don't want to be looking at a talking ass-hole. Now there's a man who really has worked very hard at his job all his life and at last, when he got an Oscar a couple of years ago, everybody thought well now at last he's a 'STAR'.⁷² But he ain't and never was and never will be though with a harsh director he can still be very effective. He has the dreadful problem of believing himself to be a great actor – whatever that may be – and it shows in every thing he does. His Napoleon was merely silly.⁷³ Incidentally I sent off a telegram yesterday saying no to Nelson. Apart from the fact that Nelson bores me – unlike Napoleon – the film belongs to Lady Hamilton who if she's half a good actress will get an Oscar.⁷⁴ [...] The script is very able as usual as it comes from the fecund pen of Sir Terence Rattigan.⁷⁵ We really do have some very unlikely knights around nowadays. [...]

Tuesday 15th Started off in black and over-laid it in red. I am still as purely non-alcoholic as the scion of two AA's.⁷⁶

Pouring with rain this morning and it rained all day yesterday too. I wish someone would reprint that slim volume of Alun Lewis which contains the poem 'All day it has rained' and 'For Gweno' etc., a companion of my teens, when I was more poet than most, indeed the time when I read and acquired by familiarity the vast store of memorized and memorable verse that still lies here in my head.⁷⁷

[...] I awoke at 5 to 7 actually and did all my usual ablutions and exercised with the addition – very carefully for fear of my chipped base of spine and my tendency to lout gumbago and arturitis – Spooner and Mr Bindle – 10 sit ups the stomach muscles taking it very well.⁷⁸ I shall keep up twenty a day, 10 at night, 10 in the morning for a few days and see how it goes. Would like to work up to a hundred, 150, and lo those flat stomach muscles again. My stomach is flat at the moment but soft like a baby's. I wonder if I shall ever get those two parralel (still asleep) parallel ridges of vertical muscle that I used to pride myself on. Or am I now too old? [...] Yesterday I played organ (traditional for horror movies) while a hawk flew around – a falcon to be exact – and landed on my shouldders⁷⁹ (I really am only half awake) and a white cat streaked around. [...]

I work with 'Joey' again this day. She seems perfectly innocuous to me but everybody else seems to loathe her. She gets up to tantrums behind my back presumably that I never see. I must confess that she is about as stimulating an actress as the worst I've known but I keep on telling myself that it doesn't really matter. We can slide around her with cunning and girls in horror movies are always props after all. All they have to do is be pretty and dumb.

Am reading – at work – three books. In the upstairs dressing-room either Volcano or a novel by 'Hungary's greatest prose' writer Imre something and in the trailer and most fascinating a biog of Einstein.⁸⁰ At home it's a detective story in bed and a history of espionage in the Abwehr before during and slightly after the war.⁸¹ Interesting that one of the so-called master spies was a Welsh Nationalist xenophobe – especially anglophobe – called Owens.⁸² He is reputedly still alive. He is described as 'an excitable little Welshman' but he was a double spy used by the XX section of MI5 and the Germans. Some of the things he did were hair-raisingly courageous so he cannot have been all that excitable. I was told a long time ago that he was in South Ireland. I must try and seek him out. There might be a film on him as he reported to his German 'masters' that he had a whole ring of anglo-phobic Welshmen spying for him and therefore for them all around Britain including a former Chief Detective Inspector from Swansea. It could make a film and an odd one – perhaps even a funny one – as of course, the minute the Huns started out in earnest bashing us during the blitzes all the dissident malcontents in the Welsh Plaid Cymru turned double spies against their German friends. And deceived them throughout the war. A dirty game but fascinating nevertheless. [...]

Friday 19th⁸³ [...] I read a lot of the biography of Einstein and indeed to God began to think that – poetically at least – I was understanding the relativity of time and space but very much through a glass darkly. Then I had several 1½ hours of Wolf Mank and a man from the Jersey Islands who for some reason I didn't quite trust though he seemed nice enough.⁸⁴ I had no idea that the Channel Islands are so free of British rule and that they have their own tax laws. [...] Anyway if we do the Canterbury Tales there which I and E too probably will we might do worse than as twere case the joint as a possible home from home instead of Suisse. Geographically too I am moronic. I said the islands are midway in the channel or nearer France. Oh my God, he said, France of course – I frequently water ski there. Ah, said I. Dick Makewater was here too with the art director of Shrew or was it Anne who won an Oscar I think.⁸⁵ He is to direct. I wonder if he can. Wolfie was in one of his racier moods. ‘My gawd you look smashing’, he said, ‘what’s happened to you?’ ‘Dunno,’ I said ‘it can’t be the loss of weight at I was this same weight approximately when we last saw each other in Bosnia.’ ‘Yeah I know,’ he said, ‘but you look more smashing, somethin’s happened to you.’ He kept on about it. [...] Anyway I said it was ‘exercise’. ‘Aw Chraist,’ he said, ‘I can never do anything physical for myself and to myself that I can imagine better.’ He was at his most engagingly cockney and obviously adored Elizabeth who reciprocated and said, ‘Now that’s the kind of man I could love if you weren’t around, I adore him.’ ‘Bloody daft thing to say,’ I said, hurting. But good taste all the same I thought. Wolfie always looks hooded eyed and desperate and is always being hounded by some ‘bird’. ‘They’re all fackin nuisances, they want to possess a man body and soul, won’t leave you alone. Nasty dirty bastards. Hate the cunts.’ Except Elizabeth apparently to whom he paid court all evening. There is always an oddity about people’s preferences for types. I’ve always lusted for medium height dark haired Jewesses, or those who could be first racial cousins. Elizabeth has always fancied Jews period. She seems to have a rapport with them which she doesn’t have with the ordinary Anglo Saxon. She and Wolf could obviously have talked all night. And about all kinds of things. They touched lightly on Wedgwood for instance last night [...].⁸⁶ And it has nothing to do – in E’s case – with male beauty for Wolf is a mess, about my height with a great pendulous belly that is big enough to turn after the rest of his body has turned, double chinned, grubby looking without being unclean. But his mind is astringent. There is no shit about him and he is a renaissance man. He opens shop to sell Wedgwood having first made himself an expert on the subject, writing a lavishly illustrated book to prove his own provenance as an expert and then – as he just has – sold the shops owned by his sister and himself for half a million nicker tax free capital fackin gain. And who to, d’yer think? Fackin Wedgwood that’s who.⁸⁷ He has now started or resurrected a small private printing press in Cork or Dublin – anyway in Eire somewhere – and his first publication is a book of his own poems.⁸⁸ Now he wants me to write for them. Anything he says, ‘rondeaux, frigging triolets, belles lettres, the story of your life, graffiti, anything you like old mate.’ He is superlatively intelligent with a considerable smattering of the poet about him. [...]

Saturday 20th⁸⁸ [...] Curious note: I sent a ‘gram to Arthur Koestler (Darkness

at Noon, a marvellous 3 volume autobiography and the latest Case of the Midnight Toad) expressing admiration for his work and asking him to come to the party with ulterior motive of possibility of film from Midnight Toad.⁹⁰ His reply said something like 'would love to come but climate there unhealthy for me. Happy 30th birthday to your wife.'⁹¹ I am most surprised that he is still persona non grata after all these years. I wonder if he's melodramatizing the whole situation. After all, he reneged from the Party something like 35 years ago.⁹² [...] The greatest monsters to the Jugoslavs were their former tyrannical Royalty and we heard from Tito himself that there was no objection to Elisheba coming back and at the Proust Ball I met Elisheba's (uncle)? cousin(?) who would be king were there a throne there to sit on and he told me that he'd been back as a tourist once and as a business man another time and everybody treated him with great bonhomie.⁹³ That's of course Jugland which is far more liberal than a Russian-run Hungary. Still, since Darkness at Noon Koestler has been harmless to them.⁹⁴ And even that, as I remember, didn't specify any particular country though it was obviously a Communist one. [...] Also, of course, I'm not sure how much pamphleteering Koestler has been up to through the years. It will be interesting to find out, for instance, if he's been read here at all since he changed colours. [...]

I did a longish scene with the girl yesterday and it seemed to go alright. This film might be amusant after all.

E came in to the room for a half hour or so and has gone back to bed to read a script that I might do. It's Sir, you bastard and I want to find out if she understands it as I think it might be confusing unless, like me, you have read the book first. [...]

Saturday 26th A day of enormous excitement for all. Some 80 odd or so people arrived at various times of the day for the big weekend.⁹⁵ Chief pleasures were of course the families – mine and Elizabeth's or should I say rather ours and ours. The next were Grace who again qualified for five stars and Nevill Coghill and Spender and Mrs Ladas and Simon and Sheran. What exquisite manners they all have in their very different ways. I taught all the girls to curtsy and all the lads how to do a proper hand-shake with Royalty and each by each and one by one they all performed admirably. We had a cocktail party in our suite – hastily rearranged for the purpose – which went with a swing – at least the last reluctant group left at about midnight with Howard Mara and kids staying until the end as it was the only chance we had of talking properly to them. I had several clec-clecs with my lot in one of their rooms.⁹⁶ I took wee Maria along – not so wee, she is a very tall girl – and introduced her to her 1000s of heretofore unknown and un-met aunts and uncles and, completely forgetting, we went babbling on in Welsh until we suddenly all realized that Maria was completely bewildered. She had been told by me of course many times that certain percentages of Welshmen spoke a tongue entirely alien to English but I don't think, until she heard us all at it last night, that she realized quite how alien it actually was. I think that vaguely she thought it was the equivalent of an Irish brogue or a Highland Scottish. The family adored her of course because she looked so like Kate. In fact Will Cross-eyes and a couple of the others thought she was Kate.⁹⁷ There is superficially a fleeting resemblance. Round face, cherubic cheeks, same colouring. The family were in tremendous form – Tom at 71 being the dynamo. The flight was as smooth as silk and was a particular thrill for Verdun who had, to my astonishment, never been in an aeroplane in his life and a jet at that. That alone has been sufficient excitement for him. They, with their still retained sense of wonder, were bowled over by everything. The very bathrooms, the fact that there was a bar in each room the view of the legendary Danube, the meetings with Elizabeth and of course Grace were high points. Both E and Grace behaved superbly. [...] Little Mickey Caine had flown from LA with one of his exquisite 'birds', a Marlon Brando Asiatic as usual, and How and Mar and my lovely Layton and the equally lovely Chris and Aileen had come almost exactly half way around the world and are going to be a trifle jet-lagged today and tomorrow I would guess but the parties will keep them going.⁹⁸ Victor Spinetti and boyfriend were, are here, and Ringo and wife and Susannah York and Mick and Liz and Brook and Grace's Lady-in-waiting a certain Mme Aurelli, Professor Warner and a lady –possibly his inamorata – called Anna Something, and Doris Brynner and Bettina and Marie Lou Tolo (one of the girls in the film), Yves Le Tourneur and wife, Vanhattan of Van Cleef – Cartiers NY I mean – Hebe Dorsey, Vicky Berkeley complete with Ron, Billy Williams and wife (Williams is the great cameraman who shot XYZ) and our very own Chris and Liza who gave me thunderous good night kisses several to each side of the face and Kurt Frings, John Springer and too many to recount them all.⁹⁹ Frings went into business as usual and after extracting a promise from me that I would not throw him into the Danube said that the Lerner–Loewe–Donen consortium were still desperate for me to play Little Prince. [...] He also said that representing E and I was the greatest experience of his life and that we didn't realize what magic our names were and that after XYZ E is hotter or as hot as she's ever been. And that the respect and even awe at the mention of our names in meetings is quite extraordinary, that he has been in the business forty years and that [the] plural noun 'Burtons' is almost synonymous with Royalty. Another incidental exchange in the brouhaha of the party was then Francis Warner said he would like to see me alone for $\frac{1}{2}$ an hour or so today and I said I would call him as soon as I arrived back from the Studio. I didn't ask him what specifically about but he was obviously bursting to tell me and said something very quickly and in tone of espionage. 'Fellowship at Oxford'. I am intrigued. It could be a step towards a D.Litt., which is the only honour I really covet.¹⁰⁰ [...]

The world press is here in droves. From everywhere. Literally, it seems. Japanese, India, as well as every other place you can think of in the western hemisphere. I think I will have to talk to them today – perhaps en masse. Dread of dreads and hell's damnation.¹⁰¹

The brothers (and their women too for that matter) are agog about the Welsh rugby team of the last three years and have bought 16mm copies of 'highlights' of the All Blacks and various other games. Shall try and watch it all this afternoon while everyone else is kipping.

Graham got very sloshed very quickly. I had to pull him up once after having heard him introduce Ringo Starr and wife four times to Howard and Mara with a 'D'you know my brother-in-law Howard, these are friends of mine called Starkie.' The latter is Ringo's real name and the joke once is ok.¹⁰² Twice it's tedious. Three times it's rude. He is, poor boy very very star-struck. But lovely with it. S. Spender is anxious to talk to me too. I wonder what about. What is the Cause?

Monday 28th February 1972 Budapest Merely to record that I missed yesterday's entry out of sheer inability to get down to the job. The apartment seemed eternally full of various people from time to time on Saturday and again yesterday.

[...] Grace came to dinner last night just with Howard and Mara and us. I had three slices of layer cake and ice-cream and was so tired that I was to all intents and purposes drunk. As a matter of fact I did not have one single drink through all the endless weekend though it did cross my mind at one moment when my fatigue was so great that I could not think of another way to go. However I didn't succumb and just as well. A drunken me as well as a tired me would have been too much and possibly disastrous. The news is just about on. I have turned it off. The usual stuff. Nixon home claiming to have made no secret deal with

China.¹⁰³ A protest march in Paris (including Simone de Beauvoir) re the shooting of a picketing striker at the Renault car factory.¹⁰⁴ They carried pictures of the dead man.

Francis Warner intimated at more than a fellowship but a doctorate and KBE.¹⁰⁵ We shall see. [...] I don't know what to do about Little Prince. I think I'd better listen to the tapes and decide for myself whether I can do it. [...]

The party was a huge success. That means four parties – the cocktail party when we arrived, the cellar party, the brunch party next day and the posh party at night. All apart from a nasty incident with Alan Williams at the cellar party went without a hitch.¹⁰⁶ There was a press conference which went alright. I had to do it alone. [...] I saw a couple of hours of Welsh and Lions rugby on 16mm and by god they were really good.

Both Grace and E turned out first class jobs, both looking pretty with E – at the last party particularly – looking absolutely dazzling. Raquel Welch arrived. She is very pretty though a trifle hard faced. I recounted our conversations to E who said 'She was making a pass at you.' I protested but E was adamant. [...] Stephen Spender gave me – or rather – us a volume of his latest verse and I gave him a cheque for £1000 and a promise to write an article for the magazine which will keep the world informed as to where the behind-the-iron-curtain writers are imprisoned so that they will at least know that the rest of the world knows that we know where they are and in some way we must let the incarcerated know that their names live on the lips and in the pen and ink of caring people outside their lands.¹⁰⁷

[...] The weekend was an undoubted success. I am sure that were it not for the fantastic exuberance of my family that it would not have been half so good. They seemed to relax everybody and nobody has ever seen Grace let her hair down – literally and figuratively – as much as Grace. Her lady-in-waiting too a Mme Aurelia was a ball of fire. Grace confesses that she never knew she had it in her. She danced wild Hungarian dances and at one time as I was sitting in a booth with Frankie Howerd Susannah York and husband and Ladas and Spender the rest of the party swept past us doing the conga.¹⁰⁸ I was goggleeyed. Led by the family the whole thing passed before our eyes with Grace in the middle of it all. Unbelievable.

MARCH

Wednesday 1st, Budapest [...] St David's Day and they're all going to school in

Wales bearing daffodils and leeks and there will be singing in the Assembly Hall and competitions and a great many will get drunk tonight except me of course.¹⁰⁹ [...]

It was nightmarish yesterday going into work and finding, as I walked on the set that the scene was yet another party, dinner jackets and ladies in evening dresses. For a second I thought that I was doomed to parties for the rest of my life. [...] I talked to Aaron and at last we have decided to return to England and pay our taxes. I also – they have come back to me with a bang – finally and irrevocably turned down Petit Prince. So my next definite stint is Volcano.

We have asked Simon and Sheran to look for a place near theirs and not too far from Oxford with plenty of ground to keep a horse or two and a large dog or two, so that I can nip in to Oxford when I feel like it.

I have to send telegrams etc. this morning setting the wheels turning for the return to England. We shall do our damndest not to winter there though we shall pay the taxes.

Wednesday 15th It is our eighth wedding anniversary. By some standards that is nothing. By others it's a monumental achievement. During that time too we have the rare distinction – in our business – of having been faithful to each other and for three years approx before that. So it's unofficially 11 years.¹¹⁰ And where do we think we shall celebrate tonight – in a small cafe, tete-a-tete, eyes misting over with memories, our favourite tunes playing on a gypsy violin, dancing cheek to cheek, alone together in a crowd. Ah no. We have something far better than that. We are going to be at the British Bloody embassy with their excellent bores the ambassador and dress.¹¹¹ A silly mistake on our parts and not to be repeated.

[...] E had bought me a score or more of books, many crazy pens and pencils, a mug for tea drinking – reputedly 150 years old – the perfect size. And an Art Nouveau picture frame, a small one for a desk. I have nothing for E except my presence.

E adores occasions. Wedding anniversaries, birthdays, Xmas, Thanksgiving etc. I loathe them except for personal things like the anniversaries. But commercialized things like Xmas and Mother's day and Father's day (yet) and so on give me a royal pain in the ass.

[...] Wish we didn't have to go out to the Embassy, especially as they think of actors and actresses as just so many clowns. Envyng them just the same. Some ambassadors are very good company but they are few and far between. Some are even intelligent. I can't remember what this feller was like. Nothing stunning or I would have remembered him from the birthday party. A little gentle sending up is called for I think. After all, it's not their fault that they happened to ask us on our anniversary and it is my fault that I had forgotten that it was until too late. [...]

Thursday 23rd, Dorchester Hotel Back again to the somewhat dilapidated Dorchester in one of those horrible non-suites.¹¹² We flew from Budapest around 6pm and arrived about 8. [...]

We went straight to 2 Squires Mount where there were a great many people including Tom and Hyral, Will and son, Graham and son, Menna and husband, Wendy and Derek but no Cassie, Dai, Hilda, our Dai and Betty or Cis and Elfed.¹¹³ They'll be alright and all there today. I am looking forward to being on the plane tomorrow morning though but not looking forward to Pest.

Sweet Liza is here which makes up for a great deal of the pain.

I don't think E should stay very long. She will go mad with boredom, for Gwen, much as I adore her, is not exactly a laugh a minute.

I couldn't sleep at all last night and feel like taking a swift kip now which would be catastrophic. Oh, that lovely Janine was there. Paul is apparently able to walk with the aid of crutches.¹¹⁴

Very warm. By English standards a heat wave. Too lazy to write more.

MARCH 1972–APRIL 1975

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1972 diary in late March. For over three years he appears not to have made any attempt to maintain his personal record.

After Ivor's funeral Richard seemed to go into a deep depression. This was manifested both in a return to heavy drinking and in a cavalier attitude towards his marriage to Elizabeth. By May he may have been unfaithful, having affairs with some of his co-stars in Bluebeard, including Nathalie Delon. Elizabeth responded by being seen in public with Aristotle Onassis. Burton and Taylor spent an increasing amount of time apart: he had to return to Yugoslavia and to The Battle of Sutjeska while she made Night Watch in London. Burton did spend some time at St Peter's College, Oxford, but his plan to write a micro-history based on the Peregrina Pearl was not executed. Richard and Elizabeth teamed up once more in the autumn of 1972 to make the double TV film for Harlech Television Divorce His, Divorce Hers, shot in Rome and Munich. This was an unhappy experience and, again, did nothing for their critical reputation when it was broadcast the following year.

The year 1973 opened with Richard once more in Rome, making Massacre in Rome, while Elizabeth filmed Ash Wednesday in Treviso and in the ski resort of Cortina d'Ampezzo. By the summer the rift between them was serious. An attempt at reconciliation in New York failed and on 3 July 1973 their separation was announced. Elizabeth went to Beverly Hills, where she began a relationship with businessman Henry Wynberg. Richard initially based himself at Aaron Frosch's home at Quogue, Long Island, and then returned to Italy to start work on The Voyage, co-starring alongside Sophia Loren. Loren and her husband Carlo Ponti (who had produced Massacre in Rome) hosted him at their estate near Marino, where he was visited by Elizabeth in late July, but any attempt at reconciliation was short-lived. Divorce papers began to be drafted.

While filming The Voyage in Sicily in November, Richard learned that Elizabeth had been taken into hospital in Los Angeles, and he flew to California to be with her. Upon her recovery Elizabeth visited Richard in Naples, and over the following weeks they spent time together in New York, Hawaii and then in Gstaad. Early in 1974 they were together in Puerto Vallarta, and in March Richard began working on The Klansman in Oroville, near Sacramento, California. His disintegration was becoming a public spectacle, and rumours of liaisons with young women were widespread. In April he was taken into St John's Hospital in Santa Monica in order to 'dry out'. Elizabeth filed for divorce and this was granted at Saanen in Switzerland on 26 June 1974.

A single man for the first time in more than a quarter of a century Richard left hospital and sailed to Europe, staying for a while at his home in Céligny before travelling to Winchester to work alongside Sophia Loren once more in Brief Encounter. In October 1974 he became engaged to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia (herself married to Neil Balfour), and began work on a drama-documentary about Winston Churchill – titled The Gathering Storm / Walk with Destiny. A public furore followed the appearance of two articles by Burton in the New York Times and the American TV Guide, both of which were unrestrained in their attack on the former British Prime Minister. Shortly afterwards Richard's relationship with Princess Elizabeth collapsed, Burton having begun seeing Jeanne Bell, an African-American actor and former Playboy centrefold, whom he had first met on the set of The Klansman.

At the beginning of 1975 Burton, along with Bell (1943—), Charlotte Rampling and James Coburn, started filming Jackpot in Nice, but this project remained unfinished owing to financial difficulties. Burton returned to Céligny with Bell, and again took up his pen.

1972

JANUARY

Friday 28th, Phoenix¹ Yesterday we went to Sara's house for lunch and for the last time, thank God. It was the first time for me to see the place in daylight and it could be a very pleasant little abode were some money and taste expended on it. Sara's brother (80 next September) and his wife were there. He is a thin spare man with marvellous high Indian-looking cheek bones and Howard said of him: If you dip him in a barrel of salt water – clothes and all – then put him out in the sun to dry, he might approximate to looking like Sam. Sam was the pioneering adored grandfather.² [...]

Last night I had a unique experience – for me that is. I went to have dinner with the Voldengs in the swankest country club in Phoenix, or the richest, or both. However, the uniqueness was that I discovered towards the end of the dinner that the Club was restricted to gentiles only. NO JEWS ALLOWED. Mary Frances told me so.³ She said that they, the Club, had told them, the Jews that there are just too many of you and before long you'll be running the place so why don't you form a club of your own. I was flabbergasted. I should have immediately announced this to the rest of the family and we would have undoubtedly swept out en masse. However I thought of Sara and that the only reason why we were dining with the Voldengs was to get her out as easily and unrancorously as possible, but I simply couldn't sit there and say nothing. She promptly gave me an opportunity to salvage my conscience as she said with twinkling glee 'And do you know Richard they ran into financial difficulties and had to appeal to us gentiles for help. What about that!' I swooped. 'How strange to hear that,' I said, 'our lot doesn't usually get into that kind of difficulty.' She took the blow with an air of not knowing quite whether I was making a little British joke or not. I now laid it on. 'Elizabeth, as you obviously don't know is a convert to Judaism and our daughter is of course a Jewess and my grandfather was a Jew'. She was helpless. She said 'Yes' but it had several additional vowels in it, impossible to write down but it was something like 'Yeaaeahowes.'

To reiterate here the platitudinous idiocies of their conversation would be

tedious. E and I and Howard and Mara had gone there knowing what to expect but so exactly did they react to any given suggestion that they were little different from Pavlovian dogs. One rang the bell of this idea and they tolled the precisely expected answer. To the very anticipated word. We all agreed afterwards that they were so brain-washed that nothing, no argument, no appeal to intelligence, could possibly change them. For instance, and only one example will I give, Dr Voldeng said that the thing that had made this country great was that it was a melting pot for all the peoples of the world. Yawn. Yawn. But they had just said that Jews were not allowed in their club! There was therefore absolutely no point in asking about the blacks.

We reduced ourselves to hysteria in the course of the post mortem in our suite but under it all we were sick at heart. [...]

Saturday 29th, Beverly Hills Hotel An eventful day. One of those that despite much incident manage to be tedious. We left Phoenix at 2.14 in the GS2 [...] and we took 45 minutes to get to Air Research airport.⁴ There, there was a hell of a problem with Sara who refused to lie down in the ambulance. I said I would ride with her if she would lie down but she wouldn't so I snapped off smartly into the Cadillac. She tried to get Howard and E to ride with her [...] but H nipped off as smartly as I and joined me in the car – then tore back to the ambulance which still refused to leave, grabbed E and brought her back and finally [...] we were under way. We arrived in the underground garage and I fled fast to the safety of Bungalow 5. The others came swiftly afterwards. Howard and E were already somewhat sloshed by this time but only my experienced eye could tell while Mara was trying to catch up. Howard and Mara told me that they never have a drink until the evening when they're at home and I know E barely has a drink before 6pm normally but seeing and being around Sara, said Howard, drink was the only defence. Yes sir. My way out was to eat ten lbs of chocolates and liquorice etc. washed down with many cups of tea. By about 8 o' clock at night all three were pixilated [...].

At one time Paul Newman came in and Howard and Mara carried on talking as if he was not there. I asked him what he was doing in town and he said he was there to see John Huston. 'Oh, I know him,' said Mara, 'he came to Kuwaii once. He's got a patch over his eye and he's a film producer or something.' 'No,' says I, 'you're thinking of John Ford.'⁵ That's right, she said. Sometimes I wonder whether Mara's defence mechanism against being impressed when she meets a famous and very distinguished man like Newman is a pretence of ignorance about all things filmic. She sees more films in three months than I see in ten years so it can't be ignorance. Paul is what I call a real actor. A nice man, extraordinarily youthful looking with a complexion so peaches and cream that at first I thought he had make-up on. Every move he makes is like one practising – with no need to look any more – in front of a mirror. I don't mean that unkindly. He doesn't even know he's doing it. He is a keep fit fanatic and my God the results are remarkable. He must be at least my age and yet with a little care around the eyes and a dye-job on the hair he could still pass for 24 or so.⁶ I would hate to look like him. I did once before acne re-mapped my face and I hated it. I abhor mere prettiness.

Voldeng, while we were on the plane, quite blatantly asked E if she would contribute $5000 to the Orchestral Fund of Phoenix. E, caught in a corner said OK. In a minute he was sitting next to me in the rear compartment where he asked me the same. I said that we gave a considerable amount to charities but only with great suspicion and only to the lame and [...] the blind and the retarded etc. but that I would ask Aaron if it were possible to make an exception. I have no intention of giving $5000 to a group of anti-semitic idiots. What appalling effrontery.

I did something this morning which gave me immense satisfaction. I took the two dogs for a run on the lawns in front of the bungalows. [...] Suddenly I was aware that I was being shadowed from tree to bush to tree by some idiot photographer who fondly believed that I couldn't see him. I started to throw the ball harder and harder, followed by new friend. Suddenly I whirled and with all my strength threw the rubber ball with a baseball pitcher's action straight at the snapper hoping to hit the camera, instead of which I hit him square in the middle of his forehead. It's quite a heavy hard rubber ball with a bell inside it. It was only later that I realized that I could have taken his eye out if I'd hit him there and that if I'd missed I would have had to suffer the ignominy of having to cross the road to retrieve the ball. He said nothing but stared at me with under-privileged hatred. I stared back and said 'you're on private property, get off it.' He left.

Sunday 30th We ran XYZ yesterday afternoon and though I'd seen the film twice before (once a rough cut) and had seen sections of it ¹/₂ a dozen times I was still fascinated, though not so much when E was off-screen. There are always little subtleties in E's performance to be discovered anew whereas Caine and the girl are always carefully studied but obvious. What is that girl's name?⁷ [...] I went to bed at 10.30 or thereabouts simply not being able to keep awake. [...] I awoke slightly in the middle of the night to find E snoring gently [...] and tipped her chin to stop her. She stopped.

Kurt Frings and his vapid little girlfriend came to the film and Alex Lucas and his wife (?) very very nervous girl Rex Kennamer (who again got pissed) and of course Sara and the two nurses and Jim and George. Half – more than half – the audience were seeing it for the first time and we at last got some idea of where the laughs come. I'm afraid that we have made a mistake with Frings. I cannot bring myself to like that man. He is monumentally ill-mannered and thick as a trunk. All he had to say about the film was that he wished that Maggie Leighton had a bigger part. Rex was staggering about with either drink or pot and endlessly cornered me (and before me Elizabeth) saying equally endlessly 'I know John Q Public better than you or Frings or anybody in the business. I listen to those old ladies talking and they say, "Is Liz Taylor really really beautiful?" and I think your John Springer should run a campaign saying, "Go and see the most beautiful woman in the world at her most beautiful," because these old ladies say, "you know, is she really beautiful or has she got old and fat," and I'm telling you Richard this is the most ravishing I've ever seen Elizabeth and I've seen everything she's ever done. You've gotta get Springer to do this because I know my John Q Public and I know them better than ...' He doesn't know his John Q Public. Nobody does. If the film is a hit it's a hit and if it's a flop it's a flop and nobody can persuade John Q to go or not go by a piece of advertising. The most important advertisement in the business is unbuyable and it's called Word of Mouth. We shall not know for about three weeks whether – in the USA – we have a hit or a miss. I have an idea that the film will be immensely successful with sophisticated audiences but the hick may still be puzzled by the ending. Say and write what you will the small townner, the uneducated sticks, still don't know about lesbians. Howard and Mara Jim and George Alex Lucas know all about it and appreciated the ultimate horrendous trick that Zee plays but I can't see my brothers and sisters getting it. They'll just think that Zee has said something awful to Stella and be frustrated at not knowing what.⁸ I may have underestimated the spread of sexual knowledge – God knows the papers never stop writing about sex and its aberrations – but I don't think so.

Mara and E came into the bedroom last night when they all got back from Sara's bungalow with some tale about the condescending rudeness of the room service manager as they had waited for over an hour for the food to come [...] I wasn't sure of what exactly went on. I'll get it straightened out this morning. [...]

Once the waiters get their knives into you you might as well pack up and move to another hotel because they can make your life very uncomfortable. They can forget the sauce for the steak and the dressing for the salad and a million little inconveniences and since Sara relies on the room service to an unprecedented degree the waiters must be kept sweet. [...] I remember Ivor and I once in the Negresco being so fed up with the lousy waiter's lousy service combined with a 'fuck you' attitude that Ivor poured a bowl of chips over his head and while he was shouting and bawling I sketched him with a carafe of water.⁹ We had the police an' all. Syb was pregnant with Kate at the time and while I had been at work apparently this waiter had been giving Gwen and Syb a rough time because they spoke no French and he didn't know who they were. Just two plain ladies from Wales I suppose he thought they were. We sorted him out alright. He was fired by the management for calling the police but, having withdrawn his charges I – against everybody's will – insisted that he was reinstated and that he continued to serve our suite. He became devoted to everybody and indeed used to send us postcards for a time until, not getting any back, he fell away.

Edie Goetz came with Mr and Mrs Arthur Hornblow to visit us last night at about 7.15.¹⁰ The Hornblows left after half an hour [...] Edie stayed on. She looked alive and very well kept though she had on a pair of frightful eyelashes. [...] She, surprisingly to E and I both, boasted about the cost of her sable coat. It's Crown Sable she said and added $10,000 to the bill. After she left we both said how much we liked her whereupon Rex Kennamer, soberer now than he had been, began to attack her. It was all-embracing in its viciousness. He wouldn't allow her a single virtue. He said she thought of nothing but money and herself. That neither she nor Bill had ever given a penny to charity and that he had seen them stand up at fund-raising dinners and pledge money and then dishonour the pledge. That she has a daughter who has been desperately ill for two years and to whom she has given nothing except porcelain vases with potted plants inside, and that the girl is married to a not very successful agent and she needs money for hospital bills here are astronomical and don't we know that, and that she has fought for years to be LA's top hostess but has been out-ranked, flanked and buggered-up by a Mrs May (of May Company) who gives copiously to hospitals and was the force behind the building of the huge new cultural centre, and that she is obsessed by Frank Sinatra who, said Rex, pointing to his temples, is a sick man and if Frank ever drops her she will kill herself and that her obsession with Sinatra had made the last few years of her husband's life a torment as Frank had done a film for Goetz called Capture of Queen or something and that Frank had behaved so atrociously that he quadrupled the cost of the picture which was a majestic flop and he would normally never have had anything to do with Sinatra ever again but Edie ignored him and became Frank's slave despite Bill's protestations and so on and on and on.¹¹ [...] I said rather feebly [...] that she had always seemed very nice to me. If I'd had a few argumentative drinks I would have challenged Rex all along the line but I decided he was drunk and therefore not a compos opponent. I shall ask him again when he is more measured in judgement. It was all fascinating – particularly the social aspect and it all seems so second class compared with Parisian society. Christ I'm a snob! How about, as they say, that?

Monday 31st 8am and we've all been up since 7 to see off Howard and Mara who have a pleasant 5 hour journey to Hawaii while we have an unpleasant 5 hours to NY on Wednesday and an equally unpleasant 7–8–9 hours to Rome the following day. [...] We went to see a James Bond film yesterday afternoon [...] called Diamonds are Forever which was good fun but surprisingly ill-acted and amateurish.¹² There are some good sequences – notably a car chase – but the plot, which as far as I can remember has nothing to do with the original, is very silly indeed.¹³ It makes Eagles [...] look realistic by comparison. Sean has got potty and now really looks like a miner going to seed.¹⁴ Which he is. [...] His Scots accent was more pronounced than ever – perhaps deliberately – perhaps indicating Home Rule for Scotland. He has become a devout nationalist. Anyway it was all good clean fun.

[...] I cannot make up my mind about Mara. One thing I'm certain of and that is that I couldn't live with her for more than two days. If one could only gag her it would be alright. E tells me how her father told her that he had long ago tuned off whenever her mother talked. Howard goes at it the other way. When Mara talks he talks, but louder, and the shriller she gets the more thunderous he becomes. I'm beginning to doubt whether they've had a proper conversation together for twenty years. In fact I can't imagine them having an ordinary chat as we have. The point about Mara is: is she stupid or not? Don't know. Is she silly or nasty or not? Don't know. If it were not for Howard I am pretty certain that E and I would make bloody certain that we were never in the same place as that most uncomfortable woman ever again. And it is not that I dislike her, it is simply that her manner and the content of her observations on life are so tremendously BORING. To the point of screaming. If only she could acquire the virtue of silence or force herself to listen when somebody anybody else is talking, she might be tolerable. There have been times when I longed to say ‘shut your bloody trap for just 15 minutes, only 15 little minutes, while Howard talks or Elizabeth finishes that story’. She also has the most unfortunate accent and intonation. Sometimes I have – in the past week – asked her a direct question and listened to the answer and have realized after 10 minutes that I haven’t known what she’s been saying for the past five. My mind has wandered off. Some teachers and lecturers and most pulpit preachers were like that. That’s the criminal thing about having children – they keep incompatible people together. I believe that I heard vaguely that Howard took off once with another woman maybe, or just took off. I bet that he would never have gone back were it not for the children. The same with Francis too, I guess. There must have been a time, before he got too old, when he wanted out. It’s funny that both father and son married two non-stop talkers. You’d think that Howard would have chosen a quiet woman for a partner after a lifetime of Sara’s endless gabble but he chose a lady who could if anything out-talk Sara. [...]

I’ve had a bellyful of the USA already and am ripe to go back to Europe though I will doubtless regret that after a few days behind the curtain and be lusting for the States again. Phoenix was a tremendous disappointment. I had a totally different picture of it in my mind. And I had no idea that it was such a huge city. I thought in terms of a 150,000 and not a million population as it is. When we left it we could see its great sprawl and there was the unmistakable smog. I had visions of Norman Rockwell far west with local drugstores and shops on the corner and the Town Hall with a church and a square and a drugstore and all that Andy Hardy stuff.

I talked to Kate last night. She sounded flip and cocky and I soon found out that the reason for that was that there was a girlfriend there so a little showing-off was going on. We will probably see her on Wednesday [...].

FEBRUARY

Tuesday 1st, Los Angeles A nice day yesterday. Howard and Mara arrived safely and I read and wrote practically all day long. The only cessation was in the afternoon when I talked with McWhorter and later with Alex Lucas. The first about the Canterbury Tales and the second about Hammersmith.¹⁵ The former says he has three millions to do the former and the latter wants to get some control of Hammersmith. Good luck to both.

I popped up for about 15 minutes to see Sara with Elizabeth. The lady is still bonkers without any question. The entire bungalow apart from Sara's bedroom and sitting room [...] is stacked to the ceilings with bric a brac in boxes. And what rubbish! E found a packing case that appeared to contain nothing but tin-foil TV dinner plates [...]. Staggering idiocy. When E remonstrated with her about this she burst into large and, if E knows her, crocodile tears. [...] I told E last night that we must regard her as if she were a child of 10 years old and a very spoiled one. She must do what we – her parents say – and not what she whimsically feels like doing. [...] Val says that Robbie is weaving a web – his own words – around Sara to get her back to Phoenix. Well, in the immortal words of Zee, Scarlett, I couldn't give a sheeit.¹⁶ [...]

Wednesday 2nd, Beverly Hills Hotel [...] We leave at 11 for NY and tomorrow night we leave NY for Rome in the evening. So we haul our indifferent bodies from yet one more continent to another. In a few days we shall be in Budapest and I am agog with curiosity. What will Hungary be like? It is impossible to find any literature on modern Hungary. Only a Fodor travel book which is hopeless and stops at '56. Will try again in NY. I can't believe that there is so little stuff about a famous modern state. Lack of interest must be the answer. Books on the impenetrable Red Chinese are all over the stalls, two of which I bought yesterday together with $150 worth of other books, mostly paperbacks with at least half being whodunits for the long stay in Budapest. The Cadogan diaries, the closing circle, the something foxes – highly recommended tome on international espionage – ecological books.¹⁷ Barbara Tuchman's Stilwell and the American experience in China or some such title and a mass of Simenons and Creaseys and Helen Macguiness and A. A. Fairs and godknows what other readable rubbish.¹⁸ But I guess that if there's so little about Hungary outside the country there'll be little about the West inside Hungary and without books of some kind E and I pine.

The one possible pleasure of the journey is that we may get a few hours of Kate in NY if Aaron can spring her from school for tomorrow. [...]

I am getting nearer and nearer to an attempt to give up cigarettes, not out of fear of cancer but simply because a) it's a filthy habit and b) I want to try and prove to myself that – as with booze – I am Henley and the master of my fate etc.¹⁹ As for the fear of cancer I am one of those who believes they will either have found a cure by the time I get it or that, like my heavily smoking father, I won't get it at all but die like him at 83 of a stroke. I am determined to do it and will decide, after a suitable time period not yet decided precisely whether the effort is worth it. With alcohol it unquestionably is. [...]

Both of us are very glad to be on our way out of the States. Phoenix was the final straw that broke our camel's back. We had thought the American malaise to be possibly confined to big industrial centres, business centres, NY, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles etc. But it's everywhere. [...]

Thursday 3rd, New York Airport We are at something called the International Hotel five minutes from the airport [...]. We are surrounded by a mass of Aaron's Praetorian guards, Tom Horan, Steve, Dug senior and junior and Rosemary, taking all the rooms around us and making sure that no wicked ones from the terrible city of NY will attack the Burtons. With justice too. The last time we were here we were very lucky to get safely away with our baubles intact. The gang – still at large and still operating – have pulled several jobs since they missed on us.

The journey was smooth [...]. There was a film called Kotch on which I could only watch for a time though E watched it all the way and said afterwards that it was beautifully done. After ten minutes however I could see the whole course of the movie and found reading more congenial.²⁰ [...] There were hordes of snappers when we came off the ship and they backed and clicked and attracted crowds so that the journey to the car went on and on for about what seems a good $\frac{1}{2}$ mile but was probably only a $\frac{1}{4}$. I would have become angry in the old days were I drunk but I merely looked blank instead.

Tonight we're off again to Rome. [...] Have just read some more notices for XYZ which are all highly praised stuff for E but not so much for the film. The film is good so don't understand the carping at the film.

Have just been sent the script of a horrifying book of police corruption which I was sent to read three or four months ago. Will read it and decide. Rather like playing cockney thugs even though this one is supposed to be a policeman.

Friday 4th, Rome Late afternoon in a raining Rome. We flew from NY last night into the teeth of a howling 90mph gale. [...] The film we saw was called The French Connection which was done in a very mystifying fashion.²¹ Elizabeth, who hadn't like me read the book, confessed herself utterly lost in the plot from time to time and because of the looseness of the direction wasn't sure sometimes who were cops and who were the baddies. Also the director having obviously decided that the original story was too quiet and tame, quite arbitrarily put in two episodes – a hair raising car versus electric train race with a mad killer aboard the latter, which had nothing to do with the film, and the final showdown was the olde classical gun-fight while in the original documented book, as I remember, there was no gunfight at all. Not one single shot fired as far as I can remember. Still, it was fast moving and interesting enough.

[...] I feel better already since coming back. I really am a little old European. We leave on Monday for Budapest. [...] I also have to ice skate, a little exercise I haven't done for years, and the return to that mildish form of exercise and balance is going to be very interesting.

Damnedest thing about E's chimerical looks. She looked, in the USA the worst I've ever seen her. Tending to bloat, uncertain complexion, bags under the eyes – particularly the left, probably as a result of the cyst operation which is developing an internal keloid, and now suddenly this morning, in the plane she was back to being ravishing again when after two days of nightmarish travel she should have looked her all time worst. Funny woman. Actually I think that, at last, E now shows the effects of heavy drinking whereas Howard – apart from slightly bloodshot eyes in the first waking – still looks as if he's just come back from a health farm. Mara and I still look – as we always have – like the end of the earth. [...]

Saturday 5th [...] The top ten box office things have just come out in the States where I am not No 1 as in Europe but number 6 or 7.²² E is ahead of me there so there must have been releases of some of her previous pictures. Any way the old firm is still way up there. My phraseology is becoming more and more transatlantic. That's what comes from being married to an American and being in America for ten days and reading American books.

I read a script in NY – the book of which I have already read – called Sir, you bastard and which is very and horribly compelling (about police corruption) but suffers from the same weakness as Villain.²³ It will not be understood by the yanks. And one can't make pictures nowadays for London only. [...]

Sunday 6th [...] I have so lost count of time and days that I had a lovely surprise – paradoxically an expected surprise if I'd known what day it was and that we were playing Scotland at Cardiff yesterday. Anyway, there were the lovely headlines. 'Welsh Crush Scots', 'King For A Day Gareth smashes Scotland', etc. We had beaten the Scots, strongly fancied in some quarters after beating the French by 20 points 4 weeks ago, by 35 to 12. Wales scored 5 tries to Scotland's one and three of the Welsh tries, one by Gerald Davies and two by Gareth

Edwards had to be seen apparently to be believed.²⁴ I feel very strange about this Welsh team. It would appear that they are the greatest all round team since the 'Golden Age' from about 1900 to 1910 and like the golden men of that age, talked about with breathless awe by those who saw them, and again like those immortal ghosts, I have never seen them play.²⁵ I believe that I saw Gareth Edwards play for Millfield in a 'Sevens' many years ago but apart from him and possibly John Dawes playing for London Welsh I have never even seen them play as individuals.²⁶ The Welsh this century, apart from a mediocre patch in the 20s, have always been able to produce very sound teams and nearly always hard to beat with an occasional match winner or two in the side, men out of the common mould like Bleddyn and the Cliffs Morgan and Jones, Tanner, Wooller, Watkins the forward before the 2nd War and Watkins the fly-half since, but since the Golden Age I cannot remember – on paper at least – a team that contained such a heavy percentage of 'geniuses' at the same time.²⁷ Morris of Neath, Mervyn Davies and John Taylor in the pack, Edwards and John at half back, John Williams at fullback, Gerald Davies on the wing and – in full cry – a virtually unstoppable Bevan on the other wing.²⁸ I have to guess that Bergiers and Lewis in the centre are sound, especially in defence.²⁹ What I should do is write to Cliff Jones and ask if I can buy 16mm copies of the matches played in the last 3 years including the tests against New Zealand and have myself a punny ball.³⁰ Must do so.

Tomorrow to Hungary. I am looking forward to it with excitement. The very name Budapest smacks of romance and tragedy and wild Magyar music. It cannot, simply cannot be dull, regardless of friends' warnings that it is the most depressing capital in Europe. I shall start out, at least, refusing to be talked into disliking it before I find out for myself. And again the Communist experiment is eternally fascinating. There must be some alternative to the idiocy and rat-race murderousness of 'democracy' and I'm pretty sure that Communism is not it but it is different so one more look at one more communist country.

I went to the 'Lion' book shop yesterday and bought yet another pile of books for the ten week stay in Buda and Pest. Cadogan's diaries, A. L. Rowse's two vols The Early Churchills and The Later Churchills, Solzhenitsyn's Full Circle, Chosen Words by Ivor Brown.³¹ Two dual-language Penguins of Mallarmé and French Poetry of the 19th Century.³² A book by Auberon Waugh – son of Evelyn.³³ Isaac Deutscher Red China Russia and the USA – I think it's called.³⁴ A Hungarian Grammar. And a handful of thrillers. So we should have more than enough to get through ten weeks.

Monday 7th We leave this afternoon for Budapest flying at 3.30. The people are so adamant that we depart and arrive at the border, at the exact time over the border rather, that one gets the impression that if we are too early or too late we will be buzzed or shot down. This must be a very nervous frontier anyway since 1956 but particularly since they have a very nervous Yugoslavia nearby.³⁵ Joe and Patricia came for drinks and dinner last night and Joe, who has just come back from Jugland, said that the talk is that the dissident communists in Croatia are being financed and armed by either Nazi Yugoslavian exiles operating behind great wealth from South America or by Russia or both.³⁶ [...] I wonder if the old man is going to be forced to start shooting a few blokes at last.³⁷ If he doesn't and things get worse the Russians may come over the border 'to help out' as they did in Hungary in 56. Who knows? Merely taking political prisoners may not be enough. A few public trials and death sentences or forced exile may be called for. I hope the old man clears everything up shortly for out of sheer affection I'd not like to see his majestic and reasonably humane leadership of his marvellous little country fizzle out into a bewildered and helpless kow-tow to the Muscovites. Taking the long view it won't much matter historically if Yugoslavia becomes yet another satellite of the Kremlin's for nobody is going to be able to keep those people down for long.³⁸ It is writ down in corporal in the books for all to read, They cannot be a subject race for long. With the Mexicans I have never fallen so violently in love with a nation at first sight, as I have with the Yugoslavians. As for Hungarians, the only ones I have consciously known have been successful exiles – George Tabori and he who gave me his word and a contract for £100 per week while I was still slogging away in the theatre – the incomparable Alex Korda.³⁹ When I think of Hungarians I emblemize them in the person of that great scoundrel of ineffable charm, huge generosity and large lies, of living grandiosely beyond his means, of telling me of poverty in Paris where he lived at one time – he solemnly assured me – on one gigantic cake sent him by his mother, for 6 weeks. When, out of the blue, I was invited to have lunch with him at 146 Piccadilly which turned out not to be lunch at all but coffee and cigars, and he said in his growling Hoongarrian English, 'Would you like to work with me?' I stammered a sort of 'Yes, but of course I have to...' 'It will hardly inconvenience your stage career. In fact I insist that the theatre must come first. I am going to give you £100 a week for five years. I have never seen you act but I have heard from a friend or two that you are going to be an actor of importance. My friend and colleague Laurence Olivier told me that you are a natural aristocrat and now that I have seen you I know that he is right. I am therefore investing £5000 on a belief that Olivier and I are right. So learn all you can in the theatre. Try not to get in long runs, do as many plays as you can. Go to Stratford. Buy a car, get your wife a mink. Enjoy yourself.' I was in a daze of delight. I was about 24 – no 23 years old – and the most I'd ever earned was £12 a week. 'Sign this,' he said indicating one sheet of paper with only one side worded. I began to read it. 'Good,' he said: 'never sign any paper you haven't read and understood.' It said roughly that I was to be available to Sir Alexander Korda for a maximum of 12 weeks a year at my convenience, for a maximum of 5 years during which time – if I did a film for anyone else – I was to get my usual 5000 plus half of whatever price the other film company were prepared to pay. The other half was to go to Korda's company 'London Films'. I danced down Piccadilly to the nearest pub and phone. I called home and told Syb. I called Stanley Baker. I told the publican – a complete stranger. I called Ivor through Dai John Philips.⁴⁰ When the pub closed at 3 I suppose it was, I took a taxi, undreamt of extravagance, to the ML Club near the BBC where I was sure that there would be a few congenial well-wishing friends. To cap it all the late and beloved Dylan was there and the even later and equally beloved Louis MacNeice both of them well on the way to stupefaction. Vague figures loomed in the haze of smoke and alcohol and I had pretty well run through my first week's salary by the time I arrived home in the little hours.

This was an astonishing step forward. Many young actors, some of them good like Dirk Bogarde, Donald Houston, Andrew Crawford, Jimmy Granger – I think – and Jean Simmons were under horrible contracts to the Rank Organization but I was under contract to Sir Alexander Korda and his other contract actors were Olivier, Vivien Leigh, Ralph Richardson and a host of other giant names. A very much posher and distinguished lot than the Rank 'stable'. In the end I never did do a film for Alex. He loaned me out to Emlyn Williams and Tolly de Grunwald and then to Fox for a film called My Cousin Rachel with Olivia de Havilland as my leading lady.⁴¹ I was still agent-less (unless one considers Korda as my agent) and Fox offered me $50,000. I had told Syb and the family that I was going to stick out for £7000. When the Fox representative, whose name oddly enough was Freddie Fox, offered me roughly twice what I was so ruthlessly determined to hold out for I agreed at once. I must confess to lying about it all to my friends and saying that I had fought them every inch of the way to get that enormous sum. To ice the cake Korda said he was not going to take his cut but that I should go out and buy a Rolls-Bentley immediately. I bought a Mark 8 Jaguar instead.

But there was more to come. The man who insisted I played in the film was George Cukor, an infinitely wicked and loveable man as well as being, at his best, one of the very fine directors. He has seen me and was seeing me in a play of Lillian Hellman's yclept Montserrat.⁴² I didn't think much of the book or the script but I thought a lot of Cukor and my leading lady was, he assured me, to be either Garbo (who told me mendaciously but charmingly some months later, having seen the film, that she would have done it had she known I was so good) or Vivien.⁴³ So I left with Syb and her brother Dai Mogs – just down from Cambridge with a deliberately indifferent degree – who was supposed to be my secretary though I ended up answering not only my own post but his too – on the Queen Mary first call and all found.⁴⁴

By the time we got to NY 5½ days later Cukor had been either fired or had withdrawn (I never did find out which) and my leading lady was Olivia de Havilland who had just won two Oscars in three years and was in the language of Hollywood 'hot, hot, hot.'⁴⁵ She was married to a very eccentric man, very forgettable, who thought that his wife was the mid-century Duse and had a notice put on the board that all members of the crew and cast were no longer to call Olivia 'Livvy' which was her long-established diminutive in the industry, but as Miss De Havilland at all times.⁴⁶ I was also told by Zanuck's hatchet man [...] Lew Schreiber that Miss De Havilland would not permit me to have co-starring billing with her. I didn't mind about the billing a bit and to this day I have never cared about it but I did get the impression, later confirmed, that they were hoping I would do a Rex Harrison and arrogantly walk out as they wanted somebody else, or Miss De Havilland wanted somebody else – I seem to remember it was Greg Peck – to play my part.⁴⁷ I said somewhat testily to Schreiber that I had worked with the greatest living actors and actresses and they hadn't fussed about billing. So I stayed but with a little murder in my heart for Miss De H. The film, for some forgotten reason was delayed for 7 weeks and we lived in a small – large to us – duplex apartment on Charleville Boulevard. It was during those seven weeks that I started the hunt for Jean.⁴⁸ It didn't take long. What has this to do with Hungary? Well, eventually it will lead back to the loveable larcenous Sir Alex Korda. [...]

Tuesday 8th, Budapest We arrived yesterday at exactly 5pm [...] when I arrived a pimply bloke with a mike asked me why I had come to Budapest. I said 'You mean you don't know. I have come to do a film.' Yes please, he said, and what is the name of the film? 'Don't you read the papers?' I queried, and then, at a nudge and a look from E, added 'I have to do a film called Bluebeard.' 'What are you doing here Mrs Burton?' 'I am being Richard's wife' said E. End of interview. Budapest was shrouded in Danube damp, ghostlike like London sometimes and is still the same this morning. Pretty cold too, but the suite – The Presidential Suite of course – is about the best appointed of its kind I've ever seen anywhere.⁴⁹ It is enormous with an indoor garden and a massive balcony on which one could play tennis practically, certainly two games of table tennis. Additionally there is a heated indoor, glassed-in terrace. Two bedrooms, two bathrooms, a dining room, a largeish kitchen and enough space for all of E's clothes. Sensational. Its only drawback, which I shall try to rectify today is that at night the lights are so low powered that it is difficult to read. One has to sit directly under the lamps to read.

[...] There was much talk last night from Gianni, who is Jonah's half brother I swear, and Claudye about the recalcitrant intransigence of one of my ladies in the film. A lady I'd never heard of before this film called Joey Heatherton.⁵⁰ She has refused to work until her clothes which she wore in Paris and approved have all been re-done by someone other than Vicky who designed the first lot.⁵¹ She sounds a frump but I shall be interested to find out if she carries on when I'm around. The probability is that she's talentless and knows it and is therefore frightened and hides behind a defensive cloak of 'temperament'. Why couldn't they get a good actress? There are a lot about.

The Danube – certainly not blue in this London weather – lies beneath us. It is as wide as the Thames at Westminster at this point I would guess. Perhaps a little less though I am a hopeless judge of water distances. The far 'Buda' side is thick with ice floes which are moving almost imperceptibly down river. It must be cold up in them thar hills.

So far all the Hungarians I've met are very solemn though I did get our evening waiter to crack a somewhat pained smile. The tragedy of '56 must still be a giant sorrow. I shall get to know them better once I start work. Gaston says they are much nicer than the Jugs. That must be very nice indeed.

But back to Korda. As a result of the enormous success of the Rachel film and the one following it – a terrible thing called The Robe – Fox offered me a million dollars for 7 years for 7 films. It was only later that I found out that in addition to paying me a million they had – forced to because I was still under contract to Korda – paid him a 1/2 million on the side. A few years later, after I'd found this out, I went to have dinner with Alex in Millionaires' Row to which he had moved after living for years at Claridges taking his new wife with him. His brother had found a Canaletto and when I admired it Alex said, 'Enjoy it my boy, you paid for it.'⁵² The new wife incidentally after Alex died married a tall thin chap with an enormous nose, very lah-di-dah and possibly titled, and, poor thing, committed suicide a few years ago. She was very rich apparently, very beautiful certainly while Lah-di-dah married a quite dishy French Countess later.⁵³ I always think of him with great suspicion as a sort of murderer once removed. Quite unjustified I suppose.

[...] I am cunningly, stealthily, thief-in-the-nightly trying to make the ultimate personal sacrifice. Today I am smoking only with a filtered cigarette holder – I have forgotten twice out of ten cigs so far this morning – and after some days I shall try and cut down to after breakfast, then after 10, then 11, then 12 and so on. If my desire to do it is great enough I should succeed unless some catastrophe intervenes. But can I do it while working? [...] Yes, of course Richard, you can do anything if you try hard enough except certain things like running 100 yards in even time. [...]

Wednesday 9th, Duna, Budapest [...] I am as happy as a scientist until Tommy Thompson of Life magazine and Eddie Dmytryk came to chat. It was alright for a bit but they – particularly Tommy sated us by staying on and on and we finally didn't have our pörkölt until nearly 10 o'clock.⁵⁴

Both E and I did our going to bed exercises last night together. It is difficult to keep a straight face when she is doing her numbers as she goes at it with a solemn ferocity which is hilarious. It is especially droll when we do running on the spot as she has to hold her breasts – one hand on each – for firm as they are, really like a thirty-year-old's more than a nearly forty-year-old's, they are pretty big and the resultant wiggle-waggle would be pretty odd as well as bad for her. It's a very fetching sight and were it open to the public would fetch a lot of people. Like 10 million.

[...] yesterday I started out on the Hungarian language. It is the kind of potted grammar which I adore, somewhat like 'Hugo's' grammars, which have little vocabs and exercises at the end of each lesson with the answers in the back half, third, of the volume. And all my answers were alright. Since it is neither a slav or romance language the acquisition of the vocab alone is a formidable task. It has, the vocab, no association with anything I know.

I was up at 5.30 [...]. The bridges and the morning mist looked for all the world like a Whistler Nocturne except it was the Danube and not the Thames.⁵⁵

Apparently, according to Dmytryk, the girl Heatherton is as good as gold and the reason for her tantrums is simply nerves. To my surprise, on the other hand, they said that Raquel Welch is a monster of egoism and difficulty.⁵⁶ For some reason, not ever except by accident reading the show pages of the various newspapers and mags I had the impression she was a nice and very pretty somewhat bewildered Marilyn.⁵⁷ According to Tommy Thompson and Dmytryk she is an arch fiend. Everybody expects me to control her. How? My only defence against 'temperament' – though oddly enough I have ever hardly come across it – is to laugh and leave the set until everybody has cooled off. They expect me to awe her and frighten her into good behaviour. I have no intention of doing anything of the kind unless she really does behave boringly in which case I will turn all my ice-cold intellectual guns on her. [...]

To my delight I got very good reception from the BBC on my little Philips Radio [...] I've looked again and it's not a Philips it's something called a Grundig. Inevitably German of course. When I turned it on at 6 there was a discussion going on about pornography. It was curious that the attackers were all lah-di-dah and cut-glass and chiffon and very pukka while the defenders – those who sold and published porno and made and showed the films were all provincially, mostly educated cockney accented. The pro-pornos in fact sounded dirty and salacious while the others with their Oxford and 'County' accents sounded faintly disgusted that they had to talk about such things at all may deah. It sounded in fact so funny that it might quite easily have been the Goon Show boys of delicious memory doing a send-up.⁵⁸

E has been up, had a glass of grapefruit juice, read my last two entries, walked on the terrace and gone back to bed. [...]

Thursday 10th, Budapest I did not go to the studio at all yesterday. Elizabeth had to have a chat with Tommy Thompson of Life mag before her being snapped today by a very tall elegant – over elegant Englishman called Norman Parkinson (call me 'Parks' my dear) of whom neither of us had ever heard but who is apparently well known as a society photographer or something.⁵⁹ At least I presume so as he snapped Princess Anne for the same distinguished mag a month ago.⁶⁰ He reminded us separately and together that we had all met some years ago. [...] Thompson is a nice enough man but a bad interviewer so just as he was due I sloped off into the smaller of the two bedrooms to read while he interviewed.

[...] Today I have to work. There is but no question that I am the laziest actor in the world with the possible exception of Marlon. My first scene today is merely to sit in front of the stage at the 'Moulin Rouge' and show myself attracted by the – as yet – unknown Miss Heatherton. I go to work at 11.30 to be ready at 1pm. I am so much more interested in Volcano that when I do think about my work at all it is always for the time being at least something that's in the future and not what I am presently doing. It has always been the case in my case. At Oxford if Chaucer was our task for that term I read Shakespeare, if Shakespeare I read the Metaphysicals, if the Romantics I read Eliot and Pound.⁶¹ Yesterday I read – switching from one to t'other Smokin' Joe a book, very bad, about Frazier the current world heavyweight champ, a bit of Volcano and, in bed, Hag's Nook by Dr Fell, a John Dickson Carr whodunit.⁶² The script stared at me from the coffee table all day long. It is still staring at me so will stop staring back and attack it at last. [...]

Saturday 11th⁶³ [...] I read in the local German–English paper that Sarah Jane Todd, wife of Mike Junior, had died suddenly of a heart attack. Totally unfair as unfairness goes in this world. Never drank, never smoked, adored and lived for by her husband, 6 children the oldest of whom must be about 16–17. She died on Monday but we got the news today only. Also we have to wait until tonight or late this afternoon to attempt at least to call him. Helpless feeling all round. I hope, no cynicism intended that he gets married in a couple of years.⁶⁴ He's a very married type and since he chose well the first time he probably will the second. [...]

I worked yesterday. It involved me sitting in a box and looking at a girl dancer on the stage played by the hitherto anonymous Heatherton and with her looking uncertainly back up at maniac with the blue beard.

Heatherton seems unbelievably ordinary which might be good for the part. She has one of those one-on-every-street-corner blonde rather common and at the drop of an insult I'm sure vicious bitchy faces. However the film comes first and I will do what I can to help her be good, because if she ain't good we only have half a picture. Dmytryk is very little and very brisk and light-voiced and intelligent and pretends to knowledge that he doesn't really have or has forgotten. The girl said that she had never been so nervous in her life at meeting anyone and that she had worshipped me ever since, as a schoolgirl (she was careful to point out) she had seen me in Anger and – wait for it – Bramble Bush. The first put her up in my estimation, the second sank her without trace. [...] Talk is that she is having a ding-dong, as the vernacular goes, with Dmytryk. I wouldn't be at all surprised as however else did she get the part? I mean, who had heard of her? And Ann-Margret who is currently fashionable, having made a success in Mike Nichols' film Carnal Knowledge, had offered to play in Bluebeard.⁶⁵ [...]

I dwell on 'Joey' as she is yclept, as until I read the script again yesterday I had forgotten what an enormous part and opportunity it is and gives. Also I've got to learn to act this kind of Maria in the Red Barn melodrama.⁶⁶ It has to be done with immense tongue in cheek. I try to remember how the master – whassisname – Vincent Price plays it. [...] Even voiced, measured in speech, purposeful in movement with the occasional violence in voice and movement. Must be funny serious. Shall know the minute I begin how to do it I hope. [...]

Keep on thinking about poor Mike Junior. His mother died when young as E pointed out.⁶⁷ His father died shockingly in an air-crash and they were very great friends. His wife dies after a skiing holiday at 41 years old. Rough on the poor little sod. Must try and talk to him tonight. And he's such a nice man. [...]

Sunday 13th [...] Had a telegram yesterday saying that Jim Benton was in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital having a bad case of infectious hepatitis and since we had [been] in contact with him 10 days ago it was necessary for us to have a shot of Gamma Globulin – if that's the word I'm searching for as Bertie Wooster might say – an operation that I always dread ever since I had a mass of typhoid, tetanus, yellow fever, Gdang fever and other assorted shots to go to work in Morocco in 1964 and lo and behold – after being as sick as a dog for a week with each inoculatory disease as they took turns, and having to work at the same time at the Vic I suppose – we shot the film (Alex the Great) in Madrid – in and around Madrid – instead.⁶⁸ [...]

I worked, as 'twere, for the first time yesterday. That is to say I did a full scene with the girl and her partner though he had nary a word to say and it seems to be alright. She has a natural hardness that might become effective as she is the only lady of the 8 who manages to turn the tables on me and escape. I might enjoy this film and one of the ways is to work hard at it and not 'eef' it or 'wing' it as I had thought to do. First of all I can, I think, improve my dialogue by paraphrasing what they already have – I don't mean on the spot, waiting for the inspiration paraphrasing but pre-planned re-writing. Keeping it to myself and simply doing it when the time comes for I know that directors dearly love to 'kick it around a bit' when you suggest a change of dialogue. That can – and I'm pretty sure it applies to this man – mean a couple of wasted hours mucking about [...].

The minute people go away and leave E alone she is a different woman. She came to the studio yesterday afternoon and waited until the end and we went home together, and for the first time spent an evening together without interruption from anybody except the waiter who unfortunately will hang around while we eat and though I'm sure he is not trying to listen to our conversation or any of that kind of spies everywhere rubbish it is still uncomfortable. We smile and nod and say that will be fine thank you, we'll help ourselves from now on and though he understands English perfectly, nevertheless it is cribbing cabining and confining.⁶⁹ [...]

We had our shots and E's left a lump like a goose egg whereas mine left nothing at all except a lot of blood on my underpants and pyjamas. I forgot to tell the Doctor that I am a bleeder. Whatever will the laundry think. [...]

Monday 14th [...] I am still slowly persisting with the Lingua Magyar but it is not so sweet now as twas before and I had asked the young doctor who comes in now regularly – whether asked or not it seems – if he could spare five minutes, to record some ordinary phrases into my tape-recorder which he did and I thanked him but on playing it back I must have buggered up the device as he sounds as if he's speaking Turkish on a bad line from Istanbul via Vladivostok.⁷⁰ I shall try again. [...] I don't ask much. I want to be able to ask for food and drink in the native tongue, acquire the numbers and the monetary system, and learn like a parrot about a page about any given current topic and show off. If anybody replies, I shall revert to English or if there's nobody around to understand it, Welsh.

Saw last night many lovely snaps of E taken by Norman Parkinson who turns out to be a very amusing and nice man and, indeed, of the scores of photographs, only about 5 or 6 made E's face look a little full. He must be used again. Those old aristos – Beaton and Parkinson, really know what they're doing. I suddenly realized the difference in quality between a Parkinson or a Beaton and a Gianni Bozzacchi and his kind. Not a brush of touch-up is necessary. Partly by his lighting and mostly from E's having lost 8lbs or so I would say, the fullness of the chin – the underchin is never obtrusive.

He didn't make me look very fetching but I gather that he's not very good with gents. Anyway I've never been – at least not for 20 years or so – and am never likely to be the pin-up type. Too many excrescences and twisted bones. My hair is at last getting very thin though it still covers my whole scalp but when wet, soaking wet one can see its barrenness. Since it's such a bore to have Ron pencil in lines all over the place I think I might one of these days try one of those transplants. It won't be like those idiots who are really bald and on whom it is still obvious and I only need a few strands around the crown of the head. I don't think however that I will get a face lift like that abject Rod Steiger who not only admits to it but it makes him look like one half of a naked ass-hole.⁷¹ In addition to which, he says, he can't get any jobs and will soon be broke. It might be because people don't want to be looking at a talking ass-hole. Now there's a man who really has worked very hard at his job all his life and at last, when he got an Oscar a couple of years ago, everybody thought well now at last he's a 'STAR'.⁷² But he ain't and never was and never will be though with a harsh director he can still be very effective. He has the dreadful problem of believing himself to be a great actor – whatever that may be – and it shows in every thing he does. His Napoleon was merely silly.⁷³ Incidentally I sent off a telegram yesterday saying no to Nelson. Apart from the fact that Nelson bores me – unlike Napoleon – the film belongs to Lady Hamilton who if she's half a good actress will get an Oscar.⁷⁴ [...] The script is very able as usual as it comes from the fecund pen of Sir Terence Rattigan.⁷⁵ We really do have some very unlikely knights around nowadays. [...]

Tuesday 15th Started off in black and over-laid it in red. I am still as purely non-alcoholic as the scion of two AA's.⁷⁶

Pouring with rain this morning and it rained all day yesterday too. I wish someone would reprint that slim volume of Alun Lewis which contains the poem 'All day it has rained' and 'For Gweno' etc., a companion of my teens, when I was more poet than most, indeed the time when I read and acquired by familiarity the vast store of memorized and memorable verse that still lies here in my head.⁷⁷

[...] I awoke at 5 to 7 actually and did all my usual ablutions and exercised with the addition – very carefully for fear of my chipped base of spine and my tendency to lout gumbago and arturitis – Spooner and Mr Bindle – 10 sit ups the stomach muscles taking it very well.⁷⁸ I shall keep up twenty a day, 10 at night, 10 in the morning for a few days and see how it goes. Would like to work up to a hundred, 150, and lo those flat stomach muscles again. My stomach is flat at the moment but soft like a baby's. I wonder if I shall ever get those two parralel (still asleep) parallel ridges of vertical muscle that I used to pride myself on. Or am I now too old? [...] Yesterday I played organ (traditional for horror movies) while a hawk flew around – a falcon to be exact – and landed on my shouldders⁷⁹ (I

really am only half awake) and a white cat streaked around. [...]

I work with 'Joey' again this day. She seems perfectly innocuous to me but everybody else seems to loathe her. She gets up to tantrums behind my back presumably that I never see. I must confess that she is about as stimulating an actress as the worst I've known but I keep on telling myself that it doesn't really matter. We can slide around her with cunning and girls in horror movies are always props after all. All they have to do is be pretty and dumb.

Am reading – at work – three books. In the upstairs dressing-room either Volcano or a novel by 'Hungary's greatest prose' writer Imre something and in the trailer and most fascinating a biog of Einstein.⁸⁰ At home it's a detective story in bed and a history of espionage in the Abwehr before during and slightly after the war.⁸¹ Interesting that one of the so-called master spies was a Welsh Nationalist xenophobe – especially anglophobe – called Owens.⁸² He is reputedly still alive. He is described as 'an excitable little Welshman' but he was a double spy used by the XX section of MI5 and the Germans. Some of the things he did were hair-raisingly courageous so he cannot have been all that excitable. I was told a long time ago that he was in South Ireland. I must try and seek him out. There might be a film on him as he reported to his German 'masters' that he had a whole ring of anglo-phobic Welshmen spying for him and therefore for them all around Britain including a former Chief Detective Inspector from Swansea. It could make a film and an odd one – perhaps even a funny one – as of course, the minute the Huns started out in earnest bashing us during the blitzes all the dissident malcontents in the Welsh Plaid Cymru turned double spies against their German friends. And deceived them throughout the war. A dirty game but fascinating nevertheless. [...]

Friday 19th⁸³ [...] I read a lot of the biography of Einstein and indeed to God began to think that – poetically at least – I was understanding the relativity of time and space but very much through a glass darkly. Then I had several 1/2 hours of Wolf Mank and a man from the Jersey Islands who for some reason I didn't quite trust though he seemed nice enough.⁸⁴ I had no idea that the Channel Islands are so free of British rule and that they have their own tax laws. [...] Anyway if we do the Canterbury Tales there which I and E too probably will we might do worse than as twere case the joint as a possible home from home instead of Suisse. Geographically too I am moronic. I said the islands are midway in the channel or nearer France. Oh my God, he said, France of course – I frequently water ski there. Ah, said I. Dick Makewater was here too with the art director of Shrew or was it Anne who won an Oscar I think.⁸⁵ He is to direct. I wonder if he can. Wolfie was in one of his racier moods. ‘My gawd you look smashing’, he said, ‘what’s happened to you?’ ‘Dunno,’ I said ‘it can’t be the loss of weight at I was this same weight approximately when we last saw each other in Bosnia.’ ‘Yeah I know,’ he said, ‘but you look more smashing, somethin’s happened to you.’ He kept on about it. [...] Anyway I said it was ‘exercise’. ‘Aw Chraist,’ he said, ‘I can never do anything physical for myself and to myself that I can imagine better.’ He was at his most engagingly cockney and obviously adored Elizabeth who reciprocated and said, ‘Now that’s the kind of man I could love if you weren’t around, I adore him.’ ‘Bloody daft thing to say,’ I said, hurting. But good taste all the same I thought. Wolfie always looks hooded eyed and desperate and is always being hounded by some ‘bird’. ‘They’re all fackin nuisances, they want to possess a man body and soul, won’t leave you alone. Nasty dirty bastards. Hate the cunts.’ Except Elizabeth apparently to whom he paid court all evening. There is always an oddity about people’s preferences for types. I’ve always lusted for medium height dark haired Jewesses, or those who could be first racial cousins. Elizabeth has always fancied Jews period. She seems to have a rapport with them which she doesn’t have with the ordinary Anglo Saxon. She and Wolf could obviously have talked all night. And about all kinds of things. They touched lightly on Wedgwood for instance last night [...].⁸⁶ And it has nothing to do – in E’s case – with male beauty for Wolf is a mess, about my height with a great pendulous belly that is big enough to turn after the rest of his body has turned, double chinned, grubby looking without being unclean. But his mind is astringent. There is no shit about him and he is a renaissance man. He opens shop to sell Wedgwood having first made himself an expert on the subject, writing a lavishly illustrated book to prove his own provenance as an expert and then – as he just has – sold the shops owned by his sister and himself for half a million nicker tax free capital fackin gain. And who to, d’yer think? Fackin Wedgwood that’s who.⁸⁷ He has now started or resurrected a small private printing press in Cork or Dublin – anyway in Eire somewhere – and his first publication is a book of his own poems.⁸⁸ Now he wants me to write for them. Anything he says, ‘rondeaux, frigging triolets, belles lettres, the story of your life, graffiti, anything you like old mate.’ He is superlatively intelligent with a considerable smattering of the poet about him. [...]

Saturday 20th⁸⁸ [...] Curious note: I sent a ‘gram to Arthur Koestler (Darkness

at Noon, a marvellous 3 volume autobiography and the latest Case of the Midnight Toad) expressing admiration for his work and asking him to come to the party with ulterior motive of possibility of film from Midnight Toad.⁹⁰ His reply said something like 'would love to come but climate there unhealthy for me. Happy 30th birthday to your wife.'⁹¹ I am most surprised that he is still persona non grata after all these years. I wonder if he's melodramatizing the whole situation. After all, he reneged from the Party something like 35 years ago.⁹² [...] The greatest monsters to the Jugoslavs were their former tyrannical Royalty and we heard from Tito himself that there was no objection to Elisheba coming back and at the Proust Ball I met Elisheba's (uncle)? cousin(?) who would be king were there a throne there to sit on and he told me that he'd been back as a tourist once and as a business man another time and everybody treated him with great bonhomie.⁹³ That's of course Jugland which is far more liberal than a Russian-run Hungary. Still, since Darkness at Noon Koestler has been harmless to them.⁹⁴ And even that, as I remember, didn't specify any particular country though it was obviously a Communist one. [...] Also, of course, I'm not sure how much pamphleteering Koestler has been up to through the years. It will be interesting to find out, for instance, if he's been read here at all since he changed colours. [...]

I did a longish scene with the girl yesterday and it seemed to go alright. This film might be amusant after all.

E came in to the room for a half hour or so and has gone back to bed to read a script that I might do. It's Sir, you bastard and I want to find out if she understands it as I think it might be confusing unless, like me, you have read the book first. [...]

Saturday 26th A day of enormous excitement for all. Some 80 odd or so people arrived at various times of the day for the big weekend.⁹⁵ Chief pleasures were of course the families – mine and Elizabeth's or should I say rather ours and ours. The next were Grace who again qualified for five stars and Nevill Coghill and Spender and Mrs Ladas and Simon and Sheran. What exquisite manners they all have in their very different ways. I taught all the girls to curtsy and all the lads how to do a proper hand-shake with Royalty and each by each and one by one they all performed admirably. We had a cocktail party in our suite – hastily rearranged for the purpose – which went with a swing – at least the last reluctant group left at about midnight with Howard Mara and kids staying until the end as it was the only chance we had of talking properly to them. I had several clec-clecs with my lot in one of their rooms.⁹⁶ I took wee Maria along – not so wee, she is a very tall girl – and introduced her to her 1000s of heretofore unknown and un-met aunts and uncles and, completely forgetting, we went babbling on in Welsh until we suddenly all realized that Maria was completely bewildered. She had been told by me of course many times that certain percentages of Welshmen spoke a tongue entirely alien to English but I don't think, until she heard us all at it last night, that she realized quite how alien it actually was. I think that vaguely she thought it was the equivalent of an Irish brogue or a Highland Scottish. The family adored her of course because she looked so like Kate. In fact Will Cross-eyes and a couple of the others thought she was Kate.⁹⁷ There is superficially a fleeting resemblance. Round face, cherubic cheeks, same colouring. The family were in tremendous form – Tom at 71 being the dynamo. The flight was as smooth as silk and was a particular thrill for Verdun who had, to my astonishment, never been in an aeroplane in his life and a jet at that. That alone has been sufficient excitement for him. They, with their still retained sense of wonder, were bowled over by everything. The very bathrooms, the fact that there was a bar in each room the view of the legendary Danube, the meetings with Elizabeth and of course Grace were high points. Both E and Grace behaved superbly. [...] Little Mickey Caine had flown from LA with one of his exquisite 'birds', a Marlon Brando Asiatic as usual, and How and Mar and my lovely Layton and the equally lovely Chris and Aileen had come almost exactly half way around the world and are going to be a trifle jet-lagged today and tomorrow I would guess but the parties will keep them going.⁹⁸ Victor Spinetti and boyfriend were, are here, and Ringo and wife and Susannah York and Mick and Liz and Brook and Grace's Lady-in-waiting a certain Mme Aurelli, Professor Warner and a lady –possibly his inamorata – called Anna Something, and Doris Brynner and Bettina and Marie Lou Tolo (one of the girls in the film), Yves Le Tourneur and wife, Vanhattan of Van Cleef – Cartiers NY I mean – Hebe Dorsey, Vicky Berkeley complete with Ron, Billy Williams and wife (Williams is the great cameraman who shot XYZ) and our very own Chris and Liza who gave me thunderous good night kisses several to each side of the face and Kurt Frings, John Springer and too many to recount them all.⁹⁹ Frings went into business as usual and after extracting a promise from me that I would not throw him into the Danube said that the Lerner–Loewe–Donen consortium were still desperate for me to play Little Prince. [...] He also said that representing E and I was the greatest experience of his life and that we didn't realize what magic our names were and that after XYZ E is hotter or as hot as she's ever been. And that the respect and even awe at the mention of our names in meetings is quite extraordinary, that he has been in the business forty years and that [the] plural noun 'Burtons' is almost synonymous with Royalty. Another incidental exchange in the brouhaha of the party was then Francis Warner said he would like to see me alone for $\frac{1}{2}$ an hour or so today and I said I would call him as soon as I arrived back from the Studio. I didn't ask him what specifically about but he was obviously bursting to tell me and said something very quickly and in tone of espionage. 'Fellowship at Oxford'. I am intrigued. It could be a step towards a D.Litt., which is the only honour I really covet.¹⁰⁰ [...]

The world press is here in droves. From everywhere. Literally, it seems. Japanese, India, as well as every other place you can think of in the western hemisphere. I think I will have to talk to them today – perhaps en masse. Dread of dreads and hell's damnation.¹⁰¹

The brothers (and their women too for that matter) are agog about the Welsh rugby team of the last three years and have bought 16mm copies of 'highlights' of the All Blacks and various other games. Shall try and watch it all this afternoon while everyone else is kipping.

Graham got very sloshed very quickly. I had to pull him up once after having heard him introduce Ringo Starr and wife four times to Howard and Mara with a 'D'you know my brother-in-law Howard, these are friends of mine called Starkie.' The latter is Ringo's real name and the joke once is ok.¹⁰² Twice it's tedious. Three times it's rude. He is, poor boy very very star-struck. But lovely with it. S. Spender is anxious to talk to me too. I wonder what about. What is the Cause?

Monday 28th February 1972 Budapest Merely to record that I missed yesterday's entry out of sheer inability to get down to the job. The apartment seemed eternally full of various people from time to time on Saturday and again yesterday.

[...] Grace came to dinner last night just with Howard and Mara and us. I had three slices of layer cake and ice-cream and was so tired that I was to all intents and purposes drunk. As a matter of fact I did not have one single drink through all the endless weekend though it did cross my mind at one moment when my fatigue was so great that I could not think of another way to go. However I didn't succumb and just as well. A drunken me as well as a tired me would have been too much and possibly disastrous. The news is just about on. I have turned it off. The usual stuff. Nixon home claiming to have made no secret deal with

China.¹⁰³ A protest march in Paris (including Simone de Beauvoir) re the shooting of a picketing striker at the Renault car factory.¹⁰⁴ They carried pictures of the dead man.

Francis Warner intimated at more than a fellowship but a doctorate and KBE.¹⁰⁵ We shall see. [...] I don't know what to do about Little Prince. I think I'd better listen to the tapes and decide for myself whether I can do it. [...]

The party was a huge success. That means four parties – the cocktail party when we arrived, the cellar party, the brunch party next day and the posh party at night. All apart from a nasty incident with Alan Williams at the cellar party went without a hitch.¹⁰⁶ There was a press conference which went alright. I had to do it alone. [...] I saw a couple of hours of Welsh and Lions rugby on 16mm and by god they were really good.

Both Grace and E turned out first class jobs, both looking pretty with E – at the last party particularly – looking absolutely dazzling. Raquel Welch arrived. She is very pretty though a trifle hard faced. I recounted our conversations to E who said 'She was making a pass at you.' I protested but E was adamant. [...] Stephen Spender gave me – or rather – us a volume of his latest verse and I gave him a cheque for £1000 and a promise to write an article for the magazine which will keep the world informed as to where the behind-the-iron-curtain writers are imprisoned so that they will at least know that the rest of the world knows that we know where they are and in some way we must let the incarcerated know that their names live on the lips and in the pen and ink of caring people outside their lands.¹⁰⁷

[...] The weekend was an undoubted success. I am sure that were it not for the fantastic exuberance of my family that it would not have been half so good. They seemed to relax everybody and nobody has ever seen Grace let her hair down – literally and figuratively – as much as Grace. Her lady-in-waiting too a Mme Aurelia was a ball of fire. Grace confesses that she never knew she had it in her. She danced wild Hungarian dances and at one time as I was sitting in a booth with Frankie Howerd Susannah York and husband and Ladas and Spender the rest of the party swept past us doing the conga.¹⁰⁸ I was goggleeyed. Led by the family the whole thing passed before our eyes with Grace in the middle of it all. Unbelievable.

MARCH

Wednesday 1st, Budapest [...] St David's Day and they're all going to school in

Wales bearing daffodils and leeks and there will be singing in the Assembly Hall and competitions and a great many will get drunk tonight except me of course.¹⁰⁹ [...]

It was nightmarish yesterday going into work and finding, as I walked on the set that the scene was yet another party, dinner jackets and ladies in evening dresses. For a second I thought that I was doomed to parties for the rest of my life. [...] I talked to Aaron and at last we have decided to return to England and pay our taxes. I also – they have come back to me with a bang – finally and irrevocably turned down Petit Prince. So my next definite stint is Volcano.

We have asked Simon and Sheran to look for a place near theirs and not too far from Oxford with plenty of ground to keep a horse or two and a large dog or two, so that I can nip in to Oxford when I feel like it.

I have to send telegrams etc. this morning setting the wheels turning for the return to England. We shall do our damndest not to winter there though we shall pay the taxes.

Wednesday 15th It is our eighth wedding anniversary. By some standards that is nothing. By others it's a monumental achievement. During that time too we have the rare distinction – in our business – of having been faithful to each other and for three years approx before that. So it's unofficially 11 years.¹¹⁰ And where do we think we shall celebrate tonight – in a small cafe, tete-a-tete, eyes misting over with memories, our favourite tunes playing on a gypsy violin, dancing cheek to cheek, alone together in a crowd. Ah no. We have something far better than that. We are going to be at the British Bloody embassy with their excellent bores the ambassador and dress.¹¹¹ A silly mistake on our parts and not to be repeated.

[...] E had bought me a score or more of books, many crazy pens and pencils, a mug for tea drinking – reputedly 150 years old – the perfect size. And an Art Nouveau picture frame, a small one for a desk. I have nothing for E except my presence.

E adores occasions. Wedding anniversaries, birthdays, Xmas, Thanksgiving etc. I loathe them except for personal things like the anniversaries. But commercialized things like Xmas and Mother's day and Father's day (yet) and so on give me a royal pain in the ass.

[...] Wish we didn't have to go out to the Embassy, especially as they think of actors and actresses as just so many clowns. Envyng them just the same. Some ambassadors are very good company but they are few and far between. Some are even intelligent. I can't remember what this feller was like. Nothing stunning or I would have remembered him from the birthday party. A little gentle sending up is called for I think. After all, it's not their fault that they happened to ask us on our anniversary and it is my fault that I had forgotten that it was until too late. [...]

Thursday 23rd, Dorchester Hotel Back again to the somewhat dilapidated Dorchester in one of those horrible non-suites.¹¹² We flew from Budapest around 6pm and arrived about 8. [...]

We went straight to 2 Squires Mount where there were a great many people including Tom and Hyral, Will and son, Graham and son, Menna and husband, Wendy and Derek but no Cassie, Dai, Hilda, our Dai and Betty or Cis and Elfed.¹¹³ They'll be alright and all there today. I am looking forward to being on the plane tomorrow morning though but not looking forward to Pest.

Sweet Liza is here which makes up for a great deal of the pain.

I don't think E should stay very long. She will go mad with boredom, for Gwen, much as I adore her, is not exactly a laugh a minute.

I couldn't sleep at all last night and feel like taking a swift kip now which would be catastrophic. Oh, that lovely Janine was there. Paul is apparently able to walk with the aid of crutches.¹¹⁴

Very warm. By English standards a heat wave. Too lazy to write more.

MARCH 1972–APRIL 1975

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1972 diary in late March. For over three years he appears not to have made any attempt to maintain his personal record.

After Ivor's funeral Richard seemed to go into a deep depression. This was manifested both in a return to heavy drinking and in a cavalier attitude towards his marriage to Elizabeth. By May he may have been unfaithful, having affairs with some of his co-stars in Bluebeard, including Nathalie Delon. Elizabeth responded by being seen in public with Aristotle Onassis. Burton and Taylor spent an increasing amount of time apart: he had to return to Yugoslavia and to The Battle of Sutjeska while she made Night Watch in London. Burton did spend some time at St Peter's College, Oxford, but his plan to write a micro-history based on the Peregrina Pearl was not executed. Richard and Elizabeth teamed up once more in the autumn of 1972 to make the double TV film for Harlech Television Divorce His, Divorce Hers, shot in Rome and Munich. This was an unhappy experience and, again, did nothing for their critical reputation when it was broadcast the following year.

The year 1973 opened with Richard once more in Rome, making Massacre in Rome, while Elizabeth filmed Ash Wednesday in Treviso and in the ski resort of Cortina d'Ampezzo. By the summer the rift between them was serious. An attempt at reconciliation in New York failed and on 3 July 1973 their separation was announced. Elizabeth went to Beverly Hills, where she began a relationship with businessman Henry Wynberg. Richard initially based himself at Aaron Frosch's home at Quogue, Long Island, and then returned to Italy to start work on The Voyage, co-starring alongside Sophia Loren. Loren and her husband Carlo Ponti (who had produced Massacre in Rome) hosted him at their estate near Marino, where he was visited by Elizabeth in late July, but any attempt at reconciliation was short-lived. Divorce papers began to be drafted.

While filming The Voyage in Sicily in November, Richard learned that Elizabeth had been taken into hospital in Los Angeles, and he flew to California to be with her. Upon her recovery Elizabeth visited Richard in Naples, and over the following weeks they spent time together in New York, Hawaii and then in Gstaad. Early in 1974 they were together in Puerto Vallarta, and in March Richard began working on The Klansman in Oroville, near Sacramento, California. His disintegration was becoming a public spectacle, and rumours of liaisons with young women were widespread. In April he was taken into St John's Hospital in Santa Monica in order to 'dry out'. Elizabeth filed for divorce and this was granted at Saanen in Switzerland on 26 June 1974.

A single man for the first time in more than a quarter of a century Richard left hospital and sailed to Europe, staying for a while at his home in Céligny before travelling to Winchester to work alongside Sophia Loren once more in Brief Encounter. In October 1974 he became engaged to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia (herself married to Neil Balfour), and began work on a drama-documentary about Winston Churchill – titled The Gathering Storm / Walk with Destiny. A public furore followed the appearance of two articles by Burton in the New York Times and the American TV Guide, both of which were unrestrained in their attack on the former British Prime Minister. Shortly afterwards Richard's relationship with Princess Elizabeth collapsed, Burton having begun seeing Jeanne Bell, an African-American actor and former Playboy centrefold, whom he had first met on the set of The Klansman.

At the beginning of 1975 Burton, along with Bell (1943—), Charlotte Rampling and James Coburn, started filming Jackpot in Nice, but this project remained unfinished owing to financial difficulties. Burton returned to Céligny with Bell, and again took up his pen.

1975

APRIL

Friday 11th Taylors arrived from Leningrad.¹ [...] E has dysentery and may have to go to England.² Career sounds perilous if absence prolonged. Filming chaotic she says.

Monday 14th Jane Swanson arrived with clothes and papers to sign. Became thoroughly sloshed. [...]

Tuesday 15th, Céligny Brook arrived.³ Very T and E by evening.⁴ Film (Jackpot) still hanging on. Personally have no hope.

Wednesday 16th (78kg)⁵ Brook left. T and E again. Went to see Maria's school. Welsh-speaking headmaster (Thomaster) seems efficient. Goes in next September together with friend Tournesol.⁶

Thursday 17th, Céligny (78kg) Sunbathed. Biked.

Friday 18th Fasted all day. While we biked to Founey, E'en So unprecedently walked to Café de la Gare.⁷ Astonishing found eating in kitchen. Cycled from Nyon. [...]

Saturday 19th (77kg) Maria starts school tomorrow evening.

Tuesday 22nd (78kg) Talked E and Liza. Liza begs me to go see Elizabeth. Said would think about same.

Wednesday 23rd (77¹/₂kg) Fasted all day talked E in London hospital. Sounds v. little. Can't keep anything down. [...]

Thursday 24th (76¹/₂kg) To Gstaad for the night. Drove M-Moke. Froze and wind-burned. Bed early with book. Felt terrible. Awoke feeling splendid. How and Mara talk and talk and talk.

Friday 25th, Gstaad Felt immensely better. Left Gstaad noon [...]. Bis still blowing but this time at my back so made good time.⁸ Went ahead of hired Merc as latter so much faster. Had lunch between Vevey and Lausanne.⁹ Good food. (Le Vieux Moulin) Place – village yclept Epesse.¹⁰ Mara says Howard to give straight talk to E. Wish he w'nt [sic] put her misplaced loyalty on defensive.

Saturday 26th, Céligny (78¹/₂kg) Sunbathed all day. Read new sympathetic Napoleon also D. Francis thriller. JB, Maria and friend [...] came by train from Gstaad for weekend. [...]¹¹

Sunday 27th (78kg) Had a Gibson.¹² First for weeks. Hated it though well made by JB. Sunbathed, read, bicycled all day. Bise still blowing therefore weather perfect. Cold in the shade. Garden a riot of colour. Cherry, apple, pear, peach blossom. Talked E in hospital: Sounds much chippier. [...]

Monday 28th (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday sunned, read, new biography of Coleridge by one Fulman.¹³ Fascinating. Rode on bike to Commugny and back.¹⁴ Non-stop. Don't feel going on 50 at all. More like 40. [...] Had raclette at Village near Nyon.

Tuesday 29th, Céligny (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday sunned, read went to airport to see off Howard and family keeping Layton with us to take him interview at Int. School Gen.¹⁵ Shopped in Nyon. Read Parkinson's book on footballer Best.¹⁶ Horribly common. Talked to E last night. Sounds very depressed. Her film like mine seems doomed. [...]

Wednesday 30th, Céligny (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday saw Layton to school. Lunched at airport. [...] Bought JB watch (automatique) bought myself Power Certina for deep sea diving.¹⁷ When I am going to do that nobody knows. New watch stopped during night! Furious. Coffee'd and bicycled break-neck speed around block. Weather patchy. Read. Times crossword. Biked couple of miles. Martini at lunch. Ugh! Read. Read. Read no writing.

MAY

Thursday 1st, Céigny (77kg) Dinner with Stross and wife?¹⁸ Yes. Their place 6.30. Perfect content. At peace. Film still on officially but personally give it no chance. Had above dinner with Strosses at Cully (Hotel de Raisin) good food and cosy room.¹⁹ Stross same as all producers. Full of rubbish. Offered me another script. Will read. JB drove both ways. Early to bed.

Friday 2nd (76kg) [...] Rode bike to Founex for milk for JB's breakfast. Couldn't carry other odd and ends on bike so biked back and drove back to pick up goods. Had one martini (vodka). All fuzzy. Wrote Aaron. Wired Kate on acceptance in colleges. Am giving her car. Weather still miraculous though farmers want rain. Very sunburned. JB a delight.

Saturday 3rd (75¹/₂kg) Heard from Brook and (later) Solowicz that I start work again on Monday in Nice.²⁰ Mixed feelings but chiefly (a) money and (b) might as well get it over.

Picked up Maria at Montreux. She is smoking very heavily. Bit much at her age – 14 – and shall say something though it's a bit kettle and pot. Watched West Ham beat Fulham in English Cup-final.²¹ Soccer's very dull even on this occasion. Can't understand its popularity.

Sunday 4th (75¹/₂kg) Arrived Nice.

Tuesday 13th Arrived from Nice. Private jet. On health kick. Euphemism for on wagon.

Wednesday 14th, Céigny Had shock when Solowicz called and said they want me back in Nice tonight. Said NO! unless money actually in bank. Will await results today with trepidation. Wanna stay home and read and write!

Thursday 15th Phew! T. Young called Solowicz to tell me not come.²² For this relief much thanks. Weather gorgeous.

Friday 16th Read all day. Mosley by one Skidelsky.²³ Talked E in Leningrad. Sounded fine. Her film moving at last. No news of mine. Hope there never is. Odd feeling reading Mosley corresponding so much to own childhood in 30s.

Saturday 17th Sunned, read, biked.

Sunday 18th Booze.

Monday 19th Booze.

Tuesday 20th Booze.

Wednesday 21st Booze.

Thursday 22nd Booze.

Friday 23rd Booze.

Saturday 24th Went into clinic late afternoon.

Sunday 25th Tests and books.

Monday 26th More tests hate clinics.

Tuesday 27th Home from three day check-up in clinic. OK everywhere except for slightly enlarged liver. No wonder.

Wednesday 28th Lunch and chat with one Goldman – potential producer of Dustman.^{24} Dread it. Turned out to be nice but callow. Too much so for a producer perhaps. We shall see. Saw Leeds beaten by Huns.^{25}

Thursday 29th Wrote E. Read and read. Strange request from Elish to deposit two books and script at Hotel President.^{26} Puzzling. Weather bad. Might go to Gstaad. If weather good. Gareth asking for money again.^{27} No chance.

Friday 30th Weather abominable practically confined to house [...]. Read three books. None much good but one (Warlock) readable. Another by Auchinloss. Lawyers and law etc.^{28} Readable. Just.

Saturday 31st, Céigny Walked, read, went to airport to pick up papers and lunched. Rain, rain, rain. Called Gstaad for Maria. All out on a 'course'. Weather same there. How weather affects my moods. Bad weather bad mood etc. Born of the sun despite the valleys.

JUNE

Sunday 1st, Céligny Read, read, biked. Latent (consciously latent) desire to write a book keeping me awake at nights. The creative, or may be the destructive urge is building up to a rape of words. I start and stop and start again. There is a furnace of ideas that must be put out. But what form do I take?

Monday 2nd Weather foul. Reading, as Somerset M. said is a disease.²⁹ Found paperback by Romain Gary called White Dog.³⁰ Brilliantly evocative. He writes with great facility. Wish I could. Every word I write I suspect the next day. Talked to Elisheba. Very self-sufficient. Brittle.

Tuesday 3rd This is like a ship's log. Weather half and half. Mont Blanc crystal clear. Shopped in Nyon for pens and drank tea while waiting for Anna to buy the staples. Talked to ETB.

Wednesday 4th Wrote, read, tried desperately to get Solowicz on phone to put bets on Derby.³¹ To our fury Jeannie's horse an outsider would have won 4000 FRS with 500 each way. Great fun. Had one Martini which knocked my brains out combined with mild sleeping pill. Slept eleven hours!

Thursday 5th Brilliant weather. Sat in the sun and read. Listened to BBC. Found bright red face didn't realize I'd been out so long. Dined Hotel de Lac, Coppet.³² [...] Still shaky from withdrawal. Very much better though. Reading new biography of Mao. More and more fascinated with China.

Friday 6th Sun, the great sun! Went to Geneva for physical check. All good. Got home about six o'clock to find Brook here together with 21 year old MG in very good nick both of them.³³ Got sloshed (not very) in celebration. JB took pictures of the car.

Saturday 7th Another brilliant day. Lay or sat in the sun all during its burning hours. Hid my face from it as am bright red. Brook feels helpless in a hopeless world. So do I. JB a gem. Vote yes or no for Europe, overwhelmingly in favour. Nobody seems to have realized that 'Yes' or 'No' is the same date as D-Day.³⁴ Very odd.

Sunday 8th Great sun. None of us went anywhere except JB to the airport for hot-dog (her) and newspapers for all. Otherwise got tanned again and read again but wrote nothing. I must start on something soon.

Monday 9th Discovered that JB leaves for LA tomorrow morning. Leaves Geneva at 8.50. Sad to see her go as adore the child – albeit 31 but has to be there for passport for son. Back in a week. Wrote letter to ETB but can't bring myself to send it.

Tuesday 10th Saw JB off. Lunched at La Réserve.^{35} Took MG to be overhauled. Read, but still no writing. All this stuff bursting to come out but no response from the body – writing I mean. Weather at end of day turning around. Tomorrow likely to be lousy.

Wednesday 11th Boozed a bit.

Thursday 12th Nothing to report. Reminiscenced with Brook about things past. Drank wine.

Friday 13th Wined and am getting fat around the sides.

Saturday 14th Same again. Read a book but can't remember it.

Sunday 15th JB arrived back.

Monday 16th Brook left for London. Took MG in to be overhauled.

Tuesday 17th Read, wrote, biked. Still drinking but not much. Wine only.

Wednesday 18th Boozed mildly. Weather dreadful.

Thursday 19th Same.

Friday 20th Same.

Saturday 21st Same. Starting to feel ill.

Sunday 22nd Going into DR tomorrow.^{36}

Monday 23rd Verdun, wife, Hilda and husband arrived from Thun where they are on package tour.^{37} Met them at Cornavin full of vitality.^{38}

Tuesday 24th Weather good. Went round lake on ferry boat. Good time had by

all. Drank beer.

Wednesday 25th Relatives stayed extra night.

Thursday 26th Up to Gstaad stayed one night. Gloomy place. Picked up Maria from school. Said farewell to staff at school.

Friday 27th Went to Thun. Lunched with family. Drove home. Lecture from Verdun on booze. Salutary.

Saturday 28th Stopped booze and Richard is his shaky self again. Dustman off as suspected.

Sunday 29th Booze or drug-ridden call from E to JB (who said I wasn't here) in which she told JB to leave me and Céligny was such a dull place. Is never going to call again. Well. Well.

Monday 30th Sober and shakeless. Report from Dr OK but must watch cholesterol count.

Blood group A-Neg. Never knew that before. Biked, played ping-pong with Troy.³⁹

JULY

Tuesday 1st Biked and read am perfectly content when not boozing.

Wednesday 2nd Gained 2½kg. Back on diet. JB buying every conceivable gadget for kitchen. Biked to lake with Troy. Have taught him to drive Mini-Moke. Can't get him off it now. Must check on MG.

Thursday 3rd Arose at 6.30. Walked around block at spanking pace. Sun out so sat and read and pondered. Got rid of hired car. Biked in the evening with kids and JB. Read again until minuit.⁴⁰ Awoke at 6. Full of vitamins and fit as 30. Not a drink in sight for days.

Friday 4th Walked round block 7am. 28 minutes. Read Angela Davis' autobiography.⁴¹ Not very impressed. Watched Wimbledon B. J. King whopped Goolagong 6–0 6–1.⁴² Massacre. Went to bed early. Slept like proverbial log last night. One of the rewards of sobriety though Dylan told me otherwise. Over-ate.

Saturday 5th Walked block. Sat in watery sunshine. Solowicz came from town. Smug odious little man. Think might go to NY and LA 'to be seen' as they say. Much prefer solitude. [...] Dinner in Founex. Good. People at next table very German, very English, very loud.

Sunday 6th Sunned a bit read and read biked a bit. Bored. Troy drives moke all day long unless stopped. [...]

Monday 7th JB crashed into tractor from next door farm so sent for Hertz.⁴³ Lunched. Stopped at service station and found that MG was fully serviced so now have one crashed car, one wreck (temp I hope) and hired one. Talked to E and Liza (both in London). Liza expecting (hoping) to come here on Tuesday.

Tuesday 8th Made various arrangements with Kate who's in Paris and Liza. They arrive Tuesday. Brother Will and wife Betty plus Rhian (daughter) want to come but date not fixed yet. Gawd help me.

Wednesday 9th La Réserve for lunch. Very hot. Read [...] biography of one Hankey never heard of him.⁴⁴

Thursday 10th Table tennised with Troy. He could become very good. Stiff as a brace afterwards. Weather brilliant but suddenly turned. [...] Am insane for sweets and ice cream. Can't stop and sleep a lot. Very bad.

Friday 11th Took crashed car and MG to carrosserie.⁴⁵ Meantime hired car again. Maddening. Read book by Shirley MacLaine.⁴⁶ Not very good but did increase interest in China. Must go there. Early to bed. Ate ice and chocs all day long again.

Saturday 12th Weighed 81kgs! 176lbs! 12st 8! Disgraceful. That's what Tete de Negre, Suchard, et al. can do to a slim lissome lithe limber 49 year old. Went on stringent diet (OK, WD⁴⁷ of low carb). Talked to Liza who wanted to get hold of Kate in Paris [...]. Biked to Grans beach with Troy.⁴⁸ Horrid. Lunched at Dominos.⁴⁹ Pedal boated. Swam in lake. T. Tennis with JB and Troy. Exhausted.

Sunday 13th, Céligny ETB returned Leningrad. She sounds a harassed mess.

Wonder if I can put up with all that again. Try I suppose. Have an idea it won't last. Also she is beginning to sound like her mother at times. Frightening prospect. She denied what she'd said to JB about 'Why don't you leave. You're young and life must be boring in a Swiss village etc.' JB said nothing except let her ramble on.

Monday 14th (80kg) Glorious morn. Awoke at 5.30. [...] Very hot and sweaty. Couldn't read in the sun as sweat poured into my eyes. [...] Keep on dreaming that I've been drinking and then awake with delight to find I have not!

Tuesday 15th (79kg) Awoke at six. A beautiful morning. Hope weather holds. Kate arrived looking glorious. Hasn't grown which is a good thing. They, the females stayed up until 2.30 where I found them when I came down for ice cold water. Liza arrives to-morrow. Fullish house. Swam in lake at Céligny with Troy. Lunched at D'Allevés.⁵⁰ Table tennis with Troy. LOST! Now for Liza!

Wednesday 16th (79kg) Liza arrived à l'heure!⁵¹ Still short with yellow teeth but lovely nevertheless.

Thursday 17th (79kg) Kids settling sleeping arrangements. Maria has dreadful cough. Taking for X-ray. Turned out to be sinus. [...] Kate and Liza corporate devils. Troy very spoiled but not by me. Getting better. Bit of a smart-ass. He'll learn.

Friday 18th (79kg) Will Betty Rhian arrived 1½ hours too early. I was infuriated. Will in bad shape. Has become very old man. Wheel-chair, stick and all.

Saturday 19th Weather lousy. Will and I stayed all day together. Took girls and Troy to discotheque at Nyon. Danced! Twice. Left and took taxi home after 10 minutes. Sanka with cream and off to bed with Kipling (biography).⁵²

Sunday 20th Awoke with the dawn. Sat on terrace and read tedious book by Michener clept Drifters what a poor mind he has!⁵³ Played ping-pong. Sat in sun. Still on diet. Down from that appalling 81kg to 77. Will broke my sword-stick silly bastard and fell to boot. Putting in hospital tomorrow. He's a mess. Wife Bett f. stupid. Daughter fat and staggeringly tongue struck. K leaves tomorrow.

Monday 21st Sunned swam read – even letters. Aaron intolerably repetitive. Have dreams of firing him but after 26 years together with multiple sclerosis haven't the courage.

Tuesday 22nd Took Will to hospital. Endless corridors. Started smoking herbal cigs. Not bad. Girls went to discotheque in Geneva. Little ones not allowed in.

Wednesday 23rd (77+kg) Swam, biked, sat in sun with Liza, read visited Will in hospital. They may have found root of trouble. Hope to God yes.

Thursday 24th (77kg) Woke 6am spent all morning at hospital with Will in agony. Impossible to find doctor. Saw nurse. Insisted she gave him shot. Better after that. Went home after that in fury and as usual ate and ate chocs and ice-cream. Will show on scales tomorrow. Read sad and silly little book called Exterminator.⁵⁴ Re-reading Golden Bough.⁵⁵

Friday 25th (77kg) Saw Will in hospital. Looks terrible and is in great pain all the time. Insisted they gave him stronger painkillers.

Friday [Saturday] 26th (77kg) Went to bring Will home from hospital.

Saturday [Sunday] 27th Took whole family to Rolle to eat, swim, row, sunbathe. Will much better.

Monday 28th Talked to Will all day practically. Surprising how little one knows about one's own brother.

Tuesday 29th Sunned. Had tea with producer [...] at D'Alleves. Very German. Have a feeling this film won't surface either. Has the same air as Jackpot. Takes place in Israel so I might see it at last.⁵⁶ [...]

Wednesday 30th Exercised but irritable all day. Liza going through yet another crisis with some bloke in Geneva via discotheque. Had eyes tested again. Bloke says I read too much. [...] Wish to Christ that Liza would grow an inch or two.⁵⁷ Talked to Gwen Gwyneth Kate. Norma. Brian Tashorne popped in to talk rugby. Told highly suspect story about Carwyn James and Llanelli.⁵⁸

Thursday 31st

Liza and Maria leave today for Leningrad. 33 days booze-less. I'm as brown as I can get so didn't court the sun yesterday. Read biography of Dorothy L. Sayers – Such a strange Lady.⁵⁹ Will still boringly ill some days.

AUGUST

Friday 1st National Holiday. Went shopping Geneva. Bought new typewriter.

Saturday 2nd Lindsay Anderson and Gottlieb arrive today.⁶⁰

Sunday 3rd Glorious day. Liza, ETB, phoned. Latter finished on the 14th inst. Can't believe it and think of nothing else. What will it be like seeing her again. I'm a little scared. Jeannie Bell desperate. Keep my fingers crossed.

Monday 4th Very hot.

Tuesday 5th Sent telegram to Liza. ETB up to some game I don't quite understand.

Wednesday 6th Liza's birthday. Send another gram to Liza. Obtained temporary hearing-aid for Will. Revelation he says.

Thursday 7th Talked Solowicz. Cannot find room anywhere for weekend for Jeannie and me.

Friday 8th Went 'La Réserve', Versoix for weekend with JB. Tiny room. Hated it.

Saturday 9th Weather uncertain. Under façade hotel is gimcrack. [...] Saw film in a cinema yet! English version Burt Lancaster and Paul Scofield. Indifferent thriller.⁶¹

Sunday 10th Went home to Céligny. Had left roof window in bathroom open. Place soaked by furious rains while away. Had to remove carpet.

Monday 11th Terrible weather. Stayed home all day apart from morning visit to Coppet for 'Boules des Berlin' – otherwise doughnuts fresh from oven. Talked Aaron. Sounded 100 years old. ETB did not call as promised. Troy very recalcitrant. Needs stiff discipline.

SEPTEMBER

Saturday 6th Céligny with ETB and Liza and friend Ali (Alexandra) Maria. Raymond took them all dancing. Both according to telegram should have arrived yesterday but muck up and arrive today. ETB got tearful about HW's father.⁶² Good God the man is 80. Sq. for the 4 or 5th time. [sic] Still no booze.

Sunday 7th Troy arrives, Layton arrives. Both arrived! Tremendous thunderstorm. Phones have been dead for (so far) 16 hours. Maria, Ally (Liza's friend), Layton, Maria, Liza, so full house.

Monday 8th, Céligny Children back to School? [...] E and I more nervous than they. Bags, bikes E called HW. Long. E sounds so dramatic on telephone. She's just apologized by saying she has a lousy cold. [...]

Tuesday 9th Slept late. Went into Coppet for doughnuts. To Au Domino for E's handbag. Lunched D'Alleves. Kids have day off on Thurs. [...] Terribly sleepy all day after bad night. Article McCall's hanging over my head.⁶³

Wednesday 10th Kate's birthday. One day's holiday for Troy, Layton, Maria.

Thursday 11th Liza and Alessandra Mavroleon (Ally) left by train. [...]

Monday 15th – Wednesday 17th, Gstaad

Thursday 18th, Gstaad Brook arrived. Drove down to Geneva to pick him up. Looks very good.

Friday 19th, Gstaad Kids arrived for weekend.

Saturday 20th, Gstaad Kids and Gstaad. Troy cooked a supper that was an abomination to the Lord. The dessert was unspeakable.

Sunday 21st Children returned (train) to school. Going (us) to S. Africa on Wednesday. Reading up in Encyclopedia Britannica. My ignorance is appalling.

Monday 22nd Sunned. Read.

Tuesday 23rd, Gstaad-Céligny Left for Céligny with Brook and bike in exchange for Troy-Liza bike at school. Did it all in one fell swoop.

Wednesday 24th, Céigny Flew Geneve – Zurich. Zurich – Johannesburg. 14 hours.

Thursday 25th, Johannesburg Arrived Johannesburg. Many people at airport. Thousands I suppose.

Friday 26th Went to ‘club’ downstairs with creepy Peter Lawford.⁶⁴ [...] Terrible food danced with unknown girl. Press took pics. Also said I was drunk. Cheek. [...] Went to tennis. Pres and wife.⁶⁵ Usual agonizing boredom stiff with protocol.

Saturday 27th Tennis. Ugh! [...] Ringo out of his skull.⁶⁶ Very unhappy man.

Sunday 28th Went to ‘Grand Bal’. Auctioned ‘Hiz’ and ‘Liz’ for 2000 Rand. Much the biggest buy of the evening. Went to bed at 6am.

Monday 29th, Johannesburg – Chobe Jet (Lear) to Chobe.⁶⁷ 1 hour 45 minutes. Landed on grass strip. Very bumpy. Saw elephants, baboons, buffaloes? Other people had terrible journey. [...] Married Elizabeth Zulu fashion.

Tuesday 30th, Chobe Went up river with Fritz and Daniel (Black).⁶⁸ Fascinating encounter with bee-eating-birds troglodytes. Saw 30–40 elephants? Also fascinating. About 5–15 baboons surrounded our suite. We thought it normal but discovered that it was a phenomenon never seen before. It would of course occur when E was here. Hereforth to be known as Elizabeth's baboons. Strange. Richard Barrett (3 Degrees man) pestered us all evening.⁶⁹ Quite scary.

OCTOBER

Wednesday 1st, Chobe – Kruger⁷⁰ Land-Rovered through real bush. Non-tourist route to lose press. E took snap after snap of you name it she took it. Result – no film in the camera and eleven bruises around her body where she banged herself against the turret of Rover. She did it again!

Thursday 2nd, Kruger – Johannesburg Helicoptered over Kruger Park. Stampeded elephants and buffalo. Saw our second sable antelope – a very rare creature we're told. Eliz had immediate mutual love affair with cheetah – yclept Targa. Hope the pictures come out this time. Never seen E so happy but our hearts belong to Chobe. [...]

Friday 3rd, Johannesburg Jetted to J'burg. E was in agony to the point of tears which she hid from me but I am now unfoolable. I scratched her back and held her hand. Land-Rovered again with Targa or perhaps Tagra? Latter refused to hunt impala came back to Land Rover and E every time. Like Ferdinand the bull.⁷¹ Though he has hunted and killed, his owner assured us. E went for X-ray of ribs. No cracks but two spots on lung. We must make them go away.

Saturday 4th The most agonizing hour of my life ended at approx 1pm. Yesterday I mean. I had spent the previous hours back to approx 4pm Thursday in the most terrible fear for Elizabeth's and my life. Sleep was no palliative. I am still suffering from delayed shock and will in a lesser form, I think, continue to suffer for the rest of my life. E was incomparably brave. I love her mindlessly and hopelessly.⁷²

Sunday 5th We leave for Chobe tomorrow and will be in our small portion of the barren earth, paste and cover to our bones, for some days.⁷³ I am leaving the 10,000 rand I earned on Saturday morning for our return trips. And there shall be no mucking about at Kruger or the Cape. Chobe belongs to E and me. We love each other. It's very simple. [...]

Monday 6th E in splendid form and a trifle tiddly but sweetly so when we went to Sol's house for a late (very late!) lunch. Then E with what seems like aid and abettance from Adele (P.R.O. for Sunshine Hotels) that E and I should get married in Chobe this week I thought they were joking and said so.⁷⁴ But E and E turned out to be serious. Result the latter half of the day a series of ¹/₂ joking ¹/₂ bitter invective from E. I told her that I was afraid! Literally afraid, at the moment, that marriage might horrifyingly end in divorce. We will of course get married again if E so wishes but until I get over my fear and since I am, at least, deliriously happy at the moment why spoil it!

Tuesday 7th, Johannesburg – Chobe Grass landing. Slight brush with grim reaper. Left suspension, left wheel packed it in. Very rough landing. Guess that we were within 6–8–12 inches from kingdom come. Decided to get married here as soon as possible unless E (or I, for that matter) changes mind. Love her beyond measure and above anything. She fast asleep. Bathed and shamp in private pool. Shiver, shiver, shake shake. Can't wait for E to awaken! [...]

Wednesday 8th, Chobe Awoke at dawn. Went up river in the afternoon. Carmine breasted bee-eater chief delight. E talks endlessly about wedding. Can't make up my mind. Might be that cancer scare has given everything an unnatural shape. Also, like being hanged, it concentrates a man's mind wonderfully. All well.

Thursday 9th Stayed in bed all day yesterday. Read and slept. E fed me in bed lunch though had dinner in living room. Looks like marriage is on. I wonder why I am still doubtful. It doesn't seem right but I don't know why. Perhaps I'm afraid of legal responsibility. Also sex urge temporarily dormant. Very puzzling.

Friday 10th⁷⁵ Got shamefully sloshed and despite all my idiocies – nasty too – we are as happy as children. We catch our breaths every so often and say with a kind of smiling wonder and delight ‘Hey!’ Do you realize we are actually married?’ We must have said it scores of times. I have never been so happy in my life. E cured me with loving even lavish attention. This is far better marriage than the first despite its silly (and dangerous) beginning [...]

Saturday 11th Woke up feeling very ill and to make sure that I would not get sloshed on ‘livener’ ETB gave me antabus which might quite easily have killed me feeling as I was.⁷⁶ However, despite physical ill-being felt emotionally very content. Worried about E. She not aware of it but sometimes, in a few seconds she changes colour. Much as I (and she) loves this place must get her back to somewhere sophisticated for a thorough check up. Sleep on it and tell her tomorrow perhaps. Nobody else seems to notice, but I watch my love intently without making [it] obvious. Please God she's OK. I'd die without her now.

Sunday 12th Went on picnic. Cucumber sandwiches on the marriage grounds. Cold wine, beer, champagne and cold chicken for the other. Coca-Colas and water for me. E still worrying me. So much so that I wonder if she thinks me a bit weird at times. She started talking oddly too now and again. [...] Went by Land Rover and returned by boat. Fritz (manager) Brian (white hunter) and wife.⁷⁷ [...] E came back into bedroom and fell fast asleep. Is asleep now. Will finish this tomorrow.

Monday 13th E arrived back from safari very late. [...] Black told me 'Madam sick,' she was too. Brian and Fritz with much difficulty, as there was no purchase at first got her out of Land Rover. Put her to bed. Undressed her. Said she was fine until she smoked cigarette then blacked out. Insisted she took shot. What is it? Nerves? Not enough exercise? Can't be lungs unless doctor an idiot. Liver? Want to take her back to England for check.

Tuesday 14th [...] E assiduously writing journal. Writes simply and well though spelling atrocious. She felt faint again twice after cigs. What the devil is it? Read hysterical book by one Douglas Reed called Siege of S. Africa.⁷⁸ Utterly absurd political rubbish for the most part but sometimes some truth to it. Must find out more about South Africa.

Wednesday 15th Got up early. Drank some wine while E asleep. Felt terrible. She took one look at me and put me to bed. I said it was malaria pills. She very not amused. Slept it off in a couple of hours. She still writing. Got the bug of writing. Told her the hard part was yet to come. News of wedding has broken earlier than expected. [...]

Thursday 16th Press all over the place, so confined to camp. [...] Gavin enjoying himself hugely though pretends to great savoir faire.⁷⁹ E getting lazy again about writing. Loves Chobe (so do I) but would like to see and hear more – not animals but people of Botswana. One of them curtsied to E yesterday and she was frightened of the obsequy. They smile, she says, but hardly ever with their eyes. I must know more about them. How do they really think of white men? Of Europeans?

Friday 17th E didn't write at all yesterday. Gave her a mild row. Will not believe that she has anything to say and that she writes beautifully. Needs constant reassurance. Offers of money – quite large sums for her journal pouring in, so she may get her finger out again. [...] Press know all about wedding down to tiniest details that we worked out it can only be Ambrose (District Commiss) Masalila.⁸⁰ Wedding place has name apparently – Serendella, apparently.⁸¹ Cannot blame him. Press very tenacious and insidious. Also obscure DC in obscure country doubtless enjoyed his hour upon the stage. Very unusual man if he didn't. Press searching for us everywhere. [...] Gavin beaming with long 'talks' on telex with J'burg. Must teach him not to get too funny with press. [...]

Saturday 18th E beginning to turn indifferent re HW.⁸² Picknicked on marriage grounds. Bangers and Br and Butt.⁸³ Delicious! Fritz, Brian with us. E went away into a copse and sat writing sitting on a rock. Utter human stillness with air thrilled by bird-calls. Only Manley Hopkins could even attempt to catch in words the magic of this place. For a time we played Beethoven and Brahms for a time but they were an interference. Shut them up. Fritz and Brian read, Eliz wrote and I sat and the day wore exquisitely on. I swam in the Chobe for a time. E waded in boots. Result E lost one boot. That is it split at the seams and may or may not be rescue-able. Doubt it with local craftsmen. E very squiffy for first time for ages. And I don't know how. She had little to drink. I must stop worrying about her.

Sunday 19th American reporters here in force it seems. Therefore stayed in all day. Very hot. Our little monkeys (vemsets) didn't come to be fed yesterday.⁸⁴ E very disappointed. Read book entitled Solo re wild dog and runt of the pack, very moving.⁸⁵ E not well at all. Don't know how to help except put her to bed and feed her. Honestly think before too late that she should go into sanatorium. [...] Wonder if booze at fault though she doesn't drink much but if liver bad even a little is bad. Love her and cross fingers.

Monday 20th [...] Two little birds crashed into window. One merely stunned. Other looks dead. let him lie for a bit. Neck broken perhaps. Both on their feet after a while. One bird got himself up and away. Other on feet. Put food out for him. Took picture. Both OK and they flew away.

Tuesday 21st [...] Drank enormously and cheated when E wasn't looking. Don't remember much except falling a lot and suggesting divorce. Can't control my hands so cannot write any more. One word only. Very silly. Booze!

Wednesday 22nd, Chobe Having been so drunk yesterday felt terrible in morning and was desperately ill. Went quietly at 9.30 to find a double brandy. Bar closed until 10. Asked for Fritz (manager). Reluctantly he opened bar for me and suggested vodka as it wouldn't be so smelly when E had morning kiss. Drank it with very shaking hands. Have become a 'falling down'. [...] My hand writing indication of shakes. Painful knee, bottom, right elbow, back of head, right ear in great pain. [...] E an angel and looked like one. How does she do it? Look so well I mean for she had a lot to drink too. Fed monkeys who now come about 4–5 feet into room. Starting to tame them.

Thursday 23rd Two weeks married

Still faintly dizzy if I make any sudden movement. Awoke at 5.15. E too and went lion hunting with Brian and his wife. Brian and E had seen a great beast last evening in all his glory. E agog with excitement. We searched for two hours with no success but saw everything else. Baboons, impala, kudus, buffalo, superb birds, the absurd undertaker storks that delight me with their parody of the human species. Read for the rest of the day. Marais My Friends the Baboons.⁸⁶ Powerfully and readably evocative. [...] Had to have helping hand to walk first few steps in any direction. Very disappointed in myself but periodically no doubt will fall into the trap.

Friday 24th Sat and read all day history of Zulus. Washing of the Spears.⁸⁷ Good history but sometimes hard work. Never moved out of the room. [...] E in good form and me much better though occasional wistful look at a bottle. Shen (Buddhist) and Fritz for drinks.⁸⁸ Told acting stories. They laughed a lot. Hope they enjoyed themselves. Made superb love to E in the afternoon. Gets better all the time if that's possible. Felt heavy weight of man's guilt at intervals. Very Celtic and Scandinavian. Thought about death too much. Much staring. [...]

Saturday 25th, Chobe Read and read as usual. Went to see potential water bore. Beautiful location. Am continually surprised by ignorance of people who live here as to primitive geology, flora, fauna etc. [...] Engrossed by Zulus. What a bureaucratic logistical mess on our part thrilling with personal bravery on both sides.⁸⁹

Sunday 26th Stayed at home. Fritz's birthday (35). All went out on boat 4.30pm. Sans me. Just as well. All got sloshed except me naturally. Fritz especially falling down etc. Much baring of the soul. Was quiet and polite. Hard work. [...] Looking forward to Europe. First time since we arrived. Miss books – I mean mine – and children. Will doubtless miss Chobe as soon as we get home. [...]

Monday 27th Drank a lot. Don't remember anything, if at all.

Tuesday 28th Drank some more.

Wednesday 29th Ditto. Must stop!

Thursday 30th Shook and shivered all day long today. Read very dense history of Africa. Lost five days behind me. [...]

Friday 31st Felt inexplicably terrible last [night]. Slept badly. Actors' dreams. Went out on the tiny out-board motorboat. Very uncomfortable. Saw little but all made up for by a superb sunset. Read about Africa again. Africa in History by B. Davidson.⁹⁰ Africa now coming out of ears. Gavin upset about something. Long letter about how brilliant he is and how we don't appreciate him. [...] Off to Victoria Falls to stay for two days.⁹¹ Then J'burg. Then home. [...]

NOVEMBER

Saturday 1st, Chobe – Victoria Falls [...] Flew to Victoria Falls. Very plush hotel called 'Elephant Falls.'⁹² Naturally. Must write a thesis or at least article on subject of new hotels and why they won't learn from the failures of the older ones. [...] Air conditioning merely a noise and the hotel is not even finished yet. Took pills for bed dutifully but hopelessly awake. Put me into a fury that would not abate!

Sunday 2nd, Victoria Falls E practically sloshed all day on and off mostly because we got into bitter arguments about wording of invitation cards re my birthday party. At one point after I had been peculiarly destructive she went off in tears to 'Shen Buddhist's' room. I let her stay there for an hour or so and alternately read and wrote, very difficult stuff the latter because I know what I want to write but cannot decide on its form. Have decided that it must take two forms in two books. It means a year's work and a lot of research (which I will pay for). Finally went into SL. Budd's room where E was tearless but still sloshed. Later news came from Lantz that E's article accepted, bought for, by LH Journal for 25,000!⁹³ [...] E screamed with delight and I mentally with relief. It would have hurt her if opposite and my judgement would have been suspect. [...]

Monday 3rd, Victoria Falls – Johannesburg Flew to J'burg. And off to the Landrost, where I spent the rest of the day reading.⁹⁴

Tuesday 4th, Johannesburg Booze.

Wednesday 5th Booze.

Thursday 6th Booze.

Friday 7th Started antabuse. Absolute torture. Read books all day long and tried to sleep fitfully. [...]

Saturday 8th Big pull out from booze. Talked to Liza on phone. Very sweet. Doctors all over me taking blood tests, intravenous feeding etc. I look terrible and feel diabolical. Arranged for return of ring I bought E. Amicably arranged eventually.⁹⁵ Really must now never drink again except possibly a glass of wine with dinner.

Sunday 9th Feel better but curiously muted. Leave tonight for London. Started but for once will not finish a massive book by John O'Hara.⁹⁶ How that man wrote and wrote and wrote and he might easily have stopped with Samarra and no one would have noticed.⁹⁷

Monday 10th, Johannesburg – London Lots of press. Usual fatuities. Long long journey. Found impossible to sleep. Thought I would sleep today for party tonight but out of question. Felt very nervous. Party well attended but felt remote from everything. Was glad to get away at 1.30? All sloshed. Still failed to sleep.

Tuesday 11th, London Heaps of presents. Can't be bothered opening them. Lots of lovely books including five copies of one. E as nervous as I am. Tomorrow evening present awards for Evening News.⁹⁸ Briefed by three gents about 5pm. All sounds simple. [...]

Wednesday 12th Did TV. Went alright. E looking splendid. Presented award to Albert Finney – a chap I've ever [sic] seen – but called him 'uniquely remarkable'.⁹⁹ Touch of hyperbole but better than the truth. Rather shabby affair and very provincial. [...]

Thursday 13th Had Antabuse and then tried one small vodka. Antabuse works! V. sick unto throws-up and the trots. Didn't feel right for hours. E went to have X-rays. Spots still there but inert as before. Thank God. She very ashamed of me with antabus and vodka. Quite right too. Saw A. Finney for first time in film Orient Express. Very amusing and obviously enjoyed by the cast. Tom very sick (75) and wife Hyral has terminal C.¹⁰⁰ Harvey Orkin died.¹⁰¹ Loved that man. [...]

Friday 14th Saw F. R. Hauser and Alex Cohen at 10.¹⁰² Stayed about one hour. Said I would read play Kean again down in the country.¹⁰³ Frank seems much the same. [...] Am thinking of coming back here to live. Haven't told E this though! Must find out about tax. Decision made to fire Gavin. When? Quite impossible PR man and useless secretary. Gets into panics about everything. No sense of humour either. [...] Slept like top but have cold caught from baby Naomi.¹⁰⁴ E's very bad. Had dinner at Scott's.¹⁰⁵ [...]

Saturday 15th E very bad cold. But went to Hackney anyway to open bazaar for youth club 'Pedro' one of Sheran's good works.¹⁰⁶ Lots of people. Very depressing. I have forgotten the class from which I come. Except that mine is Welsh – no difference. Thought of four to a room. Must go back there on an ordinary night. Do they have ping-pong, billiards etc. If not must buy same. Started to learn German. Not easy. No help from Latin or very little so far. Did two of twenty-six lessons. [...] Saw Match of the Day.¹⁰⁷ [...]

Sunday 16th, Pusey¹⁰⁸ [...] Still learning German. Liza here incl Lord Blandford (James) and Cliff Press Sarah Munster, Peggy Munster (Very young former Peggy – Simon's Aunt Peggy (70) no longer an invalid. (Manor House Bampton).¹⁰⁹ Played and beat Sheran at Scrabble. Not easy. Did some German. Very cold. Walked with Liza and her alley-dog Tramp. Mutual admiration. [...]

Monday 17th Terrible weather. Stayed in all day. Francis Warner came in the morning stayed for lunch. Thinking of doing Timon of Athens. Found to my surprise that I'd never read it. Good sign. Had not read Coriolanus either. Oxford tomorrow. [...]

Tuesday 18th, Pusey – Wales Oxford all day. Lunched at Bear, Woodstock.¹¹⁰ With David Masters (Finance) Elizabeth Sweeting, Francis Warner and Prof (bald) lady from St Anne's.¹¹¹ Terrible weather. Very wet cold. Froze all day. Visited Taylor-Burton.¹¹² Bought £17,500 piece of land for Buckminster Fuller Building.¹¹³ Cheap. Everything very shabby. Clothes cars etc. Students unattractive. Beer warm. Depressing. Glad to get to bed. [...]

Wednesday 19th, Wales Drove to Neath Castle Hotel.¹¹⁴ Terrible. Moved to 'Executive' Hotel, Aberavon.¹¹⁵ Pretty bad too but had a bath to go with it. Tonight a suite. Meanwhile saw Tom in Cwmavon. Looks very ill. His wife in hospital with cancer. Weather wild and Welsh. Had beer and felt very ill. E nagged all day about Elisheba. Said I was ice cold. I'm not but hopeless to prove.^{116}

Thursday 20th Sober and well. Weather good! No rain! Talbot very dramatic at night with huge furnaces going. Overall feeling of grime however despite clarity of air. Saw Dill Dummer and daughter. Told me Charlie Hock is in hospital.^{117} Same age. 'But age with his stealing steps.'^{118} Went to hospital see Hyral. Cancer ward. Hyral must realize she has it. Too intelligent not to. Tom better. Suite nice. Feel comfy for first time. Going to see Michael tomorrow. 2¹/₂ hours drive over Black Mountains.^{119} Wild horses. Faggots and peas lunch. Fish and chips dinner [...].

Friday 21st Sober. Good Weather. [...] Drove to Michael's farm. Over Black Mountains. Wild Wales. Stopped for sust in Red Lion fifteenth century pub.^{120} Black Mountains beautiful. Sheep cows wild ponies. M's place surprisingly well kept.^{121} Huge fire. Ate there. Jo's cooking.^{122} Divine impertinent boy yclept Ben. Hell on wheels. Very bright. Am going to invest £3000 in farm. [...] Inexpressibly pleased by atmosphere at farm. M. very sweet.^{123} [...] Bad cold myself. Pontrhydyfen tomorrow.

Saturday 22nd, Wales Went to Pontrhydyfen. Lunched (Bara Lawr^{124}) with Hilda. Half of Pontrhydyfen must have visited the house. Saw house where I was born. They've tarted it up. E still very ill. Puzzling. Gareth the villain was there with utterly spoiled child ('bratu') otherwise fine boy.^{125} [...] Must earn some ready cash. Trusts inadequate. Looking forward to Switzerland and books and peace. Must write a book. Means another visit to Wales. Autobiog should make some money. Good Yarn! [...]

Sunday 23rd, Wales – London [...] Went to Tom's lunch. T. H. J. (Tom)^{126} very much better. Left for London 2pm. [...] Gavin must go and E must do the sending. Woe is me. Aaron going mad. Three films next year. Plus play. All TV. Very satisfactory. Lots of time off. Huge publicity re visit to Wales. Am feeling very fit and plan to ski over holidays. Can I now stop smoking? Can I diet? Liabilities £9000 car E. Loan £3000 Michael. Intake £150,000. Should manage. Money from writing too hope. German sporadic but coming along. Before long I will write though in that language. Wanna go home.

Monday 24th, Dorchester [Hotel, London] [...] Unusual 24 hours in which I slept 18–20 on and off. [...] E unhappy about something. [...] Talks about sex a lot. Just like Sara (Mom) sometimes. She in a quandary about piece of writing anent our marriage for which L's H. Journal has offered $25000. She very sensitive to criticisms. Warned her. Think she might expand into a book. Good idea! She is also upset that people might think I wrote it. Furious. She must get work soon as L. Olivier has offered TV film. She must do it. Do something. Have to fire Gavin today. Ugh. Liza to have car. Chosen Austin Mini. Long to drive it myself. Also MG should be ready. [...]

Tuesday 25th Cold, E in great form until about 8pm. Was then in terrible pain from neck and hands. Sent urgently for Tina Thatcher. Came within $\frac{1}{2}$ hour. Manipulated neck. Greater pain. Tears. Unusual. Worried to death. Colds still bad. E very beautiful despite pain. Very sleepy (me) all day. Bought German cassettes. Hugo in 3 months. [...] Plucked up courage and fired Gavin verbally. Took it very well. Palliated pill with note asking him to work for us when we start independent TV. [...] Talked with Aaron. Sounded very coherent.

DECEMBER 1975–JUNE 1980

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1975 diary at the end of November. With one exception, he did not resume his personal record until late June 1980.

After spending some time in a London clinic in December, Richard, together with Elizabeth, flew to Gstaad for Christmas. But their second marriage was already failing, and Richard became enchanted with Susan Hunt, wife of Formula 1 world champion, James Hunt (1947–93). The Hunts' marriage was itself in disarray. When Burton flew to New York early in 1976 to prepare for a return to the Broadway stage in the part of Martin Dysart in the Peter Shaffer play Equus, he was joined by Susan. Elizabeth stayed in Gstaad, and had a fling with businessman Peter Darmanin.

Burton first appeared in Equus, succeeding Anthony Perkins (1932–92) in the part, in late February 1976. By this time he had met Elizabeth at the Lombardy Hotel in New York to tell her that he wanted a divorce. James Hunt agreed that he and Susan would divorce also. By mid-August both divorces had been processed and Richard and Susan married in Arlington, Virginia, on 21 August 1976. In October Elizabeth became engaged to US Republican Senator John Warner (1927—) and they married that December.

Following a successful, if brief, run in Equus, Richard filmed Exorcist II: The Heretic in Hollywood and then made a film version of Equus in Toronto in the autumn. He and Susan bought properties in Antigua and in Puerto Vallarta. Before the year was over he recorded Chronicle of an English Crown (Vivat Rex), a 26-episode series for BBC radio about the history of the English monarchy. On 8 March 1977, while aboard a jet flying from Antigua to Switzerland, Burton made what was the only surviving diary entry of that year. Although one cannot be certain that it was part of a longer sequence, the fact that Burton did not therein comment on either beginning or ending this new diary suggests it may well have been one of a number of such entries, the rest of which have not survived.

MARCH [1977]

Tuesday 8th, British Airways, Atlantic¹²⁷ It's 4.45am. i.e. blackest night in an airplane somewhere over the Atlantic Ocean. We should be en-route to Geneva via London. Instead we are en-route to Geneva – yes – but via NY and London; possibly in the same plane with something replaced; probably in another. It is sufferable but only just. Susan was sad and almost tearful when she read news of a young racing driver – Tom Pryce – being killed outright in the SA Grand Prix. I was unmoved.¹²⁸ What a vast difference there is between lamenting the death of someone you know and one you don't. The bell doesn't toll for me.¹²⁹ A million people died of starvation yesterday and no one shed a tear. We are about two hours out of NY. What time we'll get to Geneva is anybody's guess. The best thing to do is not to. Guess, I mean. This too will pass.

We've had a long day and it's obviously going to be longer. We shan't get to Geneva for 10–12 hours surely.

We went in to St John's this morning (i.e. yesterday) heavy bag – books being the main weight – to be left behind in c/o architect Smith to be picked up by lawyer Fuller. Then went with former to see house of associate architect called Frazer. All very Edinburgh Scots with the innate neat smugness of those people. House nice enough but didn't fancy it myself. Small but lacked cosiness. The same applied to Mrs Frazer. I hope Susan's house will be grander and cosier. Don't know how one does that.

Am trying to keep awake until after NY then sleep to England. Can't read! Am, have been, trying to read a detective story by C. Day Lewis (N. Blake).¹³⁰ Won't hold my attention. Susan enclosed in blankets beside me – eyes closed but don't know if asleep. Every other berth in darkness. Stewardess ghost-like and the overhead light throws a shadow from my fist on to the paper so cannot literally read what I'm writing until several words are past. Not that it matters. Am drinking coffee and writing merely to pass the time.

I am glad to be going back to Europe for a short change but not to do looping on a lousy film.¹³¹ Rome will be good to see again though I hope. News is that the paparazzi are a dying – if not dead breed. Hope so for Susan's sake. And mine. Ah what scenes I had with that lot. Endless maniacal chases down the Appia Antica and the Via Pignatelli(?).¹³² Madness on wheels and no fun in it. The paparazzi were so humourless. How I hate and hated them. I see their empty endlessly mindless faces now, vacant and talentless and dirty, with their little chattering scooters and baby-pram Fiats. Auugh!

Somebody's holding back the dawn for surely it should be coming up now or am I going the wrong way? It's 5.35. Antiguan time. Still drinking coffee which I don't usually take in such quantities but I have to stay awake somehow. Smoking cigs. Stopping and staring out of the window over Susan's crouched and feline body. Can't be bothered to write more. Will smoke and doze.

This plane should have been getting us to London in three or four hours.

The summer of 1977 was spent filming The Medusa Touch at Pinewood Studios and then The Wild Geese at Pinewood and in the northern Transvaal, South Africa. Equus was released in October and earned Richard another Academy Award nomination for Best Actor, although in due course Richard Dreyfuss (1947—) won for his performance in The Goodbye Girl.

The years 1978 and 1979 passed relatively quietly. Burton narrated War of the Worlds, filmed Absolution (Shropshire, England), Breakthrough (Germany), Tristan and Isolt (Ireland) and Circle of Two (Toronto). Then in 1980 he returned to the stage again, this time reprising his role as King Arthur in Camelot, which opened its pre-Broadway run on 6 June at the O'Keefe Theatre Centre in Toronto. Then the company moved to New York, where Burton returned to his diary-keeping.

1975

APRIL

Friday 11th Taylors arrived from Leningrad.¹ [...] E has dysentery and may have to go to England.² Career sounds perilous if absence prolonged. Filming chaotic she says.

Monday 14th Jane Swanson arrived with clothes and papers to sign. Became thoroughly sloshed. [...]

Tuesday 15th, Céigny Brook arrived.³ Very T and E by evening.⁴ Film (Jackpot) still hanging on. Personally have no hope.

Wednesday 16th (78kg)⁵ Brook left. T and E again. Went to see Maria's school. Welsh-speaking headmaster (Thomaster) seems efficient. Goes in next September together with friend Tournesol.⁶

Thursday 17th, Céigny (78kg) Sunbathed. Biked.

Friday 18th Fasted all day. While we biked to Founey, E'en So unprecedently walked to Café de la Gare.⁷ Astonishing found eating in kitchen. Cycled from Nyon. [...]

Saturday 19th (77kg) Maria starts school tomorrow evening.

Tuesday 22nd (78kg) Talked E and Liza. Liza begs me to go see Elizabeth. Said would think about same.

Wednesday 23rd (77¹/₂kg) Fasted all day talked E in London hospital. Sounds v. little. Can't keep anything down. [...]

Thursday 24th (76¹/₂kg) To Gstaad for the night. Drove M-Moke. Froze and wind-burned. Bed early with book. Felt terrible. Awoke feeling splendid. How and Mara talk and talk and talk.

Friday 25th, Gstaad Felt immensely better. Left Gstaad noon [...]. Bis still blowing but this time at my back so made good time.⁸ Went ahead of hired Merc as latter so much faster. Had lunch between Vevey and Lausanne.⁹ Good food. (Le Vieux Moulin) Place – village yclept Epesse.¹⁰ Mara says Howard to give straight talk to E. Wish he w'nt [sic] put her misplaced loyalty on defensive.

Saturday 26th, Céligny (78¹/₂kg) Sunbathed all day. Read new sympathetic Napoleon also D. Francis thriller. JB, Maria and friend [...] came by train from Gstaad for weekend. [...]¹¹

Sunday 27th (78kg) Had a Gibson.¹² First for weeks. Hated it though well made by JB. Sunbathed, read, bicycled all day. Bise still blowing therefore weather perfect. Cold in the shade. Garden a riot of colour. Cherry, apple, pear, peach blossom. Talked E in hospital: Sounds much chippier. [...]

Monday 28th (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday sunned, read, new biography of Coleridge by one Fulman.¹³ Fascinating. Rode on bike to Commugny and back.¹⁴ Non-stop. Don't feel going on 50 at all. More like 40. [...] Had raclette at Village near Nyon.

Tuesday 29th, Céligny (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday sunned, read went to airport to see off Howard and family keeping Layton with us to take him interview at Int. School Gen.¹⁵ Shopped in Nyon. Read Parkinson's book on footballer Best.¹⁶ Horribly common. Talked to E last night. Sounds very depressed. Her film like mine seems doomed. [...]

Wednesday 30th, Céligny (77¹/₂kg) Yesterday saw Layton to school. Lunched at airport. [...] Bought JB watch (automatique) bought myself Power Certina for deep sea diving.¹⁷ When I am going to do that nobody knows. New watch stopped during night! Furious. Coffee'd and bicycled break-neck speed around block. Weather patchy. Read. Times crossword. Biked couple of miles. Martini at lunch. Ugh! Read. Read. Read no writing.

MAY

Thursday 1st, Céigny (77kg) Dinner with Stross and wife?¹⁸ Yes. Their place 6.30. Perfect content. At peace. Film still on officially but personally give it no chance. Had above dinner with Strosses at Cully (Hotel de Raisin) good food and cosy room.¹⁹ Stross same as all producers. Full of rubbish. Offered me another script. Will read. JB drove both ways. Early to bed.

Friday 2nd (76kg) [...] Rode bike to Founex for milk for JB's breakfast. Couldn't carry other odd and ends on bike so biked back and drove back to pick up goods. Had one martini (vodka). All fuzzy. Wrote Aaron. Wired Kate on acceptance in colleges. Am giving her car. Weather still miraculous though farmers want rain. Very sunburned. JB a delight.

Saturday 3rd (75¹/₂kg) Heard from Brook and (later) Solowicz that I start work again on Monday in Nice.²⁰ Mixed feelings but chiefly (a) money and (b) might as well get it over.

Picked up Maria at Montreux. She is smoking very heavily. Bit much at her age – 14 – and shall say something though it's a bit kettle and pot. Watched West Ham beat Fulham in English Cup-final.²¹ Soccer's very dull even on this occasion. Can't understand its popularity.

Sunday 4th (75¹/₂kg) Arrived Nice.

Tuesday 13th Arrived from Nice. Private jet. On health kick. Euphemism for on wagon.

Wednesday 14th, Céigny Had shock when Solowicz called and said they want me back in Nice tonight. Said NO! unless money actually in bank. Will await results today with trepidation. Wanna stay home and read and write!

Thursday 15th Phew! T. Young called Solowicz to tell me not come.²² For this relief much thanks. Weather gorgeous.

Friday 16th Read all day. Mosley by one Skidelsky.²³ Talked E in Leningrad. Sounded fine. Her film moving at last. No news of mine. Hope there never is. Odd feeling reading Mosley corresponding so much to own childhood in 30s.

Saturday 17th Sunned, read, biked.

Sunday 18th Booze.

Monday 19th Booze.

Tuesday 20th Booze.

Wednesday 21st Booze.

Thursday 22nd Booze.

Friday 23rd Booze.

Saturday 24th Went into clinic late afternoon.

Sunday 25th Tests and books.

Monday 26th More tests hate clinics.

Tuesday 27th Home from three day check-up in clinic. OK everywhere except for slightly enlarged liver. No wonder.

Wednesday 28th Lunch and chat with one Goldman – potential producer of Dustman.²⁴ Dread it. Turned out to be nice but callow. Too much so for a producer perhaps. We shall see. Saw Leeds beaten by Huns.²⁵

Thursday 29th Wrote E. Read and read. Strange request from Elish to deposit two books and script at Hotel President.²⁶ Puzzling. Weather bad. Might go to Gstaad. If weather good. Gareth asking for money again.²⁷ No chance.

Friday 30th Weather abominable practically confined to house [...]. Read three books. None much good but one (Warlock) readable. Another by Auchinloss. Lawyers and law etc.²⁸ Readable. Just.

Saturday 31st, Céigny Walked, read, went to airport to pick up papers and lunched. Rain, rain, rain. Called Gstaad for Maria. All out on a 'course'. Weather same there. How weather affects my moods. Bad weather bad mood etc. Born of the sun despite the valleys.

JUNE

Sunday 1st, Céligny Read, read, biked. Latent (consciously latent) desire to write a book keeping me awake at nights. The creative, or may be the destructive urge is building up to a rape of words. I start and stop and start again. There is a furnace of ideas that must be put out. But what form do I take?

Monday 2nd Weather foul. Reading, as Somerset M. said is a disease.²⁹ Found paperback by Romain Gary called White Dog.³⁰ Brilliantly evocative. He writes with great facility. Wish I could. Every word I write I suspect the next day. Talked to Elisheba. Very self-sufficient. Brittle.

Tuesday 3rd This is like a ship's log. Weather half and half. Mont Blanc crystal clear. Shopped in Nyon for pens and drank tea while waiting for Anna to buy the staples. Talked to ETB.

Wednesday 4th Wrote, read, tried desperately to get Solowicz on phone to put bets on Derby.³¹ To our fury Jeannie's horse an outsider would have won 4000 FRS with 500 each way. Great fun. Had one Martini which knocked my brains out combined with mild sleeping pill. Slept eleven hours!

Thursday 5th Brilliant weather. Sat in the sun and read. Listened to BBC. Found bright red face didn't realize I'd been out so long. Dined Hotel de Lac, Coppet.³² [...] Still shaky from withdrawal. Very much better though. Reading new biography of Mao. More and more fascinated with China.

Friday 6th Sun, the great sun! Went to Geneva for physical check. All good. Got home about six o'clock to find Brook here together with 21 year old MG in very good nick both of them.³³ Got sloshed (not very) in celebration. JB took pictures of the car.

Saturday 7th Another brilliant day. Lay or sat in the sun all during its burning hours. Hid my face from it as am bright red. Brook feels helpless in a hopeless world. So do I. JB a gem. Vote yes or no for Europe, overwhelmingly in favour. Nobody seems to have realized that 'Yes' or 'No' is the same date as D-Day.³⁴ Very odd.

Sunday 8th Great sun. None of us went anywhere except JB to the airport for hot-dog (her) and newspapers for all. Otherwise got tanned again and read again but wrote nothing. I must start on something soon.

Monday 9th Discovered that JB leaves for LA tomorrow morning. Leaves Geneva at 8.50. Sad to see her go as adore the child – albeit 31 but has to be there for passport for son. Back in a week. Wrote letter to ETB but can't bring myself to send it.

Tuesday 10th Saw JB off. Lunched at La Réserve.^{35} Took MG to be overhauled. Read, but still no writing. All this stuff bursting to come out but no response from the body – writing I mean. Weather at end of day turning around. Tomorrow likely to be lousy.

Wednesday 11th Boozed a bit.

Thursday 12th Nothing to report. Reminiscenced with Brook about things past. Drank wine.

Friday 13th Wined and am getting fat around the sides.

Saturday 14th Same again. Read a book but can't remember it.

Sunday 15th JB arrived back.

Monday 16th Brook left for London. Took MG in to be overhauled.

Tuesday 17th Read, wrote, biked. Still drinking but not much. Wine only.

Wednesday 18th Boozed mildly. Weather dreadful.

Thursday 19th Same.

Friday 20th Same.

Saturday 21st Same. Starting to feel ill.

Sunday 22nd Going into DR tomorrow.^{36}

Monday 23rd Verdun, wife, Hilda and husband arrived from Thun where they are on package tour.^{37} Met them at Cornavin full of vitality.^{38}

Tuesday 24th Weather good. Went round lake on ferry boat. Good time had by

all. Drank beer.

Wednesday 25th Relatives stayed extra night.

Thursday 26th Up to Gstaad stayed one night. Gloomy place. Picked up Maria from school. Said farewell to staff at school.

Friday 27th Went to Thun. Lunched with family. Drove home. Lecture from Verdun on booze. Salutary.

Saturday 28th Stopped booze and Richard is his shaky self again. Dustman off as suspected.

Sunday 29th Booze or drug-ridden call from E to JB (who said I wasn't here) in which she told JB to leave me and Céligny was such a dull place. Is never going to call again. Well. Well.

Monday 30th Sober and shakeless. Report from Dr OK but must watch cholesterol count.

Blood group A-Neg. Never knew that before. Biked, played ping-pong with Troy.³⁹

JULY

Tuesday 1st Biked and read am perfectly content when not boozing.

Wednesday 2nd Gained 2½kg. Back on diet. JB buying every conceivable gadget for kitchen. Biked to lake with Troy. Have taught him to drive Mini-Moke. Can't get him off it now. Must check on MG.

Thursday 3rd Arose at 6.30. Walked around block at spanking pace. Sun out so sat and read and pondered. Got rid of hired car. Biked in the evening with kids and JB. Read again until minuit.⁴⁰ Awoke at 6. Full of vitamins and fit as 30. Not a drink in sight for days.

Friday 4th Walked round block 7am. 28 minutes. Read Angela Davis' autobiography.⁴¹ Not very impressed. Watched Wimbledon B. J. King whopped Goolagong 6–0 6–1.⁴² Massacre. Went to bed early. Slept like proverbial log last night. One of the rewards of sobriety though Dylan told me otherwise. Over-ate.

Saturday 5th Walked block. Sat in watery sunshine. Solowicz came from town. Smug odious little man. Think might go to NY and LA 'to be seen' as they say. Much prefer solitude. [...] Dinner in Founex. Good. People at next table very German, very English, very loud.

Sunday 6th Sunned a bit read and read biked a bit. Bored. Troy drives moke all day long unless stopped. [...]

Monday 7th JB crashed into tractor from next door farm so sent for Hertz.⁴³ Lunched. Stopped at service station and found that MG was fully serviced so now have one crashed car, one wreck (temp I hope) and hired one. Talked to E and Liza (both in London). Liza expecting (hoping) to come here on Tuesday.

Tuesday 8th Made various arrangements with Kate who's in Paris and Liza. They arrive Tuesday. Brother Will and wife Betty plus Rhian (daughter) want to come but date not fixed yet. Gawd help me.

Wednesday 9th La Réserve for lunch. Very hot. Read [...] biography of one Hankey never heard of him.⁴⁴

Thursday 10th Table tennised with Troy. He could become very good. Stiff as a brace afterwards. Weather brilliant but suddenly turned. [...] Am insane for sweets and ice cream. Can't stop and sleep a lot. Very bad.

Friday 11th Took crashed car and MG to carrosserie.⁴⁵ Meantime hired car again. Maddening. Read book by Shirley MacLaine.⁴⁶ Not very good but did increase interest in China. Must go there. Early to bed. Ate ice and chocs all day long again.

Saturday 12th Weighed 81kgs! 176lbs! 12st 8! Disgraceful. That's what Tete de Negre, Suchard, et al. can do to a slim lissome lithe limber 49 year old. Went on stringent diet (OK, WD⁴⁷ of low carb). Talked to Liza who wanted to get hold of Kate in Paris [...]. Biked to Grans beach with Troy.⁴⁸ Horrid. Lunched at Dominos.⁴⁹ Pedal boated. Swam in lake. T. Tennis with JB and Troy. Exhausted.

Sunday 13th, Céligny ETB returned Leningrad. She sounds a harassed mess.

Wonder if I can put up with all that again. Try I suppose. Have an idea it won't last. Also she is beginning to sound like her mother at times. Frightening prospect. She denied what she'd said to JB about 'Why don't you leave. You're young and life must be boring in a Swiss village etc.' JB said nothing except let her ramble on.

Monday 14th (80kg) Glorious morn. Awoke at 5.30. [...] Very hot and sweaty. Couldn't read in the sun as sweat poured into my eyes. [...] Keep on dreaming that I've been drinking and then awake with delight to find I have not!

Tuesday 15th (79kg) Awoke at six. A beautiful morning. Hope weather holds. Kate arrived looking glorious. Hasn't grown which is a good thing. They, the females stayed up until 2.30 where I found them when I came down for ice cold water. Liza arrives to-morrow. Fullish house. Swam in lake at Céligny with Troy. Lunched at D'Allevés.⁵⁰ Table tennis with Troy. LOST! Now for Liza!

Wednesday 16th (79kg) Liza arrived à l'heure!⁵¹ Still short with yellow teeth but lovely nevertheless.

Thursday 17th (79kg) Kids settling sleeping arrangements. Maria has dreadful cough. Taking for X-ray. Turned out to be sinus. [...] Kate and Liza corporate devils. Troy very spoiled but not by me. Getting better. Bit of a smart-ass. He'll learn.

Friday 18th (79kg) Will Betty Rhian arrived 1½ hours too early. I was infuriated. Will in bad shape. Has become very old man. Wheel-chair, stick and all.

Saturday 19th Weather lousy. Will and I stayed all day together. Took girls and Troy to discotheque at Nyon. Danced! Twice. Left and took taxi home after 10 minutes. Sanka with cream and off to bed with Kipling (biography).⁵²

Sunday 20th Awoke with the dawn. Sat on terrace and read tedious book by Michener clept Drifters what a poor mind he has!⁵³ Played ping-pong. Sat in sun. Still on diet. Down from that appalling 81kg to 77. Will broke my sword-stick silly bastard and fell to boot. Putting in hospital tomorrow. He's a mess. Wife Bett f. stupid. Daughter fat and staggeringly tongue struck. K leaves tomorrow.

Monday 21st Sunned swam read – even letters. Aaron intolerably repetitive. Have dreams of firing him but after 26 years together with multiple sclerosis haven't the courage.

Tuesday 22nd Took Will to hospital. Endless corridors. Started smoking herbal cigs. Not bad. Girls went to discotheque in Geneva. Little ones not allowed in.

Wednesday 23rd (77+kg) Swam, biked, sat in sun with Liza, read visited Will in hospital. They may have found root of trouble. Hope to God yes.

Thursday 24th (77kg) Woke 6am spent all morning at hospital with Will in agony. Impossible to find doctor. Saw nurse. Insisted she gave him shot. Better after that. Went home after that in fury and as usual ate and ate chocs and ice-cream. Will show on scales tomorrow. Read sad and silly little book called Exterminator.⁵⁴ Re-reading Golden Bough.⁵⁵

Friday 25th (77kg) Saw Will in hospital. Looks terrible and is in great pain all the time. Insisted they gave him stronger painkillers.

Friday [Saturday] 26th (77kg) Went to bring Will home from hospital.

Saturday [Sunday] 27th Took whole family to Rolle to eat, swim, row, sunbathe. Will much better.

Monday 28th Talked to Will all day practically. Surprising how little one knows about one's own brother.

Tuesday 29th Sunned. Had tea with producer [...] at D'Alleves. Very German. Have a feeling this film won't surface either. Has the same air as Jackpot. Takes place in Israel so I might see it at last.⁵⁶ [...]

Wednesday 30th Exercised but irritable all day. Liza going through yet another crisis with some bloke in Geneva via discotheque. Had eyes tested again. Bloke says I read too much. [...] Wish to Christ that Liza would grow an inch or two.⁵⁷ Talked to Gwen Gwyneth Kate. Norma. Brian Tashorne popped in to talk rugby. Told highly suspect story about Carwyn James and Llanelli.⁵⁸

Thursday 31st

Liza and Maria leave today for Leningrad. 33 days booze-less. I'm as brown as I can get so didn't court the sun yesterday. Read biography of Dorothy L. Sayers – Such a strange Lady.⁵⁹ Will still boringly ill some days.

AUGUST

Friday 1st National Holiday. Went shopping Geneva. Bought new typewriter.

Saturday 2nd Lindsay Anderson and Gottlieb arrive today.⁶⁰

Sunday 3rd Glorious day. Liza, ETB, phoned. Latter finished on the 14th inst. Can't believe it and think of nothing else. What will it be like seeing her again. I'm a little scared. Jeannie Bell desperate. Keep my fingers crossed.

Monday 4th Very hot.

Tuesday 5th Sent telegram to Liza. ETB up to some game I don't quite understand.

Wednesday 6th Liza's birthday. Send another gram to Liza. Obtained temporary hearing-aid for Will. Revelation he says.

Thursday 7th Talked Solowicz. Cannot find room anywhere for weekend for Jeannie and me.

Friday 8th Went 'La Réserve', Versoix for weekend with JB. Tiny room. Hated it.

Saturday 9th Weather uncertain. Under façade hotel is gimcrack. [...] Saw film in a cinema yet! English version Burt Lancaster and Paul Scofield. Indifferent thriller.⁶¹

Sunday 10th Went home to Céligny. Had left roof window in bathroom open. Place soaked by furious rains while away. Had to remove carpet.

Monday 11th Terrible weather. Stayed home all day apart from morning visit to Coppet for 'Boules des Berlin' – otherwise doughnuts fresh from oven. Talked Aaron. Sounded 100 years old. ETB did not call as promised. Troy very recalcitrant. Needs stiff discipline.

SEPTEMBER

Saturday 6th Céligny with ETB and Liza and friend Ali (Alexandra) Maria. Raymond took them all dancing. Both according to telegram should have arrived yesterday but muck up and arrive today. ETB got tearful about HW's father.⁶² Good God the man is 80. Sq. for the 4 or 5th time. [sic] Still no booze.

Sunday 7th Troy arrives, Layton arrives. Both arrived! Tremendous thunderstorm. Phones have been dead for (so far) 16 hours. Maria, Ally (Liza's friend), Layton, Maria, Liza, so full house.

Monday 8th, Céligny Children back to School? [...] E and I more nervous than they. Bags, bikes E called HW. Long. E sounds so dramatic on telephone. She's just apologized by saying she has a lousy cold. [...]

Tuesday 9th Slept late. Went into Coppet for doughnuts. To Au Domino for E's handbag. Lunched D'Allevés. Kids have day off on Thurs. [...] Terribly sleepy all day after bad night. Article McCall's hanging over my head.⁶³

Wednesday 10th Kate's birthday. One day's holiday for Troy, Layton, Maria.

Thursday 11th Liza and Alessandra Mavroleon (Ally) left by train. [...]

Monday 15th – Wednesday 17th, Gstaad

Thursday 18th, Gstaad Brook arrived. Drove down to Geneva to pick him up. Looks very good.

Friday 19th, Gstaad Kids arrived for weekend.

Saturday 20th, Gstaad Kids and Gstaad. Troy cooked a supper that was an abomination to the Lord. The dessert was unspeakable.

Sunday 21st Children returned (train) to school. Going (us) to S. Africa on Wednesday. Reading up in Encyclopedia Britannica. My ignorance is appalling.

Monday 22nd Sunned. Read.

Tuesday 23rd, Gstaad-Céligny Left for Céligny with Brook and bike in exchange for Troy-Liza bike at school. Did it all in one fell swoop.

Wednesday 24th, Céigny Flew Geneve – Zurich. Zurich – Johannesburg. 14 hours.

Thursday 25th, Johannesburg Arrived Johannesburg. Many people at airport. Thousands I suppose.

Friday 26th Went to ‘club’ downstairs with creepy Peter Lawford.⁶⁴ [...] Terrible food danced with unknown girl. Press took pics. Also said I was drunk. Cheek. [...] Went to tennis. Pres and wife.⁶⁵ Usual agonizing boredom stiff with protocol.

Saturday 27th Tennis. Ugh! [...] Ringo out of his skull.⁶⁶ Very unhappy man.

Sunday 28th Went to ‘Grand Bal’. Auctioned ‘Hiz’ and ‘Liz’ for 2000 Rand. Much the biggest buy of the evening. Went to bed at 6am.

Monday 29th, Johannesburg – Chobe Jet (Lear) to Chobe.⁶⁷ 1 hour 45 minutes. Landed on grass strip. Very bumpy. Saw elephants, baboons, buffaloes? Other people had terrible journey. [...] Married Elizabeth Zulu fashion.

Tuesday 30th, Chobe Went up river with Fritz and Daniel (Black).⁶⁸ Fascinating encounter with bee-eating-birds troglodytes. Saw 30–40 elephants? Also fascinating. About 5–15 baboons surrounded our suite. We thought it normal but discovered that it was a phenomenon never seen before. It would of course occur when E was here. Hereforth to be known as Elizabeth's baboons. Strange. Richard Barrett (3 Degrees man) pestered us all evening.⁶⁹ Quite scary.

OCTOBER

Wednesday 1st, Chobe – Kruger⁷⁰ Land-Rovered through real bush. Non-tourist route to lose press. E took snap after snap of you name it she took it. Result – no film in the camera and eleven bruises around her body where she banged herself against the turret of Rover. She did it again!

Thursday 2nd, Kruger – Johannesburg Helicoptered over Kruger Park. Stampeded elephants and buffalo. Saw our second sable antelope – a very rare creature we're told. Eliz had immediate mutual love affair with cheetah – yclept Targa. Hope the pictures come out this time. Never seen E so happy but our hearts belong to Chobe. [...]

Friday 3rd, Johannesburg Jetted to J'burg. E was in agony to the point of tears which she hid from me but I am now unfoolable. I scratched her back and held her hand. Land-Rovered again with Targa or perhaps Tagra? Latter refused to hunt impala came back to Land Rover and E every time. Like Ferdinand the bull.⁷¹ Though he has hunted and killed, his owner assured us. E went for X-ray of ribs. No cracks but two spots on lung. We must make them go away.

Saturday 4th The most agonizing hour of my life ended at approx 1pm. Yesterday I mean. I had spent the previous hours back to approx 4pm Thursday in the most terrible fear for Elizabeth's and my life. Sleep was no palliative. I am still suffering from delayed shock and will in a lesser form, I think, continue to suffer for the rest of my life. E was incomparably brave. I love her mindlessly and hopelessly.⁷²

Sunday 5th We leave for Chobe tomorrow and will be in our small portion of the barren earth, paste and cover to our bones, for some days.⁷³ I am leaving the 10,000 rand I earned on Saturday morning for our return trips. And there shall be no mucking about at Kruger or the Cape. Chobe belongs to E and me. We love each other. It's very simple. [...]

Monday 6th E in splendid form and a trifle tiddly but sweetly so when we went to Sol's house for a late (very late!) lunch. Then E with what seems like aid and abettance from Adele (P.R.O. for Sunshine Hotels) that E and I should get married in Chobe this week I thought they were joking and said so.⁷⁴ But E and E turned out to be serious. Result the latter half of the day a series of ¹/₂ joking ¹/₂ bitter invective from E. I told her that I was afraid! Literally afraid, at the moment, that marriage might horrifyingly end in divorce. We will of course get married again if E so wishes but until I get over my fear and since I am, at least, deliriously happy at the moment why spoil it!

Tuesday 7th, Johannesburg – Chobe Grass landing. Slight brush with grim reaper. Left suspension, left wheel packed it in. Very rough landing. Guess that we were within 6–8–12 inches from kingdom come. Decided to get married here as soon as possible unless E (or I, for that matter) changes mind. Love her beyond measure and above anything. She fast asleep. Bathed and shamp in private pool. Shiver, shiver, shake shake. Can't wait for E to awaken! [...]

Wednesday 8th, Chobe Awoke at dawn. Went up river in the afternoon. Carmine breasted bee-eater chief delight. E talks endlessly about wedding. Can't make up my mind. Might be that cancer scare has given everything an unnatural shape. Also, like being hanged, it concentrates a man's mind wonderfully. All well.

Thursday 9th Stayed in bed all day yesterday. Read and slept. E fed me in bed lunch though had dinner in living room. Looks like marriage is on. I wonder why I am still doubtful. It doesn't seem right but I don't know why. Perhaps I'm afraid of legal responsibility. Also sex urge temporarily dormant. Very puzzling.

Friday 10th⁷⁵ Got shamefully sloshed and despite all my idiocies – nasty too – we are as happy as children. We catch our breaths every so often and say with a kind of smiling wonder and delight ‘Hey!’ Do you realize we are actually married?’ We must have said it scores of times. I have never been so happy in my life. E cured me with loving even lavish attention. This is far better marriage than the first despite its silly (and dangerous) beginning [...]

Saturday 11th Woke up feeling very ill and to make sure that I would not get sloshed on ‘livener’ ETB gave me antabus which might quite easily have killed me feeling as I was.⁷⁶ However, despite physical ill-being felt emotionally very content. Worried about E. She not aware of it but sometimes, in a few seconds she changes colour. Much as I (and she) loves this place must get her back to somewhere sophisticated for a thorough check up. Sleep on it and tell her tomorrow perhaps. Nobody else seems to notice, but I watch my love intently without making [it] obvious. Please God she's OK. I'd die without her now.

Sunday 12th Went on picnic. Cucumber sandwiches on the marriage grounds. Cold wine, beer, champagne and cold chicken for the other. Coca-Colas and water for me. E still worrying me. So much so that I wonder if she thinks me a bit weird at times. She started talking oddly too now and again. [...] Went by Land Rover and returned by boat. Fritz (manager) Brian (white hunter) and wife.⁷⁷ [...] E came back into bedroom and fell fast asleep. Is asleep now. Will finish this tomorrow.

Monday 13th E arrived back from safari very late. [...] Black told me 'Madam sick,' she was too. Brian and Fritz with much difficulty, as there was no purchase at first got her out of Land Rover. Put her to bed. Undressed her. Said she was fine until she smoked cigarette then blacked out. Insisted she took shot. What is it? Nerves? Not enough exercise? Can't be lungs unless doctor an idiot. Liver? Want to take her back to England for check.

Tuesday 14th [...] E assiduously writing journal. Writes simply and well though spelling atrocious. She felt faint again twice after cigs. What the devil is it? Read hysterical book by one Douglas Reed called Siege of S. Africa.⁷⁸ Utterly absurd political rubbish for the most part but sometimes some truth to it. Must find out more about South Africa.

Wednesday 15th Got up early. Drank some wine while E asleep. Felt terrible. She took one look at me and put me to bed. I said it was malaria pills. She very not amused. Slept it off in a couple of hours. She still writing. Got the bug of writing. Told her the hard part was yet to come. News of wedding has broken earlier than expected. [...]

Thursday 16th Press all over the place, so confined to camp. [...] Gavin enjoying himself hugely though pretends to great savoir faire.⁷⁹ E getting lazy again about writing. Loves Chobe (so do I) but would like to see and hear more – not animals but people of Botswana. One of them curtsied to E yesterday and she was frightened of the obsequy. They smile, she says, but hardly ever with their eyes. I must know more about them. How do they really think of white men? Of Europeans?

Friday 17th E didn't write at all yesterday. Gave her a mild row. Will not believe that she has anything to say and that she writes beautifully. Needs constant reassurance. Offers of money – quite large sums for her journal pouring in, so she may get her finger out again. [...] Press know all about wedding down to tiniest details that we worked out it can only be Ambrose (District Commiss) Masalila.⁸⁰ Wedding place has name apparently – Serendella, apparently.⁸¹ Cannot blame him. Press very tenacious and insidious. Also obscure DC in obscure country doubtless enjoyed his hour upon the stage. Very unusual man if he didn't. Press searching for us everywhere. [...] Gavin beaming with long 'talks' on telex with J'burg. Must teach him not to get too funny with press. [...]

Saturday 18th E beginning to turn indifferent re HW.⁸² Picknicked on marriage grounds. Bangers and Br and Butt.⁸³ Delicious! Fritz, Brian with us. E went away into a copse and sat writing sitting on a rock. Utter human stillness with air thrilled by bird-calls. Only Manley Hopkins could even attempt to catch in words the magic of this place. For a time we played Beethoven and Brahms for a time but they were an interference. Shut them up. Fritz and Brian read, Eliz wrote and I sat and the day wore exquisitely on. I swam in the Chobe for a time. E waded in boots. Result E lost one boot. That is it split at the seams and may or may not be rescue-able. Doubt it with local craftsmen. E very squiffy for first time for ages. And I don't know how. She had little to drink. I must stop worrying about her.

Sunday 19th American reporters here in force it seems. Therefore stayed in all day. Very hot. Our little monkeys (vemsets) didn't come to be fed yesterday.⁸⁴ E very disappointed. Read book entitled Solo re wild dog and runt of the pack, very moving.⁸⁵ E not well at all. Don't know how to help except put her to bed and feed her. Honestly think before too late that she should go into sanatorium. [...] Wonder if booze at fault though she doesn't drink much but if liver bad even a little is bad. Love her and cross fingers.

Monday 20th [...] Two little birds crashed into window. One merely stunned. Other looks dead. let him lie for a bit. Neck broken perhaps. Both on their feet after a while. One bird got himself up and away. Other on feet. Put food out for him. Took picture. Both OK and they flew away.

Tuesday 21st [...] Drank enormously and cheated when E wasn't looking. Don't remember much except falling a lot and suggesting divorce. Can't control my hands so cannot write any more. One word only. Very silly. Booze!

Wednesday 22nd, Chobe Having been so drunk yesterday felt terrible in morning and was desperately ill. Went quietly at 9.30 to find a double brandy. Bar closed until 10. Asked for Fritz (manager). Reluctantly he opened bar for me and suggested vodka as it wouldn't be so smelly when E had morning kiss. Drank it with very shaking hands. Have become a 'falling down'. [...] My hand writing indication of shakes. Painful knee, bottom, right elbow, back of head, right ear in great pain. [...] E an angel and looked like one. How does she do it? Look so well I mean for she had a lot to drink too. Fed monkeys who now come about 4–5 feet into room. Starting to tame them.

Thursday 23rd Two weeks married

Still faintly dizzy if I make any sudden movement. Awoke at 5.15. E too and went lion hunting with Brian and his wife. Brian and E had seen a great beast last evening in all his glory. E agog with excitement. We searched for two hours with no success but saw everything else. Baboons, impala, kudus, buffalo, superb birds, the absurd undertaker storks that delight me with their parody of the human species. Read for the rest of the day. Marais My Friends the Baboons.⁸⁶ Powerfully and readably evocative. [...] Had to have helping hand to walk first few steps in any direction. Very disappointed in myself but periodically no doubt will fall into the trap.

Friday 24th Sat and read all day history of Zulus. Washing of the Spears.⁸⁷ Good history but sometimes hard work. Never moved out of the room. [...] E in good form and me much better though occasional wistful look at a bottle. Shen (Buddhist) and Fritz for drinks.⁸⁸ Told acting stories. They laughed a lot. Hope they enjoyed themselves. Made superb love to E in the afternoon. Gets better all the time if that's possible. Felt heavy weight of man's guilt at intervals. Very Celtic and Scandinavian. Thought about death too much. Much staring. [...]

Saturday 25th, Chobe Read and read as usual. Went to see potential water bore. Beautiful location. Am continually surprised by ignorance of people who live here as to primitive geology, flora, fauna etc. [...] Engrossed by Zulus. What a bureaucratic logistical mess on our part thrilling with personal bravery on both sides.⁸⁹

Sunday 26th Stayed at home. Fritz's birthday (35). All went out on boat 4.30pm. Sans me. Just as well. All got sloshed except me naturally. Fritz especially falling down etc. Much baring of the soul. Was quiet and polite. Hard work. [...] Looking forward to Europe. First time since we arrived. Miss books – I mean mine – and children. Will doubtless miss Chobe as soon as we get home. [...]

Monday 27th Drank a lot. Don't remember anything, if at all.

Tuesday 28th Drank some more.

Wednesday 29th Ditto. Must stop!

Thursday 30th Shook and shivered all day long today. Read very dense history of Africa. Lost five days behind me. [...]

Friday 31st Felt inexplicably terrible last [night]. Slept badly. Actors' dreams. Went out on the tiny out-board motorboat. Very uncomfortable. Saw little but all made up for by a superb sunset. Read about Africa again. Africa in History by B. Davidson.⁹⁰ Africa now coming out of ears. Gavin upset about something. Long letter about how brilliant he is and how we don't appreciate him. [...] Off to Victoria Falls to stay for two days.⁹¹ Then J'burg. Then home. [...]

NOVEMBER

Saturday 1st, Chobe – Victoria Falls [...] Flew to Victoria Falls. Very plush hotel called 'Elephant Falls.'⁹² Naturally. Must write a thesis or at least article on subject of new hotels and why they won't learn from the failures of the older ones. [...] Air conditioning merely a noise and the hotel is not even finished yet. Took pills for bed dutifully but hopelessly awake. Put me into a fury that would not abate!

Sunday 2nd, Victoria Falls E practically sloshed all day on and off mostly because we got into bitter arguments about wording of invitation cards re my birthday party. At one point after I had been peculiarly destructive she went off in tears to 'Shen Buddhist's' room. I let her stay there for an hour or so and alternately read and wrote, very difficult stuff the latter because I know what I want to write but cannot decide on its form. Have decided that it must take two forms in two books. It means a year's work and a lot of research (which I will pay for). Finally went into SL. Budd's room where E was tearless but still sloshed. Later news came from Lantz that E's article accepted, bought for, by LH Journal for 25,000!⁹³ [...] E screamed with delight and I mentally with relief. It would have hurt her if opposite and my judgement would have been suspect. [...]

Monday 3rd, Victoria Falls – Johannesburg Flew to J'burg. And off to the Landrost, where I spent the rest of the day reading.⁹⁴

Tuesday 4th, Johannesburg Booze.

Wednesday 5th Booze.

Thursday 6th Booze.

Friday 7th Started antabuse. Absolute torture. Read books all day long and tried to sleep fitfully. [...]

Saturday 8th Big pull out from booze. Talked to Liza on phone. Very sweet. Doctors all over me taking blood tests, intravenous feeding etc. I look terrible and feel diabolical. Arranged for return of ring I bought E. Amicably arranged eventually.⁹⁵ Really must now never drink again except possibly a glass of wine with dinner.

Sunday 9th Feel better but curiously muted. Leave tonight for London. Started but for once will not finish a massive book by John O'Hara.⁹⁶ How that man wrote and wrote and wrote and he might easily have stopped with Samarra and no one would have noticed.⁹⁷

Monday 10th, Johannesburg – London Lots of press. Usual fatuities. Long long journey. Found impossible to sleep. Thought I would sleep today for party tonight but out of question. Felt very nervous. Party well attended but felt remote from everything. Was glad to get away at 1.30? All sloshed. Still failed to sleep.

Tuesday 11th, London Heaps of presents. Can't be bothered opening them. Lots of lovely books including five copies of one. E as nervous as I am. Tomorrow evening present awards for Evening News.⁹⁸ Briefed by three gents about 5pm. All sounds simple. [...]

Wednesday 12th Did TV. Went alright. E looking splendid. Presented award to Albert Finney – a chap I've ever [sic] seen – but called him 'uniquely remarkable'.⁹⁹ Touch of hyperbole but better than the truth. Rather shabby affair and very provincial. [...]

Thursday 13th Had Antabuse and then tried one small vodka. Antabuse works! V. sick unto throws-up and the trots. Didn't feel right for hours. E went to have X-rays. Spots still there but inert as before. Thank God. She very ashamed of me with antabus and vodka. Quite right too. Saw A. Finney for first time in film Orient Express. Very amusing and obviously enjoyed by the cast. Tom very sick (75) and wife Hyral has terminal C.¹⁰⁰ Harvey Orkin died.¹⁰¹ Loved that man. [...]

Friday 14th Saw F. R. Hauser and Alex Cohen at 10.¹⁰² Stayed about one hour. Said I would read play Kean again down in the country.¹⁰³ Frank seems much the same. [...] Am thinking of coming back here to live. Haven't told E this though! Must find out about tax. Decision made to fire Gavin. When? Quite impossible PR man and useless secretary. Gets into panics about everything. No sense of humour either. [...] Slept like top but have cold caught from baby Naomi.¹⁰⁴ E's very bad. Had dinner at Scott's.¹⁰⁵ [...]

Saturday 15th E very bad cold. But went to Hackney anyway to open bazaar for youth club 'Pedro' one of Sheran's good works.¹⁰⁶ Lots of people. Very depressing. I have forgotten the class from which I come. Except that mine is Welsh – no difference. Thought of four to a room. Must go back there on an ordinary night. Do they have ping-pong, billiards etc. If not must buy same. Started to learn German. Not easy. No help from Latin or very little so far. Did two of twenty-six lessons. [...] Saw Match of the Day.¹⁰⁷ [...]

Sunday 16th, Pusey¹⁰⁸ [...] Still learning German. Liza here incl Lord Blandford (James) and Cliff Press Sarah Munster, Peggy Munster (Very young former Peggy – Simon's Aunt Peggy (70) no longer an invalid. (Manor House Bampton).¹⁰⁹ Played and beat Sheran at Scrabble. Not easy. Did some German. Very cold. Walked with Liza and her alley-dog Tramp. Mutual admiration. [...]

Monday 17th Terrible weather. Stayed in all day. Francis Warner came in the morning stayed for lunch. Thinking of doing Timon of Athens. Found to my surprise that I'd never read it. Good sign. Had not read Coriolanus either. Oxford tomorrow. [...]

Tuesday 18th, Pusey – Wales Oxford all day. Lunched at Bear, Woodstock.¹¹⁰ With David Masters (Finance) Elizabeth Sweeting, Francis Warner and Prof (bald) lady from St Anne's.¹¹¹ Terrible weather. Very wet cold. Froze all day. Visited Taylor-Burton.¹¹² Bought £17,500 piece of land for Buckminster Fuller Building.¹¹³ Cheap. Everything very shabby. Clothes cars etc. Students unattractive. Beer warm. Depressing. Glad to get to bed. [...]

Wednesday 19th, Wales Drove to Neath Castle Hotel.¹¹⁴ Terrible. Moved to 'Executive' Hotel, Aberavon.¹¹⁵ Pretty bad too but had a bath to go with it. Tonight a suite. Meanwhile saw Tom in Cwmavon. Looks very ill. His wife in hospital with cancer. Weather wild and Welsh. Had beer and felt very ill. E nagged all day about Elisheba. Said I was ice cold. I'm not but hopeless to prove.¹¹⁶

Thursday 20th Sober and well. Weather good! No rain! Talbot very dramatic at night with huge furnaces going. Overall feeling of grime however despite clarity of air. Saw Dill Dummer and daughter. Told me Charlie Hock is in hospital.¹¹⁷ Same age. 'But age with his stealing steps.'¹¹⁸ Went to hospital see Hyral. Cancer ward. Hyral must realize she has it. Too intelligent not to. Tom better. Suite nice. Feel comfy for first time. Going to see Michael tomorrow. 2^{1/2} hours drive over Black Mountains.¹¹⁹ Wild horses. Faggots and peas lunch. Fish and chips dinner [...].

Friday 21st Sober. Good Weather. [...] Drove to Michael's farm. Over Black Mountains. Wild Wales. Stopped for sust in Red Lion fifteenth century pub.¹²⁰ Black Mountains beautiful. Sheep cows wild ponies. M's place surprisingly well kept.¹²¹ Huge fire. Ate there. Jo's cooking.¹²² Divine impertinent boy yclept Ben. Hell on wheels. Very bright. Am going to invest £3000 in farm. [...] Inexpressibly pleased by atmosphere at farm. M. very sweet.¹²³ [...] Bad cold myself. Pontrhydyfen tomorrow.

Saturday 22nd, Wales Went to Pontrhydyfen. Lunched (Bara Lawr¹²⁴) with Hilda. Half of Pontrhydyfen must have visited the house. Saw house where I was born. They've tarted it up. E still very ill. Puzzling. Gareth the villain was there with utterly spoiled child ('bratu') otherwise fine boy.¹²⁵ [...] Must earn some ready cash. Trusts inadequate. Looking forward to Switzerland and books and peace. Must write a book. Means another visit to Wales. Autobiog should make some money. Good Yarn! [...]

Sunday 23rd, Wales – London [...] Went to Tom's lunch. T. H. J. (Tom)¹²⁶ very much better. Left for London 2pm. [...] Gavin must go and E must do the sending. Woe is me. Aaron going mad. Three films next year. Plus play. All TV. Very satisfactory. Lots of time off. Huge publicity re visit to Wales. Am feeling very fit and plan to ski over holidays. Can I now stop smoking? Can I diet? Liabilities £9000 car E. Loan £3000 Michael. Intake £150,000. Should manage. Money from writing too hope. German sporadic but coming along. Before long I will write though in that language. Wanna go home.

Monday 24th, Dorchester [Hotel, London] [...] Unusual 24 hours in which I slept 18–20 on and off. [...] E unhappy about something. [...] Talks about sex a lot. Just like Sara (Mom) sometimes. She in a quandary about piece of writing anent our marriage for which L's H. Journal has offered $25000. She very sensitive to criticisms. Warned her. Think she might expand into a book. Good idea! She is also upset that people might think I wrote it. Furious. She must get work soon as L. Olivier has offered TV film. She must do it. Do something. Have to fire Gavin today. Ugh. Liza to have car. Chosen Austin Mini. Long to drive it myself. Also MG should be ready. [...]

Tuesday 25th Cold, E in great form until about 8pm. Was then in terrible pain from neck and hands. Sent urgently for Tina Thatcher. Came within $\frac{1}{2}$ hour. Manipulated neck. Greater pain. Tears. Unusual. Worried to death. Colds still bad. E very beautiful despite pain. Very sleepy (me) all day. Bought German cassettes. Hugo in 3 months. [...] Plucked up courage and fired Gavin verbally. Took it very well. Palliated pill with note asking him to work for us when we start independent TV. [...] Talked with Aaron. Sounded very coherent.

DECEMBER 1975–JUNE 1980

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1975 diary at the end of November. With one exception, he did not resume his personal record until late June 1980.

After spending some time in a London clinic in December, Richard, together with Elizabeth, flew to Gstaad for Christmas. But their second marriage was already failing, and Richard became enchanted with Susan Hunt, wife of Formula 1 world champion, James Hunt (1947–93). The Hunts' marriage was itself in disarray. When Burton flew to New York early in 1976 to prepare for a return to the Broadway stage in the part of Martin Dysart in the Peter Shaffer play Equus, he was joined by Susan. Elizabeth stayed in Gstaad, and had a fling with businessman Peter Darmanin.

Burton first appeared in Equus, succeeding Anthony Perkins (1932–92) in the part, in late February 1976. By this time he had met Elizabeth at the Lombardy Hotel in New York to tell her that he wanted a divorce. James Hunt agreed that he and Susan would divorce also. By mid-August both divorces had been processed and Richard and Susan married in Arlington, Virginia, on 21 August 1976. In October Elizabeth became engaged to US Republican Senator John Warner (1927—) and they married that December.

Following a successful, if brief, run in Equus, Richard filmed Exorcist II: The Heretic in Hollywood and then made a film version of Equus in Toronto in the autumn. He and Susan bought properties in Antigua and in Puerto Vallarta. Before the year was over he recorded Chronicle of an English Crown (Vivat Rex), a 26-episode series for BBC radio about the history of the English monarchy. On 8 March 1977, while aboard a jet flying from Antigua to Switzerland, Burton made what was the only surviving diary entry of that year. Although one cannot be certain that it was part of a longer sequence, the fact that Burton did not therein comment on either beginning or ending this new diary suggests it may well have been one of a number of such entries, the rest of which have not survived.

MARCH [1977]

Tuesday 8th, British Airways, Atlantic¹²⁷ It's 4.45am. i.e. blackest night in an airplane somewhere over the Atlantic Ocean. We should be en-route to Geneva via London. Instead we are en-route to Geneva – yes – but via NY and London; possibly in the same plane with something replaced; probably in another. It is sufferable but only just. Susan was sad and almost tearful when she read news of a young racing driver – Tom Pryce – being killed outright in the SA Grand Prix. I was unmoved.¹²⁸ What a vast difference there is between lamenting the death of someone you know and one you don't. The bell doesn't toll for me.¹²⁹ A million people died of starvation yesterday and no one shed a tear. We are about two hours out of NY. What time we'll get to Geneva is anybody's guess. The best thing to do is not to. Guess, I mean. This too will pass.

We've had a long day and it's obviously going to be longer. We shan't get to Geneva for 10–12 hours surely.

We went in to St John's this morning (i.e. yesterday) heavy bag – books being the main weight – to be left behind in c/o architect Smith to be picked up by lawyer Fuller. Then went with former to see house of associate architect called Frazer. All very Edinburgh Scots with the innate neat smugness of those people. House nice enough but didn't fancy it myself. Small but lacked cosiness. The same applied to Mrs Frazer. I hope Susan's house will be grander and cosier. Don't know how one does that.

Am trying to keep awake until after NY then sleep to England. Can't read! Am, have been, trying to read a detective story by C. Day Lewis (N. Blake).¹³⁰ Won't hold my attention. Susan enclosed in blankets beside me – eyes closed but don't know if asleep. Every other berth in darkness. Stewardess ghost-like and the overhead light throws a shadow from my fist on to the paper so cannot literally read what I'm writing until several words are past. Not that it matters. Am drinking coffee and writing merely to pass the time.

I am glad to be going back to Europe for a short change but not to do looping on a lousy film.¹³¹ Rome will be good to see again though I hope. News is that the paparazzi are a dying – if not dead breed. Hope so for Susan's sake. And mine. Ah what scenes I had with that lot. Endless maniacal chases down the Appia Antica and the Via Pignatelli(?).¹³² Madness on wheels and no fun in it. The paparazzi were so humourless. How I hate and hated them. I see their empty endlessly mindless faces now, vacant and talentless and dirty, with their little chattering scooters and baby-pram Fiats. Auugh!

Somebody's holding back the dawn for surely it should be coming up now or am I going the wrong way? It's 5.35. Antiguan time. Still drinking coffee which I don't usually take in such quantities but I have to stay awake somehow. Smoking cigs. Stopping and staring out of the window over Susan's crouched and feline body. Can't be bothered to write more. Will smoke and doze.

This plane should have been getting us to London in three or four hours.

The summer of 1977 was spent filming The Medusa Touch at Pinewood Studios and then The Wild Geese at Pinewood and in the northern Transvaal, South Africa. Equus was released in October and earned Richard another Academy Award nomination for Best Actor, although in due course Richard Dreyfuss (1947—) won for his performance in The Goodbye Girl.

The years 1978 and 1979 passed relatively quietly. Burton narrated War of the Worlds, filmed Absolution (Shropshire, England), Breakthrough (Germany), Tristan and Isolt (Ireland) and Circle of Two (Toronto). Then in 1980 he returned to the stage again, this time reprising his role as King Arthur in Camelot, which opened its pre-Broadway run on 6 June at the O'Keefe Theatre Centre in Toronto. Then the company moved to New York, where Burton returned to his diary-keeping.

1980

JUNE

Sunday 29th, New York Today, like a man dying of thirst I slaked and lapped and wallowed in the New York Sunday Times. I haven't read a newspaper since leaving Geneva to come here – i.e. for about two months! Neither has Susan. The only encroachment from the outside world, outside the world of Camelot the musical, and King Arthur in particular, has been the occasional late-late-night film. I only remember one of them, chiefly because of a remarkable piece of acting by Dickie Attenborough in Greene's Brighton Rock yclept in Canada Little Scarface.¹ A rare picture of a shabby shop soiled, Roman-Catholic-haunted race-gang slasher. Very Graham Greene, very soul-stretched tight and grey with inarticulateness. For the rest of the time it seemed that I ate breathed dreamed and rode the nightmare of Camelot. We might be winning the race – I'm not sure – but, if the Toronto audience reaction is anything to go by, then we have a massive hit whatever the critics might say here in the Empire State. We open the previews in two days. [...] Susan went with Frank Dunlop to see a 'rock' show at Madison Square Garden.² S. returned looking shell-shocked. She had, she told me, never heard such a monstrous cacophony. Just imagine, she said, 19,000 people screaming manically for three non-stop hours. [...] Am having enormous difficulty sleeping. I suppose that when the play is definitely on the move I will sleep properly again. The lack of sleep is not helped by a bothersome and, by now, boring bursitis in my right bursar. Am going to see 'the daddy of all the "neck and shoulder"' doctors in the Western world. We shall see if I've torn something. Tomorrow also will be critical time for new costumes. Tomorrow, indeed, taken for all in all, is not a day I'm looking forward to.

JULY

Thursday 3rd, New York It's 4.15 in the morning. Last night we had our first NY preview. In the last 48 hours I have suffered an agony of brand-new costumes. John Barber of the London Telegraph and old friend and wisest and most compassionate of men (dispassionate too) David Rowe-Beddoe had (the former, Barber, by Frank Dunlop and the latter Rowe-Beddoe by Susan) been invited to look with new eyes at the production – we could no longer see the wood for the undergrowth.³ Their observations were invaluable. And neither were sweeping generalizations but detailed analyses, scene by scene. Costumes worried them both. So they were changed. Why was I the only male member of the cast who didn't wear tights? asked Rowe-Beddoe. Had my legs suddenly, in middle-age become scrim-shanked. No, said I, spluttering at the very thought. I'll show you all by damn. And last night I did. All costumes had to be tightened up as I've lost 12–14lbs since we opened in Toronto. [...] Proper sleep – oh sleep it is a gentle thing beloved from Pole to Pole, To Mary Queen the praise be give she sent the gentle sleep from heaven that slid into my soul shall try again to sleep.⁴ It's now 5.30. Come sealing night.⁵

AUGUST

Tuesday 12th So much for a daily report. The show is a super smash hit. Particularly, apparently, for me which is gratifying but surprising as only now, six weeks after the opening am I beginning to get the piece safely under my belt. We broke records week after week. [...] The show is still enjoyable. Long may it be so. I dread the time when I have exhausted its every possibility and go on automatic as 'twere. Thus far I haven't given the same performance twice. It is always different. It's unplanned – something curious comes from the audience and I instinctively respond – always, of course, within the frame-work of the play [...]. There have been a great many distinguished or notorious audiences I'll get to them by and by. I had one cauchemar, an appalling catastrophe which hardly bears thinking about. That too I will try to explain.⁶ Politics are the talk of the times. Last night was the first night of the convention (Democratic) and Senator E. Kennedy is out!⁷ There is a line or two in Kafka's letters that haunts me.⁸ I read it years ago and was impressed by its perfection of style (even in translation) but only in the last four or five years has it meant anything to me – I mean only its horrifying and real meaning, personally applied, has it brutally come home to me after all these years in the smugness of the dark. [...] I am writing to please myself though there's a feeling in some place in my head [...] that this might be publishable. I haven't been writing for nothing. [...]

Thursday 14th Two shows yesterday and was I tired. Lots of people to see after the second performance. [...] Henry Kissinger's son, David, and a friend, Arnold

Weissburger and Milton Goldman, Lucy Kroll, and others.⁹ The dressing room is so small that I have to see them in the corridor outside. The newspapers – but nobody else I notice – agog with a ‘great’ speech by Edward Kennedy.¹⁰ I read it and it is the usual fustian and good for his political future perhaps in 4 or 8 years time. He's a mere stripling of 48. Despite the polls I have a feeling that Carter will be re-elected.¹¹ Perhaps because I want him to be. Henry Kissinger who came to see the play with his wife Nancy a week or ten days ago said that the re-election of Carter would mean ‘a world catastrophe’ within a couple or three years.¹² Why? Because he (Carter) was totally ignorant of foreign politics. He was a peanut farmer and a fool and a megalomaniac. So, he said, was everyone else. Anderson (he'd seen him the night before in Washington) had a funny crazed look in his eye.¹³ ‘Messianical?’ I asked. ‘Yes.’ Kissinger looked much the same as he did in Jerusalem in 1975 when we talked at the King David Hotel after one of his shuttle diplomacy days in the middle of the night.¹⁴ A little less rotund perhaps and as witty and intelligent as ever [...] We supped at the ‘21’.¹⁵ The Doctor had about 6 guards within shouting distance. I remembered the contrast. In Jerusalem I was told there were 750 guards. 250 Yanks, 250 Israelis, 250 Arabs – for one man. The conversation went on for hours (we closed the ‘21’) although it was more a monologue by Kissinger. I was [...] the feed or stooge. ‘The presidency is now open for any unemployed megalomaniac,’ was one of his bon mots. He used the word megalomaniac many times. Anderson was, Carter was, everybody else was including, he said, for a short time, he himself. Nixon wasn't. Well-well.

[...] When we left I made as if to pay the bill as no one else seemed to be offering – I'm so accustomed to picking up the bills anyway but a shake of the H. waiter indicated – I think – that the good Doctor had paid. We had paid for the house seats so it was a reasonable exchange. We later found out that the K's are very sensitive about this kind of thing as some actor had bitterly asked why he or the management always had to cough up money whenever Kissinger came to see a play.

Outside in the street Henry and David Kissinger announced that they were walking home to River House.¹⁶ ‘Take a couple of guards for God's sake,’ I said. He did. [...]

Last night I ate dinner, half watched a film called The Dam Busters, read a little while Susan talked on the phone endlessly to Valerie in California, took a Mogadon and died for 7 hours.¹⁷ Dreamless. Awoke at 9.30. Tonight we have what Susan calls a day off – meaning I don't have a matinee. After the show tonight we have supper with Richard Muenz and delightful girl Nana.¹⁸ Muenz is an interesting boy. (Boy! He's 32) One other fascinating member of the company. Robert Fox.¹⁹ Both heavily weighed down with chips on the epaulettes but interesting and moody. I barely know the rest of the cast, though I have a long time to get to do so. 40 weeks or more!

Saturday 16th Went to the Muenz flat. Delightful place, lovely, clean, Nana and Rich very good hosts. Muenz darkly funny at times. We talked into the small hours – of ghosts. [...]

Last night some strange man in the audience offered a thousand dollars if we would do the last act again as the audience had not understood me profoundly enough when I bellowed 'Long live the King.' Towards the very end of the play, when I had the boy Tom of Warwick (Thor) underneath my arm this same strange one came up on to the stage and tried to wrest the sword from one of the 'knights' saying 'I must have his eyes ... I must have his eyes.'²⁰ And 'I have a message from God,' and finally 'I've failed. I've failed.' He was, apparently, taken away by the police. I kept on going willy-nilly. This almost child-like piece of Lerner and Loewe's has most extraordinary effects on people sometimes. Weirdly eerie. Some people, intelligent ones too, come backstage and are seemingly struck dumb, apparently speechless or incoherent with emotion. Others wait until they have stopped crying before they come to see me. Others though are untouched, or appear to be so and are as bland as bananas. One thing I've learned though or understood rather from personal experience: The emotional impact of a supple voice speaking lovely sounding banalities can shatter even the most cynical and blasé of audiences. They tell me that Lloyd George was a genius at it and I suppose too Senator Ed Kennedy's speech the other day was something of the same thing. Alex Cohen [...] said much the same thing. Oddly enough he (Alex) gave me a book by Tom Wicker which recalls that frightening Republican Convention when Eisenhower talked of the press and the 'media' as being enemies of 'the Party.'²¹ Wicker says that the mass hatred of the conventioners was appalling and frightening. But then it is and always has been a frightening world. I am convinced that the self congratulatory, self and modestly named 'homo sapiens' is stark mad. Raving. And the beautiful Earth's greatest enemy. I hope we are a dying species, like dinosaurs and mastodons and brontosaurus, and that we will disappear in a few years, a few hundred years, a few thousand years or whatever so that some other sane species will evolve and nurture this heavenly accident we live on.

There is an idiotic amount of fuss going on twixt batteries of lawyers about the fact that the management are flogging T-shirts which bear my name and likeness and Camelot. [...] Lawyers are an abomination and should all be hurled into outer darkness.

Two shows today, one today and every day until we leave for Chicago. God save the mark.²² Kafka and those lawyers haunt me still. I'll get on to Kafka tonight perhaps instead of watching the Avengers or Bogart or Clark Gable or Cannon.²³

Sunday 17th, New York More strange behaviour in the audience yesterday afternoon at the matinee. Miss Linda Ronstadt a pop singer and her leading man, a Kevin Kline, came to see the play.²⁴ They had Christine's (Guenevere's) house-seats.²⁵ The cast were greatly excited. I am not much for pop singers but Miss Ronstadt sings one song which is very attractive called 'Blue Bayou' which I greatly admire so I was pleased too that she was in front. At the end of the performance when the tumult and shouting had died she apparently came to my dressing room door and was told I'd be ready in a few minutes. She stood there for a time [...] and suddenly turned and took to her heels, [...] on to the empty stage, leapt from the stage into the side aisle and ran through the theatre and out.²⁶ Her leading man (they are doing the Pirates of Penzance in the Park) also fled but re-appeared some time later and came into the dressing room to pay the usual compliments. I told him to tell Ronstadt that she was my favourite pop singer [...]. Robert Fox told me later that Kevin Kline was an old friend of his who had recently become very successful but obviously regarded Fox as beneath him now that he, Kline, was a 'star'. [...]

My 'pinched nerve', now infamous in legend and story, went back on me last night and I played most of the play in considerable discomfort. It started when I was sitting off stage smoking a cigarette and waiting to go on for the chess scene with Paxton.²⁷ I handed the cigarette to Susan at exactly the wrong angle and the arm went berserk and played Hamlet with me, taking on a life – a spasmodic life – of its own. It's still a bit suspect today but much better and at least I can write this. [...]

Back to random wanderings: The audience reaction to the play: When we were in Toronto and we received without fail standing ovations at every performance I warned the cast not to take it for granted, that it would only happen occasionally, if at all, in NY. But I was wrong. The same thing happens here with unfaltering regularity. I used to get the occasional house to stand up for me in previous plays but now they always do. Will they in Chicago and the rest of the places? It's a phenomenon that I am puzzled by. Is it nostalgia? The roars I get when I take my second solo calls are almost exultantly savage. Is it a ferocious hunger for the past, a massive 'hiraeth,' a sort of murderous longing for 'home' and security and simple peace.²⁸ I don't know. It cannot be simply the performance. Some nights unavoidably, though I try like the devil to climb to the audience's expectations every time I play, I am not so good – but the final reaction is exactly the same. Is it that the audience know so much about me – or think they do – from my highly publicized and infamous past? Is it because my performance is now truly dynamic but no, it can't be that because only in the last couple of weeks have I taken absolute control of myself on the stage. Is it a combination of all. I shall never know. But let me say at once that to this little shrinking Welsh violet it is highly gratifying. Today, a glorious one I may say, we have a matinee – a glorious summer Sunday matinee. Will the ovations continue? I will refer to them never again – unless they stop. [...]

Tuesday 19th 'Only our concept of time makes it possible for us to speak of the Day of Judgement by that name; in reality it is a summary court in perpetual session.'²⁹ That is from a letter of Kafka's. It haunts me. The supreme judge at that severe searching of the soul is oneself. It is I who act, I who do the deed or have the thought and it is I only who can judge the action or the thought. I am prosecutor and defender, Satan and Saint. I am totally responsible for all my sins and goodnesses. And I am alone. That great storehouse of knowledge and memory, ignorance and idiocy, brilliance and banality, good and evil is in my own brain and only my own brain can call itself to the bar for the agony of self examination. An endless, life-long viva voce. I wish I had more time to think. I wish I didn't have the nightly performance hovering over me day after day. Last night the audience was a phantom, now with you, now gone, a chimera of wrong responses. I felt angry with them and I'm afraid allowed it to show a few times. Afterwards we went to the John McClures' flat for supper.³⁰ We talked until 3.15am. Mostly about Lenny Bernstein.³¹ How much we all loved him and how we loathed some of the things he does to himself and to other people. For Bernstein is indeed a fascinating creature, genius and dolt, a man and a woman. A boy and a girl. There is no personal hell quite like the hell Lenny lives through. All the time, all the time night and day there is the battle between his super ego and his utter self loathing – a Mahatma Miserable. I think that master means to die shortly unless the will to live reasserts itself. [...] I've written and thought myself into a state of depression. Ah! How I'd love the panacea of a drink now. A double ice cold vodka martini, the glass fogged with condensation, straight up and then straight down and the warm flood the pain-killer hitting the stomach and then the brain and an hour of sweetly melancholy euphoria. I shall have a Tab instead. Disgusting.

Friday 22nd Still finding new things in the play. We have had three 'bad' audiences in a row, 'bad' in the sense that they chuckle and don't laugh. But their silence which is sometimes very wearing explodes at the curtain calls into a roar. Rex's new Liza Doolittle (Miss Kennedy) who is British saw the play from the sound booth.³² [...] I whispered to her 'Don't get upset when Rex (Harrison) loses his temper – he doesn't really mean it.' She said 'he's very charming and we have lots of laughs together.' Maybe the incomparable Rex has mellowed. If so he is not the Rex we have loathed and loved, lo, these many years.³³ He is coming to see Camelot on Saturday night. God save the mark!

Yesterday was our wedding anniversary – the fourth. Susan gave me a life-saving present. A portable book-case, immensely durably strong which, at a rough calculation will hold a hundred or so really heavy thick tomes and I suppose twice that number of paperbacks. She had conspired with the stage hands; props man and carpenter to make it. Was it not Francis Bacon who said that books make the best furniture.³⁴ He's right. I can't stop musing at it. It is painted my colour. Red. Very fetching and a delight. My beloved John Neville just phoned. He is coming to the play tonight. A remarkable man – brilliant actor, administrator, director and with the possible exception of John Gielgud and Larry Olivier knows more about the practical side of the theatre than anyone I know. I spoke in a whisper as Susan still asleep – she packed [...] yesterday and is very tired. [...] I am useless to help her as my right arm – which is now affecting my left arm as well – is dead for lifting the lightest weight beyond diaphragm height. After the show I can only eat food that is possible to lift to my mouth with one arm. Ridiculous.

[...] I was intrigued last night when one of the Chinese waiters after having asked me if the theatre had been full that night and my saying 'to the roof' he knocked on wood. I asked him if that was general in China. He said that it was. I said, 'How does one say "good luck" or "touch wood" "good health" in Chinese.' He said something that sounded like 'Hoo Toy'.³⁵ I'll try it out elsewhere to find out if he was pulling my leg. Which reminds me that Kissinger told us that the Chinese will still treat you as a President or Prime Minister or (in his case)

Secretary of State after you have lost power – for ever. He instanced Edward Heath who was received with precisely the same courtesy and privileged treatment long after his fall from the highest office to the back-benches. They seem a very attractive people. Must go there one day.

There is something rotten in the State Theatre.³⁶ We are announced in the weekly Variety as grossing 98 or 99% capacity when we can see with our own eyes standing-room-only customers, together with collapsible, folding chairs down the aisles.³⁷ We know from Nancy Seltzer (who knows about such things) that people are sometimes paying $30 for standing-room night after night.³⁸ So where is that non-existent one or two per cent going to? It doesn't affect me financially as I have a fixed weekly wage but no percentage. What do the letters IRS mean to you at the Box Office?³⁹ Very curious. The two producers – Merrick and Gregory – plead, I believe honestly, that they cannot account for it. So who's robbing who? [...]

Talked to my younger brother Graham yesterday. Onllwyn Brace, famous ex-captain of Oxford and a Welsh International rugby player, is coming to Chicago to show me a documentary film of one hundred years of Welsh rugby.⁴⁰ It's our centenary and I am to narrate the film. It should be evocatively, perhaps tearfully good.⁴¹ I look forward to it. Welsh rugby is a mystique arousing in the Welsh a sort of madness when they play. I will write about it at length some day soon. It elevates us into ecstasy when we are at our brilliantly arrogant best and drives us to near suicide when we're not. [...]

Thursday 28th, Chicago Have been here since Monday. We have either stayed at home and slept and read [...] or rehearsed and played in this abysmal theatre.⁴² It is enormous – seating 4,200 I'm told – and is atrociously designed. Endlessly long and thin and the audience seem a million miles away. [...] We must seem like ants to them and they seem to be from outer space to us. I know my eyesight is indifferent but I cannot even see the front row of the stalls especially because of the seeming blaze of the light on the orchestra. The first night [...] was funereal. F. Dunlop and M. Merrick et al. all assured us that the mass was enjoying it and laughing etc. but there was no hint of it on the stage. [...] The matinee yesterday was a little better and the response last night was almost riotous compared with the night before. But still it's very hard work. Susan went to the back of the stalls to check on her make-up of me. Especially the eyes, so vitally important to my kind of acting. She couldn't, she said, even see the expressions on my face – I was just a white amorphous blob – like Ralph

Richardson thinks he looks like. 'I have seen better looking and more animated hot-cross buns,' he once told me of himself. Curious man Ralph. The official first night is tonight. [...] Talking of Ralph I had a note from J. Gielgud on Sunday last, written in his small fastidiously minute hand-writing saying he was sorry he'd missed me, had heard I was ill etc. I felt very guilty and hastened to phone him and ask him to come with us to the Kissingers' for drinks and dinner. He regretted that he couldn't come. There was a Cocteau film on that afternoon which he simply couldn't miss and there was dinner with friends which dear boy much as he'd love to and so on.⁴³ I mustn't be so remiss in future.

The Kissinger tea, cocktails and dinner was v. interesting though somewhat nerve-wracking especially for Susan who didn't know who everybody was not having caught their names. I filled her in as quickly and as often as they were out of earshot. 'Joe Alcott famous, sometimes brilliant and always instinct with probity, political writer.' 'William F. Buckley (Bill), T.V. talk show star political writer too, brilliant too, not too sure of his probity.' Harry Evans we had to be told about as he was new to both of us.⁴⁴ Editor of London Sunday Times with a provincial accent. 42 years old or 44 I'm not sure. Irish-Welsh he said of himself. Did a very good Welsh accent. Mrs Buckley – sloshed.⁴⁵ 'Happy' Rockefeller – sloshed too but sweet and very un' happy.' Not surprising after the death of Nelson Rockefeller.⁴⁶ And the manner of his death. I spent a long time comforting her. Susan too. The Kissingers and Susan and thy humble servant all sober. Ed of the Times – careful. Joe Alcott a bit tight but impeccably spoken at all times. He spoke with a veddy veddy English upper class accent. 'Where on earth did you, a Yankee, get such an English accent?' I asked. 'I was very badly educated,' he replied. Buckley [...] very red in the face and tried desperately to make it a brilliant evening. Much talk of the Middle East. Only Jordan (the kingdom, not the politics) could solve the situation with the PLO etc.⁴⁷ 'Happy' Rockefeller said Buckley had no common-sense. She may have been right that night. We like the Kissingers more and more and Susan now feels at home with them. I always have done. I reasoned that after our first meeting in Jerusalem they wouldn't ask me back unless they liked me for my little timid self alone. Acting and actors were rarely if ever mentioned which is an enormous relief. I liked everyone there and, our hosts apart, 'Happy' and Joe Alcott the best. He has a wicked leprechaunish air about him and is deliciously acerbic – barbed at all points. 'Hiss was guilty as hell,' he said.⁴⁸ [...] 'I'm confused,' I said. I've over-read on that case. 'How can you be so sure?' 'Dean Acheson told me and my brother Stew,' he said.⁴⁹ 'In private, of course, in public he said that he would never turn his back on a friend.’ He also said that Dean Acheson felt very uncomfortable with journalists – ‘he accepted Stew and he accepted me with albeit some reluctance because we had aristocratic connections but he equated being a journalist as someone who was “in trade”’.

It never ceases to surprise me despite my wide reading of history and the inevitability of the class system in any form of government or society and their rigid adherence to their own shibboleths when the Americans show it at all levels. ‘In trade’ indeed? In the USA indeed? Yes indeed! Buckley is very American but European mostly in his way of thinking I believe – like his arch-enemy Gore Vidal.⁵⁰ [...]

All of them seemed to have read one or other of my occasional published writings and seemed to my relief far more interested in that part of me than the acting part. I couldn't have been better pleased. The Editor of the London Sunday Times suggested that I write about the American hinterland. I was going there for the first time – why didn't I make it a book? Any good and he would publish extracts in the Sunday Times. He'd paid £32,000 or was it £38,000? to William Manchester for six or eight extracts from his latest.⁵¹ Why not me? Why not indeed, I thought? I said I would ponder over it and perhaps send him a few thousand words to see if or how he liked it. I still don't know if I will but it's an intriguing temptation. But what can I do about getting out and around. I cannot sit in a public park or any public place, restaurant or bar or church without being recognized within minutes. Like Hamlet but not for the same splendid reasons I am the observed of all the observers⁵² Being famous or infamous depending on whether you're Dean Acheson or Harry Goldberg the cab-driver has that disadvantage, and there are others but, I quickly must add, the advantages greatly outnumber the disadvantages. One curiosity about being as peculiarly well known as I am is that almost everywhere I go, it's the other people who change – not me. In the restaurant for instance, once it is known that I'm there and, gradually, Susan too, it's the other diners who begin to be self conscious and start unconsciously to act. Women especially become arch or arrogant, simpering or ultra-sophisticated [...] and everybody covertly, they think, stare at Susan – searching her hair, her jewelry, her clothes, her fingernails, face, figure legs and feet. A great many restaurants in these limited states have mirrors and it is sometimes amusing to sit at a mirrored bar with Susan beside me, while waiting for a table, [...] and watch the subtle changes of attitude and posture and pose and poise of the others. I taught Susan, who, unlike me, is shy almost to the point of being in pain, to watch them and I think it has greatly eased her shyness but she is still indignant that whenever she goes to the loo she is always followed by a gaggle of women who are hoping to see her at close quarters and her underclothes Bill Buckley would zengmatically say.⁵³ I got the impression from Buckley, oddly, that in his conversation and questions to Henry K he was anti-semitic. He used the word 'Israelis' for instance with greater assurance than the word 'Jewish' or 'Jews' and yet he said both with a kind of furtive defiance. I may have mistaken what was a slight awe of Kissinger, his fame and achievements with anti-semitism but I honestly don't think so. Coming from a minority myself and having been taught by Bob Wilson how to look out for the signs of prejudice I am pretty sure I was not mistaken. Wilson and I have been together for some 25 years. He is a negro or a black, take your choice, and his antennae are always miles out waiting for the signals. 'You see that guy,' he said of a white man at a party years ago, 'he hates my people's guts.' 'How do you know?' I asked. The fellow had been sitting beside us and seemed weak but pleasant enough. 'He's just asked me if I would let him freshen my drink. And I've let him.' 'So?' I said. 'He didn't ask if he could freshen yours.' It was true, for I looked at my drink and saw the glass empty. Later on I came to know the man better – a theatre-buff in NY – and gradually I got him by very oblique statements, questions and answers to prove Bob right. He couldn't stand he told me finally 'uppity niggers.' It was a massive vindication of Bob's life-long experience. From then on, for some time I relied on Bob's judgements of people. He is always uncannily right. And though I think I'm pretty good myself now I always double check with Bob as I am still a little too naively trusting. I tell people, tongue slightly in cheek, that it's part of my charm but it is true. I am still appalled (at the age of 54) when I find out – and the evidence has to be overwhelming – that someone I like and trusted has lied to me, or stolen from me or cheated me. I lie quite freely myself but my lies are usually to make somebody else feel better and are rarely, if ever, egoistically prompted though some times egotistically so. Sometimes there is, to my sorrow, a touch of self aggrandizement in my talk. In vino which I never am nowadays I lose all control and will lie in my teeth about anybody or anything and viciously too. I am not a nice man at those times. I hope they never recur.

Susan has just come in to the room to talk to la concierge who is actually a Frenchwoman. The woman had asked me in rapid French if she could talk to Madame Burton. Obviously being tested I replied in equally rapid French that I would go and find her. Susan has just said that the concierge had asked if Susan would like her dead or dropping dying death's worst winding sheets tombs and worms and tumbling into decay flowers to be removed from the suite rooms, but her actual reason was to hear me talk.⁵⁴ ‘Quelle voix extraordinaire! Ah!’ ‘Le Roi de Voix’. Now, peculiarly enough Susan who couldn't have a more different background from Bob Wilson has almost as quick and true an instinctive reaction to people as he does. At a party they will silently, across a crowded room, especially a crowded dressing room after a performance, agree or concur with minute eye-contacts and head-shakes of exquisitely imperceptible signals who's ‘class’ and genuine or ‘no class’ and meretricious. Later they will give me the benefit of their combined instincts. Bob Wilson is 74 and Susan is 31. Bob is tall (6’ 3”) and Susan is tall (5’ 10”), he is handsome, she is beautiful, they both speak differing forms of English but there the similarity ends. Bob is black. Susan is very white and blonde streaked. Bob worked on the railroads in Pittsburgh etc and his grandparents were slaves. Susan's father is Brigadier Frederick Miller and her mother Dierdre Wallis with some connections with the Duchess of Devonshire.⁵⁵ Bob learned the three ‘R's. Susan grew up in Kenya, convent taught where her officially retired father was a lawyer and a judge. Bob's father is never mentioned and is still a mystery to me, his mother is still alive, immensely old and in a home. An absolutely impossibility for two such people to bridge that mighty chasm and understand each other even vaguely [...]. But on the contrary they understand each other perfectly and did from the first meeting 4¹/₂ years ago. I continue to be continually surprised by life. He Bob Wilson said to me one day quite recently that I had great taste in women. ‘All your wives, Sybil, Elizabeth and Susan don't have an atom of prejudice in them. Neither does Valerie (Douglas) (my sister, my mother my baby and my Manager). Val may not like me but she hasn't got a prejudiced bone in her body.’

[...] Susan came into the room 15 minutes ago dressed for the party tonight. She is one of the few women in the world – certainly in my world – who could carry off such a fantasy of dress. Though ‘dress’ is the wrong word. It's actually black trousers, a kind of black ‘merry widowish’ top with a diaphanous black jacket that comes down to mid thigh. I should ravish her on the spot. I'll ask her if I may. On second thoughts I'll do it after the performance. Tiredly and gently.

Friday 29th, Chicago We opened last night and it went well. Christine, and Richard Muenz [...] were ‘up’ and so was I, though my shoulder gave me hell all night but surprisingly eased at the party afterwards. We arrived home at 2am and made cups of tea and grapple-snapped (Howard Taylor's, now the family's word, for raiding the refrigerator at sporadic intervals) [...]until long after dawn. And we talked and talked and talked – about Franz Allers and his delightful self adoration, about how old he was (74) and agreed that we loved him and his funny ways – about Eres McClure (John McClure's wife) and how earnest and subdued and intelligent she was last night.⁵⁶ She is a lovely woman, dark and high cheek-boned easily mistaken for an American Indian though she is in fact Israeli born and bred. [...] I took in the newspapers a couple of hours ago and saw a boxed announcement on the front page of one of them ‘Burton regal in Camelot. See Page 22’ or something like that. [...] I haven't read my notices for years but of course everybody else does. M. Merrick is amusingly predictable about them – he calls really vicious ones ‘personal vendettas’, bad ones ‘constructive’ and very good ones ‘love letters.’ I wonder why he is so worried about the critics. I'm not and he, I think, is uncertain as to whether I'm pulling his leg or not when I say simply and honestly ‘How's the box-office?’ or ‘Are we sold out.’ I mean it's no use having good notices and empty houses – much better to have stinkers and full houses. There is nothing, simply nothing that dispirits me more than to see great black blocked gaps in the audience like missing teeth. It's only happened to me once since I became a leading actor and it's an experience I didn't at all relish. (Legend of Lovers. Anouilh NY mid-fifties sometime.⁵⁷) I've been very lucky in that way. A very different matter in films over which I have little or no control. We talked a lot too, in the small hours, of Elizabeth. We both are very fond of her and for some reason worry about her. I can't think why. She seems to be all right. It's the first time we've talked at length about her for a long time. Hope she's happy, as we are. Sounds fearfully smug which I suppose it is but it's true.

Susan awake (3pm) and has read the notices. I could feel her fury or disappointment. She said ‘what did you say about the critics before we opened in Chicago.’ I replied ‘if they're good in New York they'll almost certainly be bad here.’ Well, she said, I was right though they're actually a bit bland rather than bad, she said. ‘Are they good for the kids?’ I said meaning Christine, Richard Muenz in particular, but also Fox, Valentine and of course Paxton.⁵⁸ ‘Yes,’ she said. [...] She then said (God how I love this child) ‘I am now going to have a bath and get myself CLEAN.’ The ‘clean’ was said in majestically capital letters and victoriously underlined. So yet another first night is over and it seems that the houses – gigantic as they are – will be full ones. [...]

SEPTEMBER

Friday 5th, Chicago This city is very pleasing and unless I'm careful it will erode my affection for London and New York as being my first and second favourite cities. (Rome, LA, and Paris are villages avec beaucoup des banlieus.⁵⁹ Our day off (last Monday) co-incided with Columbus or Labor Day – which meant that the city was like London or New York on a Sunday – streets virtually deserted and very little traffic. [...] A lot of the restaurants were closed for the day but a few were not, including an Indian place called The Khyber. It was cool and pleasant and the food was good though no Indian restaurant have I found yet, anywhere, makes the spices hot enough. [...] I was surprised when I went to the lavatory that it [...] was filthy. [...] I am reminded of a story that D. M. Thomas told us about Caradoc Evans.⁶⁰ Now Caradoc Evans was a very Welsh Welshman who hated his own country and countrymen, hatred that was closely akin to love in its hostile virulence. He had written a famous diatribe against the Welsh in a book or a play called Taffy a pile of which books had been, so I'm told publicly burned in the towns of Aberystwyth Bangor Swansea and Cardiff by students.⁶¹ Once below a time, as D. M. Thomas wrote, they, together with Augustus John and Louis MacNeice and others were drinking in a pub in Ceinwydd (New Quay) in Wales (a bewitching sailor's town) when Caradoc when offered a drink said darkly 'Where are your lavatories. I wish to inspect them.'⁶² The barman an authentic cor blimey cockney said, 'they are outside turn left, left again and Bob's your uncle.' Caradoc left. Caradoc returned. He said 'I will have a drink now.' 'You must be a foreigner and not Welsh.' 'Well now,' said the sound of bow-bells, 'how did you guess that?' 'Because,' said Caradoc in a mighty voice, 'your urinals are clean!'⁶³

It's 12.45 and Susan is still asleep. I have been awake and up and about and reading and writing this since about 10.30. We went to bed very late and I would guess that Susan didn't get to sleep until 7 or 8 or 9 o'clock this morning. She is dreadfully worried about her twin sister in South Africa.⁶⁴ We are trying to get her out of South Africa and to us here in Chicago without her husband's knowledge [...]. She has a 7 month old baby and the husband is found to be, I put it mildly, incompatible. [...] We are very anxious to get Vivvy and the child away before he does irretrievable damage to either or both. [...] We hope to fly her to Frankfurt where she will get a visitor's visa to these United States and fly on from there to us here in Chicago. We are continually on edge and will remain so until she and baby Vanessa arrives. Also excited at the prospect of having a small baby around. 1pm and time to awaken Susan who is going to see The Empire Strikes Back a sequel to Star Wars.⁶⁵ She goes with Bill Parry (Sir Dinidan in Camelot and my understudy) and two girls from the chorus Melanie and Laura.⁶⁶ I may go with them. They guarantee me bad acting which I enjoy.

[...] Yesterday, with Christine (Guenevere) Ebersole, I went on the Donahue talk show which is apparently unique among its kind in that it invites the audience to ask the interviewees questions.⁶⁷ It went along predictably enough. Same old questions. Same old answers. Booze, Elizabeth Taylor, which kind I prefer – stage or films etc? I felt sorry for Mr Donahue. He tried so hard to be provocative and had, fatal for an interviewer, got a couple of stock phrases locked into his brain in his exchanges with me which became almost uncomfortably ineffective as the hour wore on. [...] Susan listened and watched in the sound booth hoping that Mr Donahue would not ask about the booze and especially the one-night crack-up on Broadway. When, inevitably, he did, she said quietly ‘Vulgarian.’⁶⁸ The technicians who had been talking like mad went absolutely silent. She also said that when I mentioned Dick Cavett and Irv Kupcinet (two other talk-show hosts) they, the technicians, said respectively ‘shit’ and ‘son-of-a-bitch’.⁶⁹ I think of Donahue's job and shudder. Every day, day after day, he has this shabby shop-soiled little show to do. The strain must be enormous. Cavett really seems to enjoy his work but, on yesterday's evidence Mr Donahue does not. Later Christine said at the side of the stage as we were due to go on in Camelot. ‘You're such a gentle man (not gentleman) that you made him look crass.’ [...] Ah well. Kupcinet next. I wonder if he'll be the same. In person he's a treasure – and his wife too. [...]

Thursday 18th 13 days since writing – at least in this apology for a journal. Most importantly Vivvy and Vanessa [...] have arrived from J'burg. [...] Both Susan and I and grandparents and Valerie and Bob immensely relieved. [...] Now for the dreariness of divorce and who gets custody of the baby etc. That could go on and on. But [...] – I am delighted with the child. I have played with her for hours. And I'm trying to remember what my other babies were like at that age – Kate, Jessica and Maria. I cannot remember of course.

[...] Susan and Vivienne and Baby and I and a brilliant sunny autumnal day and full houses. What more could one euphorically want? And so to walk.

[...] As I entered the hotel I was greeted by a thunderous Welsh accent saying ‘Well look who's here by God Almighty. I heard you were about but didn't think I'd see you.’ I replied ‘Sen he has all my brether ta'en He will nocht let me live alane. Of force I man his nex’ prey be Timor mortis conturbat me.’⁷⁰ It was Ian Bannen, the very fine, highly eccentric Scots actor.⁷¹ With him was his wife. So he has married at last after years of living with this one and that one. He must be 50 years old or so. I remember him first at Stratford-upon-Avon at the Memorial Theatre (now called 'The Royal Shakespeare') and was intrigued by the fact that he had a very (to me then) expensive two-seater sports car despite the fact that he was a mere walk-on and understudy. Among other roles, he understudied that of the Scot in Henry V in which I played the King. One night the actor playing the Scot was off and this boy went on. To me it was sensational – Bannen showed immediate, perhaps instinctive, dynamic quality. Nobody else seemed to notice. It was therefore no surprise to me that later he became one of the world's finest actors. He is, at the moment, doing a personal appearance tour for Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy.⁷² [...] I'm very fond of him. His wife is attractive and seemingly good and kind. He needs that – I would guess. The last time I worked with him I played Winston Churchill and he played Hitler. I thought he was splendid but the American producers thought he'd gone too far. I didn't think so and said that it was almost impossible to go too far with A. Hitler. They made him tone it down which I still think a shame. The show was for the Hallmark Hall of Fame yet! As they say. Very frightened people the latter lot. The NY Times had asked me to write about playing WSC and had published the article which wasn't entirely complimentary about 'the great man' on the Sunday of the TV premiere of the film in the USA.⁷³ I'm told that the Hallmark Hall of Fame people nearly had several heart attacks and seriously thought of cancelling the show.⁷⁴ So frightened indeed, is everybody in American TV [...] that one derogatory article in the August NY Times sends them immediately into conniptions. When one realizes that though the NY Times is read by a couple of million people and the viewing figures for a show of that magnitude are 60 or 70 or 80 millions who could not possibly be affected by what I wrote in the NY Times on the very day of issue and show one begins to wonder afresh at the sickness of our Western Society. Further, though I was very good in the part and would have been a certainty for the abominable Emmy (for make-up) if nothing else, my article struck at their fearless hearts and I wasn't even nominated. What should such creatures as they do, crawling between heaven and earth.⁷⁵ [...] Almost time to go to work. [...]

It's 11.55 and midnight is upon us again. In the car on the way home I saw what I thought with my bad eyesight, was the moon and muttered almost to myself: 'Regard the moon. La Lune ne garde aucune rancune, She winks a feeble eye, she smiles into corners, she smoothes the hair of the grass. A washed out small pox cracks her face.' Susan asked 'What's that you're saying?' I said that it was T. S. Eliot – a bit from ‘Rhapsody on a Windy Night’.⁷⁶ When we were home, I said, I would try and remember the whole thing. I’ve tried (Susan is cooking supper) and can’t get it all. Large lumps of it but not the whole thing. That means a walk to a book shop tomorrow. Unless midnight, ‘this midnight, tonight,’ shakes the memory as a madman shakes a dead geranium.⁷⁷ I must confess that some of Eliot’s metaphors are hard wrought and sometimes unlikely and not at all evocative. ‘Prufrock’ for instance with ‘when the evening is spread out against the sky, like a patient etherised upon the table.’⁷⁸ Shocking then I suppose but a dead and very forced image now. [...]

Tuesday 23rd We are playing 13 days consecutively. Last night after a sleepless (who knows why?) night I laboured mightily through the piece with sudden turns of my head making me dizzy, both shoulders taut with pain, and legs of lead. [...] Came home immediately, dined while watching with dulled eyes Roger Moore in a Saint episode.⁷⁹ To bed and read and slept for ten solid hours. Consequent feeling of relief today almost amounting to joie de vivre.

I did the ‘Kup show’⁸⁰ and though the questions were more or less the same as everybody else’s they were framed with much more warmth and charm than most. We went well over the scheduled 1½ hour to 42 minutes so the other guests, I understand, had to make do with what remained of the hour.

Last Friday night we supped after the show with a Mr Bricause and wife, Kup and wife, Forrest Tucker and daughter, and several other people – all unknown to me.⁸¹ ‘Tuck’ boisterously drunk and loud. Nice man but can’t hold the booze anymore. He shouted a lot and everybody except me was highly embarrassed. There but for the grace of Susan and God, thought I, goes I. Fortunately for the others he passed out early, in the middle, as ‘twere, of a sentence and his daughter – a nice girl and as big as he is, took him home. To me, but hopefully not to himself, Forrest Tucker, is a minor tragedy. Very big personality, very big voice, handsome, very big man (6’ 4–5”, I would guess and heavy with it) and, as far as I know, never been out of work and, I would think, has made a lot of money in his time – for years he was in a TV series called F TROOP.⁸² And yet he has never made the big scene, the big time. Far lesser people with far less talent have done far more. Where did it all go wrong? If he is happy with his lot then he’s happy and he’s been lucky. If he thinks of the other possibilities then he must be very unhappy. The ‘other possibilities’ are the doubtful privilege of a very thin company of actors or actresses, stage or screen. Those who for some reason create excitement wherever they appear, where audiences metaphorically – and sometimes literally – sit on the edge of their seats waiting for the ticking bomb to explode into a fury of interpretive creativity. Still and all, he works continually and is well paid which is a privilege in itself. So many thousands and thousands in my profession wear out legions of shoes, walking from agent to agent, from audition to audition for ever and ever. Poor sods.

Rex Harrison opens tonight – after a week of previews – in New Orleans in that jewel of a musical My Fair Lady. I'm told that his energy level and stamina are as electric as ever despite his advancing years (he's about 71, I think) and I pray for a repeat of his original smash hit in the same piece 25 odd years ago. Unlike most people so I understand I genuinely delight in the successes of my friends and do not exult in their failures. I think Rex is, of his genre, the greatest actor in the world – the highest of high comedians. No less a person than that delicious Noël Coward once said 'Rex is the greatest light-comedian in the world' – pause 'after me.' I would say they were at least even, with Rex having the edge. I shall be thinking of him all evening long. Both Susan and I have sent him telegrams separately and one to the entire company together. Rex's brand of acting and his off-stage personality are inextricably bound together. Most obviously, for instance Rex's normal private-life voice is the same as the voice on-stage – only projected a little more. I think mine is. So is George C. Scott's, so is Gielgud's, so was Coward's so is Jason Robards', so is Fonda's, so is Richardson's but Olivier's is totally different, and Scofield's, and Guinness'.⁸³ Alec and Paul tend to 'boom' on stage though cathedrally quiet off and Larry Olivier's develops a machine-gun metallic rattle with an occasional shout thrown in 'to keep,' as he said to me once 'the bastards awake.' I'm not quite sure whether Larry meant his fellow-actors or the audiences or both. But one has to be careful with Larry – he is a great dead-pan leg-puller and one is never quite sure whether he is probing very subtly for weak spots or majestically sending one up. Superb good value though all of them. O'Toole's voice too eccentrically accented in private is the same on the stage. I wonder what it means. Does it mean that Olivier, Guinness and Scofield are basically and essentially character actors while the rest of us mentioned above are simply extensions of ourselves. Well, the more I act and the more I think about it (which is not very often) the less I know of the heart of its mystery. Why one believes absolutely in one actor and knows he's blazingly honest and not in another equally dazzling player is beyond my competence to explain. I can only accept it and hope for the best.

Talking of O'Toole I only knew by chance that he had taken such a terrible hammering – a front-page hammering – from the British critics for his performance in Macbeth. I knew only because Onllwyn Brace came to supervise my narration in the documentary film about Welsh rugby football. 'Your pal O'Toole,' he said, 'has been murdered by the English critics.' 'For what?' asked I. 'For Macbeth,' said he. I phoned Peter that night as soon as the hours were right and managed to catch him before he'd left the Old Vic. I said, 'a couple of boys from the BBC were over today to record my voice and they told me you've had a bit of stick from the critics.' 'Yes.' 'How are the houses?' I asked. 'Packed.' 'Then remember this my boy,' I said (he is 4 years younger), 'you are the most original actor to come out of Britain since the war and fuck the critics.' 'Thank you.' 'Think of every four letter obscenity, six, eight ten and twelve letter expletives and ram it right up their envious arses in which,' I said, paraphrasing Robert Atkins, 'I'm sure there is ample room.'⁸⁴ 'Thank you.' 'Good night Peter. Don't give in and I love you.' 'I won't and it's mutual.' 'Good night again.' 'Good night Richard and thank you.'

That was the extent of our conversation but my fury at the critics took me through the night – another sleepless one – and I thought of all the things I should have said to Peter and didn't and thought I should write him a letter and didn't and prayed to God I hadn't sounded like a false sympathizer secretly rejoicing in his critical debacle. But no, I comforted myself, he knows I too have been through the fire and understand. And by God I have too. It's a phenomenon that is again inexplicable that a few of us – O'Toole, Sinatra, Brando, Elizabeth Taylor, Jane Fonda, Barbra Streisand et al. carry something sanguicolous and the parasite is called 'press-envy' – especially in our own countries. Why is it? Because we take risks and run against the conventional. It cannot be because we are, albeit patchily, successful and earn millions because one never hears of viciousness anent Robert Redford or Dustin Hoffman Paul Newman or De Niro or Jon Voight but one does about Al Pacino – my dear he has – an American Film Star yet – dared to play Richard III!⁸⁵ And what's more – horror of horrors – he's going to have a go at Othello. Shakespeare's Othello, no less. I can hear the critics and gossip-mongers and the Sardi-Set already stirring up the vitriol.⁸⁶ Mr Pacino is certainly not lacking in courage – he has my deepest admiration. [...]

Monday 29th We shall be leaving at 1pm for the airport and so to Dallas. [...] Susan slipped while packing yesterday and gave herself a nasty bump on her middle spine. Both my shoulders have seized up again. [...] Vivienne very depressed yesterday and Susan had a weep – the shock of the fall didn't help.

Vivvy said Susan was working too hard. I wonder if Vivvy realizes that she, Vivvy, has been the prime cause of Susan's high tension. Well now for three weeks alone with S. It's a curiosity that when Susan and I are apart from other people and only have each other we are perfectly happy. The intrusion of a third person, however affable and amiable begins to irritate us after a mere two days or so. We'll have to be careful of this. It could destroy us. [...]

We had dinner (supper) on Saturday night with the Kupcincts. Susan – as I hoped – has taken to them very much. What a pity that the people one really likes are almost always geographically very distant. [...]

Received an odd telegram from Tim Hardy (I presume) saying that he'd given a long interview to Paul Ferris – a South Welsh writer who's determined to write a book about me. I've tried to discourage him by total silence. Tim assures me that Ferris is a distinguished writer. Well, I've read his (Ferris') biog of Dylan Thomas and found it petty and silly. Fitzgibbon's book is far warmer and generous.⁸⁷

We closed at the Arie Crown here on Saturday night to the usual non-audience during the show, sluggish and dull, and slow, but an ecstatically thunderous ovation at the end as ever. [...] Now we shall see how Texans – Dallas Texans in particular – respond. We are already completely sold out in Dallas, but they couldn't possibly be any nicer and generous than Chicagoans everybody, policemen, people in the streets, pubs and restaurants etc. have been overwhelmingly kind and it has been very gratifying to break every conceivable record, house, city and world records for attendance. [...]

How far away and unimportant everything else seems when one neither listens to the radio, watches TV or reads the newspapers. I discovered yesterday that there's a war on or something close to it between Iraq and Iran.⁸⁸ What's it all about Alfie?⁸⁹ Must get back to Keats' 'giant agony of the world' shortly.⁹⁰ The whole world's in a terrible state of chassis.[...]

My Fair Lady with the ineffable Rex H. opened in New Orleans last week and Rex, thanks to whatever Gods may be received an ovation. Diolch iddo byth am gofio.⁹¹ If he hadn't bang! would have gone another friendship perhaps.

Vivienne and baby Vanessa leave for London this evening to start – yet again – divorce proceedings against Joe the husband. We shall win I'm sure. Muhammad Ali fights Larry Holmes on Thursday night. I wish he wouldn't. It genuinely frightens me.⁹²

OCTOBER

Thursday 3rd, Dallas⁹³ Arrived here on Monday to very disappointing weather, overcast and Mancunianly depressing. [...]

We previewed the play on Tuesday night and despite being politely asked not to come – since previews, in our case, are to iron out the wrinkles and remove the gremlins attendant on opening in a new theatre with a much smaller stage [...] – the local critics were mule-headed and obdurately provincial and insisted on coming anyway and will-nilly. [...] The theatre, in comparison with the Arie Crown, was (is) a delight to play and long-forgotten laughs were back again. The notices incidentally [...] are fine according to Mike Merrick who phoned at 3am this morning to tell us so. I was very gruff and brusque. I was comfortably installed in bed complete with chocolates and Evelyn Waugh's Black Mischief when Merrick's call came through.⁹⁴ I talked, or replied rather in harsh monosyllables. 'Yes' 'No' 'Good' 'Bye' 'Thanks.' Susan asked from the bed when I re-entered the room [...] 'Who was that?' I said 'Mike Merrick.' She asked 'What did he want at this ungodly hour?' I said 'Wanted to tell us the notices were good.' Susan averred that my telephone manner was atrocious and she called Merrick back and apologized for me. I too apologized and Susan said how hopeless I was as my apology was gruffer than the original response. What is it about phones that makes me so antagonistic? I know I can sound reasonably nice on them if I'm prepared for a call but the unexpected ring infuriates me for some reason. [...]

Tuesday 7th, 0550 Greatly excited Sunday as Valerie arrived. She brought the inevitable 'goodies.' Yesterday, Monday, was a clear day off [...] I read, indoors, some of Peter de Vries Consenting Adults; or, the duchess will be furious.⁹⁵ Some of Kenneth Clark's The Nude – how beautifully and succinctly he writes [...] and Prufrockianly the comics and the sporting page, (and the politics) and watched the LA Dodgers v. the Houston Astros in a single game play off for the National League West.⁹⁶ Astros won rather dully. We the Yankees had already won our division on (Sat.)

McClure and wife Eres came to dinner on Friday night last. And were delightful. John drank a fair amount – enough to loosen him up to plunge into speaking verse by Edith Sitwell.⁹⁷ [...] McClure explained to me how D. H. Lawrence had changed his life.⁹⁸ Brought up as a WASP square and astonishing his people by preferring the piano to dating, smooching and necking with girls and not being interested in going into business, he found himself the ultimate in intellectualizing every emotion, every lust, every desire.⁹⁹ Aldous Huxley, Eliot,

Spender timidly cerebral, all added cold douches or water to his instinctive desires. He seemed potentially what V. S. Pritchett might call the inhibited descendant of late children of ancestors who had wasted the family lust and physical excitement before he McClure was unexpectedly born.¹⁰⁰ John is that rare combination – to me at any rate, of a man who's fascinated with technology – he must be one of the best ‘sound’ men in the world – Bernstein never moves without him, and from now on, neither will I. And at the same time was a potential concert piano pianist and is a fine harpsichordist [...]. He has met and known and worked with many people – some of whom we have in common – Stravinsky, Auden, Isherwood, Spender, and e. e. cummings.¹⁰¹ Curiously enough the only time I met cummings he was very but coherently drunk but according to John, who visited him frequently in his deliberately primitive home somewhere in the Eastern States he, McClure, had never seen cummings even sip a glass of innocuous white wine. So now I am mystified as to why the only encounter I had with cummings he was so desperately drunk. Harvey Orkin, whom God preserve though now dead was with me. It was in the Brussels Restaurant [...].¹⁰² In his cups John quoted him too [...]. After they left – 3 in the morning Susan and I talked ourselves into a profound melancholy and I added to it by speaking for her Eliot's the Journey of the Magi (Not a madly cheerful little number) ‘A cold coming we had of it.’¹⁰³[...]

Eres is a rare creature in that she hardly ever [...] laughs out loud. But when highly amused by John's or Susan's or my sillinesses permits a fugitive shadow of humour to distort attractively one side of her face. Susan's smile is so open (and her mouth and teeth are magnificent) my smile and John's are charming so we're told – but Eres' slight readjustment of features is intriguing. Another unique, uncommon quality about Eres is that she hardly ever mentions that she is born and bred Israeli. None of that race's chauvinism, like the sometimes insufferable South Irish, is apparent in her for which respite many thanks.

I had been told that De Vries and Evelyn Waugh were similar – that in fact De Vries was the American Waugh. On the evidence of all of Waugh's work all of which I have read and re-read and I must confess so far only one book of Peter De Vries, the only comparison is that they both can be funny – funny to the point of making me laugh out loud – and fundamentally deeply serious but otherwise, except superficially, poles apart. Before examining them against each other I must read and soak myself in De Vries. So now for a De Vries round-up.

[...] I shall try again to cut down on cigarettes. I know I can do it – stop smoking I mean, and not out of vanity either but I dislike being short of breath and who knows what other incidental damage it's doing to the body. But I have to be careful. The last time I tried (for five pathetic days) I turned into a monster and also completely lost my memory that is to say I had a five day blackout. That wouldn't do at all for Camelot.

[...] I have done a great deal of sleeping over the week-end – enough to keep me going over today and tonight I think, and have, for such a frugal eater, packed myself with food.

[...] The theatre in Miami is apparently another monster but I cannot think it will be as ugly as the Arie Crown. Also we have a house on the beach there, a private beach they say and there's no sound like the sea sound flowing like blood through the loud wound open wide to the winds the gates of the wandering boat for my voyage to begin to the end of my wound.¹⁰⁴

I have been asked to be televised in Miami – CBS local. I suggested at once that P.H. should be on it but am beginning to have second thoughts about the whole thing.¹⁰⁵ I have been, in three last months or so on the widely (coast-to-coast) viewed Today show (six days in a row) the Donahue Show, also coast to coast, and the Dick Cavett Show, another coast to coast, plus Kup's show which is apparently widely shown also but not nationally. Susan is afraid of over-exposure. I feel like a film in a camera. [...]

OCTOBER 1980–FEBRUARY 1983

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1980 diary in early October. He did not resume his personal record until mid-February, 1983.

Richard continued to appear in Camelot throughout the remainder of 1980, the production visiting Miami Beach, New Orleans and San Francisco, and then going on in 1981 to Los Angeles. But the physical strain, evident in the diary entries for 1980, was too great and Burton had to withdraw from the production at the end of March. He was taken into St John's hospital in Santa Monica for spinal surgery in April. He emerged in time to provide television narration for the wedding of the Prince of Wales and Lady Diana Spencer on 29 July 1981, but was drinking again and the marriage to Susan was in dissolution. A further spell in hospital followed in October, by which time Susan had left to live in Puerto Vallarta. Their separation was finally announced in February 1982.

Apparently undaunted by this further setback in his personal life, Burton began 1983 with another major project: making the epic film Wagner which involved filming in a number of European cities. He was also drinking heavily. While on location in Italy he met continuity editor Sally Hay, and they began a relationship. Richard's health was not good – he spent more time in hospital – but he and Sally did find time to see Elizabeth Taylor in the London stage production of The Little Foxes in June. Over the summer Burton appeared alongside daughter Kate in a film adaptation of a stage production of Alice in Wonderland. In September it was announced that Burton and Taylor would appear together in a Broadway production of Noël Coward's Private Lives in the spring of 1983.

1980

JUNE

Sunday 29th, New York Today, like a man dying of thirst I slaked and lapped and wallowed in the New York Sunday Times. I haven't read a newspaper since leaving Geneva to come here – i.e. for about two months! Neither has Susan. The only encroachment from the outside world, outside the world of Camelot the musical, and King Arthur in particular, has been the occasional late-late-night film. I only remember one of them, chiefly because of a remarkable piece of acting by Dickie Attenborough in Greene's Brighton Rock yclept in Canada Little Scarface.¹ A rare picture of a shabby shop soiled, Roman-Catholic-haunted race-gang slasher. Very Graham Greene, very soul-stretched tight and grey with inarticulateness. For the rest of the time it seemed that I ate breathed dreamed and rode the nightmare of Camelot. We might be winning the race – I'm not sure – but, if the Toronto audience reaction is anything to go by, then we have a massive hit whatever the critics might say here in the Empire State. We open the previews in two days. [...] Susan went with Frank Dunlop to see a 'rock' show at Madison Square Garden.² S. returned looking shell-shocked. She had, she told me, never heard such a monstrous cacophony. Just imagine, she said, 19,000 people screaming manically for three non-stop hours. [...] Am having enormous difficulty sleeping. I suppose that when the play is definitely on the move I will sleep properly again. The lack of sleep is not helped by a bothersome and, by now, boring bursitis in my right bursar. Am going to see 'the daddy of all the "neck and shoulder"' doctors in the Western world. We shall see if I've torn something. Tomorrow also will be critical time for new costumes. Tomorrow, indeed, taken for all in all, is not a day I'm looking forward to.

JULY

Thursday 3rd, New York It's 4.15 in the morning. Last night we had our first NY preview. In the last 48 hours I have suffered an agony of brand-new costumes. John Barber of the London Telegraph and old friend and wisest and most compassionate of men (dispassionate too) David Rowe-Beddoe had (the former,

Barber, by Frank Dunlop and the latter Rowe-Beddoe by Susan) been invited to look with new eyes at the production – we could no longer see the wood for the undergrowth.³ Their observations were invaluable. And neither were sweeping generalizations but detailed analyses, scene by scene. Costumes worried them both. So they were changed. Why was I the only male member of the cast who didn't wear tights? asked Rowe-Beddoe. Had my legs suddenly, in middle-age become scrim-shanked. No, said I, spluttering at the very thought. I'll show you all by damn. And last night I did. All costumes had to be tightened up as I've lost 12–14lbs since we opened in Toronto. [...] Proper sleep – oh sleep it is a gentle thing beloved from Pole to Pole, To Mary Queen the praise be give she sent the gentle sleep from heaven that slid into my soul shall try again to sleep.⁴ It's now 5.30. Come sealing night.⁵

AUGUST

Tuesday 12th So much for a daily report. The show is a super smash hit. Particularly, apparently, for me which is gratifying but surprising as only now, six weeks after the opening am I beginning to get the piece safely under my belt. We broke records week after week. [...] The show is still enjoyable. Long may it be so. I dread the time when I have exhausted its every possibility and go on automatic as 'twere. Thus far I haven't given the same performance twice. It is always different. It's unplanned – something curious comes from the audience and I instinctively respond – always, of course, within the frame-work of the play [...]. There have been a great many distinguished or notorious audiences I'll get to them by and by. I had one cauchemar, an appalling catastrophe which hardly bears thinking about. That too I will try to explain.⁶ Politics are the talk of the times. Last night was the first night of the convention (Democratic) and Senator E. Kennedy is out!⁷ There is a line or two in Kafka's letters that haunts me.⁸ I read it years ago and was impressed by its perfection of style (even in translation) but only in the last four or five years has it meant anything to me – I mean only its horrifying and real meaning, personally applied, has it brutally come home to me after all these years in the smugness of the dark. [...] I am writing to please myself though there's a feeling in some place in my head [...] that this might be publishable. I haven't been writing for nothing. [...]

Thursday 14th Two shows yesterday and was I tired. Lots of people to see after the second performance. [...] Henry Kissinger's son, David, and a friend, Arnold

Weissburger and Milton Goldman, Lucy Kroll, and others.⁹ The dressing room is so small that I have to see them in the corridor outside. The newspapers – but nobody else I notice – agog with a ‘great’ speech by Edward Kennedy.¹⁰ I read it and it is the usual fustian and good for his political future perhaps in 4 or 8 years time. He's a mere stripling of 48. Despite the polls I have a feeling that Carter will be re-elected.¹¹ Perhaps because I want him to be. Henry Kissinger who came to see the play with his wife Nancy a week or ten days ago said that the re-election of Carter would mean ‘a world catastrophe’ within a couple or three years.¹² Why? Because he (Carter) was totally ignorant of foreign politics. He was a peanut farmer and a fool and a megalomaniac. So, he said, was everyone else. Anderson (he'd seen him the night before in Washington) had a funny crazed look in his eye.¹³ ‘Messianical?’ I asked. ‘Yes.’ Kissinger looked much the same as he did in Jerusalem in 1975 when we talked at the King David Hotel after one of his shuttle diplomacy days in the middle of the night.¹⁴ A little less rotund perhaps and as witty and intelligent as ever [...] We supped at the ‘21’.¹⁵ The Doctor had about 6 guards within shouting distance. I remembered the contrast. In Jerusalem I was told there were 750 guards. 250 Yanks, 250 Israelis, 250 Arabs – for one man. The conversation went on for hours (we closed the ‘21’) although it was more a monologue by Kissinger. I was [...] the feed or stooge. ‘The presidency is now open for any unemployed megalomaniac,’ was one of his bon mots. He used the word megalomaniac many times. Anderson was, Carter was, everybody else was including, he said, for a short time, he himself. Nixon wasn't. Well-well.

[...] When we left I made as if to pay the bill as no one else seemed to be offering – I'm so accustomed to picking up the bills anyway but a shake of the H. waiter indicated – I think – that the good Doctor had paid. We had paid for the house seats so it was a reasonable exchange. We later found out that the K's are very sensitive about this kind of thing as some actor had bitterly asked why he or the management always had to cough up money whenever Kissinger came to see a play.

Outside in the street Henry and David Kissinger announced that they were walking home to River House.¹⁶ ‘Take a couple of guards for God's sake,’ I said. He did. [...]

Last night I ate dinner, half watched a film called The Dam Busters, read a little while Susan talked on the phone endlessly to Valerie in California, took a Mogadon and died for 7 hours.¹⁷ Dreamless. Awoke at 9.30. Tonight we have what Susan calls a day off – meaning I don't have a matinee. After the show tonight we have supper with Richard Muenz and delightful girl Nana.¹⁸ Muenz is an interesting boy. (Boy! He's 32) One other fascinating member of the company. Robert Fox.¹⁹ Both heavily weighed down with chips on the epaulettes but interesting and moody. I barely know the rest of the cast, though I have a long time to get to do so. 40 weeks or more!

Saturday 16th Went to the Muenz flat. Delightful place, lovely, clean, Nana and Rich very good hosts. Muenz darkly funny at times. We talked into the small hours – of ghosts. [...]

Last night some strange man in the audience offered a thousand dollars if we would do the last act again as the audience had not understood me profoundly enough when I bellowed 'Long live the King.' Towards the very end of the play, when I had the boy Tom of Warwick (Thor) underneath my arm this same strange one came up on to the stage and tried to wrest the sword from one of the 'knights' saying 'I must have his eyes ... I must have his eyes.'²⁰ And 'I have a message from God,' and finally 'I've failed. I've failed.' He was, apparently, taken away by the police. I kept on going willy-nilly. This almost child-like piece of Lerner and Loewe's has most extraordinary effects on people sometimes. Weirdly eerie. Some people, intelligent ones too, come backstage and are seemingly struck dumb, apparently speechless or incoherent with emotion. Others wait until they have stopped crying before they come to see me. Others though are untouched, or appear to be so and are as bland as bananas. One thing I've learned though or understood rather from personal experience: The emotional impact of a supple voice speaking lovely sounding banalities can shatter even the most cynical and blasé of audiences. They tell me that Lloyd George was a genius at it and I suppose too Senator Ed Kennedy's speech the other day was something of the same thing. Alex Cohen [...] said much the same thing. Oddly enough he (Alex) gave me a book by Tom Wicker which recalls that frightening Republican Convention when Eisenhower talked of the press and the 'media' as being enemies of 'the Party.'²¹ Wicker says that the mass hatred of the conventioners was appalling and frightening. But then it is and always has been a frightening world. I am convinced that the self congratulatory, self and modestly named 'homo sapiens' is stark mad. Raving. And the beautiful Earth's greatest enemy. I hope we are a dying species, like dinosaurs and mastodons and brontosaurus, and that we will disappear in a few years, a few hundred years, a few thousand years or whatever so that some other sane species will evolve and nurture this heavenly accident we live on.

There is an idiotic amount of fuss going on twixt batteries of lawyers about the fact that the management are flogging T-shirts which bear my name and likeness and Camelot. [...] Lawyers are an abomination and should all be hurled into outer darkness.

Two shows today, one today and every day until we leave for Chicago. God save the mark.²² Kafka and those lawyers haunt me still. I'll get on to Kafka tonight perhaps instead of watching the Avengers or Bogart or Clark Gable or Cannon.²³

Sunday 17th, New York More strange behaviour in the audience yesterday afternoon at the matinee. Miss Linda Ronstadt a pop singer and her leading man, a Kevin Kline, came to see the play.²⁴ They had Christine's (Guenevere's) house-seats.²⁵ The cast were greatly excited. I am not much for pop singers but Miss Ronstadt sings one song which is very attractive called 'Blue Bayou' which I greatly admire so I was pleased too that she was in front. At the end of the performance when the tumult and shouting had died she apparently came to my dressing room door and was told I'd be ready in a few minutes. She stood there for a time [...] and suddenly turned and took to her heels, [...] on to the empty stage, leapt from the stage into the side aisle and ran through the theatre and out.²⁶ Her leading man (they are doing the Pirates of Penzance in the Park) also fled but re-appeared some time later and came into the dressing room to pay the usual compliments. I told him to tell Ronstadt that she was my favourite pop singer [...]. Robert Fox told me later that Kevin Kline was an old friend of his who had recently become very successful but obviously regarded Fox as beneath him now that he, Kline, was a 'star'. [...]

My 'pinched nerve', now infamous in legend and story, went back on me last night and I played most of the play in considerable discomfort. It started when I was sitting off stage smoking a cigarette and waiting to go on for the chess scene with Paxton.²⁷ I handed the cigarette to Susan at exactly the wrong angle and the arm went berserk and played Hamlet with me, taking on a life – a spasmodic life – of its own. It's still a bit suspect today but much better and at least I can write this. [...]

Back to random wanderings: The audience reaction to the play: When we were in Toronto and we received without fail standing ovations at every performance I warned the cast not to take it for granted, that it would only happen occasionally, if at all, in NY. But I was wrong. The same thing happens here with unfaltering regularity. I used to get the occasional house to stand up for me in previous plays but now they always do. Will they in Chicago and the rest of the places? It's a phenomenon that I am puzzled by. Is it nostalgia? The roars I get when I take my second solo calls are almost exultantly savage. Is it a ferocious hunger for the past, a massive 'hiraeth,' a sort of murderous longing for 'home' and security and simple peace.²⁸ I don't know. It cannot be simply the performance. Some nights unavoidably, though I try like the devil to climb to the audience's expectations every time I play, I am not so good – but the final reaction is exactly the same. Is it that the audience know so much about me – or think they do – from my highly publicized and infamous past? Is it because my performance is now truly dynamic but no, it can't be that because only in the last couple of weeks have I taken absolute control of myself on the stage. Is it a combination of all. I shall never know. But let me say at once that to this little shrinking Welsh violet it is highly gratifying. Today, a glorious one I may say, we have a matinee – a glorious summer Sunday matinee. Will the ovations continue? I will refer to them never again – unless they stop. [...]

Tuesday 19th 'Only our concept of time makes it possible for us to speak of the Day of Judgement by that name; in reality it is a summary court in perpetual session.'²⁹ That is from a letter of Kafka's. It haunts me. The supreme judge at that severe searching of the soul is oneself. It is I who act, I who do the deed or have the thought and it is I only who can judge the action or the thought. I am prosecutor and defender, Satan and Saint. I am totally responsible for all my sins and goodnesses. And I am alone. That great storehouse of knowledge and memory, ignorance and idiocy, brilliance and banality, good and evil is in my own brain and only my own brain can call itself to the bar for the agony of self examination. An endless, life-long viva voce. I wish I had more time to think. I wish I didn't have the nightly performance hovering over me day after day. Last night the audience was a phantom, now with you, now gone, a chimera of wrong responses. I felt angry with them and I'm afraid allowed it to show a few times. Afterwards we went to the John McClures' flat for supper.³⁰ We talked until 3.15am. Mostly about Lenny Bernstein.³¹ How much we all loved him and how we loathed some of the things he does to himself and to other people. For Bernstein is indeed a fascinating creature, genius and dolt, a man and a woman. A boy and a girl. There is no personal hell quite like the hell Lenny lives through. All the time, all the time night and day there is the battle between his super ego and his utter self loathing – a Mahatma Miserable. I think that master means to die shortly unless the will to live reasserts itself. [...] I've written and thought myself into a state of depression. Ah! How I'd love the panacea of a drink now. A double ice cold vodka martini, the glass fogged with condensation, straight up and then straight down and the warm flood the pain-killer hitting the stomach and then the brain and an hour of sweetly melancholy euphoria. I shall have a Tab instead. Disgusting.

Friday 22nd Still finding new things in the play. We have had three 'bad' audiences in a row, 'bad' in the sense that they chuckle and don't laugh. But their silence which is sometimes very wearing explodes at the curtain calls into a roar. Rex's new Liza Doolittle (Miss Kennedy) who is British saw the play from the sound booth.³² [...] I whispered to her 'Don't get upset when Rex (Harrison) loses his temper – he doesn't really mean it.' She said 'he's very charming and we have lots of laughs together.' Maybe the incomparable Rex has mellowed. If so he is not the Rex we have loathed and loved, lo, these many years.³³ He is coming to see Camelot on Saturday night. God save the mark!

Yesterday was our wedding anniversary – the fourth. Susan gave me a life-saving present. A portable book-case, immensely durably strong which, at a rough calculation will hold a hundred or so really heavy thick tomes and I suppose twice that number of paperbacks. She had conspired with the stage hands; props man and carpenter to make it. Was it not Francis Bacon who said that books make the best furniture.³⁴ He's right. I can't stop musing at it. It is painted my colour. Red. Very fetching and a delight. My beloved John Neville just phoned. He is coming to the play tonight. A remarkable man – brilliant actor, administrator, director and with the possible exception of John Gielgud and Larry Olivier knows more about the practical side of the theatre than anyone I know. I spoke in a whisper as Susan still asleep – she packed [...] yesterday and is very tired. [...] I am useless to help her as my right arm – which is now affecting my left arm as well – is dead for lifting the lightest weight beyond diaphragm height. After the show I can only eat food that is possible to lift to my mouth with one arm. Ridiculous.

[...] I was intrigued last night when one of the Chinese waiters after having asked me if the theatre had been full that night and my saying 'to the roof' he knocked on wood. I asked him if that was general in China. He said that it was. I said, 'How does one say "good luck" or "touch wood" "good health" in Chinese.' He said something that sounded like 'Hoo Toy'.³⁵ I'll try it out elsewhere to find out if he was pulling my leg. Which reminds me that Kissinger told us that the Chinese will still treat you as a President or Prime Minister or (in his case)

Secretary of State after you have lost power – for ever. He instanced Edward Heath who was received with precisely the same courtesy and privileged treatment long after his fall from the highest office to the back-benches. They seem a very attractive people. Must go there one day.

There is something rotten in the State Theatre.³⁶ We are announced in the weekly Variety as grossing 98 or 99% capacity when we can see with our own eyes standing-room-only customers, together with collapsible, folding chairs down the aisles.³⁷ We know from Nancy Seltzer (who knows about such things) that people are sometimes paying $30 for standing-room night after night.³⁸ So where is that non-existent one or two per cent going to? It doesn't affect me financially as I have a fixed weekly wage but no percentage. What do the letters IRS mean to you at the Box Office?³⁹ Very curious. The two producers – Merrick and Gregory – plead, I believe honestly, that they cannot account for it. So who's robbing who? [...]

Talked to my younger brother Graham yesterday. Onllwyn Brace, famous ex-captain of Oxford and a Welsh International rugby player, is coming to Chicago to show me a documentary film of one hundred years of Welsh rugby.⁴⁰ It's our centenary and I am to narrate the film. It should be evocatively, perhaps tearfully good.⁴¹ I look forward to it. Welsh rugby is a mystique arousing in the Welsh a sort of madness when they play. I will write about it at length some day soon. It elevates us into ecstasy when we are at our brilliantly arrogant best and drives us to near suicide when we're not. [...]

Thursday 28th, Chicago Have been here since Monday. We have either stayed at home and slept and read [...] or rehearsed and played in this abysmal theatre.⁴² It is enormous – seating 4,200 I'm told – and is atrociously designed. Endlessly long and thin and the audience seem a million miles away. [...] We must seem like ants to them and they seem to be from outer space to us. I know my eyesight is indifferent but I cannot even see the front row of the stalls especially because of the seeming blaze of the light on the orchestra. The first night [...] was funereal. F. Dunlop and M. Merrick et al. all assured us that the mass was enjoying it and laughing etc. but there was no hint of it on the stage. [...] The matinee yesterday was a little better and the response last night was almost riotous compared with the night before. But still it's very hard work. Susan went to the back of the stalls to check on her make-up of me. Especially the eyes, so vitally important to my kind of acting. She couldn't, she said, even see the expressions on my face – I was just a white amorphous blob – like Ralph

Richardson thinks he looks like. 'I have seen better looking and more animated hot-cross buns,' he once told me of himself. Curious man Ralph. The official first night is tonight. [...] Talking of Ralph I had a note from J. Gielgud on Sunday last, written in his small fastidiously minute hand-writing saying he was sorry he'd missed me, had heard I was ill etc. I felt very guilty and hastened to phone him and ask him to come with us to the Kissingers' for drinks and dinner. He regretted that he couldn't come. There was a Cocteau film on that afternoon which he simply couldn't miss and there was dinner with friends which dear boy much as he'd love to and so on.⁴³ I mustn't be so remiss in future.

The Kissinger tea, cocktails and dinner was v. interesting though somewhat nerve-wracking especially for Susan who didn't know who everybody was not having caught their names. I filled her in as quickly and as often as they were out of earshot. 'Joe Alcott famous, sometimes brilliant and always instinct with probity, political writer.' 'William F. Buckley (Bill), T.V. talk show star political writer too, brilliant too, not too sure of his probity.' Harry Evans we had to be told about as he was new to both of us.⁴⁴ Editor of London Sunday Times with a provincial accent. 42 years old or 44 I'm not sure. Irish-Welsh he said of himself. Did a very good Welsh accent. Mrs Buckley – sloshed.⁴⁵ 'Happy' Rockefeller – sloshed too but sweet and very un' happy.' Not surprising after the death of Nelson Rockefeller.⁴⁶ And the manner of his death. I spent a long time comforting her. Susan too. The Kissingers and Susan and thy humble servant all sober. Ed of the Times – careful. Joe Alcott a bit tight but impeccably spoken at all times. He spoke with a veddy veddy English upper class accent. 'Where on earth did you, a Yankee, get such an English accent?' I asked. 'I was very badly educated,' he replied. Buckley [...] very red in the face and tried desperately to make it a brilliant evening. Much talk of the Middle East. Only Jordan (the kingdom, not the politics) could solve the situation with the PLO etc.⁴⁷ 'Happy' Rockefeller said Buckley had no common-sense. She may have been right that night. We like the Kissingers more and more and Susan now feels at home with them. I always have done. I reasoned that after our first meeting in Jerusalem they wouldn't ask me back unless they liked me for my little timid self alone. Acting and actors were rarely if ever mentioned which is an enormous relief. I liked everyone there and, our hosts apart, 'Happy' and Joe Alcott the best. He has a wicked leprechaunish air about him and is deliciously acerbic – barbed at all points. 'Hiss was guilty as hell,' he said.⁴⁸ [...] 'I'm confused,' I said. I've over-read on that case. 'How can you be so sure?' 'Dean Acheson told me and my brother Stew,' he said.⁴⁹ 'In private, of course, in public he said that he would never turn his back on a friend.’ He also said that Dean Acheson felt very uncomfortable with journalists – ‘he accepted Stew and he accepted me with albeit some reluctance because we had aristocratic connections but he equated being a journalist as someone who was “in trade”’.

It never ceases to surprise me despite my wide reading of history and the inevitability of the class system in any form of government or society and their rigid adherence to their own shibboleths when the Americans show it at all levels. ‘In trade’ indeed? In the USA indeed? Yes indeed! Buckley is very American but European mostly in his way of thinking I believe – like his arch-enemy Gore Vidal.⁵⁰ [...]

All of them seemed to have read one or other of my occasional published writings and seemed to my relief far more interested in that part of me than the acting part. I couldn't have been better pleased. The Editor of the London Sunday Times suggested that I write about the American hinterland. I was going there for the first time – why didn't I make it a book? Any good and he would publish extracts in the Sunday Times. He'd paid £32,000 or was it £38,000? to William Manchester for six or eight extracts from his latest.⁵¹ Why not me? Why not indeed, I thought? I said I would ponder over it and perhaps send him a few thousand words to see if or how he liked it. I still don't know if I will but it's an intriguing temptation. But what can I do about getting out and around. I cannot sit in a public park or any public place, restaurant or bar or church without being recognized within minutes. Like Hamlet but not for the same splendid reasons I am the observed of all the observers⁵² Being famous or infamous depending on whether you're Dean Acheson or Harry Goldberg the cab-driver has that disadvantage, and there are others but, I quickly must add, the advantages greatly outnumber the disadvantages. One curiosity about being as peculiarly well known as I am is that almost everywhere I go, it's the other people who change – not me. In the restaurant for instance, once it is known that I'm there and, gradually, Susan too, it's the other diners who begin to be self conscious and start unconsciously to act. Women especially become arch or arrogant, simpering or ultra-sophisticated [...] and everybody covertly, they think, stare at Susan – searching her hair, her jewelry, her clothes, her fingernails, face, figure legs and feet. A great many restaurants in these limited states have mirrors and it is sometimes amusing to sit at a mirrored bar with Susan beside me, while waiting for a table, [...] and watch the subtle changes of attitude and posture and pose and poise of the others. I taught Susan, who, unlike me, is shy almost to the point of being in pain, to watch them and I think it has greatly eased her shyness but she is still indignant that whenever she goes to the loo she is always followed by a gaggle of women who are hoping to see her at close quarters and her underclothes Bill Buckley would zengmatically say.⁵³ I got the impression from Buckley, oddly, that in his conversation and questions to Henry K he was anti-semitic. He used the word 'Israelis' for instance with greater assurance than the word 'Jewish' or 'Jews' and yet he said both with a kind of furtive defiance. I may have mistaken what was a slight awe of Kissinger, his fame and achievements with anti-semitism but I honestly don't think so. Coming from a minority myself and having been taught by Bob Wilson how to look out for the signs of prejudice I am pretty sure I was not mistaken. Wilson and I have been together for some 25 years. He is a negro or a black, take your choice, and his antennae are always miles out waiting for the signals. 'You see that guy,' he said of a white man at a party years ago, 'he hates my people's guts.' 'How do you know?' I asked. The fellow had been sitting beside us and seemed weak but pleasant enough. 'He's just asked me if I would let him freshen my drink. And I've let him.' 'So?' I said. 'He didn't ask if he could freshen yours.' It was true, for I looked at my drink and saw the glass empty. Later on I came to know the man better – a theatre-buff in NY – and gradually I got him by very oblique statements, questions and answers to prove Bob right. He couldn't stand he told me finally 'uppity niggers.' It was a massive vindication of Bob's life-long experience. From then on, for some time I relied on Bob's judgements of people. He is always uncannily right. And though I think I'm pretty good myself now I always double check with Bob as I am still a little too naively trusting. I tell people, tongue slightly in cheek, that it's part of my charm but it is true. I am still appalled (at the age of 54) when I find out – and the evidence has to be overwhelming – that someone I like and trusted has lied to me, or stolen from me or cheated me. I lie quite freely myself but my lies are usually to make somebody else feel better and are rarely, if ever, egoistically prompted though some times egotistically so. Sometimes there is, to my sorrow, a touch of self aggrandizement in my talk. In vino which I never am nowadays I lose all control and will lie in my teeth about anybody or anything and viciously too. I am not a nice man at those times. I hope they never recur.

Susan has just come in to the room to talk to la concierge who is actually a Frenchwoman. The woman had asked me in rapid French if she could talk to Madame Burton. Obviously being tested I replied in equally rapid French that I would go and find her. Susan has just said that the concierge had asked if Susan would like her dead or dropping dying death's worst winding sheets tombs and worms and tumbling into decay flowers to be removed from the suite rooms, but her actual reason was to hear me talk.⁵⁴ 'Quelle voix extraordinaire! Ah!' 'Le Roi de Voix'. Now, peculiarly enough Susan who couldn't have a more different background from Bob Wilson has almost as quick and true an instinctive reaction to people as he does. At a party they will silently, across a crowded room, especially a crowded dressing room after a performance, agree or concur with minute eye-contacts and head-shakes of exquisitely imperceptible signals who's 'class' and genuine or 'no class' and meretricious. Later they will give me the benefit of their combined instincts. Bob Wilson is 74 and Susan is 31. Bob is tall (6' 3") and Susan is tall (5' 10"), he is handsome, she is beautiful, they both speak differing forms of English but there the similarity ends. Bob is black. Susan is very white and blonde streaked. Bob worked on the railroads in Pittsburgh etc and his grandparents were slaves. Susan's father is Brigadier Frederick Miller and her mother Dierdre Wallis with some connections with the Duchess of Devonshire.⁵⁵ Bob learned the three 'R's. Susan grew up in Kenya, convent taught where her officially retired father was a lawyer and a judge. Bob's father is never mentioned and is still a mystery to me, his mother is still alive, immensely old and in a home. An absolutely impossibility for two such people to bridge that mighty chasm and understand each other even vaguely [...]. But on the contrary they understand each other perfectly and did from the first meeting 4¹/₂ years ago. I continue to be continually surprised by life. He Bob Wilson said to me one day quite recently that I had great taste in women. 'All your wives, Sybil, Elizabeth and Susan don't have an atom of prejudice in them. Neither does Valerie (Douglas) (my sister, my mother my baby and my Manager). Val may not like me but she hasn't got a prejudiced bone in her body.'

[...] Susan came into the room 15 minutes ago dressed for the party tonight. She is one of the few women in the world – certainly in my world – who could carry off such a fantasy of dress. Though 'dress' is the wrong word. It's actually black trousers, a kind of black 'merry widowish' top with a diaphanous black jacket that comes down to mid thigh. I should ravish her on the spot. I'll ask her if I may. On second thoughts I'll do it after the performance. Tiredly and gently.

Friday 29th, Chicago We opened last night and it went well. Christine, and Richard Muenz [...] were 'up' and so was I, though my shoulder gave me hell all night but surprisingly eased at the party afterwards. We arrived home at 2am and made cups of tea and grapple-snapped (Howard Taylor's, now the family's word, for raiding the refrigerator at sporadic intervals) [...]until long after dawn. And we talked and talked and talked – about Franz Allers and his delightful self adoration, about how old he was (74) and agreed that we loved him and his funny ways – about Eres McClure (John McClure's wife) and how earnest and subdued and intelligent she was last night.⁵⁶ She is a lovely woman, dark and high cheek-boned easily mistaken for an American Indian though she is in fact Israeli born and bred. [...] I took in the newspapers a couple of hours ago and saw a boxed announcement on the front page of one of them ‘Burton regal in Camelot. See Page 22’ or something like that. [...] I haven't read my notices for years but of course everybody else does. M. Merrick is amusingly predictable about them – he calls really vicious ones ‘personal vendettas’, bad ones ‘constructive’ and very good ones ‘love letters.’ I wonder why he is so worried about the critics. I'm not and he, I think, is uncertain as to whether I'm pulling his leg or not when I say simply and honestly ‘How's the box-office?’ or ‘Are we sold out.’ I mean it's no use having good notices and empty houses – much better to have stinkers and full houses. There is nothing, simply nothing that dispirits me more than to see great black blocked gaps in the audience like missing teeth. It's only happened to me once since I became a leading actor and it's an experience I didn't at all relish. (Legend of Lovers. Anouilh NY mid-fifties sometime.⁵⁷) I've been very lucky in that way. A very different matter in films over which I have little or no control. We talked a lot too, in the small hours, of Elizabeth. We both are very fond of her and for some reason worry about her. I can't think why. She seems to be all right. It's the first time we've talked at length about her for a long time. Hope she's happy, as we are. Sounds fearfully smug which I suppose it is but it's true.

Susan awake (3pm) and has read the notices. I could feel her fury or disappointment. She said ‘what did you say about the critics before we opened in Chicago.’ I replied ‘if they're good in New York they'll almost certainly be bad here.’ Well, she said, I was right though they're actually a bit bland rather than bad, she said. ‘Are they good for the kids?’ I said meaning Christine, Richard Muenz in particular, but also Fox, Valentine and of course Paxton.⁵⁸ ‘Yes,’ she said. [...] She then said (God how I love this child) ‘I am now going to have a bath and get myself CLEAN.’ The ‘clean’ was said in majestically capital letters and victoriously underlined. So yet another first night is over and it seems that the houses – gigantic as they are – will be full ones. [...]

SEPTEMBER

Friday 5th, Chicago This city is very pleasing and unless I'm careful it will erode my affection for London and New York as being my first and second favourite cities. (Rome, LA, and Paris are villages avec beaucoup des banlieus.⁵⁹ Our day off (last Monday) co-incided with Columbus or Labor Day – which meant that the city was like London or New York on a Sunday – streets virtually deserted and very little traffic. [...] A lot of the restaurants were closed for the day but a few were not, including an Indian place called The Khyber. It was cool and pleasant and the food was good though no Indian restaurant have I found yet, anywhere, makes the spices hot enough. [...] I was surprised when I went to the lavatory that it [...] was filthy. [...] I am reminded of a story that D. M. Thomas told us about Caradoc Evans.⁶⁰ Now Caradoc Evans was a very Welsh Welshman who hated his own country and countrymen, hatred that was closely akin to love in its hostile virulence. He had written a famous diatribe against the Welsh in a book or a play called Taffy a pile of which books had been, so I'm told publicly burned in the towns of Aberystwyth Bangor Swansea and Cardiff by students.⁶¹ Once below a time, as D. M. Thomas wrote, they, together with Augustus John and Louis MacNeice and others were drinking in a pub in Ceinwydd (New Quay) in Wales (a bewitching sailor's town) when Caradoc when offered a drink said darkly 'Where are your lavatories. I wish to inspect them.'⁶² The barman an authentic cor blimey cockney said, 'they are outside turn left, left again and Bob's your uncle.' Caradoc left. Caradoc returned. He said 'I will have a drink now.' 'You must be a foreigner and not Welsh.' 'Well now,' said the sound of bow-bells, 'how did you guess that?' 'Because,' said Caradoc in a mighty voice, 'your urinals are clean!'⁶³

It's 12.45 and Susan is still asleep. I have been awake and up and about and reading and writing this since about 10.30. We went to bed very late and I would guess that Susan didn't get to sleep until 7 or 8 or 9 o'clock this morning. She is dreadfully worried about her twin sister in South Africa.⁶⁴ We are trying to get her out of South Africa and to us here in Chicago without her husband's knowledge [...]. She has a 7 month old baby and the husband is found to be, I put it mildly, incompatible. [...] We are very anxious to get Vivvy and the child away before he does irretrievable damage to either or both. [...] We hope to fly her to Frankfurt where she will get a visitor's visa to these United States and fly on from there to us here in Chicago. We are continually on edge and will remain so until she and baby Vanessa arrives. Also excited at the prospect of having a small baby around. 1pm and time to awaken Susan who is going to see The Empire Strikes Back a sequel to Star Wars.⁶⁵ She goes with Bill Parry (Sir Dinidan in Camelot and my understudy) and two girls from the chorus Melanie and Laura.⁶⁶ I may go with them. They guarantee me bad acting which I enjoy.

[...] Yesterday, with Christine (Guenevere) Ebersole, I went on the Donahue talk show which is apparently unique among its kind in that it invites the audience to ask the interviewees questions.⁶⁷ It went along predictably enough. Same old questions. Same old answers. Booze, Elizabeth Taylor, which kind I prefer – stage or films etc? I felt sorry for Mr Donahue. He tried so hard to be provocative and had, fatal for an interviewer, got a couple of stock phrases locked into his brain in his exchanges with me which became almost uncomfortably ineffective as the hour wore on. [...] Susan listened and watched in the sound booth hoping that Mr Donahue would not ask about the booze and especially the one-night crack-up on Broadway. When, inevitably, he did, she said quietly ‘Vulgarian.’⁶⁸ The technicians who had been talking like mad went absolutely silent. She also said that when I mentioned Dick Cavett and Irv Kupcinet (two other talk-show hosts) they, the technicians, said respectively ‘shit’ and ‘son-of-a-bitch’.⁶⁹ I think of Donahue's job and shudder. Every day, day after day, he has this shabby shop-soiled little show to do. The strain must be enormous. Cavett really seems to enjoy his work but, on yesterday's evidence Mr Donahue does not. Later Christine said at the side of the stage as we were due to go on in Camelot. ‘You're such a gentle man (not gentleman) that you made him look crass.’ [...] Ah well. Kupcinet next. I wonder if he'll be the same. In person he's a treasure – and his wife too. [...]

Thursday 18th 13 days since writing – at least in this apology for a journal. Most importantly Vivvy and Vanessa [...] have arrived from J'burg. [...] Both Susan and I and grandparents and Valerie and Bob immensely relieved. [...] Now for the dreariness of divorce and who gets custody of the baby etc. That could go on and on. But [...] – I am delighted with the child. I have played with her for hours. And I'm trying to remember what my other babies were like at that age – Kate, Jessica and Maria. I cannot remember of course.

[...] Susan and Vivienne and Baby and I and a brilliant sunny autumnal day and full houses. What more could one euphorically want? And so to walk.

[...] As I entered the hotel I was greeted by a thunderous Welsh accent saying ‘Well look who's here by God Almighty. I heard you were about but didn't think I'd see you.’ I replied ‘Sen he has all my brether ta'en He will nocht let me live alane. Of force I man his nex’ prey be Timor mortis conturbat me.’⁷⁰ It was Ian Bannen, the very fine, highly eccentric Scots actor.⁷¹ With him was his wife. So he has married at last after years of living with this one and that one. He must be 50 years old or so. I remember him first at Stratford-upon-Avon at the Memorial Theatre (now called 'The Royal Shakespeare') and was intrigued by the fact that he had a very (to me then) expensive two-seater sports car despite the fact that he was a mere walk-on and understudy. Among other roles, he understudied that of the Scot in Henry V in which I played the King. One night the actor playing the Scot was off and this boy went on. To me it was sensational – Bannen showed immediate, perhaps instinctive, dynamic quality. Nobody else seemed to notice. It was therefore no surprise to me that later he became one of the world's finest actors. He is, at the moment, doing a personal appearance tour for Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy.⁷² [...] I'm very fond of him. His wife is attractive and seemingly good and kind. He needs that – I would guess. The last time I worked with him I played Winston Churchill and he played Hitler. I thought he was splendid but the American producers thought he'd gone too far. I didn't think so and said that it was almost impossible to go too far with A. Hitler. They made him tone it down which I still think a shame. The show was for the Hallmark Hall of Fame yet! As they say. Very frightened people the latter lot. The NY Times had asked me to write about playing WSC and had published the article which wasn't entirely complimentary about 'the great man' on the Sunday of the TV premiere of the film in the USA.⁷³ I'm told that the Hallmark Hall of Fame people nearly had several heart attacks and seriously thought of cancelling the show.⁷⁴ So frightened indeed, is everybody in American TV [...] that one derogatory article in the August NY Times sends them immediately into conniptions. When one realizes that though the NY Times is read by a couple of million people and the viewing figures for a show of that magnitude are 60 or 70 or 80 millions who could not possibly be affected by what I wrote in the NY Times on the very day of issue and show one begins to wonder afresh at the sickness of our Western Society. Further, though I was very good in the part and would have been a certainty for the abominable Emmy (for make-up) if nothing else, my article struck at their fearless hearts and I wasn't even nominated. What should such creatures as they do, crawling between heaven and earth.⁷⁵ [...] Almost time to go to work. [...]

It's 11.55 and midnight is upon us again. In the car on the way home I saw what I thought with my bad eyesight, was the moon and muttered almost to myself: 'Regard the moon. La Lune ne garde aucune rancune, She winks a feeble eye, she smiles into corners, she smoothes the hair of the grass. A washed out small pox cracks her face.' Susan asked 'What's that you're saying?' I said that it was T. S. Eliot – a bit from ‘Rhapsody on a Windy Night’.⁷⁶ When we were home, I said, I would try and remember the whole thing. I’ve tried (Susan is cooking supper) and can’t get it all. Large lumps of it but not the whole thing. That means a walk to a book shop tomorrow. Unless midnight, ‘this midnight, tonight,’ shakes the memory as a madman shakes a dead geranium.⁷⁷ I must confess that some of Eliot’s metaphors are hard wrought and sometimes unlikely and not at all evocative. ‘Prufrock’ for instance with ‘when the evening is spread out against the sky, like a patient etherised upon the table.’⁷⁸ Shocking then I suppose but a dead and very forced image now. [...]

Tuesday 23rd We are playing 13 days consecutively. Last night after a sleepless (who knows why?) night I laboured mightily through the piece with sudden turns of my head making me dizzy, both shoulders taut with pain, and legs of lead. [...] Came home immediately, dined while watching with dulled eyes Roger Moore in a Saint episode.⁷⁹ To bed and read and slept for ten solid hours. Consequent feeling of relief today almost amounting to joie de vivre.

I did the ‘Kup show’⁸⁰ and though the questions were more or less the same as everybody else’s they were framed with much more warmth and charm than most. We went well over the scheduled 1½ hour to 42 minutes so the other guests, I understand, had to make do with what remained of the hour.

Last Friday night we supped after the show with a Mr Bricause and wife, Kup and wife, Forrest Tucker and daughter, and several other people – all unknown to me.⁸¹ ‘Tuck’ boisterously drunk and loud. Nice man but can’t hold the booze anymore. He shouted a lot and everybody except me was highly embarrassed. There but for the grace of Susan and God, thought I, goes I. Fortunately for the others he passed out early, in the middle, as ‘twere, of a sentence and his daughter – a nice girl and as big as he is, took him home. To me, but hopefully not to himself, Forrest Tucker, is a minor tragedy. Very big personality, very big voice, handsome, very big man (6’ 4–5”, I would guess and heavy with it) and, as far as I know, never been out of work and, I would think, has made a lot of money in his time – for years he was in a TV series called F TROOP.⁸² And yet he has never made the big scene, the big time. Far lesser people with far less talent have done far more. Where did it all go wrong? If he is happy with his lot then he’s happy and he’s been lucky. If he thinks of the other possibilities then he must be very unhappy. The ‘other possibilities’ are the doubtful privilege of a very thin company of actors or actresses, stage or screen. Those who for some reason create excitement wherever they appear, where audiences metaphorically – and sometimes literally – sit on the edge of their seats waiting for the ticking bomb to explode into a fury of interpretive creativity. Still and all, he works continually and is well paid which is a privilege in itself. So many thousands and thousands in my profession wear out legions of shoes, walking from agent to agent, from audition to audition for ever and ever. Poor sods.

Rex Harrison opens tonight – after a week of previews – in New Orleans in that jewel of a musical My Fair Lady. I'm told that his energy level and stamina are as electric as ever despite his advancing years (he's about 71, I think) and I pray for a repeat of his original smash hit in the same piece 25 odd years ago. Unlike most people so I understand I genuinely delight in the successes of my friends and do not exult in their failures. I think Rex is, of his genre, the greatest actor in the world – the highest of high comedians. No less a person than that delicious Noël Coward once said 'Rex is the greatest light-comedian in the world' – pause 'after me.' I would say they were at least even, with Rex having the edge. I shall be thinking of him all evening long. Both Susan and I have sent him telegrams separately and one to the entire company together. Rex's brand of acting and his off-stage personality are inextricably bound together. Most obviously, for instance Rex's normal private-life voice is the same as the voice on-stage – only projected a little more. I think mine is. So is George C. Scott's, so is Gielgud's, so was Coward's so is Jason Robards', so is Fonda's, so is Richardson's but Olivier's is totally different, and Scofield's, and Guinness'.⁸³ Alec and Paul tend to 'boom' on stage though cathedrally quiet off and Larry Olivier's develops a machine-gun metallic rattle with an occasional shout thrown in 'to keep,' as he said to me once 'the bastards awake.' I'm not quite sure whether Larry meant his fellow-actors or the audiences or both. But one has to be careful with Larry – he is a great dead-pan leg-puller and one is never quite sure whether he is probing very subtly for weak spots or majestically sending one up. Superb good value though all of them. O'Toole's voice too eccentrically accented in private is the same on the stage. I wonder what it means. Does it mean that Olivier, Guinness and Scofield are basically and essentially character actors while the rest of us mentioned above are simply extensions of ourselves. Well, the more I act and the more I think about it (which is not very often) the less I know of the heart of its mystery. Why one believes absolutely in one actor and knows he's blazingly honest and not in another equally dazzling player is beyond my competence to explain. I can only accept it and hope for the best.

Talking of O'Toole I only knew by chance that he had taken such a terrible hammering – a front-page hammering – from the British critics for his performance in Macbeth. I knew only because Onllwyn Brace came to supervise my narration in the documentary film about Welsh rugby football. 'Your pal O'Toole,' he said, 'has been murdered by the English critics.' 'For what?' asked I. 'For Macbeth,' said he. I phoned Peter that night as soon as the hours were right and managed to catch him before he'd left the Old Vic. I said, 'a couple of boys from the BBC were over today to record my voice and they told me you've had a bit of stick from the critics.' 'Yes.' 'How are the houses?' I asked. 'Packed.' 'Then remember this my boy,' I said (he is 4 years younger), 'you are the most original actor to come out of Britain since the war and fuck the critics.' 'Thank you.' 'Think of every four letter obscenity, six, eight ten and twelve letter expletives and ram it right up their envious arses in which,' I said, paraphrasing Robert Atkins, 'I'm sure there is ample room.'⁸⁴ 'Thank you.' 'Good night Peter. Don't give in and I love you.' 'I won't and it's mutual.' 'Good night again.' 'Good night Richard and thank you.'

That was the extent of our conversation but my fury at the critics took me through the night – another sleepless one – and I thought of all the things I should have said to Peter and didn't and thought I should write him a letter and didn't and prayed to God I hadn't sounded like a false sympathizer secretly rejoicing in his critical debacle. But no, I comforted myself, he knows I too have been through the fire and understand. And by God I have too. It's a phenomenon that is again inexplicable that a few of us – O'Toole, Sinatra, Brando, Elizabeth Taylor, Jane Fonda, Barbra Streisand et al. carry something sanguicolous and the parasite is called 'press-envy' – especially in our own countries. Why is it? Because we take risks and run against the conventional. It cannot be because we are, albeit patchily, successful and earn millions because one never hears of viciousness anent Robert Redford or Dustin Hoffman Paul Newman or De Niro or Jon Voight but one does about Al Pacino – my dear he has – an American Film Star yet – dared to play Richard III!⁸⁵ And what's more – horror of horrors – he's going to have a go at Othello. Shakespeare's Othello, no less. I can hear the critics and gossip-mongers and the Sardi-Set already stirring up the vitriol.⁸⁶ Mr Pacino is certainly not lacking in courage – he has my deepest admiration. [...]

Monday 29th We shall be leaving at 1pm for the airport and so to Dallas. [...] Susan slipped while packing yesterday and gave herself a nasty bump on her middle spine. Both my shoulders have seized up again. [...] Vivienne very depressed yesterday and Susan had a weep – the shock of the fall didn't help.

Vivvy said Susan was working too hard. I wonder if Vivvy realizes that she, Vivvy, has been the prime cause of Susan's high tension. Well now for three weeks alone with S. It's a curiosity that when Susan and I are apart from other people and only have each other we are perfectly happy. The intrusion of a third person, however affable and amiable begins to irritate us after a mere two days or so. We'll have to be careful of this. It could destroy us. [...]

We had dinner (supper) on Saturday night with the Kupcincts. Susan – as I hoped – has taken to them very much. What a pity that the people one really likes are almost always geographically very distant. [...]

Received an odd telegram from Tim Hardy (I presume) saying that he'd given a long interview to Paul Ferris – a South Welsh writer who's determined to write a book about me. I've tried to discourage him by total silence. Tim assures me that Ferris is a distinguished writer. Well, I've read his (Ferris') biog of Dylan Thomas and found it petty and silly. Fitzgibbon's book is far warmer and generous.⁸⁷

We closed at the Arie Crown here on Saturday night to the usual non-audience during the show, sluggish and dull, and slow, but an ecstatically thunderous ovation at the end as ever. [...] Now we shall see how Texans – Dallas Texans in particular – respond. We are already completely sold out in Dallas, but they couldn't possibly be any nicer and generous than Chicagoans everybody, policemen, people in the streets, pubs and restaurants etc. have been overwhelmingly kind and it has been very gratifying to break every conceivable record, house, city and world records for attendance. [...]

How far away and unimportant everything else seems when one neither listens to the radio, watches TV or reads the newspapers. I discovered yesterday that there's a war on or something close to it between Iraq and Iran.⁸⁸ What's it all about Alfie?⁸⁹ Must get back to Keats' 'giant agony of the world' shortly.⁹⁰ The whole world's in a terrible state of chassis.[...]

My Fair Lady with the ineffable Rex H. opened in New Orleans last week and Rex, thanks to whatever Gods may be received an ovation. Diolch iddo byth am gofio.⁹¹ If he hadn't bang! would have gone another friendship perhaps.

Vivienne and baby Vanessa leave for London this evening to start – yet again – divorce proceedings against Joe the husband. We shall win I'm sure. Muhammad Ali fights Larry Holmes on Thursday night. I wish he wouldn't. It genuinely frightens me.⁹²

OCTOBER

Thursday 3rd, Dallas⁹³ Arrived here on Monday to very disappointing weather, overcast and Mancunianly depressing. [...]

We previewed the play on Tuesday night and despite being politely asked not to come – since previews, in our case, are to iron out the wrinkles and remove the gremlins attendant on opening in a new theatre with a much smaller stage [...] – the local critics were mule-headed and obdurately provincial and insisted on coming anyway and will-nilly. [...] The theatre, in comparison with the Arie Crown, was (is) a delight to play and long-forgotten laughs were back again. The notices incidentally [...] are fine according to Mike Merrick who phoned at 3am this morning to tell us so. I was very gruff and brusque. I was comfortably installed in bed complete with chocolates and Evelyn Waugh's Black Mischief when Merrick's call came through.⁹⁴ I talked, or replied rather in harsh monosyllables. 'Yes' 'No' 'Good' 'Bye' 'Thanks.' Susan asked from the bed when I re-entered the room [...] 'Who was that?' I said 'Mike Merrick.' She asked 'What did he want at this ungodly hour?' I said 'Wanted to tell us the notices were good.' Susan averred that my telephone manner was atrocious and she called Merrick back and apologized for me. I too apologized and Susan said how hopeless I was as my apology was gruffer than the original response. What is it about phones that makes me so antagonistic? I know I can sound reasonably nice on them if I'm prepared for a call but the unexpected ring infuriates me for some reason. [...]

Tuesday 7th, 0550 Greatly excited Sunday as Valerie arrived. She brought the inevitable 'goodies.' Yesterday, Monday, was a clear day off [...] I read, indoors, some of Peter de Vries Consenting Adults; or, the duchess will be furious.⁹⁵ Some of Kenneth Clark's The Nude – how beautifully and succinctly he writes [...] and Prufrockianly the comics and the sporting page, (and the politics) and watched the LA Dodgers v. the Houston Astros in a single game play off for the National League West.⁹⁶ Astros won rather dully. We the Yankees had already won our division on (Sat.)

McClure and wife Eres came to dinner on Friday night last. And were delightful. John drank a fair amount – enough to loosen him up to plunge into speaking verse by Edith Sitwell.⁹⁷ [...] McClure explained to me how D. H. Lawrence had changed his life.⁹⁸ Brought up as a WASP square and astonishing his people by preferring the piano to dating, smooching and necking with girls and not being interested in going into business, he found himself the ultimate in intellectualizing every emotion, every lust, every desire.⁹⁹ Aldous Huxley, Eliot,

Spender timidly cerebral, all added cold douches or water to his instinctive desires. He seemed potentially what V. S. Pritchett might call the inhibited descendant of late children of ancestors who had wasted the family lust and physical excitement before he McClure was unexpectedly born.¹⁰⁰ John is that rare combination – to me at any rate, of a man who's fascinated with technology – he must be one of the best ‘sound’ men in the world – Bernstein never moves without him, and from now on, neither will I. And at the same time was a potential concert piano pianist and is a fine harpsichordist [...]. He has met and known and worked with many people – some of whom we have in common – Stravinsky, Auden, Isherwood, Spender, and e. e. cummings.¹⁰¹ Curiously enough the only time I met cummings he was very but coherently drunk but according to John, who visited him frequently in his deliberately primitive home somewhere in the Eastern States he, McClure, had never seen cummings even sip a glass of innocuous white wine. So now I am mystified as to why the only encounter I had with cummings he was so desperately drunk. Harvey Orkin, whom God preserve though now dead was with me. It was in the Brussels Restaurant [...].¹⁰² In his cups John quoted him too [...]. After they left – 3 in the morning Susan and I talked ourselves into a profound melancholy and I added to it by speaking for her Eliot's the Journey of the Magi (Not a madly cheerful little number) ‘A cold coming we had of it.’¹⁰³[...]

Eres is a rare creature in that she hardly ever [...] laughs out loud. But when highly amused by John's or Susan's or my sillinesses permits a fugitive shadow of humour to distort attractively one side of her face. Susan's smile is so open (and her mouth and teeth are magnificent) my smile and John's are charming so we're told – but Eres' slight readjustment of features is intriguing. Another unique, uncommon quality about Eres is that she hardly ever mentions that she is born and bred Israeli. None of that race's chauvinism, like the sometimes insufferable South Irish, is apparent in her for which respite many thanks.

I had been told that De Vries and Evelyn Waugh were similar – that in fact De Vries was the American Waugh. On the evidence of all of Waugh's work all of which I have read and re-read and I must confess so far only one book of Peter De Vries, the only comparison is that they both can be funny – funny to the point of making me laugh out loud – and fundamentally deeply serious but otherwise, except superficially, poles apart. Before examining them against each other I must read and soak myself in De Vries. So now for a De Vries round-up.

[...] I shall try again to cut down on cigarettes. I know I can do it – stop smoking I mean, and not out of vanity either but I dislike being short of breath and who knows what other incidental damage it's doing to the body. But I have to be careful. The last time I tried (for five pathetic days) I turned into a monster and also completely lost my memory that is to say I had a five day blackout. That wouldn't do at all for Camelot.

[...] I have done a great deal of sleeping over the week-end – enough to keep me going over today and tonight I think, and have, for such a frugal eater, packed myself with food.

[...] The theatre in Miami is apparently another monster but I cannot think it will be as ugly as the Arie Crown. Also we have a house on the beach there, a private beach they say and there's no sound like the sea sound flowing like blood through the loud wound open wide to the winds the gates of the wandering boat for my voyage to begin to the end of my wound.¹⁰⁴

I have been asked to be televised in Miami – CBS local. I suggested at once that P.H. should be on it but am beginning to have second thoughts about the whole thing.¹⁰⁵ I have been, in three last months or so on the widely (coast-to-coast) viewed Today show (six days in a row) the Donahue Show, also coast to coast, and the Dick Cavett Show, another coast to coast, plus Kup's show which is apparently widely shown also but not nationally. Susan is afraid of over-exposure. I feel like a film in a camera. [...]

OCTOBER 1980–FEBRUARY 1983

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1980 diary in early October. He did not resume his personal record until mid-February, 1983.

Richard continued to appear in Camelot throughout the remainder of 1980, the production visiting Miami Beach, New Orleans and San Francisco, and then going on in 1981 to Los Angeles. But the physical strain, evident in the diary entries for 1980, was too great and Burton had to withdraw from the production at the end of March. He was taken into St John's hospital in Santa Monica for spinal surgery in April. He emerged in time to provide television narration for the wedding of the Prince of Wales and Lady Diana Spencer on 29 July 1981, but was drinking again and the marriage to Susan was in dissolution. A further spell in hospital followed in October, by which time Susan had left to live in Puerto Vallarta. Their separation was finally announced in February 1982.

Apparently undaunted by this further setback in his personal life, Burton began 1983 with another major project: making the epic film Wagner which involved filming in a number of European cities. He was also drinking heavily. While on location in Italy he met continuity editor Sally Hay, and they began a relationship. Richard's health was not good – he spent more time in hospital – but he and Sally did find time to see Elizabeth Taylor in the London stage production of The Little Foxes in June. Over the summer Burton appeared alongside daughter Kate in a film adaptation of a stage production of Alice in Wonderland. In September it was announced that Burton and Taylor would appear together in a Broadway production of Noël Coward's Private Lives in the spring of 1983.

1983

FEBRUARY

Monday 14th Awoke as right as rainbows. Saw Pierre Koessler re: burglar alarms.¹

Very complicated. Quite clearly security firms are in collusion with insurance companies. Said I will think about. Have lived here for twenty-odd years with not a blade of grass stolen. Anyway nothing here to steal. TV set, two or three radios, a couple of typewriters, a cheap clock. Ah well. Phone Rene and Berenice Weibel. Dinner at La Réserve on Wednesday. Shall ask him about it. Sally very depressed all day.² Worried about Haiti, divorce, NY and attendant publicity she thinks.³ Poor thing. I went back to work.

Tuesday 15th S. still depressed and fed up. With being a slavey no doubt. Being with me is not as glamorous as people think. Did not get up until 2.35pm put me into tearing fury. Very cold all the time and permanently overcast. What fools we are we could have been in Gstaad all this time where (according to D. Brynner) the weather has been fine all the time.⁴ Half looking forward to, half dreading the Dearth.⁵ Will I be able to handle John's very heavy drinking? Managing my own is a full-time job. Fury so great I didn't do any work at all. Cooled down after dinner but not entirely.

Wednesday 16th Sleepless until 5 or so. Got up at 12.30 or thereabouts. Verdun back in intensive care with yet one more heart attack. Will he repel the swine this time again? Pray that he does. He has been very overweight since he gave up fags. He is the linchpin of the family since Tom died.⁶ His loss would be terrible. Took S out to dinner at La Réserve with Rene Weibel and Berenice and Janine Filistorf. Very pleasant. Rene has retired. Looks well. Talked to Milton Katselas.⁷ J. Cullum to play Victor – Bravo.⁸ ET going to be late for rehearsals. Three or four days. What's new?

Thursday 17th [...] Did three hours or so on Lives not far to go now. Telephoned J. Cullum to make sure they weren't fibbing to me. Phoned Aileen and Chris to get Mark Getty's telephone number.⁹ Talked Graham. Verdun still in intensive care. Talked to Getty – latter sounded down in the mouth. Read awful book about G. Best (footballer) by M. Parkinson. I wonder if Parkinson knew he was writing about himself. Wine, women, TV star. Lost his talent as a promising writer as Best lost his genius. And for same reasons.¹⁰

Friday 18th Wishart and companion arrived. Quite clear from all his and her talk that going back to live in UK would be absurd – took them to dinner at ‘La Réserve’. James became quite drunk. Did not drink at all.

Saturday 19th Took Wishart and Miss Hall to airport. Watched Ireland v. France. Heard Wales v. Scots not much in it either side could have won.¹¹

Sunday 20th Picked up John and Joan [Dearth]. John looks terrible. Gave him lots of beer and wine. Joined him and hated myself.

Monday 21st Had Rene and Berenice Weibel to dinner. Excellent meal from Sally. Both of them very good with John. Latter had beer and wine all the live long day. I had none.

Tuesday 22nd Awoke late. John on the beer and later wine. Not very much though! Back to Private Lives. Early to bed but what time will I sleep? Home-made raclette for dinner. Ice cream and tinned fruit. [...]

Wednesday 23rd Took sun again. Went into Geneva in great excitement to get John Dearth machine to enable him to speak coherently when he hits the right spot on his neck. ‘Twill take him a lot of practice to perfect. Also a rubber thing to cover the hole in his neck so that he can shower all over. [...]

Thursday 24th [...] Took Dearth to airport. Invaded by working-class schoolchildren. Must have signed 60–80 autographs on (most of ‘em) the dingiest pieces of torn bits of exercise books. Signed two cast legs (both 14 year old girls I would guess).

Heartbreaking to say goodbye to John. He still looks ghastly but better than London visit. Sorted out books for travelling library. Tried to make it lighter. Sally packed all afternoon. Sally all smiles because notices for Profile of a Superstar were very good apparently.¹²

Friday 25th [...] Milton Katselas (director) phoned to say rehearsals put two days forward so perhaps a longer stay in what we hope will be sun in Haiti. It is due for the first of the rainy seasons in Port au Prince. I wonder if ET is behaving herself in her film so hence the delay in beginning work.¹³

Sally worked like a miner all day long packing – quite a task as we're going to be away so long. All I did was pack the book bag with reference books and foreign grammars. And had at it with Noel again. Going through a blank and boring spot with it. Roll on work when it should all fall into place. Talked to Verdun. Seemed in good form.

Saturday 26th Left Geneva at 3.00 – 8 hours later, on the dot, in NY. [...] Place (airport) a madhouse but customs and immigration very amiable. Brook waiting [...] Straight to JFK Hilton. Bob and Alice came for sandwiches [...] Long for Port au Prince already.

Sunday 27th Port au Prince arrived. Very hot and humid. Sally enchanted by highly coloured buses jammed with people. Using the suite which the Pope will have when he arrives on the 9th.¹⁴ [...] S and I eat too much. Very tired. Jetlag.

Mr and Mrs Vandal (lawyer and wife) for dinner.¹⁵ Awfully hard to understand Haitian French especially with the nowadays eternal muzak in the background. Not their fault. Sally and I had to repeat things to each other and we sitting side by side. Might try to go to the sea today and see M. Silvera's other house.¹⁶ Divorce papers finalized today.¹⁷ Audience with President tomorrow I think.¹⁸

Monday 28th Very appropriate – the cartoon opposite.¹⁹ As I was divorced yet again today here in the Palais de Justice. Took 1½ hour or so [...]. Delighted all over. Strongly tempted to buy a place here. Shall go to see some houses. People gay and delightful and no servant problem. Sally pleased too. And it's so helpful to know the language. Easier to get to than Mexico (PV) and only 3½ hours to NY.²⁰

MARCH

Tuesday 1st Celebrated by over-eating – both the divorce and St David. Sudden qualm of conscience yesterday. Afternoon. I never ever (unless asked about her (rarely) or telling a story involving her), talk about poor little Susan [Hunt]. Or think of her. There's a self-defensive or self-serving thing in my brain that cuts out what I don't want in or consider an encumbrance. All have this quality but mine seems to be more highly developed than most. Not a commendable strain. [...]

Wednesday 2nd [...] Went to M. Silvera's house which was in an appalling state despite three servants on round-the-year pay. For this he wants $300,000. 50,000 would be more like it. Well over an hour from Port au Prince on a good road. No electricity. No phone. I wonder if he's bonkers. We shall look elsewhere as Sally and I like it here and the people are delightful. Painfully slow mentally – faster perhaps in Creole which is a curious lingo indeed. M. Silvera promises to find me a French–Creole book. [...]

Thursday 3rd Weather insy-outsy but only about noon by which time we had to leave for the Palace for pow-wow with M and Mme Le President Duvalier. She very bright and pretty. He obviously a powerful force. Audience lasted nearly 1½ hours which Brook was told was a world record for civilian visitors. Grandbaby Doc brought.²¹ I held him for a few minutes. Snaps taken of course. Before audience. Went to American Consulate to thank them for H-I Visa. All charming. [...] Dinner with two consuls and a black (Haitian) producer-director-playwright. Seems very fond of lady consul and vice versa.²² [...] We may look at some houses tomorrow. Longing to buy place here despite tonight's intimations of continued corruption in high places. Mme le President's brother in prison in USA for drug-smuggling.²³ [...]

Friday 4th [...] Slept like a rose. Awoke at 6am. Brilliant day. Lay in sun, had breakfast. Supine for a couple of hours going through Private Lives in my head after breakfast. Very hot. Frequent dips in the pool. [...] The black writer François Latour faithfully sent me Creole dictionary and phrasebook and grammar.²⁴ [...] I'm sure that with a little help I can get along in it. [...] Longing to have our own home in the sun for Sally. Second act of Noel's play contains second-hand moralizing that I find hard to learn because it's so specious. But he was very young.²⁵

Saturday 5th Brilliant day again. Listened in frustrated agony to Wales–Ireland. Static terrible. But we won so all's well. Other match(?) was 9–6 to Scotland when last heard then we lost touch.²⁶ Went to see some land in splendid position.

Looked to me about 3–4 acres. $75,000. Said we'd prefer to see house already built – found what seemed a beauty for $200,000.²⁷ Seeing more on Monday but they'll have to be good to beat that one at that price. Altogether successful day but for Sally cutting the top of her head on rusty barbed wire. Hope she's alright.

Sunday 6th Slept a lot and long. Poolside again after visiting the house very quickly to see where the sun hit it. OK. Approx 6 minutes from hotel. Went through inevitable Private Lives again for two-three hours. Dinner with manager and wife Chantelle(?).²⁸ Both assured me that our living here would help island enormously. No tax.

Monday 7th Sally feeling poorly tonight. Looks it too. Very sallow. Hope she'll sleep it off. It's not booze. Katselas phoned to say rehearsals postponed 'til Monday. ET tired or something! OK with me. Another week (nearly) in Haiti. Had American Consul and boyfriend (Latour) to dinner. He in love with her. He asked us to dinner on Wednesday as surprise for her. He drinks quietly but a lot. Wine. [...] Seems deal settled for new house. Sally having – apart from seems like 'flu – one of her self-doubting days. Nothing seems to reassure her. I hope those moods don't grow. I don't know how to handle them.

Tuesday 8th A tedious day. Sally sick with migraine. [...] Spent a tedious 1/2 hour with the notary public – female, gaunt, 50, and appallingly freckled. Spoke like an automaton. [...] Pope arrives tomorrow. Must that silly old sod travel quite so much? He must cost each country he visits a bloody fortune. Everything here, for instance, stops for the whole day. No planes, no shops, no anything, and all for an idiot who says it's a sin for a man to lust after his own wife!

Wednesday 9th Slept 9–10 hours – not sure. Poolside until 3pm. Having another boring go at Noel. The more one steepes oneself in the play – the other parts as well – one realizes with dismay that a man one loved so much had such a slight mind. The Pope duly arrived at 2 o'clock and should leave at 2am. Thank whatever God may be for town completely disrupted. Police all over. Took us nearly 35 minutes to go to a place which normally would take 10 minutes. Went [to] Leslie Gerson's (American Consul). Goat was the first course. Watched Sally's face. She ate with gusto. So was the rest of the grub. Sally is going to try and steal her cook. The latter is intelligent and reads and understands French.

Thursday 10th Awoke at 6am. Found the BBC World Service but fell asleep on the sofa with the wireless on my belly. Sally knew – she was still in bed – that I must be asleep because the programme that followed the news was Top of the Pops.²⁹ Hardly my style. [...]

Friday 11th Very early again and brilliant weather. Too hot so into the pool every 15 minutes so it seemed. Malarly (lawyer) turned up twice – once at 11.30 and again at 4.30.³⁰ Legally he's not allowed to say anything but pretty sure that everything's OK. Did TV interview. Appalling M.U. girl made me or tried to make me look like Roger Moore.³¹ Ghastly. 5 minutes was it took [sic] – I mean – the actual interview but that hearty lady maquseuls slapped my sun burnt face a round as if she were playing handball.³² [...] NY tomorrow. Don't know whether glad or sorry.

Saturday 12th Arrived NY on time. What a change in weather. [...] Had dinner with D. Rowe-Beddoe, plus Madeline, plus Valerie, Brook and Lisa Rowe-Beddoe.³³ Everyone drank except me. ET phoned in middle of dinner. Noise of clientele so loud that I could only get half of what she said. Will phone her or she me tomorrow sometime. Doesn't know a word says she.

Sunday 13th, New York, Lombardy [Hotel] Sunny day. Talked to Kate and coming over Monday night. Working off Broadway. Irish play.³⁴ Maria came over with baby.³⁵ Went with them to see ET who's using Rock Hudson's flat in Beresford.³⁶ Little or no library. Horrid flat. E's face OK but figure splop! Also drinking. Also has not yet read the play! That's my girl! Became very sentimental. 'Please don't marry Sally for my sake for a long time' 'I have no dates.' She is very lonely. Buffman using her as is everybody else except us.³⁷ Feel sorry for her. A mass of mess. Poor thing. 'I have no dates' means 'nobody wants me for myself.' True too!

Monday 14th Began rehearsals. Arrived at 11.30 to find, as usual, that ET couldn't get there 'til noon. They had tried to phone me, they said, to stop my coming so early. Too late, tho! I was there. Director not very inspired. Perhaps he'll get more inventive. Kathryn Walker (Sybil) competent but not competition.³⁸ [...] ET still drinking. Wine only she says. Honest Jack Daniels not too distant. ET bad. Couldn't even read the lines properly. Doubtless she'll come up to scratch eventually. ET as exciting as a flounder temporarily. [...] This is going to be a long long seven months. ET beginning to bore which I would not have thought possible all those years ago. How terrible a thing time is.

Tuesday 15th ET only 15 minutes late but then spent 15 minutes more doing her eyebrows. She stinks of garlic – who has garlic for breakfast? She is also on something or other because there are lines here and there which she can't say at all. Very worrying. It's appalling, but I'd not mind if she found she couldn't do it and we had to get someone else. She is also terribly low in energy. Tells me twice an hour how lonely she is. I pity that poor Buffman. Kate, Val, Alka, Lisa (Rowe-Beddoe) all here at one time.³⁹ K. unhappy I think. She and Lisa stayed for dinner. [...]

Wednesday 16th [...] ET one hour late today. Two veganin stuck in her throat and in trying to shift them (with Fernet Branca) she vomited. Then her car wouldn't start so mine was sent for her. On the white wine today. Bought me a quite unnecessary Cartier scarf 'Le Must.' Rehearsals with her very hard work. Stick it out Rich. Bought some books for bedtime. Dashiell Hammett, life of Kafka, and also Mark Twain and thrillers.⁴⁰ Michael Innes tonight but not for long. [...]

Thursday 17th St Pat's parade sent us off early to get through Fifth Avenue.⁴¹ Result being we were at working theatre (the Cort) at about 11.20.⁴² Ready for midday. ET had phoned earlier in her 'lolo little voice' full of brave self-pity to say she was very very sick and had the trots and vomits and she was very sorry but couldn't come to work. Sally and I exchanged looks directed at heaven. Anyway I worked 'til 4.30 straight. Without the book for the most part. [...]

Friday 18th Non-stop rain. Ran through the whole play or rather stumbled through it. All day. ET beginning to learn her lines. Kathryn Walker seems to know hers. J. Cullum, surprisingly is very hesitant. There are three or four exchanges that I'm a bit hazy on too. [...] By the end of next week I'll be itching for a real audience God willing. They are the only directors I can truly depend on. Milton alright but states the obvious with irritating predictability. Looking forward to Boston now.⁴³ Hope Sally will like it.

Saturday 19th Apparently according to Ron we might easily have won.⁴⁴

Stumbles through the whole thing. I was the only one not holding a book though for some reason I couldn't remember the second act too well largely I think because of the staging. Went to Laurent for dinner. One large Martini, shared a lovely 1968 Lafitte, two brandies and was only mildly pissed.

Sunday 20th [...] Went to ET's for brunch. Eggs Benedict, chips, peas. All had Mimosas (Buck's Fizz) except me. Brook with us. Ran through second act with ET abysmal. She was quite crocked by this time and couldn't even read the lines let alone remember them. Sally spent her time in the next room with Chen Sam – also fried – and told Sally she is dying of leukemia. What a frightful liar she is. Among other fairy tales she told Sally of she'd nursed me through a bad bout of malaria in Botswana. I've never had malaria. ET gave me the terrors again. She is such a mess.

Monday 21st ET no better. Sally saw her have a Fernet Branca at 12.30pm then she drank white wine quite openly – lines getting better but not much. I mean her text not her outline. Because she's struggling for words it makes for a very long day. Again she is terribly lacking in energy. Everything is an effort – even to get up from a chair. Talked to Kate on blower. She comes to the theatre tomorrow at 12 noon. Liza called and Sally talked to her. Gave birthday present to Lisa Rowe-Beddoe. $200 and a card chosen by Sally. Photo-call tomorrow. Gawd help us. Still I have Sally and will see Kate and Bob Wilson.

Tuesday 22nd Fury recollected in relative tranquillum. ET impossibly sloshed all day long. So much so she couldn't even read the lines. Same at dinner with the Sime Hornbys who are over on a flying visit.⁴⁵ They both sloshed and silly too – long and silly arguments over pronunciations of words. I won every one in the end – words in the play I mean. Had forgotten how ill-educated and stupid Sheran Cazalet is. Food good. La Lavendu yclept. But small and table not big enough for six. ET in hating and hatable mood – Buffman – an iron mouse. God were we glad to get home. Sally mentioned that Simon the Satyr did come on a bit strong.

Wednesday 23rd Worked from 12 noon 'til 7pm without ceasing. ET had an eternal costume fitting (2½ hours) so worked without her. Less sloshed but didn't know a single word of second act which Brook and I went over with her endlessly on Sunday last. Have been forced to promise to go to a memorial service (as 'one of the stars') for Tennessee Williams.⁴⁶ Did two films of his – both goodish I believe.⁴⁷ I didn't even like the chap. As a matter of fact I hardly ever saw him sober though we were together for months. A self-pitying pain in the neck. Also he made pass at my Chris when Chris was eight.⁴⁸

Thursday 24th Usual day struggling with ET who is slowly getting the part in some sort of shambling shape. [...] I am still the only one without a book. I am immensely surprised at the lack of preparation but still we have four weeks before Broadway.⁴⁹ Very sunny.

Friday 25th No rehearsals – went for costume fitting. Usual tedium but Theoni Aldredge and tailor very sweet.⁵⁰ Did whole play at home and called ET in the a.m. to say that I wasn't going to Tennessee Williams' memorial – apparently a lot of crying went on. Geraldine Fitzgerald sang 'Danny Boy'!⁵¹ Sounded awful – I mean the idea of it all. Kate went and came here to the hotel to give us a blow by blow. Funny child.

Saturday 26th Rehearsed from 11.30–7. ET a bit better in first act but still stuttery. So am I in bits. Long day and felt intensely nervous all day long. J. Breslin came for 10am coffee and to my surprise interviewed me.⁵²

Sunday 27th ET tremendously better in first act – still rocky in second and reads third. For the first time in this piece I enjoyed rehearsals. Hope it continues. Home to the Sunday Times crostic. Did it quickly. Sally watching Thorn-Birds.⁵³ OK she says.

Monday 28th Kate here for dinner and is staying the night. Little sweetheart is suffering from pangs of disprised love.⁵⁴ I could kill the man. He's a stage-manager or something.⁵⁵ Rehearsals from 12–7. [...] Sally looking very tired tonight, though she bravely kept a good front up. I keep worrying that she's lost too much weight. She says it has plateau'd out. Hope so. 11.30 start tomorrow. [...]

Tuesday 29th [...] Technical people in front so all of us hyped up a bit. Everybody coming along well. Only worry is John Cullum who hasn't got hold of the essential 'squareness' of Victor. Katie and Sally to lunch together. ET's lethargy disappearing fast. She will be good I hope. So will I, I hope. Milton doesn't understand Coward. Suppose he's happier with American writers. [...]

Wednesday 30th Rehearsals ad nauseam. At very awkward stage and director is mildly irritating with continual and (it seems to me) sometimes idiotic suggestions. I don't think he understands comedies of manners at all and especially Noel. Suggested that I should play it with 'Welsh fire' and ET as Elizabeth (American) Taylor. I almost fell off my chair. I can't wait for a paying audience to teach me, in a few performances or so, what they want. Saw beloved Katie in Irish play Winners. She brilliant. Funny and moving.

Thursday 31st Most curious occurrence. Director went to lunch and came back exactly as if he were completely under the influence of booze (I thought). No smell on breath so I thought it must be 'speed' which is a habit he had once so he'd told me. ET and Brook thought he'd gone bonkers. We muttered under our breaths (ET and I) but said nothing. Thank God ET understands enough Welsh to know when I'm telling her to control her temper. He stopped us every two lines or four sometimes one word. I nearly went mad. On top of all which ET lost a cap off her teeth. That means four teeth lost in the last five-six months in Sally's and my presence.

APRIL

Friday 1st Started 11. Mr Katselas the director made the mistake of insulting Kathryn first and ET second whereupon I turned on the heat. I blistered and blasted him. Theoni (dress designer) told me that director was almost certainly high on Scientology.⁵⁶ So ignorant am I that I didn't know what it meant. I'm still not quite sure. Anyway, end result was – so far – we did it our way and not his. Result: we went through it like whipped cream. He was very quiet for the rest of the day though ET continued to be sullen.

Saturday 2nd Two runs-through today and the difference in performances was sensational in comparison with a mere 1½ days ago. The play and players began to invent. J. Cullum now spot on. Odd man out is me at the moment. I suspect I'm too dangerous to play Noel. My bloody voice is too rich or something. Well, I'll see what I can do.

April 1983 – August 1984

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1983 diary in early April. This was the last diary he compiled. On 8 May Private Lives opened on Broadway, and ran (in Philadelphia, Washington and Los Angeles) until October. It was not a success. On 3 July Richard and Sally married at the Frontier Hotel, Las Vegas. In late November Richard appeared in a televised event paying tribute to Frank Sinatra. On New Year's Eve 1983 Richard and Sally were amongst the guests of President Duvalier at his palace on Haiti.

In May 1984 Burton played the role of O'Brien in the film 1984, based on the novel by George Orwell. This involved filming in London and in Wiltshire. Shortly after this Richard worked alongside daughter Kate in the TV mini-series Ellis Island, also filmed in England. Thereafter Sally and Richard returned to Céligny. On 3 August they entertained John Hurt who had taken the lead role of Winston Smith in 1984.^{57} The following morning Hurt left Burton reading the poetry of William Blake. On the morning of 5 August Richard, though breathing, did not awake. He had suffered a cerebral haemorrhage and died at 1.15p.m. in hospital in Geneva.

In accordance with his wishes Richard Burton was buried on 9 August in Céligny's Protestant cemetery. Two days later a memorial service was held at Bethel Baptist Chapel in Pontrhydfyen. On 24, 28 and 30 August respectively further memorial services were held at the Wilshire Theater in Beverly Hills, the Lunt-Fontanne Theater in New York and at St Martin-in-the-Fields, Trafalgar Square, London.

When he died Richard Burton left an estate valued at approximately £3.5 million. This was largely divided amongst his widow Sally, and his daughters Kate, Jessica and Maria. Smaller sums went to surviving family members, to Liza Todd, Christopher Wilding, Bob Wilson, Ron Berkeley, Valerie Douglas and Philip Burton.

1983

FEBRUARY

Monday 14th Awoke as right as rainbows. Saw Pierre Koessler re: burglar alarms.¹

Very complicated. Quite clearly security firms are in collusion with insurance companies. Said I will think about. Have lived here for twenty-odd years with not a blade of grass stolen. Anyway nothing here to steal. TV set, two or three radios, a couple of typewriters, a cheap clock. Ah well. Phone Rene and Berenice Weibel. Dinner at La Réserve on Wednesday. Shall ask him about it. Sally very depressed all day.² Worried about Haiti, divorce, NY and attendant publicity she thinks.³ Poor thing. I went back to work.

Tuesday 15th S. still depressed and fed up. With being a slavey no doubt. Being with me is not as glamorous as people think. Did not get up until 2.35pm put me into tearing fury. Very cold all the time and permanently overcast. What fools we are we could have been in Gstaad all this time where (according to D. Brynner) the weather has been fine all the time.⁴ Half looking forward to, half dreading the Dearth.⁵ Will I be able to handle John's very heavy drinking? Managing my own is a full-time job. Fury so great I didn't do any work at all. Cooled down after dinner but not entirely.

Wednesday 16th Sleepless until 5 or so. Got up at 12.30 or thereabouts. Verdun back in intensive care with yet one more heart attack. Will he repel the swine this time again? Pray that he does. He has been very overweight since he gave up fags. He is the linchpin of the family since Tom died.⁶ His loss would be terrible. Took S out to dinner at La Réserve with Rene Weibel and Berenice and Janine Filistorf. Very pleasant. Rene has retired. Looks well. Talked to Milton Katselas.⁷ J. Cullum to play Victor – Bravo.⁸ ET going to be late for rehearsals. Three or four days. What's new?

Thursday 17th [...] Did three hours or so on Lives not far to go now. Telephoned J. Cullum to make sure they weren't fibbing to me. Phoned Aileen and Chris to get Mark Getty's telephone number.⁹ Talked Graham. Verdun still in intensive care. Talked to Getty – latter sounded down in the mouth. Read awful book about G. Best (footballer) by M. Parkinson. I wonder if Parkinson knew he was writing about himself. Wine, women, TV star. Lost his talent as a promising writer as Best lost his genius. And for same reasons.¹⁰

Friday 18th Wishart and companion arrived. Quite clear from all his and her talk that going back to live in UK would be absurd – took them to dinner at ‘La Réserve’. James became quite drunk. Did not drink at all.

Saturday 19th Took Wishart and Miss Hall to airport. Watched Ireland v. France. Heard Wales v. Scots not much in it either side could have won.¹¹

Sunday 20th Picked up John and Joan [Dearth]. John looks terrible. Gave him lots of beer and wine. Joined him and hated myself.

Monday 21st Had Rene and Berenice Weibel to dinner. Excellent meal from Sally. Both of them very good with John. Latter had beer and wine all the live long day. I had none.

Tuesday 22nd Awoke late. John on the beer and later wine. Not very much though! Back to Private Lives. Early to bed but what time will I sleep? Home-made raclette for dinner. Ice cream and tinned fruit. [...]

Wednesday 23rd Took sun again. Went into Geneva in great excitement to get John Dearth machine to enable him to speak coherently when he hits the right spot on his neck. ‘Twill take him a lot of practice to perfect. Also a rubber thing to cover the hole in his neck so that he can shower all over. [...]

Thursday 24th [...] Took Dearth to airport. Invaded by working-class schoolchildren. Must have signed 60–80 autographs on (most of ‘em) the dingiest pieces of torn bits of exercise books. Signed two cast legs (both 14 year old girls I would guess).

Heartbreaking to say goodbye to John. He still looks ghastly but better than London visit. Sorted out books for travelling library. Tried to make it lighter. Sally packed all afternoon. Sally all smiles because notices for Profile of a Superstar were very good apparently.¹²

Friday 25th [...] Milton Katselas (director) phoned to say rehearsals put two days forward so perhaps a longer stay in what we hope will be sun in Haiti. It is due for the first of the rainy seasons in Port au Prince. I wonder if ET is behaving herself in her film so hence the delay in beginning work.¹³

Sally worked like a miner all day long packing – quite a task as we're going to be away so long. All I did was pack the book bag with reference books and foreign grammars. And had at it with Noel again. Going through a blank and boring spot with it. Roll on work when it should all fall into place. Talked to Verdun. Seemed in good form.

Saturday 26th Left Geneva at 3.00 – 8 hours later, on the dot, in NY. [...] Place (airport) a madhouse but customs and immigration very amiable. Brook waiting [...] Straight to JFK Hilton. Bob and Alice came for sandwiches [...] Long for Port au Prince already.

Sunday 27th Port au Prince arrived. Very hot and humid. Sally enchanted by highly coloured buses jammed with people. Using the suite which the Pope will have when he arrives on the 9th.¹⁴ [...] S and I eat too much. Very tired. Jetlag.

Mr and Mrs Vandal (lawyer and wife) for dinner.¹⁵ Awfully hard to understand Haitian French especially with the nowadays eternal muzak in the background. Not their fault. Sally and I had to repeat things to each other and we sitting side by side. Might try to go to the sea today and see M. Silvera's other house.¹⁶ Divorce papers finalized today.¹⁷ Audience with President tomorrow I think.¹⁸

Monday 28th Very appropriate – the cartoon opposite.¹⁹ As I was divorced yet again today here in the Palais de Justice. Took 1½ hour or so [...]. Delighted all over. Strongly tempted to buy a place here. Shall go to see some houses. People gay and delightful and no servant problem. Sally pleased too. And it's so helpful to know the language. Easier to get to than Mexico (PV) and only 3½ hours to NY.²⁰

MARCH

Tuesday 1st Celebrated by over-eating – both the divorce and St David. Sudden qualm of conscience yesterday. Afternoon. I never ever (unless asked about her (rarely) or telling a story involving her), talk about poor little Susan [Hunt]. Or think of her. There's a self-defensive or self-serving thing in my brain that cuts out what I don't want in or consider an encumbrance. All have this quality but mine seems to be more highly developed than most. Not a commendable strain. [...]

Wednesday 2nd [...] Went to M. Silvera's house which was in an appalling state despite three servants on round-the-year pay. For this he wants $300,000. 50,000 would be more like it. Well over an hour from Port au Prince on a good road. No electricity. No phone. I wonder if he's bonkers. We shall look elsewhere as Sally and I like it here and the people are delightful. Painfully slow mentally – faster perhaps in Creole which is a curious lingo indeed. M. Silvera promises to find me a French–Creole book. [...]

Thursday 3rd Weather insy-outsy but only about noon by which time we had to leave for the Palace for pow-wow with M and Mme Le President Duvalier. She very bright and pretty. He obviously a powerful force. Audience lasted nearly 1½ hours which Brook was told was a world record for civilian visitors. Grandbaby Doc brought.²¹ I held him for a few minutes. Snaps taken of course. Before audience. Went to American Consulate to thank them for H-I Visa. All charming. [...] Dinner with two consuls and a black (Haitian) producer-director-playwright. Seems very fond of lady consul and vice versa.²² [...] We may look at some houses tomorrow. Longing to buy place here despite tonight's intimations of continued corruption in high places. Mme le President's brother in prison in USA for drug-smuggling.²³ [...]

Friday 4th [...] Slept like a rose. Awoke at 6am. Brilliant day. Lay in sun, had breakfast. Supine for a couple of hours going through Private Lives in my head after breakfast. Very hot. Frequent dips in the pool. [...] The black writer François Latour faithfully sent me Creole dictionary and phrasebook and grammar.²⁴ [...] I'm sure that with a little help I can get along in it. [...] Longing to have our own home in the sun for Sally. Second act of Noel's play contains second-hand moralizing that I find hard to learn because it's so specious. But he was very young.²⁵

Saturday 5th Brilliant day again. Listened in frustrated agony to Wales–Ireland. Static terrible. But we won so all's well. Other match(?) was 9–6 to Scotland when last heard then we lost touch.²⁶ Went to see some land in splendid position.

Looked to me about 3–4 acres. $75,000. Said we'd prefer to see house already built – found what seemed a beauty for $200,000.²⁷ Seeing more on Monday but they'll have to be good to beat that one at that price. Altogether successful day but for Sally cutting the top of her head on rusty barbed wire. Hope she's alright.

Sunday 6th Slept a lot and long. Poolside again after visiting the house very quickly to see where the sun hit it. OK. Approx 6 minutes from hotel. Went through inevitable Private Lives again for two-three hours. Dinner with manager and wife Chantelle(?).²⁸ Both assured me that our living here would help island enormously. No tax.

Monday 7th Sally feeling poorly tonight. Looks it too. Very sallow. Hope she'll sleep it off. It's not booze. Katselas phoned to say rehearsals postponed 'til Monday. ET tired or something! OK with me. Another week (nearly) in Haiti. Had American Consul and boyfriend (Latour) to dinner. He in love with her. He asked us to dinner on Wednesday as surprise for her. He drinks quietly but a lot. Wine. [...] Seems deal settled for new house. Sally having – apart from seems like 'flu – one of her self-doubting days. Nothing seems to reassure her. I hope those moods don't grow. I don't know how to handle them.

Tuesday 8th A tedious day. Sally sick with migraine. [...] Spent a tedious 1/2 hour with the notary public – female, gaunt, 50, and appallingly freckled. Spoke like an automaton. [...] Pope arrives tomorrow. Must that silly old sod travel quite so much? He must cost each country he visits a bloody fortune. Everything here, for instance, stops for the whole day. No planes, no shops, no anything, and all for an idiot who says it's a sin for a man to lust after his own wife!

Wednesday 9th Slept 9–10 hours – not sure. Poolside until 3pm. Having another boring go at Noel. The more one steepes oneself in the play – the other parts as well – one realizes with dismay that a man one loved so much had such a slight mind. The Pope duly arrived at 2 o'clock and should leave at 2am. Thank whatever God may be for town completely disrupted. Police all over. Took us nearly 35 minutes to go to a place which normally would take 10 minutes. Went [to] Leslie Gerson's (American Consul). Goat was the first course. Watched Sally's face. She ate with gusto. So was the rest of the grub. Sally is going to try and steal her cook. The latter is intelligent and reads and understands French.

Thursday 10th Awoke at 6am. Found the BBC World Service but fell asleep on the sofa with the wireless on my belly. Sally knew – she was still in bed – that I must be asleep because the programme that followed the news was Top of the Pops.²⁹ Hardly my style. [...]

Friday 11th Very early again and brilliant weather. Too hot so into the pool every 15 minutes so it seemed. Malarly (lawyer) turned up twice – once at 11.30 and again at 4.30.³⁰ Legally he's not allowed to say anything but pretty sure that everything's OK. Did TV interview. Appalling M.U. girl made me or tried to make me look like Roger Moore.³¹ Ghastly. 5 minutes was it took [sic] – I mean – the actual interview but that hearty lady maquseuls slapped my sun burnt face a round as if she were playing handball.³² [...] NY tomorrow. Don't know whether glad or sorry.

Saturday 12th Arrived NY on time. What a change in weather. [...] Had dinner with D. Rowe-Beddoe, plus Madeline, plus Valerie, Brook and Lisa Rowe-Beddoe.³³ Everyone drank except me. ET phoned in middle of dinner. Noise of clientele so loud that I could only get half of what she said. Will phone her or she me tomorrow sometime. Doesn't know a word says she.

Sunday 13th, New York, Lombardy [Hotel] Sunny day. Talked to Kate and coming over Monday night. Working off Broadway. Irish play.³⁴ Maria came over with baby.³⁵ Went with them to see ET who's using Rock Hudson's flat in Beresford.³⁶ Little or no library. Horrid flat. E's face OK but figure splop! Also drinking. Also has not yet read the play! That's my girl! Became very sentimental. 'Please don't marry Sally for my sake for a long time' 'I have no dates.' She is very lonely. Buffman using her as is everybody else except us.³⁷ Feel sorry for her. A mass of mess. Poor thing. 'I have no dates' means 'nobody wants me for myself.' True too!

Monday 14th Began rehearsals. Arrived at 11.30 to find, as usual, that ET couldn't get there 'til noon. They had tried to phone me, they said, to stop my coming so early. Too late, tho! I was there. Director not very inspired. Perhaps he'll get more inventive. Kathryn Walker (Sybil) competent but not competition.³⁸ [...] ET still drinking. Wine only she says. Honest Jack Daniels not too distant. ET bad. Couldn't even read the lines properly. Doubtless she'll come up to scratch eventually. ET as exciting as a flounder temporarily. [...] This is going to be a long long seven months. ET beginning to bore which I would not have thought possible all those years ago. How terrible a thing time is.

Tuesday 15th ET only 15 minutes late but then spent 15 minutes more doing her eyebrows. She stinks of garlic – who has garlic for breakfast? She is also on something or other because there are lines here and there which she can't say at all. Very worrying. It's appalling, but I'd not mind if she found she couldn't do it and we had to get someone else. She is also terribly low in energy. Tells me twice an hour how lonely she is. I pity that poor Buffman. Kate, Val, Alka, Lisa (Rowe-Beddoe) all here at one time.³⁹ K. unhappy I think. She and Lisa stayed for dinner. [...]

Wednesday 16th [...] ET one hour late today. Two veganin stuck in her throat and in trying to shift them (with Fernet Branca) she vomited. Then her car wouldn't start so mine was sent for her. On the white wine today. Bought me a quite unnecessary Cartier scarf 'Le Must.' Rehearsals with her very hard work. Stick it out Rich. Bought some books for bedtime. Dashiell Hammett, life of Kafka, and also Mark Twain and thrillers.⁴⁰ Michael Innes tonight but not for long. [...]

Thursday 17th St Pat's parade sent us off early to get through Fifth Avenue.⁴¹ Result being we were at working theatre (the Cort) at about 11.20.⁴² Ready for midday. ET had phoned earlier in her 'lolo little voice' full of brave self-pity to say she was very very sick and had the trots and vomits and she was very sorry but couldn't come to work. Sally and I exchanged looks directed at heaven. Anyway I worked 'til 4.30 straight. Without the book for the most part. [...]

Friday 18th Non-stop rain. Ran through the whole play or rather stumbled through it. All day. ET beginning to learn her lines. Kathryn Walker seems to know hers. J. Cullum, surprisingly is very hesitant. There are three or four exchanges that I'm a bit hazy on too. [...] By the end of next week I'll be itching for a real audience God willing. They are the only directors I can truly depend on. Milton alright but states the obvious with irritating predictability. Looking forward to Boston now.⁴³ Hope Sally will like it.

Saturday 19th Apparently according to Ron we might easily have won.⁴⁴

Stumbles through the whole thing. I was the only one not holding a book though for some reason I couldn't remember the second act too well largely I think because of the staging. Went to Laurent for dinner. One large Martini, shared a lovely 1968 Lafitte, two brandies and was only mildly pissed.

Sunday 20th [...] Went to ET's for brunch. Eggs Benedict, chips, peas. All had Mimosas (Buck's Fizz) except me. Brook with us. Ran through second act with ET abysmal. She was quite crocked by this time and couldn't even read the lines let alone remember them. Sally spent her time in the next room with Chen Sam – also fried – and told Sally she is dying of leukemia. What a frightful liar she is. Among other fairy tales she told Sally of she'd nursed me through a bad bout of malaria in Botswana. I've never had malaria. ET gave me the terrors again. She is such a mess.

Monday 21st ET no better. Sally saw her have a Fernet Branca at 12.30pm then she drank white wine quite openly – lines getting better but not much. I mean her text not her outline. Because she's struggling for words it makes for a very long day. Again she is terribly lacking in energy. Everything is an effort – even to get up from a chair. Talked to Kate on blower. She comes to the theatre tomorrow at 12 noon. Liza called and Sally talked to her. Gave birthday present to Lisa Rowe-Beddoe. $200 and a card chosen by Sally. Photo-call tomorrow. Gawd help us. Still I have Sally and will see Kate and Bob Wilson.

Tuesday 22nd Fury recollected in relative tranquillum. ET impossibly sloshed all day long. So much so she couldn't even read the lines. Same at dinner with the Sime Hornbys who are over on a flying visit.⁴⁵ They both sloshed and silly too – long and silly arguments over pronunciations of words. I won every one in the end – words in the play I mean. Had forgotten how ill-educated and stupid Sheran Cazalet is. Food good. La Lavendu yclept. But small and table not big enough for six. ET in hating and hatable mood – Buffman – an iron mouse. God were we glad to get home. Sally mentioned that Simon the Satyr did come on a bit strong.

Wednesday 23rd Worked from 12 noon 'til 7pm without ceasing. ET had an eternal costume fitting (2¹/₂ hours) so worked without her. Less sloshed but didn't know a single word of second act which Brook and I went over with her endlessly on Sunday last. Have been forced to promise to go to a memorial service (as 'one of the stars') for Tennessee Williams.⁴⁶ Did two films of his – both goodish I believe.⁴⁷ I didn't even like the chap. As a matter of fact I hardly ever saw him sober though we were together for months. A self-pitying pain in the neck. Also he made pass at my Chris when Chris was eight.⁴⁸

Thursday 24th Usual day struggling with ET who is slowly getting the part in some sort of shambling shape. [...] I am still the only one without a book. I am immensely surprised at the lack of preparation but still we have four weeks before Broadway.⁴⁹ Very sunny.

Friday 25th No rehearsals – went for costume fitting. Usual tedium but Theoni Aldredge and tailor very sweet.⁵⁰ Did whole play at home and called ET in the a.m. to say that I wasn't going to Tennessee Williams' memorial – apparently a lot of crying went on. Geraldine Fitzgerald sang 'Danny Boy'!⁵¹ Sounded awful – I mean the idea of it all. Kate went and came here to the hotel to give us a blow by blow. Funny child.

Saturday 26th Rehearsed from 11.30–7. ET a bit better in first act but still stuttery. So am I in bits. Long day and felt intensely nervous all day long. J. Breslin came for 10am coffee and to my surprise interviewed me.⁵²

Sunday 27th ET tremendously better in first act – still rocky in second and reads third. For the first time in this piece I enjoyed rehearsals. Hope it continues. Home to the Sunday Times crostic. Did it quickly. Sally watching Thorn-Birds.⁵³ OK she says.

Monday 28th Kate here for dinner and is staying the night. Little sweetheart is suffering from pangs of disprised love.⁵⁴ I could kill the man. He's a stage-manager or something.⁵⁵ Rehearsals from 12–7. [...] Sally looking very tired tonight, though she bravely kept a good front up. I keep worrying that she's lost too much weight. She says it has plateau'd out. Hope so. 11.30 start tomorrow. [...]

Tuesday 29th [...] Technical people in front so all of us hyped up a bit. Everybody coming along well. Only worry is John Cullum who hasn't got hold of the essential 'squareness' of Victor. Katie and Sally to lunch together. ET's lethargy disappearing fast. She will be good I hope. So will I, I hope. Milton doesn't understand Coward. Suppose he's happier with American writers. [...]

Wednesday 30th Rehearsals ad nauseam. At very awkward stage and director is mildly irritating with continual and (it seems to me) sometimes idiotic suggestions. I don't think he understands comedies of manners at all and especially Noel. Suggested that I should play it with 'Welsh fire' and ET as Elizabeth (American) Taylor. I almost fell off my chair. I can't wait for a paying audience to teach me, in a few performances or so, what they want. Saw beloved Katie in Irish play Winners. She brilliant. Funny and moving.

Thursday 31st Most curious occurrence. Director went to lunch and came back exactly as if he were completely under the influence of booze (I thought). No smell on breath so I thought it must be 'speed' which is a habit he had once so he'd told me. ET and Brook thought he'd gone bonkers. We muttered under our breaths (ET and I) but said nothing. Thank God ET understands enough Welsh to know when I'm telling her to control her temper. He stopped us every two lines or four sometimes one word. I nearly went mad. On top of all which ET lost a cap off her teeth. That means four teeth lost in the last five-six months in Sally's and my presence.

APRIL

Friday 1st Started 11. Mr Katselas the director made the mistake of insulting Kathryn first and ET second whereupon I turned on the heat. I blistered and blasted him. Theoni (dress designer) told me that director was almost certainly high on Scientology.⁵⁶ So ignorant am I that I didn't know what it meant. I'm still not quite sure. Anyway, end result was – so far – we did it our way and not his. Result: we went through it like whipped cream. He was very quiet for the rest of the day though ET continued to be sullen.

Saturday 2nd Two runs-through today and the difference in performances was sensational in comparison with a mere 1½ days ago. The play and players began to invent. J. Cullum now spot on. Odd man out is me at the moment. I suspect I'm too dangerous to play Noel. My bloody voice is too rich or something. Well, I'll see what I can do.

April 1983 – August 1984

Richard Burton ceased keeping his 1983 diary in early April. This was the last diary he compiled. On 8 May Private Lives opened on Broadway, and ran (in Philadelphia, Washington and Los Angeles) until October. It was not a success. On 3 July Richard and Sally married at the Frontier Hotel, Las Vegas. In late November Richard appeared in a televised event paying tribute to Frank Sinatra. On New Year's Eve 1983 Richard and Sally were amongst the guests of President Duvalier at his palace on Haiti.

In May 1984 Burton played the role of O'Brien in the film 1984, based on the novel by George Orwell. This involved filming in London and in Wiltshire. Shortly after this Richard worked alongside daughter Kate in the TV mini-series Ellis Island, also filmed in England. Thereafter Sally and Richard returned to Céligny. On 3 August they entertained John Hurt who had taken the lead role of Winston Smith in 1984.^{57} The following morning Hurt left Burton reading the poetry of William Blake. On the morning of 5 August Richard, though breathing, did not awake. He had suffered a cerebral haemorrhage and died at 1.15p.m. in hospital in Geneva.

In accordance with his wishes Richard Burton was buried on 9 August in Céligny's Protestant cemetery. Two days later a memorial service was held at Bethel Baptist Chapel in Pontrhydfyen. On 24, 28 and 30 August respectively further memorial services were held at the Wilshire Theater in Beverly Hills, the Lunt-Fontanne Theater in New York and at St Martin-in-the-Fields, Trafalgar Square, London.

When he died Richard Burton left an estate valued at approximately £3.5 million. This was largely divided amongst his widow Sally, and his daughters Kate, Jessica and Maria. Smaller sums went to surviving family members, to Liza Todd, Christopher Wilding, Bob Wilson, Ron Berkeley, Valerie Douglas and Philip Burton.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Archival Sources

Richard Burton Collection, Richard Burton Archives Swansea University

RWB 1 / 1: Diaries

RWB 1 / 2: Correspondence

RWB 1 / 3: Printed Items

RWB 1 / 4: Photographs

RWB 1 / 5: Film, Television and Audio Recordings, Documentaries and Interviews

RWB 1 / 6: Film Posters

RWB 1 / 7: Programmes and Scripts

RWB 1 / 8: Screenplays and Scripts

RWB 1 / 9: Press Cuttings and Publicity Material

RWB 1 / 10: Framed Prints and Pictures

RWB 1 / 11: Objects

RWB 1 / 12: Miscellaneous

Works of Reference

Chambers' Slang Dictionary

Collins Robert French–English English–French Dictionary

Encyclopedia of Wales

Halliwel's Film Guide

Halliwel's Who's Who in the Movies

Oxford Companion to Classical Civilization

Oxford Companion to English Literature

Oxford Companion to the Theatre

Oxford Dictionary for Writers and Editors

Oxford Dictionary of Foreign Words and Phrases

Oxford Dictionary of National Biography

Oxford Dictionary of Phrase and Fable

Oxford Dictionary of Quotations

Oxford Guide to Style

Shakespeare, William, Complete Works, ed. Jonathan Bate and Eric Rasmussen (Houndmills: Macmillan, 2007)

Shorter Oxford English Dictionary

Virgin Film Guide

Welsh Academy English–Welsh Dictionary

Y Geiradur Mawr

Newspapers and Magazines

Esquire

Glamorgan Gazette

Guardian

Life

Look

New York Times

Observer

Port Talbot Guardian

Sunday Express

Sunday Times

Time

The Times

Vogue

Wayfarer

Western Mail

Audio Recordings

David Copperfield (1950)

Conversation Piece (1951)

Under Milk Wood (1954)

Homage to Dylan Thomas (1954)

The World of Dylan Thomas (1955)

Fifteen Poems by Dylan Thomas (1955)

The English Poets (1955)

Brad (1958)

The Love Poems of John Donne (1958)

The Poetry of Thomas Hardy (1958)
The Rape of Lucrece and Other Poems (1960)
The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1960)
King Henry V (1961)
Camelot (1961)
Coriolanus (1962)
Henry V (1963)
Hamlet (1964)
Zulu (1964)
'A Married Man', Baker Street (1965)
The Days of Wilfred Owen (1966)
The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus (1966)
The Little Prince (1974)
A Personal Anthology: The Hound of Heaven and Other Poems (1978)
The War of the Worlds (1978)
'All on a Summer's Day', BBC, 31 December 1981
'Thanksgiving Service for the Life of Richard Burton', BBC, 30 August 1984
'Tribute to Richard Burton', BBC, 3 September 1984
Burton at the BBC (1995)
The Richard Burton Poetry Collection (2010)

Interviews

Richard Burton: My Time Again, BBC, 19 August 1965
24 Hours, BBC, 2 February 1966
Acting in the Sixties, BBC, 1 April 1967
Burton and Taylor at Oxford, BBC, 25 October 1967
Parkinson, BBC, 23 November 1974
Dick Cavett Show, PBS, 25 July 1980
Kane's Classics, BBC, 9 April 1998

Films and Television Appearances

The Last Days of Dolwyn (1949)
My Cousin Rachel (1952)
The Desert Rats (1953)
The Robe (1953)

Prince of Players (1955)
The Rains of Ranchipur (1955)
Alexander the Great (1956)
Sea Wife (1957)
Bitter Victory (1957)
Look Back in Anger (1959)
The Tempest (1960)
A Subject of Scandal and Concern (1960)
Dylan Thomas (1962)
The Longest Day (1962)
Cleopatra (1963)
The VIPs (1963)
Becket (1964)
The Night of the Iguana (1964)
Hamlet (1964)
What's New Pussycat? (1965)
The Sandpiper (1965)
The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1965)
Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1966)
The Taming of the Shrew (1967)
The Comedians (1967)
Doctor Faustus (1967)
Boom! (1968)
Candy (1968)
Where Eagles Dare (1968)
Anne of the Thousand Days (1969)
Raid on Rommel (1971)
Villain (1971)
The Assassination of Trotsky (1972)
Hammersmith Is Out (1972)
Bluebeard (1972)
Under Milk Wood (1972)
The Battle of Sutjeska (1973)
Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973)
Massacre in Rome (1973)
The Klansman (1974)
The Voyage (1974)

Brief Encounter (1974)
Exorcist II: The Heretic (1977)
Equus (1977)
The Medusa Touch (1978)
The Wild Geese (1978)
Breakthrough (1979)
Tristan and Isolt (1979)
Circle of Two (1980)
Absolution (1981)
The Fall Guy (1982)
Wagner (1983)
1984 (1984)
Ellis Island (1984)

Narrations

A Midsummer Night's Dream (1959)
Borrowed Pasture (1960)
Zulu (1964)
The Days of Wilfred Owen (1966)
Robert Kennedy Remembered (1968)
To The Ends of the Earth (1983)
Elizabeth R: A New Film Biography (1985)
Wales: Heritage of a Nation (1987)

Television Programmes and Films about Burton

In From The Cold? The World of Richard Burton, BBC/PBS (1989)
Richard Burton: An Actor's Life, A&E (1995)
Reputations: Richard Burton: Taylor-Made for Stardom, BBC (2001)
Welsh Greats: Richard Burton, BBC (2008)

Books, Chapters and Articles

This is a select listing of those volumes that have been most useful in the editing process. It is not a list of every work consulted. For readers seeking reliable biographical information on Burton, the best studies are those by Paul Ferris and Melvyn Bragg. Incisive, if brief, essays are provided by Peter Stead.

- Alpert, Hollis. Burton (Toronto and New York: Paperjacks, 1987)
- Amburn, Ellis. Elizabeth Taylor: The Obsessions, Passions and Courage of a Hollywood Legend (London: Robson, 2000)
- Andrews, Julie. Home: A Memoir of My Early Years (Waterville, ME: Thorndike Press, 2008)
- Babington, Bruce (ed.). British Stars and Stardom: From Alma Taylor to Sean Connery (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2001)
- Berry, David. Wales and Cinema: The First Hundred Years (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 1994)
- Bloom, Claire. Limelight and After: The Education of an Actress (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1982)
- . Leaving a Doll's House: A Memoir (London: Virago, 1996)
- Bowyer, Justin. Conversations with Jack Cardiff: Art, Light and Direction in Cinema (London: Batsford, 2003)
- Bozzacchi, Gianni. Elizabeth Taylor: The Queen and I (Madison, WI: University of Wisconsin Press, 2002)
- Bragg, Melvyn. Rich: The Life of Richard Burton (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1988)
- Brodsky, Jack, and Weiss, Nathan. The Cleopatra Papers (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1963)
- Burton, Hal (ed.). Acting in the Sixties (London: BBC, 1970)
- Burton, Philip. Early Doors (New York: Dial Press, 1969)
- . Richard and Philip: Burton – A Book of Memories (London: Peter Owen, 1992)
- Burton, Richard. 'The Magic of Meredith Jones', Sunday Times, 17 June 1956
- . 'A Candid Look at Becket and Myself', Life, 28 January 1964
- . 'Christmas Eve in Aberavon: A Memoir', Glamour, December 1964
- . A Christmas Story (London: Heinemann, 1965)
- . 'His Liz: A Scheming Charmer', Life, 24 February 1967
- . 'Who Cares about Wales? I Care', Look, 24 June 1969
- . 'The Last Time I Played Rugby', Observer, 4 October 1970
- . "'Le ma'r blydi film star 'ma?'"', in Geoffrey Nicholson with Cliff Morgan and David Frost (eds), Touchdown: And Other Moves in the Game (London: Rugby Football Union, 1970)
- . 'The Last Game Richard Burton Lost', Vogue, 1 January 1971
- . 'Travelling with Elizabeth', Vogue, May 1971
- . 'The trials of travels with Liz', Observer Review, 13 August 1971
- . 'My Day', Vogue, 1 September 1971
- . 'A Story of Christmas: In the Twenties', Daily Mail, 23 December 1971
- . 'The Immortal Dive of P. C. Mog', in The Barry John Book of Rugby (Swansea: Christopher Davies, 1972)
- . 'To Play Churchill Is To Hate Him', New York Times, 24 November 1974
- . 'The Shock of His Presence Was Like a Blow Under the Heart', New York, vol. 8 no. 3 (20 January 1975)
- . 'Aberavon', in J. Dolan (ed.), The Wizards: Aberavon Football Club, 1876–1976 (Port Talbot:

- Aberavon Football Club, 1976)
- . ‘Lament for a Dead Welshman’, Observer Review, 11 July 1976
- Burton, Sally. ‘To Know the Library Was To Know the Man’, Life, January 1985
- Caine, Michael. What's It All About? (London: Random House, 1992)
- Campbell, James. Talking at the Gates: A Life of James Baldwin (London: Faber and Faber, 1991)
- Cardiff, Jack. Magic Hour (London: Faber and Faber, 1996)
- Carpenter, Humphrey. O.U.D.S. A Centenary History of the Oxford University Dramatic Society, 1885–1985 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1985)
- Cashin, Fergus. Richard Burton (London, W. H. Allen, 1982)
- Castle, Charles. Noël (London, W. H. Allen, 1972)
- Caute, David. Joseph Losey: A Revenge on Life (London: Faber and Faber, 1994)
- Chapman, Don. Oxford Playhouse: High and Low Drama in a University City (Hatfield: University of Hertfordshire Press, 2008)
- Christopher, James. Elizabeth Taylor: The Illustrated Biography (London: André Deutsch, 1999)
- Ciment, Michael. Conversations with Losey (London and New York: Methuen, 1985)
- Clarke, Gerald. Capote: A Biography (London: Carroll and Graf, 2006)
- Coleman, Terry. Olivier: The Authorised Biography (London: Bloomsbury, 2005)
- Collins, Joan. Past Imperfect: An Autobiography (London: Coronet, 1985)
- Cottrell, John, and Cashin, Fergus. Richard Burton: A Biography (London: Arthur Barker, 1971)
- Coward, Noël. The Noël Coward Diaries, ed. Graham Payn and Sheridan Morley (Boston and Toronto: Little, Brown, 1982)
- David, Lester and Robbins, Jhan. Richard & Elizabeth (New York: Funk and Wagnalls, 1977)
- Downing, Christopher. Burton Stories (London: Futura, 1990)
- Duncan, Paul (ed.), Taylor (Cologne: Taschen, 2008)
- Dyffryn Grammar School, Port Talbot, 1912–1962*
- Edwards, Anne. Callas: Her Life, Her Loves, Her Music (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 2001)
- Evans, A. Leslie. The Story of Taibach and District (Port Talbot: 1963)
- Fairweather, Virginia. Cry God for Larry: An Intimate Memoir of Sir Laurence Olivier (London: Calder and Boyars, 1969)
- Falk, Quentin. Anthony Hopkins: Too Good to Waste (London: Virgin, 1989)
- Farber, Manny. Negative Space: Manny Farber on the Movies (London: Studio Vista, 1998)
- Farrow, Mia. What Falls Away: A Memoir (London: Doubleday, 1997)
- Ferris Paul. Richard Burton (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1981)
- . A Portrait of Richard Burton (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1984)
- Ffroncon, Gwenno. Cyfaredd y Cysgodion: Delweddu Cymru a'i Phobl ar Ffilm, 1935–1951 (Caerdydd: Gwasg Prifysgol Cymru, 2003)
- Findlater, Richard. The Player Kings (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1971)

- Finstad, Suzanne. Natasha: The Biography of Natalie Wood (London: Century, 2001)
- . Warren Beatty: A Private Man (London: Aurum, 2005)
- Fisher, Eddie. Been There, Done That (London: Hutchinson, 1999)
- Forbes, Bryan. That Despicable Race: A History of the British Acting Tradition (London: Elm Tree, 1980)
- Fothergill, Robert A. Private Chronicles: A Study of English Diaries (London: Oxford University Press, 1974)
- Freedland, Michael. Peter O'Toole (London: W. H. Allen, 1983)
- Gardner, Ava. Ava: My Story (London: Bantam, 1995)
- Gielgud, John. An Actor and His Time (London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 1989)
- Glenville, Peter. 'The Burtons', Vogue, 15 October 1967
- Graham, Sheilah. Scratch an Actor: Confessions of a Hollywood Columnist (London: Mayflower, 1970)
- Griffith, Kenneth. The Fool's Pardon: The Autobiography of Kenneth Griffith (London: Little, Brown, 1994)
- Grobel, Lawrence. The Hustons (London: Bloomsbury, 1990)
- Gussow, Mel. Zanuck: Don't Say Yes Until I Finish Talking (London: W. H. Allen, 1971)
- . Edward Albee: A Singular Journey (London: Oberon, 1999)
- Hall, Sheldon. Zulu: With Some Guts Behind It: The Making of the Epic Movie (Sheffield: Tomahawk, 2005)
- Hanson, J. Ivor. Profile of a Welsh Town (Port Talbot: 1969)
- Harding, James. Emlyn Williams (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1993)
- Harrison, Elizabeth. Love, Honour and Dismay (London: W. H. Allen, 1978)
- Harrison, Rex. Rex: An Autobiography (London: Macmillan, 1974)
- Hayman, Ronald. Tennessee Williams: Everyone Else is an Audience (New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1993)
- Heymann, C. David. Liz: An Intimate Biography of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Heinemann, 1995)
- Hirsch, Foster. Elizabeth Taylor (New York: Pyramid, 1973)
- Hordern, Michael. A World Elsewhere: The Autobiography of Sir Michael Hordern (London: Michael O'Mara, 1993)
- Hotchner, A. E. Sophia: Living and Loving – Her Own Story (London: Michael Joseph, 1979)
- Howerd, Frankie. On The Way I Lost It: An Autobiography (London: W. H. Allen, 1976)
- Huggett, Richard. Binkie Beaumont: Eminence Grise of the West End Theatre, 1933–1973 (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1989)
- Huston, John. An Open Book (London: Macmillan, 1981)
- Isherwood, Christopher. The Sixties: Diaries, Volume Two: 1960–1969, ed. Katherine Bucknell (London: Chatto and Windus, 2010)
- Jenkins, David. Richard Burton: A Brother Remembered (London: Random House, 1993)
- Jenkins, Graham. Richard Burton, My Brother (New York: Harper and Row, 1988)

Jones, Sally Roberts. The History of Port Talbot (Port Talbot: Goldleaf, 1991)

Junor, Penny. Burton: The Man Behind the Myth (London: Sphere, 1986)

Kashner, Sam, and Schoenberger, Nancy. Furious Love: Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton and the Marriage of the Century (London: JR Books, 2010)

Kavanagh, Julie. Rudolf Nureyev: The Life (London: Penguin, 2007)

Kelley, Kitty. Elizabeth Taylor: The Last Star (London: BCA, 1981)

Kingsland, Rosemary. Hold Back the Night: Memoirs of Lost Childhood, A Warring Family and A Secret Affair with Richard Burton (London: Century, 2003)

Korda, Michael. Charmed Lives (London: Penguin, 1980)

Lambert, Gavin. Natalie Wood: A Life (London: Faber and Faber, 2004)

Lee, Hermione. Biography (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009)

Lesley, Cole. The Life of Noël Coward (Harmondsworth: Penguin, 1976)

Lycett, Andrew. Dylan Thomas: A New Life (London: Phoenix, 2004)

Macnab, Geoffrey. 'Valley Boys', Sight and Sound, March 1994

Maddox, Brenda. Who's Afraid of Elizabeth Taylor? A Myth of Our Time (London: Granada, 1977)

Mallon, Thomas. A Book of One's Own: People and their Diaries (St Paul, Minnesota: Hungry Mind, 1995)

Mann, William J. How To Be A Movie Star: Elizabeth Taylor in Hollywood (London: Faber and Faber, 2009)

Manso, Peter. Brando (London: Orion, 1995)

Matthews, Gethin. Richard Burton: Seren Cymru (Llandysul: Gomer, 2002)

McCann, Graham. Frankie Howerd: Stand-Up Comic (London and New York: Fourth Estate, 2004)

Minnelli, Vincente. I Remember It Well (New York: Doubleday, 1974)

Morgan, Cliff, with Nicholson, Geoffrey. The Autobiography – Beyond the Fields of Play (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1996)

Morley, John David. Encounters (London: Bloomsbury, 1990)

Morley, Sheridan. The Other Side of the Moon: The Life of David Niven (Long Preston: Magna, 1985)

———. Elizabeth Taylor: A Celebration (London: Pavilion, 1988)

Moseley, Roy. Rex Harrison: The First Biography (Sevenoaks: New English Library, 1987)

Mosley, Leonard. Zanuck: The Rise and Fall of Hollywood's Last Tycoon (London: Granada, 1985)

Munn, Michael. Richard Burton: Prince of Players (London: JR Books, 2008)

———. David Niven: The Man Behind the Balloon (London: JR Books, 2009)

Nickens, Christopher. Elizabeth Taylor: A Biography in Photographs (London: Hutchinson, 1984)

Nolan, William F. John Huston: King Rebel (Los Angeles, CA: Sherbourne, 1965)

O'Connor, Garry. Paul Scofield: The Biography (London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 2002)

Parkinson, Michael. Parky: My Autobiography (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 2008)

Payn, Graham, and Morley, Sheridan (eds), The Noël Coward Diaries (Boston and Toronto: Little, Brown, 1982)

- Phillips, Siân. Private Faces: The Autobiography (London: Sceptre, 1999)
- . Public Places: The Autobiography (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 2001)
- Plowright, Joan. And That's Not All (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 2001)
- Podnieks, Elizabeth. Daily Modernism: The Literary Diaries of Virginia Woolf, Antonia White, Elizabeth Smart and Anaïs Nin (Montreal and Kingston: McGill-Queen's University Press, 2000)
- Ponsonby, Arthur. English Diaries (London: Methuen, 1923)
- Port Talbot Borough Council. Port Talbot: The Official Guide (Port Talbot: Port Talbot Borough Council, 1939)
- Quayle, Anthony. A Time to Speak (London: Barrie and Jenkins, 1990)
- Radovich, Don. Tony Richardson: A Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT: Greenwood, 1995)
- Read, Piers Paul. Alec Guinness: The Authorised Biography (London: Simon and Schuster, 2003)
- Redfield, William. Letters from an Actor (New York: Viking, 1967)
- Redgrave, Vanessa. An Autobiography (London: Hutchinson, 1991)
- Richardson, Tony. Long Distance Runner: A Memoir (London: Faber and Faber, 1993)
- Roberts, Peter (ed.). The Best of Plays and Players, 1953–1968 (London: Methuen, 1988)
- Roberts, Rachel. No Bells on Sunday: The Journals of Rachel Roberts, ed. Alexander Walker (London: Michael Joseph, 1984)
- Rubython, Tom. And God Created Burton (London: Myrtle Press, 2011)
- Seldes, Marian. The Bright Lights: A Theatre Life (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1978)
- Sellers, Robert. Hellraisers: The Life and Inebriated Times of Richard Burton, Richard Harris, Peter O'Toole and Oliver Reed (London: Preface, 2009)
- Shaffer, Anthony. So What Did You Expect? A Memoir (London: Picador, 2001)
- Shail, Robert. Stanley Baker: A Life in Film (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 2008)
- Sheed, Wilfrid. 'Burton and Taylor Must Go', Esquire, October 1968
- Sheppard, Dick. Elizabeth: The Life and Career of Elizabeth Taylor (London: W. H. Allen, 1975)
- Spinetti, Victor. Up Front (London: Portico, 2008)
- Spoto, Donald. The Kindness of Strangers: The Life of Tennessee Williams (London: Methuen, 1990)
- . Elizabeth Taylor (London: Little, Brown, 1995)
- Stanley, Louis. Sixty Years of Luxury: The Dorchester (London: Pearl and Dean, 1981)
- Stead, Peter. Richard Burton: So Much, So Little (Bridgend: Seren, 1991)
- . Acting Wales (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 2002)
- Sterne, Richard L. John Gielgud directs Richard Burton in Hamlet: A Journal of Rehearsals (London: Heinemann, 1968)
- Steverson, Tyrone. Richard Burton: A Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT: Greenwood, 1992)
- Storey, Anthony. Stanley Baker: Portrait of an Actor (London: W. H. Allen, 1977)
- Strasberg, Susan. Bittersweet (New York: Putnam, 1980)
- Taibach and Port Talbot Co-operative Society Ltd. Co-operative Jubilee, 1902–1952

- Taraborrelli, J. Randy. Sinatra: The Man Behind the Myth (Edinburgh: Mainstream, 1998)
- . Elizabeth (London: Pan, 2007)
- Taylor, Elizabeth. Elizabeth Taylor: An Informal Memoir by Elizabeth Taylor (New York: Harper and Row, 1965)
- . Elizabeth Takes Off (London: Macmillan, 1988)
- . My Love Affair with Jewelry (London: Thames and Hudson, 2002)
- Tynan, Kenneth. The Diaries of Kenneth Tynan, ed. John Lahr (London: Bloomsbury, 2001)
- Ustinov, Peter. Dear Me (Harmondsworth: Penguin, 1978)
- Vermilye, Jerry, and Ricci, Mark. The Films of Elizabeth Taylor (Secaucus, NJ: Citadel, 1976)
- Wain, John. Dear Shadows: Portraits from Memory (London: John Murray, 1986)
- Walker, Alexander. Hollywood, England: The British Film Industry in the Sixties (London: Harrap, 1986)
- . Elizabeth (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1990)
- . Fatal Charm: The Life of Rex Harrison (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1992)
- Wanger, Walter. My Life with Cleopatra (London: Transworld, 1963)
- Warner, Sylvia Townsend. T. H. White (London: Jonathan Cape, 1967)
- Waterbury, Ruth. Richard Burton: His Intimate Story (London: Mayflower-Dell, 1965)
- Waterbury, Ruth, with Arceri, Gene. Elizabeth Taylor: Her Life, Her Loves, Her Future (New York: Bantam, 1982)
- Wilding, Michael. Apple Sauce: The Story of My Life (London: George Allen and Unwin, 1982)
- Williams, Bleddyn. Rugger, My Life (London: Stanley Paul, 1956)
- Willoughby, Bob. Liz: An Intimate Collection. Photographs of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Merrell, 2004)
- Wintour, Charles, et al., Celebration: Twenty-Five Years of British Theatre (London: W. H. Allen, 1980)
- Woolf, Virginia. The Death of the Moth, and Other Essays (New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1942)
- York, Michael. Travelling Player (London: Headline, 1992)
- Zec, Donald. Sophia: An Intimate Biography (London: W. H. Allen, 1975)
- . Liz: the Men, the Myths and the Miracle: An Intimate Portrait of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Mirror, 1982)
- Zeffirelli, Franco. Zeffirelli: The Autobiography of Franco Zeffirelli (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1986)

Internet Sources

Much of the research into the diaries would have been more difficult without the wealth of resources now available online. Particularly valuable were the following:

ESPN Scrum: www.espnscrum.com

Google Books: books.google.com

Google Maps: maps.google.com

Internet movie database: www.imdb.com

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Archival Sources

Richard Burton Collection, Richard Burton Archives Swansea University

RWB 1 / 1: Diaries

RWB 1 / 2: Correspondence

RWB 1 / 3: Printed Items

RWB 1 / 4: Photographs

RWB 1 / 5: Film, Television and Audio Recordings, Documentaries and Interviews

RWB 1 / 6: Film Posters

RWB 1 / 7: Programmes and Scripts

RWB 1 / 8: Screenplays and Scripts

RWB 1 / 9: Press Cuttings and Publicity Material

RWB 1 / 10: Framed Prints and Pictures

RWB 1 / 11: Objects

RWB 1 / 12: Miscellaneous

Works of Reference

Chambers' Slang Dictionary

Collins Robert French–English English–French Dictionary

Encyclopedia of Wales

Halliwel's Film Guide

Halliwel's Who's Who in the Movies

Oxford Companion to Classical Civilization

Oxford Companion to English Literature

Oxford Companion to the Theatre

Oxford Dictionary for Writers and Editors

Oxford Dictionary of Foreign Words and Phrases

Oxford Dictionary of National Biography

Oxford Dictionary of Phrase and Fable

Oxford Dictionary of Quotations

Oxford Guide to Style

Shakespeare, William, Complete Works, ed. Jonathan Bate and Eric Rasmussen (Houndmills: Macmillan, 2007)

Shorter Oxford English Dictionary

Virgin Film Guide

Welsh Academy English–Welsh Dictionary

Y Geiradur Mawr

Newspapers and Magazines

Esquire

Glamorgan Gazette

Guardian

Life

Look

New York Times

Observer

Port Talbot Guardian

Sunday Express

Sunday Times

Time

The Times

Vogue

Wayfarer

Western Mail

Audio Recordings

David Copperfield (1950)

Conversation Piece (1951)

Under Milk Wood (1954)

Homage to Dylan Thomas (1954)

The World of Dylan Thomas (1955)

Fifteen Poems by Dylan Thomas (1955)

The English Poets (1955)

Brad (1958)

The Love Poems of John Donne (1958)

The Poetry of Thomas Hardy (1958)
The Rape of Lucrece and Other Poems (1960)
The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1960)
King Henry V (1961)
Camelot (1961)
Coriolanus (1962)
Henry V (1963)
Hamlet (1964)
Zulu (1964)
'A Married Man', Baker Street (1965)
The Days of Wilfred Owen (1966)
The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus (1966)
The Little Prince (1974)
A Personal Anthology: The Hound of Heaven and Other Poems (1978)
The War of the Worlds (1978)
'All on a Summer's Day', BBC, 31 December 1981
'Thanksgiving Service for the Life of Richard Burton', BBC, 30 August 1984
'Tribute to Richard Burton', BBC, 3 September 1984
Burton at the BBC (1995)
The Richard Burton Poetry Collection (2010)

Interviews

Richard Burton: My Time Again, BBC, 19 August 1965
24 Hours, BBC, 2 February 1966
Acting in the Sixties, BBC, 1 April 1967
Burton and Taylor at Oxford, BBC, 25 October 1967
Parkinson, BBC, 23 November 1974
Dick Cavett Show, PBS, 25 July 1980
Kane's Classics, BBC, 9 April 1998

Films and Television Appearances

The Last Days of Dolwyn (1949)
My Cousin Rachel (1952)
The Desert Rats (1953)
The Robe (1953)

Prince of Players (1955)
The Rains of Ranchipur (1955)
Alexander the Great (1956)
Sea Wife (1957)
Bitter Victory (1957)
Look Back in Anger (1959)
The Tempest (1960)
A Subject of Scandal and Concern (1960)
Dylan Thomas (1962)
The Longest Day (1962)
Cleopatra (1963)
The VIPs (1963)
Becket (1964)
The Night of the Iguana (1964)
Hamlet (1964)
What's New Pussycat? (1965)
The Sandpiper (1965)
The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1965)
Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1966)
The Taming of the Shrew (1967)
The Comedians (1967)
Doctor Faustus (1967)
Boom! (1968)
Candy (1968)
Where Eagles Dare (1968)
Anne of the Thousand Days (1969)
Raid on Rommel (1971)
Villain (1971)
The Assassination of Trotsky (1972)
Hammersmith Is Out (1972)
Bluebeard (1972)
Under Milk Wood (1972)
The Battle of Sutjeska (1973)
Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973)
Massacre in Rome (1973)
The Klansman (1974)
The Voyage (1974)

Brief Encounter (1974)
Exorcist II: The Heretic (1977)
Equus (1977)
The Medusa Touch (1978)
The Wild Geese (1978)
Breakthrough (1979)
Tristan and Isolt (1979)
Circle of Two (1980)
Absolution (1981)
The Fall Guy (1982)
Wagner (1983)
1984 (1984)
Ellis Island (1984)

Narrations

A Midsummer Night's Dream (1959)
Borrowed Pasture (1960)
Zulu (1964)
The Days of Wilfred Owen (1966)
Robert Kennedy Remembered (1968)
To The Ends of the Earth (1983)
Elizabeth R: A New Film Biography (1985)
Wales: Heritage of a Nation (1987)

Television Programmes and Films about Burton

In From The Cold? The World of Richard Burton, BBC/PBS (1989)
Richard Burton: An Actor's Life, A&E (1995)
Reputations: Richard Burton: Taylor-Made for Stardom, BBC (2001)
Welsh Greats: Richard Burton, BBC (2008)

Books, Chapters and Articles

This is a select listing of those volumes that have been most useful in the editing process. It is not a list of every work consulted. For readers seeking reliable biographical information on Burton, the best studies are those by Paul Ferris and Melvyn Bragg. Incisive, if brief, essays are provided by Peter Stead.

- Alpert, Hollis. Burton (Toronto and New York: Paperjacks, 1987)
- Amburn, Ellis. Elizabeth Taylor: The Obsessions, Passions and Courage of a Hollywood Legend (London: Robson, 2000)
- Andrews, Julie. Home: A Memoir of My Early Years (Waterville, ME: Thorndike Press, 2008)
- Babington, Bruce (ed.). British Stars and Stardom: From Alma Taylor to Sean Connery (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2001)
- Berry, David. Wales and Cinema: The First Hundred Years (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 1994)
- Bloom, Claire. Limelight and After: The Education of an Actress (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1982)
- . Leaving a Doll's House: A Memoir (London: Virago, 1996)
- Bowyer, Justin. Conversations with Jack Cardiff: Art, Light and Direction in Cinema (London: Batsford, 2003)
- Bozzacchi, Gianni. Elizabeth Taylor: The Queen and I (Madison, WI: University of Wisconsin Press, 2002)
- Bragg, Melvyn. Rich: The Life of Richard Burton (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1988)
- Brodsky, Jack, and Weiss, Nathan. The Cleopatra Papers (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1963)
- Burton, Hal (ed.). Acting in the Sixties (London: BBC, 1970)
- Burton, Philip. Early Doors (New York: Dial Press, 1969)
- . Richard and Philip: Burton – A Book of Memories (London: Peter Owen, 1992)
- Burton, Richard. 'The Magic of Meredith Jones', Sunday Times, 17 June 1956
- . 'A Candid Look at Becket and Myself', Life, 28 January 1964
- . 'Christmas Eve in Aberavon: A Memoir', Glamour, December 1964
- . A Christmas Story (London: Heinemann, 1965)
- . 'His Liz: A Scheming Charmer', Life, 24 February 1967
- . 'Who Cares about Wales? I Care', Look, 24 June 1969
- . 'The Last Time I Played Rugby', Observer, 4 October 1970
- . "'Le ma'r blydi film star 'ma?'"', in Geoffrey Nicholson with Cliff Morgan and David Frost (eds), Touchdown: And Other Moves in the Game (London: Rugby Football Union, 1970)
- . 'The Last Game Richard Burton Lost', Vogue, 1 January 1971
- . 'Travelling with Elizabeth', Vogue, May 1971
- . 'The trials of travels with Liz', Observer Review, 13 August 1971
- . 'My Day', Vogue, 1 September 1971
- . 'A Story of Christmas: In the Twenties', Daily Mail, 23 December 1971
- . 'The Immortal Dive of P. C. Mog', in The Barry John Book of Rugby (Swansea: Christopher Davies, 1972)
- . 'To Play Churchill Is To Hate Him', New York Times, 24 November 1974
- . 'The Shock of His Presence Was Like a Blow Under the Heart', New York, vol. 8 no. 3 (20 January 1975)
- . 'Aberavon', in J. Dolan (ed.), The Wizards: Aberavon Football Club, 1876–1976 (Port Talbot:

- Aberavon Football Club, 1976)
- . ‘Lament for a Dead Welshman’, Observer Review, 11 July 1976
- Burton, Sally. ‘To Know the Library Was To Know the Man’, Life, January 1985
- Caine, Michael. What's It All About? (London: Random House, 1992)
- Campbell, James. Talking at the Gates: A Life of James Baldwin (London: Faber and Faber, 1991)
- Cardiff, Jack. Magic Hour (London: Faber and Faber, 1996)
- Carpenter, Humphrey. O.U.D.S. A Centenary History of the Oxford University Dramatic Society, 1885–1985 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1985)
- Cashin, Fergus. Richard Burton (London, W. H. Allen, 1982)
- Castle, Charles. Noël (London, W. H. Allen, 1972)
- Caute, David. Joseph Losey: A Revenge on Life (London: Faber and Faber, 1994)
- Chapman, Don. Oxford Playhouse: High and Low Drama in a University City (Hatfield: University of Hertfordshire Press, 2008)
- Christopher, James. Elizabeth Taylor: The Illustrated Biography (London: André Deutsch, 1999)
- Ciment, Michael. Conversations with Losey (London and New York: Methuen, 1985)
- Clarke, Gerald. Capote: A Biography (London: Carroll and Graf, 2006)
- Coleman, Terry. Olivier: The Authorised Biography (London: Bloomsbury, 2005)
- Collins, Joan. Past Imperfect: An Autobiography (London: Coronet, 1985)
- Cottrell, John, and Cashin, Fergus. Richard Burton: A Biography (London: Arthur Barker, 1971)
- Coward, Noël. The Noël Coward Diaries, ed. Graham Payn and Sheridan Morley (Boston and Toronto: Little, Brown, 1982)
- David, Lester and Robbins, Jhan. Richard & Elizabeth (New York: Funk and Wagnalls, 1977)
- Downing, Christopher. Burton Stories (London: Futura, 1990)
- Duncan, Paul (ed.), Taylor (Cologne: Taschen, 2008)
- Dyffryn Grammar School, Port Talbot, 1912–1962*
- Edwards, Anne. Callas: Her Life, Her Loves, Her Music (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 2001)
- Evans, A. Leslie. The Story of Taibach and District (Port Talbot: 1963)
- Fairweather, Virginia. Cry God for Larry: An Intimate Memoir of Sir Laurence Olivier (London: Calder and Boyars, 1969)
- Falk, Quentin. Anthony Hopkins: Too Good to Waste (London: Virgin, 1989)
- Farber, Manny. Negative Space: Manny Farber on the Movies (London: Studio Vista, 1998)
- Farrow, Mia. What Falls Away: A Memoir (London: Doubleday, 1997)
- Ferris Paul. Richard Burton (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1981)
- . A Portrait of Richard Burton (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1984)
- Ffroncon, Gwenno. Cyfaredd y Cysgodion: Delweddu Cymru a'i Phobl ar Ffilm, 1935–1951 (Caerdydd: Gwasg Prifysgol Cymru, 2003)
- Findlater, Richard. The Player Kings (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1971)

- Finstad, Suzanne. Natasha: The Biography of Natalie Wood (London: Century, 2001)
- . Warren Beatty: A Private Man (London: Aurum, 2005)
- Fisher, Eddie. Been There, Done That (London: Hutchinson, 1999)
- Forbes, Bryan. That Despicable Race: A History of the British Acting Tradition (London: Elm Tree, 1980)
- Fothergill, Robert A. Private Chronicles: A Study of English Diaries (London: Oxford University Press, 1974)
- Freedland, Michael. Peter O'Toole (London: W. H. Allen, 1983)
- Gardner, Ava. Ava: My Story (London: Bantam, 1995)
- Gielgud, John. An Actor and His Time (London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 1989)
- Glenville, Peter. 'The Burtons', Vogue, 15 October 1967
- Graham, Sheilah. Scratch an Actor: Confessions of a Hollywood Columnist (London: Mayflower, 1970)
- Griffith, Kenneth. The Fool's Pardon: The Autobiography of Kenneth Griffith (London: Little, Brown, 1994)
- Grobel, Lawrence. The Hustons (London: Bloomsbury, 1990)
- Gussow, Mel. Zanuck: Don't Say Yes Until I Finish Talking (London: W. H. Allen, 1971)
- . Edward Albee: A Singular Journey (London: Oberon, 1999)
- Hall, Sheldon. Zulu: With Some Guts Behind It: The Making of the Epic Movie (Sheffield: Tomahawk, 2005)
- Hanson, J. Ivor. Profile of a Welsh Town (Port Talbot: 1969)
- Harding, James. Emlyn Williams (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1993)
- Harrison, Elizabeth. Love, Honour and Dismay (London: W. H. Allen, 1978)
- Harrison, Rex. Rex: An Autobiography (London: Macmillan, 1974)
- Hayman, Ronald. Tennessee Williams: Everyone Else is an Audience (New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1993)
- Heymann, C. David. Liz: An Intimate Biography of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Heinemann, 1995)
- Hirsch, Foster. Elizabeth Taylor (New York: Pyramid, 1973)
- Hordern, Michael. A World Elsewhere: The Autobiography of Sir Michael Hordern (London: Michael O'Mara, 1993)
- Hotchner, A. E. Sophia: Living and Loving – Her Own Story (London: Michael Joseph, 1979)
- Howerd, Frankie. On The Way I Lost It: An Autobiography (London: W. H. Allen, 1976)
- Huggett, Richard. Binkie Beaumont: Eminence Grise of the West End Theatre, 1933–1973 (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1989)
- Huston, John. An Open Book (London: Macmillan, 1981)
- Isherwood, Christopher. The Sixties: Diaries, Volume Two: 1960–1969, ed. Katherine Bucknell (London: Chatto and Windus, 2010)
- Jenkins, David. Richard Burton: A Brother Remembered (London: Random House, 1993)
- Jenkins, Graham. Richard Burton, My Brother (New York: Harper and Row, 1988)

Jones, Sally Roberts. The History of Port Talbot (Port Talbot: Goldleaf, 1991)

Junor, Penny. Burton: The Man Behind the Myth (London: Sphere, 1986)

Kashner, Sam, and Schoenberger, Nancy. Furious Love: Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton and the Marriage of the Century (London: JR Books, 2010)

Kavanagh, Julie. Rudolf Nureyev: The Life (London: Penguin, 2007)

Kelley, Kitty. Elizabeth Taylor: The Last Star (London: BCA, 1981)

Kingsland, Rosemary. Hold Back the Night: Memoirs of Lost Childhood, A Warring Family and A Secret Affair with Richard Burton (London: Century, 2003)

Korda, Michael. Charmed Lives (London: Penguin, 1980)

Lambert, Gavin. Natalie Wood: A Life (London: Faber and Faber, 2004)

Lee, Hermione. Biography (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009)

Lesley, Cole. The Life of Noël Coward (Harmondsworth: Penguin, 1976)

Lycett, Andrew. Dylan Thomas: A New Life (London: Phoenix, 2004)

Macnab, Geoffrey. 'Valley Boys', Sight and Sound, March 1994

Maddox, Brenda. Who's Afraid of Elizabeth Taylor? A Myth of Our Time (London: Granada, 1977)

Mallon, Thomas. A Book of One's Own: People and their Diaries (St Paul, Minnesota: Hungry Mind, 1995)

Mann, William J. How To Be A Movie Star: Elizabeth Taylor in Hollywood (London: Faber and Faber, 2009)

Manso, Peter. Brando (London: Orion, 1995)

Matthews, Gethin. Richard Burton: Seren Cymru (Llandysul: Gomer, 2002)

McCann, Graham. Frankie Howerd: Stand-Up Comic (London and New York: Fourth Estate, 2004)

Minnelli, Vincente. I Remember It Well (New York: Doubleday, 1974)

Morgan, Cliff, with Nicholson, Geoffrey. The Autobiography – Beyond the Fields of Play (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1996)

Morley, John David. Encounters (London: Bloomsbury, 1990)

Morley, Sheridan. The Other Side of the Moon: The Life of David Niven (Long Preston: Magna, 1985)

———. Elizabeth Taylor: A Celebration (London: Pavilion, 1988)

Moseley, Roy. Rex Harrison: The First Biography (Sevenoaks: New English Library, 1987)

Mosley, Leonard. Zanuck: The Rise and Fall of Hollywood's Last Tycoon (London: Granada, 1985)

Munn, Michael. Richard Burton: Prince of Players (London: JR Books, 2008)

———. David Niven: The Man Behind the Balloon (London: JR Books, 2009)

Nickens, Christopher. Elizabeth Taylor: A Biography in Photographs (London: Hutchinson, 1984)

Nolan, William F. John Huston: King Rebel (Los Angeles, CA: Sherbourne, 1965)

O'Connor, Garry. Paul Scofield: The Biography (London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 2002)

Parkinson, Michael. Parky: My Autobiography (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 2008)

Payn, Graham, and Morley, Sheridan (eds), The Noël Coward Diaries (Boston and Toronto: Little, Brown, 1982)

- Phillips, Siân. Private Faces: The Autobiography (London: Sceptre, 1999)
- . Public Places: The Autobiography (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 2001)
- Plowright, Joan. And That's Not All (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 2001)
- Podnieks, Elizabeth. Daily Modernism: The Literary Diaries of Virginia Woolf, Antonia White, Elizabeth Smart and Anaïs Nin (Montreal and Kingston: McGill-Queen's University Press, 2000)
- Ponsonby, Arthur. English Diaries (London: Methuen, 1923)
- Port Talbot Borough Council. Port Talbot: The Official Guide (Port Talbot: Port Talbot Borough Council, 1939)
- Quayle, Anthony. A Time to Speak (London: Barrie and Jenkins, 1990)
- Radovich, Don. Tony Richardson: A Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT: Greenwood, 1995)
- Read, Piers Paul. Alec Guinness: The Authorised Biography (London: Simon and Schuster, 2003)
- Redfield, William. Letters from an Actor (New York: Viking, 1967)
- Redgrave, Vanessa. An Autobiography (London: Hutchinson, 1991)
- Richardson, Tony. Long Distance Runner: A Memoir (London: Faber and Faber, 1993)
- Roberts, Peter (ed.). The Best of Plays and Players, 1953–1968 (London: Methuen, 1988)
- Roberts, Rachel. No Bells on Sunday: The Journals of Rachel Roberts, ed. Alexander Walker (London: Michael Joseph, 1984)
- Rubython, Tom. And God Created Burton (London: Myrtle Press, 2011)
- Seldes, Marian. The Bright Lights: A Theatre Life (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1978)
- Sellers, Robert. Hellraisers: The Life and Inebriated Times of Richard Burton, Richard Harris, Peter O'Toole and Oliver Reed (London: Preface, 2009)
- Shaffer, Anthony. So What Did You Expect? A Memoir (London: Picador, 2001)
- Shail, Robert. Stanley Baker: A Life in Film (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 2008)
- Sheed, Wilfrid. 'Burton and Taylor Must Go', Esquire, October 1968
- Sheppard, Dick. Elizabeth: The Life and Career of Elizabeth Taylor (London: W. H. Allen, 1975)
- Spinetti, Victor. Up Front (London: Portico, 2008)
- Spoto, Donald. The Kindness of Strangers: The Life of Tennessee Williams (London: Methuen, 1990)
- . Elizabeth Taylor (London: Little, Brown, 1995)
- Stanley, Louis. Sixty Years of Luxury: The Dorchester (London: Pearl and Dean, 1981)
- Stead, Peter. Richard Burton: So Much, So Little (Bridgend: Seren, 1991)
- . Acting Wales (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 2002)
- Sterne, Richard L. John Gielgud directs Richard Burton in Hamlet: A Journal of Rehearsals (London: Heinemann, 1968)
- Steverson, Tyrone. Richard Burton: A Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT: Greenwood, 1992)
- Storey, Anthony. Stanley Baker: Portrait of an Actor (London: W. H. Allen, 1977)
- Strasberg, Susan. Bittersweet (New York: Putnam, 1980)
- Taibach and Port Talbot Co-operative Society Ltd. Co-operative Jubilee, 1902–1952

- Taraborrelli, J. Randy. Sinatra: The Man Behind the Myth (Edinburgh: Mainstream, 1998)
- . Elizabeth (London: Pan, 2007)
- Taylor, Elizabeth. Elizabeth Taylor: An Informal Memoir by Elizabeth Taylor (New York: Harper and Row, 1965)
- . Elizabeth Takes Off (London: Macmillan, 1988)
- . My Love Affair with Jewelry (London: Thames and Hudson, 2002)
- Tynan, Kenneth. The Diaries of Kenneth Tynan, ed. John Lahr (London: Bloomsbury, 2001)
- Ustinov, Peter. Dear Me (Harmondsworth: Penguin, 1978)
- Vermilye, Jerry, and Ricci, Mark. The Films of Elizabeth Taylor (Secaucus, NJ: Citadel, 1976)
- Wain, John. Dear Shadows: Portraits from Memory (London: John Murray, 1986)
- Walker, Alexander. Hollywood, England: The British Film Industry in the Sixties (London: Harrap, 1986)
- . Elizabeth (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1990)
- . Fatal Charm: The Life of Rex Harrison (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1992)
- Wanger, Walter. My Life with Cleopatra (London: Transworld, 1963)
- Warner, Sylvia Townsend. T. H. White (London: Jonathan Cape, 1967)
- Waterbury, Ruth. Richard Burton: His Intimate Story (London: Mayflower-Dell, 1965)
- Waterbury, Ruth, with Arceri, Gene. Elizabeth Taylor: Her Life, Her Loves, Her Future (New York: Bantam, 1982)
- Wilding, Michael. Apple Sauce: The Story of My Life (London: George Allen and Unwin, 1982)
- Williams, Bleddyn. Rugger, My Life (London: Stanley Paul, 1956)
- Willoughby, Bob. Liz: An Intimate Collection. Photographs of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Merrell, 2004)
- Wintour, Charles, et al., Celebration: Twenty-Five Years of British Theatre (London: W. H. Allen, 1980)
- Woolf, Virginia. The Death of the Moth, and Other Essays (New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1942)
- York, Michael. Travelling Player (London: Headline, 1992)
- Zec, Donald. Sophia: An Intimate Biography (London: W. H. Allen, 1975)
- . Liz: the Men, the Myths and the Miracle: An Intimate Portrait of Elizabeth Taylor (London: Mirror, 1982)
- Zeffirelli, Franco. Zeffirelli: The Autobiography of Franco Zeffirelli (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1986)

Internet Sources

Much of the research into the diaries would have been more difficult without the wealth of resources now available online. Particularly valuable were the following:

ESPN Scrum: www.espnscrum.com

Google Books: books.google.com

Google Maps: maps.google.com

Internet movie database: www.imdb.com

Notes

Introduction

- 1 William Redfield, Letters from an Actor (New York: Viking, 1967), p. 20.
- 2 Data collected by the 1911 population census revealed that women aged between 20 and 24 averaged 7.36 children if they married coal miners, but only 3.48 children if they married doctors. Coal miners also enjoyed one of the earliest average ages of marriage of any occupational group, a function of the relatively high wages that could be earned by young men underground.
- 3 Port Talbot Guardian, 5 February 1943. Wales had no officially recognized capital until 1955, when the city of Cardiff was accorded that honour.
- 4 George Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four (1949; Guild Publishing, 1989), p. 434.
- 5 Thomas Mallon, A Book of One's Own: People and their Diaries (St Paul, Minnesota: Hungry Mind Press, 1995 edn), xvii.
- 6 Burton uses the terms 'diary', 'journal' and 'notebook' at various times to describe what he is doing. Here the term 'diary' has been chosen as more accurately reflective of the entire sequence and the fact that Burton did keep dated entries confined to single days.
- 7 There are scattered references, in the diaries and elsewhere, which suggest the existence of other diaries or other forms of writing. Hollis Alpert, Burton (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1986), p. 90, refers to Burton keeping a diary, written 'in his own invented hieroglyphics' in about 1960. Perhaps Burton meant his schoolboy French. Alpert also suggests that Burton was writing a novel and had written 20,000 words which he lost when in Hollywood in 1970 (p. 197).
- 8 There does not appear to be any supporting evidence for the suggestion made by Penny Junor, in Burton: The Man Behind the Myth (London: Sphere, 1986), p. 143, that Burton read his diary 'out loud to friends'.
- 9 In fact most, perhaps all, of the diaries covering this period have survived.
- 0 Lantz to Burton, 11 August 1976, Richard Burton Archives, RWB 1/2/1175.
- 1 Sunday Express, 4 December 1988; Sunday Times, 18 December 1988.
- 2 RWB 1/2/1/3 – Weissburger and Frosch [Box 19/3]. Although undated, this evidently dates from the period 1964–75.
- 3 Melvyn Bragg, Rich: The Life of Richard Burton (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1988), p. 211.
- 4 Robert A. Fothergill, Private Chronicles: A Study of English Diaries (London: Oxford University Press, 1974), p. 10.

- 5 There is very limited evidence of wilful destruction of the diaries. On 24 June 1965 Burton records that 'in fury' he had torn out the preceding page of the diary, covering 17–23 June. The page has not survived. There is no other comment of this kind, but this does not rule out the possibility that he destroyed other pages and did not leave evidence of such destruction.
- 6 Bragg, Rich, p. 369. See further assessments on pp. 108, 165, 210–11, 216–17, 290.
- 7 A similar case is that of Burton and Raquel Welch. Taylor was suspicious of Welch's interest in her husband, and there is speculation to this day (not quashed by Welch herself) that Burton and Welch may have been lovers during the making of Bluebeard. Yet the diaries (which admittedly end in March 1972, before the cessation of filming) offer no evidence for this.
- 8 Cited in Hermione Lee, Biography (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009), p. 7. This is not the place to list the failings of specific Burton biographies and biographers (or, indeed, those of Elizabeth Taylor). For readers seeking further enlightenment and relatively sure-footed narrative, my advice would be to consult the works by Bragg, Ferris and Stead on Richard Burton, and by Alexander Walker on Elizabeth Taylor.
- 9 John Cottrell and Fergus Cashin, Richard Burton: A Biography (London: Arthur Barker, 1971), pp. 345–6.
- 0 The most recent example being Michael Munn, in his Richard Burton: Prince of Players (London: JR Books, 2008). Munn is not named in any of the diaries.
- 1 Bragg, perhaps subconsciously, appears to accept this when he writes (Rich, p. 375) 'As in many autobiographies there is self-justification as well as self-revelation.'
- 2 Arthur Ponsonby, English Diaries (London: Methuen, 1923), p. 5.
- 3 The exceptions are the diaries of 1940 (Bragg had some kind of indirect knowledge of this) and 1975.
- 4 The Diary of Virginia Woolf, volume II: 1920–1924, ed. Anne Olivier Bell (Luda: Hogarth, 1978), Editor's preface, p.ix.
- 5 Virginia Woolf, 'The Art of Biography' (1939), in The Death of the Moth and other essays (New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1942), p. 195.
- 6 See Lee, Biography, p. 16: 'The idea that there is such a thing as an innate, essential nature, often vies in biographical narrative with the idea that the self is formed by accidents, contingencies, education and environment. The belief in a definable, consistent self, an identity that develops through the course of a life and that can be conclusively described, breaks down, to a great extent, in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.' Elizabeth Podnieks develops this further: 'The self is always to some degree invented, so the diary that contains this self is at least partially fictive' (Daily Modernism: The Literary Diaries of Virginia Woolf, Antonia White, Elizabeth Smart and Anaïs Nin (Montreal and Kingston: McGill-Queen's University Press, 2000), p. 5.

1939

Richard's brother, Thomas Henry Jenkins (1901–80), a coal miner by occupation, was widowed when his wife Cassie (born 1905) died, leaving him with a daughter (Mair (1938–2008)). Tom and Cassie lived at Cwmafan, an industrial settlement located in the Afan valley two miles north (as the crow flies) of Richard's home in Taibach. They had taken in the youngest of the Jenkins children, Graham, following his mother's death shortly after giving birth to him in 1927.

William Shakespeare's Richard II, King (c.1595).

Mrs Pike, the mother of Raymond Pike, one of Richard's friends, who later emigrated to Australia.

Colin Wherle, a fellow pupil, lived in Heol-yr-Orsedd, Port Talbot.

The 'Cach' was the local name given to the Picturedrome, the cinema in Taibach, located between Gallipoli Row and Alma Terrace. It mainly showed films well after their first release (i.e. not film premieres), the programme starting at 6 p.m. Before it became a cinema it had been the local drill hall for the Territorial Force (after 1920 Territorial Army). Cach is Welsh for 'shit'. Stranded in Paris was the UK title of Artists and Models Abroad (1938), directed by Mitchell Leisen (1898–1972), starring Jack Benny (1894–1974). Bulldog Drummond's Secret Police (1939), directed by James P. Hogan (1890–1943), starring John Howard (1913–95) and H. B. Warner (1876–1958) was the latest in a long series of films featuring the eponymous hero.

The Regent was a cinema in Taibach located on Commercial Road. I Met A Murderer (1939), directed by Roy Kellino (1912–56), starred James Mason (1908–94) and Pamela Kellino (1916–96). Exile Express (1939), directed by Otis Garrett (1905–41), starred the Russian-born actor Anna Sten (1908–93).

Although Richard writes 'football' he means rugby football rather than association football. Mr Nicky was Mr Jack N. Nicholas, the maths teacher, who also coached the school rugby team.

Aunt Edith Evans, the sister of Richard's brother-in-law Elfed James. Edith, usually 'Ede' but sometimes 'Edie', who lived at 9, Geifr Road, Taibach, ran (together with her brother, Ivor James) a fish and chip shop, located in the front room of her house. Richard would collect newspapers (used for wrapping purposes) for her for money.

Dillwyn is Dillwyn Dummer, one of Richard's childhood friends, a second cousin once removed, and just a few months younger than Richard. Dillwyn's mother Margaret Ann was Elfed James's sister.

1940

1 The Talbot Memorial Park, located between Taibach and Port Talbot.

2 The Oklahoma Kid (1939), directed by Lloyd Bacon (1889–1955), starred James Cagney (1899–1986) and Humphrey Bogart (1899–1957). Richard was to become friendly with Bogart in the 1950s.

3 Arthur 'Boyo' Jenkins, a fellow pupil, who lived in Varna Terrace, Taibach, and who later played first-class rugby for Aberavon RFC. Lloyd's bicycle and sports shop, Station Road, Port Talbot.

4 The Carnegie Free Public Library, Taibach, situated on Commercial Road, opposite the Co-operative store.

5 ITMA, an abbreviation for It's That Man Again, was a very popular wartime radio show, starring Tommy

- Handley (1894–1949).
- 6 Britain suffered its severest frost for 45 years in 1940. Snow remained on the hills around Port Talbot until the end of February.
- 7 Cecilia or ‘Cis’ James, née Jenkins (1905–93), Richard's sister, married to Elfed James (1900–79), with whom he lived at 73 Caradog Street, Taibach.
- 8 This refers to the Taibach and Port Talbot Co-operative Society. Their central premises were at 4–16 Commercial Road, Taibach. Elfed James was to serve on its management committee. Richard was to work there as a draper's assistant after leaving school in April 1941.
- 9 Albert ‘Sandy’ Powell (1898–1982) was a British comedian and film actor famous for his catchphrase, ‘Can you hear me, mother?’
- 0 The Plough field is a sports ground, immediately north of and adjacent to the Talbot Memorial Park.
- 1 Mrs Jackson was Richard's next-door neighbour in Caradog Street, and was originally from Gloucestershire. Richard was friends with her son Billy. Dr Marshall was the local general practitioner, who lived at 1, Grange Street, his house both consulting room and dispensary.
- 2 A rugby union match. Aberavon lost 7 points to 16 in a match the Port Talbot Guardian thought ‘one of the most exciting and interesting played on the ground this season’.
- 3 Dots in the original.
- 4 Joe's was Joe Morozzi's ice-cream parlour on Talbot Road, officially known as ‘Berni's’.
- 5 ‘Mam James’ – Elfed James's mother. She lived at 3 Inkerman Row (since demolished), immediately behind (uphill from) Caradog Street.
- 6 Noddfa Welsh Congregational Chapel on Commercial Road, Taibach. Noddfa had been established in 1933 following a schism in Gibeon Welsh Congregational Chapel (which was near the Picturedrome, between Gallipoli Row and Alma Terrace) and had moved into its new premises in November 1939. Both chapels were Welsh in language.
- 7 Baglan is a settlement lying to the north-west of Port Talbot, approximately three miles from Richard's home in Taibach.
- 8 ‘My mother’ must refer not to Richard's natural mother (who had died in 1927) but to his sister Cis. Cis and Elfed were second cousins, both great-grandchildren of Rees Morgan and Hannah Davis, who had lived in Pontrhydyfen. They shared common membership of Gibeon Welsh Congregational Chapel, Taibach, and married in 1927, only four months before they took in Richard following his mother's death. Cis had worked as a housemaid for the Handford family, drapers by occupation, who had a shop opposite the Talbot Arms Hotel, later a store on Station Road (afterwards the site of Woolworths). Elfed was a coal miner who worked at a colliery at Goytre. This was probably the Glenhafod Level, owned by the Glenhafod Collieries Limited of Port Talbot. Glenhafod Colliery was located in the bottom of the valley below the present cemetery.
- 9 ‘Ray’ is Richard's friend Raymond Pike. Glen Parkhouse lived at 8, Mill Row, Taibach.
- 0 ‘Eastern’ refers to Richard's former school, the Eastern Boys’ School, Margam Road, Port Talbot.

- 1 Richard means Inspector Hornleigh (1938), directed by Eugene Forde (1898–1986), starring Gordon Harker (1885–1967) and Alastair Sim (1900–76).
- 2 Uncle Ben James (1900–70) was Elfed's brother. His back had been broken in an underground accident at Newlands colliery and he was paralysed from the waist down. The game referred to is Monopoly, which began life in the USA and which was being produced by John Waddington Ltd in the United Kingdom from the late 1930s onwards.
- 3 Afan W. and Gwylfa P. Powell were identical twins who lived at 40 Caradog Street, Taibach. The Powells also attended Noddfa Chapel.
- 4 'Sandies' is Sanderson's barbershop, Commercial Road, Taibach.
- 5 Richard saw The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (1939) directed by H. C. Potter (1904–77), starring Fred Astaire (1899–1987) and Ginger Rogers (1911–95).
- 6 'Town': Port Talbot.
- 7 Eddie Miles was a fellow pupil who lived in Somerset Street, Taibach, and who later served in the Royal Navy. Plum was the nickname of Royston Palmer, another pupil, who lived in Brook Street, Taibach, and who later became a teacher.
- 8 Repairing shoes using a cast-iron last.
- 9 Richard's cousin Marian James (1928—), the eldest child of Elfed and Cis.
- 0 Charles Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, first published 1843–4.
- 1 'The Side': the mountainside up behind Caradog Street. Elfed owned a glasshouse up above Inkerman Row East on the mountainside.
- 2 This probably refers to the practice of posting the team sheet for sports teams on the noticeboard. It is not clear whether Richard was simply not selected for the team in question or whether the game was cancelled because of the state of the pitch.
- 3 Union Pacific (1939), directed by Cecil B. DeMille (1881–1959), and starring Barbara Stanwyck (1907–90).
- 4 'Edie' is Edith Jenkins (1922–66), Richard's sister.
- 5 'Sis' is what is written. He might have meant 'Cis', but as she was his sister (although he had already referred to her elsewhere as his mother) it is possible he meant 'Sis[ter]'.
- 6 In fact four boys (aged between five and seven) had drowned when the ice on Dankyr Pond, on which they were playing, gave way, and one man (Mr Jenkin Powell, aged 58), who attempted to rescue them, also died.
- 7 Alan James was Elfed and Ben's nephew.
- 8 Evan Dummer, whose brother Edwin was married to Margaret Ann, Elfed James's eldest sister. 'Gob' is a slang term for spitting.
- 9 'Noon' often appears as short for 'afternoon'.
- 0 Ben's wife, referred to by Richard as 'Winifred', 'Winnie', 'Win' and even 'Wyn'.
- 1 Richard may be referring here to a part-time job as a newspaper delivery boy, which he had started at the age of eight.

- 2 'Middles' probably refers to the 'Middle School' team, as opposed to the 'Seniors'. 'B. County' is Bridgend County School. Bridgend is a town 10 miles to the south-east of Taibach (1931 population 10,029).
- 3 Trevor George was a close school friend of Richard who went on to become a headmaster. He played rugby for Aberavon and was also a talented cricketer.
- 4 David Jenkins (1914–94), Richard's brother, a policeman, lived in the small town of Llantwit Major, 18 miles to the south-east.
- 5 Spies of the Air (1939), directed by David MacDonald (1904–83).
- 6 Toffolux: a tube of toffees, made by Mackintosh's.
- 7 Alan Dummer, a relative of Dillwyn Dummer.
- 8 Presumably should be 'Council schools'.
- 9 This is the first reference to Philip Burton (1904–95), teacher of English at Richard's school, who was to have a profound influence over Richard during the next few years, becoming his legal guardian in December 1943.
- 0 'Blues' and 'Reds' refer to blocks of streets in Monopoly. 'Pall Mall' is another street (coloured purple).
- 1 A précis-writing exercise.
- 2 Tonyrefail was a mixed industrial and market centre 16 miles due east of Taibach.
- 3 Dr John Caerau Rees DD, minister of Noddfa Chapel.
- 4 Richard's sister Hilda Jenkins (1918–95), who by this time was married and known as Hilda Owen. Neath is a town (1931 population 33,340) six miles to the north-west of Port Talbot.
- 5 W. H. Mayne was a local ironmonger, located on Station Road. Mr Owens was the woodwork teacher.
- 6 'Dad James' – Ben and Elfed's father. He was a deacon at Noddfa Chapel and also on the committee of the Taibach Co-operative Wholesale Society. Allan here but usually Alan.
- 7 'County School' – Port Talbot County School, the other grammar school in the town. Mr Smith was PE master at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 8 The Co-op's savings scheme.
- 9 Mr Wyndham Wellington.
- 0 Richard's cousin Rhianon James, Elfed and Cis's second child (1931—).
- 1 Mr Rossiter's son was Bernard Rossiter. Peggy Davies was daughter of Ben and Win James.
- 2 Miss M. E. Best taught geography at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 3 'Footer' would seem to suggest association football, as distinct from 'rugger' (rugby football).
- 4 'Pop' the headmaster (1935–43) of Port Talbot Secondary School, Mr Christopher T. Reynolds.
- 5 The scoreline suggests this was a rugby match.
- 6 'Cwm' meaning Cwmafan.
- 7 Richard's brother Ivor Jenkins (1906–72), a coal miner. Swansea (1931 population 164,797), then the largest town in Wales (Cardiff, the largest urban settlement, having acquired city status in 1905), is eight miles north-west of Taibach.

- 8 Leslie Charteris (1907–93) wrote a series of books featuring ‘The Saint’, later adapted for radio, film and television.
- 9 Gerry A. Mahoney, a fellow pupil, lived at 44, Brynheulog.
- 0 Brinley Phillips, a fellow pupil. Later played rugby football for Aberavon as a centre three-quarter.
- 1 At this time a try was worth three points, a conversion two, and a penalty goal three.
- 2 The front row consists of two props and a hooker.
- 3 Iestyn and Morgan were the names of school houses. Leisan was the name of Richard's house, Caradog the name of another. All were named after medieval Lords of Glamorgan.
- 4 The Plaza cinema was located at Station Road, Port Talbot.
- 5 Come on George (1939), directed by Anthony Kimmins (1901–64), starring George Formby (1904–61).
- 6 Prince was a dog.
- 7 Herbert George Jenkins (1876–1923) wrote a series of books featuring the character ‘Bindle’.
- 8 ‘Sideman to the hooker’ – what is usually termed a prop forward.
- 9 Cliff W. Owen or Owens, a fellow pupil.
- 0 Eric Lambourne, a fellow pupil who later became a teacher and a headmaster.
- 1 Ronald Butt, a fellow pupil, lived in Cwmafan. Freddie Williams (1926—) was to enjoy a highly successful career as a speedway rider with the Wembley Lions team in London, becoming world champion twice, in 1950 and 1953.
- 2 A special wartime rugby international was arranged to raise money for various charities. Wales played England at Cardiff Arms Park, losing by 9 points to 18. A return match at Gloucester in April saw another English victory, this time by 17 points to 3.
- 3 Talbot Athletic Ground, home of Aberavon Rugby Football Club, which was shortly to be converted into a site for barrage balloons.
- 4 Walter Vickery (1909–2000) was capped four times (as a Number 8) by Wales in 1938 and 1939, and captained Aberavon in the 1936–7 and 1945–6 seasons. Father George Vickery (1879–1970) had played for Aberavon and England.
- 5 Miss E. E. Griffiths (not Griffith) taught Welsh at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 6 Stanley and Livingstone (1939), directed by Henry King (1886–1982), starring Spencer Tracy (1900–67).
- 7 The Majestic cinema in Bethany Square in the centre of Port Talbot had opened in 1938. It may be what is today the Job Centre building.
- 8 ‘T.H.’ – Thomas Henry, Richard's brother.
- 9 ‘Cymanfa’ is a reference to a Gymanfa Ganu, a Welsh singing festival.
- 0 Possibly Nettie Phipps. There were tennis courts in the Talbot Memorial Park.
- 1 This was Easter Sunday.
- 2 There is no record of this film or anything resembling it showing in Port Talbot at this time.
- 3 The Plaza cinema had undergone refurbishment and was reopened (as Port Talbot's ‘new luxury super-cinema') on Easter Monday. The building still stands in Station Road, although now derelict.

4 Sir Philip Hamilton Gibbs, Realities of War (1920, revised edn 1929).

5 Maesteg (1931 population 25,570), an industrial town in the Llynfi valley, about five miles east of Taibach.

6 Shipyards Sally (1939), directed by Monty Banks (1897–1950), starring Gracie Fields (1898–1979).

7 Rees Bowen, a deacon at Noddfa.

8 Alun Thomas (1926–91) went on to play first-class rugby for Swansea, Cardiff and Llanelli. He was capped 13 times by Wales, went on tour with the British Lions to South Africa in 1955, and returned as tour manager for the Lions in 1974.

9 Eifion H. N. Davies, a sixth-former, who went on to become a headteacher.

} Presumably 'Oh My Darling, Clementine'.

| A Maesteg to Port Talbot bus crashed on Tydraw Hill. One passenger died two days later from injuries suffered.

| Bucket of dung, or cow and horse manure. Richard would collect this from the mountainside and sell it.

} Auntie Hannah Oates, Richard's first cousin once removed.

| Mary Ann Jones was an elderly neighbour who lived on Inkerman Row East.

} Four Daughters (1938), directed by Michael Curtiz (1886–1962), starring Claude Rains (1889–1967) and John Garfield (1913–52).

} Colin T. C. Eynon, a fellow pupil.

| Truda Cound was a fellow pupil and a skilled tennis player.

} Dai Owen, Richard's sister Hilda's husband.

} Presumably Arthur 'Bonehead' Jenkins. 'Flicks' is a colloquial term for the cinema.

| The Gorilla (1939), directed by Allan Dwan (1885–1981).

| Arthur Neville Williams, a fellow pupil, who lived in Cwmafan.

} J. Beynon was a fellow pupil and a talented cricketer.

} Pont, meaning Pontrhydyfen and sometimes written as 'Ponty', Richard's birthplace, about three and a half miles north of Taibach. Gerwyn Owen, eldest child of Dai and Hilda Owen, and Richard's nephew.

| Richard's father, also named Richard Walter Jenkins (1876–1957), and sometimes referred to as 'Dic Bach' (little Dick).

} 'Clearance' refers to the quarterly clearance of personal debt at the Co-op. After clearance, members were allowed to trade again.

} 'D.D.' – Dillwyn Dummer. Jack Williams and Hubert Davies (not David), who both lived in Brook Street, Taibach.

| Edwin Dummer, Elfed James's brother-in-law, who was married to Margaret Ann, and father of Dillwyn. A Mr and Mrs Hopkins ran a baker's shop nearby in Taibach: their son Anthony had been born in 1937.

} Bowditch was a fellow pupil who lived in Margam.

| David Henry Lodwig was a fellow pupil and a talented cricketer.

- ⌋ Eric Nelson, whose family ran a coal merchant's business in Margam.
- ⌋ Mrs Turner was a neighbour in Caradog Street and a member of Noddfa Chapel.
- ⌋ David Rees lived in Taibach. He was to die during active service in the Second World War.
- ⌋ In fact Narvik, in northern Norway, was not taken by Allied forces until 27 May, by which time the situation in France and the Low Countries had become so desperate as to render its capture irrelevant. Accordingly, Allied forces were evacuated from Norway by 7 June.
- ⌋ Presumably 'in [the] cabinet'. Winston Churchill (1874–1965) replaced Neville Chamberlain (1869–1940) as Prime Minister on 10 May 1940 and included in his new cabinet Clement Attlee (1883–1967), Arthur Greenwood (1880–1954), Anthony Eden (1897–1977), Archibald Sinclair (1890–1970), A. V. Alexander (1885–1965) and Chamberlain himself.
- ⌋ Ogmere by Sea is a coastal settlement four miles south of Bridgend, a popular destination for holidaymakers.
- ⌋ Ivor Jones, a fast bowler and first-class cricketer, lived in Brook Street, Taibach.
- ⌋ Rulers of the Sea (1939), directed by Frank Lloyd (1886–1960), starring Douglas Fairbanks Jr. (1909–2000), Will Fyffe (1884–1947) and Margaret Lockwood (1916–90).
- ⌋ Billy Bennett (1887–1942) was a comedian, film actor and monologist.
- ⌋ Uncle Charles Thomas was Richard's mother's brother.
- ⌋ Sandfields, to the immediate north-west of Aberavon, now covered by housing and industrial estates.
- ⌋ 'Archie' Richard Davies.
- ⌋ Maxime Weygand (1897–1965) replaced Maurice Gamelin (1872–1958) as Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces following Gamelin's dismissal on 15 May.
- ⌋ This sentence is written in pencil and in a different hand.
- ⌋ It was presented in modern dress. Trevor George had had a small part in the school's 1939 production of The Doctor's Dilemma.
- ⌋ Bragg (Rich, 34), apparently citing Philip Burton's then unpublished manuscript, misquotes as 'am confident we'll pull through'.
- ⌋ Jake Williams, a fellow pupil, who later became a teacher.
- ⌋ Rydal School, Colwyn Bay. Stanley T. J. Walter, who lived in Abbey Road, Port Talbot, also played full back for Aberavon RFC.
- ⌋ Ynysmeudwy, an industrial settlement two miles north-east of Pontardawe, in the Tawe or Swansea valley.
- ⌋ Rose of Washington Square (1939), directed by Gregory Ratoff (1897–1960), starring Al Jolson (1886–1950).
- ⌋ 'tick' – ticket.
- ⌋ 'Smite' and 'Tadpole' were nicknames given to teachers. 'Tadpole' was Mr Jack Nicholas.
- ⌋ Captain Fury (1939), directed by Hal Roach (1892–1992), starring Brian Aherne (1902–86) in the title role.
- ⌋ Don Parr lived at 10, Mill Row.

- 1 Will Jenkins (1911–86), Richard's brother, had been in the Army for over nine years. He served in the Machine Gun Corps, and would be evacuated from Dunkirk.
- 2 The spelling is Cordey in the local press.
- 3 Tudor was the name of the house in the County School.
- 4 Patrick A. Lane, a fellow pupil and talented athlete, who later rose to a senior position in the National Coal Board.
- 5 The Four Feathers (1939), directed by Zoltan Korda (1895–1961), starring John Clements (1910–88) and Ralph Richardson (1902–83). Richard was later to work for Alexander Korda (1893–1956) and with Ralph Richardson.
- 6 Mountain Ash, a colliery town (1931 population 38,386) in the Cynon valley, 17 miles north-east of Taibach.
- 7 In the sea.
- 8 Private study. Philip Burton, Early Doors: My Life and the Theatre (New York: The Dial Press, 1969), 81, notes that he 'spent most of the summer of 1940 in bed, suffering from a rheumatic complaint that affected the heart'.
- 9 Ken Williams was from Pantdu, and a good cricketer.
- 10 GKB being Guest Keen and Baldwins, the local steel company.
- 11 'Todd' is A. Leslie Evans, a teacher at Central School and a keen local historian.
- 12 Frontier Marshal (1939), directed by Allan Dwan, starring Randolph Scott (1898–1987).
- 13 Pyle, an industrial settlement five miles to the south-east of Taibach.
- 14 Trefelin (sometimes Trevelin) was a school in the Velindre area of Port Talbot, north of the town centre, on the west bank of the Afan. The Ynys cricket ground was at Ynys y Gored, on the east bank of the Afan, between Velindre and Cwmafan.
- 15 The west window of Franchi Bros. confectioners, situated at Huddersfield Buildings, Station Road, Port Talbot, was shattered when a bomb exploded in the street outside. A pair of houses on Tydraw Hill was split in two by another bomb. Nine bombs in all were dropped on Port Talbot, but no one was killed.
- 16 Additional Sunday shifts in the coal industry had been adopted so as to maximize production, although with the fall of France the market for South Wales coal collapsed.
- 17 The gasometer, which actually had been emptied earlier in the war, was a regular target for German attacks.
- 18 Billy Jackson.
- 19 The Ferry meaning Briton Ferry, south of Neath on the east bank of the Nedd and about four miles north-west of Taibach.
- 20 I Am the Law (1938), directed by Alexander Hall (1894–1968), starring Edward G. Robinson (1893–1973). Richard was a great admirer of Robinson.
- 21 The Spitfire was the Royal Air Force's best-known fighter aircraft, heavily used during the Battle of Britain.

- ⌋ Mr J. Vyrnwy Davies, history teacher at the Sec, who later became Headmaster at Dyffryn Comprehensive, and whose nickname was 'Tout', a reference to the distinguished professional historian Thomas Frederick Tout (1855–1929).
- ⌋ Tom or Tommy Lane, also to be involved in the YMCA drama club.
- ⌋ 'Happy' is Mr George M. Hapgood, 'Bobby' is Mr Robert M. Owen. Both were teachers at Port Talbot Secondary School. George Hapgood was a talented amateur actor and appeared in a number of P. H. Burton's productions. He also served as an air raid warden, and as a Flight Commander in the Air Training Corps.
- ⌋ Aberdare, the major town in the Cynon valley (1931 population 48,746), 16 miles north-east of Taibach.
- ⌋ Margam is the area immediately to the south-east of Taibach, including Margam Park.
- ⌋ The air raid sirens sounded on 17 occasions in the Port Talbot area in July 1940.
- ⌋ This may refer to either I'll Give a Million (1938), directed by Walter Lang (1896–1972), starring Warner Baxter (1891–1951) and Peter Lorre (1904–64), or to I Stole a Million (1939), directed by Frank Tuttle (1892–1963) starring George Raft (1895–1980) and Claire Trevor (1909–2000).
- ⌋ The Brombil valley opens out on to the coastal plain at Margam, south of Taibach.
- ⌋ Naughty Marietta (1935), directed by W. S. Van Dyke (1889–1943), starring Jeanette MacDonald (1906–65) and Nelson Eddy (1901–67).
- ⌋ A protective cover.
- ⌋ Duggie Wakefield (1899–1951). Jack Benny. One imagines they were starring in different films.
- ⌋ Dillwyn Dummer had left school to work as a baker's roundsman for the Co-op.
- ⌋ 'Phillip': Brinley Phillips.
- ⌋ Verdun Jenkins (1916–2002), Richard's brother.
- ⌋ The Arsenal Stadium Mystery (1939), directed by Thorold Dickinson (1903–84), starring Leslie Banks (1890–1952).
- ⌋ The Flying Deuces (1939), directed by Edward Sutherland (1895–1973), starring Stan Laurel (1890–1965) and Oliver Hardy (1892–1957).
- ⌋ Q Planes (1939), directed by Tim Whelan (1893–1957), starring Ralph Richardson and Laurence Olivier (1907–89). Richard was to become a good friend of Olivier.
- ⌋ Charles Hockin, a friend of Richard's, who later became a schoolmaster in Taibach.
- ⌋ George Henry Bragg was caretaker/manager of the public baths (erected in 1900 but refurbished or rebuilt in 1938) on Forge Road.
- ⌋ Susie Preece was a fellow pupil at Port Talbot Secondary School. She would later be Richard's girlfriend.
- ⌋ Richard's brother David.
- ⌋ Where's That Fire? (1939), directed by Marcel Varnel (1894–1947), starring Will Hay (1888–1949).
- ⌋ For a while Richard considered joining the police force.
- ⌋ Cassie is Richard's sister Catherine (1921–2011).
- ⌋ In 1940 the summer holiday was reduced to three weeks, to compensate for the fact that school hours were

- shortened (from 0945 to 1545) as a result of the blackout.
-] Year V was divided into two forms: Vm and Vt.
 -] Gerwyn Williams (1924–2009) was already capped at rugby football by Wales at under-15 level and went on to win 13 senior caps between 1950 and 1954, including one against New Zealand in the victory of 1953. He was also a talented cricketer who represented South Wales.
 -] Mr V. Davies, brother of J. Vyrnwy Davies or ‘Tout’.
 -] A form of basketball.
 -] Juarez (1939), directed by William Dieterle (1893–1972), starring Brian Aherne, Bette Davis (1908–89), Paul Muni (1896–1967) and John Garfield.
 -] P. Burton (Richard and Philip, 14) quotes this line but misdates it as Wednesday 25 August.
 -] The Goytre valley, today known as Cwm Dyffryn, opens out on to the coastal plain at the northern end of Taibach.
 -] Over 1,000 incendiary bombs were dropped on Swansea in the most serious attack in the area until then. High Street station was badly damaged. The death toll was actually 33, although another 100 people were injured.
 -] Skewen is on the west bank of the Nedd, two miles from Neath itself. The oil refinery was at Llandarcy, south-west of Skewen. The fires continued for four days, and smoke drifted as far as Cardiff.
 -] Barrage balloons were used in an attempt to defend Swansea Bay from air attack.
 -] D. A. Cochlin, a fellow pupil.
 -] ‘Mitch’ is a colloquial expression for playing truant.
 -] ‘Stand off half’ often referred to today as ‘fly half’ or ‘outside half’. Elwyn Bowen was a talented athlete.
 -] In the back row, often referred to as a ‘flank forward’ or ‘flanker’ today.
 -] Thomas H. (often ‘Tom’ or ‘Tommy’) Mainwaring, a friend of Richard's.
 -] Stanley Jones, a fellow pupil and a talented athlete, who lived in Cwmafan.
 -] Richard Dix (1894–1949) and Richard Greene (1918–85) both featured in the 1939 films Man of Conquest and Here I Am Stranger.
 -] ‘matric’ refers to the School Certificate examination of the Central Welsh Board. Eventually, in September 1943, after a brief hiatus in his formal education, Richard would pass this examination.
 -] ‘23rd’ in circle, written in pencil, above deleted ‘16’. It would appear that Richard transposed the entries for the two weeks concerned but only made this obvious on the Monday (the first day of the week to view) in both cases.
 -] Mr Mervyn Sanderson, a teacher, who also ran a dancing school.
 -] Richard played the part of the American Ambassador Mr Vanhattan in The Apple Cart (1929) by George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950), produced and directed by Philip Burton, which would be staged by the Port Talbot Secondary School players in January 1941. In previous years Burton had produced a number of Shaw's plays at the school, including Captain Brassbound's Conversion, Saint Joan and The Doctor's Dilemma. The Apple Cart was the players’ 14th production. Because of blackout restrictions and safety

- regulations it had to be staged in the YMCA rather than in the school hall. See also Burton, Early Doors, 39–41.
- └ Burton (Richard and Philip, 15) quotes this as ‘who had been educated’.
 - └ Whitchurch is an affluent suburb in north-west Cardiff.
 - └ ‘16th’ in circle, written in pencil, above deleted ‘23’.
 - └ ‘Ginger’ was Gerwyn Williams.
 - └ Both try lines should have been the same length. The maximum permissible was 75 yards.
 - └ Simeon Jones was an (older) fellow pupil who acted the part of Cutler Walpole in The Doctor's Dilemma.
 - └ Morgan ‘Mog’ Griffiths, a fellow pupil, who was to have the role of King Magnus in The Apple Cart.
 - └ Joe James, a fellow pupil and talented athlete.
 - └ Gerwyn Williams.
 - └ This probably refers to the colliery settlement of Ogmore Vale, in the Ogwr valley north of Bridgend.
 - └ Wing forwards.
 - └ George Bernard Shaw.
 - └ Richard's second reference to his father.
 - └ Interestingly, Bragg (Rich, 35, citing Burton) and Burton (Richard and Philip, 14) have a comma between ‘wanted’ and ‘the same’, which alters the meaning, and they reverse the order from ‘be not wanted’ to ‘not be wanted’. Obviously this is open to differences of emphasis and interpretation, but it would seem to be potentially a case of editorial transformation on the part of Philip Burton.
 - └ Cymalog – today written as Cwm Maelwg, a valley behind Margam Castle.
 - └ This probably refers to Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever (1939), directed by W. S. Van Dyke, starring Mickey Rooney (1920—), or another of the Hardy Family series of films.
 - └ The Luftwaffe's bombing of London in particular had begun in early September 1940 and continued, barely without a pause, until mid November, when the focus shifted to a wider range of targets. The estimate of 3,800 civilian deaths by early November does not seem excessive. In total 13,596 civilians were killed as a result of enemy action in the London civil defence region (admittedly more extensive than the city itself) in the course of 1940.
 - └ Anderson shelters for individual households had arrived in the district in September.
 - └ The Hunchback of Notre Dame (1939), directed by William Dieterle, starring Charles Laughton (1899–1962).
 - └ The Revd Gwilym Rees MA, of Cardiff, brother of Dr J. Caerau Rees.
 - └ Welsh for ‘full of twang’, or ‘speaking posh’. Cassie had been nursing in England.
 - └ Gethin Matthews is perhaps stretching a point when he argues (Richard Burton, 29) that ‘mae nodiadau Richard yn ei ddyddiadur o 1940 yn dangos yn amlwg ei fod yn rhoi mwy o bwys ar ei ganlyniadau yn y Gymraeg nag mewn unrhyw bwnc arall’ (Richard's notes in his 1940 diary show clearly that he placed more importance on his results in Welsh than in any other subject’ [my translation]).
 - └ Garw School, Pontycymer, a colliery settlement in the Garw valley, north of Bridgend.

- 1 Mr Evans, the physics teacher.
- 2 Cwrdd mawr is Welsh for 'big meeting', in this context a religious gathering.
- 3 Auxiliary Fire Service. 'Nick' was Mr Jack Nicholas.
- 4 Philip Burton was Head of Leisan House.
- 5 Glenys Hare played the part of Queen Jemima in The Apple Cart.
- 6 Roy Vincent, a fellow pupil, also participated in the YMCA dramatic productions.
- 7 Burton is referring here to the 'bevy of ... Cabinet Ministers' who feature in The Apple Cart.
- 8 John Eaton Davies, a fellow pupil from Cwmafan, who later became a teacher.
- 9 Verdun had been disabled in a mining accident, for which he received compensation.
- 10 Terminals meaning end of term examinations.
- 11 Ivor served in the Royal Army Service Corps during the Second World War.
- 12 Nan Morse was a friend, member of Noddfa Chapel, and lived at 1, Constant Road.
- 13 Mr Christopher 'Pop' Reynolds the headmaster had been absent from school through illness. He would retire in 1943.
- 14 The Port Talbot YMCA (chairman: P. H. Burton) was by this time located in its new premises (which had opened in April) on Talbot Road. Its Boys' Club had a membership of about 100 and catered for boys between the ages of 12 and 16.
- 15 Edwina Dummer: the youngest daughter of Margaret Ann and Edwin Dummer.
- 16 'Lord Haw-Haw' was William Joyce (1906–46), who delivered radio broadcasts of Nazi propaganda to British audiences.
- 17 Italian troops had invaded Greece on 28 October 1940 and within a week were being repulsed.
- 18 Trans meaning translation.
- 19 Philip Burton was co-founder of the YMCA amateur dramatic society, and had produced a number of his own plays under their auspices, including Grantown Street (1934) and White Collar (1938). See Burton, Early Doors, 44–51.
- 20 Richard was received into membership of Noddfa Chapel and took his first communion.
- 21 George Dear (sometimes Deer) was a fellow pupil, who later became a teacher of English.
- 22 Edie had a sometimes difficult relationship with her older brother Tom, who disapproved of her smoking.
- 23 Morwen is Morwen Gronow, the daughter of Elfed's sister Ethel.
- 24 Milly Gronow was the sister of Elfed's sister Ethel. She suffered from epilepsy.
- 25 The YMCA had a billiard room with three tables.
- 26 Indianapolis Speedway (1939), directed by Lloyd Bacon, also known as Devil on Wheels.

1960

- 1 The Fifth Column (1960), a television adaptation of the novel by Ernest Hemingway. It screened on 29 January 1960 on CBS in the USA.

- 2 Maximilian Schell (1930—), actor. Schell was to play a part in finding Maria (1961—), who was to be adopted by Elizabeth Taylor in 1962.
- 3 George Rose (1920–88), actor, who was to play the part of first gravedigger in the 1964 production of Hamlet. Betsy von Furstenberg (1931—), actor.
- 4 John Frankenheimer (1930–2002), television and film director.
- 5 Sybil Burton (1929—), Richard's wife.
- 6 Sally Ann Howes (1930—), actor.
- 7 L. Harvey is Burton's friend Laurence Harvey (1928–73), actor, who later that year would star in Butterfield 8 alongside Elizabeth Taylor. Harvey would also appear with Taylor in Night Watch (1973). Hugh Griffith (1912–80), actor and friend of Richard's, who had appeared alongside him in The Last Days of Dolwyn, in the summer 1951 Stratford productions of Henry IV (Part I), The Tempest and Henry V, and in Legend of Lovers in New York in 1951. Hugh French (1910–76), formerly an actor, by this time an agent for Richard. The Hotel Navarro, on Central Park South, New York.
- 8 B. Bogart is Lauren 'Betty' Bacall (1924—), the widow of Humphrey Bogart, who had died in 1957. The production to which Burton refers may have been Goodbye, Charlie, staged on Broadway, in which Lauren Bacall starred.
- 9 PHB is Philip Burton, Richard's former guardian. Su Str is Susan Strasberg (1938–99). Burton and Strasberg had enjoyed a passionate affair in 1957–8.
- 0 K refers to Kate Burton, Richard and Sybil's eldest child (born 1957). J. is Jessica Burton, Richard and Sybil's youngest child (born 1959). W is Wendy, their nurse.
- 1 Peter Brook (1925—), director.
- 2 Jeanne Moreau (1928—), actor.
- 3 Peter Brook was to direct Jeanne Moreau in Seven Days ... Seven Nights (also titled Moderato Cantabile, based on the novel of the same name by Marguerite Duras) in 1960. It is possible that Burton was considering the part of Chauvin, played in due course by Jean-Paul Belmondo (1933—).
- 4 Berenice Weibel, a friend and neighbour in Céligny.
- 5 The chalet that Richard and Sybil had built in the grounds of their house in Céligny.
- 6 Paul Fillistorf, chef and proprietor of Café de la Gare, Céligny.
- 7 René Weibel, Berenice's husband.
- 8 Bernard Greenford, Sybil's brother-in-law, and his daughter Claire.
- 9 Nyon is a small town and port 5 km from Céligny, on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 I hope to learn to ski in ten or two days.
- 1 Villars is a ski resort south-east of the eastern end of Lake Geneva, high above the Rhône valley, in the area known as the Alpes Vaudoises.
- 2 Bretaye is the name of a col and of one of the main skiing areas around Villars.
- 3 At rugby union, at Cardiff Arms Park.
- 4 Dewi Iorwerth Ellis Bebb (1938–96), Welsh rugby player.

- 5 Norman Morgan (1935—), Welsh rugby player, was actually a full-back, not a back-row forward. He kicked one penalty and converted Bebb's try.
- 6 A 'stem Christie' is a particular kind of skiing turn.
- 7 Aigle is a Swiss town near the Rhône valley floor.
- 8 Osian Gwynn Ellis (1928—), Professor of Harp at the Royal Academy of Music, and his wife Rene. Ellis was in Switzerland performing at the invitation of the British Council.
- 9 The match was played at Twickenham.
- 0 There is a casino at Divonne-les-Bains, a French spa town and resort 4 km west of Céligny.
- 1 The Ecumenical Institute located at the Château de Bossey, Bogis-Bossey, 2 km west of Céligny. Burton read poetry, Ellis played the harp.
- 2 Now the Hôtel du Soleil, Céligny.
- 3 Garage Fleury et Cie, Rue du Nant, Geneva.
- 4 Patricia 'Penny' Moyes (1923–2000), author of crime novels featuring the character Henry Tibbett (the first, Dead Men Don't Ski, was published in 1959). She had also translated Jean Anouilh's Leocadia, which as Time Remembered, ran on Broadway in 1957–8 with Richard Burton in the role of Prince Albert. Formerly a personal assistant to Peter Ustinov, she lived at Verbier, a ski resort in the Valais above the Vallée de Bagnes east of Martigny. Burton has definitely written Vervier but he may have made an error.
- 5 Michael Benthall (1919–74), theatre director, and artistic director of the Old Vic, who had directed Burton in Hamlet in Edinburgh in 1953 and at the Old Vic in London in 1953–4, also Burton in Coriolanus (1953–4), Henry V (1955–6), and Othello (1955–6).
- 6 Coppet, 5km south along the shore of Lake Geneva from Céligny.
- 7 Edouard Koessler was a partner with the Genevan bank Bordier & Cie, where Burton banked. He lived in Céligny.
- 8 Une barque is a small boat, so presumably this is a restaurant on a boat on Lake Geneva. There has been but is no longer a La Pergola restaurant at Geneva's Inter Continental Hotel.
- 9 A Swiss bookstore chain.
- 0 Hornblower refers to the series of novels by C. S. Forester (1899–1966).
- 1 Peter Ustinov (1921–2004), actor, author, director, playwright, raconteur. He would act alongside Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor in The Comedians (1967) and Hammersmith is Out (1972), which he also directed. From 1969 he was a Goodwill Ambassador for UNICEF and enlisted the support of Taylor and Burton for UNICEF ventures.
- 2 Jim is James Haszard (died 1994), lawyer, interpreter, whom Penny Moyes subsequently married. Versoix is 10km south along the shore of Lake Geneva from Céligny.
- 3 Tony Richardson (1928–91), director. Richardson and Burton had worked together on the film Look Back in Anger, and were now to collaborate on A Subject of Scandal and Concern (BBC TV, 1960). They would later fall out bitterly in 1968 over Laughter in the Dark. John Osborne (1929–94), playwright,

- actor, writer. Author of Look Back in Anger (play) and co-author of the screenplay for the film starring Burton. Author of A Subject of Scandal and Concern, and later involved in the prelude to the film Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973).
- 4 Presumably a reference to the poet William Butler Yeats (1865–1939).
 - 5 John Ormond (1923–90), Swansea-born director and television producer for the BBC, later an accomplished poet. Burton would narrate Ormond's half-hour documentary Borrowed Pasture which screened on BBC Television in 1960.
 - 6 At Ireland's home ground at Lansdowne Road.
 - 7 Nicholas Ray (1911–79), director. He and Burton had worked together on Bitter Victory (1957).
 - 8 Ray went on to direct King of Kings (1961). Presumably Burton was considering the part of Lucius, which was in due course played by Ron Randell (1918–2005), who also appeared in The Longest Day.
 - 9 Emlyn Williams (1905–87), playwright, actor, director. Emlyn Williams had been critical to Richard Burton's emergence as an actor in Britain in the 1940s. He had cast him in the stage production of The Druid's Rest (1943: Burton's stage debut), and directed him in The Last Days of Dolwyn (1949: Burton's film debut). He married Molly Shan in 1935. In 1952 he had played alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Ivanhoe (1952). In March 1960 he was performing in Geneva, Lausanne and Vevey.
 - 0 The joint christening of Kate and Jessica.
 - 1 David William (real name Williams) (1926–2010), actor and director.
 - 2 Liz Hardy. Former wife of Robert Hardy (1925—), actor.
 - 3 Ivor Jenkins, Richard's brother, and his wife Gwen.
 - 4 Lausanne, Swiss city on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
 - 5 Paul Scofield (1922–2008), actor, and his wife Joy Parker (1924—).
 - 6 Philip Burton.
 - 7 Pierre Folliet was a Genevan lawyer who acted for Burton in Switzerland.
 - 8 Guy Green (1913–2005), cinematographer and director.
 - 9 Different hand; pencilled sad face. Could have been drawn by Sybil.
 - 0 Probably Harvey Orkin (1918–75), theatrical agent, with whom Burton was in correspondence at the time.
 - 1 Presumably Bernard Greenford.
 - 2 Paul Scofield first played the part of Sir Thomas More in the stage production of A Man For All Seasons, written by Robert Bolt (1924–2005), in 1960. It seems likely that this refers to its pre-London tour.
 - 3 Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew, and his first wife Moira.

1965

- 1 Encyclopaedia Britannica.
- 2 Sara Taylor (née Sara Viola Warmbrodt) (1896–1994) Elizabeth's mother. 'Palace Hotel': the Gstaad Palace Hotel.

- 3 John Sullivan was aspiring to a career as a film producer.
- 4 Daliah Lavi (1942—), actor and singer.
- 5 Francis Taylor (1897–1968), Elizabeth's father.
- 6 Grand Hotel Park, Gstaad.
- 7 Natalie Wood (1938–81), actor. 'Young Niven' is David Niven Jr., a talent agent for the William Morris Agency, and son of the actor. He and Natalie Wood were enjoying a brief fling, staying at the Niven family home at Château d'Oex, 15 km west of Gstaad.
- 8 Tuberculosis.
- 9 Hostellerie Chesery, Gstaad.
- 0 Berne or Bern, Switzerland. Saanen is 3 km west of Gstaad. A permit de séjour was an official document required by non-Swiss nationals.
- 1 Burton had been ranked 10th in the Motion Picture Herald list of the top box-office stars in America, Taylor 11th.
- 2 Gaston Sanz was Burton's driver and bodyguard. HÔtel Le Meurice, Rue de Rivoli, Paris. Lancaster Hotel, Rue de Berri, Paris.
- 3 André 'Bobo' Besançon, the caretaker and housekeeper at Pays de Galles (d. 1968).
- 4 The Golden Arrow was a Pullman rail service linking London and Paris.
- 5 John Heyman (1933—) was Burton and Taylor's British agent (as head of the International Artists Agency) and adviser on tax havens. He was also a film producer, having produced the film version of Burton's Hamlet (he also co-produced the stage production in New York) and would produce Boom!, the Taylor film Secret Ceremony and Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
- 6 Burton and Taylor stayed at the Dorchester Hotel, Park Lane, London, while Burton worked on the London filming of The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- 7 Samuel Pepys (1633–1703), English diarist. 'And so to bed' was a phrase Pepys commonly used.
- 8 Louis Alexandre de Raimon (1922–2008) was a renowned Parisian hairdresser, known as Alexandre de Paris. Taylor was one of his regular and most celebrated clients.
- 9 Bermans was a professional costumiers (owned by Monty Berman, 1912–2002), supplying film, television and theatre companies located on Shaftesbury Avenue. Wardour Street, off Oxford Street, central London. Martin or Marty Ritt (1914–90) was producing and directing The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- 0 Oskar Werner (1922–84) played Fiedler in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. Werner was older than Burton by three years!
- 1 Isow's restaurant, Brewer Street, Soho. Claire Bloom (1931—) played Nan Perry in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. She and Burton had played opposite each other in the stage play The Lady's Not for Burning (1949, 1950), in the Old Vic productions in 1953–54 of Hamlet, Twelfth Night, Coriolanus and The Tempest, and in the films Alexander the Great (1956) and Look Back in Anger (1959). They had been lovers during the 1950s.

- 2 Sausages and mashed potato.
- 3 Battersea Park, on the south bank of the River Thames, opposite the Chelsea Embankment. Michael Hordern (1911–95) played the part of Ashe in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. He had played with both Burton and Taylor in The VIPs (1963), would do so again in The Taming of the Shrew (1967), and alongside Burton alone in Where Eagles Dare (1968), Anne of the Thousand Days (1970) and The Medusa Touch (1978). He and Burton had appeared on stage together in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night and The Tempest.
- 4 John Springer (1916–2001) was a publicist who headed the East Coast branch of the Arthur P. Jacobs public relations company, and worked as a press agent for Burton and Taylor. Hugh French was Burton's London agent who also became Taylor's agent, and who later moved to Hollywood.
- 5 Raymond E. Palmer of the Associated Press's London office.
- 6 The Six Bells was at 195–7, King's Road, Chelsea. Peter Sellers (1925–80), actor. Burton was to make a fleeting appearance in the Sellers film What's New Pussycat?
- 7 Paddington station is the terminal for railway lines entering London from Wales and the west of England.
- 8 Taylor underwent minor surgery of an undisclosed nature. From the evidence of her note on 6 May it might have been something gynaecological.
- 9 Mansion House tube station is on the District and Circle lines, located on Cannon Street. Telegraph buildings were the offices of the Daily Telegraph and Sunday Telegraph, then on Fleet Street.
- 0 Mirror Building was the offices of the Daily Mirror and Sunday Mirror.
- 1 South Kensington tube station.
- 2 Mirabelle, Curzon Street, Piccadilly, London.
- 3 Peter Glenville (1913–96), stage and film director. He had directed Burton in Becket and would direct him again in The Comedians. Hardy William ('Bill') Smith (d. 2001) was a theatrical producer, and Glenville's lover. Glenville had also sacked Richard from Adventure Story in 1949.
- 4 Reflections in a Golden Eye was to be made in 1967, starring Taylor and Marlon Brando (1924–2004), directed by John Huston (1906–87), based on the novel by Carson McCullers (1917–67).
- 5 La Méditerranée Place de l'Odéon, Paris.
- 6 Rolls-Royce.
- 7 Bangs: a hairstyle involving fringes across the forehead.
- 8 Baron Elie de Rothschild (1917–2007), financier.
- 9 Hôtellerie du Bas Breau, Barbizon, Fontainebleau, France.
- 0 Hôtellerie de la Poste, Avallon, Yonne, France.
- 1 Chateau de la Rochepot, south of Breau, Côte d'Or.
- 2 The Man Who Would Be King, based on the short story by Rudyard Kipling (1865–1936), which would eventually appear in 1975 starring Sean Connery (1930—) and Michael Caine (1933—).
- 3 Ray Stark (1915–2004), producer, 7 Arts films. He was to produce Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- 4 The Emperor Napoleon (1769–1821), on escaping from exile on Elba, stayed at the Hôtel de la Poste,

- Saulieu, before his confrontation with Marshal Ney (1769–1815) at Auxerre, some 90km to the north-west, on 14 March 1815.
- 5 La Côte d'Or, Saulieu.
- 6 Literally, 'honeymoon'.
- 7 Hôtel de France, Chalon-sur-Saône. The Copperhouse is a pub in Cwmafan. The Savoy Hotel, the Strand, London, is a five-star establishment.
- 8 Auberge Bressanne, Chalon-sur-Saône.
- 9 The town of Nantua, west of Geneva.
- 0 This refers to Taylor's house, the Chalet Ariel, at Gstaad. Sold in 2001 'Chateau De C' may mean Chateau D'Oex.
- 1 Michael Wilding (1953—) and Christopher Wilding (1955—): Elizabeth's two sons by her marriage to Michael Wilding Sr (1912–79). Liza Todd (1957—), Elizabeth's daughter by her marriage to Mike Todd (1907–58).
- 2 'Woolf' refers to the script of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? that Burton and Taylor were to film (later that year). Initially, in 1964, Taylor had been approached to act the part of Martha. Subsequently it was agreed that Burton would also play the part of George.
- 3 Hotel Olden, Gstaad.
- 4 The Hotel Alte Post, Weissenburg, near Darstetten. Weissenburg is 30 km from Gstaad.
- 5 A dice game, this version using poker dice.
- 6 The Côte d'Azur, or French Riviera, on the Mediterranean coast of south-east France.
- 7 Gstaad is 1,100 m above sea level.
- 8 St Tropez, Provence, France.
- 9 Yahtzee, a dice game, first released in 1965.
- 0 Elie de Rothschild.
- 1 Paul Neshamkin was the children's tutor.
- 2 L'Abbaye is in Talloires, on the eastern shore of Lac d'Annecy, Haute Savoie, France. Cassius Clay, later Muhammad Ali (1942—), knocked out Sonny Liston (1932–71) in controversial circumstances in a world heavyweight championship bout in Lewiston, Maine, USA, on 25 May 1965.
- 3 L'Auberge du Père Bise at Talloires.
- 4 Poularde de bresse is a celebrated chicken dish.
- 5 The Penguin Book of Contemporary Verse, selected with an introduction and notes by Kenneth Allott (1912–73), published in 1950.
- 6 Postcards.
- 7 Villa La Reine Jeanne, Les Baux de Provence, Provence. South of Avignon.
- 8 Probably L'Oustau de Baumanière, Les Baux.
- 9 Commandant Paul-Louis Weiller (1893–1993), aviator, engineer, industrialist and philanthropist. Owner of the Villa La Reine Jeanne, built for him in 1928.

- 0 'Burt': one of Burton's many nicknames for Taylor.
- 1 Charlie Chaplin (1889–1977), actor; other famous family members and actors include Sydney (1885–1965), Charles's older brother; Sydney Earl (1926–2009) Charles's son; and Geraldine (1944—) his daughter. Merle Oberon (1911–79), actor; Margot Fonteyn (1919–91), ballerina.
- 2 Le Lavandou, east of Toulon.
- 3 Possibly the liqueur Poire William.
- 4 The Ile de Porquerolles is an island just off the French coast, south of Hyères.
- 5 The novel A Clergyman's Daughter (1935) by George Orwell (1903–50).
- 6 Bathing costume.
- 7 Richard Grenier (1923–2002), newspaper correspondent, screenwriter, and novelist. Yes and Back Again, novel, (1966).
- 8 Probably Bormes-les-Mimosas, inland from Le Lavandou.
- 9 Richard (often 'Dick') Hanley (1909–71) was Taylor's secretary, who became press secretary for both Burton and Taylor. He had been Mike Todd's secretary's assistant. He performed a wide variety of tasks for the Burton/Taylor household, including helping to look after the children.
- 0 A Yiddish expression conveying shock or amazement. Often written 'oy gevalt'.
- 1 Hôtel Les Roches Fleuries at Aiguebelle, east along the coast from Le Lavandou.
- 2 Kleenex: tissues.
- 3 This refers to the second manned spaceflight by the US spacecraft Gemini 4. The astronauts were James Alton McDivitt (1929—) and Edward Higgins White (1930–67). White was the first American to walk in space.
- 4 Alexander the Great.
- 5 Rex Harrison (1908–90) had played Julius Caesar in Cleopatra and would play alongside Richard Burton in Staircase (1969).
- 6 Moules marinières: mussels.
- 7 Hôtel du Cap-Eden-Roc, Antibes, on the Cap d'Antibes, west of Nice.
- 8 Richard's former wife Sybil married the musician Jordan Christopher (born Jordan Zankoff, Youngstown, Ohio, 1942–96), lead singer of The Wild Ones.
- 9 'Tidy' is a South Walian colloquialism (in this context) for 'decent', 'good'.
- 0 The mistral is a strong wind associated with the Provence region.
- 1 Michel Jazy (1936—), silver medallist in the 1500m at the Rome Olympics in 1960, set a new world record for the mile of 3 min. 53.6 sec. on 9 June 1965. Le Figaro is a French daily newspaper.
- 2 Aaron Frosch (1925–89), Richard's lawyer.
- 3 Roddy McDowall (1928–98), actor, friend of Richard, Sybil and Elizabeth. He had played alongside Burton in an adaptation of The Tempest for NBC television in 1960, also in the New York production of Camelot (1960–1), had shared a villa with Richard and Sybil in Rome during the making of Cleopatra, and had had a part in The Longest Day.

- 4 Helen Greenford (b. 1941): Sybil's niece, daughter of her half-sister Linda, who had married Bernard Greenford.
- 5 Philip Burton had moved to the USA in 1954.
- 6 La Paillotte, Avenue Gavine, Hyères.
- 7 Leï Mouscardins, 1 Rue de Portalet, St Tropez, east along the coast from Le Lavandou.
- 8 Carlton Hotel, Cannes, just west of Antibes.
- 9 The editor of the Sunday Mirror at the time was Michael Christiansen (1926–84).
-] Hôtel du Cap Eden Roc, Antibes.
-] 'Bea' interlined. Bea was the children's governess. Nice is a short distance east of Antibes.
-] Juan les Pins, between Antibes and Cannes.
-] Christian Dior the fashion house.
-] Dick being Dick Hanley.
-] The SS Michelangelo, a liner built for the North Atlantic crossing in 1962.
-] Burton had previously travelled on the Cunard Lines' Queen Mary.
-] Quogue, Long Island. Home of Aaron Frosch.
-] Irv 'Kup' Kupcinet (1912–2003), newspaper columnist and television talk show host, married to Esther 'Essee' Solomon (d. 2001). The Pump Room, restaurant, in the Ambassador East Hotel, Chicago.
-] Hermes Pan (1910–90), American choreographer and dancer, who worked closely with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and who had been the choreographer for Cleopatra.
-] Constantine Fitzgibbon, The Life of Dylan Thomas (1965). Burton, who had been a friend of Thomas, would write a review of this volume for the New York Herald Tribune.
-] Pomona, Los Angeles.
-] A pet.
-] Scandia restaurant, Sunset Boulevard.
-] Mike Nichols (1931—), at this point renowned as a theatre director. He was to make his directorial debut on film with Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1966). Rosemary Forsyth (sometimes Forsythe, Forsyth-Yuro) (1944–), actor.
-] Their Yorkshire Terrier.
-] John Lee, Dick Hanley's secretary.
-] A district to the immediate west of Beverly Hills.
-] 'Their father': Michael Wilding Sr, actor and agent. 'Maggie': Dame Margaret Leighton (1922–76), by this time married to Michael Wilding Sr, and who would appear with Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
-] Dr Rexford Kennamer, a doctor at the Hollywood Presbyterian hospital, often treated Taylor and Burton when they were in California. He had met Taylor at the time of Montgomery Clift's car accident in 1956, and had become part of Taylor's wider entourage, occasionally accompanying her on trips abroad, including to Rome during the filming of Cleopatra. He was physician to many famous Hollywood stars.
-] Valerie Douglas, at this time Burton's publicist in Beverly Hills.

1966

- 1 In this diary Burton enters where he is writing from on most days. Here only the initial change of location will be entered.
- 2 Franco Zeffirelli, director of The Taming of the Shrew. Irene Sharaff (1910–93), Elizabeth Taylor's costume designer for the film, who had also been costume designer for Cleopatra and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Richard F. McWhorter, executive producer for the film, had been assistant to the producer on both The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and Becket.
- 3 The Taming of the Shrew.
- 4 Vittorio De Sica (1901–74), director. De Sica would direct Burton in The Voyage.
- 5 Edward Albee (1928—), playwright, author of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?
- 6 Hotel Ranieri, Via Venti Settembre. Albee's partner at this time was William Pennington.
- 7 Albee's A Delicate Balance would win the Pulitzer Prize in 1966.
- 8 Tiny Alice; play by Albee, premiered 1964.
- 9 Paparazzi – press photographers.
- 0 Ugo Betti (1892–1953), The Queen and the Rebels (1951).
- 1 Umberto D.; film by Vittorio De Sica, 1952.
- 2 A glass shot is the shooting of a scene through glass which may have been painted to represent, for example, scenery.
- 3 Robert Haggia (1913–2009), film producer, who would make Candy with Burton in 1968.
- 4 Via Vittorio Veneto.
- 5 The Trial of Stephen Ward (1964).
- 6 Memoirs by Harry S. Truman: Year of Decisions (vol. 1, 1955); Years of Trial and Hope (vol. 2, 1956).
- 7 Harold Wilson (1916–95) called a general election in order to secure a larger Labour majority.
- 8 'Tory press' meaning those supporting the Conservative Party. The Daily Mirror supported the Labour Party.
- 9 Labour won 363 seats at the election, increasing its majority in the House of Commons from 4 to 96 seats.
- 0 Lhasa Apso: a breed of dog.
- 1 Rudolph Nureyev (1938–93), ballet dancer.
- 2 Luigi Barzini, The Italians: A Full Length Portrait (1964).
- 3 Erik Belton Evers Bruhn (1929–86), ballet dancer.
- 4 Les Sylphides, the ballet.
- 5 The Little Bar is just off the Via Sistina on Via Gregoriana.
- 6 Ron Berkeley was Richard's make-up man on many films, including Taming of the Shrew. Vicky Tiel (1943—) was at this time a clothes and costume designer who had worked on What's New Pussycat?, and who would design clothes and costumes for other films involving Burton, including Candy and Bluebeard. Berkeley and Tiel would marry in 1971, and divorce in 1986. At this point Tiel was on the

- verge of establishing herself as a significant fashion designer, with a boutique in Paris.
- 7 Switzerland.
 - 8 Lido di Ostia, 30 km west of Rome.
 - 9 E'en So: Burton and Taylor's Pekinese.
 - 0 The Silencers (1966), directed by Phil Karlson (1908–85), starring Dean Martin (1917–95).
 - 1 Wales beat France 9–8 at Cardiff.
 - 2 'Goodness Gracious Me!' was the title of a single released by Peter Sellers and Sophia Loren (1934—) in 1960; it reached no 4 in the charts. Loren would later co-star with Burton in The Voyage and Brief Encounter.
 - 3 Anglo, ridden by Tim Norman and trained by Fred Winter.
 - 4 Cardiff (1914–2009), cinematographer and director, had worked with Robert Haggia on The Barefoot Contessa (1954).
 - 5 Sons and Lovers, (1960) remains his best known film as director. It won an Oscar for cinematography, and was nominated in six other categories, included Best Director.
 - 6 The 'solarization' process using a so-called 'magic box', was to be utilized in Cardiff's 1968 film, Girl on a Motorcycle.
 - 7 There is today a Ristorante Le Streghe, on the Via Tuscalona, about 2km from the Cinecitta studios in Rome.
 - 8 A prominent and historic Italian family.
 - 9 Larry: Laurence Olivier. John: Sir John Gielgud (1904–2000), actor and director, friend of Richard Burton, whom he had directed in The Lady's Not for Burning (1949, 1950), The Boy with a Cart (1950), Hamlet (1964) and with whom he had acted and would again act (Becket, Wagner). 'always the pouffs' is presumably a derogatory reference to male homosexuals.
 - 0 A version of the line spoken by Lady Macbeth of Duncan, in Macbeth Act V, scene i: 'Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?'
 - 1 'Snapshot': one of Richard's nicknames for Elizabeth.
 - 2 FZ: Franco Zeffirelli.
 - 3 'Shumdit' was another nickname Richard had for Elizabeth.
 - 4 Mike Todd Jr (1929–2002), the son of Mike Todd by his marriage to Bertha Freeman (1927–46). Around the World of Mike Todd would screen in September 1968.
 - 5 The covering of the Spanish Steps or Piazza di Spagna with flowers is an annual ritual in spring.
 - 6 Possibly the Vineria Il Chianti, Via del Lavatore.
 - 7 Porto Santa Stefano is on the Promontorio dell'Argentario, some 125km from Rome. Burton and Taylor had spent a fraught weekend there in April 1962 during their affair. Burton returns to discuss that weekend's events in his diary for 13 August 1971.
 - 8 Charles Herbert Beal (1908–91), jazz pianist.
 - 9 Agnes Flanagan was Elizabeth's hairdresser on Taming of the Shrew and would repeat this role for Doctor

Faustus. Frank Flanagan was her husband. Frank La Rue was Elizabeth's make-up man for Taming of the Shrew and for a number of other films.

0 Ristorante L'Escargot, Via Appia Antica, Rome.

1 Cyril Cusack (1910–93) was playing the part of Grumio. He had played alongside Richard in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and would do so again in Tristan and Isolde. Victor Spinetti (1933–2012), a Welsh actor, was playing the part of Hertensio.

2 'Cantank' is another nickname for Elizabeth Taylor.

3 Mia Farrow (1945—), who was to act alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Secret Ceremony.

4 Kenneth Tynan (1927–80), theatre critic, journalist, literary manager at the National Theatre (1963–73). Truman Capote (1924–84), author. Tynan had reviewed and known Burton since the beginnings of his stage career. Capote was a friend of Taylor.

5 Tynan's hostile Observer review (13 March 1966) of Capote's In Cold Blood (1965) provoked Capote into a reply (27 March 1966).

6 Barry Norman (1933—), film critic and, at this time, show business editor of the Daily Mail, in which the interview appeared.

7 Curettage: a surgical procedure using a curette, a small instrument like a scoop. A rather old-fashioned method of inducing an abortion, but also (and, it seems likely, in this case) a therapeutic procedure that may improve chances of future conception.

8 Welsh for 'Thanks be to Him / For ever remembering the dust of the earth', a line from the hymn 'Diolch iddo'.

9 The first, unedited film sequence.

0 Michael Hordern was playing the part of Baptista. Alan Webb (1906–82) was playing the part of Gremio.

1 To finagle – to fiddle etc.

2 Joshua Logan (1908–88), director. He was to direct a film version of Camelot starring Richard Harris (1932–2002) for Warner Bros which appeared in 1967.

3 Garmisch, a ski resort in Bavaria.

4 Thomas Babington Macaulay, 1st Baron Macaulay (1800–59), who is credited with the response (at the age of four), after having hot coffee spilt on his legs: 'Thank you, madam, the agony is abated'.

5 Milton 'Mickey' Rudin (1920–99), lawyer with Gang, Tyre, Rudin and Brown of Sunset Building, Hollywood. His client list included Elizabeth Taylor and Frank Sinatra. Burton had been using the firm since the early 1960s if not before.

6 Nevill Coghill (1899–1980), academic. Coghill, then fellow and tutor in English Literature at Exeter College, Oxford, had directed Burton in the 1944 production of Measure for Measure and had remained a friend ever since. Coghill, from 1957 to 1966 Merton Professor of English Literature at Oxford, would co-direct Doctor Faustus with Richard, having written the screen adaptation.

7 Bach gan – bachgen – Welsh for 'boy'.

8 The London Adventure (1924) was the third and final part of the autobiography of the Welsh writer Arthur

- Machen (1863–1947).
- 9 At the Basilica San Pietro (St Peter's).
 - 0 'Why so pale and wan, fond lover?' is the opening line of 'Why so Pale and Wan' by Sir John Suckling (1609–42).
 - 1 Michael York (real name Michael Hugh Johnson) (1942—) was playing the part of Lucentio. He had read English at Oxford University and had worked with Franco Zeffirelli in the National Theatre prior to making his screen debut in The Taming of the Shrew.
 - 2 Luna Park – Rome's amusement park and funfair.
 - 3 Ambrose Coghill would play the part in the film of Doctor Faustus (1968) of Avarice/First Professor.
 - 4 George Henry Lewes (1817–78), On Actors and the Art of Acting (1875).
 - 5 Columbia Pictures were financing The Taming of the Shrew.
 - 6 Zero meaning Zeffirelli.
 - 7 A reference to John Bartlett, Familiar Quotations, which first appeared in 1855. 'Fag' here being short for 'faggot', a derogatory term for a homosexual.
 - 8 It is possible that Burton is making a reference here to Sharaff's homosexuality.
 - 9 Mike Frankovich (1909–92), film producer.
 - 0 Richard is here referring to Robert Traill Spence Lowell (1917–77), the American poet. Lowell's daughter Harriet was born on 4 January 1957, making her the same age as Liza Todd.
 - 1 Enzo: presumably the housekeeper or caretaker.
 - 2 Wolf Mankovitz (1924–98), writer, was to write the screenplay for Faustus and also work on The Battle of Sutjeska.
 - 3 Burton means Tommy Thompson (1933–82), journalist with Life.
 - 4 W. H. Auden (1907–73), poet. About the House (1965).
 - 5 Pamela Brown (1917–75) had played alongside both Burton and Taylor in Cleopatra, Burton in Becket (1964) and would play alongside Taylor in Secret Ceremony (1968). She had also acted with Burton in the stage production of The Lady's Not for Burning (1949). Sally Wilson (d. 1967) was the wife of Bob Wilson (b. 1905), Richard Burton's dresser and assistant.
 - 6 Dave Crowley (1910–74), former British lightweight boxing champion, occasional film actor, and proprietor of 'Le Pub'.
 - 7 Maureen Cusack (died 1977) was Cyril's wife.
 - 8 Alfred Lynch (1931–2003), playing the part of Tranio, and Roy Holder (1946—), playing the part of Biondello.
 - 9 Paul Dehn (1912–76), screenwriter for Taming of the Shrew. He had also written The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
 - 0 Natasha Pyne (1946—) was playing the part of Bianca.
 - 1 Kurt Frings (1908–91) was Taylor's Hollywood agent.
 - 2 The Bible: In the Beginning (1966), directed by John Huston and produced by Dino de Laurentiis (1919–

- 2010).
- 3 Gore Vidal (1925–2012), novelist, playwright, essayist and satirist.
 - 4 Princess Virginia Carolina Theresa Pancrazia Galdina von Fürstenberg (1940—), and Patrick O'Neal (1927–94) were making the film Matchless (1967) in Italy at the time.
 - 5 Hotel Fontanella Borghese on the Via della Fontanella di Borghese.
 - 6 Stephen Grimes (1927–88), had been the (Academy Award nominated) art director on The Night of the Iguana and was also to work on Reflections in a Golden Eye.
 - 7 Arglwydd Mawr, Welsh literally for ‘great lord’, but equivalent here to ‘good lord’ or ‘god in heaven’.
 - 8 Ossie is Oswald Morris (1915—), Director of Photography on The Taming of the Shrew, who had also been photographer on Look Back in Anger, director of photography on The Spy Who Came in from the Cold, and who would be director of photography on Equus. Elaine is Elaine Schreyeck (1924—), responsible for continuity on The Taming of the Shrew, who would perform the same role for Doctor Faustus. She had been a script supervisor on Cleopatra, and responsible for continuity on Alexander the Great.
 - 9 Michael Cacoyannis (or Kakogiannis) (1922—), filmmaker.
 -] La Lupa; play by Giovanni Verga, 1896. Anna Magnani (1907–73), actor.
 -] ‘Undonog’ – Welsh for monotonous.
 -] Petruchio's speech in Act II, scene i, including the lines, ‘Say that she rail, why then I'll tell her plain / She sings as sweetly as a nightingale’.
 -] Tuesday was the 24th.
 -] Corsetti's is an apartment complex at Tor Vaianica, on the coast some 30km south of Rome.
 -] Henry Cooper (1934–2011) fought the world champion Cassius Clay (later Muhammad Ali) at Arsenal Stadium on 21 May 1966, Clay stopping Cooper in the sixth round. Burton and Taylor had attended the first (non-title) fight between Cooper and Clay at Wembley Stadium in London in 1963, in which Clay had stopped Cooper in the fifth.
 -] Carlo is probably Carlo Lastricati (1921—), Assistant Director on Taming of the Shrew, who would also fill this role on Boom! and The Assassination of Trotsky. But also working on the film were Carlo Fabianelli, an editor (who was also to work on Doctor Faustus), and Carlo Savina, the conductor.
 -] Russell Braddon (1921–95), novelist, journalist and broadcaster, was to publish ‘Richard Burton to Liz’ in the Saturday Evening Post, 3 December 1966. His most famous book was The Naked Island (1952), an account of his time as a Japanese prisoner of war.
 -] Sir John Guthrie Ward (1909—) was British Ambassador to Italy from 1962 to 1966. His wife was Daphne Norah Ward (née Mulholland (1915–83).
 -] Bosley Crowther (1905–81), film critic for the New York Times from 1940 to 1967, and his wife Florence (née Marks).
 -] ‘Booby’: one of Richard's nicknames for Elizabeth.
 - , Joseph E. Levine (1905–87), film producer and promoter.

- ⌋ OUDS: Oxford University Dramatic Society.
- ⌋ Rolle, on the north shore of Lake Geneva between Nyon and Lausanne, is the location of Institut Le Rosey, the prestigious boarding school attended by Michael and Christopher Wilding.
- ⌋ Joe Roddy had written an article, 'Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton: The Night of the Brawl', which had appeared in Look on 8 February 1966.
- ⌋ McCall's: an American monthly magazine aimed at women readers.
- ⌋ Malheureusement: French for unfortunately.
- ⌋ Frascati, the important wine-growing area to the south-east of Rome.
- ⌋ Bon Appetito is presumably a nickname for Taylor.
- ⌋ A Bloody Mary is a vodka based cocktail usually including tomato juice, lemon juice and a dash of Worcestershire sauce or Tabasco.
- ⌋ Agatha Christie (1890–1976), a prolific author of detective fiction. Burton had played the part of the detective Hercule Poirot in a production of Christie's Alibi while a schoolboy in Port Talbot.
- ⌋ A reference to the Divina Commedia by Dante Alighieri (1265–1321).
- ⌋ Montgomery Clift (1920–66), actor. He had starred alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Suddenly Last Summer (1959) and had been due to act in Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- ⌋ The Grande Raccordo Anulare is a motorway encircling Rome.
- ⌋ Nicholas Young was Technical Assistant on Faustus.
- ⌋ Roderick Mann (1922–2010), then film critic with the Sunday Express.
- ⌋ Darryl Francis Zanuck, (1902–79), a major American film mogul, at this time Executive President of Twentieth Century-Fox, and a man with whom Burton's career had been intertwined since the early 1950s. Zanuck had launched litigation against Burton and Taylor after Cleopatra, alleging that their affair had damaged the film's commercial prospects. The case was eventually dropped.
- ⌋ Peter Evans (1938—), journalist, biographer and novelist.
- ⌋ David Frost (1939—), broadcast journalist, at this time producing The Frost Report for the BBC. Frost had had a cameo part as himself in The V.I.P.s.
- ⌋ Zeffirelli's production of Samuel Barber's (1910–81) opera Antony and Cleopatra was first performed on 16 September at the opening of the new Metropolitan Opera House in New York. It was not well received.
- ⌋ Peter Evans's biography, Peter Sellers: The Mask Behind the Mask, appeared in 1968.
- ⌋ Two of Richard's sisters died in infancy, one in 1903 and the other in 1908. Both were named Margaret Hannah.
- ⌋ Ron, Richard's brother-in-law.
- ⌋ Andreas Teuber, actor: formerly an undergraduate at St John's College, Oxford, he had played the part of Mephistophilis in the OUDS production of Doctor Faustus earlier in the year, and was now playing the same part (albeit titled Mephistopheles) in the film version. He has since gone on to a distinguished career as a philosopher.

- 1 Artist and cartoonist William Hogarth (1697–1764), whose depictions of individuals were often unflattering.
- 2 Lionel Davidson, A Long Way to Shiloh (1966), a thriller.
- 3 Hugh Wray McCann, Utmost Fish (1965), a work of fiction (albeit based on a true incident), set during the First World War.
- 4 Randolph S. Churchill, Winston S. Churchill, Vol. I: Youth, 1874–1900 (1966).
- 5 'The Child is father of the man': a line from the poem 'My Heart Leaps Up When I Behold' (1802), by William Wordsworth (1770–1850).
- 6 Richard was considering the part of Napoleon in Waterloo (1970), eventually played by Rod Steiger (1925–2002), who, like Richard, had appeared in The Longest Day. They would both appear in Breakthrough (1979).
- 7 Reflections in a Golden Eye appeared in 1967, directed by John Huston, produced by Ray Stark and starring Marlon Brando and Elizabeth Taylor.
- 8 This became the film A Guide for the Married Man (1967), directed by Gene Kelly (1912–96) and starring Walter Matthau (1920–2000).
- 9 Burton means Prosper Mérimée's Carmen, (1845).
- 10 The official cause of death was 'occlusive coronary artery disease', although it is thought that addiction to alcohol and drugs exacerbated Clift's health problems.
- 11 Lorenzo James was Clift's secretary.
- 12 The part of Lucifer was played by David McIntosh and that of Belzebug by Jeremy Eccles.
- 13 Lionel Davidson (1922–2009) at this point had published two other books (under that name): The Night of Wenceslas (1960) and The Rose of Tibet (1962), both of which had been very well received.
- 14 His past knowledge of Italian had been presumably acquired when in Rome shooting Cleopatra.
- 15 Basil Fenton Smith (sometimes hyphenated as Fenton-Smith) had been sound mixer on Sea Wife, 'sound' on The Night of the Iguana and would perform that role again for Reflections in a Golden Eye. He would be sound recordist for Candy. Dave Hildyard (1916–2008) had been sound mixer on The Taming of the Shrew and was performing that role again for Faustus. He would later be 'sound' on Breakthrough. Robert L. Jacks (1927–87) was a film producer who had worked with Burton on The Desert Rats and was the son-in-law of Darryl F. Zanuck.
- 16 Gwydion Thomas (1945—) who played 'Lechery' and 'Third Scholar' in Doctor Faustus was the son of the Welsh poet R. S. Thomas (1913–2000).
- 17 Ronald A. Lublin (1918–2004), film producer. Lawrence George Durrell (1912–90), poet, novelist, dramatist. Oedipus the King was made into a film in 1968, although Durrell is not credited as a scriptwriter.
- 18 Carl Foreman (1914–84) would produce MacKenna's Gold (1968) starring Gregory Peck (1916–2003) and Omar Sharif (1932—).
- 19 This is a paraphrase of the lines spoken by the character Sir Stephen Scroop in Shakespeare's Richard II,

- Act III, scene ii: 'Sweet love, I see, changing his property,/Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate', and of the line spoken by the character Zara in Act III Scene viii of William Congreve's The Mourning Bride (1697) 'Heaven has no rage like love to hatred turned, Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned'.
- ⌋ A part played by Elizabeth Taylor.
 - ⌋ The Fixer (1966) by Bernard Malamud (1914–86). It won the National Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction.
 - ⌋ Federico Fellini (1920–93), director.
 - ⌋ On 24 September De Laurentiis had begun to take legal action against Fellini over the future of the film project Il viaggio di G. Mastorna. This dispute would be resolved early in 1967, although the film was never made.
 - ⌋ Vanessa Redgrave (1937—), actor. Married to Tony Richardson from 1962 to 1967, she was to play alongside Richard Burton in Wagner (1983).
 - ⌋ Burton means Neil Hartley (1916–94).
 - ⌋ The 'Greek gigolo' was Thodoros 'Theo' Roubanis, in 1967 to become the third husband of Lady Sarah Consuelo Spencer-Churchill (1921–2000). They divorced in 1981. Roubanis had a minor acting part in the Richardson-directed film, The Sailor from Gibraltar (1967), which is the context referred to here.
 - ⌋ Burton presumably means posizione – position.
 - ⌋ Hugh Williams was playing Second Scholar and Richard Heffer (1946—) First Scholar.
 - ⌋ Sheila Pickles was Zeffirelli's personal assistant.
 - ⌋ 'Cargoes' (1910) by John Masefield (1878–1967). Should be 'Quinquereme'.
 - ⌋ Elmo Williams (1913—), President's Representative for Foreign Productions, Twentieth Century-Fox.
 - ⌋ Ruth Blackmore was the granddaughter of Philip Burton's half-brother (18 years older than he), Will Wilson. Wilson's daughter Megan, a lecturer, had married Fred Blackmore, a school headmaster.
 - ⌋ Richard Alderson, known professionally as Christian Alderson, actor, friend and one-time companion of Philip Burton.
 - ⌋ The Christian Science Monitor is the newspaper of the Church of Christ, Scientist.
 - ⌋ My Dog Tulip by J[oe] R[andolph] Ackerley (1956). A film version was released in 2010.
 - ⌋ The Comedians was Burton's next film project.
 - ⌋ Burton was anticipating the role of Arthur Chipping in the musical version of Goodbye Mr Chips, which eventually came out in 1969 with Peter O'Toole (1932—) as the lead.
 - ⌋ Pipo the donkey appeared in the film.
 - ⌋ Jack Hildyard (1908–90), cinematographer, brother of Dave Hildyard. He had been director of photography on Suddenly Last Summer and The V.I.P.s, and would perform the same role on The Wild Geese and Ellis Island.
 - ⌋ Roy Thomson (1894–76), had become Lord Thomson of Fleet in 1964.
 - ⌋ Peregrine Worsthorne (1923—), deputy editor and columnist for the Sunday Telegraph.
 - ⌋ Silver Masks are the annual Italian awards for achievement in the theatre, cinema, opera and television.

- }] Robert Graves (1895–1985), author, poet. His memoir of wartime service on the Western Front, Good-bye to All That, first appeared in 1929.
-] Sir Stephen Spender (1909–95), poet, critic. Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–94), playwright, novelist, short story writer, essayist. Voltaire, pseudonym of François-Marie Arouet (1694–1778), novelist, poet, critic, philosopher. Samuel Goldwyn (1882–1974), producer. ‘Pieces of eight!’ is from Stevenson’s Treasure Island (1883).
-] Comedians. Alec Guinness (1914–2000) was to co-star in The Comedians, based on the novel (published in 1965) by Graham Greene (1904–91).
-] Bechuanaland, now part of Botswana and South Africa.
-] Sandy MacPherson (1897–1975), theatre organist who broadcast regularly on the BBC during the Second World War.
-] A reference to the Munich Agreement of September 1938 reached between Britain and France on the one hand, and Hitler’s Germany on the other, regarding the fate of the Sudetenland.
-] Burton presumably means not ‘hunger strikes’ but the hunger marches of the 1930s, some of which emanated from South Wales, but the most famous of which began in Jarrow in the north-east of England.
-] D’Chez Eux, Avenue Lowendal, Paris.
-] A reference to the music hall song ‘It’s a long way to Tipperary’, written in 1912 and made popular during the First World War.
-] Nat White was Louise’s husband.
-] Samuel Johnson (1709–84), essayist, journalist, author, made this remark of Sir John Hawkins (1719–89).
-] The Players’ social club, Gramercy Park, New York, founded in 1888 by the Shakespearean actor Edwin Booth, whom Burton had portrayed in Prince of Players. The Band of Hope was a temperance organization for children, founded in 1847. The Urdd Gobaith Cymru (Welsh League of Youth) was founded in 1922. The Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA), also aimed at young people, was founded in 1844.
-] Alberto Sordi (1920–2003), actor. Marcello Mastroianni (1924–96), actor, who was to co-star with Richard in Massacre in Rome (1974). Vittorio Gassman (1922–2000), actor and director. Virna Lisi (1937—), actor, who was to co-star with Richard in Bluebeard (1972). Monica Vitti (1931—), actor. Rossana Podesta (1934—), actor.
-] Hassler Hotel, Piazza della Trinità dei Monti, Rome.
-] Ion Swinley (1891–1937), Shakespearean stage actor. Henry Hinchcliffe Ainley (1879–1945), Shakespearean stage and film actor.
-] Frank Robinson (1935—), and Brooks Robinson (1937—), playing for the Baltimore Orioles. Donald Scott Drysdale (1936–93), pitcher for the LA Dodgers. Baltimore won this, the first game, on 5 October 1966.
-] Baltimore won the second game, 6–0, on 6 October 1966. Willie Davis (1940–2010) of the LA Dodgers made three errors.

- § Sanford 'Sandy' Koufax (1935—) of the LA Dodgers.
- § Ann Sheran Cazalet (1934—), childhood friend of Elizabeth Taylor. P. G. Wodehouse (1881–1975), short story writer, novelist. Possibly the book was Plum Pie, an anthology published in September 1966.
- § Nicholas Loukes (1944–76), who played Pride and Cardinal of Lorraine in Faustus.
- § Richard Charles Uryan Rhys, 9th Baron Dynevor (1935–2008), who had inherited the Llandeilo Estate in 1962. He was at this point attempting to establish an Arts Centre at Newton House, in Dinefwr Park.
- § This refers to the (historically unsubstantiated) claim that the Welsh Prince Madog ab Owain Gwynedd discovered America c.1170.
- § Harvey Orkin, theatrical agent and a good friend of Burton.
- § A reference to the researches of Richard Deacon, Madoc (1966).
- § Ken Muggleston (1930—) was in charge of properties on both Taming of the Shrew and Faustus.
- § Baltimore beat the LA Dodgers 1–0 in the third game on 8 October 1966.
- § Josephine Tey, pseudonym of Elizabeth Mackintosh, 1896–1952), A Shilling for Candles (1936).
- § Stanley Ellin (1916–86) had published six novels by this time.
- § Baltimore won the World Series with a 1–0 victory in the fourth game on 9 October 1966.
- § Bobby Frosch, Aaron's wife.
- § A reference to William Dunbar (1456–1513), 'Lament for the Makaris, the last line of each verse of which being 'Timor Mortis conturbat me'.
- § Which Burton eventually would in 1974.
- § Taylor, who had previously enjoyed dual citizenship, renounced American citizenship in order to become solely a British subject.
- § Burton had played Prospero in a 1960 production for NBC television, having played Caliban in the Old Vic production in 1953–4.
- § Positano, a port and resort south of Naples, on the south side of the Sorrentine peninsula.
- § Possibly the make-up man on both Faustus and The Taming of the Shrew, Giannetto De Rossi (1942—).
- § During the making of The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- § Cornelius Ryan (1920–74), The Last Battle (1964).
- § A Negroni is made of gin, vermouth and bitters.
- § Either Burton missed the 'm' on the typewriter and hit the adjacent 'n', or he really meant to use the French for 'comfortable'.
- § A reference to the 1867 poem 'Dover Beach' by the poet and critic Matthew Arnold (1822–88). The line is 'melancholy, long, withdrawing roar'.
- § Iris Murdoch (1919–99). The 'latest volume' may have been The Red and the Green (1965). She had married John Bayley (1925—) in 1956.
- § Gwyn Thomas (1913–81), Welsh playwright, novelist, satirist and broadcaster. Dylan Thomas (1914–53), poet and friend of Richard Burton. T. S. Eliot (1888–1965), poet and playwright. Louis MacNeice (1907–63), poet.

- ⌋ Roderick Thorp (1936–99), The Detective (1966) made into a 1968 film starring Frank Sinatra (1915–98).
- ⌋ Tony Britton (1924—), actor, who would appear with Taylor in Night Watch (1973). Robert Shaw (1927–78), actor. Peter Finch (1916–77), actor, who had initially been cast as Julius Caesar in Cleopatra.
- ⌋ Sorrento, a resort town on the north side of the Sorrentine peninsula.
- ⌋ Hotel La Minervetta, Sorrento.
- ⌋ Presumably the Michelin Red Guide to hotels and restaurants.
- ⌋ Presumably Burton means ‘muliebrity’, the condition of being a woman.
- ⌋ This is a reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene ii: ‘trippingly on the tongue’. Hotel Covo dei Saraceni, Positano.
- ⌋ Dorothy Jeakins, costume designer (1914–95). She had worked with Richard on My Cousin Rachel (1952) and on The Night of the Iguana (for each of which she had received an Academy Award).
- ⌋ The serial killer of at least five women in the East End of London in 1888.
- ⌋ Tiziani means Evan Richards (1924—), the founder of the fashion house Tiziani of Rome.
- ⌋ Wine from the island of Ischia, in the Bay of Naples.
- ⌋ Dopo la tempesta, Italian for ‘after the storm’.
- ⌋ Eva Britton, Tony’s second wife, is indeed Danish. Jasper Britton (1962—), actor.
- ⌋ Aberfan, a mining community in the Taff valley, South Wales, where on 21 October a coal tip slid down the hillside engulfing a number of buildings, including a primary school. 116 children and 28 adults were killed.
- ⌋ Ferdy Mayne (1916–98), actor, would appear with Burton in Where Eagles Dare. The ‘Something Griffiths’ was probably Kenneth Griffith (1921–2006), a Welsh actor who was appearing with Mayne in The Bobo (1967). Griffith had acted with Burton in Waterfront, the 1961 audio production of King Henry V, and would appear with him again in The Wild Geese.
- ⌋ Julie Harris (1925—) played the part of Alison Langdon in Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- ⌋ Brian Keith (1921–97) played the part of Morris Langdon in Reflections.
- ⌋ Robert Forster (1941—).
- ⌋ John Bryant (1911–69), producer and production designer.
- ⌋ Hal B. Wallis (1898–1986) had produced Becket and would produce Anne of the Thousand Days.
- ⌋ Edmund Wilson (1895–1972), Europe without Baedeker (1947).
- ⌋ George Santayana (1863–1952), philosopher, writer.
- ⌋ Memoirs of Hecate County, Edmund Wilson (1946); banned in USA until 1959 on the grounds of obscenity.
- ⌋ The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Agency.
- ⌋ Ernest Hemingway (1898–1961), novelist.
- ⌋ 73, Caradoc Street, Taibach, where Richard had lived as a boy.
- ⌋ Joanna: cockney rhyming slang for piano.
- ⌋ In Florence the River Arno flooded. Thirty-three people were killed, approximately 5,000 rendered homeless and a large number of valuable books, manuscripts, maps and other artefacts were destroyed or damaged. In Venice it became known as the 'Great Flood', where there was no loss of life, although significant damage to property.

- 7 Hotel Gritti Palace, Venice.
- 8 Hotel Flavia, Via Flavia, Rome. Rome's zoological gardens, located in the Villa Borghese.
- 9 Stanley Baker (1928–76), Welsh actor and a long-time friend of Richard Burton. Richard and Elizabeth were godparents to Stanley and Ellen Baker's daughter Sally.
- 10 Burton made this opinion public, which did not go down well with Stanley Baker, but he and Taylor did participate in the television show ('The Heart of Show Business'), which was broadcast on 26 March 1967.
- 11 Robert Browning (1812–89), poet, and his wife Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1806–61), poet. Only Elizabeth was buried in the English Cemetery in Florence.
- 12 Anita Loos (1891–1981), actor and author. Her autobiography, A Girl Like I, was published in 1966.
- 13 Margalo Gillmore (1897–1986), actor.
- 14 Alex Woolcott (1887–1943), critic and writer. The story (A Girl Like I, p. 151) is that Woolcott revealed to Loos that 'he had always wanted to be a girl' and 'all my life I've wanted to be a mother!'
- 15 Tuesday was 15 November. Burton remains one day out for the rest of the diary.
- 16 Sheran Cazalet married Simon Hornby (1934–2010) in 1968.
- 17 Christian Marquand (1927–2000), actor and director, who was to direct Candy (1968).
- 18 Meade Roberts (1930–92), screenwriter.
- 19 A reference to the screenplay (part-written by Philip Burton), of Dylan Thomas's The Beach of Falesa (1964), based on the 1892 short story by Robert Louis Stevenson.
- 20 Eddie Fisher (1928–2010), Elizabeth Taylor's husband prior to her marrying Richard Burton.
- 21 This is a reference to the exploits of John Ridgway (1938—) and Chay Blyth (1940—), who rowed across the Atlantic in English Rose III in 92 days.
- 22 Malcolm Muggeridge (1903–90), Tread Softly for You Tread on my Jokes (1966).
- 23 John Cleland (?1709–89), Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure (1748–9), often known as Fanny Hill after the main character; D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930), Lady Chatterley's Lover (1928); Henry Miller (1891–1980), Tropic of Capricorn (1938) and Tropic of Cancer (1934); Terry Southern (1924–95) (writing as Maxwell Kenton) and Mason Hoffenberg (1922–86), Candy (1958).
- 24 A Nissen hut was a prefabricated steel building characteristic of military bases and airfields.
- 25 Hugh Kingsmill (1889–1949), biographer, novelist, literary critic.
- 26 Zeffirelli's documentary on Florence (Per Firenze – For Florence, which appeared in 1966), with narration by Burton, is reputed to have raised more than $20m. This appeared on the BBC in English on 11 December 1966 with the title 'Florence: Days of Destruction'.
- 27 William Ralph Inge (1860–1954), cleric and journalist. The quotation is: 'The nations which have put mankind and posterity most in their debt have been small states – Israel, Athens, Florence, Elizabethan

England.’

Robert Blake, Disraeli (1966).

PT: Physical training.

Ponte Vecchio is a medieval bridge over the Arno in Florence.

The Uffizi Gallery, Florence's historic art museum.

1967

1 Cotonou, largest city of the Republic of Dahomey (now Republic of Benin), where the filming of The Comedians was taking place.

2 Peter Glenville, director of The Comedians.

3 Alec Guinness, co-starring in The Comedians.

4 President (formerly Colonel and Chief of Staff to the Armed Forces) Christophe Soglo (1909–83), President of the Republic of Dahomey from October 1963 to January 1964 and from November 1965 to December 1967. Soglo, who had fought with distinction for France in the Second World War, had been France's military adviser to the Dahomean government before resigning and acquiring Dahomean citizenship in 1960.

5 President Soglo had met his wife in French Indochina.

6 None. Soglo's rule would be brought to an end by an army coup in December 1967. There were to be a total of six coups in Dahomey/Benin during the decade from 1963 to 1972.

7 Chiang Kai-shek (1887–1975), President of the Republic of China. Soglo had visited Taiwan some time in 1964/65.

8 Claudye Etti was Elizabeth Taylor's hairdresser on The Comedians and would become part of the Burton–Taylor entourage in Europe. She also played the small part of the manicurist in the film. Raymond St Jacques (1930–90) played the part of Captain Concasseur in The Comedians.

9 Saint Jean Cap Ferrat, port and resort, on the Cap Ferrat peninsula to the east of Nice.

0 VW: Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf. New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Actress.

1 George Stanford Brown (1943—) played the part of Henri Philipot in The Comedians.

2 Guinness dressed as a black woman (impersonating Burton's character's cook) for the scene in which his character, Major Jones, finds sanctuary in the embassy.

3 Peter Ustinov played the part of Ambassador Pineda in The Comedians.

4 Villa La Fiorentina, situated on the Saint Hospice point, Cap Ferrat peninsula. Taylor had previously rented the same property when married to Mike Todd.

5 A garlic and vegetable soup with basil.

6 The Prince's Palace of Monaco, the official residence of the Prince of Monaco. Hôtel de Paris, Place du Casino, Monaco.

7 It would appear that Burton is referring here to Prince Rainier of Monaco (1923–2005) and his wife

- Princess Grace (1928–82), actor.
- 8 James Earl Jones (1931—) played the part of Dr Magiot in The Comedians.
- 9 Hôtel Plaza Athénée, Avenue Montaigne, Paris.
- 0 Oscars were won by Elizabeth Taylor (Best Actress); Sandy Dennis (Best Supporting Actress) (1937–92); Haskell Wexler (Best Cinematography) (1922—); Richard Sylbert (Best Art Direction – Black-and-White) (1928–2002); George James Hopkins (Best Set Decoration – Black-and-White) (1896–1985); and Irene Sharaff (Best Costume Design). Nominations were also received for the film as Best Picture; for Ernest Lehman (Best Producer) (1915–2005); Mike Nichols (Best Director); Richard Burton (Best Actor); George Segal (Best Supporting Actor) (1934—); Ernest Lehman (Best Screenplay – Based on Material from Another Medium); Alex North (Best Music) (1910–91); George R. Groves (Best Sound) (1901–76); and Sam Steen (Best Film Editing) (1923–2000).
- 1 The Duke of Windsor, formerly King Edward VIII (1894–1972), and his wife, the Duchess of Windsor, formerly Wallis Simpson (1896–1986).
- 2 Frank Flanagan, husband of Agnes.
- 3 Sally Wilson, wife of Bob.
- 4 Millfield School, Street, Somerset.
- 5 Sybil and Jordan's daughter was named Amy.
- 6 The Odyssey motor yacht was built in 1906. Richard and Elizabeth had chartered it. Portofino, a resort and port to the east of Genoa, on the Italian Riviera.
- 7 Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica on its western coast. L'Ile Rousse and Calvi, both on the north-western coast of Corsica.
- 8 Santa Margherita and Rapallo, both close to Portofino.
- 9 Emilio Pucci, fashion house, with a Portofino boutique.
- 0 Ristorante Il Pitosforo, Molo Umberto I, Portofino.
- 1 Cary Grant (1904–86), actor. Presumably this was a film script based on Elaine Dundy's 1964 novel The Old Man and Me. There is no record of the film having been made.
- 2 Robert Daley (1930—), The Whole Truth (1967). Daley had worked for the New York Times.
- 3 Alexander McKee, Caen: Anvil of Victory (1964).
- 4 Both Burton and Taylor would star in Boom!
- 5 The Shoes of the Fisherman was the title both of a novel by Australian writer Morris West (1916–99), and of a 1968 film based on the novel, starring Laurence Olivier and John Gielgud.
- 6 Rex Harrison and the Welsh actor Rachel Roberts (1927–80) had married in 1962. Rachel Roberts had played alongside Burton in A Subject of Scandal and Concern. The Harrisons had a house – Villa San Genesio – in Portofino.
- 7 The United Arab Republic: the official name for Egypt at the time. The Six Day War between Israel on the one hand and Egypt, Syria and Jordan on the other would start on 5 June and end on 10 June 1967, with Israel clearly victorious.

- 8 La Gritta American Bar, Calata Marconi, Portofino.
- 9 Bill is William Glavin, Tennessee Williams's paid companion from 1965 to 1970. Joseph Losey (1909–84), director. Losey would direct Boom!, Secret Ceremony, and The Assassination of Trotsky. John Heyman (1933—), agent and producer of Boom! Tennessee Williams (1911–83), playwright. Burton and Taylor had played in film adaptations of Williams's The Night of the Iguana, Suddenly, Last Summer and Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. Boom! was his own adaptation of his 1962 play The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore.
- 0 Carole Landis (1919–48), actor and former lover of Rex Harrison. Kay Kendall (1926–59), actor and Harrison's third wife (1957–9). Lilli Palmer (1914–86), actor and Harrison's second wife (1943–57).
- 1 Sir Francis Chichester (1901–72), aviator and sailor, had been diagnosed with terminal cancer in 1958. He had won the first single-handed transatlantic yacht race in 1960 and had gone on to circumnavigate the globe from August 1966 to May 1967.
- 2 Hostilities between the Germans and the Allies in Italy ceased on 2 May 1945. However, Liberation Day in Italy is celebrated on 25 April, the anniversary of the end of Mussolini's Italian Social Republic.
- 3 Arthur Barbosa (1908–95), artist, theatre designer and interior decorator.
- 4 St Edward's School is on Woodstock Road, Oxford. Group Captain Sir Douglas Robert Steuart Bader (1910–82), RAF fighter pilot and war hero.
- 5 Punt e Mes: an Italian vermouth.
- 6 Probably Elie Abel, The Missile Crisis (1966).
- 7 John F. Kennedy (1917–63), President of the United States of America. Nikita Khrushchev (1894–1971), First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (1953–64).
- 8 The David Di Donatello: the Italian version of the Academy Award. T of S: The Taming of the Shrew.
- 9 Gamal Abdel Nasser (1918–70), President of Egypt (1954–70).
- 0 'Bob' being Bobby Frosch.
- 1 Gualberto Rocchi of Milan (1914—), whose bust of Burton was donated to the New Theatre, Cardiff, by Sally Burton in 1989. Kate Burton still owns her Rocchi bust.
- 2 Rampoldi's restaurant, Avenue des Spélugues, Monaco.
- 3 La Ferme Saint Michel, Avenue La Condamine, Villefranche-sur-Mer.
- 4 L'il Abner Yokum was an American comic strip character (1934–77). This may well be Ernie Smatt from Jamaica, a world water-ski champion.
- 5 La Réserve de Beaulieu-sur-Mer, on the Côte d'Azur.
- 6 Orson Welles (1915–85), actor and director.
- 7 Chimes at Midnight was a film written, directed and starring Welles that had appeared in 1966.
- 8 Sam Spiegel (1903–85), producer. Harry Kurnitz (1907–68), screenwriter, playwright.
- 9 Gus and Frances Newman owned the Southern Breeze.
- 0 Howard probably refers to Howard Taylor (1929—), Elizabeth's brother, who played the part of the journalist in Boom!

- 1 L'Oustau de Baumanière, Les Baux de Provence, to the east of Arles.
- 2 Hôtel Negresco, Promenade des Anglais, Nice.
- 3 Hôtel La Grillade au Feu de Bois, Le Luc, between Fréjus and Brignoles.
- 4 Hôtel-Restaurant Le Relais de l'Empereur, Montélimar, in the Rhône valley.
- 5 L'Abbaye de Talloires, on the eastern shores of Lake Annecy.
- 6 Auberge du Pere Bise, Talloires.
- 7 Bulle, just west of the southern end of Lac de la Gruyère.
- 8 Sandie Shaw (1947—) had won the Eurovision Song Contest with 'Puppet on a String' in 1967.
- 9 Mara Taylor, Howard's wife.
- 0 Colonel Louis Johannot (1919–2009).
- 1 Ava Gardner (1922–80), actor, who had played alongside Burton in The Night of the Iguana. Ricardo Sicre, a friend of Gardner, whose son, also Ricardo, went on to study at Yale University.
- 2 This may be a jokey reference to Norma Heyman (1940—), John Heyman's wife.
- 3 Yul Brynner (1915–85), actor, by this time married to his second wife, Doris Kleiner (the marriage ended in 1967). Morges is 11 km west of Lausanne on the northern shore of Lake Geneva.
- 4 Grande Hotel Bellevue, Gstaad.
- 5 Hôtel Beau Rivage, Quai du Mont Blanc, Geneva.
- 6 Nella was Elizabeth Taylor's maid.
- 7 Ernst Andrea Scherz, owner and manager of the Gstaad Palace, with his wife Shiwa. The Scherz family had been running the Gstaad Palace Hotel since 1938.
- 8 Victoria Brynner was born in November 1962.
- 9 Stephen Marlowe (1928–2008), writer. The Shining appeared in 1961. Marlowe wrote many thrillers.
- 0 Vivien Leigh (1913–67), actor, former wife of Laurence Olivier.
- 1 Jayne Mansfield (1933–67), actor. Although she suffered severe head injuries, the rumour that she was decapitated is untrue.
- 2 Gianni Bozzacchi, photographer. He and Claudye would marry in June 1968.
- 3 Roy Emerson (1936—), Manuel Santana (1938—), and Rafael Osuna (1938–69) were all international tennis stars. Emerson would beat Santana in the final in 1967 for the second year running.
- 4 Paula Strasberg (1909–66), actor. Lee Strasberg (1899–1982), drama teacher, founder of the Actors' Studio and guru of 'method' acting. Susan Strasberg (1938–99), actor, was their daughter, and had been Richard's lover in the late 1950s.
- 5 'Anche io' is Italian for 'me too'.
- 6 Jim McManus (1940—) and Jim Osborne (1940—), international tennis players, beaten in the men's doubles.
- 7 Gavin Maxwell, Ring of Bright Water (1960).
- 8 Neuchâtel, a city on the northern shore of Lake Neuchâtel, Switzerland.
- 9 Posthotel Rössli, Promenade, Gstaad.

- 0 Salisbury, Wiltshire, slightly more than halfway between London and Street, Somerset.
- 1 R. J. O. Meyer (1905–91), headmaster of Millfield, former captain of Somerset (cricket).
- 2 The Bobo. Peter Sellers was at this point married to Britt Ekland (1942—).
- 3 Sammy Davis Jr (1925–90), entertainer.
- 4 Taormina, a small town on the east coast of Sicily.
- 5 Peter O'Toole, actor, who had played alongside Burton in Becket and would play alongside both Burton and Taylor in Under Milk Wood. Between 1959 and 1979 he was married to the Welsh actor Siân Phillips (1934—), who had also acted in Becket and would act in Under Milk Wood.
- 6 At this point O'Toole had been twice nominated for Oscars (for Lawrence of Arabia and Becket). His current (2012) tally stands at eight nominations, one higher than Burton.
- 7 Catania, city on the east coast of Sicily, and location of the Fontanarossa airport.
- 8 Michael Wilding Sr. 'Maggie' refers to Wilding's fourth wife, the actor Margaret Leighton.
- 9 Burton and Taylor (and O'Toole) were attending the Taormina Film Festival.
-] Noël Coward (1899–1973), actor, director and playwright.
-] Burton had played the Marquis of Sheere in Coward's Conversation Piece.
-] Ehud Avriel (1917–80), Israel's ambassador to Italy, 1965–8.
-] Grand Hotel de la Minerve, Plaza della Minerva, Rome.
-] Jane Swanson, secretary to Burton and Taylor.
-] Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901), wrote La Traviata (first performance 1853); Robert Merrill (1917–2004), operatic baritone. His second wife was Marion Machno (d. 2010).
-] Taverna Flavia, Via Flavia 91, Rome.
-] Hôtel Président Wilson, Quai Wilson, Geneva.
-] Chambésy, a village on the northern outskirts of Geneva.
-] Leighton: really Layton. Son of Howard and Mara.
-] William David Ormsby-Gore, 5th Baron Harlech (1918–85), at this point leading the Harlech Television consortium which would win the franchise from Television Wales and the West.
-] Francis (1954—), the current Baron Harlech, Alice (1952–95) and Victoria (1945—).
-] Sylvia Thomas (1940–67).
-] Lord Derby, chairman of Television Wales and the West.
-] A reference to T. S. Eliot's poem The Waste Land (1922), which opens with the line 'April is the cruellest month'. 'tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow', a reference to Shakespeare's Macbeth, Act V, scene v.
-] Hotel Capo Caccia is on the Capo Caccia peninsula, near Alghero, a port on the north-west coast of Sardinia.
-] 'Evan Roberts Tiziani' is a slip – it was Evan Richards. Evan Roberts (1878–1951) was a Welsh evangelist who had led the 1904–05 religious revival in Wales. A Kabuki headdress is an elaborate Japanese wig.
-] A steward on the Kalizma.
-] W. John Morgan (1929–88), Welsh journalist and television producer, also involved with the establishment

- of HTV. The New Statesman is a British socialist weekly magazine.
- ⌋ Michael Dunn (1935–73) played Rudi in Boom!
 - ⌋ Graham Payn (1918–2005), actor and companion of Coward. ‘Coley’ was his secretary Cole Lesley (d. 1980).
 - ⌋ David Niven (1909–83), actor.
 - ⌋ Joanna Shimkus (1943—) played the role of Blackie, the secretary to Flora Goforth (played by Taylor).
 - ⌋ Valerio DePaolis (1942—), who was to perform again as Unit Manager in Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
 - ⌋ Peter Thorneycroft (1909–94), previously Conservative MP for Stafford (1938–45) and Monmouth (1945–66), formerly Chancellor of the Exchequer, had lost his seat at the 1966 general election and become Baron Thorneycroft. His second wife was Carla, Contessa Roberti (1914–2007), by whom he had had a son (Piero) and a daughter (Francesca).
 - ⌋ Bonifacio, port on the southern tip of Corsica.
 - ⌋ David Heyman (1961—), more famous today for being the producer of the Harry Potter films.
 - ⌋ Paris was to be the venue for the European premiere of Taming of the Shrew.
 - ⌋ Cavalcade (1931).
 - ⌋ The play Blithe Spirit (1941). Portmeirion, an Italianate holiday village and architectural flight of fancy in Merionethshire, North Wales.
 - ⌋ Joyce Carey (1898–1993), who appeared in the film Blithe Spirit (1945).
 - ⌋ Burton and Taylor would appear on stage together in 1983 in a production of Private Lives (1933).
 - ⌋ Hay Fever (1925).
 - ⌋ Jacqueline de Ribes (1929—), designer, couturière and socialite. Her husband was Edouard, comte de Ribes.
 - ⌋ It could have been either Elie (1917–2007) or his cousin Guy (1909–2007).
 - ⌋ ‘La Scandale’: the affair between Burton and Taylor. It should be ‘Le Scandale’.
 - ⌋ Charles de Gaulle (1890–1970), President of France.
 - ⌋ Curd (often Curt) Jurgens (1915–82), actor, who had played alongside Burton in Bitter Victory. His wife at this time was Simone Bicheron.
 - ⌋ The Bear Hotel, Sunninghill, Woodstock, Oxfordshire.
 - ⌋ David Lewin and James Mossman interviewed Burton and Taylor. Alexander Walker (1920–2003), film critic and writer who would publish a biography of Elizabeth Taylor. Lord David Cecil (1902–86), Professor of English Literature at Oxford, 1948–70. Professor Marvin Rosenberg of the University of California, Berkeley, Shakespearean expert (1912–2003).
 - ⌋ Dylan being Dylan Thomas. David Jones (1895–1974), author of In Parenthesis (1937).
 - ⌋ Louis MacNeice was a friend of Burton.
 - ⌋ Archibald MacLeish (1892–1982), poet.
 - ⌋ Mildred Eldridge (1909–91), artist and wife of R. S. Thomas.
 - ⌋ Nuffield Hospital, Woodstock Road, Oxford.

- 5 Quintin Hogg (1907–2001), Conservative MP for St Marylebone, formerly (and again after 1970), Lord Hailsham, who had been a contender for the leadership of the Conservative Party in 1963 but had lost out to Edward Heath (1916–2005). Robert Boothby (1900–86), Baron Boothby from 1958, another Conservative politician, who had married earlier that year Wanda Sanna, a Sardinian woman 33 years his junior.
- 6 Prince Edward, Duke of Kent (1935—) and Katharine, Duchess of Kent (1933—).
- 7 Rolf Hochhuth's play Soldiers, Necrology on Geneva (1967). Burton was considering playing the role of Churchill.
- 8 Bettina Krahmer, Guy Rothschild's stepdaughter by his first marriage.
- 9 Costa Smeralda, on the north-eastern coast of Sardinia.
- 0 Alberto and Raphael were crew members on the Kalizma.
- 1 Liscia di Vacca, a bay between Porto Cervo and Pevero, on the Costa Smeralda. It means 'beach of the cows'.
- 2 Curtis Bill Pepper (1917—), war correspondent and head of the Rome bureau for Newsweek magazine.
- 3 Port city some 60 km south of Rome.

1968

- 1 Fitzroy Nuffield Hospital, Bryanston Square, London.
- 2 Michael Holroyd (1935—), Lytton Strachey: The New Biography (1968).
- 3 Muriel Spark, (1918–2006) The Public Image (1968). Raymond Vignale, also secretary to Taylor.
- 4 'God save the mark!' is a line spoken by Hotspur in Henry IV (Part 1), Act III, scene ii.
- 5 Johann Sebastian Bach was Burton and Taylor's housekeeper at Chalet Ariel, Gstaad.
- 6 The Wells, Well Walk, Hampstead.
- 7 At this point Taylor was planning to make The Only Game in Town with Frank Sinatra, singer, actor. The subsequent delay led Sinatra to withdraw from the project, and he was replaced by Warren Beatty (1937—).
- 8 Burton means autobiography. A. L. Rowse, A Cornishman in Oxford (1965), p. 145: 'He [Cecil] asked me along to lunch: it would have been kinder to ask me to tea, for I foresaw that some fearful social obstacle would rear its ugly head. It did – in the form of asparagus – and I was inwardly vexed. How did one eat it? It was the same conundrum that was raised in an aristocratic Officers' Club under the Nazis: how did the Führer eat his asparagus? I could not bring myself to plunge my fingers into the mess, as my host did without ado; so I proudly left it on the side of my plate.' Burton and Rowse (1903–97) would become friends in the last months of Burton's life, after appearing on American television together.
- 9 Terence Young (1915–94) was to direct Burton in The Klansman and was also director for the ill-fated film Jackpot.
- 0 Brook Williams (1938–2005), actor, son of Emlyn and Molly Williams, was a great friend of Burton's and

- acted alongside him in more than a dozen films starting with Cleopatra and ending with Wagner.
- 1 Sally, daughter of Stanley and Ellen Baker.
 - 2 Ethel Kennedy (1928—), widow of Robert F. Kennedy (1925–68), US Senator, candidate for the Democratic Party's nomination for President, who had been assassinated in June 1968.
 - 3 Aristotle Onassis (1904–75), shipping magnate, who was to marry Jackie Kennedy (1929–94), widow of President John F. Kennedy, in October 1968.
 - 4 The documentary film (which won an Oscar for Best Short Subject Documentary) was directed by Charles Guggenheim (1924–2002) and entitled Robert Kennedy Remembered.
 - 5 Hôtellerie du Bas Breau, Grande Rue, Barbizon, Fontainebleau.
 - 6 Dr Barrington Cooper (1923–2007), who had been introduced to Burton and Taylor by Joseph Losey.
 - 7 Hyral was Tom's second wife.
 - 8 This story is not true: the name comes from the German words pumpfern (to break wind) and Nickel (goblin).
 - 9 Mary (1542–87), Queen of Scots (1542–67).
 - 0 Nicholas Ray (1911–79), the director.
 - 1 Cambridge University has no record of Barry Cooper winning a Blue for rowing.
 - 2 This refers to the Crichton-Stuarts, Marquesses of Bute, whose family seat is Mount Stuart on the Isle of Bute.
 - 3 The term ‘non-U’ means not upper class. The distinction between ‘U’ and ‘non-U’ terminology and linguistic usage was popularised in the 1950s by the author Nancy Mitford (1904–73).
 - 4 Roscoe Lee Browne (1925–2007) had appeared alongside Burton and Taylor in The Comedians.
 - 5 P. G. Wodehouse, Do Butlers Burgle Banks? (1968).
 - 6 Winston Churchill, The World Crisis, 1911–1918 (1923).
 - 7 Burton was to co-star with Rex Harrison in Staircase.
 - 8 Richard Zanuck (1934–2012), son of Darryl F. Zanuck and President of Twentieth Century-Fox.
 - 9 John C. Shepridge had been executive producer of What's New Pussycat?
 - 0 Rue du Vertbois.
 - 1 Mia Fonssagrives (1942—), clothes designer on What's New Pussycat? and The Only Game in Town, partner of Vicky Tiel in the Paris boutique Mia and Vicky. George Davis: one of Taylor's secretaries.
 - 2 Rocky Brynner (1946—), son of Yul Brynner.
 - 3 George Stevens (1904–75), director of The Only Game in Town, who had also directed Taylor in A Place in the Sun and Giant.
 - 4 European Cup Holders Celtic beat St Etienne 4–0 at Celtic Park, Glasgow, in the second leg of their first round tie, winning 4–2 on aggregate.
 - 5 ‘W.B.’ is Warren Beatty. Elizabeth is teasing her sometimes jealous husband.
 - 6 Elliott Kastner (1930—) had produced Where Eagles Dare and would also produce Villain, Absolution, and the Taylor film X, Y and Zee.

- 7 Jim Benton, Burton's secretary, and partner of George Davis.
- 8 Pat Newcomb (1930—), press agent.
- 9 Justine (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1969), directed by George Cukor (1899–1983).
- 0 The Man From Nowhere was a screenplay that Joseph Losey was discussing with Burton at this time, but which fell through when Burton decided to act in Where Eagles Dare instead.
- 1 Jay Kanter, agent of Marlon Brando, who would produce the Burton film Villain and the Taylor film X, Y and Zee (1971).
- 2 Lew Wasserman (1913–2002), head of Universal Pictures. Ed Henry, senior executive at Universal Pictures.
- 3 Liz Smith (1923—).
- 4 Alexis Rosenberg, 2nd Baron de Redé (1922–2004), collector, socialite.
- 5 Marie-Hélène de Rothschild (1927–96), socialite and wife of Guy de Rothschild.
- 6 Maria Callas (1923–77), opera singer.
- 7 Paul-Emile Victor (1907–95), explorer, ethnologist.
- 8 Burton means Bora-Bora, in the Leeward Islands.
- 9 Florinda Bolkan (1937—), actor, had played alongside Burton in Candy. Oggi (Today) is an Italian magazine.
- 0 Burton is here referring to his published volumes A Christmas Story (1965) and Meeting Mrs Jenkins (1966).
- 1 Terry O'Neill (1938—), famed photographer of the 1960s.
- 2 Lester Piggott (1935—).
- 3 Bobby Charlton (1937—), of Manchester United and England. Billy Bremner (1942–97), of Leeds United and Scotland.
- 4 A reference to paintings owned by Burton and Taylor by Vincent Van Gogh (1853–90), Pablo Picasso (1881–1973), Claude Monet (1840–1926), Maurice Utrillo (1883–1955), and Augustus John (1878–1961). The Monet was Le Val de Falaise. The Picasso was La Famille de saltimbanques.
- 5 A reference to the Wall Street stock market 'crash' of 1929.
- 6 Sheran Cazalet had married Simon Hornby on 15 June 1968.
- 7 Sir Jacob Epstein (1880–1959) had cast a bust of Churchill in 1946. Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), painter.
- 8 Kevin McCarthy (1914–2010), actor. Hôtel La Voile d'Or, Avenue Jean Mermoz, Saint Jean Cap Ferrat.
- 9 Roderick Cameron, owner of Villa Fiorentina.
- 0 Lana Turner (1921–95), actor, at this time married to Robert P. Eaton. She had played alongside Burton in The Rains of Ranchipur.
- 1 George Hamilton (1939—), actor. Hamilton and Taylor would become companions in the 1980s.
- 2 Hal W. Polaire (1918–99), who had been assistant to the producer on Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Grant Tinker (1925—), producer and television executive, then married to Mary Tyler Moore (1936—).

- 3 Moore had played the part of Laura Petrie, wife of Rob Petrie, played by Dick Van Dyke (1925—) in The Dick Van Dyke Show (1961–6) and the part of Miss Dorothy Brown in Thoroughly Modern Millie (1967).
- 4 Cameron sold the villa in 1969 to Mr and Mrs Harding Lawrence. ‘Metteur-en-scene’ – scene setter. Stanley Donen (1924—), was producer-director of Staircase. He and Taylor had been romantically involved in 1951, from the time that he had directed her in Love is Better Than Ever.
- 5 Cathleen Nesbitt (1888–1982) played the part of Harry's mother (Burton being Harry) in Staircase. She would also act in Villain.
- 6 The Great White Hope began a run of 546 performances on Broadway on 3 October 1968.
- 7 Howard Sackler (1929–82), screenwriter and playwright.
- 8 Jones (born 1931) was in fact in his late thirties.
- 9 Smith drew on this for a column that appeared in the New York Times on 26 January 1969.
- 0 Joan Crosby (1934—), journalist and actor.
- 1 A Flea in Her Ear (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1968), directed by Jacques Charon (1920–75), starring Rex Harrison and Rachel Roberts.
- 2 Geneviève Bujold (1942—), was to play the part of Anne Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days.
- 3 Arne Lindroth (1910–85), a marine expert, was advising Burton on the seaworthiness of the Kalizma.
- 4 The film was Krasnaya Palatka (1969: US title The Red Tent), which starred Sean Connery (1930—) as Roald Amundsen (1872–1928) the Norwegian explorer, and first man to reach the South Pole.
- 5 Elizabeth Harris (1936—), daughter of David Rees-Williams, Baron Ogmores, and at this time married to the actor Richard Harris. She and Rex Harrison would marry in 1971 and divorce in 1976.
- 6 Burton means the Vatican newspaper the Osservatore della Domenica, which in 1962 had condemned Taylor for ‘erotic vagrancy’.
- 7 George Orwell, The Collected Essays, Journalism and Letters of George Orwell, edited by Sonia Orwell and Ian Angus (4 vols, 1968).
- 8 Ingrid Bergman (1915–82), actor.
- 9 Apollo 7, the first crewed Apollo flight, had launched on 11 October and would splash down on 22 October. The three astronauts were Walter Schirra (1923–2007), Donn Eisele (1930–87) and Walter Cunningham (1932—).
- 0 Robert Sargent Shriver (1915–2011), American Ambassador to France (1968–70), and husband of Eunice Kennedy (1921–2009), thus brother-in-law to both John F. and Robert F. Kennedy.
- 1 ‘In the dead vast and middle of the night’ is a line from Hamlet, Act I, scene ii, although it is often rendered ‘dead waste and middle of the night’.
- 2 Burton must mean Hubert Humphrey (1911–78), Vice-President of the USA and the Democratic Party candidate for the presidency in the 1968 election.
- 3 Charles Braswell (1924–74) played the part of Thomas J. Lockwood in The Only Game in Town.
- 4 Lucille Ball (1911–89), actor, television star. Angela Lansbury (1925—), actor. ETB: Elizabeth Taylor Burton.

- 5 This was Braswell's first major film role.
- 6 Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov (1899–1977), novelist, poet, literary scholar.
- 7 Rosemary Harris (1925—), who had appeared in A Flea in Her Ear, and who had played alongside Burton in the Old Vic production of Othello.
- 8 Maurice Chevalier (1888–1972), actor and singer, lived at Marnes-la-Coquette in the western suburbs of Paris, close to the Forest of Fausses-Reposes and to the Parc de Saint-Cloud.
- 9 Restaurant de la Tête Noire, Place Mairie, Marnes-la-Coquette.
- 0 Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia (1936—), later to enjoy a brief engagement to Burton.
- 1 Burton is referring here to the clenched fist salutes given on the podium by Black American sprinters Tommie Smith (1944—) and John Carlos (1945—), who had won gold and bronze medals respectively in the men's 200m at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City.
- 2 Fouquet's on the Champs-Élysées.
- 3 There were anti-war demonstrations outside the American Embassy in Grosvenor Square, London on 27 October. 'Bobby' is a British term for a police officer.
- 4 Francis Warner, tutor in English Literature at St Peter's College, Oxford, and a friend of Burton.
- 5 John Donne (1572–1631), Thomas Traherne (1637–94), Henry Vaughan (1621–95) and George Herbert (1593–1633), poets. The poem quoted (first two verses) is Herbert's 'Virtue'. The third verse includes the line 'A box where sweets compacted lie'.
- 6 A reference to the poem 'The Old Vicarage, Grantchester', by Rupert Brooke (1887–1915), which includes the line 'Green as a dream and deep as death'.
- 7 Peter Finch played the part of General Umberto Nobile (1885–1978), Arctic explorer.
- 8 Roderick Mann, The Headliner (1968). 'Burton Broadside', Evening Standard, 23 October 1968. Burton's mixed metaphor is quoted thus: 'Yet these particular rats, like the worms that Noah forgot to put on the Ark, are necessary. When, as it were, the chips are down, the rats can turn into Rajahs.'
- 9 A reference to the starvation crisis and civil war in Biafra, Nigeria that was taking place at the time.
- 0 Oscar Wilde (1854–1900), poet, dramatist, novelist, wit.
- 1 All Saints' Day (1 November) is a national holiday in France.
- 2 Secret Ceremony, the film starring Taylor, Mia Farrow and Robert Mitchum (1917–97) which had appeared earlier in the year.
- 3 The Train Bleu ran between Paris and Vintimille in Italy.
- 4 Cannes, city and port on the French Riviera, to the west of Monaco and Saint Jean Cap Ferrat.
- 5 Ramón Novarro (1899–1968), actor, had been murdered at his home in Laurel Canyon, Hollywood. Nice-Matin: the Nice daily paper.
- 6 Gordon Waller (1945–2009), formerly combined with Peter Asher in the pop duo 'Peter and Gordon'.
- 7 La Colombe d'Or, Saint-Paul-de-Vence, inland from Cagnes-sur-Mer on the Mediterranean coast.
- 8 Fernet Branca is an Italian brand of the spirit Fernet, often used for hangovers.
- 9 E. W. (Jim) Swanton (1907–2000), cricket writer and commentator. His Cricket from All Angles appeared in 1968.

- ⌋ Neville Cardus (1888–1975) and John Arlott (1914–91), both writers on cricket.
- ⌋ A reference to the Gunpowder Plot of 1605 in which an attempt was made by a number of conspirators including Guy Fawkes (1570–1606) to blow up the Houses of Parliament in London.
- ⌋ The Republican candidate Richard Nixon won 43.4% of the popular vote, 32 states, and 301 votes in the electoral college, as against 42.7% of the vote, 13 states (plus the District of Columbia) and 191 votes for the Democratic candidate Hubert Humphrey. George Wallace, running as an Independent, won 13.5% of the vote, 5 states and 46 votes.
- ⌋ Robinson Jeffers's (1887–1962) adaptation of the Greek tragedy of Medea for the stage (1947) and the 1797 opera Médée by Luigi Cherubini (1760–1842).
- ⌋ Robert Browning (1812–89), Pippa Passes (1841), includes the lines ‘The lark's on the wing; / The snail's on the thorn; / God's in his Heaven – / All's right with the world!’
- ⌋ John Bunyan (1628–88), Pilgrim's Progress (1678–84).
- ⌋ Geoffrey Warner (1937—), Pierre Laval and the Eclipse of France (1968). Alexander Werth (1901–69), De Gaulle: A Political Biography (1966).
- ⌋ Sir Oswald Mosley (1896–1980) My Life (1968).
- ⌋ A reference to Michael Foot (1913–2010), Labour Party politician and Member of Parliament for the South Wales constituency of Ebbw Vale at this time.
- ⌋ Shirley MacLaine (1934—), actor, sister of Warren Beatty.
- ⌋ Molière, pseudonym of Jean-Baptiste Poquelin (1622–73), playwright.
- ⌋ A conflict in the air between the German Luftwaffe and the Royal Air Force in the summer of 1940 over the UK.
- ⌋ A reference to the Zanuck suit against Burton and Taylor in the wake of Cleopatra.
- ⌋ Café Le Coq Hardy, Rue Notre Dame de Lorette, Paris.
- ⌋ Daniel C. Blum, A Pictorial History of the Silent Screen (1953).
- ⌋ James D. Watson, The Double Helix: A Personal Account of the Discovery of the Structure of DNA (1968).
- ⌋ Charles Percy (C. P.) Snow, Baron Snow of Leicester (1905–80), novelist.
- ⌋ Otto Christian Archibald von Bismarck (1897–1975), Prince of Bismarck from 1904 to his death. His wife Anne-Marie (1907–99).
- ⌋ A reference to Germany's ‘Iron Chancellor’, Otto Christian's grandfather, Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck (1815–98). Burton may also be referring to the 1940 novel from Iron in the Soul by Jean-Paul Sartre (1905–80).
- ⌋ ‘Toto and Nanette’ were chalkware figurines popular in the 1930s.
- ⌋ Hamlet, Act IV, scene v, when the King speaks the line: ‘There's such divinity doth hedge a king’.
- ⌋ Suzy Nickerbocker, the pen name of columnist Aileen Mehle (1921—).
- ⌋ A reference to the first line of the poem ‘The Lake Isle of Innisfree’ (1888) by William Butler Yeats (1865–1939): ‘I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree.’

- } Cathleen Nesbitt and Rupert Brooke (1887–1915) had been engaged to be married prior to his death. Brooke had written sonnets to Nesbitt. John Lennon (1940–80) of The Beatles had published In His Own Write in 1964.
- | Ipecacuana: a liquid used to induce vomiting.
- } James Wishart, a chartered accountant with the London firm of W. H. Jack & Co, an authority on tax issues, who had been advising Burton since the 1950s. James Bacon (1914—), journalist and actor, who wrote for the Hollywood Reporter and the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.
- } Stephen Lewis (1936—) played the part of Jack in Staircase. He had been a merchant seaman.
- | Julie Christie (1941—), most famous at this point for her roles in Billy Liar (1963) and Doctor Zhivago (1965). She had turned down the role of Anne Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days. Her relationship with Warren Beatty would last until 1974.
- } Princess Elizabeth would marry Neil Balfour (1944—), merchant banker and Conservative Party candidate in 1969.
- } Bonnie and Clyde (Warner Brothers, 1967), had starred Beatty and Faye Dunaway (1941—).
- } Sir Isaac Newton (1643–1727), scientist, mathematician, astronomer, who is credited with saying that: ‘I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea-shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.’
- | David René de Rothschild (1942—), Guy de Rothschild's son by his first marriage.
- | Philippe Sereys de Rothschild (1963—).
- } Lili Krahmer (1930–96), Guy de Rothschild's stepdaughter by his first marriage.
- | Lili's husband was Maurice Rheims (1910–2003), photographer.
- } Alberto de Rossi (d. 1975), make-up artist, who worked on Cleopatra, The Taming of the Shrew and Staircase and who would work on Divorce His, Divorce Hers, and on the Taylor film Ash Wednesday.
- } Raymond Marcellin (1914–2004) was Minister of the Interior from May 1968 to February 1974.
- | Claude Pompidou (1912–2007), wife of Georges Pompidou (1911–74), who had been Prime Minister of France from 1962 to July 1968 and would become President in June 1969. De Gaulle resigned the presidency in April 1969 and died in November 1970.
- } A very popular Welsh song, roughly translating as ‘Beside the sea red roses growing’.
- } Stanley Flink, journalist.
- } Lyndon Johnson (1908–73), President of the United States (1963–8), and his wife Lady Bird Johnson (1912–2007).
- | Ferndale, a mining village in the Rhondda Fach in South Wales, adjacent to Tylorstown, birthplace of Richard's first wife Sybil.
- | Dulcis Imperatrix: charming consort of the emperor. According to the traditional rhyme, ‘Sunday's child is full of grace’.
- } Poor Richard's Almanack (1733–58), published by Benjamin Franklin (1706–90).

- 1 Hebe Dorsey (1925–87), fashion editor of the International Herald Tribune. ‘Dwyer’ may refer to Paul O’Dwyer (1907–98), unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Senate for New York, 1968 and 1970. His brother, William (1890–1964), had been Mayor of New York from 1946 to 1950.
- 2 Samuel Pizar (1929—).
- 3 Vice versa: the other way around.
- 4 Beverly Hills Hotel, Sunset Boulevard, Beverly Hills, California.
- 5 Director Tony Richardson had sacked Burton from the production of Laughter in the Dark for being in breach of contract.
- 6 A reference to the poem ‘Ring Out, Wild Bells’, by Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–92).
- 7 A reference to the role of Professor Henry Higgins which Rex Harrison had played in My Fair Lady.
- 8 Edie Goetz (1905–87), daughter of Louis B. Mayer (1884–1957), and wife of William Goetz (1903–69), film producer. Frank Sinatra had divorced Mia Farrow earlier in 1968.
- 9 A reference to the comic strip Peanuts by Charles Schulz (1922–2000).
- 10 Howard Young (1878–1972), art dealer and partner in business with Francis Taylor. In his will he bequeathed a sum in the region of $20m for the establishment of the Howard Young Medical Center, Wisconsin.
- 11 Burton means Oswald Mosley. Osbert Sitwell (1892–1969) was a poet and novelist.
- 12 J. B. S. Haldane (1892–1964), geneticist, biologist, and member of the Communist Party of Great Britain (1942–50). Ronald Clark’s JBS: The Life and Work of J. B. S. Haldane appeared in 1968.
- 13 Burton means ‘cwtched’ – the Welsh term for cuddling.
- 14 This refers to the trial of the character Charlie Dyer (played by Rex Harrison) in Staircase.
- 15 Marc Bohan (1926—), fashion designer.
- 16 Burton repeats with only one inaccuracy the lines spoken by Henry V in Shakespeare’s The Life of Henry the Fifth, Act IV, scene i: ‘Upon the King! Let us our lives, our souls, / Our debts, our careful wives, / Our children and our sins lay on the king! / We must bear all.’
- 17 Montreux, Swiss resort town at the eastern end of Lake Geneva.
- 18 Headmistress of the school attended by Liza and Maria.
- 19 Romain Gary (1914–80). Married to Jean Seberg (1938–79), actor, from 1962 to 1970. Seberg had been romantically involved with Clint Eastwood (1930—), actor, who had played alongside Burton in Where Eagles Dare.
- 20 La Baronne Thierry de Zuylen, sister-in-law of Marie-Hélène de Rothschild.
- 21 James Joyce (1882–1941), novelist. His Finnegans Wake was published in 1939.
- 22 A Welsh hymn popular with male voice choirs, translating as: ‘I need you every hour’.
- 23 Another Welsh hymn – ‘Bryn Calvaria’ or ‘The Hill of Calvary’. This line translates as ‘Revive me with a breeze from Calvary’.
- 24 A line used frequently in The Merchant of Venice, Act IV, scene i.
- 25 Act III, scene iv.

- ⌋ The Dorchester Hotel, Park Lane, London.
- ⌋ H.S. Hawker Siddeley.
- ⌋ ‘Saes’, abbreviated ‘Saeson’, Welsh for the English.
- ⌋ Windsor, Berkshire.
- ⌋ Horsley Towers, East Horsley, Surrey.
- ⌋ Craig Berkeley had a brief career in the 1980s and 1990s as a make-up artist, starting with the Burton mini-series Wagner.
- ⌋ Eton and Harrow are considered to be the top public schools in England.
- ⌋ By ‘Buck House’ Burton means Buckingham Palace.
- ⌋ Tony Pellissier (1912–88), actor, screenwriter, producer, director.
- ⌋ Le Bourget airport, Paris.
- ⌋ Ringo Starr (1940—), former Beatle and actor and his wife Maureen (1946–94). Starr had appeared with Burton in Candy.
- ⌋ Possibly Richard Marden (d. 2008), the film editor, who would work on Anne of the Thousand Days.
- ⌋ This is a reference to Hamlet, Act I, scene v, where the ghost tells Hamlet ‘I could a tale unfold whose lightest word / Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood’.
- ⌋ Charles Dickens, A Christmas Carol (1843).
- ⌋ Werner Keller, The Bible as History (1955).
- ⌋ Arthur Schlesinger (1917–2007), A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House (1965).
- ⌋ Cadonau, Promenade, Gstaad.
- ⌋ The Apollo 8 mission launched on 21 December and returned on 27 December, having orbited the moon. The astronauts were Frank Borman (1928—), James Lovell (1928—) and William Anders (1933—).
- ⌋ Princess Elizabeth's first husband was Howard Oxenberg (1919–2010).
- ⌋ Burton had been involved in a scuffle outside The Load of Hay public house, Praed Street, Paddington, London. Most accounts suggest this took place in January 1963.
- ⌋ Carter Brown, pseudonym of Alan Geoffrey Yates (1923–85), author of crime fiction.

1969

- 1 John Arthur Chapman (1900–72), drama critic of the Daily News, 1943–71. Tell It To Sweeney: The Informal History of the New York Daily News (1961).
- 2 C. S. Forester, pseudonym of Cecil Louis Troughton Smith (1899–1966). Lord Hornblower (1946). Herbert Ernest Bates (1905–74), Fair Stood the Wind for France (1944).
- 3 Avare: Miser.
- 4 Mary McCarthy (1912–89). Kevin McCarthy (1914–2010), divorced from his first wife in 1961, was not to remarry until 1979. His girlfriend in 1969 was Swedish.
- 5 Henry Longhurst (1909–78), had published Only on Sundays (1964), a collection of his pieces from the

- Sunday Times*, and Talking about Golf (1966), a collection from Golf Illustrated.
- 6 Harold Nicolson (1886–1968), The Age of Reason (1960).
- 7 Frederick II, known as Frederick the Great (1712–86), King of Prussia (1740–86). Catherine II, known as Catherine the Great (1729–96), Empress of Russia (1762–96). Peter I, known as Peter the Great (1672–1725), Emperor of Russia (1682–1725). Louis XIV, also known as the ‘Roi Soleil’, the Sun King (1638–1715), King of France (1643–1715).
- 8 ‘The Crazy Gang’: British entertainers including Bud Flanagan (1896–1968), and Chesney Allen (1893–1982) active from the mid-1930s to the late 1950s.
- 9 Dorado, also known as Mahi-Mahi, commonly known as the dolphin fish.
- 0 Mismaloya: a beach 40 miles south of Puerto Vallarta, where much of The Night of the Iguana was shot.
- 1 Jack Keyward (possibly Hayward) – also a friend and neighbour in Puerto Vallarta.
- 2 La Grande Cascade au Bois de Boulogne, Allée de Longchamp, Paris.
- 3 Belons: flat oysters.
- 4 Presumably a reference to the appearance of survivors of the Nazi death camp at Bergen-Belsen.
- 5 The pub in Richard's home village.
- 6 This is a rather inaccurate borrowing from Archibald MacLeish's (1892–1982) poem ‘The End of the World’, published in 1935. The relevant lines are ‘Those thousands of white faces, those dazed eyes, / There in the starless dark, the poise, the hover/ There with vast wings across the canceled skies, / There in the sudden blackness the black pall/Of nothing, nothing, nothing – nothing at all.’
- 7 Dic Bach y Saer – literally ‘little Dic the carpenter’, Richard's father.
- 8 The Galerie d'Elysée of Alex Maguy. Edouard Vuillard (1868–1940); Moise Kisling (1891–1953); Albert Marquet (1875–1947): painters.
- 9 Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), French painter.
- 0 Maurice Utrillo (1883–1955), painter.
- 1 Ruth Hatfield of the Dalzell Hatfield Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles.
- 2 John Edward Reginald Wyndham, 6th Baron Leconfield and 1st Baron Egremont (1920–72).
- 3 Michael Innes, the pseudonym of J. I. M. Stewart (1906–94).
- 4 Paul C. Petrides (1901–93), art dealer, sole agent of Utrillo.
- 5 Possibly for the LP The World of Dylan Thomas, in Poetry and Prose (1971).
- 6 Thomas Thompson, ‘Power and Liz Burton’, Sunday Mirror, 19 January 1969.
- 7 David Orsmby-Gore (1918–95), 5th Baron Harlech.
- 8 A reference to the line by Sir Walter Raleigh (c.1552–1618), in ‘The Passionate Man's Pilgrimage’ (1604): ‘Give me my scallop-shell of quiet’.
- 9 ‘Like quills upon the fretful porpentine’, a line spoken by the Ghost in Hamlet, Act I, scene v. John of Gaunt, 1st Duke of Lancaster (1340–99), and a character in Shakespeare's Richard II.
- 0 ‘Whither thou goest, I will go’ – from the Book of Ruth in the Old Testament, Chapter I verse 16.
- 1 A reference to what was by this time known as the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, located at Fountain

Avenue, Los Angeles.

- 2 G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936), journalist, poet, novelist, critic. The line is usually rendered as ‘How beautiful it would be for someone who could not read.’
- 3 The Desert Inn, hotel and casino, Las Vegas (1950–2000).
- 4 The Pantages Theatre, built for the entrepreneur Alexander Pantages (1876–1936) in 1930. Phil Ober (1902–82), actor, married to his third wife, Jane Westover.
- 5 Charles Collingwood (1917–85), newscaster and writer. Louise Allbritton (1920–79), actor.
- 6 Ray Marshall, house agent in Puerto Vallarta.
- 7 Today a resort complex.
- 8 Burton's article, ‘Who Cares About Wales? I Care’, would appear in Look on 24 June 1969.
- 9 Gwyneth Jenkins, a close friend of Gwen, Ivor's wife and Richard's sister-in-law.
- 0 Ian Fleming (1908–64), You Only Live Twice (1964).
- 1 Nathaniel West, Miss Lonelyhearts (1933).
- 2 Red Smith (1905–82), sports journalist who had worked for the New York Herald Tribune.
- 3 Another version is that his last words were to ambulancemen: ‘Awfully sorry to trouble you chaps’.
- 4 Denis Brogan (1900–74), historian, academic, author of The Development of Modern France, 1870–1939 (1940), The French Nation, 1814–1940 (1957) and French Personalities and Problems (1946).
- 5 Philip Roth (1933—), Portnoy's Complaint (1969). Octavio Paz (1914–98), poet and essayist. The Labyrinth of Solitude: Life and Thought in Mexico, 1950; English translation 1961.
- 6 Simon Raven (1927–2001), novelist.
- 7 This would appear to be a paraphrase of Paz's argument rather than a direct quotation.
- 8 The quotation is not entirely accurate: it should be ‘certain principles, contained in brief formulas’, and ‘A person imprisoned by these schemes ... he cannot grow or mature’ (Labyrinth of Solitude, p. 25).
- 9 Michael Redgrave (1908–85), actor, father of Vanessa. Norman Charles Hunter (1908–71).
- 0 A Touch of the Sun (1958).
- 1 Presumably typed on the following day.
- 2 Hotel Rosita, Paseo Díaz Ordaz, Puerto Vallarta.
- 3 Mario Puzo (1920–99), The Godfather (1969).
- 4 Victor Wolfgang Von Hagen (1908–85), historian, anthropologist and writer. Burton might have been reading his The World of the Maya (1960).
- 5 Suzanne Blanc, The Rose Window (1968).
- 6 Georges Simenon (1903–89), author of, amongst other things, the Maigret detective stories.
- 7 Benito Pablo Juárez García (1806–72), President of Mexico. Emiliano Zapata (1879–1919), revolutionary leader.
- 8 James Baldwin (1924–87), novelist, playwright, essayist.
- 9 Sierra fish, also known as Pacific Sierra or Sierra Mackerel.
- 0 Presumably the ocean liner the SS France.

- 1 James Campbell (1951—), Talking at the Gates: A Life of James Baldwin (1991), having read (and quoted) the account of this incident relayed in Bragg's Rich, termed it (p. 231) a 'hideous accusation', suggesting that either Burton had made a mistake or that the thief was 'Baldwin's French friend – not quite "the same thing"'. He goes on (p. 232) to state that all of Baldwin's 'close associates who were asked for their opinion of the incident ... recoiled at the suggestion that Baldwin could be guilty of simple thieving'. The blame is then placed on the Frenchman, who, we are told, is later discovered to have been gaoled for armed robbery.
- 2 Letter not enclosed.
- 3 In excelsis: to a high degree.
- 4 Neither survive.
- 5 A reference to the lines from 'To His Coy Mistress' by Andrew Marvell (1621–78): 'But at my back I always hear / Time's wingèd chariot hurrying near'.
- 6 Mai Tai is a white and dark rum based cocktail also including curaçao, syrups and lime juice.
- 7 James 'Skip' Ward (1932–2003) had played the part of Hank Prosner in The Night of the Iguana. Stella Stevens (1938—), actor, glamour model.
- 8 Jalisco, the province in which Puerto Vallarta is situated.
- 9 Barbara Streisand (1942—), actor and singer.
- 0 William Shakespeare. King Lear, Act III, scene iv, a line spoken by Edgar, son of the Earl of Gloucester.
- 1 Gavin Maxwell (1914–69). The book referred to is probably The Rocks Remain, first published in 1963.
- 2 Posada Vallarta Hotel, Avenue de los Garzas, Puerto Vallarta.
- 3 Burro is Spanish for donkey, although it may also refer to a Mexican breed of donkey as opposed to those descended from European stock.
- 4 Professor Truetta, prominent orthopaedic surgeon.
- 5 A reference to a charity championed by Ben James.
- 6 Elizabeth, Lady Longford (1906–2002). Her biography, Victoria RI, was published in 1964.
- 7 Lytton Strachey, Queen Victoria (1921).
- 8 Antony Charles Robert Armstrong-Jones, 1st Earl of Snowdon (1930—), husband at the time of Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon (1930–2002). Mrs Armstrong-Jones is presumably Jennifer, the third wife and widow of the Earl of Snowdon's father Ronald (d. 1966), who was herself to remarry in June 1969. Mrs Ogmore-Pritchard is a character in Dylan Thomas's Under Milk Wood. Rather than Plas Newydd, Burton may mean the Armstrong-Jones home at Plas Dinas, Anglesey. Prince Charles (1948—) was invested as Prince of Wales at Caernarfon on 1 July 1969.
- 9 The Investiture came at a time when minority elements within the Welsh nationalist movement were active in planting bombs and threatening violence. Two members of Mudiad Amddiffyn Cymru (the Movement for the Defence of Wales) were killed when a bomb they were planting outside government offices in Abergele went off prematurely. Burton acted as narrator for Independent Television's coverage of the Investiture ceremony.

- 0 Charles Darwin (1809–82), The Origin of Species (1859).
- 1 Neither enclosed. Mira L. Waters (1945—), actor, singer and songwriter.
- 2 Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwlilllantisiliogogoch: a village on Anglesey in Wales.
- 3 Richard's primary school in Taibach.
- 4 Peter Maas (1929–2001), The Valachi Papers (1968).
- 5 Alfred Drake (1914–92) played Claudius, King of Denmark, in the 1964 production of Hamlet.
- 6 See diary entry for 20 October 1967.
- 7 Ezra Pound (1885–1972), poet.
- 8 Cunard Cottages, Cwmafan.
- 9 Michael Hordern was playing Thomas Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days and John Colicos (1928–2000) was playing Thomas Cromwell. Colicos would also act alongside Burton in Raid on Rommel.
- 0 The Governor of Jalisco was Francisco Medina Ascencio.
- 1 Evelyn Waugh (1903–66), Put Out More Flags (1942).
- 2 Evelyn Waugh, Decline and Fall (1928). The actual line (from p. 23 of the Penguin edition of 1937 is “‘That,’ said Dr Fagan [the headmaster of Llanabba Castle] with some disgust, “is my daughter.””
- 3 This is probably a reference to the line ‘The Lieutenant-Colonel looked at Basil with detestation, from Put Out More Flags, p. 64.
- 4 Cwlffyn is Welsh for ‘hunk’ or ‘lump’.
- 5 Evelyn Waugh. Scoop (1938); A Little Learning (1964); Officers and Gentlemen (1955); Men at Arms (1952).
- 6 Harry Karl (1914–82), businessman, running Karl's Shoe Stores retail chain, married (1960–73) to Debbie Reynolds (1932—), actor, singer, former wife of Eddie Fisher. A reference is also made to Queen Mary (Mary of Teck) (1867–1953), who had become Queen Dowager on the death of her husband, King George V (1865–1936), and to the ocean liner the RMS Queen Mary, in service 1936–67. Burton and Taylor had travelled on the Queen Elizabeth (not the Queen Mary) across the Atlantic in October 1964: Karl and Reynolds had been on the same voyage.
- 7 A reference to Julius Caesar, Act II, scene ii, where Caesar says ‘Cowards die many times before their deaths, / The valiant never taste of death but once.’
- 8 Aida, opera by Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901). Trumpet Voluntary by Henry Purcell (1659–95).
- 9 Burton may mean Charles Warwick Evans (1885–1974), cellist, who founded the London String Quartet, in 1908.
- 0 Adolph ‘Sailor’ Malan (1910–63), RAF fighter pilot in the Second World War. Group-Captain Leonard Cheshire (1917–92), RAF bomber pilot and recipient of the Victoria Cross, also from the Second World War. American Second World War hero Audie Murphy (1925–71). Siegfried Sassoon (1886–1967), First World War poet and recipient of the Military Cross.
- 1 Dick Hanley and John Lee.
- 2 Anthony Quayle (1913–89) was playing Cardinal Wolsey in Anne of the Thousand Days. He had produced

- and directed Burton at Stratford in a production of Henry IV (Part I), had played alongside him in that production and in Henry IV (Part 2), and had produced and directed him in Henry V.
- ‡ Mary Ure (1933–75), had played alongside Burton in Look Back in Anger and Where Eagles Dare.
 - ‡ Ava Gardner and Deborah Kerr (1921–2007) had played alongside Burton in The Night of the Iguana. Olivia de Havilland (1916—) had co-starred with him in My Cousin Rachel. Edith Evans (1888–1976) had had a part in Look Back in Anger. Fay Compton (1894–1978) had appeared on stage with Burton in Hamlet, King John, Coriolanus and The Tempest in 1953–4. Jean Simmons (1929–2010) co-starred with Burton in The Robe. Dorothy McGuire (1916–2001) had co-starred with Burton in Legend of Lovers. Helen Hayes (1900–93) had played opposite Burton in Time Remembered. Zena Walker (1934–2003) had appeared in a number of productions at the Old Vic, including Henry V in 1955–6.
 - ‡ Elisabeth Rachel Felix, known as Rachel (1821–58), Sarah Bernhardt (1844–1923), Eleanora Duse (1858–1924), actors.
 - ‡ Henry Mancini (1924–94), composer and conductor.
 - ‡ Eric Morecambe (1926–84) and Ernie Wise (1925–99), popular comedians who appeared in the Morecambe and Wise Show on British television.
 - ‡ A phrase from T. S. Eliot's The Waste Land (1922).
 - ‡ Margaret Furse (1911–74), costume designer for Anne of the Thousand Days. She was to receive an Oscar for her work on this film. She had been costume designer on Becket.
 - ‡ Hans Holbein the Younger (1498–1543), artist, who was King's Painter to Henry VIII.
 - ‡ Gore Vidal wrote three novels between 1952 and 1954 under the pseudonym Edgar Box. Morpheus: the Greek God of sleep and dreams.
 - ‡ Burton had played Heathcliff in a television production of Wuthering Heights for NBC in 1958
 - ‡ Siân Owen, daughter of Richard's sister Hilda.
 - ‡ Wynford Vaughan Thomas (1908–87), broadcaster, at this time Director of Programmes for HTV. Mike Towers was the co-ordinating director for ITV.
 - ‡ Shepperton Studios, Middlesex. The 'old house' is Littleton Park Manor, a seventeenth-century manor house.
 - ‡ Aston Clinton, Buckinghamshire. The road distance between Shepperton and Aston Clinton is about 48 miles. Ivor was a patient at Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Aylesbury, location of the national spinal injuries centre. The hospital is about four miles from Aston Clinton.
 - ‡ Hal Wallis (1898–1986), the producer. Charles Jarrott (1927—), the director.
 - ‡ This is a reference to the poems 'Pied Beauty' and 'Felix Randal' by Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844–89). 'Pied Beauty' includes the line 'All things counter, original, spare, strange' and ends with the line 'Praise him'. Felix Randal's last line is 'Didst fettle for the great grey drayhorse his bright and battering sandal!'
 - ‡ 'The baby' is a reference to Elizabeth.
 - ‡ Patricia, Joseph Losey's third wife.
 - ‡ Terence Hanbury White (1906–64), known as 'T. H.' or 'Tim', novelist, author of The Once and Future

King sequence of four novels (1938–58), on which was based the musical Camelot.

¶ In Verses (privately printed, 1962). ‘Vodka Poem To Richard Burton’ is the last in the volume (p. 43).

¶ Jason Robards (1922–2000), actor.

¶ Denis Quilley (1927–2003) played the part of Weston. Burton presumably means T. P. McKenna not O'Connor. McKenna (1929–2011) was playing the part of Norris. He would act alongside Burton again in Villain. However, Joseph O'Connor (1910–2001, sometimes O'Conor) was playing the part of Bishop Fisher in Anne of the Thousand Days. Cusack presumably refers to Cyril Cusack.

¶ Gary Bond (1940–95) played the part of Smeaton. He had appeared in Zulu. The unnamed actor might be Peter Jeffrey (1929–99), who played the part of Norfolk in Anne of the Thousand Days, and with whom Burton had worked on Becket.

¶ Tina Louise (1934—), actor, most famous for her role in the television series Gilligan's Island.

¶ Sir Henry Morgan (1635–88), Welsh buccaneer.

¶ A César Award for Best Actress.

- ‡ Margaret Hinxman, journalist, film critic, novelist.
- ‡ From Thomas Carlyle's (1795–1881) Signs of the Times (1829): 'The poorest Day that passes over us is the conflux of two Eternities.'
- ‡ Elia 'Gadge' Kazan (1909–2003), director, producer, playwright, novelist, and co-founder of the Actors' Studio.
- ‡ John Neville (1925–2011), who had acted with Burton in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night, Coriolanus, The Tempest, Henry V and Othello in the mid 1950s.
- ‡ Fergus Cashin (1925–2004), then working for the Daily Sketch, who would become one of Burton's biographers.
- ‡ The interview appeared as 'Richard Burton with Kenneth Tynan', in Hal Burton (ed.), Acting in the Sixties (1970).
- ‡ All Nazi concentration camps.
- ‡ Sidney Poitier (1927—).
- ‡ Lox cured salmon fillet, typically served in a bagel.
- ‡ The Guinea Grill, Mayfair.
- ‡ A more modest (though still well-appointed) motor vehicle.
- ‡ Burton's friend the actor Robert Hardy.
- ‡ Buck's Club, a gentlemen's club established in 1919 and situated at 18 Clifford Street, London.
- ‡ Possibly Richard's nephew, Gareth Owen.
- ‡ Burton provided the narrative for the 1969 son et lumière at Blenheim Palace.
- ‡ The Kalizma was berthed at Prince's Stairs, Rotherhithe.
- ‡ Institut Montesano, Gstaad, a girls' boarding school. Simmy: Simoleke Taylor.
- ‡ Neil Balfour.
- ‡ Burton is here referring to William Wordsworth's poem, 'Composed upon Westminster Bridge' (1802), which includes the lines 'The beauty of the morning: silent, bare', and 'Dear God! the very houses seem asleep; / And all that mighty heart is lying still!'.
- ‡ William Wordsworth, 'Michael: A Pastoral Poem' (1800).
- ‡ A reference to the lines from Wordsworth's 'Tintern Abbey' (1798): 'And I have felt / A presence that disturbs me with the joy / Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime / Of something far more deeply interfused, / Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns, / And the round ocean and the living air, / And the blue sky, and in the mind of man'.
- ‡ A reference to lines from the poem 'Lost in France' by Ernest Rhys (1859–1946): 'He had the ploughman's strength / in the grasp of his hand; / he could see a crow / three miles away'.
- ‡ William Somerset Maugham. (1874–1965), novelist, short story writer.
- ‡ Albert Camus (1913–60), novelist.
- ‡ Praxiteles, sculptor of Classical Greece, probably alive in the fourth century BC.
- ‡ Wendy and Derek Jenkins, the daughter-in-law and son of Gwyneth Jenkins, lived in East Molesey, Surrey.

- ⌋ The Leicester Arms Hotel, Penshurst, Tonbridge, Kent.
- ⌋ Hever Castle was the childhood home of Anne Boleyn. In 1969 it was owned by the Astor family, William Astor (1951—) being the 4th Viscount Astor. Penshurst Castle is usually known as Penshurst Place and is owned by the Sidney family. In 1969 the head of the family was William Sidney, 1st Viscount De L'Isle (1909–91).
- ⌋ Robert Shaw (1927–78) had played the role in A Man For All Seasons.
- ⌋ Usually written Shitsu or Shih-tzu.
- ⌋ Christopher Columbus (1451–1506), explorer.
- ⌋ La Guaira, Venezuela.
- ⌋ Leonardo Da Vinci (1452–1519), Renaissance man. Albert Einstein (1879–1955), physicist. Charles Darwin (1809–82), naturalist and scientist. Desiderius Erasmus (1466–1536), philosopher and theologian. Ivan Turgenev (1818–83), novelist. William Shakespeare (1564–1616), playwright. Alexander Pushkin (1799–1837), playwright, novelist, poet. Aristotle (384–322BC), philosopher. Pythagoras (c.570–c.495BC), mathematician and philosopher. Sigmund Freud (1856–1939), theorist of psychoanalysis. August Strindberg (1849–1912), novelist, essayist, playwright. ‘Fleurs du Mal’ is a reference to the poetry of Charles Baudelaire (1821–67). Stéphane Mallarmé (1842–98), poet. Socrates (469–399BC), philosopher. ‘The Huxleys’ is a reference to the multi-talented Huxley family, including Thomas Henry Huxley (1825–95), biologist, and his grandsons Julian Huxley (1887–1975), zoologist, biologist and humanitarian; Aldous Huxley (1894–1963), novelist and essayist; and Andrew Huxley (1917–2012), winner (together with two colleagues) of the 1963 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine for research into the central nervous system.
- ⌋ Liz Williams, Brook's wife, had a daughter from her previous marriage who suffered from cerebral palsy.
- ⌋ Jessica had been diagnosed (in the mid-1960s) as suffering from severe autism and schizophrenia.
- ⌋ Edwin ‘Buzz’ Aldrin (1930—) and Neil Armstrong (1930—) were members of the Apollo 11 moon landing mission and the first men to set foot on the surface of the moon, on 20 July 1969.
- ⌋ Edward ‘Teddy’ Kennedy (1932–2009), younger brother of John F. and Robert F. Kennedy, US Senator. In the early hours of 19 July 1969 he and his passenger, Mary Jo Kopechne (1940–69), had been involved in a car accident on Chappaquiddick Island, Massachusetts. Kopechne died and controversy surrounded Kennedy's actions in the immediate aftermath of the accident.
- ⌋ Pierre Salinger (1925–2004), Press Secretary to John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, briefly US Senator, campaign manager for Robert F. Kennedy's campaign in 1968. B. H. being Beverly Hills.
- ⌋ Alexander H. Cohen (1920–2000).
- ⌋ An adaptation of Henry David Thoreau's (1817–62) line, ‘The mass of men lead lives of quiet desperation’.
- ⌋ The Book of Isaiah 6: 6–7, in the King James version, ‘Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.’

-] George Moore (1852–1933), novelist, poet, playwright, who wrote that ‘a man travels the world in search of what he needs and returns home to find it’. John Millington Synge (1871–1909), playwright and poet.
-] Thomas Wolfe (1900–38), novelist, author of You Can't Go Home Again (1940).
-] A reference to the line in W. B. Yeats (1865–1939), The Second Coming (1919), ‘Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold.’
-] Laurie Lee (1914–97), As I Walked Out One Midsummer Morning (1969).
-] During the filming of Alexander the Great, which took place in Spain in 1955.
-] Coal hewer is an acceptable term for one who cut the coal, an alternative to collier, and more precise in its specification of the task than ‘coal miner’.
-] Thomas J. Roblin, choirmaster of the Afan Glee male choral society, who lived in Cwmafan and taught at the Cwmafan Boys’ School.
-] Burton is presumably here referring to Llywelyn ap Gruffudd (1230–82), Welsh prince, also known as Llywelyn ein llyw olaf (Llywelyn our last prince or Llywelyn the last).
-] Burton played Henry V at the Old Vic during the 1955–6 season. Arturo Toscanini (1867–1957), conductor. Lohengrin (1850), opera by Richard Wagner (1813–83).
-] Robert Burns (1759–96). The reference is to the lines from Burns’s poem ‘To a Mouse’ (1786): ‘Wee, sleekit, cow’rin, tim’rous beastie / O what a panic’s in thy breastie!’.
-] El Molar, due north of Madrid.
-] John Sullivan was a stuntman on Alexander the Great, also on The Longest Day and was Burton’s stunt double in Cleopatra.
-] General Francisco Franco (1892–1975), Head of State in Spain following the victory of the Nationalists over the Republicans in the Spanish Civil War in 1939.
-] David Ffolkes (1912—) was in charge of costumes for Alexander the Great.
-] A reference to the assassinations of President Abraham Lincoln (1809–65) in 1865, of President John F. Kennedy in 1963, of Robert F. Kennedy in 1968, and of Martin Luther King (1929–68), civil rights leader, in 1968. Macarthy is presumably Senator Joseph McCarthy (1908–57) of the 1950s anti-Communist witch-hunts, and Wallace is George Wallace (1919–98), Governor of Alabama (1963–7, 1971–9, 1983–7), 1968 candidate for the presidency. Wallace was the victim of an assassination attempt in 1972.
-] Lord Kinross (1904–76), Between Two Seas: The Creation of the Suez Canal (1968).
-] Ferdinand de Lesseps (1805–94), creator of the Suez Canal.
-] The taffrail is the aftermost portion of the poop-rail of a ship.
-] From Rupert Brooke’s ‘The Old Vicarage, Grantchester’ (1912): ‘To smell the thrilling-sweet and rotten / Unforgettable, unforgotten / River-smell’.
-] From Edmund Spenser, Prothalamian: ‘Sweet Thames, run softly, till I end my song’.
-] David Ryder, a 21-year-old victim of polio, walked from the length of mainland Britain from John O’Groats to Land’s End, leaving on 21 June and arriving on 22 August. An article featuring him appeared

- in the Sun on 26 July.
- [Sir Alan Patrick Herbert (1890–1971), writer, novelist and politician.
 -] The metric system had begun to be introduced into the United Kingdom in 1965.
 -] Quayle's autobiography, A Time to Speak (1990), mentions a holiday he spent with his mother's lover in Pontypridd.
 -] In London's Harley Street and Wigmore Street are to be found the practices of many leading doctors.
 -] Marne Maitland (1916–91) played the part of Campeggio. He had played the part of Euphranor in Cleopatra.
 -] Robert Beatty (1909–92) had played the part of Cartwright-Jones in Where Eagles Dare.
 -] A colloquial Welsh term for a very attractive woman.
 -] A reference to a line in Gerard Manley Hopkins's poem 'Pied Beauty' (1877): 'Fresh-firecoal chestnut-falls'.
 -] The line is from Shakespeare's Coriolanus, Act III, scene iii, spoken by Coriolanus: 'There is a world elsewhere'.
 -] Frederick F. Van de Water (1890–1968), Glory-Hunter: A Life of General Custer (1934). Although these are not direct quotations, they are true to the flowery style of the original. For example, p.67: 'Foremost rode the Michigan Brigade and at its head a youngster whose face was hardly less radiant than the newly risen sun.'
 - [Philip Hope-Wallace (1911–79), music and theatre critic.
 -] Dame Peggy Ashcroft (1907–91) had appeared with Taylor in Secret Ceremony. Dame Flora Robson (1902–84). Joan Plowright (1929—), who was to be made a Dame in 2004, had married Laurence Olivier in 1961. She would appear with Burton in the film Equus.
 -] Maggie Smith (1934—), had appeared with Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s.
 -] 'Charlie Brown', the central human character in the Peanuts comic strip.
 -] Richard Harris (1932–2002), actor, who would appear with Burton in The Wild Geese, and take over from him in the stage production of Camelot in 1981.
 -] William Squire (1916–89) played Thomas More in Anne of the Thousand Days. Squire had been born in Neath, had played alongside Burton in the Stratford productions of Henry IV (Part 2) and Henry V in 1951, and in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night, and Coriolanus in 1953–4. He had also played the part of Thomas in Where Eagles Dare.
 -] Josip Broz (1892–1980), Marshal Tito, President of Yugoslavia.
 -] Shw'd ichi heddi is Welsh for literally 'How are you today?' In this context it means someone of easy charm, with a hint of superficiality and insincerity.
 -] Anthony Quayle had a leading role in Tarzan's Greatest Adventure (1959), in which Gordon Scott (1926–2007) played the part of Tarzan.
 -] The Marlowe Society is the Cambridge University equivalent of OUDS.
 -] Alan Badel (1923–82) had appeared at Stratford with Burton in Henry IV (Parts 1 and 2), The Tempest and

- Henry V*. He would also feature in The Medusa Touch.
- 2 Harry Fleetwood Andrews (1911–89) had appeared at Stratford with Burton in Henry IV (Parts 1 and 2).
He had played alongside him in Alexander the Great and would do so again in Equus.
- 3 Emile Zola (1840–1902), novelist.
- 4 Richard II, Richard III, Hamlet.
- 5 Ernest Christopher Dowson (1867–1900), poet. Alfred Edward Housman (1859–1936), poet. Burton presumably means William McGonagall (1825–1902), poet.
- 6 Marat/Sade, the Peter Weiss play, translated into English and directed by Peter Brook in 1964, which ran on Broadway from 1965 to 1967. Peter Brook also directed the 1967 film version. Simone Signoret (1921–85), actor.
- 7 Quayle's (second) wife was Dorothy Hyson (1914–96), actor.
- 8 From Francis Bacon (1561–1626), Of Studies.
- 9 Burton's nickname for Bob Wilson's wife Alice.
- 10 J. Paul Getty (1892–1976), industrialist and multimillionaire.
- 11 Roman Polanski (1933—). Sharon Tate (1943–69). Charles Manson (1934—) was the leader of the group that carried out the murders.
- 12 In which Michael related the story of his thwarted attempt to leave Hawaii, his desire to rejoin Elizabeth and Richard in Europe, and his discovery of 'Jesus and Universal Love'.
- 13 Colicos remained married to his wife, Mona McHenry, until 1981.
- 14 'Over the hills and far away' is an English song of the eighteenth century. 'Will ye no come back again' is a Scottish song, written in the nineteenth century, about the Jacobite Rebellion of 1745. 'Where is my wandering boy tonight' was a music hall song written by Clarence Wainwright Murphy and Albert Hall in 1894.
- 15 Burton was at South Moreton, Oxfordshire.
- 16 Molly and Emlyn Williams, Brook's parents.
- 17 An adaptation of Enobarbus's line about Cleopatra, in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, Act II, scene ii: 'Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale / her infinite variety'.
- 18 John Milton's epic poem Paradise Lost (1667) runs to 10 or 12 books.
- 19 The Bear at Home Inn, North Moreton.
- 20 This may refer to the fictional pool player, who appeared in Walter Tevis's novel The Hustler (1959) and in the 1961 film of the same name, or it may refer to Rudolf Walter Wanderone (1913–96), who had been known as 'New York Fats' until the popularity of The Hustler encouraged him to change his nickname, and who had become a minor celebrity by the late 1960s.
- 21 The Talk of the Town cabaret restaurant, on the corner of Charing Cross Road and Leicester Square.
- 22 This a reference to a Nehru jacket, a very fashionable cut at the time with a mandarin collar, named after the first Prime Minister of India, Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964).
- 23 'Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may!' Is the correct citation from The Confessions of Aleister

Crowley (1875–1947).

- ‡ A reference to the 1844 poem ‘The Day is Done’ by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (1807–82), which includes the lines ‘shall fold their tents, like the Arabs, and quietly steal away.’
- ‡ Roughly, ‘she is unattractive. She isn't unattractive but everyone to his own taste’.
- ‡ Didacticism.
- ‡ Khalil Gibran, The Prophet, (1923).
- ‡ The New Bell Inn, London Road, Aston Clinton.
- ‡ Carlos Baker, Ernest Hemingway: A Life Story (1969).
- ‡ Ernest Hemingway, For Whom The Bell Tolls (1940).
- ‡ St Tropez, Provence.
- ‡ Resorts in Corsica and Sardinia.
- ‡ Inn for Trouble (1960), directed by C. M. Pennington Richards (1911–2005), and starring Peggy Mount (1915–2001) and David Kossoff (1919–2005).
- ‡ Dr Alain Rossier (1930–2006), specialist in spinal injuries at Beausejour Hospital at the University of Geneva, himself paraplegic.
- ‡ Many studies of Mussolini appeared in English in the 1960s. Evelyn Waugh, Vile Bodies (1930).
- ‡ Alan Williams (1935—) had at this time published four thrillers. Eric Ambler (1909–98), author of espionage novels and screenwriter.
- ‡ A. E. Housman, A Shropshire Lad (1896).
- ‡ Esmond Knight (1906–87), who had acted with Burton in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and Anne of the Thousand Days. He had been wounded while serving on the battleship the Prince of Wales during its encounter with the Bismarck.
- ‡ Stewart Alsop (1914–74), The Center: People and Power in Washington (1968).
- ‡ The Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Geneva.
- ‡ A reference to the docklands area of Cardiff.
- ‡ Dr J. J. Walsh, Ivor's doctor at Stoke Mandeville.
- ‡ Les Diablerets (3,210m), south of Gstaad.
- ‡ Charles Dickens (1812–70). Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832). Edward Gibbon (1737–94). George Grote (1794–1871), whose History of Greece ran to 12 volumes in its original publication (1846–56).
- ‡ Berliner Ensemble: German theatre company established by the playwright, theatre director and poet Bertolt Brecht (1898–1956).
- ‡ Jean-Paul Sartre (1905–80), writer and philosopher, recipient of the Nobel Prize for Literature, 1964. His play Le Diable et le Bon Dieu had been published in 1951. Jean-Louis Barrault (1910–94), French director and actor.
- ‡ Goetz is the central character in Sartre's play.
- ‡ Lev Tolstoy (1828–1910), novelist.
- ‡ Burton means L'Hôpital Cantonal.

- 1 Samuel Johnson (1709–84). Line (from 1777) ‘When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life; for there is in London all that life can afford.’
- 2 The leaf of the aspen tree is renowned for fluttering in very light wind.
- 3 A reference to St Vitus dance (also known as Sydenham's chorea), a complaint involving uncontrollable movements.
- 4 Cartier the jewellers. This was the ‘Taylor-Burton’ diamond of 69.42 carats.
- 5 The Ed Sullivan Show was a variety show that screened on CBS on Sunday nights from 1948 to 1971, presented by Ed Sullivan (1901–74).
- 6 Hjordis Niven (1921–97), wife of David Niven.
- 7 Cook, aged 23, of South Ruislip, Middlesex, had pleaded guilty to 11 charges of stealing cars and other property and asked for eight similar offences to be taken into consideration.
- 8 Margaret Katherine Kelly, known as ‘Peggy’ (1925–91). Lady Fford is possibly Lady Jean Fford (1920—), Countess of Arran.
- 9 Winthrop Rockefeller (1912–73), Governor of Arkansas, whose second wife was Jeannette McDonnell.
- 0 Hôtel Hermitage, Monaco.
- 1 M.C.: Monte Carlo.
- 2 A Man For All Seasons (1966), directed by Fred Zinnemann (1907–97), had won five Oscars. The Lion in Winter (1968), directed by Anthony Harvey (1931—), had won three Oscars.

1970

- 1 Burton and Taylor had spent a few days staying with Frank Sinatra at his home at Rancho Mirage, California.
- 2 Sinatra had been served with a subpoena by the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation and forced to appear before it in February.
- 3 Mike Romanoff (1890–1971), former Hollywood restaurateur, actor.
- 4 Encounter magazine (1953–91), co-founded by Stephen Spender.
- 5 Julie Andrews (1935—). The Sound of Music (1965) directed by Robert Wise (1914–2005). Andrews had won an Oscar for Mary Poppins (1964) and an Oscar nomination for The Sound of Music. She had then starred in Torn Curtain (1966), Hawaii (1966), Thoroughly Modern Millie (1967), Star! (1968) and Darling Lili (1969). The last two were not as successful as Andrews's previous films.
- 6 Blake Edwards (1922–2010), director, and (from 1969), husband of Julie Andrews, who had directed Darling Lili.
- 7 Yelapa, 20 miles south along the coast from Puerto Vallarta.
- 8 A palapa is a house or hut with a thatched roof made of palm leaves. It is typically open-sided.
- 9 Sherlock Holmes, fictional detective created by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle (1859–1930).
- 0 Christopher Wilding and Christopher Taylor, Elizabeth's nephew.

- 1 Quayle won a Drama Desk Award (for ‘excellence in theatre’) for his role in the play Sleuth, written by Anthony Shaffer (1926–2001).
- 2 The title was actually Madrigal's Magic Key to Spanish.
- 3 Collingwood's novel The Defector had been published in 1970. There is no record of the film ever being made.
- 4 Phil Ober (1902–82), actor.
- 5 A reference to the evangelical hymns of Ira D. Sankey (1840–1908) and Dwight L. Moody (1837–99).
- 6 The Shakespearean character Bardolph (Henry IV (Part 1)), who suffers from red blotches and carbuncles on his face.
- 7 The last quotation from Dylan (Marlais) Thomas's (1914–53) ‘Poem in October’ is inaccurate: ‘It was my thirtieth / Year to heaven stood there then in the summer noon / Though the town below lay leaved with October blood.’
- 8 A reference to Corinthians 1: 13.
- 9 Sylvia Townsend Warner (1893–1978), whose T. H. White had appeared in 1967, quotes White's lecture ‘The Pleasures of Learning’ (1963): ‘My parents loathed each other and were separated, divorced, when I was about fourteen or so. This meant that my home and education collapsed about my ears; and ever since I have been arming myself against disaster. That is why I learn.’ Warner also explains that in the lecture White quotes from The Sword in the Stone the passage beginning, “‘The best thing for being sad”, replied Merlyn, “is to learn something””.
- 0 Maureen Stapleton (1925–2006), actor, who suffered from alcoholism.
- 1 ‘Paddy’ might refer to Sir Marmaduke Nevill Patrick Somerville Coghill (1896–1981), elder brother of Nevill and 6th Baronet Coghill.
- 2 DMZ: the De-Militarized Zone between the states of North and South Vietnam. The Hien Luong Bridge crossed the Ben Hai River which formed part of the boundary between the North and the South.
- 3 Army Archerd (1922–2009), Hollywood columnist for Variety.
- 4 Bob Hope (1903–2003), actor and comedian.
- 5 John David Morley (1948—), later to become a novelist.
- 6 Anthony Quinn (1915–2001), actor. Thomas Wolfe, Of Time and the River (1935).
- 7 Jacqueline Bisset (1944—), is English, although her mother was part-French. Bisset was educated at a French school in London and speaks French fluently.
- 8 The Boys in the Band (1970), directed by William Friedkin (1935—), based on the play by Matt Crowley (1935—), which dealt with issues of male homosexuality.
- 9 Burton means Jo Roddy.
- 0 Z, directed by Costa-Gavras (1933—), won the Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film.
- 1 James Jones (1921–77), author of the novel From Here To Eternity (1951), made into a successful film in 1953.
- 2 Phyllis Diller (1917—), actor. Vincent Price (1911–93), actor.

- 3 John Wayne (1907–79), actor, nominated for Best Actor for his performance in True Grit. Sometimes known as ‘The Duke’.
- 4 Jon Voight (1938—) and Dustin Hoffman (1937—), both nominated for Best Actor for their performances in Midnight Cowboy.
- 5 Peter O'Toole was nominated for Best Actor for his performance in Goodbye Mr Chips.
- 6 Goldie Hawn (1945—), nominated for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Cactus Flower.
- 7 Liza Minnelli (1946—), daughter of actor Judy Garland (1922–69) and Vincente Minnelli, nominated for Best Actress for her performance in The Sterile Cuckoo.
- 8 Adlai Stevenson (1900–65), twice the Democratic candidate for the US presidency. ‘Birchite’ refers to the right-wing John Birch Society.
- 9 The Chandler family had published the LA Times since 1917. Otis Chandler (1927–2006) was in control in 1970.
- 0 Gig Young (1913–78) won Best Supporting Actor for his performance in They Shoot Horses, Don't They?
- 1 A reference to the annual almanac of cricket, Wisden.
- 2 Jennifer Salt (1944—), who had acted alongside Jon Voight in Midnight Cowboy. Waldo Salt (1917–87), had won his Oscar for the same film.
- 3 Rupert Crosse (1927–73), nominated for Best Supporting Actor for his performance in The Reivers. Elliott Gould (1938—), nominated for Best Supporting Actor for his performance in Bob and Ted and Carol and Alice. Susannah York (1939–2011). Jane Fonda (1937—), nominated for Best Actress for her performance in They Shoot Horses, Don't They? Sylvia Miles (1926—), nominated for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Midnight Cowboy. The Black Panther Party was a Marxist organization which aimed to articulate the grievances of Black Americans, and which was at the height of its influence in the late 1960s.
- 4 Elizabeth Longford (1906–2002), Wellington: The Years of the Sword (1969).
- 5 Garcia Barragán (1895–1979), Secretary of National Defense in Mexico (1964–70). By ‘P.R.O.’ presumably Burton means a public relations official. The city of Guadalajara, the capital of Jalisco, is about 160 miles east of Puerto Vallarta, and is over 5,000 feet above sea level.
- 6 Luis Echeverría (1922—), President of Mexico (1970–76).
- 7 Barragan's son's name was actually Carlos.
- 8 By 1970 there were four biographies of Fleming in print, all published in 1965 or 1966. Fabrica de Francia is a department store chain.
- 9 On the northern shore of the Bahia de Banderas, 2 miles from Puerto Vallarta.
- 0 Alan Moorehead (1910–83), Eclipse (1946; Burton was reading the 1967 abridged edition).
- 1 Joan Crawford (1905–77), who had appeared on Here's Lucy on 26 February 1968.
- 2 Jerry Paris (1925–86), director and actor.
- 3 Gary Morton (1924–99), comedian and television producer.
- 4 Ruth Berle (1921–89), wife of television comedian Milton Berle (1908–2002).

- 5 Rosalind Russell (1907–76), actor.
- 6 Gale Gordon (1906–95). Cliff Norton (1918–2003).
- 7 The Malibu Colony, Malibu, west of Santa Monica, California.
- 8 Norman Rockwell (1894–1978), artist, in part famous for his covers for the Saturday Evening Post, which offered reassuring portrayals of American society.
- 9 The poetry reading in 1964 at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, which was Taylor's first stage appearance.
- 0 Ernest K. Gann (1901–91), whose novel The Antagonists would be published in 1971. It became a TV mini-series (starring Peter O'Toole and Anthony Quinn) under the title Masada in 1981. Masada refers to Jewish resistance to the Roman Empire focused on the fortification of Masada in AD 72–73.
- 1 All honours in the British honours system. CBE: Commander of the British Empire. MBE: Member of the British Empire. OBE: Order of the British Empire. OM: Order of Merit. It is not clear what Burton means by 'CM': it might be CMG: Companion of the Order of St Michael and St George.
- 2 The four Beatles had been awarded the MBE in 1965. In 1969 John Lennon returned his in protest at American involvement in the Vietnam War and at British involvement in the conflict in Biafra.
- 3 James Stewart (1908–97), actor. Henry Fonda (1905–82), actor.
- 4 A reference to Mary Shelley's novel Frankenstein, or the Modern Prometheus, first published in 1818. In fact the original character is named Victor, although this did not remain consistent in all film versions of the story and its offshoots.
- 5 Conrad 'Nicky' Hilton (1926–69), socialite and businessman, Elizabeth Taylor's first husband.
- 6 Hilton's second wife, Patricia (the marriage ended 1965).
- 7 The Menninger Psychiatric Hospital, Houston, Texas.
- 8 Conrad Hilton (1887–1979), hotelier.
- 9 Howard Hughes (1905–76), businessman who had been a film producer and film director and was by this time a notorious recluse.
- 0 John D. Macdonald (1916–86), One Monday We Killed Them All (1961).
- 1 Harold Wilson (1916–95), British Labour Party politician, Prime Minister 1964–70, 1974–76.
- 2 Emlyn Williams had been appointed a CBE in 1962, but did not receive another honour. KBE: Knight Commander of the British Empire. Plaid Cymru, the Welsh Nationalist party, had won the parliamentary seat of Carmarthen in a by-election in 1966.
- 3 There were 36 parliamentary constituencies in Wales in 1970.
- 4 Edward Heath (1916–2005), British Conservative Party politician, Prime Minister 1970–74.
- 5 Aloysius is the name of Sebastian Flyte's teddy bear in Evelyn Waugh's Brideshead Revisited (1945).
- 6 Cliff Morgan (1930—), Welsh rugby player and broadcaster, was, with Geoffrey Nicholson, editing Touchdown and other Moves in the Game, to celebrate the centenary of the Rugby Football Union.
- 7 Tonmawr: a mining community in the Pelenna valley a mile due north of Pontrhydyfen.
- 8 Hugh 'Binkie' Beaumont (1908–73), theatre impresario and managing director of the H. M. Tennent theatrical agency, who had given Burton his first professional contract in 1948. John Perry (1906–95),

- playwright and theatre director, who adapted the Elizabeth Bowen play Castle Anna, in which Burton had starred in 1948.
- 9 Reader's Digest: a monthly magazine.
 - 0 Jim Murray (1919–98), sports journalist writing for the LA Times. Hank Aaron (1934—), baseball player.
 - 1 Willy Brandt (1913–92), Chancellor of West Germany (1969–74).
 - 2 Tommy Aaron (1937—), golfer, won the Atlanta Classic tournament.
 - 3 Rawhide was a television series that ran from 1959 to 1965, and which starred Clint Eastwood as the character Rowdy Yates.
 - 4 Boris Karloff (1887–1969), actor. Bela Lugosi (1882–1956), actor. This might have been The Body Snatcher (1945), directed by Robert Wise.
 - 5 Creature Features (1970–71).
 - 6 President Nixon had announced his decision to invade Cambodia in April 1970. This led to furious protests, including student demonstrations at Kent State University, Ohio. There the National Guard had opened fire on demonstrators on 4 May, killing four people.
 - 7 Harry Guardino (1925–95), actor, who appeared in Hell is for Heroes (1962), directed by Don Siegel (1912–91).
 - 8 The city of Palm Springs, Riverside County, California, about 110 miles east of Los Angeles.
 - 9 Sydney Guilaroff (1907–97), chief hairstylist at MGM studios, who had worked with Burton and Taylor on various films including The Night of the Iguana, The Sandpiper, and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, and before that with Taylor on Cat on a Hot Tin Roof and Butterfield 8.
 - 0 Probably a reference to Elizabeth Taylor and Jim Benton.
 - 1 The Dow Jones average had hit bottom on 26 May, having lost 30% of its value since the beginning of 1969. On 27 May it closed 32 points up.
 - 2 It rose above 700 points on 29 May, and did dip below this in June, and again in July, but did not return to the low figure reached on 26 May, and from early July rose steadily.
 - 3 Sir Henry Newbolt (1862–1938), poet. Burton is making a reference to a line from Newbolt's 'Drake's Drum' (1897): 'Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?'
 - 4 Aldous Huxley's The Devils of Loudon (1952) had been written as a play (The Devils) by John Whiting (1917–63) and performed at Stratford in 1961. Anthony Shaffer (1926–2001), playwright, author of Sleuth (1970). Identical twin brother of Peter Shaffer (1926—), playwright, author of Equus (1973) which Burton would play on stage and on film.
 - 5 Louis Solomon (1911–81), screenwriter and producer.
 - 6 Burton is here referring to the 1963 CBS television documentary Elizabeth Taylor in London. Sidney Joseph Perelman (1904–79), author and screenwriter.
 - 7 The Indianapolis 500 motor race, over a distance of 500 miles, held at Speedway, Indiana.
 - 8 Jim Clark (1936–68), Formula One racing driver and winner of two World Championships, competed in the Indianapolis 500 five times and won it in 1965.

- 9 Henry Hathaway (1898–1985), director, who was to work with Burton on Raid on Rommel.
-] A backhanded reference to John Drinkwater (1882–1937), playwright and poet.
-] Neiman-Marcus, a luxury retail department store.
-] The journalist was Jo Roddy, whose article ‘How Do I Love Thee? Let Me Count the Ways’, appeared in Look’s issue of 16 June 1970. Jonah Ruddy was Hollywood correspondent for the New Musical Express.
-] George Sisler (1893–1973), baseball player, elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1939.
-] Desert Hospital, North Indian Canyon Drive, Palm Springs.
-] Absalom, third son of David, King of Israel, who rebelled against his father and was killed in battle.
-] Burton is referring here to his impending film. Raid on Rommel (1971), shot in Mexico.
-] Emmys: the awards of the (America) Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.
-] Patty Duke (1946—) received an Emmy for Outstanding Lead Actress for her role in My Sweet Charlie. Wuthering Heights had screened on NBC on 9 May 1958.
-] Albert Speer (1905–81), architect, Nazi Germany’s Minister of Armaments and War Production (1942–5), who had served 20 years’ imprisonment for war crimes after being sentenced at the Nuremberg trials.
-] None of these projects appear to have borne fruit.
-] Airport (1969), directed by George Seaton (1911–79). *M*A*S*H* (1970), directed by Robert Altman (1925–2006). Marooned (1969) directed by John Sturges (1911–92).
-] Catch 22 (1970), directed by Mike Nichols, based on the 1961 novel by Joseph Heller (1923–99). The article ‘Some are More Yossarian than Others’ appeared in Time for 15 June 1970. The relevant paragraph states: ‘Richard Burton remembers meeting Nichols and [Elaine] May [1932—, director, screenwriter, actor, who worked with Nichols] backstage when he was starring in Camelot. “Elaine was too formidable ... one of the most intelligent, beautiful and witty women I had ever met. I hoped I would never see her again.” Mike was less formidable, more agreeable. The mustard-colored eyes glinted, but the face had an unlined, almost feminine softness. The voice was as warm and resonant as a cello. Burton, who knows role playing when he sees it, was at first unconvinced by the proffered friendship and admiration. But eventually he enrolled Nichols in the Richard Burton fan club; it was an attachment that would one day pay off handsomely for Nichols.’ Later in the article there is another passage: ‘Richard Burton likes to retell the story of Walter Matthau, “a frenetic soul, and he finally blew his stack at Nichols’ Odd Couple direction. ‘You’re emasculating me,’ Walter cried. ‘Give me back my balls!’ From out front, Mike called back: ‘Props.’” ‘Mike was Burton’s kind of boy. As the Liz–Dick scandal deepened during the filming of Cleopatra, Burton recalls, “Ninety percent of our friends avoided our eyes. Mike flew to Rome from New York to be with us.” Nichols stayed by Elizabeth’s side when Burton went off to make another film. Favors like that one remembers. In 1966, the Welshman and his lady were signed for Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, and Elizabeth insisted on Nichols as director. Virginia Woolf could have been a mini-Cleopatra, but its below-the-belt punches intrigued critics and audiences.’
-] Morgan accepted the article as it stood, terming it ‘magic’.
-] Cyril Connolly (1903–74), literary critic and essayist.

- ⌋ This may refer to Emlyn Williams's unhappy experiences when taking over from John Gielgud in the part of the Headmaster in the play Forty Years On by Alan Bennett (1934—) at the Apollo. The play had run for nine months when Williams replaced Gielgud in September 1969, but it closed abruptly thereafter. Williams then spent some time in hospital undergoing an operation on his varicose veins.
- ⌋ King George VI (1895–1952) suffered from a stammer. Kenneth Kent (1892–1963), actor. Radie Harris (1904–2001), Hollywood journalist. Herbert Marshall (1890–1966), actor.
- ⌋ Esmé Percy (1887–1957), actor.
- ⌋ Wilfrid Hyde-White (1903–91), who had married the actor Ethel Drew in 1957.
- ⌋ In a first round game in Group 1, the hosts Mexico beat Belgium 1–0 with a penalty scored in the 14th minute.
- ⌋ The Rains of Ranchipur (1955), directed by Jean Negulesco (1900–93).
- ⌋ Both the actor Sybil Thorndike (1882–1976), and the choreographer and dancer Sir Frederick Ashton (1904–88) were admitted to the Order of the Companions of Honour in 1970.
- ⌋ Spartacus (1960), directed by Stanley Kubrick (1928–99). Ice Palace (1960), directed by Vincent Sherman (1906–2006).
- ⌋ Cover-bound,' referring to book.
- ⌋ Reputedly the cable read 'By the Lord Harry, Larry'.
- ⌋ Sir Donald Wolfitt (1902–68), actor and theatre manager, who had appeared alongside Burton in Becket.
- ⌋ About 23 miles west of Palm Springs.
- ⌋ The part of the medical officer in Raid on Rommel was to be played by Clinton Greyn (1936—).
- ⌋ Charlotte Brontë, (1816–55) Jane Eyre (1847).
- ⌋ Bermuda Dunes Hotel, Adams Street, Bermuda Dunes, Palm Springs.
- ⌋ A reference to William Wordsworth's preface to the 1802 edition of the Lyrical Ballads, in which he defined poetry as 'the spontaneous overflow of powerful feeling; it takes its origin in emotion recollected in tranquillity'.
- ⌋ Arthur Rimbaud (1854–91), French poet.
- ⌋ Jordan Christopher, Kate's stepfather.
- ⌋ Burton and Taylor had appeared on The David Frost Show on 19 March 1970.
- ⌋ The opening line of Kate's speech in The Taming of the Shrew, Act V, scene i: 'Fie, fie! Unknit that threat'ning unkind brow'.
- ⌋ 1955.
- ⌋ Despite playing the part of the American actor Edwin Booth, Burton hums the eighteenth-century Welsh love song 'Bugeilio'r Gwenith Gwyn' to his ailing wife Mary.
- ⌋ Zero Mostel (1915–77), actor.
- ⌋ Man of La Mancha (1972), directed by Arthur Hiller (1923—), starring Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren.
- ⌋ Enid Starkie (1897–1970), fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and an expert on Rimbaud. 'J'en ai trop pris' is perhaps better rendered as 'I have had enough'.

- ⌋ George Peppard (1928–94), who starred in Tobruk (1967), directed by Arthur Hiller.
- ⌋ In fact the Conservative Party won 330 seats against 287 for the Labour Party. With the support of the Ulster Unionists, Edward Heath (1916–2005) was able to form a government based on a parliamentary majority of 30.
- ⌋ This could refer to the film Batman (1966), directed by Leslie Martinson (1915—), or to the television series of the same name, featuring some of the same cast as the film, which ran from 1966 to 1968. Possibly Burton is referring to the National Auditorium in Mexico City, which was the venue for gymnastics events at the 1968 Olympic Games, or to the Arena Mexico, the venue for the boxing tournament at the Olympics, which remained a major boxing venue for many years.
- ⌋ Cornel Wilde (1912–89). Burton may be mistaken here. The 1962 film Marco Polo starred Rory Calhoun (1922–99) in the lead role. Marco Polo (1254–1324), explorer, traveller, merchant.
- ⌋ Vasco De Gama (c.1460–1524), Portuguese explorer.
- ⌋ Sébastien Japrisot (1931–2003), novelist.
- ⌋ Possibly Arthur Lubin (1898–1995), film director. Dustin Hoffman. Albert Finney (1936—), actor. Chaim Topol (1935—), actor.
- ⌋ Burton means the character of Dulcinea del Toboso.
- ⌋ Sam O'Steen (1923—), who had edited Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, The Graduate (1967) and Catch 22 (1970), amongst other films, and who went on to direct, mainly films for television.
- ⌋ Tony Jacklin (1944—), golfer, who had won the British Open in 1969, won his second (and final) 'major' at the US Open at Hazeltine in 1970.
- ⌋ Joe Morgenstern (1932—), film critic for Newsweek (1965–83).
- ⌋ Burton probably means 'household names'.
- ⌋ Cecil Smith (1917–2009), by this time television critic for the LA Times, but previously drama critic.
- ⌋ Brook Williams did play the part of Sergeant Joe Reilly. Christopher Cary (1930–2000) played the part of the 'C.O.' or conscientious objector, Corporal Peter Merrihew. He also played alongside Burton in Camelot on Broadway in 1960.
- ⌋ Carol Reed (1906–76), who produced and directed Odd Man Out in 1947. Jimmy Granger being the actor Stewart Granger (1913–93), whose real first name was James, and who would play alongside Burton in The Wild Geese. James Mason played the leading role of Johnny McQueen.
- ⌋ Des O'Connor (1932—) hosted seven American versions of his show in the summer of 1970.
- ⌋ John Colicos (1928–2000) played Sergeant Major Al MacKenzie.
- ⌋ A reference to Joxer Daly, a character in Sean O'Casey's (1880–1964) play Juno and the Paycock (1924), although the line (the final line in the play) 'th' whole worl's in a terrible state o' chassis' is spoken by Captain Boyle.
- ⌋ Leonid Brezhnev (1906–82), General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (1964–82). Spiro Agnew (1918–96), Vice-President of the USA (1969–73). By 'Fred' Kennedy presumably Burton means Edward 'Ted' Kennedy. By 'Humphreys' presumably he means Hubert Humphrey. Mao Tse Tung

- (now usually written as ‘Zedong’) (1893–1976), Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party (1943–76). By Cho en Lai Burton means Zhou Enlai (1898–1976), Premier of the People's Republic of China (1949–76). Uncle Tom Cobby is a character from the song ‘Widdecombe Fair’ and is often used to suggest ‘many others’.
- ⌋ Rodomontade: a vainglorious boasting.
 - ⌋ Enoch Powell (1912–98), a Conservative MP and former minister who expressed strong opposition to immigration from Commonwealth countries into Britain, and who later moved to join the Ulster Unionists.
 - ⌋ Co-operative store.
 - ⌋ Burton is referring here to the industrial disputes of 1921 and 1926.
 - ⌋ Short quotations encapsulating the doctrine of Maoism were fashionable in leftist circles in the late 1960s and early 1970s.
 - ⌋ Sidney Webb, 1st Baron Passfield (1859–1947), Fabian socialist and Labour Party politician, who coined the phrase ‘the inevitability of gradualness’ in 1923.
 - ⌋ The more it changes the more it stays the same.
 - ⌋ A reference to the idealism of the founding of the American Republic.
 - ⌋ A reference to the Jesuit maxim, ‘Give me a child for the first seven years, and you may do what you like with him afterwards.’
 - ⌋ Turnout at the 1970 general election was 72%, as against 75.8% in 1966. It was to rise to 78.8% at the February 1974 general election. Labour support is generally thought to be more vulnerable than that of the Conservatives to a low turnout, and it was widely predicted by opinion pollsters during the campaign that there would be greater abstention amongst Labour supporters. In fact, as David Butler and Michael Pinto-Duchinsky note in their study The British General Election of 1970 (1971) (p.184): ‘The actual voting figures ... give no support to the idea that Labour abstention was the key factor in the results’, and suggest that there was a differential turnout of only 1% in the Conservatives’ favour.
 - ⌋ Frank Beard (1939—), Pro (1970).
 - ⌋ Arnold Palmer (1929—); Gary Player (1935—); Jack Nicklaus (1940—); Billy Casper (1931—), all golfers.
 - ⌋ Peter Ustinov played the part of the doctor in Hammersmith Is Out. Elizabeth Taylor played the part of Jimmie Jean Jackson, and Burton that of Hammersmith.
 - ⌋ Leslie Caron (1931—), actor and dancer. Daddy Long Legs (1955), film directed by Jean Negulesco.
 - ⌋ A reference to Ecclesiastes 9: 10: ‘Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.’
 - ⌋ King Richard speaking in Richard II, Act V, scene v.
 - ⌋ General Confession from Morning Prayer in the Book of Common Prayer (1662): ‘We have left undone those things which we ought to have done’.
 - ⌋ San Felipe, Baja California, Mexico.

- 7 John D. Macdonald (1916–86), who wrote a 21-vol. series featuring the character Travis Magee.
- 8 Erle Stanley Gardner (1889–1970), who published under many pseudonyms and created the character Perry Mason.
- 9 By ‘fave’ Burton means fava beans, also known as broad beans.
- 0 Alex Lucas would produce Hammersmith Is Out.
- 1 Mexicali, state capital of Baja California, and on the border between Mexico and the USA.
- 2 Karl-Otto Alberty (1933—) played the part of Captain Heinz Schröder. He would also play alongside Burton in Bluebeard.
- 3 Ruben's Campground Hotel, San Felipe.
- 4 Lewis Chester, Godfrey Hodgson and Bruce Page, An American Melodrama: The Presidential Campaign of 1968 (1969).
- 5 Buckingham Palace.
- 6 William F. Buckley (1925–2008), political columnist and writer.
- 7 Hotel Lucerna, Boulevard Benito Juarez, Mexicali.
- 8 Clinton Greyn (1936—), Welsh actor. Danielle De Metz (1938—) played the part of Vivi in Raid on Rommel.
- 9 Eugene McCarthy (1916–2005), US Senator (1959–71) and sometime candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency.
- 0 Ronald Reagan (1911–2004), at this time Governor of California, former film actor, and future President of the United States (1981–9).
- 1 The opening shot of the film.
- 2 Francis Clifford, The Naked Runner (1965). ‘Grapple-snapping’: a family term for snacking from the refrigerator.
- 3 Marlon Brando gave financial support to the Black Panthers and also spoke out in support of the rights of Native Americans.
- 4 Robert Emmet (1778–1803), United Irishman and leader of the 1803 Irish rebellion.
- 5 Brian Hutton (1935—) had directed Where Eagles Dare and would direct Elizabeth Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
- 6 James Barlow's 1968 novel was called The Burden of Proof. The film title was changed to Villain.
- 7 Southend-on-Sea, Essex. ‘The Smoke’: London.
- 8 Edna O'Brien (1930—), novelist and screenwriter. This was published in 1971 under the title Zee & Co and became the film of that name (in the USA), titled X, Y and Zee in Britain.
- 9 Robert Redford (1937—).
- 0 VJ Day: to mark Victory over Japan in the Second World War. Mafeking Night refers to the celebrations in Britain when news was received in May 1900 of the relief of the British garrison of Mafeking during the South African War of 1899–1902.
- 1 Refers to Siegfried Sassoon's poem, ‘Everyone Sang’ (1918).
- 2 The ‘Common Market’ was a familiar phrase at that time, used to describe what was then termed the

- European Economic Community, which the United Kingdom would join in 1973.
- ‡ Romany Bain was a showbusiness journalist.
 - ‡ This refers to the part of Brown played by Greg Mullavey (1932—).
 - ‡ Michael Severeid (1940—) played the part of Wembley, so it is likely that Burton is confused here over the real name of the actor playing Brown.
 - ‡ Rod McKuen (1933—).
 - ‡ Hotel Arnold's Del Mar, San Felipe.
 - ‡ John Orchard (1928–95) played the part of Dan Garth.
 - ‡ Harry Tatelman (1914–97), the producer of Raid on Rommel.
 - ‡ Easy Rider (1969), directed by Dennis Hopper (1936–2010).
 - ‡ Possibly the name of Liza's horse. Taylor's second husband, Michael Wilding, had starred in the film Derby Day (1952).
 - ‡ Nigel Green (1924–72) had played Private Wilkins in Bitter Victory. He had also appeared in Zulu.
 - ‡ Leslie Howard (1893–1943), actor, renowned for playing archetypal English gentlemen.
 - ‡ Sinatra had made a statement on 9 July that he was supporting Ronald Reagan in his bid for a second term as Governor of California.
 - ‡ Joyce Haber (1931–93), Hollywood columnist for the LA Times.
 - ‡ Jesse Unruh (1922–87), Democratic politician in California (Speaker of the State Assembly, 1961–9) and in 1970 unsuccessful candidate for Governor.
 - ‡ A reference to the poem 'The Scholar-Gypsy' (1853) by Matthew Arnold (1822–88).
 - ‡ William Manchester (1922–2004), The Arms of Krupp, 1587–1968 (1968).
 - ‡ The actual reference is (p. 101): 'Now he [Alfred Krupp] was proposing to load his barrels from the rear. The officer corps considered the idea funny as a crutch.'
 - ‡ This is a reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene ii: 'trippingly on the tongue'.
 - ‡ Wolfgang Preiss (1910–2002) had previously appeared in The Longest Day, although not there playing the part of Rommel.
 - ‡ Churchill had cited 'the saying', 'The Hun is always either at your throat or at your feet', in a speech before a Joint Session of Congress on 19 May 1943.
 - ‡ A meerschaum is a name for an ornate pipe.
 - ‡ William Faulkner (1897–1962), A Fable (1954), which won the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction and a National Book Award.
 - ‡ Burton means a Kojah mink pelt.
 - ‡ Ross MacDonald (1915–83).
 - ‡ 'Charro': Mexican horseman.
 - ‡ Allen Welsh Dulles (1893–1969), American intelligence operative in Switzerland during much of the Second World War, later the first civilian Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.
 - ‡ Super Chief: passenger train from LA to Chicago. QE2: Queen Elizabeth II, ocean liner.

- }] Edward Gibbon's (1737–94) The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (1776–89).
- }] Burton means Frank Beetsom, unit production manager on Raid on Rommel.
- }] Laurence J. Peter (1919–90) and Raymond Hull (1919–85), The Peter Principle (1969) suggested that ‘in a hierarchy every employee tends to rise to his level of incompetence’.
- }] Cyril Northcote Parkinson (1909–93) expounded the notion, in his book Parkinson's Law (1958), that ‘work expands so as to fill the time available for its completion’.
- }] Hedda Hopper (1885–1966), actor, radio and television host and Hollywood columnist for the LA Times. Haber (no relation) had taken up this post in 1968.
- }] Burbank Airport, Burbank, Los Angeles County, California.
- }] Henry Wilding, Michael's father.
- }] Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (1969), directed by George Roy Hill (1921–2002) and starring Paul Newman (1925–2008) and Robert Redford.
- }] Beau Bridges (1941—) was to take the part of Billy Breedlove in Hammersmith Is Out.
- }] The Landlord (1970), directed by Hal Ashby (1929–88) and starring Beau Bridges.
- }] Jim Bouton (1939—), Ball Four (1969).
- }] Gallup and Albuquerque, both in New Mexico.
- }] Arthur Hailey (1920–2004), Airport (1970).
- }] The Broadway Limited was the passenger train operating between Chicago and New York.
- }] Penn Station, New York.
- }] Regency Hotel, Park Avenue, New York.
- }] Rumpelmeyer's was located in the St Moritz Hotel, Central Park South and Sixth Avenue.
- }] Shake Hands with the Devil (1959), directed by Michael Anderson (1920—).
- }] The Colony Restaurant was at Madison Avenue and 61st Street, New York.
- }] Alan Jay Lerner (1918–86), writer and lyricist, co-author (with Frederick Loewe, 1901–88) of Camelot (stage play and film). Lerner wrote an adaptation of The Little Prince which Burton narrated in 1974. The original work was a novella, Le Petit Prince, by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry (1900–44) (1943).
- }] Clint Eastwood did not appear in the film.
- }] John le Carré (1931—), The Looking-Glass War (1965). Le Carré had previously written the novel The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1963).
- }] National Velvet (1945), directed by Clarence Brown (1890–1987).
- }] A reference to the island of Elba, where Napoleon Bonaparte (‘Boney’) was exiled from April 1814 to February 1815. The ‘hundred days’ refers to Bonaparte’s final campaign, which began with his escape from Elba on 26 February 1815 and ended shortly after his defeat at the Battle of Waterloo on 18 June 1815.
- }] Theodore Harold White (1915–86), The Making of the President 1968 (1969).
- }] A blend of champagne and stout, usually Guinness.
- }] A brand of tear gas, often used for personal defence.

- 7 Burton means Portoferraio, Elba.
- 8 Villa dei Mulini.
- 9 Burton means 'motoscafo' – motor boat. Piombino is the port on the Italian mainland closest to Elba from which ferry services operate.
- 10 Rashomon (1950), directed by Akira Kurosawa (1910–98).
- 11 Burton must mean the island of Gorgona, approximately two-thirds of the way between Portofino and Elba.
- 12 Burton means a milometer and speedometer.
- 13 E. F. Goldman (1916–89), The Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson (1969).
- 14 Rio Marina, on the east coast of Elba.
- 15 Burton is referring to a mutinous incident aboard HMS Iveston, berthed in Ullapool, Scotland.
- 16 Hotel Les Aloes, Sal Les Aloes, Calvi.
- 17 On the west coast of Corsica roughly equidistant between Calvi and Ajaccio.
- 18 Hotel La Verniaz, Neuvecelle-Eglise, Evian-les-Bains, on the southern shore of Lake Geneva.
- 19 Burton is referring to the filming of Villain.
- 20 Elliott Kastner was executive producer of Villain.
- 21 Not entirely true, as also appearing in Villain were T. P. McKenna, Cathleen Nesbitt, and Brook Williams.

1971

- 1 Burton was playing the part of Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito, born Josip Broz (1892–1980), President of Yugoslavia (1953–80), in a film recreating the 1943 battle of Sutjeska (also known as the fifth anti-partisan offensive) between Tito's Partisans and German forces.
- 2 Saturday Review was an American weekly magazine published from 1924 to 1986.
- 3 Heathfield School, London Road, Ascot.
- 4 W. C. Fields (1880–1946), actor, comedian, writer. He is credited with a number of lines disparaging children, including 'I like children – fried'.
- 5 Christy Brown (1932–81), novelist, poet and artist who suffered from severe cerebral palsy. His autobiography, My Left Foot was published in 1954, and in 1970 was used as the basis for Brown's novel Down All the Days.
- 6 Mrs Diana Ladas (1913—), headmistress of Heathfield School.
- 7 Stan Stennett (1925—), actor and comedian. Porthcawl is a seaside town in South Wales, eight miles south-east of Taibach.
- 8 Stan Smith (USA) (1946—) beat Tom Gorman (USA) (1946—), 6–3, 8–6, 6–2 and John Newcombe (Australia) (1944—) beat Ken Rosewall (Australia) 6–1, 6–1, 6–3.
- 9 At the Swiss Open championships.
- 0 Anthony Shaffer, author of the screenplay for what would become the film Absolution, in which Burton

- starred. His brother Peter (later Sir Peter) would write Equus, which Burton would act in on stage and on film.
- 1 Joseph Losey would direct Burton in The Assassination of Trotsky, Burton playing the title role of Leon Trotsky (1879–1940).
 - 2 Beatrix Miller was the editor of the British edition of Vogue from 1965 to 1983. By the ‘Snowdons’ Burton means Princess Margaret and her husband, Antony Armstrong-Jones, the 1st Earl Snowdon. The article (which is bound amidst the pages of the diary) is a draft of ‘My Day’, an article that appeared in Vogue, 1 September 1971.
 - 3 John Newcombe (Australia) beat Tom Okker (Netherlands), 6–2, 5–7, 1–6, 7–5, 6–3 at the Swiss Open in Gstaad.
 - 4 John Kenneth Galbraith (1908–2006), economist and writer.
 - 5 Kingsley Amis (1922–95), The Green Man (1969).
 - 6 George Thomas (1909–97), Labour MP for Cardiff West, later Speaker of the House of Commons, and Viscount Tonypandy. Thomas had written to Burton in connection with the flotation on the Stock Exchange of HTV, asking Burton to use his influence to place HTV's business with the Hodge financial group, based in Cardiff.
 - 7 Llew Heycock (1905–90), a leading figure in the Labour Party in South Wales, who had been elevated to the peerage as Baron Heycock of Taibach in 1967.
 - 8 Telegram from Beatrix Miller enthusiastically accepting Burton's article.
 - 9 Assimil, a French publishing house specializing in language learning.
 - 0 Ici Paris: a weekly magazine.
 - 1 President Nixon (1913–94) would actually visit China in February 1972.
 - 2 A reference to the song ‘California, sweet homeland of mine’, which includes the lines ‘Neath the palm of the sheltering pine / California, sweet homeland of mine’.
 - 3 This film is probably Absolution.
 - 4 Dubrovnik, city on the Adriatic coast, in the then state of Yugoslavia (now in Croatia). Jersey, the Channel Islands.
 - 5 Maurice B. Solowicz, Fert & Cie, Voyages/Transports, of Rue Fendt, Geneva, Burton's car dealer.
 - 6 Tribune de Genève: Geneva's daily newspaper.
 - 7 Manège: a riding school.
 - 8 Absolution would eventually be made in 1978 but not released until 1981.
 - 9 ‘Tamping’ meaning mad, furious.
 - 0 Villefranche-sur-Mer: resort and port between Nice and Saint-Jean-Cap-Ferrat.
 - 1 Stavros Spyros Niarchos (1909–96), shipping tycoon. Creole was his luxury yacht, which he sold following the death of his wife in 1970.
 - 2 Beth Clutter, wife of Michael Wilding Jr.
 - 3 Nikola Popovic, producer of The Battle of Sutjeska.

- 4 Burton had owned 2, Squire's Mount Cottages, Hampstead, London since 1960, and it had been used as a home by Ivor and Gwen and, after Ivor's accident, by Gwen alone.
- 5 Sir William Deakin (1913–2005), The Embattled Mountain (1971).
- 6 Mad, a satirical magazine published in the USA. Hermann Hesse (1877–1962), novelist, perhaps most famous for Steppenwolf (1927). Aleister Crowley (1875–1947), writer on the occult, philosopher, mountain climber and explorer.
- 7 Cuernavaca, Mexican city.
- 8 By 'Blacke' Burton probably means William Blake (1757–1827), poet, mystical writer, artist.
- 9 By 'the Brass' Burton presumably means 'the top brass' – the highest-ranking officials.
- 0 Bevin boys were men conscripted to work in the coal industry, as opposed to being enlisted into the armed forces, during the Second World War.
- 1 The Official Secrets Act is a piece of legislation aimed at ensuring the restriction of sensitive information usually related to national security.
- 2 For more, in the same vein, see Anthony Shaffer, So What Did You Expect? (2001), pp. 14–17.
- 3 Christopher Miles (1939—). Sarah Miles (1941—). This could be intended to be either humourless or humorous.
- 4 Claude Gill Books, Oxford Street. The 'nameless' one being the baby.
- 5 The city of Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, today the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina. By Brioni Burton means the Brijuni islands in the northern Adriatic, location of Tito's summer residences. Brioni is the Italian spelling.
- 6 Burton probably means Pula, now in Croatia, a port on the mainland (with airport), close to the Brijuni islands.
- 7 Tito's (third) wife, Jovanka Broz (1924—).
- 8 Van Cleef & Arpels: French jewellery and watchmaking company.
- 9 Stipe Delić (1925—).
- 0 At the Tehran conference of November 1943, Churchill had suggested further Anglo-American operations in the eastern Mediterranean. US President Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) had raised the possibility of landing in Yugoslavia in order to lend support to Tito's partisans. Stalin resisted such proposals, which came to nothing.
- 1 'Perfidious Albion': a pejorative term for England (originally rendered in French – la perfide Albion), implying a lack of trustworthiness.
- 2 Spencer Tracy starred in Bad Day at Black Rock (1955), directed by John Sturges.
- 3 A reference to the speech of 9 February 1941 by Winston Churchill, which ended 'Give us the tools, and we will finish the job'.
- 4 Sukarno (1901–70), President of Indonesia (1945–67).
- 5 Draža Mihailović (1893–1946), leader of the Serbian Četnik movement, which opposed Tito's Partisans during the Second World War.

- 6 Michael Caine (1933—), who had starred in Zulu, and who was playing opposite Elizabeth Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
- 7 Suzy Kendall (1944—), actor. Her marriage to the comedian Dudley Moore (1935–2002) ended in divorce in 1972.
- 8 Paul Gallico (1897–1976), novelist and sports writer.
- 9 Possibly Ludmilla Nova (1949—), actor.
- 0 Prince of Players was released in 1955.
- 1 Moss Hart (1904–61), playwright, screenwriter and theatre director.
- 2 Richard and Elizabeth had apparently enjoyed a central role in a knife-throwing act at a Mexican circus, Richard having written about this in his article, ‘My Day’, for Vogue, 1 September 1971.
- 3 Porto Santo Stefano, on the western coast of Italy, due east of Corsica, some 100km from Rome.
- 4 Joseph L. Mankiewicz (1909–93), director of Cleopatra.
- 5 Anzio, Italian port city, 56 km south of Rome.
- 6 The island of Ischia, near Naples.
- 7 Belgrade, then capital of Yugoslavia, now capital of Serbia.
- 8 Messina, Sicily.
- 9 Heyman was 38.
- 0 Isaac Deutscher's (1907–67) trilogy on Trotsky was first published in separate volumes in 1954, 1959 and 1963.
- 1 L'Albergo della Regina Isabella, Piazza Santa Restituta, Ischia.
- 2 A. J. P. Taylor (1906–90) (ed.), Lloyd George: A Diary by Frances Stevenson (1971).
- 3 Mensheviks: the moderate wing of the Russian Social Democrat Party, opposed to the Bolsheviks.
- 4 Frances Stevenson (1858–1972), secretary to and second wife of British Prime Minister David Lloyd George (1863–1945).
- 5 House of Fabergé, the Russian jewellery designers.
- 6 Isaac Deutscher, Stalin (1949).
- 7 It is not clear here what Burton is referring to. Mihailovi Ć had been shot in 1946.
- 8 An unsuccessful Communist-backed coup, led by Hashem al-Atta, had been staged in the Sudan from 19 to 22 July 1971. Hashem al-Atta was executed following the coup's failure.
- 9 F. W. Deakin, The Embattled Mountain (1971), p. 115: ‘This meeting was the only occasion since our arrival when Tito displayed, in my presence, an explosion of temper.’
- 0 Lavrentiy Pavlovich Beria (1899–1953), head of the NKVD (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs) in the USSR.
- 1 John Howard: Australian photographer based in Rome.
- 2 Stepanjek may be Branimir Š Ćepanovi Ć, the screenwriter. ‘Vuko’ is later adjusted by Burton to ‘Vulkov’.
- 3 Mañana: a tomorrow which may never arrive.
- 4 Hardy Krüger (1928—). Krüger's wife at this time was the Italian painter Francesca Marazzi. Krüger and

- Burton would co-star in The Wild Geese, but Krüger did not appear in the final cut of The Battle of Sutjeska. Neda Arneric (1953—).
- 5 Death in Venice (1971), directed by Luchino Visconti (1906–76).
- 6 Audrey Hepburn (1929–93).
- 7 Constantin Stanislavski (1863–1938), actor and director, usually credited with inspiring the ‘method’ approach to acting. Stephen Haggard (1911–43), actor, poet and writer.
- 8 A reference to the Walt Disney film, One Hundred and One Dalmatians (1961).
- 9 Burton means Zabljak, now in Montenegro, which is at an altitude of 1,456 metres.
- 0 The director of Villain was Michael Tuchner (1934—).
- 1 Cavtat, port south of Dubrovnik. Carlo Ponti (1912–2007), producer, and his wife Sophia Loren. Ponti was to produce The Voyage, co-starring Burton and Loren.
- 2 Kupari, between Dubrovnik and Cavtat.
- 3 The dog was playing the part of Tito's dog ‘Lux’.
- 4 The Bay of Kotor, often referred to as the Fjord of Kotor, 40 km south along the coast from Dubrovnik.
- 5 The Verige strait is the narrowest section of the bay, separating the inner bay from the outer bay. A standard translation is ‘trammel’.
- 6 Shaw is usually credited with labelling Dubrovnik ‘paradise on earth’.
- 7 Mary Stewart (1916—), The Gabriel Hounds (1967). Ira Levin (1929–2007), Rosemary's Baby (1967).
- 8 Anton Chekhov (1860–1904), playwright and short-story writer.
- 9 The memorial is at Tjentiste, now in Bosnia-Herzegovina.
- 0 Johnny Green (1908–89), songwriter, composer, conductor, who was Music Director at MGM from 1949 to 1959.
- 1 Probably Karl E. Voldeng (1905–89) and his wife Mary Frances Voldeng.
- 2 Jack L. Warner (1892–1978), executive producer at Warner Bros.
- 3 Alun Lewis (1915–44), poet.
- 4 Everyone says that the President sometimes stays here. Jamais: never.
- 5 Royal Air Force.
- 6 Samuel Pepys (1633–1703), diarist, politician and public servant.
- 7 £1.
- 8 This may refer to some problems that Baker's company Oakhurst was encountering.
- 9 The Internationale: the socialist anthem.
- 0 The city of Niš, now in Serbia, the location of the Yugoslav National Theatre.
- 1 Cardiff Arms Park: the home of the Welsh rugby team.
- 2 Tab Hunter (1931—), actor, perhaps renowned more for his looks than his talent.
- 3 Burton is referring here to one of his childhood homes in Caradoc Street, Taibach.
- 4 Thursday was 9 September.
- 5 Friday was 10 September.

- ‡ Milena Dravić (1940—).
- ‡ Arthur Upfield (1890–1964) wrote 29 novels featuring Detective-Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte, set mostly in the Australian outback. Ivo Andrić, Bridge over the Drina (1961). Andrić had won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1961.
- ‡ Saturday was 11 September.
- ‡ The ‘bodyline’ controversy (over what some felt was unnecessarily aggressive and intimidatory bowling) erupted during England’s tour of Australia in 1932–3.
- ‡ International cricketers. Donald Bradman (1908–2001); Harold Larwood (1904–95); Stan McCabe (1910–68); Bill Voce (1909–84); Bill Ponsford (1900–91); Wally Hammond (1903–65); Gubby Allen (1902–89); Bill Bowes (1908–87); Douglas Jardine (1900–58).
- ‡ A reference to Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (1819–61), husband of Queen Victoria and Prince consort.
- ‡ Heavy Luger, meaning Hardy Krüger.
- ‡ A reference to Radie Harris (1904–2001), Louella Parsons (1881–1972) and Hedda Hopper, gossip columnists.
- ‡ Ambassador Hotel, Trg Kralja Milana Bb, Niš.
- ‡ The Gettysburg Address was delivered by President Abraham Lincoln on 19 November 1863 when dedicating the Soldiers’ National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.
- ‡ Emmeline Pankhurst (1858–1928), suffragette. Culver City is in Los Angeles county and was home to the MGM studios.
- ‡ Laurence Olivier was a founder and the first Artistic Director of the National Theatre. In October 1970 he had impetuously suggested that Burton might take over from him, and Burton had been interested in doing so, only to discover that the appointment was not in Olivier’s gift. Olivier’s letter, dated 16 July 1971, relayed the view of the Chairman of the National Theatre, Sir Max Rayne (1918–2003), that Burton did not have the appropriate experience to be seriously considered for the post. Rayne had in fact already identified Peter Hall (1930—) as his chosen successor to Olivier, this taking place in 1973.
- ‡ Rolf Hochhuth’s play Soldiers, Necrology on Geneva (1967), was a controversial treatment of the Allied bombing of Hamburg in the Second World War and also of the alleged involvement of Winston Churchill in the death of the Polish leader General Sikorski (1881–1943). The National Theatre production of Soldiers in 1967 had been cancelled by the board of the National Theatre, against Olivier’s wishes.
- ‡ Guys and Dolls, a musical by Frank Loesser (1910–69) which had premiered in 1950.
- ‡ A reference to former pupils of the English public school, Eton College.
- ‡ Robert Stephens (1931–95) and his then wife Maggie Smith (1934—).
- ‡ Edith Evans.
- ‡ A reference to the film The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (1969) which starred Robert Stephens and Maggie Smith. Smith had appeared with Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s.
- ‡ Paul Rogers (1917—); William Squire (1916–89).

- § Johnson is credited with saying ‘when a man knows he is to be hanged in a fortnight, it concentrates his mind wonderfully’.
- § This is the first half of Lewis's ‘Postscript: for Gweno’, which appeared in Raiders’ Dawn (1942).
- § James Joyce, (1882–1941), Ulysses (1922), the central character of which is Leopold Bloom.
- § Neil Simon, (1927—), playwright and screenwriter. The Gingerbread Lady (1970).
- § Terence Rattigan (1911–77), playwright.
- § The Sunset Tower Hotel, 8358 Sunset Boulevard, West Hollywood.
- § George Bernard Shaw, Arms and the Man (1894); Anton Chekhov, The Seagull (1896).
- § Rock Hudson (1925–85); James Dean (1931–55); both of whom co-starred with Taylor in Giant.
- § King of Kings (1961).
- § Rebel Without a Cause (1955).
- § The subject of the play was the socialist, secularist, Owenite and co-operator George Jacob Holyoake (1817–1906).
- § ‘The Magic of Meredith Jones’, Sunday Times, 17 June 1956.
- § Burton played Prince Albert in Time Remembered. Paul Scofield had played the same part at the Lyric Theatre and New Theatre in London in 1954 and 1955.
- § Eleonora Duse (1858–1924), actor.
- § T. H. White, The Once and Future King (1958). The Sword and the Stone (1938).
- § For his part as Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady (1964).
- § RMS Queen Mary, which operated between Southampton and New York from 1936 to 1967.
- § Julie Andrews.
- § Burton means Richard Collier, Duce! A Biography of Benito Mussolini (1971). Arnold Toynbee (1889–1975), A Study of History (1960 abridged edn). Oswald Spengler (1880–1936), The Decline of the West (first published in English in the 1920s, with further editions in the 1960s). Erle S. Gardner (1889–1970).
- § Hugh L’Etang (1917–96), The Pathology of Leadership (1970).
- § Collier, Duce!, p. 135, citing Field Marshal Werner von Blomberg.
- § The Italian invasion of Greece in October 1940 had not gone to plan for Mussolini, and had necessitated, in April 1941, German intervention. This is widely believed to have delayed the onset of Operation Barbarossa, the German invasion of the Soviet Union, and thus to have played a critical role in determining that the Germans would not win the campaign on the Eastern Front.
- § Eyties, (often ‘Eyeties’) is a derogatory term for the Italians.
- § Mussolini was executed on 28 April 1945 and his body placed on public show in Milan, where it was subjected to public abuse.
- § Sergio Soldano, furrier, clothes-designer, parfumer.
- § Bertrand Russell (1872–1970), philosopher. C. E. M. Joad (1891–1953), philosopher. John Maynard Keynes (1883–1946), economist.
- § A. A. Fair, one of the pseudonyms of the thriller writer, E. S. Gardner (1889–1970).

- 2 Jasper Ridley (1920–2004), Lord Palmerston (1970).
- 3 President De Gaulle twice vetoed Britain's application to join the European Economic Community, in 1963 and 1967.
- 4 Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918–2008), One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (published in English, 1963).
- 5 Crufts is an annual international dog show which has been held in England since 1886.
- 6 Burton is referring to Soviet interventions in Hungary (1956) and Czechoslovakia (1968).
- 7 A reference to Julius Caesar, Act III, scene ii.
- 8 The death of little Paul Dombey is a famous episode in Dickens's novel Dombey and Son (1847–8).
- 9 Mljet, to the west of Dubrovnik.
- 10 Coleen Gray (1922—), actor.
- 11 Young Bess (1953), directed by George Sidney (1916–2002).
- 12 George Bernard Shaw, Dramatic Opinions and Essays (1907), vol. 2, p. 52: 'With the single exception of Homer, there is no eminent writer, not even Sir Walter Scott, whom I can despise so entirely as I despise Shakespeare when I measure my mind against his.'
- 13 Lew Schreiber, the casting director of Twentieth Century-Fox. Louis Burt Meyer (1884–1957), film producer with MGM. Jack L. Warner (1892–1978), executive producer, Warner Bros.
- 14 It is generally believed that no fewer than 50,000 people were killed during the 1948 'purge' of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia.
- 15 Branko Spoljar (1914–85).
- 16 A reference to Saint Sava (c.1175–1235).
- 17 Milovan Djilas (1911–95), Yugoslavian partisan and communist, who had fallen out of favour in the 1950s and served a number of prison sentences. He was by 1971 living in Belgrade, a renowned dissident.
- 18 Burton is referring to E. M. Forster (1879–1970), novelist, biographer, essayist. However the Forster quoted (actually as saying that Dickens was 'the most popular novelist of the century, and one of the greatest humorists that England has produced'), was John Forster (1812–76), biographer. Alan Pryce-Jones (1908–2000), literary editor, critic and journalist. This is the 1964 edition of Dombey and Son, published by Signet.
- 19 Presumably the International Herald Tribune.
- 20 A reference to George Orwell's dystopian vision in 1984.
- 21 Metropolitan Museum of Art, Fifth Avenue, New York.
- 22 Robin Moore (1925–2008), The French Connection: A True Account of Cops, Narcotics and International Conspiracy (1969).
- 23 George Gordon, Lord Byron (1788–1824); Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822).
- 24 Roget's Thesaurus. Rex Stout (1886–1975), crime writer, whose novels often featured detective Nero Wolfe. Anthony Powell (1905–2000), novelist.
- 25 Ngaio Marsh (1899–1982), novelist. Herman Melville (1819–91) The Confidence Man: His Masquerade

- (1857).
- ⌋ Anthony Powell, A Question of Upbringing (1951).
 - ⌋ The character's name is Kenneth Widmerpool. There are 12 volumes in the A Dance to the Music of Time cycle.
 - ⌋ John Braine (1922–86), Life at the Top (1957).
 - ⌋ Wilfred Owen (1893–1918), poet.
 - ⌋ A reference to Lewis Carroll's 'The Walrus and the Carpenter' (1872) which includes the lines 'Of shoes—and ships—and sealing-wax — / Of cabbages—and kings'.
 - ⌋ George Baker (1931–2011), whose greatest success was on British television portraying Inspector Reginald Wexford (1987–2000), created by Ruth Rendell (1930—).
 - ⌋ Anthony Powell, Casanova's Chinese Restaurant (1960).
 - ⌋ Burton refers here to Evelyn Waugh, A Little Learning (1964), p. 201, where Waugh writes of Powell: 'In reading his brilliant series of novels I have sometimes thought – and indeed, have been so foolish as to state as much in a review – that the recurring seemingly haphazard conjunctions of human life, which comprise his theme, pass beyond plausibility. His hero's passage through youth and early manhood is continually recrossed in improbable circumstances by the same characters. After I had written the review expressing doubts of the authenticity of so many coincidences, I began to reflect on my own acquaintance with him and understood that his was genuine social realism.'
 - ⌋ Burton is using poetic licence here. The relevant passage which inspires his invented quotation comes in the first chapter of Powell's fourth novel, At Lady Molly's (1957), in which Mildred Haycock, once Mildred Blaides, arrives at a party with her fiancé, who happens to be Kenneth Widmerpool, younger than Mildred by about ten years, and known to the narrator, Nicholas Jenkins.
 - ⌋ Nicholas Monsarrat, Smith and Jones (1963).
 - ⌋ Agatha Christie, The Murder of Roger Ackroyd (1926).
 - ⌋ Oleg Lyalin (1937–95) of the KGB (the Soviet intelligence service) had been revealed as a defector on 30 September.
 - ⌋ Mostar: north-west of Dubrovnik and inland, today in Bosnia Herzegovina.
 - ⌋ Pop music associated with Liverpool in the 1960s.
 - ⌋ Wednesday was 6 October.
 - ⌋ Robert Newton (1905–56), who had acted with Burton in The Desert Rats. Bernard Lee (1908–81), who had acted with Burton in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. Trevor Howard (1913–88). Errol Flynn (1909–59).
 - ⌋ Walter Mitty is the daydreaming character in James Thurber's American short story, 'The Secret Life of Walter Mitty' (1939). It is possible that Burton means something else entirely.
 - ⌋ This is a rather oblique reference to the central character in the Indian Sanskrit epic The Mahabharata.
 - ⌋ Juan Fangio (1911–95); Stirling Moss (1929—), racing drivers.
 - ⌋ Trotsky lived at Viena 45, Mexico City.

- § Burton had played the part of Sir Toby Belch in the Old Vic production of Twelfth Night, and Caliban in the Old Vic production of The Tempest.
- § Alain Delon (1935—), who would play Frank Jackson in The Assassination of Trotsky.
- § Romy Schneider (1938–82), who would play the part of Gita Samuels in The Assassination of Trotsky.
Delon and Schneider had been engaged from 1959 to 1963.
- § The film is Bloomfield (1971), directed by Richard Harris and Uri Zohar (1934—).
- § Bay of Biscay.
- § A reference to Zeus as a swan seducing Leda.
- § Rocco and His Brothers (1960), directed by Luchino Visconti. Renato Salvatori (1934–88) won many plaudits for his part in the film.
- § Delon had been questioned in connection with a police investigation into the murder of Stevan Marković (1937–68), one of his bodyguards, in 1968. Marković's body had been found outside Delon's Paris home. There had been a considerable press furore surrounding the murder, which had also involved Georges Pompidou.
- § Medea, Greek mythological princess of Colchis, with a reputation for hysteria vengeance and ruthlessness.
- § Liz: wife of Brook Williams. Mick: business partner of Brook Williams.
- § Friday was 8 October.
- § Victor Serge (1890–1947), Memoirs of a Revolutionary (1963). Serge's real name was Victor Lvovich Kibalchich.
- § The passage (reproduced accurately by Burton) is to be found on p. 195 of Serge's volume, and refers to Sergei Yesenin (1895–1925).
- § Burton is referring to the direction taken by the Russian Revolution of 1917.
- § Saturday was 9th October.
- § Marian, Richard's cousin, whose husband Carl Mastroianni died in 1971.
- § Burton may mean Sunningdale, near Ascot, in Berkshire, which is about 20 miles from Reading.
- § McDonald may refer to the art director on Boom!, Richard Macdonald, who was production designer on Secret Ceremony, would be production designer on The Assassination of Trotsky, and later on Exorcist II.
- § Losey had directed The Go-Between (1970).
- § Ho Chi Minh (1890–1969), Vietnamese revolutionary leader.
- § Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1958), directed by Richard Brooks (1912–92).
- § Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In was an American television comedy show.
- § Valentina Cortese (1923—) played the part of Natalia or Natasha Trotsky.
- § This may be what appeared in Harper's Bazaar (April 1972), 126–9, as 'Ten Years Since Scandal Time'.
- § Powell, The Military Philosophers (1968).
- § King Constantine II of Greece (1940—) and his wife Queen Anne-Marie (1946—), who had fled Greece in 1967. The Greek monarchy was abolished in 1973.
- § Farah Pahlavi (1938—), Shahbanu (rather than Shahrina) of Iran.

- ⌋ It may have been ‘the dust of eld’, used in the first chapter of The Military Philosophers.
- ⌋ Alexei Kosygin (1904–80) was attacked by Hungarian refugee Geza Matrai shouting ‘Freedom for Hungary!’
- ⌋ Hamlet, Act II, scene ii: ‘I have of late – but wherefore I know not – lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercise; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o’er hanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason, how infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a god! The beauty of the world, the paragon of animals – and yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust?’
- ⌋ The Savage is Loose was made into a film in 1974, directed by George C. Slott (1927–99).
- ⌋ This would become the film Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973).
- ⌋ Jean Desailly (1920–2008) played Alfred Rosmer and Simone Valère (1921–2010) played Marguerite Rosmer. Desailly and Valère were real life partners, later husband and wife.
- ⌋ In fact it was Seva Trotsky, Trotsky’s nephew, played by Marco Lucantoni.
- ⌋ Jeffrey Archer (1940—), then MP for Louth.
- ⌋ Lew Grade (1906–98), of Associated Television (ATV). St John Ambulance, a charity teaching first aid and offering ambulance services.
- ⌋ Pablo Neruda (1904–73). Salvador Allende (1908–73), President of Chile.
- ⌋ In 1962 the Nobel Prize for Physiology or Medicine was awarded to Francis Harry Compton Crick (1916–2004), James Dewey Watson (1928—) and Maurice Hugh Frederick Wilkins (1916–2004), ‘for their discoveries concerning the molecular structure of nucleic acids’.
- ⌋ Alfred Nobel (1833–96) invented dynamite.
- ⌋ Winston Churchill actually won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1953.
- ⌋ Sunday was 24 October.
- ⌋ Harry Saltzman (1915–94), producer of Look back in Anger, and then all the James Bond films up to The Man with the Golden Gun (1974).
- ⌋ Baruch Spinoza (1632–77), Tractatus Politicus (1677), ‘I have striven not to laugh at human actions, not to weep at them, nor to hate them, but to understand them.’
- ⌋ Burton was agreeing to perform in a production for Harlech Television of what would become Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
- ⌋ The Compact OED was published in 1971, reducing the original 13 volumes to two.
- ⌋ Michael Linnit, theatrical agent. Linnit & Dunfee was a theatre management company.
- ⌋ Hermann Hesse (1877–1962), Steppenwolf (1927; English translation 1929).
- ⌋ Robin: Friend of Michael Wilding.
- ⌋ The diary entries from this day until 10 November are either typed in red or underlined in red.
- ⌋ Sheldon Harte, the character played by Carlos Miranda.

- ⌋ Time, 8 April 1940.
- ⌋ ‘Dear Abby’ was a syndicated advice column written at the time by Pauline Phillips (1918—) using the pen name Abigail Van Buren.
- ⌋ Cecil Gee, a London menswear store. John Elias o Fon (1774–1841), a famous Welsh Nonconformist preacher. Frankie Howerd (1917–92), actor and comedian.
- ⌋ Mr Micawber, in chapter 12 of Dickens's David Copperfield, says, ‘My advice is, never do to-morrow what you can do to-day. Procrastination is the thief of time.’
- ⌋ Fiumicino airport, Rome.
- ⌋ Stansted airport, Essex.
- ⌋ The ‘ould sod’: Ireland.
- ⌋ The Post Office Tower in central London was bombed by the IRA on 31 October 1971.
- ⌋ James Joyce. Gerard Manley Hopkins, ‘Pied Beauty’, includes the line ‘All things counter, original, spare, strange’.
- ⌋ Brigitte Bardot (1934—), actor and model. Roger Vadim (1928–2000), actor, director, husband of Bardot (1952–7), later of Jane Fonda (1965–73).
- ⌋ Charles Baudelaire (1821–67), Les Fleurs du Mal (1857). These lines do not appear to be a direct quotation from Les Fleurs du Mal, although they may owe something to Baudelaire's ‘Le Gouffre’.
- ⌋ Ohrbach's: an American department store.
- ⌋ Thursday was 4 November, as Burton had previously entered.
- ⌋ Frank Sinatra had announced his retirement on 12 June 1971. He returned in 1973.
- ⌋ Baroness Orczy (1865–1947), The Scarlet Pimpernel (1929). Adventures of the Scarlet Pimpernel was published in 1794.
- ⌋ Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) and Ford Hermann Hueffer (later Ford Madox Ford) (1873–1939), Romance (1903). F. Tennyson Jesse (1888–1958), Many Latitudes (1928).
- ⌋ George Eliot (1819–80), Adam Bede (1859). Francis Iles (1893–1971), Malice Aforethought (1931). John Wain (1925–94) had by this time published five novels.
- ⌋ Iris Murdoch (1919–99), A Severed Head (1961). Peggy Webling (1871–1949), The Story of Virginia Perfect (1909).
- ⌋ Fyodor Dostoevsky (1821–81). Marcel Proust (1871–1922). Honoré de Balzac (1799–1850). Alexandre Dumas (1802–70) Gustave Stendhal (1783–1842).
- ⌋ John Cottrell and Fergus Cashin, Richard Burton (1971).
- ⌋ Clara Cluck is a Disney character but this may well be a reference to Claire Bloom.
- ⌋ Portage la Prairie, Manitoba.
- ⌋ WAAF: Women's Auxiliary Air Force.
- ⌋ Hedy Lamarr (1914–2000), actor.
- ⌋ This would appear to be an inaccurate reference to a line from the hymn ‘Cwm Rhondda’: ‘death of death, and hell's damnation’, although it is possible that Burton was familiar with a different translation from the Welsh.

- [The first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima on 6 August 1945, the second on Nagasaki on 9 August 1945.
-] Henry Longhurst (1909–78), golf columnist. Hugh McIlvanney (1933—), sports journalist. Michael Parkinson (1935—) wrote a sports column for the Sunday Times from 1965.
-] Sir Harold Hobson (1904–92), drama critic of the Sunday Times (1947–76). Dilys Powell (1901–95), film critic of the Sunday Times (1939–76).
-] James Agate (1877–1947), theatre and film critic.
-] Jack Hulbert (1892–1978), actor.
-] Neil Porter (1895–1944), actor and producer.
-] Anna Neagle (1904–86), actor.
-] Maxine Audley (1923–92), actor.
-] Kenneth Tynan had joined the National Theatre in 1963 as its literary manager. He wrote Oh! Calcutta! (1969).
-] David Niven, The Moon's a Balloon (1971).
- [This passage is described on p. 297 of The Moon's a Balloon.
-] The scene is described on pp. 292–3 of The Moon's a Balloon (1972). Niven uses the phrase ‘the awed and grateful audience’.
-] ‘Dumbum’ or ‘Dum Bum’ was Bogart's Danish crewman on his yacht the Santana.
-] Proust's A La Recherche du Temps Perdu was published between 1913 and 1927. Burton considered a screenplay based on the novel, written by Harold Pinter (1930–2008), in 1972, but the film was not made.
-] Constant Lambert (1905–51), composer and conductor.
-] Thomas Love Peacock (1785–1866), Nightmare Abbey (1818). Burton appeared in the BBC Radio production on 7 November 1949, playing the part of Scythrop Glowry, generally regarded as a depiction of Shelley.
-] John Dearth (1920–84), who had played with Burton in Look Back in Anger.
-] The George, Oxford Circus.
-] Robert Farquarson (1878–1966). Ernest Thesiger (1879–1961), who co-starred with Burton in The Robe. Andrew Cruikshank (1907–88). Robert Speaight (1904–76). James Stephens (1882–1950), author of The Crock of Gold (1912). James McKechnie (1911–64).
-] The Savile Club, Brook Street.
- [John Ford (c.1586–c.1640), ‘Tis Pity She's a Whore (1633). George Chapman (c.1559–c.1634), The Tragedy of Bussy D'Ambois (1607). Geoffrey Chaucer (c.1343–1400). David Jones (1895–1974), In Parenthesis (1937); idem, Anathemata (1952). James Joyce, Finnegans Wake (1939).
-] Burton's father was 81 when he died in 1957.
-] The Unforgiven (1960), directed by John Huston and starring Burt Lancaster (1913–94) and Audrey Hepburn. It was filmed in Durango, Mexico.

- ⌋ Battistoni's boutique, Via Condotti.
- ⌋ Grace Kelly's birthday was 12 November.
- ⌋ Donald Zec (1919—) would publish a biography of Elizabeth Taylor in 1982.
- ⌋ Valentino's, Via del Babuino.
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ We will stay at home quietly with books, newspapers and this typewriter.
- ⌋ Irving Paul 'Swiftly' Lazar (1907–93), talent agent.
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ Carlo Cotti (1939—), who was proposing to act as director of a film on the last days of Mussolini.
- ⌋ Clara Petacci (1912–45).
- ⌋ Presumably Burton means Gewürztraminer.
- ⌋ Bernard Delfont (1909–94), theatrical impresario. Harold Pinter, playwright, who had written the screenplay of The Go-Between. John Heyman and Norman Priggen (1924–99) were credited as producers of the film.
- ⌋ Billy Wilder (1906–2002), producer.
- ⌋ Sight & Sound, a monthly film magazine (1932—).
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ Wilfred Wooller (1912–97), international rugby player and sports journalist for the Sunday Telegraph.
- ⌋ Alan Hoby (1914–2008), sports journalist for the Sunday Express. Danny Blanchflower (1926–93), international footballer and sports journalist.
- ⌋ Henry Brandon (1916–93), Washington correspondent for the Sunday Times. Philip Toynbee (1916–81), columnist for the Observer. A. J. P. Taylor (1906–90), historian, columnist for the Observer and the Daily Express.
- ⌋ Mrs Grundy, a character in Thomas Morton, Speed the Plough (1798), taken to mean someone who is extremely strait-laced and conventional. John Gordon (1890–1974), columnist in the Sunday Express.
- ⌋ A reference to the 1960 Peter Sellers and Sophia Loren single 'Goodness Gracious Me'.
- ⌋ Peter Sellers's third wife was Miranda Quarry (1948—).
- ⌋ Sellers's marriage to Britt Ekland had ended in 1968.
- ⌋ Huston and Sallis's son Danny (now an actor) was born in 1962.
- ⌋ Sallis is of mixed English and Indian descent.
- ⌋ Anna Kashfi (1934—) was born Johanna O'Callaghan in Darjeeling, India. Her family moved to Cardiff in 1947. She and Brando were married from 1957 to 1959. She has claimed that her father William, a London Irishman, was her stepfather and that her biological father was Indian.
- ⌋ President Franz Jonas (1899–1974). Giuseppe Saragat (1898–1988), President of the Italian Republic. Hotel Quirinale, Via Nazionale, Rome.
- ⌋ Ivor Novello (1893–1951), composer, actor, singer, whose musicals were renowned for their spectacular aspect.

- 1 Robin Stafford, foreign correspondent for the Daily Express.
- 2 The date is wrong. Thursday was 18 November.
- 3 Bert Mortimer was Peter Sellers's valet and driver.
- 4 Ritz Hotel, Place Vendôme, Paris.
- 5 A reference to The Diamond as Big as the Ritz (1922) by F. Scott Fitzgerald (1896–1940).
- 6 Charles Kenneth Scott Moncrieff (1889–1930), translator of Proust. Gerard Hopkins, translator.
- 7 Robert Graves, (1895–1985) I, Claudius (1934).
- 8 The film project Laughter in the Dark from which Richardson had sacked Burton.
- 9 Tom Jones (1963), which was edited by Antony Gibbs (1925—).
- 10 Heading in red type.
- 11 Heading in red type.
- 12 Josef Shaftel (1919–96), director.
- 13 Mario Soldati (1906–99), director, was writing the screenplay for the film on Mussolini.
- 14 Heading in red type.
- 15 Edward Dmytryk (1908–99) would direct Bluebeard. Robert Siodmak (1900–73), director.
- 16 William Gibson (1914–2008), Two for the Seesaw (1958). A Cry of Players (1968).
- 17 Malcolm Lowry (1909–57), Under the Volcano (1947).
- 18 Burton is confusing William Gibson with Wilfrid Wilson Gibson (1878–1962), the poet.
- 19 A reference to the last line of the 1913 poem ‘The Rolling English Road’ by G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936).
- 20 Budd Schulberg (1914–2009), writer, producer. He was actually born in New York.
- 21 A reference to the line spoken by Macbeth in Macbeth, Act V, scene v: ‘Creeps in this petty pace from day to day / To the last syllable of recorded time.’
- 22 Possibly by Di Rossi Burton means Grazia De Rossi, the hair stylist who had worked on the Taming of the Shrew.
- 23 Druan is ‘poor’ in Welsh. Dim ond yr arglwydd is ‘only the lord’.
- 24 This appears to refer to the passage on p. 350 of Cottrell and Cashin's biography in which they write of Dan-y-bont coming on to the market.
- 25 The Port Talbot Guardian and Glamorgan Gazette newspapers.
- 26 J. R. R. Tolkien (1892–1973), novelist, literary critic.
- 27 Heading in red type.
- 28 Burton had bought the Peregrina pearl for Taylor in January 1969 at a cost of $37,000.
- 29 Mary, Queen of Scots (1542–87), Queen of Scotland 1542–67, mother of James VI of Scotland and I of England.
- 30 Heading in red type.
- 31 Heading in red type.
- 32 César Ritz (1850–1918) built the Ritz Hotels in Paris and London. His son Charles C. Ritz (1891–1976)

- was President of the Ritz Chain from 1953 to 1976.
- ⌋ Maltha is the name of the nymph who nursed the infant Jupiter.
 - ⌋ Mags: possibly means majesties.
 - ⌋ Inter-Milan drew 0–0 with Borussia Mönchengladbach in the second leg of the quarter-final (played in West Berlin) on 1 December 1971.
 - ⌋ Heading in red type.
 - ⌋ The Shah of Iran (1919–80) had thrown a party in October 1971 to celebrate the 2,500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire. It was estimated to have cost $100m.
 - ⌋ Madame Louis Malle was Anne-Marie Deschodt who until 1967 had been married to the director Louis Malle (1932–95).
 - ⌋ Andy Warhol (1928–87), the artist.
 - ⌋ Sydney Smith (1771–1845), clergyman and essayist, whose character Lady Holland in Memoir (1855) states that marriage ‘resembles a pair of shears, so joined that they cannot be separated; often moving in opposite directions, yet always punishing anyone who comes between them’.
 - ⌋ Montesquieu (1689–1755). De l'Esprit des lois (1748). Burton's reading of Samuel Taylor Coleridge's The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798) had appeared on long-playing records in 1955 and 1960.
 - ⌋ Maurice Herzog (1919—), Himalayan mountaineer and politician. Jean-Paul Binet (1917–86), eminent cardiovascular surgeon, pioneer of heart surgery, member of the Académie des Sciences and art collector.
 - ⌋ ‘Est-ce-que quelle-qu'n qui a une plume?’ (Has anyone got a feather?) A joke meaning an old style pen.
 - ⌋ Elsa Martinelli (1935—), who had played alongside Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s, and alongside Burton in Candy.
 - ⌋ Jacqueline de Ribes (1931—), fashion designer. Pierre Salinger (1925–2004), White House Press Secretary to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. He had published With Kennedy (1966).
 - ⌋ Nureyev was friendly with the Kennedy family, and was particularly close to Princess Lee Radziwill (1933—), sister of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Nicholas and Alexandra (1971), produced by Sam Spiegel, has a running time of 189 minutes.
 - ⌋ Charlotte Rampling (1946—), actor.
 - ⌋ David Rothschild (1942—).
 - ⌋ Andrea Dotti (1938–2007), Hepburn's second husband.
 - ⌋ Cecil Beaton (1904–80), photographer.
 - ⌋ Gabrielle van Zuylen (1933—), wife of Thierry Van Zuylen van Nijeveld.
 - ⌋ All Souls College, Oxford.
 - ⌋ Paul Valéry (1871–1945). He had two sons: Claude and François.
 - ⌋ Harvey Lavan ‘Van’ Cliburn Jr (1934—), pianist.
 - ⌋ François-Marie Banier (1947—), author of Le Passé composé (1971).
 - ⌋ Word ‘Ritz’ in red type.
 - ⌋ Alexis von Rosenberg, Baron de Redé (1922–2004).

- 3 Edouard Etienne de Rothschild (1957—) is Guy de Rothschild's son by his marriage to Marie-Hélène.
- 2 Heading in red type.
- 1 Richard L. Sterne had had a part as a Player Musician in the Broadway production of Hamlet and had written a book, John Gielgud Directs Richard Burton in Hamlet (1967).
- 1 Marcel Marceau (1923–2007), actor and mime.
- 2 Word 'Ritz' in red type, date underlined in red.
- 3 Ursula Andress (1936—). Ann-Margret Olsson (1941—).
- 1 It is possible that this refers to the 1973 television documentary Tennessee Williams' South, which starred John Colicos, Maureen Stapleton and Michael York, and Williams himself. However it was written, directed and produced by Harry Rasky (1928–2007).
- 3 Burton would eventually narrate The Little Prince, written by St Exupéry, which came out on a long-playing record in 1974.
- 3 Tito was the son of Franjo and Marija Broz.
- 2 Heading in red type.
- 3 Liza Minnelli, singer and actor.
- 3 Lena Horne (1917–2010), singer and actor.
- 3 Hôtel Lambert, Paris.
- 1 Maples was a well-known furniture store in Tottenham Court Road, London. It closed in the early 1990s.
- 2 Salvador Dali (1904–89), artist.
- 3 Burton may possibly mean Jean-Louis Barrault (1910–94), actor, who had appeared with Burton in The Longest Day, although the description renders this unlikely.
- 1 Robert Hakim (1907–92), producer. His brothers Raymond (1909–80) and André (1915–80) were also producers. Together they held an option on the film rights to Under the Volcano.
- 2 Heading in red type.
- 3 Gianni Bulgari, chief executive of Bulgari.
- 2 Heading in red type.
- 3 Burton had been invited to write an article for the Daily Mail's Christmas number. It was published as 'A Story of Christmas, in the Twenties' on 23 December 1971.
- 2 Heading in red type.
- 2 Heading in red type.

1972

- 1 All headings in this diary are in red with the exception of the last, the entire day's entry being handwritten in black pen. Richard and Elizabeth had travelled to Arizona early in 1972 to visit Elizabeth's mother.
- 2 Sam Warmbrodt, Sara's father, a German engineer who migrated to the USA.
- 3 Mary Frances Voldeng.

- 4 A GS-2 was a steam train operated by the Southern Pacific Company, although it was retired in the 1950s so Burton may be mistaken here.
- 5 John Ford (1895–1973), director.
- 6 Newman was actually ten months older than Burton.
- 7 Susannah York, playing the part of Stella.
- 8 The film ends with Taylor's character (Zee) seducing Stella.
- 9 Hotel Negresco, Promenade des Anglais, Nice.
- 0 Arthur Hornblow Jr (1893–1976), former film producer, and his wife Leonora.
- 1 May's was a chain of department stores. Edie Goetz and Frank Sinatra were lovers. The film was Assault on a Queen (1966), starring Sinatra and Virna Lisi. The new cultural centre may be the Skirball Museum, established in 1972, now the Skirball Cultural Center.
- 2 Diamonds are Forever (1971), directed by Guy Hamilton (1922—).
- 3 Burton means the original novel by Ian Fleming, published in 1956.
- 4 Sean Connery (1930—), playing James Bond in the film.
- 5 This may refer to The Canterbury Tales (1972), written and directed by Pier Paolo Pasolini (1922–75).
- 6 A line uttered by the character Zee (played by Taylor) in X, Y and Zee, itself a reference to the line spoken by the character Rhett Butler (played by Clark Gable, 1901–60) in Gone With The Wind (1939).
- 7 The Diaries of Sir Alexander Cadogan, O.M., 1938–1945 (1972), ed. by David Dilks (1938—). Barry Commoner (1917), The Closing Circle (1971). The ‘something foxes’ was probably Ladislav Faragó (1906–80), The Game of the Foxes: The Untold Story of German Espionage in the United States and Great Britain during World War II (1971).
- 8 Barbara Tuchman (1912–89), Stilwell and the American Experience in China, 1911–45 (1971). ‘Creaseys’ are novels by John Creasey (1908–73), the crime and science fiction writer. By ‘Helen Macguiness’ Burton means Helen MacInnes (1907–85), the thriller writer.
- 9 A reference to the 1888 poem ‘Invictus’ by W. E. Henley (1849–1903), which includes the lines ‘I am the master of my fate: / I am the captain of my soul’.
- 0 Kotch (1971), directed by Jack Lemmon (1925–2001).
- 1 The French Connection (1971), directed by William Friedkin (1935—).
- 2 This refers to the Motion Picture Herald's annual ratings.
- 3 Gordon F. Newman, Sir, you bastard (1971).
- 4 Scotland had beaten France 20–9 on 15 January. Gerald Davies (1945—), Gareth Edwards (1947—), Welsh rugby internationals and British Lions.
- 5 The first ‘Golden Age’ of Welsh rugby began in 1900 and lasted until 1911. In that time Wales won the International Championship (played initially between the four home countries, joined by France in 1910) outright on six occasions, shared the title once, and also defeated New Zealand (1905) and Australia (1908).
- 6 Gareth Edwards had attended Millfield school. ‘Sevens’ is a rugby tournament where there are seven

- players on each team, rather than the usual 15, and the matches are shorter (usually seven minutes each way rather than 40) with more emphasis on running rugby. John Dawes (1940—), Welsh rugby international and British Lion who played for London Welsh Rugby Football Club.
- 7 Welsh rugby internationals Bleddyn Williams (1923–2009), Cliff Jones (1914–90), Cliff Morgan, Haydn Tanner (1917–2009), Wilfred Wooler (1912–97), Edward Verdun Watkins (1916–95), who played at ‘lock’ forward in the second row, David Watkins (1942—), who played in the position of ‘fly-half’, also known as ‘stand off’ or ‘outside half’.
- 8 All Welsh rugby internationals. David or ‘Dai’ Morris (1941—), played mostly as a ‘blind-side’ wing forward, Mervyn Davies (1946–2012), played at ‘Number Eight’, John Taylor (1945—), played as an ‘open-side’ wing forward. Barry John (1945—), played at ‘fly-half’, outside Gareth Edwards at scrum-half. John ‘J. P. R.’ Williams, (1949—), played at full back. John Bevan (1950—), played on the left wing, Gerald Davies mostly on the right wing.
- 9 Roy Bergiers (1950—) and Arthur Lewis (1941—) played in the centre.
- 0 Cliff Jones (1914–90), former Welsh rugby international, chairman of the Welsh Rugby Union's coaching committee and a selector, later President of the WRU. In this context ‘punny ball’ would appear to mean ‘have a great time’.
- 1 A. L. Rowse (1903–97), The Early Churchills (1968) and The Later Churchills (1958); Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918–2008), The First Circle (1968); Ivor Brown (1891–1974), Chosen Words (1961).
- 2 Stéphane Mallarmé (1842–98), French poet. Possibly Burton is referring here to Anthony Hartley (1925–2000) (ed.), The Penguin Book of French Verse, 3: The Nineteenth Century (1957).
- 3 Auberon Waugh (1939–2001), novelist, poet, critic.
- 4 Presumably Isaac Deutscher (1907–67), Red China, Russia and the West: A Contemporary Chronicle, 1953–1966 (ed. Fred Halliday, 1970).
- 5 A reference to the Soviet invasion of Hungary in 1956.
- 6 Joseph and Patricia Losey.
- 7 The ‘old man’ being Tito.
- 8 ‘Kremlin’ meaning the government of the USSR.
- 9 George Tabori (1914–2007), playwright and novelist, screenwriter for Secret Ceremony, also involved with The Man From Nowhere project and with Boom!
- 0 Dai John Philips, secretary of Aberavon Rugby Football Club.
- 1 Anatole De Grunwald (1910–67), writer and producer, who worked with Burton on The Last Days of Dolwyn and Now Barabbas and with Burton and Taylor on The V.I.P.s.
- 2 Burton played Captain Montserrat in Montserrat, written by Lillian Hellman (1905–84), which played at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, in April 1952.
- 3 Greta Garbo (1905–90), actor.
- 4 David Morgan Williams, also known as ‘Dai Mogs’.
- 5 Olivia de Havilland had won the Best Actress Oscar for her performances in To Each His Own (1946) and

The Heiress (1948).

- 6 De Havilland's first husband was Marcus Goodrich (1897–1991), novelist.
- 7 This may be a reference to Rex Harrison's troubled relationship with Twentieth Century-Fox, eventually terminated 'by mutual agreement'.
- 8 Charleville Boulevard, Beverly Hills. Jean Simmons, with whom Burton had an affair.
- 9 The Duna Hotel, now the Budapest Marriott.
- 0 Davenie Johanna or 'Joey' Heatherton (1944—), actor and singer, who played the part of Anne in Bluebeard.
- 1 Vicky Tiel was costume designer for Bluebeard.
- 2 Giovanni Antonio Canal (1697–1768), artist, known as Canaletto. Alexander Korda's brothers were Zoltan (1895–1961) and Vincent (1896–1979). His 'new wife' was Alexandra Boycun (1928–66), whom he married in 1953.
- 3 Alexandra Korda married David Metcalfe, whose father had been aide-de-camp to the Duke of Windsor. They were divorced in 1964. Her death in 1966 was due to an accidental overdose, not suicide.
- 4 Pörkölt: Hungarian meat stew.
- 5 A reference to the Nocturne series of paintings (many of the River Thames) by J. M. Whistler (1834–1903).
- 6 Raquel Welch (1940—), who played Magdalena in Bluebeard.
- 7 Marilyn Monroe (1926–62), actor.
- 8 The Goon Show, British radio comedy programme (1951–60), one of whose stars was Peter Sellers.
- 9 Norman Parkinson (1913–90), portrait photographer.
- 0 Princess Anne (1950—), daughter of Queen Elizabeth II.
- 1 Ezra Pound (1885–1972), poet.
- 2 'Smokin' Joe Frazier (1944–2011) had won the World Heavyweight Boxing Championship in 1968 and retained it until 1973. The book was probably Phil Pepe, Come out Smokin'. Joe Frazier: The Champ Nobody Knew (1972). John Dickson Carr's (1905–77) Hag's Nook (1933) features the detective Gideon Fell.
- 3 Saturday was 12 February.
- 4 Mike Todd Jr married again later in 1972 to Susan McCarthy.
- 5 Ann-Margret had received an Oscar nomination as Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Mike Nichols's 1971 film Carnal Knowledge.
- 6 A reference to the 1935 film Maria Marten, or The Murder in the Red Barn, directed by Milton Rosmer (1881–1971).
- 7 Mike Todd's first wife, Bertha Freeman, died in 1946, when Mike Todd Jr, was seventeen.
- 8 Bertie Wooster is a character in the stories of P. G. Wodehouse. Burton means 1954.
- 9 A reference to Macbeth's line, Act III, scene iv, 'But now I am cabined, cribbed, confined, bound in to saucy doubts and fears.'

- 0 A reference to a line from Duke Orsino's speech in Twelfth Night, Act I, scene i.
- 1 Rod Steiger (1925–2002), who had appeared like Burton in The Longest Day and with whom Burton would act in Breakthrough.
- 2 Steiger had won Best Actor for his performance in In the Heat of the Night (1967), directed by Norman Jewison (1926—).
- 3 Steiger had played Napoleon in Waterloo (1970), a role that Burton had considered.
- 4 A reference to the film Bequest to the Nation (1973, US title The Nelson Affair), directed by James Cellan Jones (1931—), and starring Peter Finch as Nelson and Glenda Jackson (1936—) as Lady Hamilton.
- 5 Terence Rattigan (1911–77) had written the play Bequest to the Nation in 1970.
- 6 Alcoholics Anonymous. Burton is referring to the colour of the typewriter ribbon.
- 7 Alun Lewis's poems 'All Day it has Rained' and 'For Gweno' appeared in the 1942 volume Raiders' Dawn and other poems.
- 8 'Spooner' is a reference to the Reverend W. A. Spooner (1844–1930) and his tendency to metathesis, the transposition of letters or sounds in a word, commonly known as 'Spoonerisms'. Mr Bindle is a cockney character in novels by Herbert Jenkins (1876–1923).
- 9 There is an x typed over the second d in shouldders.
- 0 Presumably Imre Kertesz (1929—), who would win the Nobel Prize for Literature in 2002. Albert Einstein (1879–1955), physicist.
- 1 The Abwehr was a German military intelligence unit.
- 2 According to Farago, The Game of the Foxes, p. 137, Arthur 'Johnny' Owens was freed in 1945 and went on to live in Ireland.
- 3 Friday was 18 February.
- 4 Wolf Mankowitz (1924–98).
- 5 Dick Makewater is Richard's nickname for Richard McWhorter. Lionel Couch (1913–89) was art director on Anne of the Thousand Days, for which he received an Oscar nomination for Best Art Direction.
- 6 Mankowitz was an authority on antique porcelain, and had published The Portland Vase and the Wedgwood Copies (1953) and co-edited (with R. G. Haggard), The Concise Encyclopaedia of English Pottery and Porcelain (1957).
- 7 Mankowitz had owned a shop selling porcelain in the Piccadilly Arcade in London.
- 8 Mankowitz's XII Poems had been published in London by the Workshop Press in 1971, and the printing had been carried out in Dublin.
- 9 Saturday was 19 February.
- 0 Arthur Koestler (1905–83), author of the novel Darkness at Noon (1940), five volumes of autobiography published between 1937 and 1954 and The Case of the Midwife Toad (1971), a study of biologist Paul Kammerer.
- 1 Elizabeth was of course about to turn 40.
- 2 Koestler, who was born in Budapest, had been a member of the Communist Party (in Germany) from 1931 to 1938.

- 3 Burton is referring here to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia.
- 4 Darkness at Noon has as its subject the Stalinist 'show-trials' of the 1930s.
- 5 Elizabeth's 40th birthday celebrations.
- 6 Clec-clecs is a Welsh term for a chat or a gossip.
- 7 Will Cross-eyes being Richard's brother Will, whose eyesight had been affected by a bullet wound he had suffered during the Second World War.
- 8 Michael Caine would marry Shakira Baksh (1947—) in January 1973. Layton is Howard and Mara Taylor's son. Christopher Wilding and Aileen Getty (1957—), who later married.
- 9 By 'Professor Warner' Burton means Francis Warner. Marilu Tolo played Brigitte in Bluebeard and had also appeared in Candy. Billy Williams (1929—), cinematographer, who would also work with Elizabeth Taylor on Night Watch.
-] Doctor of Letters: usually awarded for a substantial record of research and publication, it may also be an honorary degree.
-] Another inaccurate reference to the line from the hymn 'Cwm Rhondda': 'death of death, and hell's damnation'.
-] Actually Starkey.
-] President Nixon returned from a week's visit to China on 28 February 1972.
-] Simone de Beauvoir (1908–86), writer, philosopher. Pierre Overney had been shot dead on 25 February during a demonstration outside the Renault factory.
-] KBE: Knight Commander of the Order of the British Empire.
-] Alan Williams, son of Emlyn, had objected to Burton and Taylor's lack of interest in the oppression of the Hungarian people by Soviet-directed communism.
-] The volume was possibly Spender's The Generous Days (1971). The magazine was Index on Censorship (1972—).
-] Susannah York's husband was Michael Wells.
-] David is the patron saint of Wales.
-] It was ten years, Burton and Taylor's romance having begun in 1962.
-] The British Ambassador to Hungary was Derek Dodson (1920–2003). His wife was Julie Maynard Barnes. They attended the party.
-] Ivor, Richard's brother, had died, and Burton and Taylor returned to England for the funeral.
-] Wendy was another niece of Gwen. Her husband was Derek Jenkins.
-] Paul and Janine Filistorf.

1975

- 1 Elizabeth was filming The Blue Bird, directed by George Cukor and shot on location in Leningrad and

Moscow.

- 2 Elizabeth was suffering from severe amoebic dysentery.
- 3 Brook Williams.
- 4 T and E presumably being 'tired and emotional', or drunk.
- 5 Burton is keeping track of his weight.
- 6 To the school at Tournesol.
- 7 Burton must mean Founex, 3 kilometres south of Céligny.
- 8 Burton means bise, the north wind.
- 9 Vevey: 18 km east of Lausanne on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 Restaurant Le Vieux Moulin, Route Cantonale, Epesses.
- 1 The biography of Napoleon might have been Frank M. Richardson's Napoleon: Bisexual Emperor (1972), which is in Burton's library. Dick Francis (1920–2010), former jockey and thriller writer, who published Knockdown in 1974 and High Stakes in 1975. 'JB' Jeanne Bell (1943—), actor.
- 2 A Gibson is a type of Martini cocktail.
- 3 Norman Fruman, Coleridge: The Damaged Archangel (1971).
- 4 Commugny, 4 km south of Céligny.
- 5 The International School of Geneva, probably the La Châtaigneraie campus near Founex.
- 6 George Best (1946–2005). Michael Parkinson, Best: An Intimate Biography (1975).
- 7 A brand of Swiss watch.
- 8 Raymond Stross (1915–88), film producer.
- 9 Auberge du Raisin, Cully, east of Lausanne on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 Maurice Solowicz, legal adviser.
- 1 West Ham beat Fulham 2–0 in the FA Cup final.
- 2 Terence Young (1915–94) was director of Jackpot.
- 3 Robert Skidelsky, Oswald Mosley (1975).
- 4 This was a film project that had been circulating since at least 1972.
- 5 Leeds United lost 2–0 to Bayern Munich in the European Cup Final on 28 May 1975.
- 6 Elish being short for Elisheba, Burton's nickname for Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, although it might refer to Elizabeth Taylor. Possibly Hotel President Wilson, Geneva.
- 7 Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew, who had already been financially supported in his business ventures.
- 8 Possibly a book by Louis Auchincloss (1917–2010).
- 9 W. Somerset Maugham.
- 0 Romain Gary (1914–80), White Dog (1970).
- 1 Grundy won the Epsom Derby in 1975.
- 2 Hotel du Lac, Grand Rue, Coppet.
- 3 MG: a British sports car.
- 4 D-Day, the Allied invasion of Normandy, took place on 6 June 1944. The British referendum to ratify

- entry to the European Economic Community took place on 6 June 1975: the vote was 67% in favour and 33% against.
- 5 La Réserve, Route de Lausanne, Versoix.
- 6 Doctor.
- 7 Thun, at the north end of the Thuner See, 28 km south of Bern.
- 8 The Gare de Cornavin, railway station in Geneva.
- 9 Troy Bell, Jeannie's son.
- 0 Midnight.
- 1 Angela Davis: An Autobiography (1974).
- 2 Billie Jean King (1943—) beat Evonne Goolagong (1951—) in two sets to win the women's singles championship at Wimbledon.
- 3 Hertz car rental.
- 4 Possibly Maurice Hankey (1877–1963), civil servant and politician, the subject of a biography by Stephen Roskill (Hankey: Man of Secrets, 3 vols, 1970–4).
- 5 A car body shop.
- 6 Shirley MacLaine's You Can Get There From Here (1975) discussed her visit to China.
- 7 'WD' subscript under 'OK': meaning 'Will do'?
- 8 Crans-près-Céligny.
- 9 Au Domino, Coppet.
- 0 Restaurant d'Allèves, Céligny.
- 1 à l'heure: on time.
- 2 Sanka: decaffeinated coffee. The major biography of Kipling in print at this time was Charles Carrington, Kipling: His Life and Work (1955; new edn 1970), but Burton could also be referring to Kingsley Amis, Rudyard Kipling and His World (1975).
- 3 James A. Michener (1907–97), The Drifters (1971).
- 4 Probably William S. Burroughs (1914–97), Exterminator! (1974).
- 5 James George Frazer (1854–1941), The Golden Bough: A Study in Magic and Religion (1890; abridged edn 1922).
- 6 The film project was Abakarov, to be filmed in Israel, but it was never made.
- 7 Have inserted 'Christ' here – there is a mark which might be a cross.
- 8 Carwyn James (1929–83), Welsh rugby international, coach of Llanelli Rugby Football Club and of the British Lions tour to New Zealand in 1971.
- 9 Dorothy L. Sayers (1893–1957), crime writer, translator, playwright, essayist. The biography is by Janet Hitchman, 'Such a Strange Lady': An Introduction to Dorothy L. Sayers (1975).
- 0 Lindsay Anderson (1923–94), director.
- 1 Scorpio (1973), directed by Michael Winner (1935—), starring Paul Scofield and Burt Lancaster.
- 2 HW is Henry Wynberg (1935—) – Elizabeth Taylor's former consort.

- 3 Burton was to publish 'My Life at 50' in McCall's (December 1975).
- 4 Peter Lawford (1923–84), actor.
- 5 The President of South Africa at that time was Nicolaas Diederichs (1903–78), his wife Margaretha Potgieter.
- 6 Ringo Starr's marriage to Maureen ended in divorce in July 1975.
- 7 Chobe National Park, Botswana.
- 8 Fritz or Fred Knoessen, manager of the Chobe Game Lodge.
- 9 Richard Barrett (1933–2006), music producer, singer and songwriter, manager of The Three Degrees girl group.
- 0 The Kruger National Park, north-east South Africa.
- 1 A reference to the children's book The Story of Ferdinand (1936) by Munro Leaf (1905–76), where the bull prefers flowers to fighting.
- 2 Taylor suffered a temporary scare over her health when a chest X-ray was believed to reveal the possibility of lung cancer, only for this to be discounted within hours.
- 3 From Richard II, Act III, scene ii: 'And that small model of the barren earth / which serves as paste and cover to our bones.'
- 4 Public Relations Officer.
- 5 Elizabeth and Richard remarried on this day.
- 6 Antabus or antabuse is the proprietary name for the drug disulfiram, used to combat alcoholism.
- 7 Brian Graham organized wildlife tours from the lodge.
- 8 Douglas Reed (1895–1976), The Siege of Southern Africa (1974).
- 9 Gavin de Becker, Elizabeth's secretary.
- 0 Ambrose Masalila, district commissioner.
- 1 Serondela, in northern Chobe.
- 2 HW: Henry Wynberg.
- 3 Sausages, bread and butter.
- 4 He may mean vervet monkeys.
- 5 Hugo van Lawick (1937–2002), Solo: The Story of an African Wild Dog (1974).
- 6 Eugène N. Marais (1871–1936), My Friends the Baboons (1939).
- 7 Donald R. Morris (1924–2002), The Washing of the Spears: The Rise and Fall of the Zulu Nation (1965).
- 8 Burton means Chen Sam (d. 1996), who became Burton and Taylor's business manager and press spokesperson.
- 9 This is probably a reference to the Anglo-Zulu War of 1879 and the battles of Isandhlwana and Rorke's Drift.
- 0 Basil Davidson, Africa in History (1968).
- 1 Victoria Falls, waterfall on the Zambezi river between Zimbabwe and Zambia.
- 2 Elephant Hills Hotel, Victoria Falls.

- 3 Robbie Lantz (1914–2007), agent to both Burton and Taylor. Elizabeth Taylor, ‘Richard Again’, Ladies’ Home Journal, February 1976.
- 4 Die Landdrost Hotel, Johannesburg.
- 5 Richard had bought Elizabeth a pink diamond to mark their marriage. But she wished it to be returned and for the money to be used instead to finance a hospital-clinic in Botswana. Although the diamond was returned the clinic was never built.
- 6 John O’Hara (1905–70), novelist, short-story writer, screenwriter. Author of Butterfield 8 (1935), later a film starring Elizabeth Taylor.
- 7 Appointment in Samarra (1934).
- 8 Burton means the Evening Standard British Film Awards.
- 9 Albert Finney won the award for Best Actor for his performance in Murder on the Orient Express (1974), directed by Sidney Lumet (1924–2011), who would direct Burton in the film Equus. Burton presumably meant to write ‘never seen’.
- 0 Cancer.
- 1 Harvey Orkin died on 3 November 1975.
- 2 Frank Hauser (1922–2007), theatre director, based at the Oxford Playhouse from 1956 to 1973.
- 3 Jean-Paul Sartre, Kean (1953).
- 4 Naomi, daughter of Michael Wilding and his girlfriend Johanna, had been born earlier in 1975.
- 5 Scott’s Restaurant, Mount Street, Mayfair, London.
- 6 The Pedro Club, Rushmore Road, Hackney, established in 1929, and relaunched in the 1960s.
- 7 Match of the Day, the BBC football highlights programme shown on Saturday evenings.
- 8 Pusey, the home of Simon and Sheran Hornby.
- 9 The Old Manor House, Bampton, Oxfordshire, to the north of Pusey. Lord Blandford (James) may be a reference to Jamie Spencer-Churchill, Marquess of Blandford (1955—).
- 0 Bear Hotel, Park Street, Sunninghill, Woodstock, north-west of Oxford.
- 1 Elizabeth Sweeting (1914–95), general manager of the Oxford Playhouse. Helen Gardner (1908–86), Merton Professor of English Literature (1966–75), was a Fellow of St Hilda’s College, and held her chair in association with Lady Margaret Hall, both all-female colleges at this time.
- 2 The Taylor-Burton building opened during 1976, an annexe to the Oxford Playhouse.
- 3 This refers to unrealized plans (based on the concept of the geodesic dome, associated with the American scientist and designer Richard Buckminster Fuller, 1895–1983) for the building of the Samuel Beckett Theatre beneath a quadrangle in St Peter’s College.
- 4 The Castle Hotel, The Parade, Neath.
- 5 Today the Aberavon Beach Hotel.
- 6 This presumably refers to Burton’s previous engagement to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia.
- 7 Charlie Hockin.
- 8 The First Clown’s line from Hamlet, Act V, scene i: ‘But age with his stealing steps / Hath clawed me in his clutch’.

- 1 Burton means the Black Mountain, the westernmost range of the Brecon Beacons.
- 2 The Red Lion, Llangadog.
- 3 Michael was living at Ffynnon-Wen, Goginan, Ponterwyd.
- 4 Michael's girlfriend, Johanna.
- 5 Michael.
- 6 Bara Lawr: a laver bread recipe.
- 7 'Gareth the villain': probably reference to Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew. Bratu: Welsh for 'brat'.
- 8 T. H. J.: Thomas Henry Jenkins, Richard's brother.
- 9 Burton actually writes '1975' as the year, but the content of the entry indicates (along with a preceding marker in the original folder) that it was 1977.
- 10 Tom Pryce (1949–77) was a Welsh racing driver killed on 5 March during the Formula 1 South African Grand Prix at Kyalami. Susan Burton (1948—), Richard's third wife.
- 11 A reference to John Donne's poem, 'No man is an Island'. 'For whom the bell tolls' is the penultimate line.
- 12 Cecil Day Lewis (1904–72), who had been Poet Laureate (1968–72), published 20 detective novels under the pseudonym Nicholas Blake.
- 13 Looping being the process whereby film dialogue is re-recorded after the original shoot.
- 14 The Via Appia Antica and Via Appia Pignatelli, roads leading south-east from the city centre of Rome.

1980

- 1 Richard Attenborough (1923—). Graham Greene's 1938 novel Brighton Rock was made into a film in 1947, directed by John Boulting (1913–85), and released in North America with the title Little Scarface.
- 2 Frank Dunlop (1927—) was director of Camelot. Madison Square Garden: an events arena on Eighth Avenue, New York.
- 3 John Barber (1912–2005), chief dramatic critic of the Daily Telegraph (1968–86). David Rowe-Beddoe (1937—), President of the cosmetics company Revlon at this time.
- 4 Samuel Taylor Coleridge, The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798), part 5, includes the lines 'Oh Sleep! it is a gentle thing, / Beloved from pole to pole! / To Mary Queen the praise be given! / She sent the gentle sleep from Heaven, / That slid into my soul.' Burton had produced a long-playing record including this work in 1960.
- 5 'Come seeling night' are words spoken by Macbeth in Act III, scene ii.
- 6 Cauchemar: nightmare. Burton does not return to this, which is a reference to his having to leave the stage after five minutes in New York in July on one occasion, an episode which prompted much speculation about his alcoholism.
- 7 Edward Kennedy's bid for the Democratic nomination for the 1980 US presidential election ended with his withdrawal on 11 August.

- 8 Franz Kafka (1883–1924), novelist.
- 9 David Kissinger, later a television producer, son of Henry Kissinger (1923—) (US Secretary of State, 1973–7) and his first wife Ann. Arnold Weissburger (1907–81), theatrical lawyer. Milton Goldman (1914–89), theatrical agent. Lucy Kroll (1910–97), talent agent.
- 0 Kennedy's speech of 12 August at the Democratic Convention was hailed as one of his greatest.
- 1 US President James Earl 'Jimmy' Carter (1924—), elected 1976, was defeated by Ronald Reagan in 1980.
- 2 Second wife Nancy Kissinger (1934—).
- 3 John B. Anderson (1922—), Illinois Congressman and Independent candidate at the 1980 US presidential election.
- 4 Burton had met Kissinger while in Israel scouting locations for the film project Abakarov, which never materialized.
- 5 The 21 Club, West 52nd Street, New York.
- 6 The Riverhouse building, Battery Park City, New York.
- 7 The Dam Busters (1955), directed by Michael Anderson. Mogadon is a sedative.
- 8 Richard Muenz (1948—) played Lancelot du Lac.
- 9 Robert Fox played Mordred.
- 0 Thor Fields (1968—) played the part of Tom of Warwick.
- 1 Tom Wicker (1926–2011), political journalist. This refers to his On Press (1979), which opens with an account of the Convention.
- 2 Henry IV (Part 1), Act I, scene iii: a line spoken by Hotspur.
- 3 The Avengers was a British television series of the 1960s. It is likely that Burton was watching the 1970s series The New Avengers which was screening in the US from 1978. Cannon was an American television series of the 1970s.
- 4 Linda Ronstadt (1946—) actor. Kevin Kline (1947—), actor. Ronstadt and Kline were appearing together in the New York Shakespeare Festival's production of Gilbert and Sullivan's The Pirates of Penzance in Central Park, which later transferred to Broadway.
- 5 Christine Ebersole (1953—) played Guenevere.
- 6 Jerry Adler (1929—) was production supervisor.
- 7 Paxton Whitehead (1937—) played King Pellinore.
- 8 Hiraeth is a Welsh word which means a blend of nostalgia and longing.
- 9 This aphorism is to be found in 'Reflections on Sin, Pain, Hope and the True Way, 1917–20', on p. 147 of Kafka's The Great Wall of China, and Other Pieces (1933; London, 1946 edn).
- 0 John McClure was sound designer on Camelot.
- 1 Leonard Bernstein (1918–90), composer, conductor.
- 2 Cheryl Kennedy (1947—).
- 3 Luke 15: 29 includes the line 'Lo, these many years do I serve thee', as part of the parable of the Prodigal Son.

- 4 Burton refers to Francis Bacon, but he may be thinking of Lady Holland's comment in Sydney Smith's Memoir (1855) 'No furniture so charming as books' or indeed the novel Books Do Furnish A Room (1971) by Anthony Powell. Producer and screenwriter Ernest Lehman (1915–2005) had given Burton an original edition of Bacon's essays at the end of the filming of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? in 1965.
- 5 Burton may mean 'Hao yun'.
- 6 A reference to the line 'Something is rotten in the state of Denmark', Hamlet, Act 1, scene iv.
- 7 Variety magazine, published weekly in New York. Camelot ran at the New York State Theatre from 8 July to 23 August.
- 8 Nancy Seltzer, publicist.
- 9 Internal Revenue Service.
- 0 Onllwyn Brace (1932—), capped nine times for Wales, twice as captain, who succeeded Cliff Morgan as Head of Sport at BBC Wales.
- 1 Touch of Glory screened on the BBC on 31 October 1980.
- 2 Arie Crown Theater, Chicago.
- 3 Jean Cocteau (1889–1963), poet, playwright, novelist and filmmaker.
- 4 Harold Evans (1928—), editor of The Sunday Times (1967–81).
- 5 Patricia Buckley (1926–2007).
- 6 Nelson Rockefeller (1908–79), US Vice-President (1974–77), whose death in January 1979 from a heart attack was surrounded in controversy, there being a strong suspicion that he had died in intimate circumstances with a young female aide. Margaretta 'Happy' Rockefeller (1926—) was his second wife.
- 7 Palestine Liberation Organization.
- 8 Alger Hiss (1904–96), US government servant convicted in 1950 of perjury.
- 9 Dean Acheson (1893–1971) US Secretary of State (1949–53).
- 0 Buckley and Vidal had a long-running feud dating from televised debates in 1968.
- 1 William Manchester's American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880–1964 had been serialized in the Sunday Times in 1979.
- 2 A reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene i, where Ophelia speaks the line 'The observed of all observers'.
- 3 Burton means zeugmatically.
- 4 A reference to Gerard Manley Hopkins's poem 'The Leaden Echo and the Golden Echo' (1882), which includes the lines 'drooping, dying, death's worst, winding sheets / Tombs and worms, and tumbling to decay'.
- 5 Burton presumably means Georgiana Cavendish, Duchess of Devonshire (1757–1806).
- 6 Franz Allers (1906–95), Musical Director of Camelot in both 1960 and 1980.
- 7 Burton appeared in an adaptation of Jean Anouilh's (1910–87) 1941 play Eurydice, retitled Legend of Lovers in New York in 1951–52.
- 8 James Valentine played the Friar.
- 9 Villages with lots of suburbs.

- 0 Dylan Marlais Thomas. Caradoc Evans (1878–1945), short story writer, novelist, playwright, journalist.
- 1 Taffy (1923), a play, certainly received a hostile reception from the London Welsh community (including Welsh students) when it premiered in London in 1923, and again when it was revived in 1925, although there is no record of Evans's works having been burned in public.
- 2 A reference perhaps to the poem 'Once Below a Time' by Dylan Thomas, or to the same phrase used in Thomas's 'Fern Hill'. New Quay/Ceinewydd, on the Cardiganshire coast.
- 3 Augustus John painted a portrait of Dylan Thomas, who married John's lover Caitlin Macnamara (1913–94).
- 4 Vivienne Van Dyk.
- 5 The Empire Strikes Back (1980), directed by Irvin Kershner (1923—), indeed a sequel to Star Wars (1977), directed by George Lucas (1944—).
- 6 William Parry (1947—) played Sir Dinidan.
- 7 The Phil Donahue Show, 1970–96, hosted by Phil Donahue (1935—).
- 8 'Vulgarian' superscript over 'you bum'.
- 9 Dick Cavett (1936—), talk show host.
- 0 The penultimate verse of Dunbar's 'Lament for the Makaris', which reads 'Sen he has all my brether tane, / He will naught let me live alane; / Of force I man his next prey be: – / Timor Mortis conturbat me.'
- 1 Ian Bannen (1928–99), had starred alongside Burton in The Voyage and Walk With Destiny, also known as The Gathering Storm. He had married Marilyn Salisbury in 1976.
- 2 Bannen took the part of Jim Prideaux in the BBC television adaptation of Le Carré's 1974 novel Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy, which was subsequently broadcast in the US.
- 3 Burton's article, 'To Play Churchill Is to Hate Him', appeared in the New York Times on 24 November 1974. It was extremely unflattering of Churchill and provoked a furious reaction in both the US and Britain.
- 4 Hallmark Cards co-produced the play with the BBC. In the USA it appeared as part of the series 'Hallmark Hall of Fame'.
- 5 A reference to Hamlet, speaking in Hamlet, Act III, scene i, 'What should such fellows as I do crawling between heaven and earth?'
- 6 T. S. Eliot, 'Rhapsody on a Windy Night', first published in 1917, includes the lines 'Regard the moon, / La lune ne garde aucune rancune, / She winks a feeble eye, / She smiles into corners, / She smooths the hair of the grass. / The moon has lost her memory. / A washed-out smallpox cracks her face'.
- 7 The line is 'Midnight shakes the memory / As a madman shakes a dead geranium.'
- 8 The line from 'The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock' is 'When the evening is spread out against the sky / Like a patient etherised upon a table;'.
- 9 Roger Moore (1927—), who had played alongside Burton in The Wild Geese, had previously played the character of Simon Templar in the television series The Saint (1960–69).
- 0 The 'Kup show' was Irv 'Kup' Kupcinet's television talk show, which ran from 1959 to 1986. Richard appeared on 12th September 1980.

- 1 Jack Brickhouse (1916–98), broadcaster, and his wife Pat. Forrest Tucker (1919–86), his daughter Brooke. Others present included Tony DeSantis (1914–2007), theatre owner, and his wife Lucille, and Mr and Mrs Bruce Goodman. The party was held at Café Angelo.
- 2 F Troop ran for 65 episodes from 1965 to 1967 but was much shown thereafter.
- 3 George C. Scott (1927–99), actor.
- 4 Robert Atkins (1886–1972), actor.
- 5 Robert De Niro (1943—). Al Pacino (1940—) played Richard III on Broadway.
- 6 A reference to Sardi's restaurant, New York, frequented by movers and shakers in the theatre world.
- 7 Paul Ferris (1929—), Dylan Thomas (1977). Burton had reviewed Constantine Fitzgibbon, (1919–83) The Life of Dylan Thomas (1965) on publication. According to Ferris's biography of Burton (p. 181), Burton scorned the suggestion in Ferris's biography that Thomas had had homosexual experiences as a young man.
- 8 Iraq invaded Iran on 22 September 1980. The war lasted until August 1988.
- 9 The theme song for the film Alfie (1966), written by Burt Bacharach (1928—) and performed by Cilla Black (1943—), also covered by Dionne Warwick (1940—).
- 0 The line 'the giant agony of the world' is from John Keats (1795–1821), The Fall of Hyperion: A Dream (1819).
- 1 From the Welsh hymn 'Diolch iddo', the line translates as 'Thanks be to him for ever remembering'.
- 2 World heavyweight champion Larry Holmes (1949—) stopped Muhammad Ali (formerly known as Cassius Clay) in ten rounds on 2 October 1980.
- 3 Thursday was 2 October.
- 4 Evelyn Waugh, Black Mischief (1932).
- 5 Peter de Vries (1910–93), Consenting Adults; or, The Duchess will be Furious (1980).
- 6 Kenneth Clark (1903–83), The Nude: A Study in Ideal Form (1956).
- 7 Edith Sitwell (1887–1964), poet and novelist.
- 8 D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930), novelist.
- 9 WASP: White Anglo-Saxon Protestant.
- 0 V. S. Pritchett (1900–97), short story writer, critic.
- 1 Igor Stravinsky (1882–1971), composer, conductor, pianist. Christopher Isherwood (1904–86), novelist.
- 2 Edward Estlin Cummings (1894–1962), poet.
- 3 Presumably the Brussels Restaurant, New York.
- 4 T. S. Eliot, 'The Journey of the Magi', written in 1927 and published in 1930.
- 5 Dylan Thomas, 'Lie Still, Sleep Becalmed' (1945), includes the following lines: 'Under the mile off moon we trembled listening / To the sea sound flowing like blood from the loud wound / And when the salt sheet broke in a storm of singing / The voices of all the drowned swam on the wind. // Open a pathway through the slow sad sail, / Throw wide to the wind the gates of the wandering boat / For my voyage to begin to the end of my wound’.

3 P. H. Burton, by this time living in Florida.

1983

1 Pierre Koessler, architect, son of Edouard Koessler.

2 Sally Hay (1948—), to become Burton's fourth wife.

3 This refers to the forthcoming trip that Burton and Hay were planning to make to Haiti, to the intended divorce that Burton was seeking from third wife Susan Hunt, and the trip to New York to allow Burton to play in Private Lives with Elizabeth Taylor.

4 D. Brynner is presumably Yul Brynner's second wife Doris, from whom he had been divorced in 1967.

5 John and Joan Dearth were about to visit Richard and Sally.

6 Brother Tom had died in 1980.

7 Milton Katselas (1933–2008) was the initial director of Private Lives, but would leave the production following disagreements with Taylor in Boston.

8 John Cullum (1930—) was to play the part of Victor Prynne in the play. He had played with Burton in the 1960 production of Camelot and in the Broadway production of Hamlet.

9 Mark Getty (1960—), businessman, brother of Aileen.

0 Burton had read Michael Parkinson, Best – An Intimate Biography on its first publication in 1975.

1 Ireland beat France 22–16 at Lansdowne Road, Dublin, and Wales beat Scotland 19–15 at Murrayfield.

2 Profile of a Superstar was a television film about Burton that screened on American television in 1983.

3 Taylor was making a TV movie, Between Friends.

4 Pope John Paul II visited Haiti in March 1983.

5 M. Vandal was dealing with Richard's divorce.

6 Albert Silvera, owner of El Rancho Hotel where Richard and Sally were staying in Haiti, who was attempting to persuade Burton to purchase his beach house.

7 Burton's divorce from Susan Hunt.

8 The President of Haiti was Jean-Claude Duvalier (1951—), also known as ‘Baby Doc’.

9 The cartoon was a ‘Gren’, (by the cartoonist Grenfell Jones (1934–2007) presumably from the Cardiff evening newspaper the South Wales Echo, dated 23 February 1982, in which a lawyer, sitting in a luxurious penthouse office suite, is explaining to a client, ‘I had nothing to begin with except an unshakeable belief in my ability and the Richard Burton Divorce Contract.’ The explanatory caption below the cartoon reads ‘Yet another Richard Burton divorce is announced.’

0 PV: Puerto Vallarta.

1 Nicolas Duvalier, born 31 January 1983.

2 François Latour (1944–2007), Haitian writer and actor. Leslie Gerson was US non-immigrant visa chief in Haiti. She and Latour subsequently married.

- 3 The President's wife was Michele Bennett Pasquet (1950—). Her brother, Frantz Bennett, had been convicted of drug trafficking in Puerto Rico in 1982 and was serving a three-year term of imprisonment.
- 4 Latour wrote in an accompanying letter (dated 4 March 1983), 'It is my pleasure to make it possible for you to have these books; I am so appreciative of the interest you are taking in my country.'
- 5 Noel Coward wrote Private Lives in 1933, when he was 34.
- 6 On 5 March Wales beat Ireland 23–9 at Cardiff, and Scotland beat England 22–12 at Twickenham.
- 7 Burton was to purchase Habitation Courvoisier, l'Etang du Jone, Petionville.
- 8 Willi Wichert, manager of the El Rancho Hotel, and his wife Chantal, sister-in-law to Albert Silvera.
- 9 Top of the Pops, the BBC TV pop music chart show.
- 0 Guy Malarly (1943–93), lawyer, assisting with the house purchase, later Minister of Justice (1991–3).
- 1 M.U.: make-up.
- 2 Burton presumably means maquilleuse, make-up girl.
- 3 Madeleine Harrison, to marry David Rowe-Beddoe in 1984. Valerie Douglas. Lisa Rowe-Beddoe, eldest daughter of David Rowe-Beddoe.
- 4 Kate Burton played the character of Mag in Winners, the first part of Lovers by Brian Friel (1929—), staged at the Roundabout Theatre, New York.
- 5 Maria Burton, who had married Steve Carson in 1982, had given birth to Eliza in 1983.
- 6 The Beresford, an apartment building on Central Park West, New York.
- 7 Zev Buffman (1930—), producer of Private Lives, who had previously directed Taylor in Little Foxes.
- 8 Kathryn Walker (1943—) played the part of Sybil Chase in Private Lives.
- 9 'Alka' was Richard's nickname for Nancy Seltzer, publicist, 'Alka Seltzer' being an effervescent antacid compound used for indigestion, headaches and hangovers.
- 0 Dashiell Hammett (1894–1961), crime writer. Fran 3 Kafka (1883–1924), novelist. The biography might have been Ronald Hayman, Kafka: A Biography (1982). Mark Twain (1835–1910), writer.
- 1 17 March is celebrated by people of Irish descent as St Patrick's Day, Patrick being the patron saint of Ireland.
- 2 The Cort Theater, West 48th Street, New York.
- 3 The play would start its run at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, on 7 April.
- 4 Wales lost to France 9–16 at the Parc des Princes on 19 March 1983. Ireland beat England 25–15 at Lansdowne Road.
- 5 Simon and Sheran Hornby.
- 6 Tennessee Williams had died on 25 February 1983 in New York.
- 7 The Night of the Iguana and Boom!
- 8 Christopher Wilding. If Burton is right then that would probably have been during the making of The Night of the Iguana.
- 9 Private Lives opened at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, New York, on 8 May.
- 0 Theoni V. Aldredge (1932—) was the costume designer for Private Lives.

- 1 Geraldine Fitzgerald (1913–2005), actor.
- 2 Jimmy Breslin (1930—), journalist, Hollywood columnist and writer, and friend of Burton.
- 3 The Thorn Birds was a TV mini-series that screened over four nights from 27 March 1983.
- 4 ‘Pangs of disprised love’ is a line from Hamlet's famous soliloquy in Act III, scene i.
- 5 A reference to Michael F. Ritchie (1958—). He and Kate married in 1985.
- 6 Katselas had been a Scientologist since 1965.
- 7 John Hurt (1940—), actor.

Notes

Introduction

- 1 William Redfield, Letters from an Actor (New York: Viking, 1967), p. 20.
- 2 Data collected by the 1911 population census revealed that women aged between 20 and 24 averaged 7.36 children if they married coal miners, but only 3.48 children if they married doctors. Coal miners also enjoyed one of the earliest average ages of marriage of any occupational group, a function of the relatively high wages that could be earned by young men underground.
- 3 Port Talbot Guardian, 5 February 1943. Wales had no officially recognized capital until 1955, when the city of Cardiff was accorded that honour.
- 4 George Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four (1949; Guild Publishing, 1989), p. 434.
- 5 Thomas Mallon, A Book of One's Own: People and their Diaries (St Paul, Minnesota: Hungry Mind Press, 1995 edn), xvii.
- 6 Burton uses the terms 'diary', 'journal' and 'notebook' at various times to describe what he is doing. Here the term 'diary' has been chosen as more accurately reflective of the entire sequence and the fact that Burton did keep dated entries confined to single days.
- 7 There are scattered references, in the diaries and elsewhere, which suggest the existence of other diaries or other forms of writing. Hollis Alpert, Burton (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1986), p. 90, refers to Burton keeping a diary, written 'in his own invented hieroglyphics' in about 1960. Perhaps Burton meant his schoolboy French. Alpert also suggests that Burton was writing a novel and had written 20,000 words which he lost when in Hollywood in 1970 (p. 197).
- 8 There does not appear to be any supporting evidence for the suggestion made by Penny Junor, in Burton: The Man Behind the Myth (London: Sphere, 1986), p. 143, that Burton read his diary 'out loud to friends'.
- 9 In fact most, perhaps all, of the diaries covering this period have survived.
- 0 Lantz to Burton, 11 August 1976, Richard Burton Archives, RWB 1/2/1175.
- 1 Sunday Express, 4 December 1988; Sunday Times, 18 December 1988.
- 2 RWB 1/2/1/3 – Weissburger and Frosch [Box 19/3]. Although undated, this evidently dates from the period 1964–75.
- 3 Melvyn Bragg, Rich: The Life of Richard Burton (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1988), p. 211.
- 4 Robert A. Fothergill, Private Chronicles: A Study of English Diaries (London: Oxford University Press, 1974), p. 10.

- ⁵ There is very limited evidence of wilful destruction of the diaries. On 24 June 1965 Burton records that 'in fury' he had torn out the preceding page of the diary, covering 17–23 June. The page has not survived. There is no other comment of this kind, but this does not rule out the possibility that he destroyed other pages and did not leave evidence of such destruction.
- ⁶ Bragg, Rich, p. 369. See further assessments on pp. 108, 165, 210–11, 216–17, 290.
- ⁷ A similar case is that of Burton and Raquel Welch. Taylor was suspicious of Welch's interest in her husband, and there is speculation to this day (not quashed by Welch herself) that Burton and Welch may have been lovers during the making of Bluebeard. Yet the diaries (which admittedly end in March 1972, before the cessation of filming) offer no evidence for this.
- ⁸ Cited in Hermione Lee, Biography (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009), p. 7. This is not the place to list the failings of specific Burton biographies and biographers (or, indeed, those of Elizabeth Taylor). For readers seeking further enlightenment and relatively sure-footed narrative, my advice would be to consult the works by Bragg, Ferris and Stead on Richard Burton, and by Alexander Walker on Elizabeth Taylor.
- ⁹ John Cottrell and Fergus Cashin, Richard Burton: A Biography (London: Arthur Barker, 1971), pp. 345–6.
- ⁰ The most recent example being Michael Munn, in his Richard Burton: Prince of Players (London: JR Books, 2008). Munn is not named in any of the diaries.
- ¹ Bragg, perhaps subconsciously, appears to accept this when he writes (Rich, p. 375) 'As in many autobiographies there is self-justification as well as self-revelation.'
- ² Arthur Ponsonby, English Diaries (London: Methuen, 1923), p. 5.
- ³ The exceptions are the diaries of 1940 (Bragg had some kind of indirect knowledge of this) and 1975.
- ⁴ The Diary of Virginia Woolf, volume II: 1920–1924, ed. Anne Olivier Bell (Luda: Hogarth, 1978), Editor's preface, p.ix.
- ⁵ Virginia Woolf, 'The Art of Biography' (1939), in The Death of the Moth and other essays (New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1942), p. 195.
- ⁶ See Lee, Biography, p. 16: 'The idea that there is such a thing as an innate, essential nature, often vies in biographical narrative with the idea that the self is formed by accidents, contingencies, education and environment. The belief in a definable, consistent self, an identity that develops through the course of a life and that can be conclusively described, breaks down, to a great extent, in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.' Elizabeth Podnieks develops this further: 'The self is always to some degree invented, so the diary that contains this self is at least partially fictive' (Daily Modernism: The Literary Diaries of Virginia Woolf, Antonia White, Elizabeth Smart and Anaïs Nin (Montreal and Kingston: McGill-Queen's University Press, 2000), p. 5.

1939

Richard's brother, Thomas Henry Jenkins (1901–80), a coal miner by occupation, was widowed when his wife Cassie (born 1905) died, leaving him with a daughter (Mair (1938–2008)). Tom and Cassie lived at Cwmafan, an industrial settlement located in the Afan valley two miles north (as the crow flies) of Richard's home in Taibach. They had taken in the youngest of the Jenkins children, Graham, following his mother's death shortly after giving birth to him in 1927.

William Shakespeare's Richard II, King (c.1595).

Mrs Pike, the mother of Raymond Pike, one of Richard's friends, who later emigrated to Australia.

Colin Wherle, a fellow pupil, lived in Heol-yr-Orsedd, Port Talbot.

The 'Cach' was the local name given to the Picturedrome, the cinema in Taibach, located between Gallipoli Row and Alma Terrace. It mainly showed films well after their first release (i.e. not film premieres), the programme starting at 6 p.m. Before it became a cinema it had been the local drill hall for the Territorial Force (after 1920 Territorial Army). Cach is Welsh for 'shit'. Stranded in Paris was the UK title of Artists and Models Abroad (1938), directed by Mitchell Leisen (1898–1972), starring Jack Benny (1894–1974). Bulldog Drummond's Secret Police (1939), directed by James P. Hogan (1890–1943), starring John Howard (1913–95) and H. B. Warner (1876–1958) was the latest in a long series of films featuring the eponymous hero.

The Regent was a cinema in Taibach located on Commercial Road. I Met A Murderer (1939), directed by Roy Kellino (1912–56), starred James Mason (1908–94) and Pamela Kellino (1916–96). Exile Express (1939), directed by Otis Garrett (1905–41), starred the Russian-born actor Anna Sten (1908–93).

Although Richard writes 'football' he means rugby football rather than association football. Mr Nicky was Mr Jack N. Nicholas, the maths teacher, who also coached the school rugby team.

Aunt Edith Evans, the sister of Richard's brother-in-law Elfed James. Edith, usually 'Ede' but sometimes 'Edie', who lived at 9, Geifr Road, Taibach, ran (together with her brother, Ivor James) a fish and chip shop, located in the front room of her house. Richard would collect newspapers (used for wrapping purposes) for her for money.

Dillwyn is Dillwyn Dummer, one of Richard's childhood friends, a second cousin once removed, and just a few months younger than Richard. Dillwyn's mother Margaret Ann was Elfed James's sister.

1940

1 The Talbot Memorial Park, located between Taibach and Port Talbot.

2 The Oklahoma Kid (1939), directed by Lloyd Bacon (1889–1955), starred James Cagney (1899–1986) and Humphrey Bogart (1899–1957). Richard was to become friendly with Bogart in the 1950s.

3 Arthur 'Boyo' Jenkins, a fellow pupil, who lived in Varna Terrace, Taibach, and who later played first-class rugby for Aberavon RFC. Lloyd's bicycle and sports shop, Station Road, Port Talbot.

4 The Carnegie Free Public Library, Taibach, situated on Commercial Road, opposite the Co-operative store.

5 ITMA, an abbreviation for It's That Man Again, was a very popular wartime radio show, starring Tommy

- Handley (1894–1949).
- 6 Britain suffered its severest frost for 45 years in 1940. Snow remained on the hills around Port Talbot until the end of February.
- 7 Cecilia or ‘Cis’ James, née Jenkins (1905–93), Richard's sister, married to Elfed James (1900–79), with whom he lived at 73 Caradog Street, Taibach.
- 8 This refers to the Taibach and Port Talbot Co-operative Society. Their central premises were at 4–16 Commercial Road, Taibach. Elfed James was to serve on its management committee. Richard was to work there as a draper's assistant after leaving school in April 1941.
- 9 Albert ‘Sandy’ Powell (1898–1982) was a British comedian and film actor famous for his catchphrase, ‘Can you hear me, mother?’
- 0 The Plough field is a sports ground, immediately north of and adjacent to the Talbot Memorial Park.
- 1 Mrs Jackson was Richard's next-door neighbour in Caradog Street, and was originally from Gloucestershire. Richard was friends with her son Billy. Dr Marshall was the local general practitioner, who lived at 1, Grange Street, his house both consulting room and dispensary.
- 2 A rugby union match. Aberavon lost 7 points to 16 in a match the Port Talbot Guardian thought ‘one of the most exciting and interesting played on the ground this season’.
- 3 Dots in the original.
- 4 Joe's was Joe Morozzi's ice-cream parlour on Talbot Road, officially known as ‘Berni's’.
- 5 ‘Mam James’ – Elfed James's mother. She lived at 3 Inkerman Row (since demolished), immediately behind (uphill from) Caradog Street.
- 6 Noddfa Welsh Congregational Chapel on Commercial Road, Taibach. Noddfa had been established in 1933 following a schism in Gibeon Welsh Congregational Chapel (which was near the Picturedrome, between Gallipoli Row and Alma Terrace) and had moved into its new premises in November 1939. Both chapels were Welsh in language.
- 7 Baglan is a settlement lying to the north-west of Port Talbot, approximately three miles from Richard's home in Taibach.
- 8 ‘My mother’ must refer not to Richard's natural mother (who had died in 1927) but to his sister Cis. Cis and Elfed were second cousins, both great-grandchildren of Rees Morgan and Hannah Davis, who had lived in Pontrhydyfen. They shared common membership of Gibeon Welsh Congregational Chapel, Taibach, and married in 1927, only four months before they took in Richard following his mother's death. Cis had worked as a housemaid for the Handford family, drapers by occupation, who had a shop opposite the Talbot Arms Hotel, later a store on Station Road (afterwards the site of Woolworths). Elfed was a coal miner who worked at a colliery at Goytre. This was probably the Glenhafod Level, owned by the Glenhafod Collieries Limited of Port Talbot. Glenhafod Colliery was located in the bottom of the valley below the present cemetery.
- 9 ‘Ray’ is Richard's friend Raymond Pike. Glen Parkhouse lived at 8, Mill Row, Taibach.
- 0 ‘Eastern’ refers to Richard's former school, the Eastern Boys’ School, Margam Road, Port Talbot.

- 1 Richard means Inspector Hornleigh (1938), directed by Eugene Forde (1898–1986), starring Gordon Harker (1885–1967) and Alastair Sim (1900–76).
- 2 Uncle Ben James (1900–70) was Elfed's brother. His back had been broken in an underground accident at Newlands colliery and he was paralysed from the waist down. The game referred to is Monopoly, which began life in the USA and which was being produced by John Waddington Ltd in the United Kingdom from the late 1930s onwards.
- 3 Afan W. and Gwylfa P. Powell were identical twins who lived at 40 Caradog Street, Taibach. The Powells also attended Noddfa Chapel.
- 4 'Sandies' is Sanderson's barbershop, Commercial Road, Taibach.
- 5 Richard saw The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (1939) directed by H. C. Potter (1904–77), starring Fred Astaire (1899–1987) and Ginger Rogers (1911–95).
- 6 'Town': Port Talbot.
- 7 Eddie Miles was a fellow pupil who lived in Somerset Street, Taibach, and who later served in the Royal Navy. Plum was the nickname of Royston Palmer, another pupil, who lived in Brook Street, Taibach, and who later became a teacher.
- 8 Repairing shoes using a cast-iron last.
- 9 Richard's cousin Marian James (1928—), the eldest child of Elfed and Cis.
- 0 Charles Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, first published 1843–4.
- 1 'The Side': the mountainside up behind Caradog Street. Elfed owned a glasshouse up above Inkerman Row East on the mountainside.
- 2 This probably refers to the practice of posting the team sheet for sports teams on the noticeboard. It is not clear whether Richard was simply not selected for the team in question or whether the game was cancelled because of the state of the pitch.
- 3 Union Pacific (1939), directed by Cecil B. DeMille (1881–1959), and starring Barbara Stanwyck (1907–90).
- 4 'Edie' is Edith Jenkins (1922–66), Richard's sister.
- 5 'Sis' is what is written. He might have meant 'Cis', but as she was his sister (although he had already referred to her elsewhere as his mother) it is possible he meant 'Sis[ter]'.
- 6 In fact four boys (aged between five and seven) had drowned when the ice on Dankyr Pond, on which they were playing, gave way, and one man (Mr Jenkin Powell, aged 58), who attempted to rescue them, also died.
- 7 Alan James was Elfed and Ben's nephew.
- 8 Evan Dummer, whose brother Edwin was married to Margaret Ann, Elfed James's eldest sister. 'Gob' is a slang term for spitting.
- 9 'Noon' often appears as short for 'afternoon'.
- 0 Ben's wife, referred to by Richard as 'Winifred', 'Winnie', 'Win' and even 'Wyn'.
- 1 Richard may be referring here to a part-time job as a newspaper delivery boy, which he had started at the age of eight.

- 2 'Middles' probably refers to the 'Middle School' team, as opposed to the 'Seniors'. 'B. County' is Bridgend County School. Bridgend is a town 10 miles to the south-east of Taibach (1931 population 10,029).
- 3 Trevor George was a close school friend of Richard who went on to become a headmaster. He played rugby for Aberavon and was also a talented cricketer.
- 4 David Jenkins (1914–94), Richard's brother, a policeman, lived in the small town of Llantwit Major, 18 miles to the south-east.
- 5 Spies of the Air (1939), directed by David MacDonald (1904–83).
- 6 Toffolux: a tube of toffees, made by Mackintosh's.
- 7 Alan Dummer, a relative of Dillwyn Dummer.
- 8 Presumably should be 'Council schools'.
- 9 This is the first reference to Philip Burton (1904–95), teacher of English at Richard's school, who was to have a profound influence over Richard during the next few years, becoming his legal guardian in December 1943.
- 0 'Blues' and 'Reds' refer to blocks of streets in Monopoly. 'Pall Mall' is another street (coloured purple).
- 1 A précis-writing exercise.
- 2 Tonyrefail was a mixed industrial and market centre 16 miles due east of Taibach.
- 3 Dr John Caerau Rees DD, minister of Noddfa Chapel.
- 4 Richard's sister Hilda Jenkins (1918–95), who by this time was married and known as Hilda Owen. Neath is a town (1931 population 33,340) six miles to the north-west of Port Talbot.
- 5 W. H. Mayne was a local ironmonger, located on Station Road. Mr Owens was the woodwork teacher.
- 6 'Dad James' – Ben and Elfed's father. He was a deacon at Noddfa Chapel and also on the committee of the Taibach Co-operative Wholesale Society. Allan here but usually Alan.
- 7 'County School' – Port Talbot County School, the other grammar school in the town. Mr Smith was PE master at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 8 The Co-op's savings scheme.
- 9 Mr Wyndham Wellington.
- 0 Richard's cousin Rhianon James, Elfed and Cis's second child (1931—).
- 1 Mr Rossiter's son was Bernard Rossiter. Peggy Davies was daughter of Ben and Win James.
- 2 Miss M. E. Best taught geography at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 3 'Footer' would seem to suggest association football, as distinct from 'rugger' (rugby football).
- 4 'Pop' the headmaster (1935–43) of Port Talbot Secondary School, Mr Christopher T. Reynolds.
- 5 The scoreline suggests this was a rugby match.
- 6 'Cwm' meaning Cwmafan.
- 7 Richard's brother Ivor Jenkins (1906–72), a coal miner. Swansea (1931 population 164,797), then the largest town in Wales (Cardiff, the largest urban settlement, having acquired city status in 1905), is eight miles north-west of Taibach.

- 8 Leslie Charteris (1907–93) wrote a series of books featuring ‘The Saint’, later adapted for radio, film and television.
- 9 Gerry A. Mahoney, a fellow pupil, lived at 44, Brynheulog.
- 0 Brinley Phillips, a fellow pupil. Later played rugby football for Aberavon as a centre three-quarter.
- 1 At this time a try was worth three points, a conversion two, and a penalty goal three.
- 2 The front row consists of two props and a hooker.
- 3 Iestyn and Morgan were the names of school houses. Leisan was the name of Richard's house, Caradog the name of another. All were named after medieval Lords of Glamorgan.
- 4 The Plaza cinema was located at Station Road, Port Talbot.
- 5 Come on George (1939), directed by Anthony Kimmins (1901–64), starring George Formby (1904–61).
- 6 Prince was a dog.
- 7 Herbert George Jenkins (1876–1923) wrote a series of books featuring the character ‘Bindle’.
- 8 ‘Sideman to the hooker’ – what is usually termed a prop forward.
- 9 Cliff W. Owen or Owens, a fellow pupil.
- 0 Eric Lambourne, a fellow pupil who later became a teacher and a headmaster.
- 1 Ronald Butt, a fellow pupil, lived in Cwmafan. Freddie Williams (1926—) was to enjoy a highly successful career as a speedway rider with the Wembley Lions team in London, becoming world champion twice, in 1950 and 1953.
- 2 A special wartime rugby international was arranged to raise money for various charities. Wales played England at Cardiff Arms Park, losing by 9 points to 18. A return match at Gloucester in April saw another English victory, this time by 17 points to 3.
- 3 Talbot Athletic Ground, home of Aberavon Rugby Football Club, which was shortly to be converted into a site for barrage balloons.
- 4 Walter Vickery (1909–2000) was capped four times (as a Number 8) by Wales in 1938 and 1939, and captained Aberavon in the 1936–7 and 1945–6 seasons. Father George Vickery (1879–1970) had played for Aberavon and England.
- 5 Miss E. E. Griffiths (not Griffith) taught Welsh at Port Talbot Secondary School.
- 6 Stanley and Livingstone (1939), directed by Henry King (1886–1982), starring Spencer Tracy (1900–67).
- 7 The Majestic cinema in Bethany Square in the centre of Port Talbot had opened in 1938. It may be what is today the Job Centre building.
- 8 ‘T.H.’ – Thomas Henry, Richard's brother.
- 9 ‘Cymanfa’ is a reference to a Gymanfa Ganu, a Welsh singing festival.
- 0 Possibly Nettie Phipps. There were tennis courts in the Talbot Memorial Park.
- 1 This was Easter Sunday.
- 2 There is no record of this film or anything resembling it showing in Port Talbot at this time.
- 3 The Plaza cinema had undergone refurbishment and was reopened (as Port Talbot's ‘new luxury super-cinema') on Easter Monday. The building still stands in Station Road, although now derelict.

4 Sir Philip Hamilton Gibbs, Realities of War (1920, revised edn 1929).

5 Maesteg (1931 population 25,570), an industrial town in the Llynfi valley, about five miles east of Taibach.

6 Shipyard Sally (1939), directed by Monty Banks (1897–1950), starring Gracie Fields (1898–1979).

7 Rees Bowen, a deacon at Noddfa.

8 Alun Thomas (1926–91) went on to play first-class rugby for Swansea, Cardiff and Llanelli. He was capped 13 times by Wales, went on tour with the British Lions to South Africa in 1955, and returned as tour manager for the Lions in 1974.

9 Eifion H. N. Davies, a sixth-former, who went on to become a headteacher.

] Presumably 'Oh My Darling, Clementine'.

] A Maesteg to Port Talbot bus crashed on Tydraw Hill. One passenger died two days later from injuries suffered.

] Bucket of dung, or cow and horse manure. Richard would collect this from the mountainside and sell it.

] Auntie Hannah Oates, Richard's first cousin once removed.

] Mary Ann Jones was an elderly neighbour who lived on Inkerman Row East.

] Four Daughters (1938), directed by Michael Curtiz (1886–1962), starring Claude Rains (1889–1967) and John Garfield (1913–52).

] Colin T. C. Eynon, a fellow pupil.

] Truda Cound was a fellow pupil and a skilled tennis player.

] Dai Owen, Richard's sister Hilda's husband.

] Presumably Arthur 'Bonehead' Jenkins. 'Flicks' is a colloquial term for the cinema.

] The Gorilla (1939), directed by Allan Dwan (1885–1981).

] Arthur Neville Williams, a fellow pupil, who lived in Cwmafan.

] J. Beynon was a fellow pupil and a talented cricketer.

] Pont, meaning Pontrhydyfen and sometimes written as 'Ponty', Richard's birthplace, about three and a half miles north of Taibach. Gerwyn Owen, eldest child of Dai and Hilda Owen, and Richard's nephew.

] Richard's father, also named Richard Walter Jenkins (1876–1957), and sometimes referred to as 'Dic Bach' (little Dick).

] 'Clearance' refers to the quarterly clearance of personal debt at the Co-op. After clearance, members were allowed to trade again.

] 'D.D.' – Dillwyn Dummer. Jack Williams and Hubert Davies (not David), who both lived in Brook Street, Taibach.

] Edwin Dummer, Elfed James's brother-in-law, who was married to Margaret Ann, and father of Dillwyn. A Mr and Mrs Hopkins ran a baker's shop nearby in Taibach: their son Anthony had been born in 1937.

] Bowditch was a fellow pupil who lived in Margam.

] David Henry Lodwig was a fellow pupil and a talented cricketer.

- ⌋ Eric Nelson, whose family ran a coal merchant's business in Margam.
- ⌋ Mrs Turner was a neighbour in Caradog Street and a member of Noddfa Chapel.
- ⌋ David Rees lived in Taibach. He was to die during active service in the Second World War.
- ⌋ In fact Narvik, in northern Norway, was not taken by Allied forces until 27 May, by which time the situation in France and the Low Countries had become so desperate as to render its capture irrelevant. Accordingly, Allied forces were evacuated from Norway by 7 June.
- ⌋ Presumably 'in [the] cabinet'. Winston Churchill (1874–1965) replaced Neville Chamberlain (1869–1940) as Prime Minister on 10 May 1940 and included in his new cabinet Clement Attlee (1883–1967), Arthur Greenwood (1880–1954), Anthony Eden (1897–1977), Archibald Sinclair (1890–1970), A. V. Alexander (1885–1965) and Chamberlain himself.
- ⌋ Ogmere by Sea is a coastal settlement four miles south of Bridgend, a popular destination for holidaymakers.
- ⌋ Ivor Jones, a fast bowler and first-class cricketer, lived in Brook Street, Taibach.
- ⌋ Rulers of the Sea (1939), directed by Frank Lloyd (1886–1960), starring Douglas Fairbanks Jr. (1909–2000), Will Fyffe (1884–1947) and Margaret Lockwood (1916–90).
- ⌋ Billy Bennett (1887–1942) was a comedian, film actor and monologist.
- ⌋ Uncle Charles Thomas was Richard's mother's brother.
- ⌋ Sandfields, to the immediate north-west of Aberavon, now covered by housing and industrial estates.
- ⌋ 'Archie' Richard Davies.
- ⌋ Maxime Weygand (1897–1965) replaced Maurice Gamelin (1872–1958) as Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces following Gamelin's dismissal on 15 May.
- ⌋ This sentence is written in pencil and in a different hand.
- ⌋ It was presented in modern dress. Trevor George had had a small part in the school's 1939 production of The Doctor's Dilemma.
- ⌋ Bragg (Rich, 34), apparently citing Philip Burton's then unpublished manuscript, misquotes as 'am confident we'll pull through'.
- ⌋ Jake Williams, a fellow pupil, who later became a teacher.
- ⌋ Rydal School, Colwyn Bay. Stanley T. J. Walter, who lived in Abbey Road, Port Talbot, also played full back for Aberavon RFC.
- ⌋ Ynysmeudwy, an industrial settlement two miles north-east of Pontardawe, in the Tawe or Swansea valley.
- ⌋ Rose of Washington Square (1939), directed by Gregory Ratoff (1897–1960), starring Al Jolson (1886–1950).
- ⌋ 'tick' – ticket.
- ⌋ 'Smite' and 'Tadpole' were nicknames given to teachers. 'Tadpole' was Mr Jack Nicholas.
- ⌋ Captain Fury (1939), directed by Hal Roach (1892–1992), starring Brian Aherne (1902–86) in the title role.
- ⌋ Don Parr lived at 10, Mill Row.

- 1 Will Jenkins (1911–86), Richard's brother, had been in the Army for over nine years. He served in the Machine Gun Corps, and would be evacuated from Dunkirk.
- 2 The spelling is Cordey in the local press.
- 3 Tudor was the name of the house in the County School.
- 4 Patrick A. Lane, a fellow pupil and talented athlete, who later rose to a senior position in the National Coal Board.
- 5 The Four Feathers (1939), directed by Zoltan Korda (1895–1961), starring John Clements (1910–88) and Ralph Richardson (1902–83). Richard was later to work for Alexander Korda (1893–1956) and with Ralph Richardson.
- 6 Mountain Ash, a colliery town (1931 population 38,386) in the Cynon valley, 17 miles north-east of Taibach.
- 7 In the sea.
- 8 Private study. Philip Burton, Early Doors: My Life and the Theatre (New York: The Dial Press, 1969), 81, notes that he 'spent most of the summer of 1940 in bed, suffering from a rheumatic complaint that affected the heart'.
- 9 Ken Williams was from Pantdu, and a good cricketer.
- 10 GKB being Guest Keen and Baldwins, the local steel company.
- 11 'Todd' is A. Leslie Evans, a teacher at Central School and a keen local historian.
- 12 Frontier Marshal (1939), directed by Allan Dwan, starring Randolph Scott (1898–1987).
- 13 Pyle, an industrial settlement five miles to the south-east of Taibach.
- 14 Trefelin (sometimes Trevelin) was a school in the Velindre area of Port Talbot, north of the town centre, on the west bank of the Afan. The Ynys cricket ground was at Ynys y Gored, on the east bank of the Afan, between Velindre and Cwmafan.
- 15 The west window of Franchi Bros. confectioners, situated at Huddersfield Buildings, Station Road, Port Talbot, was shattered when a bomb exploded in the street outside. A pair of houses on Tydraw Hill was split in two by another bomb. Nine bombs in all were dropped on Port Talbot, but no one was killed.
- 16 Additional Sunday shifts in the coal industry had been adopted so as to maximize production, although with the fall of France the market for South Wales coal collapsed.
- 17 The gasometer, which actually had been emptied earlier in the war, was a regular target for German attacks.
- 18 Billy Jackson.
- 19 The Ferry meaning Briton Ferry, south of Neath on the east bank of the Nedd and about four miles north-west of Taibach.
- 20 I Am the Law (1938), directed by Alexander Hall (1894–1968), starring Edward G. Robinson (1893–1973). Richard was a great admirer of Robinson.
- 21 The Spitfire was the Royal Air Force's best-known fighter aircraft, heavily used during the Battle of Britain.

- ⌋ Mr J. Vyrnwy Davies, history teacher at the Sec, who later became Headmaster at Dyffryn Comprehensive, and whose nickname was 'Tout', a reference to the distinguished professional historian Thomas Frederick Tout (1855–1929).
- ⌋ Tom or Tommy Lane, also to be involved in the YMCA drama club.
- ⌋ 'Happy' is Mr George M. Hapgood, 'Bobby' is Mr Robert M. Owen. Both were teachers at Port Talbot Secondary School. George Hapgood was a talented amateur actor and appeared in a number of P. H. Burton's productions. He also served as an air raid warden, and as a Flight Commander in the Air Training Corps.
- ⌋ Aberdare, the major town in the Cynon valley (1931 population 48,746), 16 miles north-east of Taibach.
- ⌋ Margam is the area immediately to the south-east of Taibach, including Margam Park.
- ⌋ The air raid sirens sounded on 17 occasions in the Port Talbot area in July 1940.
- ⌋ This may refer to either I'll Give a Million (1938), directed by Walter Lang (1896–1972), starring Warner Baxter (1891–1951) and Peter Lorre (1904–64), or to I Stole a Million (1939), directed by Frank Tuttle (1892–1963) starring George Raft (1895–1980) and Claire Trevor (1909–2000).
- ⌋ The Brombil valley opens out on to the coastal plain at Margam, south of Taibach.
- ⌋ Naughty Marietta (1935), directed by W. S. Van Dyke (1889–1943), starring Jeanette MacDonald (1906–65) and Nelson Eddy (1901–67).
- ⌋ A protective cover.
- ⌋ Duggie Wakefield (1899–1951). Jack Benny. One imagines they were starring in different films.
- ⌋ Dillwyn Dummer had left school to work as a baker's roundsman for the Co-op.
- ⌋ 'Phillip': Brinley Phillips.
- ⌋ Verdun Jenkins (1916–2002), Richard's brother.
- ⌋ The Arsenal Stadium Mystery (1939), directed by Thorold Dickinson (1903–84), starring Leslie Banks (1890–1952).
- ⌋ The Flying Deuces (1939), directed by Edward Sutherland (1895–1973), starring Stan Laurel (1890–1965) and Oliver Hardy (1892–1957).
- ⌋ Q Planes (1939), directed by Tim Whelan (1893–1957), starring Ralph Richardson and Laurence Olivier (1907–89). Richard was to become a good friend of Olivier.
- ⌋ Charles Hockin, a friend of Richard's, who later became a schoolmaster in Taibach.
- ⌋ George Henry Bragg was caretaker/manager of the public baths (erected in 1900 but refurbished or rebuilt in 1938) on Forge Road.
- ⌋ Susie Preece was a fellow pupil at Port Talbot Secondary School. She would later be Richard's girlfriend.
- ⌋ Richard's brother David.
- ⌋ Where's That Fire? (1939), directed by Marcel Varnel (1894–1947), starring Will Hay (1888–1949).
- ⌋ For a while Richard considered joining the police force.
- ⌋ Cassie is Richard's sister Catherine (1921–2011).
- ⌋ In 1940 the summer holiday was reduced to three weeks, to compensate for the fact that school hours were

- shortened (from 0945 to 1545) as a result of the blackout.
-] Year V was divided into two forms: Vm and Vt.
 -] Gerwyn Williams (1924–2009) was already capped at rugby football by Wales at under-15 level and went on to win 13 senior caps between 1950 and 1954, including one against New Zealand in the victory of 1953. He was also a talented cricketer who represented South Wales.
 -] Mr V. Davies, brother of J. Vyrnwy Davies or ‘Tout’.
 -] A form of basketball.
 -] Juarez (1939), directed by William Dieterle (1893–1972), starring Brian Aherne, Bette Davis (1908–89), Paul Muni (1896–1967) and John Garfield.
 -] P. Burton (Richard and Philip, 14) quotes this line but misdates it as Wednesday 25 August.
 -] The Goytre valley, today known as Cwm Dyffryn, opens out on to the coastal plain at the northern end of Taibach.
 -] Over 1,000 incendiary bombs were dropped on Swansea in the most serious attack in the area until then. High Street station was badly damaged. The death toll was actually 33, although another 100 people were injured.
 -] Skewen is on the west bank of the Nedd, two miles from Neath itself. The oil refinery was at Llandarcy, south-west of Skewen. The fires continued for four days, and smoke drifted as far as Cardiff.
 -] Barrage balloons were used in an attempt to defend Swansea Bay from air attack.
 -] D. A. Cochlin, a fellow pupil.
 -] ‘Mitch’ is a colloquial expression for playing truant.
 -] ‘Stand off half’ often referred to today as ‘fly half’ or ‘outside half’. Elwyn Bowen was a talented athlete.
 -] In the back row, often referred to as a ‘flank forward’ or ‘flanker’ today.
 -] Thomas H. (often ‘Tom’ or ‘Tommy’) Mainwaring, a friend of Richard's.
 -] Stanley Jones, a fellow pupil and a talented athlete, who lived in Cwmafan.
 -] Richard Dix (1894–1949) and Richard Greene (1918–85) both featured in the 1939 films Man of Conquest and Here I Am Stranger.
 -] ‘matric’ refers to the School Certificate examination of the Central Welsh Board. Eventually, in September 1943, after a brief hiatus in his formal education, Richard would pass this examination.
 -] ‘23rd’ in circle, written in pencil, above deleted ‘16’. It would appear that Richard transposed the entries for the two weeks concerned but only made this obvious on the Monday (the first day of the week to view) in both cases.
 -] Mr Mervyn Sanderson, a teacher, who also ran a dancing school.
 -] Richard played the part of the American Ambassador Mr Vanhattan in The Apple Cart (1929) by George Bernard Shaw (1856–1950), produced and directed by Philip Burton, which would be staged by the Port Talbot Secondary School players in January 1941. In previous years Burton had produced a number of Shaw's plays at the school, including Captain Brassbound's Conversion, Saint Joan and The Doctor's Dilemma. The Apple Cart was the players’ 14th production. Because of blackout restrictions and safety

- regulations it had to be staged in the YMCA rather than in the school hall. See also Burton, Early Doors, 39–41.
- └ Burton (Richard and Philip, 15) quotes this as ‘who had been educated’.
 - └ Whitchurch is an affluent suburb in north-west Cardiff.
 - └ ‘16th’ in circle, written in pencil, above deleted ‘23’.
 - └ ‘Ginger’ was Gerwyn Williams.
 - └ Both try lines should have been the same length. The maximum permissible was 75 yards.
 - └ Simeon Jones was an (older) fellow pupil who acted the part of Cutler Walpole in The Doctor's Dilemma.
 - └ Morgan ‘Mog’ Griffiths, a fellow pupil, who was to have the role of King Magnus in The Apple Cart.
 - └ Joe James, a fellow pupil and talented athlete.
 - └ Gerwyn Williams.
 - └ This probably refers to the colliery settlement of Ogmore Vale, in the Ogwr valley north of Bridgend.
 - └ Wing forwards.
 - └ George Bernard Shaw.
 - └ Richard's second reference to his father.
 - └ Interestingly, Bragg (Rich, 35, citing Burton) and Burton (Richard and Philip, 14) have a comma between ‘wanted’ and ‘the same’, which alters the meaning, and they reverse the order from ‘be not wanted’ to ‘not be wanted’. Obviously this is open to differences of emphasis and interpretation, but it would seem to be potentially a case of editorial transformation on the part of Philip Burton.
 - └ Cymalog – today written as Cwm Maelwg, a valley behind Margam Castle.
 - └ This probably refers to Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever (1939), directed by W. S. Van Dyke, starring Mickey Rooney (1920—), or another of the Hardy Family series of films.
 - └ The Luftwaffe's bombing of London in particular had begun in early September 1940 and continued, barely without a pause, until mid November, when the focus shifted to a wider range of targets. The estimate of 3,800 civilian deaths by early November does not seem excessive. In total 13,596 civilians were killed as a result of enemy action in the London civil defence region (admittedly more extensive than the city itself) in the course of 1940.
 - └ Anderson shelters for individual households had arrived in the district in September.
 - └ The Hunchback of Notre Dame (1939), directed by William Dieterle, starring Charles Laughton (1899–1962).
 - └ The Revd Gwilym Rees MA, of Cardiff, brother of Dr J. Caerau Rees.
 - └ Welsh for ‘full of twang’, or ‘speaking posh’. Cassie had been nursing in England.
 - └ Gethin Matthews is perhaps stretching a point when he argues (Richard Burton, 29) that ‘mae nodiadau Richard yn ei ddyddiadur o 1940 yn dangos yn amlwg ei fod yn rhoi mwy o bwys ar ei ganlyniadau yn y Gymraeg nag mewn unrhyw bwnc arall’ (Richard's notes in his 1940 diary show clearly that he placed more importance on his results in Welsh than in any other subject’ [my translation]).
 - └ Garw School, Pontycymer, a colliery settlement in the Garw valley, north of Bridgend.

- 1 Mr Evans, the physics teacher.
- 2 Cwrdd mawr is Welsh for 'big meeting', in this context a religious gathering.
- 3 Auxiliary Fire Service. 'Nick' was Mr Jack Nicholas.
- 4 Philip Burton was Head of Leisan House.
- 5 Glenys Hare played the part of Queen Jemima in The Apple Cart.
- 6 Roy Vincent, a fellow pupil, also participated in the YMCA dramatic productions.
- 7 Burton is referring here to the 'bevy of ... Cabinet Ministers' who feature in The Apple Cart.
- 8 John Eaton Davies, a fellow pupil from Cwmafan, who later became a teacher.
- 9 Verdun had been disabled in a mining accident, for which he received compensation.
- 10 Terminals meaning end of term examinations.
- 11 Ivor served in the Royal Army Service Corps during the Second World War.
- 12 Nan Morse was a friend, member of Noddfa Chapel, and lived at 1, Constant Road.
- 13 Mr Christopher 'Pop' Reynolds the headmaster had been absent from school through illness. He would retire in 1943.
- 14 The Port Talbot YMCA (chairman: P. H. Burton) was by this time located in its new premises (which had opened in April) on Talbot Road. Its Boys' Club had a membership of about 100 and catered for boys between the ages of 12 and 16.
- 15 Edwina Dummer: the youngest daughter of Margaret Ann and Edwin Dummer.
- 16 'Lord Haw-Haw' was William Joyce (1906–46), who delivered radio broadcasts of Nazi propaganda to British audiences.
- 17 Italian troops had invaded Greece on 28 October 1940 and within a week were being repulsed.
- 18 Trans meaning translation.
- 19 Philip Burton was co-founder of the YMCA amateur dramatic society, and had produced a number of his own plays under their auspices, including Granton Street (1934) and White Collar (1938). See Burton, Early Doors, 44–51.
- 20 Richard was received into membership of Noddfa Chapel and took his first communion.
- 21 George Dear (sometimes Deer) was a fellow pupil, who later became a teacher of English.
- 22 Edie had a sometimes difficult relationship with her older brother Tom, who disapproved of her smoking.
- 23 Morwen is Morwen Gronow, the daughter of Elfed's sister Ethel.
- 24 Milly Gronow was the sister of Elfed's sister Ethel. She suffered from epilepsy.
- 25 The YMCA had a billiard room with three tables.
- 26 Indianapolis Speedway (1939), directed by Lloyd Bacon, also known as Devil on Wheels.

1960

- 1 The Fifth Column (1960), a television adaptation of the novel by Ernest Hemingway. It screened on 29 January 1960 on CBS in the USA.

- 2 Maximilian Schell (1930—), actor. Schell was to play a part in finding Maria (1961—), who was to be adopted by Elizabeth Taylor in 1962.
- 3 George Rose (1920–88), actor, who was to play the part of first gravedigger in the 1964 production of Hamlet. Betsy von Furstenberg (1931—), actor.
- 4 John Frankenheimer (1930–2002), television and film director.
- 5 Sybil Burton (1929—), Richard's wife.
- 6 Sally Ann Howes (1930—), actor.
- 7 L. Harvey is Burton's friend Laurence Harvey (1928–73), actor, who later that year would star in Butterfield 8 alongside Elizabeth Taylor. Harvey would also appear with Taylor in Night Watch (1973). Hugh Griffith (1912–80), actor and friend of Richard's, who had appeared alongside him in The Last Days of Dolwyn, in the summer 1951 Stratford productions of Henry IV (Part I), The Tempest and Henry V, and in Legend of Lovers in New York in 1951. Hugh French (1910–76), formerly an actor, by this time an agent for Richard. The Hotel Navarro, on Central Park South, New York.
- 8 B. Bogart is Lauren 'Betty' Bacall (1924—), the widow of Humphrey Bogart, who had died in 1957. The production to which Burton refers may have been Goodbye, Charlie, staged on Broadway, in which Lauren Bacall starred.
- 9 PHB is Philip Burton, Richard's former guardian. Su Str is Susan Strasberg (1938–99). Burton and Strasberg had enjoyed a passionate affair in 1957–8.
- 0 K refers to Kate Burton, Richard and Sybil's eldest child (born 1957). J. is Jessica Burton, Richard and Sybil's youngest child (born 1959). W is Wendy, their nurse.
- 1 Peter Brook (1925—), director.
- 2 Jeanne Moreau (1928—), actor.
- 3 Peter Brook was to direct Jeanne Moreau in Seven Days ... Seven Nights (also titled Moderato Cantabile, based on the novel of the same name by Marguerite Duras) in 1960. It is possible that Burton was considering the part of Chauvin, played in due course by Jean-Paul Belmondo (1933—).
- 4 Berenice Weibel, a friend and neighbour in Céligny.
- 5 The chalet that Richard and Sybil had built in the grounds of their house in Céligny.
- 6 Paul Fillistorf, chef and proprietor of Café de la Gare, Céligny.
- 7 René Weibel, Berenice's husband.
- 8 Bernard Greenford, Sybil's brother-in-law, and his daughter Claire.
- 9 Nyon is a small town and port 5 km from Céligny, on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 I hope to learn to ski in ten or two days.
- 1 Villars is a ski resort south-east of the eastern end of Lake Geneva, high above the Rhône valley, in the area known as the Alpes Vaudoises.
- 2 Bretaye is the name of a col and of one of the main skiing areas around Villars.
- 3 At rugby union, at Cardiff Arms Park.
- 4 Dewi Iorwerth Ellis Bebb (1938–96), Welsh rugby player.

- 5 Norman Morgan (1935—), Welsh rugby player, was actually a full-back, not a back-row forward. He kicked one penalty and converted Bebb's try.
- 6 A 'stem Christie' is a particular kind of skiing turn.
- 7 Aigle is a Swiss town near the Rhône valley floor.
- 8 Osian Gwynn Ellis (1928—), Professor of Harp at the Royal Academy of Music, and his wife Rene. Ellis was in Switzerland performing at the invitation of the British Council.
- 9 The match was played at Twickenham.
- 0 There is a casino at Divonne-les-Bains, a French spa town and resort 4 km west of Céligny.
- 1 The Ecumenical Institute located at the Château de Bossey, Bogis-Bossey, 2 km west of Céligny. Burton read poetry, Ellis played the harp.
- 2 Now the Hôtel du Soleil, Céligny.
- 3 Garage Fleury et Cie, Rue du Nant, Geneva.
- 4 Patricia 'Penny' Moyes (1923–2000), author of crime novels featuring the character Henry Tibbett (the first, Dead Men Don't Ski, was published in 1959). She had also translated Jean Anouilh's Leocadia, which as Time Remembered, ran on Broadway in 1957–8 with Richard Burton in the role of Prince Albert. Formerly a personal assistant to Peter Ustinov, she lived at Verbier, a ski resort in the Valais above the Vallée de Bagnes east of Martigny. Burton has definitely written Vervier but he may have made an error.
- 5 Michael Benthall (1919–74), theatre director, and artistic director of the Old Vic, who had directed Burton in Hamlet in Edinburgh in 1953 and at the Old Vic in London in 1953–4, also Burton in Coriolanus (1953–4), Henry V (1955–6), and Othello (1955–6).
- 6 Coppet, 5km south along the shore of Lake Geneva from Céligny.
- 7 Edouard Koessler was a partner with the Genevan bank Bordier & Cie, where Burton banked. He lived in Céligny.
- 8 Une barque is a small boat, so presumably this is a restaurant on a boat on Lake Geneva. There has been but is no longer a La Pergola restaurant at Geneva's Inter Continental Hotel.
- 9 A Swiss bookstore chain.
- 0 Hornblower refers to the series of novels by C. S. Forester (1899–1966).
- 1 Peter Ustinov (1921–2004), actor, author, director, playwright, raconteur. He would act alongside Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor in The Comedians (1967) and Hammersmith is Out (1972), which he also directed. From 1969 he was a Goodwill Ambassador for UNICEF and enlisted the support of Taylor and Burton for UNICEF ventures.
- 2 Jim is James Haszard (died 1994), lawyer, interpreter, whom Penny Moyes subsequently married. Versoix is 10km south along the shore of Lake Geneva from Céligny.
- 3 Tony Richardson (1928–91), director. Richardson and Burton had worked together on the film Look Back in Anger, and were now to collaborate on A Subject of Scandal and Concern (BBC TV, 1960). They would later fall out bitterly in 1968 over Laughter in the Dark. John Osborne (1929–94), playwright,

- actor, writer. Author of Look Back in Anger (play) and co-author of the screenplay for the film starring Burton. Author of A Subject of Scandal and Concern, and later involved in the prelude to the film Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973).
- 4 Presumably a reference to the poet William Butler Yeats (1865–1939).
 - 5 John Ormond (1923–90), Swansea-born director and television producer for the BBC, later an accomplished poet. Burton would narrate Ormond's half-hour documentary Borrowed Pasture which screened on BBC Television in 1960.
 - 6 At Ireland's home ground at Lansdowne Road.
 - 7 Nicholas Ray (1911–79), director. He and Burton had worked together on Bitter Victory (1957).
 - 8 Ray went on to direct King of Kings (1961). Presumably Burton was considering the part of Lucius, which was in due course played by Ron Randell (1918–2005), who also appeared in The Longest Day.
 - 9 Emlyn Williams (1905–87), playwright, actor, director. Emlyn Williams had been critical to Richard Burton's emergence as an actor in Britain in the 1940s. He had cast him in the stage production of The Druid's Rest (1943: Burton's stage debut), and directed him in The Last Days of Dolwyn (1949: Burton's film debut). He married Molly Shan in 1935. In 1952 he had played alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Ivanhoe (1952). In March 1960 he was performing in Geneva, Lausanne and Vevey.
 - 0 The joint christening of Kate and Jessica.
 - 1 David William (real name Williams) (1926–2010), actor and director.
 - 2 Liz Hardy. Former wife of Robert Hardy (1925—), actor.
 - 3 Ivor Jenkins, Richard's brother, and his wife Gwen.
 - 4 Lausanne, Swiss city on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
 - 5 Paul Scofield (1922–2008), actor, and his wife Joy Parker (1924—).
 - 6 Philip Burton.
 - 7 Pierre Folliet was a Genevan lawyer who acted for Burton in Switzerland.
 - 8 Guy Green (1913–2005), cinematographer and director.
 - 9 Different hand; pencilled sad face. Could have been drawn by Sybil.
 - 0 Probably Harvey Orkin (1918–75), theatrical agent, with whom Burton was in correspondence at the time.
 - 1 Presumably Bernard Greenford.
 - 2 Paul Scofield first played the part of Sir Thomas More in the stage production of A Man For All Seasons, written by Robert Bolt (1924–2005), in 1960. It seems likely that this refers to its pre-London tour.
 - 3 Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew, and his first wife Moira.

1965

- 1 Encyclopaedia Britannica.
- 2 Sara Taylor (née Sara Viola Warmbrodt) (1896–1994) Elizabeth's mother. 'Palace Hotel': the Gstaad Palace Hotel.

- 3 John Sullivan was aspiring to a career as a film producer.
- 4 Daliah Lavi (1942—), actor and singer.
- 5 Francis Taylor (1897–1968), Elizabeth's father.
- 6 Grand Hotel Park, Gstaad.
- 7 Natalie Wood (1938–81), actor. 'Young Niven' is David Niven Jr., a talent agent for the William Morris Agency, and son of the actor. He and Natalie Wood were enjoying a brief fling, staying at the Niven family home at Château d'Oex, 15 km west of Gstaad.
- 8 Tuberculosis.
- 9 Hostellerie Chesery, Gstaad.
- 0 Berne or Bern, Switzerland. Saanen is 3 km west of Gstaad. A permit de séjour was an official document required by non-Swiss nationals.
- 1 Burton had been ranked 10th in the Motion Picture Herald list of the top box-office stars in America, Taylor 11th.
- 2 Gaston Sanz was Burton's driver and bodyguard. HÔtel Le Meurice, Rue de Rivoli, Paris. Lancaster Hotel, Rue de Berri, Paris.
- 3 André 'Bobo' Besançon, the caretaker and housekeeper at Pays de Galles (d. 1968).
- 4 The Golden Arrow was a Pullman rail service linking London and Paris.
- 5 John Heyman (1933—) was Burton and Taylor's British agent (as head of the International Artists Agency) and adviser on tax havens. He was also a film producer, having produced the film version of Burton's Hamlet (he also co-produced the stage production in New York) and would produce Boom!, the Taylor film Secret Ceremony and Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
- 6 Burton and Taylor stayed at the Dorchester Hotel, Park Lane, London, while Burton worked on the London filming of The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- 7 Samuel Pepys (1633–1703), English diarist. 'And so to bed' was a phrase Pepys commonly used.
- 8 Louis Alexandre de Raimon (1922–2008) was a renowned Parisian hairdresser, known as Alexandre de Paris. Taylor was one of his regular and most celebrated clients.
- 9 Bermans was a professional costumiers (owned by Monty Berman, 1912–2002), supplying film, television and theatre companies located on Shaftesbury Avenue. Wardour Street, off Oxford Street, central London. Martin or Marty Ritt (1914–90) was producing and directing The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- 0 Oskar Werner (1922–84) played Fiedler in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. Werner was older than Burton by three years!
- 1 Isow's restaurant, Brewer Street, Soho. Claire Bloom (1931—) played Nan Perry in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. She and Burton had played opposite each other in the stage play The Lady's Not for Burning (1949, 1950), in the Old Vic productions in 1953–54 of Hamlet, Twelfth Night, Coriolanus and The Tempest, and in the films Alexander the Great (1956) and Look Back in Anger (1959). They had been lovers during the 1950s.

- 2 Sausages and mashed potato.
- 3 Battersea Park, on the south bank of the River Thames, opposite the Chelsea Embankment. Michael Hordern (1911–95) played the part of Ashe in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. He had played with both Burton and Taylor in The VIPs (1963), would do so again in The Taming of the Shrew (1967), and alongside Burton alone in Where Eagles Dare (1968), Anne of the Thousand Days (1970) and The Medusa Touch (1978). He and Burton had appeared on stage together in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night and The Tempest.
- 4 John Springer (1916–2001) was a publicist who headed the East Coast branch of the Arthur P. Jacobs public relations company, and worked as a press agent for Burton and Taylor. Hugh French was Burton's London agent who also became Taylor's agent, and who later moved to Hollywood.
- 5 Raymond E. Palmer of the Associated Press's London office.
- 6 The Six Bells was at 195–7, King's Road, Chelsea. Peter Sellers (1925–80), actor. Burton was to make a fleeting appearance in the Sellers film What's New Pussycat?
- 7 Paddington station is the terminal for railway lines entering London from Wales and the west of England.
- 8 Taylor underwent minor surgery of an undisclosed nature. From the evidence of her note on 6 May it might have been something gynaecological.
- 9 Mansion House tube station is on the District and Circle lines, located on Cannon Street. Telegraph buildings were the offices of the Daily Telegraph and Sunday Telegraph, then on Fleet Street.
- 0 Mirror Building was the offices of the Daily Mirror and Sunday Mirror.
- 1 South Kensington tube station.
- 2 Mirabelle, Curzon Street, Piccadilly, London.
- 3 Peter Glenville (1913–96), stage and film director. He had directed Burton in Becket and would direct him again in The Comedians. Hardy William ('Bill') Smith (d. 2001) was a theatrical producer, and Glenville's lover. Glenville had also sacked Richard from Adventure Story in 1949.
- 4 Reflections in a Golden Eye was to be made in 1967, starring Taylor and Marlon Brando (1924–2004), directed by John Huston (1906–87), based on the novel by Carson McCullers (1917–67).
- 5 La Méditerranée Place de l'Odéon, Paris.
- 6 Rolls-Royce.
- 7 Bangs: a hairstyle involving fringes across the forehead.
- 8 Baron Elie de Rothschild (1917–2007), financier.
- 9 Hôtellerie du Bas Breau, Barbizon, Fontainebleau, France.
- 0 Hôtellerie de la Poste, Avallon, Yonne, France.
- 1 Chateau de la Rochepot, south of Breau, Côte d'Or.
- 2 The Man Who Would Be King, based on the short story by Rudyard Kipling (1865–1936), which would eventually appear in 1975 starring Sean Connery (1930—) and Michael Caine (1933—).
- 3 Ray Stark (1915–2004), producer, 7 Arts films. He was to produce Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- 4 The Emperor Napoleon (1769–1821), on escaping from exile on Elba, stayed at the Hôtel de la Poste,

- Saulieu, before his confrontation with Marshal Ney (1769–1815) at Auxerre, some 90km to the north-west, on 14 March 1815.
- 5 La Côte d'Or, Saulieu.
- 6 Literally, 'honeymoon'.
- 7 Hôtel de France, Chalon-sur-Saône. The Copperhouse is a pub in Cwmafan. The Savoy Hotel, the Strand, London, is a five-star establishment.
- 8 Auberge Bressanne, Chalon-sur-Saône.
- 9 The town of Nantua, west of Geneva.
- 0 This refers to Taylor's house, the Chalet Ariel, at Gstaad. Sold in 2001 'Chateau De C' may mean Chateau D'Oex.
- 1 Michael Wilding (1953—) and Christopher Wilding (1955—): Elizabeth's two sons by her marriage to Michael Wilding Sr (1912–79). Liza Todd (1957—), Elizabeth's daughter by her marriage to Mike Todd (1907–58).
- 2 'Woolf' refers to the script of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? that Burton and Taylor were to film (later that year). Initially, in 1964, Taylor had been approached to act the part of Martha. Subsequently it was agreed that Burton would also play the part of George.
- 3 Hotel Olden, Gstaad.
- 4 The Hotel Alte Post, Weissenburg, near Darstetten. Weissenburg is 30 km from Gstaad.
- 5 A dice game, this version using poker dice.
- 6 The Côte d'Azur, or French Riviera, on the Mediterranean coast of south-east France.
- 7 Gstaad is 1,100 m above sea level.
- 8 St Tropez, Provence, France.
- 9 Yahtzee, a dice game, first released in 1965.
- 0 Elie de Rothschild.
- 1 Paul Neshamkin was the children's tutor.
- 2 L'Abbaye is in Talloires, on the eastern shore of Lac d'Annecy, Haute Savoie, France. Cassius Clay, later Muhammad Ali (1942—), knocked out Sonny Liston (1932–71) in controversial circumstances in a world heavyweight championship bout in Lewiston, Maine, USA, on 25 May 1965.
- 3 L'Auberge du Père Bise at Talloires.
- 4 Poularde de bresse is a celebrated chicken dish.
- 5 The Penguin Book of Contemporary Verse, selected with an introduction and notes by Kenneth Allott (1912–73), published in 1950.
- 6 Postcards.
- 7 Villa La Reine Jeanne, Les Baux de Provence, Provence. South of Avignon.
- 8 Probably L'Oustau de Baumanière, Les Baux.
- 9 Commandant Paul-Louis Weiller (1893–1993), aviator, engineer, industrialist and philanthropist. Owner of the Villa La Reine Jeanne, built for him in 1928.

- 0 'Burt': one of Burton's many nicknames for Taylor.
- 1 Charlie Chaplin (1889–1977), actor; other famous family members and actors include Sydney (1885–1965), Charles's older brother; Sydney Earl (1926–2009) Charles's son; and Geraldine (1944—) his daughter. Merle Oberon (1911–79), actor; Margot Fonteyn (1919–91), ballerina.
- 2 Le Lavandou, east of Toulon.
- 3 Possibly the liqueur Poire William.
- 4 The Ile de Porquerolles is an island just off the French coast, south of Hyères.
- 5 The novel A Clergyman's Daughter (1935) by George Orwell (1903–50).
- 6 Bathing costume.
- 7 Richard Grenier (1923–2002), newspaper correspondent, screenwriter, and novelist. Yes and Back Again, novel, (1966).
- 8 Probably Bormes-les-Mimosas, inland from Le Lavandou.
- 9 Richard (often 'Dick') Hanley (1909–71) was Taylor's secretary, who became press secretary for both Burton and Taylor. He had been Mike Todd's secretary's assistant. He performed a wide variety of tasks for the Burton/Taylor household, including helping to look after the children.
- 0 A Yiddish expression conveying shock or amazement. Often written 'oy gevalt'.
- 1 Hôtel Les Roches Fleuries at Aiguebelle, east along the coast from Le Lavandou.
- 2 Kleenex: tissues.
- 3 This refers to the second manned spaceflight by the US spacecraft Gemini 4. The astronauts were James Alton McDivitt (1929—) and Edward Higgins White (1930–67). White was the first American to walk in space.
- 4 Alexander the Great.
- 5 Rex Harrison (1908–90) had played Julius Caesar in Cleopatra and would play alongside Richard Burton in Staircase (1969).
- 6 Moules marinières: mussels.
- 7 Hôtel du Cap-Eden-Roc, Antibes, on the Cap d'Antibes, west of Nice.
- 8 Richard's former wife Sybil married the musician Jordan Christopher (born Jordan Zankoff, Youngstown, Ohio, 1942–96), lead singer of The Wild Ones.
- 9 'Tidy' is a South Walian colloquialism (in this context) for 'decent', 'good'.
- 0 The mistral is a strong wind associated with the Provence region.
- 1 Michel Jazy (1936—), silver medallist in the 1500m at the Rome Olympics in 1960, set a new world record for the mile of 3 min. 53.6 sec. on 9 June 1965. Le Figaro is a French daily newspaper.
- 2 Aaron Frosch (1925–89), Richard's lawyer.
- 3 Roddy McDowall (1928–98), actor, friend of Richard, Sybil and Elizabeth. He had played alongside Burton in an adaptation of The Tempest for NBC television in 1960, also in the New York production of Camelot (1960–1), had shared a villa with Richard and Sybil in Rome during the making of Cleopatra, and had had a part in The Longest Day.

- 4 Helen Greenford (b. 1941): Sybil's niece, daughter of her half-sister Linda, who had married Bernard Greenford.
- 5 Philip Burton had moved to the USA in 1954.
- 6 La Paillotte, Avenue Gavine, Hyères.
- 7 Leï Mouscardins, 1 Rue de Portalet, St Tropez, east along the coast from Le Lavandou.
- 8 Carlton Hotel, Cannes, just west of Antibes.
- 9 The editor of the Sunday Mirror at the time was Michael Christiansen (1926–84).
-] Hôtel du Cap Eden Roc, Antibes.
-] 'Bea' interlined. Bea was the children's governess. Nice is a short distance east of Antibes.
-] Juan les Pins, between Antibes and Cannes.
-] Christian Dior the fashion house.
-] Dick being Dick Hanley.
-] The SS Michelangelo, a liner built for the North Atlantic crossing in 1962.
-] Burton had previously travelled on the Cunard Lines' Queen Mary.
-] Quogue, Long Island. Home of Aaron Frosch.
-] Irv 'Kup' Kupcinet (1912–2003), newspaper columnist and television talk show host, married to Esther 'Essee' Solomon (d. 2001). The Pump Room, restaurant, in the Ambassador East Hotel, Chicago.
-] Hermes Pan (1910–90), American choreographer and dancer, who worked closely with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and who had been the choreographer for Cleopatra.
-] Constantine Fitzgibbon, The Life of Dylan Thomas (1965). Burton, who had been a friend of Thomas, would write a review of this volume for the New York Herald Tribune.
-] Pomona, Los Angeles.
-] A pet.
-] Scandia restaurant, Sunset Boulevard.
-] Mike Nichols (1931—), at this point renowned as a theatre director. He was to make his directorial debut on film with Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1966). Rosemary Forsyth (sometimes Forsythe, Forsyth-Yuro) (1944–), actor.
-] Their Yorkshire Terrier.
-] John Lee, Dick Hanley's secretary.
-] A district to the immediate west of Beverly Hills.
-] 'Their father': Michael Wilding Sr, actor and agent. 'Maggie': Dame Margaret Leighton (1922–76), by this time married to Michael Wilding Sr, and who would appear with Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
-] Dr Rexford Kennamer, a doctor at the Hollywood Presbyterian hospital, often treated Taylor and Burton when they were in California. He had met Taylor at the time of Montgomery Clift's car accident in 1956, and had become part of Taylor's wider entourage, occasionally accompanying her on trips abroad, including to Rome during the filming of Cleopatra. He was physician to many famous Hollywood stars.
-] Valerie Douglas, at this time Burton's publicist in Beverly Hills.

1966

- 1 In this diary Burton enters where he is writing from on most days. Here only the initial change of location will be entered.
- 2 Franco Zeffirelli, director of The Taming of the Shrew. Irene Sharaff (1910–93), Elizabeth Taylor's costume designer for the film, who had also been costume designer for Cleopatra and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Richard F. McWhorter, executive producer for the film, had been assistant to the producer on both The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and Becket.
- 3 The Taming of the Shrew.
- 4 Vittorio De Sica (1901–74), director. De Sica would direct Burton in The Voyage.
- 5 Edward Albee (1928—), playwright, author of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?
- 6 Hotel Ranieri, Via Venti Settembre. Albee's partner at this time was William Pennington.
- 7 Albee's A Delicate Balance would win the Pulitzer Prize in 1966.
- 8 Tiny Alice; play by Albee, premiered 1964.
- 9 Paparazzi – press photographers.
- 0 Ugo Betti (1892–1953), The Queen and the Rebels (1951).
- 1 Umberto D.; film by Vittorio De Sica, 1952.
- 2 A glass shot is the shooting of a scene through glass which may have been painted to represent, for example, scenery.
- 3 Robert Haggia (1913–2009), film producer, who would make Candy with Burton in 1968.
- 4 Via Vittorio Veneto.
- 5 The Trial of Stephen Ward (1964).
- 6 Memoirs by Harry S. Truman: Year of Decisions (vol. 1, 1955); Years of Trial and Hope (vol. 2, 1956).
- 7 Harold Wilson (1916–95) called a general election in order to secure a larger Labour majority.
- 8 'Tory press' meaning those supporting the Conservative Party. The Daily Mirror supported the Labour Party.
- 9 Labour won 363 seats at the election, increasing its majority in the House of Commons from 4 to 96 seats.
- 0 Lhasa Apso: a breed of dog.
- 1 Rudolph Nureyev (1938–93), ballet dancer.
- 2 Luigi Barzini, The Italians: A Full Length Portrait (1964).
- 3 Erik Belton Evers Bruhn (1929–86), ballet dancer.
- 4 Les Sylphides, the ballet.
- 5 The Little Bar is just off the Via Sistina on Via Gregoriana.
- 6 Ron Berkeley was Richard's make-up man on many films, including Taming of the Shrew. Vicky Tiel (1943—) was at this time a clothes and costume designer who had worked on What's New Pussycat?, and who would design clothes and costumes for other films involving Burton, including Candy and Bluebeard. Berkeley and Tiel would marry in 1971, and divorce in 1986. At this point Tiel was on the

- verge of establishing herself as a significant fashion designer, with a boutique in Paris.
- 7 Switzerland.
- 8 Lido di Ostia, 30 km west of Rome.
- 9 E'en So: Burton and Taylor's Pekinese.
- 0 The Silencers (1966), directed by Phil Karlson (1908–85), starring Dean Martin (1917–95).
- 1 Wales beat France 9–8 at Cardiff.
- 2 'Goodness Gracious Me!' was the title of a single released by Peter Sellers and Sophia Loren (1934—) in 1960; it reached no 4 in the charts. Loren would later co-star with Burton in The Voyage and Brief Encounter.
- 3 Anglo, ridden by Tim Norman and trained by Fred Winter.
- 4 Cardiff (1914–2009), cinematographer and director, had worked with Robert Haggis on The Barefoot Contessa (1954).
- 5 Sons and Lovers, (1960) remains his best known film as director. It won an Oscar for cinematography, and was nominated in six other categories, included Best Director.
- 6 The 'solarization' process using a so-called 'magic box', was to be utilized in Cardiff's 1968 film, Girl on a Motorcycle.
- 7 There is today a Ristorante Le Streghe, on the Via Tuscalona, about 2km from the Cinecittà studios in Rome.
- 8 A prominent and historic Italian family.
- 9 Larry: Laurence Olivier. John: Sir John Gielgud (1904–2000), actor and director, friend of Richard Burton, whom he had directed in The Lady's Not for Burning (1949, 1950), The Boy with a Cart (1950), Hamlet (1964) and with whom he had acted and would again act (Becket, Wagner). 'always the pouffs' is presumably a derogatory reference to male homosexuals.
- 0 A version of the line spoken by Lady Macbeth of Duncan, in Macbeth Act V, scene i: 'Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?'
- 1 'Snapshot': one of Richard's nicknames for Elizabeth.
- 2 FZ: Franco Zeffirelli.
- 3 'Shumdit' was another nickname Richard had for Elizabeth.
- 4 Mike Todd Jr (1929–2002), the son of Mike Todd by his marriage to Bertha Freeman (1927–46). Around the World of Mike Todd would screen in September 1968.
- 5 The covering of the Spanish Steps or Piazza di Spagna with flowers is an annual ritual in spring.
- 6 Possibly the Vineria Il Chianti, Via del Lavatore.
- 7 Porto Santa Stefano is on the Promontorio dell'Argentario, some 125km from Rome. Burton and Taylor had spent a fraught weekend there in April 1962 during their affair. Burton returns to discuss that weekend's events in his diary for 13 August 1971.
- 8 Charles Herbert Beal (1908–91), jazz pianist.
- 9 Agnes Flanagan was Elizabeth's hairdresser on Taming of the Shrew and would repeat this role for Doctor

Faustus. Frank Flanagan was her husband. Frank La Rue was Elizabeth's make-up man for Taming of the Shrew and for a number of other films.

0 Ristorante L'Escargot, Via Appia Antica, Rome.

1 Cyril Cusack (1910–93) was playing the part of Grumio. He had played alongside Richard in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and would do so again in Tristan and Isolde. Victor Spinetti (1933–2012), a Welsh actor, was playing the part of Hertensio.

2 'Cantank' is another nickname for Elizabeth Taylor.

3 Mia Farrow (1945—), who was to act alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Secret Ceremony.

4 Kenneth Tynan (1927–80), theatre critic, journalist, literary manager at the National Theatre (1963–73). Truman Capote (1924–84), author. Tynan had reviewed and known Burton since the beginnings of his stage career. Capote was a friend of Taylor.

5 Tynan's hostile Observer review (13 March 1966) of Capote's In Cold Blood (1965) provoked Capote into a reply (27 March 1966).

6 Barry Norman (1933—), film critic and, at this time, show business editor of the Daily Mail, in which the interview appeared.

7 Curettage: a surgical procedure using a curette, a small instrument like a scoop. A rather old-fashioned method of inducing an abortion, but also (and, it seems likely, in this case) a therapeutic procedure that may improve chances of future conception.

8 Welsh for 'Thanks be to Him / For ever remembering the dust of the earth', a line from the hymn 'Diolch iddo'.

9 The first, unedited film sequence.

0 Michael Hordern was playing the part of Baptista. Alan Webb (1906–82) was playing the part of Gremio.

1 To finagle – to fiddle etc.

2 Joshua Logan (1908–88), director. He was to direct a film version of Camelot starring Richard Harris (1932–2002) for Warner Bros which appeared in 1967.

3 Garmisch, a ski resort in Bavaria.

4 Thomas Babington Macaulay, 1st Baron Macaulay (1800–59), who is credited with the response (at the age of four), after having hot coffee spilt on his legs: 'Thank you, madam, the agony is abated'.

5 Milton 'Mickey' Rudin (1920–99), lawyer with Gang, Tyre, Rudin and Brown of Sunset Building, Hollywood. His client list included Elizabeth Taylor and Frank Sinatra. Burton had been using the firm since the early 1960s if not before.

6 Nevill Coghill (1899–1980), academic. Coghill, then fellow and tutor in English Literature at Exeter College, Oxford, had directed Burton in the 1944 production of Measure for Measure and had remained a friend ever since. Coghill, from 1957 to 1966 Merton Professor of English Literature at Oxford, would co-direct Doctor Faustus with Richard, having written the screen adaptation.

7 Bach gan – bachgen – Welsh for 'boy'.

8 The London Adventure (1924) was the third and final part of the autobiography of the Welsh writer Arthur

- Machen (1863–1947).
- 9 At the Basilica San Pietro (St Peter's).
 - 0 'Why so pale and wan, fond lover?' is the opening line of 'Why so Pale and Wan' by Sir John Suckling (1609–42).
 - 1 Michael York (real name Michael Hugh Johnson) (1942—) was playing the part of Lucentio. He had read English at Oxford University and had worked with Franco Zeffirelli in the National Theatre prior to making his screen debut in The Taming of the Shrew.
 - 2 Luna Park – Rome's amusement park and funfair.
 - 3 Ambrose Coghill would play the part in the film of Doctor Faustus (1968) of Avarice/First Professor.
 - 4 George Henry Lewes (1817–78), On Actors and the Art of Acting (1875).
 - 5 Columbia Pictures were financing The Taming of the Shrew.
 - 6 Zero meaning Zeffirelli.
 - 7 A reference to John Bartlett, Familiar Quotations, which first appeared in 1855. 'Fag' here being short for 'faggot', a derogatory term for a homosexual.
 - 8 It is possible that Burton is making a reference here to Sharaff's homosexuality.
 - 9 Mike Frankovich (1909–92), film producer.
 - 0 Richard is here referring to Robert Traill Spence Lowell (1917–77), the American poet. Lowell's daughter Harriet was born on 4 January 1957, making her the same age as Liza Todd.
 - 1 Enzo: presumably the housekeeper or caretaker.
 - 2 Wolf Mankovitz (1924–98), writer, was to write the screenplay for Faustus and also work on The Battle of Sutjeska.
 - 3 Burton means Tommy Thompson (1933–82), journalist with Life.
 - 4 W. H. Auden (1907–73), poet. About the House (1965).
 - 5 Pamela Brown (1917–75) had played alongside both Burton and Taylor in Cleopatra, Burton in Becket (1964) and would play alongside Taylor in Secret Ceremony (1968). She had also acted with Burton in the stage production of The Lady's Not for Burning (1949). Sally Wilson (d. 1967) was the wife of Bob Wilson (b. 1905), Richard Burton's dresser and assistant.
 - 6 Dave Crowley (1910–74), former British lightweight boxing champion, occasional film actor, and proprietor of 'Le Pub'.
 - 7 Maureen Cusack (died 1977) was Cyril's wife.
 - 8 Alfred Lynch (1931–2003), playing the part of Tranio, and Roy Holder (1946—), playing the part of Biondello.
 - 9 Paul Dehn (1912–76), screenwriter for Taming of the Shrew. He had also written The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
 - 0 Natasha Pyne (1946—) was playing the part of Bianca.
 - 1 Kurt Frings (1908–91) was Taylor's Hollywood agent.
 - 2 The Bible: In the Beginning (1966), directed by John Huston and produced by Dino de Laurentiis (1919–

- 2010).
- 3 Gore Vidal (1925–2012), novelist, playwright, essayist and satirist.
 - 4 Princess Virginia Carolina Theresa Pancrazia Galdina von Fürstenberg (1940—), and Patrick O'Neal (1927–94) were making the film Matchless (1967) in Italy at the time.
 - 5 Hotel Fontanella Borghese on the Via della Fontanella di Borghese.
 - 6 Stephen Grimes (1927–88), had been the (Academy Award nominated) art director on The Night of the Iguana and was also to work on Reflections in a Golden Eye.
 - 7 Arglwydd Mawr, Welsh literally for ‘great lord’, but equivalent here to ‘good lord’ or ‘god in heaven’.
 - 8 Ossie is Oswald Morris (1915—), Director of Photography on The Taming of the Shrew, who had also been photographer on Look Back in Anger, director of photography on The Spy Who Came in from the Cold, and who would be director of photography on Equus. Elaine is Elaine Schreyeck (1924—), responsible for continuity on The Taming of the Shrew, who would perform the same role for Doctor Faustus. She had been a script supervisor on Cleopatra, and responsible for continuity on Alexander the Great.
 - 9 Michael Cacoyannis (or Kakogiannis) (1922—), filmmaker.
 -] La Lupa; play by Giovanni Verga, 1896. Anna Magnani (1907–73), actor.
 -] ‘Undonog’ – Welsh for monotonous.
 -] Petruchio's speech in Act II, scene i, including the lines, ‘Say that she rail, why then I'll tell her plain / She sings as sweetly as a nightingale’.
 -] Tuesday was the 24th.
 -] Corsetti's is an apartment complex at Tor Vaianica, on the coast some 30km south of Rome.
 -] Henry Cooper (1934–2011) fought the world champion Cassius Clay (later Muhammad Ali) at Arsenal Stadium on 21 May 1966, Clay stopping Cooper in the sixth round. Burton and Taylor had attended the first (non-title) fight between Cooper and Clay at Wembley Stadium in London in 1963, in which Clay had stopped Cooper in the fifth.
 -] Carlo is probably Carlo Lastricati (1921—), Assistant Director on Taming of the Shrew, who would also fill this role on Boom! and The Assassination of Trotsky. But also working on the film were Carlo Fabianelli, an editor (who was also to work on Doctor Faustus), and Carlo Savina, the conductor.
 -] Russell Braddon (1921–95), novelist, journalist and broadcaster, was to publish ‘Richard Burton to Liz’ in the Saturday Evening Post, 3 December 1966. His most famous book was The Naked Island (1952), an account of his time as a Japanese prisoner of war.
 -] Sir John Guthrie Ward (1909—) was British Ambassador to Italy from 1962 to 1966. His wife was Daphne Norah Ward (née Mulholland (1915–83).
 -] Bosley Crowther (1905–81), film critic for the New York Times from 1940 to 1967, and his wife Florence (née Marks).
 -] ‘Booby’: one of Richard's nicknames for Elizabeth.
 - , Joseph E. Levine (1905–87), film producer and promoter.

- ⌋ OUDS: Oxford University Dramatic Society.
- ⌋ Rolle, on the north shore of Lake Geneva between Nyon and Lausanne, is the location of Institut Le Rosey, the prestigious boarding school attended by Michael and Christopher Wilding.
- ⌋ Joe Roddy had written an article, 'Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton: The Night of the Brawl', which had appeared in Look on 8 February 1966.
- ⌋ McCall's: an American monthly magazine aimed at women readers.
- ⌋ Malheureusement: French for unfortunately.
- ⌋ Frascati, the important wine-growing area to the south-east of Rome.
- ⌋ Bon Appetito is presumably a nickname for Taylor.
- ⌋ A Bloody Mary is a vodka based cocktail usually including tomato juice, lemon juice and a dash of Worcestershire sauce or Tabasco.
- ⌋ Agatha Christie (1890–1976), a prolific author of detective fiction. Burton had played the part of the detective Hercule Poirot in a production of Christie's Alibi while a schoolboy in Port Talbot.
- ⌋ A reference to the Divina Commedia by Dante Alighieri (1265–1321).
- ⌋ Montgomery Clift (1920–66), actor. He had starred alongside Elizabeth Taylor in Suddenly Last Summer (1959) and had been due to act in Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- ⌋ The Grande Raccordo Anulare is a motorway encircling Rome.
- ⌋ Nicholas Young was Technical Assistant on Faustus.
- ⌋ Roderick Mann (1922–2010), then film critic with the Sunday Express.
- ⌋ Darryl Francis Zanuck, (1902–79), a major American film mogul, at this time Executive President of Twentieth Century-Fox, and a man with whom Burton's career had been intertwined since the early 1950s. Zanuck had launched litigation against Burton and Taylor after Cleopatra, alleging that their affair had damaged the film's commercial prospects. The case was eventually dropped.
- ⌋ Peter Evans (1938—), journalist, biographer and novelist.
- ⌋ David Frost (1939—), broadcast journalist, at this time producing The Frost Report for the BBC. Frost had had a cameo part as himself in The V.I.P.s.
- ⌋ Zeffirelli's production of Samuel Barber's (1910–81) opera Antony and Cleopatra was first performed on 16 September at the opening of the new Metropolitan Opera House in New York. It was not well received.
- ⌋ Peter Evans's biography, Peter Sellers: The Mask Behind the Mask, appeared in 1968.
- ⌋ Two of Richard's sisters died in infancy, one in 1903 and the other in 1908. Both were named Margaret Hannah.
- ⌋ Ron, Richard's brother-in-law.
- ⌋ Andreas Teuber, actor: formerly an undergraduate at St John's College, Oxford, he had played the part of Mephistophilis in the OUDS production of Doctor Faustus earlier in the year, and was now playing the same part (albeit titled Mephistopheles) in the film version. He has since gone on to a distinguished career as a philosopher.

- 1 Artist and cartoonist William Hogarth (1697–1764), whose depictions of individuals were often unflattering.
- 2 Lionel Davidson, A Long Way to Shiloh (1966), a thriller.
- 3 Hugh Wray McCann, Utmost Fish (1965), a work of fiction (albeit based on a true incident), set during the First World War.
- 4 Randolph S. Churchill, Winston S. Churchill, Vol. I: Youth, 1874–1900 (1966).
- 5 'The Child is father of the man': a line from the poem 'My Heart Leaps Up When I Behold' (1802), by William Wordsworth (1770–1850).
- 6 Richard was considering the part of Napoleon in Waterloo (1970), eventually played by Rod Steiger (1925–2002), who, like Richard, had appeared in The Longest Day. They would both appear in Breakthrough (1979).
- 7 Reflections in a Golden Eye appeared in 1967, directed by John Huston, produced by Ray Stark and starring Marlon Brando and Elizabeth Taylor.
- 8 This became the film A Guide for the Married Man (1967), directed by Gene Kelly (1912–96) and starring Walter Matthau (1920–2000).
- 9 Burton means Prosper Mérimée's Carmen, (1845).
- 10 The official cause of death was 'occlusive coronary artery disease', although it is thought that addiction to alcohol and drugs exacerbated Clift's health problems.
- 11 Lorenzo James was Clift's secretary.
- 12 The part of Lucifer was played by David McIntosh and that of Belzebug by Jeremy Eccles.
- 13 Lionel Davidson (1922–2009) at this point had published two other books (under that name): The Night of Wenceslas (1960) and The Rose of Tibet (1962), both of which had been very well received.
- 14 His past knowledge of Italian had been presumably acquired when in Rome shooting Cleopatra.
- 15 Basil Fenton Smith (sometimes hyphenated as Fenton-Smith) had been sound mixer on Sea Wife, 'sound' on The Night of the Iguana and would perform that role again for Reflections in a Golden Eye. He would be sound recordist for Candy. Dave Hildyard (1916–2008) had been sound mixer on The Taming of the Shrew and was performing that role again for Faustus. He would later be 'sound' on Breakthrough. Robert L. Jacks (1927–87) was a film producer who had worked with Burton on The Desert Rats and was the son-in-law of Darryl F. Zanuck.
- 16 Gwydion Thomas (1945—) who played 'Lechery' and 'Third Scholar' in Doctor Faustus was the son of the Welsh poet R. S. Thomas (1913–2000).
- 17 Ronald A. Lublin (1918–2004), film producer. Lawrence George Durrell (1912–90), poet, novelist, dramatist. Oedipus the King was made into a film in 1968, although Durrell is not credited as a scriptwriter.
- 18 Carl Foreman (1914–84) would produce MacKenna's Gold (1968) starring Gregory Peck (1916–2003) and Omar Sharif (1932—).
- 19 This is a paraphrase of the lines spoken by the character Sir Stephen Scroop in Shakespeare's Richard II,

- Act III, scene ii: 'Sweet love, I see, changing his property,/Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate', and of the line spoken by the character Zara in Act III Scene viii of William Congreve's The Mourning Bride (1697) 'Heaven has no rage like love to hatred turned, Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned'.
- ⌋ A part played by Elizabeth Taylor.
 - ⌋ The Fixer (1966) by Bernard Malamud (1914–86). It won the National Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction.
 - ⌋ Federico Fellini (1920–93), director.
 - ⌋ On 24 September De Laurentiis had begun to take legal action against Fellini over the future of the film project Il viaggio di G. Mastorna. This dispute would be resolved early in 1967, although the film was never made.
 - ⌋ Vanessa Redgrave (1937—), actor. Married to Tony Richardson from 1962 to 1967, she was to play alongside Richard Burton in Wagner (1983).
 - ⌋ Burton means Neil Hartley (1916–94).
 - ⌋ The 'Greek gigolo' was Thodoros 'Theo' Roubanis, in 1967 to become the third husband of Lady Sarah Consuelo Spencer-Churchill (1921–2000). They divorced in 1981. Roubanis had a minor acting part in the Richardson-directed film, The Sailor from Gibraltar (1967), which is the context referred to here.
 - ⌋ Burton presumably means posizione – position.
 - ⌋ Hugh Williams was playing Second Scholar and Richard Heffer (1946—) First Scholar.
 - ⌋ Sheila Pickles was Zeffirelli's personal assistant.
 - ⌋ 'Cargoes' (1910) by John Masefield (1878–1967). Should be 'Quinquereme'.
 - ⌋ Elmo Williams (1913—), President's Representative for Foreign Productions, Twentieth Century-Fox.
 - ⌋ Ruth Blackmore was the granddaughter of Philip Burton's half-brother (18 years older than he), Will Wilson. Wilson's daughter Megan, a lecturer, had married Fred Blackmore, a school headmaster.
 - ⌋ Richard Alderson, known professionally as Christian Alderson, actor, friend and one-time companion of Philip Burton.
 - ⌋ The Christian Science Monitor is the newspaper of the Church of Christ, Scientist.
 - ⌋ My Dog Tulip by J[oe] R[andolph] Ackerley (1956). A film version was released in 2010.
 - ⌋ The Comedians was Burton's next film project.
 - ⌋ Burton was anticipating the role of Arthur Chipping in the musical version of Goodbye Mr Chips, which eventually came out in 1969 with Peter O'Toole (1932—) as the lead.
 - ⌋ Pipo the donkey appeared in the film.
 - ⌋ Jack Hildyard (1908–90), cinematographer, brother of Dave Hildyard. He had been director of photography on Suddenly Last Summer and The V.I.P.s, and would perform the same role on The Wild Geese and Ellis Island.
 - ⌋ Roy Thomson (1894–76), had become Lord Thomson of Fleet in 1964.
 - ⌋ Peregrine Worsthorne (1923—), deputy editor and columnist for the Sunday Telegraph.
 - ⌋ Silver Masks are the annual Italian awards for achievement in the theatre, cinema, opera and television.

- }] Robert Graves (1895–1985), author, poet. His memoir of wartime service on the Western Front, Good-bye to All That, first appeared in 1929.
-] Sir Stephen Spender (1909–95), poet, critic. Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–94), playwright, novelist, short story writer, essayist. Voltaire, pseudonym of François-Marie Arouet (1694–1778), novelist, poet, critic, philosopher. Samuel Goldwyn (1882–1974), producer. ‘Pieces of eight!’ is from Stevenson’s Treasure Island (1883).
-] Comedians. Alec Guinness (1914–2000) was to co-star in The Comedians, based on the novel (published in 1965) by Graham Greene (1904–91).
-] Bechuanaland, now part of Botswana and South Africa.
-] Sandy MacPherson (1897–1975), theatre organist who broadcast regularly on the BBC during the Second World War.
-] A reference to the Munich Agreement of September 1938 reached between Britain and France on the one hand, and Hitler’s Germany on the other, regarding the fate of the Sudetenland.
-] Burton presumably means not ‘hunger strikes’ but the hunger marches of the 1930s, some of which emanated from South Wales, but the most famous of which began in Jarrow in the north-east of England.
-] D’Chez Eux, Avenue Lowendal, Paris.
-] A reference to the music hall song ‘It’s a long way to Tipperary’, written in 1912 and made popular during the First World War.
-] Nat White was Louise’s husband.
-] Samuel Johnson (1709–84), essayist, journalist, author, made this remark of Sir John Hawkins (1719–89).
-] The Players’ social club, Gramercy Park, New York, founded in 1888 by the Shakespearean actor Edwin Booth, whom Burton had portrayed in Prince of Players. The Band of Hope was a temperance organization for children, founded in 1847. The Urdd Gobaith Cymru (Welsh League of Youth) was founded in 1922. The Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA), also aimed at young people, was founded in 1844.
-] Alberto Sordi (1920–2003), actor. Marcello Mastroianni (1924–96), actor, who was to co-star with Richard in Massacre in Rome (1974). Vittorio Gassman (1922–2000), actor and director. Virna Lisi (1937—), actor, who was to co-star with Richard in Bluebeard (1972). Monica Vitti (1931—), actor. Rossana Podesta (1934—), actor.
-] Hassler Hotel, Piazza della Trinità dei Monti, Rome.
-] Ion Swinley (1891–1937), Shakespearean stage actor. Henry Hinchcliffe Ainley (1879–1945), Shakespearean stage and film actor.
-] Frank Robinson (1935—), and Brooks Robinson (1937—), playing for the Baltimore Orioles. Donald Scott Drysdale (1936–93), pitcher for the LA Dodgers. Baltimore won this, the first game, on 5 October 1966.
-] Baltimore won the second game, 6–0, on 6 October 1966. Willie Davis (1940–2010) of the LA Dodgers made three errors.

- 3 Sanford 'Sandy' Koufax (1935—) of the LA Dodgers.
- 4 Ann Sheran Cazalet (1934—), childhood friend of Elizabeth Taylor. P. G. Wodehouse (1881–1975), short story writer, novelist. Possibly the book was Plum Pie, an anthology published in September 1966.
- 5 Nicholas Loukes (1944–76), who played Pride and Cardinal of Lorraine in Faustus.
- 6 Richard Charles Uryan Rhys, 9th Baron Dynevor (1935–2008), who had inherited the Llandeilo Estate in 1962. He was at this point attempting to establish an Arts Centre at Newton House, in Dinefwr Park.
- 7 This refers to the (historically unsubstantiated) claim that the Welsh Prince Madog ab Owain Gwynedd discovered America c.1170.
- 8 Harvey Orkin, theatrical agent and a good friend of Burton.
- 9 A reference to the researches of Richard Deacon, Madoc (1966).
- 10 Ken Muggleston (1930—) was in charge of properties on both Taming of the Shrew and Faustus.
- 11 Baltimore beat the LA Dodgers 1–0 in the third game on 8 October 1966.
- 12 Josephine Tey, pseudonym of Elizabeth Mackintosh, 1896–1952), A Shilling for Candles (1936).
- 13 Stanley Ellin (1916–86) had published six novels by this time.
- 14 Baltimore won the World Series with a 1–0 victory in the fourth game on 9 October 1966.
- 15 Bobby Frosch, Aaron's wife.
- 16 A reference to William Dunbar (1456–1513), 'Lament for the Makaris, the last line of each verse of which being 'Timor Mortis conturbat me'.
- 17 Which Burton eventually would in 1974.
- 18 Taylor, who had previously enjoyed dual citizenship, renounced American citizenship in order to become solely a British subject.
- 19 Burton had played Prospero in a 1960 production for NBC television, having played Caliban in the Old Vic production in 1953–4.
- 20 Positano, a port and resort south of Naples, on the south side of the Sorrentine peninsula.
- 21 Possibly the make-up man on both Faustus and The Taming of the Shrew, Giannetto De Rossi (1942—).
- 22 During the making of The Spy Who Came in from the Cold.
- 23 Cornelius Ryan (1920–74), The Last Battle (1964).
- 24 A Negroni is made of gin, vermouth and bitters.
- 25 Either Burton missed the 'm' on the typewriter and hit the adjacent 'n', or he really meant to use the French for 'comfortable'.
- 26 A reference to the 1867 poem 'Dover Beach' by the poet and critic Matthew Arnold (1822–88). The line is 'melancholy, long, withdrawing roar'.
- 27 Iris Murdoch (1919–99). The 'latest volume' may have been The Red and the Green (1965). She had married John Bayley (1925—) in 1956.
- 28 Gwyn Thomas (1913–81), Welsh playwright, novelist, satirist and broadcaster. Dylan Thomas (1914–53), poet and friend of Richard Burton. T. S. Eliot (1888–1965), poet and playwright. Louis MacNeice (1907–63), poet.

- ⌋ Roderick Thorp (1936–99), The Detective (1966) made into a 1968 film starring Frank Sinatra (1915–98).
- ⌋ Tony Britton (1924—), actor, who would appear with Taylor in Night Watch (1973). Robert Shaw (1927–78), actor. Peter Finch (1916–77), actor, who had initially been cast as Julius Caesar in Cleopatra.
- ⌋ Sorrento, a resort town on the north side of the Sorrentine peninsula.
- ⌋ Hotel La Minervetta, Sorrento.
- ⌋ Presumably the Michelin Red Guide to hotels and restaurants.
- ⌋ Presumably Burton means ‘muliebrity’, the condition of being a woman.
- ⌋ This is a reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene ii: ‘trippingly on the tongue’. Hotel Covo dei Saraceni, Positano.
- ⌋ Dorothy Jeakins, costume designer (1914–95). She had worked with Richard on My Cousin Rachel (1952) and on The Night of the Iguana (for each of which she had received an Academy Award).
- ⌋ The serial killer of at least five women in the East End of London in 1888.
- ⌋ Tiziani means Evan Richards (1924—), the founder of the fashion house Tiziani of Rome.
- ⌋ Wine from the island of Ischia, in the Bay of Naples.
- ⌋ Dopo la tempesta, Italian for ‘after the storm’.
- ⌋ Eva Britton, Tony’s second wife, is indeed Danish. Jasper Britton (1962—), actor.
- ⌋ Aberfan, a mining community in the Taff valley, South Wales, where on 21 October a coal tip slid down the hillside engulfing a number of buildings, including a primary school. 116 children and 28 adults were killed.
- ⌋ Ferdy Mayne (1916–98), actor, would appear with Burton in Where Eagles Dare. The ‘Something Griffiths’ was probably Kenneth Griffith (1921–2006), a Welsh actor who was appearing with Mayne in The Bobo (1967). Griffith had acted with Burton in Waterfront, the 1961 audio production of King Henry V, and would appear with him again in The Wild Geese.
- ⌋ Julie Harris (1925—) played the part of Alison Langdon in Reflections in a Golden Eye.
- ⌋ Brian Keith (1921–97) played the part of Morris Langdon in Reflections.
- ⌋ Robert Forster (1941—).
- ⌋ John Bryant (1911–69), producer and production designer.
- ⌋ Hal B. Wallis (1898–1986) had produced Becket and would produce Anne of the Thousand Days.
- ⌋ Edmund Wilson (1895–1972), Europe without Baedeker (1947).
- ⌋ George Santayana (1863–1952), philosopher, writer.
- ⌋ Memoirs of Hecate County, Edmund Wilson (1946); banned in USA until 1959 on the grounds of obscenity.
- ⌋ The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Agency.
- ⌋ Ernest Hemingway (1898–1961), novelist.
- ⌋ 73, Caradoc Street, Taibach, where Richard had lived as a boy.
- ⌋ Joanna: cockney rhyming slang for piano.
- ⌋ In Florence the River Arno flooded. Thirty-three people were killed, approximately 5,000 rendered homeless and a large number of valuable books, manuscripts, maps and other artefacts were destroyed or damaged. In Venice it became known as the 'Great Flood', where there was no loss of life, although significant damage to property.

- 7 Hotel Gritti Palace, Venice.
- 8 Hotel Flavia, Via Flavia, Rome. Rome's zoological gardens, located in the Villa Borghese.
- 9 Stanley Baker (1928–76), Welsh actor and a long-time friend of Richard Burton. Richard and Elizabeth were godparents to Stanley and Ellen Baker's daughter Sally.
- 0 Burton made this opinion public, which did not go down well with Stanley Baker, but he and Taylor did participate in the television show ('The Heart of Show Business'), which was broadcast on 26 March 1967.
- 1 Robert Browning (1812–89), poet, and his wife Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1806–61), poet. Only Elizabeth was buried in the English Cemetery in Florence.
- 2 Anita Loos (1891–1981), actor and author. Her autobiography, A Girl Like I, was published in 1966.
- 3 Margalo Gillmore (1897–1986), actor.
- 4 Alex Woolcott (1887–1943), critic and writer. The story (A Girl Like I, p. 151) is that Woolcott revealed to Loos that 'he had always wanted to be a girl' and 'all my life I've wanted to be a mother!'
- 5 Tuesday was 15 November. Burton remains one day out for the rest of the diary.
- 6 Sheran Cazalet married Simon Hornby (1934–2010) in 1968.
- 7 Christian Marquand (1927–2000), actor and director, who was to direct Candy (1968).
- 8 Meade Roberts (1930–92), screenwriter.
- 9 A reference to the screenplay (part-written by Philip Burton), of Dylan Thomas's The Beach of Falesa (1964), based on the 1892 short story by Robert Louis Stevenson.
- 0 Eddie Fisher (1928–2010), Elizabeth Taylor's husband prior to her marrying Richard Burton.
- 1 This is a reference to the exploits of John Ridgway (1938—) and Chay Blyth (1940—), who rowed across the Atlantic in English Rose III in 92 days.
- 2 Malcolm Muggeridge (1903–90), Tread Softly for You Tread on my Jokes (1966).
- 3 John Cleland (?1709–89), Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure (1748–9), often known as Fanny Hill after the main character; D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930), Lady Chatterley's Lover (1928); Henry Miller (1891–1980), Tropic of Capricorn (1938) and Tropic of Cancer (1934); Terry Southern (1924–95) (writing as Maxwell Kenton) and Mason Hoffenberg (1922–86), Candy (1958).
- 4 A Nissen hut was a prefabricated steel building characteristic of military bases and airfields.
- 5 Hugh Kingsmill (1889–1949), biographer, novelist, literary critic.
- 6 Zeffirelli's documentary on Florence (Per Firenze – For Florence, which appeared in 1966), with narration by Burton, is reputed to have raised more than $20m. This appeared on the BBC in English on 11 December 1966 with the title 'Florence: Days of Destruction'.
- 7 William Ralph Inge (1860–1954), cleric and journalist. The quotation is: 'The nations which have put mankind and posterity most in their debt have been small states – Israel, Athens, Florence, Elizabethan

England.’

} Robert Blake, Disraeli (1966).

} PT: Physical training.

} Ponte Vecchio is a medieval bridge over the Arno in Florence.

| The Uffizi Gallery, Florence's historic art museum.

1967

1 Cotonou, largest city of the Republic of Dahomey (now Republic of Benin), where the filming of The Comedians was taking place.

2 Peter Glenville, director of The Comedians.

3 Alec Guinness, co-starring in The Comedians.

4 President (formerly Colonel and Chief of Staff to the Armed Forces) Christophe Soglo (1909–83), President of the Republic of Dahomey from October 1963 to January 1964 and from November 1965 to December 1967. Soglo, who had fought with distinction for France in the Second World War, had been France's military adviser to the Dahomean government before resigning and acquiring Dahomean citizenship in 1960.

5 President Soglo had met his wife in French Indochina.

6 None. Soglo's rule would be brought to an end by an army coup in December 1967. There were to be a total of six coups in Dahomey/Benin during the decade from 1963 to 1972.

7 Chiang Kai-shek (1887–1975), President of the Republic of China. Soglo had visited Taiwan some time in 1964/65.

8 Claudye Etti was Elizabeth Taylor's hairdresser on The Comedians and would become part of the Burton–Taylor entourage in Europe. She also played the small part of the manicurist in the film. Raymond St Jacques (1930–90) played the part of Captain Concasseur in The Comedians.

9 Saint Jean Cap Ferrat, port and resort, on the Cap Ferrat peninsula to the east of Nice.

0 VW: Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf. New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Actress.

1 George Stanford Brown (1943—) played the part of Henri Philipot in The Comedians.

2 Guinness dressed as a black woman (impersonating Burton's character's cook) for the scene in which his character, Major Jones, finds sanctuary in the embassy.

3 Peter Ustinov played the part of Ambassador Pineda in The Comedians.

4 Villa La Fiorentina, situated on the Saint Hospice point, Cap Ferrat peninsula. Taylor had previously rented the same property when married to Mike Todd.

5 A garlic and vegetable soup with basil.

6 The Prince's Palace of Monaco, the official residence of the Prince of Monaco. Hôtel de Paris, Place du Casino, Monaco.

7 It would appear that Burton is referring here to Prince Rainier of Monaco (1923–2005) and his wife

- Princess Grace (1928–82), actor.
- 8 James Earl Jones (1931—) played the part of Dr Magiot in The Comedians.
- 9 Hôtel Plaza Athénée, Avenue Montaigne, Paris.
- 0 Oscars were won by Elizabeth Taylor (Best Actress); Sandy Dennis (Best Supporting Actress) (1937–92); Haskell Wexler (Best Cinematography) (1922—); Richard Sylbert (Best Art Direction – Black-and-White) (1928–2002); George James Hopkins (Best Set Decoration – Black-and-White) (1896–1985); and Irene Sharaff (Best Costume Design). Nominations were also received for the film as Best Picture; for Ernest Lehman (Best Producer) (1915–2005); Mike Nichols (Best Director); Richard Burton (Best Actor); George Segal (Best Supporting Actor) (1934—); Ernest Lehman (Best Screenplay – Based on Material from Another Medium); Alex North (Best Music) (1910–91); George R. Groves (Best Sound) (1901–76); and Sam Steen (Best Film Editing) (1923–2000).
- 1 The Duke of Windsor, formerly King Edward VIII (1894–1972), and his wife, the Duchess of Windsor, formerly Wallis Simpson (1896–1986).
- 2 Frank Flanagan, husband of Agnes.
- 3 Sally Wilson, wife of Bob.
- 4 Millfield School, Street, Somerset.
- 5 Sybil and Jordan's daughter was named Amy.
- 6 The Odyssey motor yacht was built in 1906. Richard and Elizabeth had chartered it. Portofino, a resort and port to the east of Genoa, on the Italian Riviera.
- 7 Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica on its western coast. L'Ile Rousse and Calvi, both on the north-western coast of Corsica.
- 8 Santa Margherita and Rapallo, both close to Portofino.
- 9 Emilio Pucci, fashion house, with a Portofino boutique.
- 0 Ristorante Il Potosforo, Molo Umberto I, Portofino.
- 1 Cary Grant (1904–86), actor. Presumably this was a film script based on Elaine Dundy's 1964 novel The Old Man and Me. There is no record of the film having been made.
- 2 Robert Daley (1930—), The Whole Truth (1967). Daley had worked for the New York Times.
- 3 Alexander McKee, Caen: Anvil of Victory (1964).
- 4 Both Burton and Taylor would star in Boom!
- 5 The Shoes of the Fisherman was the title both of a novel by Australian writer Morris West (1916–99), and of a 1968 film based on the novel, starring Laurence Olivier and John Gielgud.
- 6 Rex Harrison and the Welsh actor Rachel Roberts (1927–80) had married in 1962. Rachel Roberts had played alongside Burton in A Subject of Scandal and Concern. The Harrisons had a house – Villa San Genesio – in Portofino.
- 7 The United Arab Republic: the official name for Egypt at the time. The Six Day War between Israel on the one hand and Egypt, Syria and Jordan on the other would start on 5 June and end on 10 June 1967, with Israel clearly victorious.

- 8 La Gritta American Bar, Calata Marconi, Portofino.
- 9 Bill is William Glavin, Tennessee Williams's paid companion from 1965 to 1970. Joseph Losey (1909–84), director. Losey would direct Boom!, Secret Ceremony, and The Assassination of Trotsky. John Heyman (1933—), agent and producer of Boom! Tennessee Williams (1911–83), playwright. Burton and Taylor had played in film adaptations of Williams's The Night of the Iguana, Suddenly, Last Summer and Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. Boom! was his own adaptation of his 1962 play The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore.
- 0 Carole Landis (1919–48), actor and former lover of Rex Harrison. Kay Kendall (1926–59), actor and Harrison's third wife (1957–9). Lilli Palmer (1914–86), actor and Harrison's second wife (1943–57).
- 1 Sir Francis Chichester (1901–72), aviator and sailor, had been diagnosed with terminal cancer in 1958. He had won the first single-handed transatlantic yacht race in 1960 and had gone on to circumnavigate the globe from August 1966 to May 1967.
- 2 Hostilities between the Germans and the Allies in Italy ceased on 2 May 1945. However, Liberation Day in Italy is celebrated on 25 April, the anniversary of the end of Mussolini's Italian Social Republic.
- 3 Arthur Barbosa (1908–95), artist, theatre designer and interior decorator.
- 4 St Edward's School is on Woodstock Road, Oxford. Group Captain Sir Douglas Robert Steuart Bader (1910–82), RAF fighter pilot and war hero.
- 5 Punt e Mes: an Italian vermouth.
- 6 Probably Elie Abel, The Missile Crisis (1966).
- 7 John F. Kennedy (1917–63), President of the United States of America. Nikita Khrushchev (1894–1971), First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (1953–64).
- 8 The David Di Donatello: the Italian version of the Academy Award. T of S: The Taming of the Shrew.
- 9 Gamal Abdel Nasser (1918–70), President of Egypt (1954–70).
- 0 'Bob' being Bobby Frosch.
- 1 Gualberto Rocchi of Milan (1914—), whose bust of Burton was donated to the New Theatre, Cardiff, by Sally Burton in 1989. Kate Burton still owns her Rocchi bust.
- 2 Rampoldi's restaurant, Avenue des Spélugues, Monaco.
- 3 La Ferme Saint Michel, Avenue La Condamine, Villefranche-sur-Mer.
- 4 L'il Abner Yokum was an American comic strip character (1934–77). This may well be Ernie Smatt from Jamaica, a world water-ski champion.
- 5 La Réserve de Beaulieu-sur-Mer, on the Côte d'Azur.
- 6 Orson Welles (1915–85), actor and director.
- 7 Chimes at Midnight was a film written, directed and starring Welles that had appeared in 1966.
- 8 Sam Spiegel (1903–85), producer. Harry Kurnitz (1907–68), screenwriter, playwright.
- 9 Gus and Frances Newman owned the Southern Breeze.
- 0 Howard probably refers to Howard Taylor (1929—), Elizabeth's brother, who played the part of the journalist in Boom!

- 1 L'Oustau de Baumanière, Les Baux de Provence, to the east of Arles.
- 2 Hôtel Negresco, Promenade des Anglais, Nice.
- 3 Hôtel La Grillade au Feu de Bois, Le Luc, between Fréjus and Brignoles.
- 4 Hôtel-Restaurant Le Relais de l'Empereur, Montélimar, in the Rhône valley.
- 5 L'Abbaye de Talloires, on the eastern shores of Lake Annecy.
- 6 Auberge du Pere Bise, Talloires.
- 7 Bulle, just west of the southern end of Lac de la Gruyère.
- 8 Sandie Shaw (1947—) had won the Eurovision Song Contest with 'Puppet on a String' in 1967.
- 9 Mara Taylor, Howard's wife.
- 0 Colonel Louis Johannot (1919–2009).
- 1 Ava Gardner (1922–80), actor, who had played alongside Burton in The Night of the Iguana. Ricardo Sicre, a friend of Gardner, whose son, also Ricardo, went on to study at Yale University.
- 2 This may be a jokey reference to Norma Heyman (1940—), John Heyman's wife.
- 3 Yul Brynner (1915–85), actor, by this time married to his second wife, Doris Kleiner (the marriage ended in 1967). Morges is 11 km west of Lausanne on the northern shore of Lake Geneva.
- 4 Grande Hotel Bellevue, Gstaad.
- 5 Hôtel Beau Rivage, Quai du Mont Blanc, Geneva.
- 6 Nella was Elizabeth Taylor's maid.
- 7 Ernst Andrea Scherz, owner and manager of the Gstaad Palace, with his wife Shiwa. The Scherz family had been running the Gstaad Palace Hotel since 1938.
- 8 Victoria Brynner was born in November 1962.
- 9 Stephen Marlowe (1928–2008), writer. The Shining appeared in 1961. Marlowe wrote many thrillers.
- 0 Vivien Leigh (1913–67), actor, former wife of Laurence Olivier.
- 1 Jayne Mansfield (1933–67), actor. Although she suffered severe head injuries, the rumour that she was decapitated is untrue.
- 2 Gianni Bozzacchi, photographer. He and Claudye would marry in June 1968.
- 3 Roy Emerson (1936—), Manuel Santana (1938—), and Rafael Osuna (1938–69) were all international tennis stars. Emerson would beat Santana in the final in 1967 for the second year running.
- 4 Paula Strasberg (1909–66), actor. Lee Strasberg (1899–1982), drama teacher, founder of the Actors' Studio and guru of 'method' acting. Susan Strasberg (1938–99), actor, was their daughter, and had been Richard's lover in the late 1950s.
- 5 'Anche io' is Italian for 'me too'.
- 6 Jim McManus (1940—) and Jim Osborne (1940—), international tennis players, beaten in the men's doubles.
- 7 Gavin Maxwell, Ring of Bright Water (1960).
- 8 Neuchâtel, a city on the northern shore of Lake Neuchâtel, Switzerland.
- 9 Posthotel Rössli, Promenade, Gstaad.

- 0 Salisbury, Wiltshire, slightly more than halfway between London and Street, Somerset.
- 1 R. J. O. Meyer (1905–91), headmaster of Millfield, former captain of Somerset (cricket).
- 2 The Bobo. Peter Sellers was at this point married to Britt Ekland (1942—).
- 3 Sammy Davis Jr (1925–90), entertainer.
- 4 Taormina, a small town on the east coast of Sicily.
- 5 Peter O'Toole, actor, who had played alongside Burton in Becket and would play alongside both Burton and Taylor in Under Milk Wood. Between 1959 and 1979 he was married to the Welsh actor Siân Phillips (1934—), who had also acted in Becket and would act in Under Milk Wood.
- 6 At this point O'Toole had been twice nominated for Oscars (for Lawrence of Arabia and Becket). His current (2012) tally stands at eight nominations, one higher than Burton.
- 7 Catania, city on the east coast of Sicily, and location of the Fontanarossa airport.
- 8 Michael Wilding Sr. 'Maggie' refers to Wilding's fourth wife, the actor Margaret Leighton.
- 9 Burton and Taylor (and O'Toole) were attending the Taormina Film Festival.
-] Noël Coward (1899–1973), actor, director and playwright.
-] Burton had played the Marquis of Sheere in Coward's Conversation Piece.
-] Ehud Avriel (1917–80), Israel's ambassador to Italy, 1965–8.
-] Grand Hotel de la Minerve, Plaza della Minerva, Rome.
-] Jane Swanson, secretary to Burton and Taylor.
-] Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901), wrote La Traviata (first performance 1853); Robert Merrill (1917–2004), operatic baritone. His second wife was Marion Machno (d. 2010).
-] Taverna Flavia, Via Flavia 91, Rome.
-] Hôtel Président Wilson, Quai Wilson, Geneva.
-] Chambésy, a village on the northern outskirts of Geneva.
-] Leighton: really Layton. Son of Howard and Mara.
-] William David Ormsby-Gore, 5th Baron Harlech (1918–85), at this point leading the Harlech Television consortium which would win the franchise from Television Wales and the West.
-] Francis (1954—), the current Baron Harlech, Alice (1952–95) and Victoria (1945—).
-] Sylvia Thomas (1940–67).
-] Lord Derby, chairman of Television Wales and the West.
-] A reference to T. S. Eliot's poem The Waste Land (1922), which opens with the line 'April is the cruellest month'. 'tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow', a reference to Shakespeare's Macbeth, Act V, scene v.
-] Hotel Capo Caccia is on the Capo Caccia peninsula, near Alghero, a port on the north-west coast of Sardinia.
-] 'Evan Roberts Tiziani' is a slip – it was Evan Richards. Evan Roberts (1878–1951) was a Welsh evangelist who had led the 1904–05 religious revival in Wales. A Kabuki headdress is an elaborate Japanese wig.
-] A steward on the Kalizma.
-] W. John Morgan (1929–88), Welsh journalist and television producer, also involved with the establishment

- of HTV. The New Statesman is a British socialist weekly magazine.
- ⌋ Michael Dunn (1935–73) played Rudi in Boom!
 - ⌋ Graham Payn (1918–2005), actor and companion of Coward. ‘Coley’ was his secretary Cole Lesley (d. 1980).
 - ⌋ David Niven (1909–83), actor.
 - ⌋ Joanna Shimkus (1943—) played the role of Blackie, the secretary to Flora Goforth (played by Taylor).
 - ⌋ Valerio DePaolis (1942—), who was to perform again as Unit Manager in Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
 - ⌋ Peter Thorneycroft (1909–94), previously Conservative MP for Stafford (1938–45) and Monmouth (1945–66), formerly Chancellor of the Exchequer, had lost his seat at the 1966 general election and become Baron Thorneycroft. His second wife was Carla, Contessa Roberti (1914–2007), by whom he had had a son (Piero) and a daughter (Francesca).
 - ⌋ Bonifacio, port on the southern tip of Corsica.
 - ⌋ David Heyman (1961—), more famous today for being the producer of the Harry Potter films.
 - ⌋ Paris was to be the venue for the European premiere of Taming of the Shrew.
 - ⌋ Cavalcade (1931).
 - ⌋ The play Blithe Spirit (1941). Portmeirion, an Italianate holiday village and architectural flight of fancy in Merionethshire, North Wales.
 - ⌋ Joyce Carey (1898–1993), who appeared in the film Blithe Spirit (1945).
 - ⌋ Burton and Taylor would appear on stage together in 1983 in a production of Private Lives (1933).
 - ⌋ Hay Fever (1925).
 - ⌋ Jacqueline de Ribes (1929—), designer, couturière and socialite. Her husband was Edouard, comte de Ribes.
 - ⌋ It could have been either Elie (1917–2007) or his cousin Guy (1909–2007).
 - ⌋ ‘La Scandale’: the affair between Burton and Taylor. It should be ‘Le Scandale’.
 - ⌋ Charles de Gaulle (1890–1970), President of France.
 - ⌋ Curd (often Curt) Jurgens (1915–82), actor, who had played alongside Burton in Bitter Victory. His wife at this time was Simone Bicheron.
 - ⌋ The Bear Hotel, Sunninghill, Woodstock, Oxfordshire.
 - ⌋ David Lewin and James Mossman interviewed Burton and Taylor. Alexander Walker (1920–2003), film critic and writer who would publish a biography of Elizabeth Taylor. Lord David Cecil (1902–86), Professor of English Literature at Oxford, 1948–70. Professor Marvin Rosenberg of the University of California, Berkeley, Shakespearean expert (1912–2003).
 - ⌋ Dylan being Dylan Thomas. David Jones (1895–1974), author of In Parenthesis (1937).
 - ⌋ Louis MacNeice was a friend of Burton.
 - ⌋ Archibald MacLeish (1892–1982), poet.
 - ⌋ Mildred Eldridge (1909–91), artist and wife of R. S. Thomas.
 - ⌋ Nuffield Hospital, Woodstock Road, Oxford.

- 5 Quintin Hogg (1907–2001), Conservative MP for St Marylebone, formerly (and again after 1970), Lord Hailsham, who had been a contender for the leadership of the Conservative Party in 1963 but had lost out to Edward Heath (1916–2005). Robert Boothby (1900–86), Baron Boothby from 1958, another Conservative politician, who had married earlier that year Wanda Sanna, a Sardinian woman 33 years his junior.
- 6 Prince Edward, Duke of Kent (1935—) and Katharine, Duchess of Kent (1933—).
- 7 Rolf Hochhuth's play Soldiers, Necrology on Geneva (1967). Burton was considering playing the role of Churchill.
- 8 Bettina Krahmer, Guy Rothschild's stepdaughter by his first marriage.
- 9 Costa Smeralda, on the north-eastern coast of Sardinia.
- 0 Alberto and Raphael were crew members on the Kalizma.
- 1 Liscia di Vacca, a bay between Porto Cervo and Pevero, on the Costa Smeralda. It means 'beach of the cows'.
- 2 Curtis Bill Pepper (1917—), war correspondent and head of the Rome bureau for Newsweek magazine.
- 3 Port city some 60 km south of Rome.

1968

- 1 Fitzroy Nuffield Hospital, Bryanston Square, London.
- 2 Michael Holroyd (1935—), Lytton Strachey: The New Biography (1968).
- 3 Muriel Spark, (1918–2006) The Public Image (1968). Raymond Vignale, also secretary to Taylor.
- 4 'God save the mark!' is a line spoken by Hotspur in Henry IV (Part 1), Act III, scene ii.
- 5 Johann Sebastian Bach was Burton and Taylor's housekeeper at Chalet Ariel, Gstaad.
- 6 The Wells, Well Walk, Hampstead.
- 7 At this point Taylor was planning to make The Only Game in Town with Frank Sinatra, singer, actor. The subsequent delay led Sinatra to withdraw from the project, and he was replaced by Warren Beatty (1937—).
- 8 Burton means autobiography. A. L. Rowse, A Cornishman in Oxford (1965), p. 145: 'He [Cecil] asked me along to lunch: it would have been kinder to ask me to tea, for I foresaw that some fearful social obstacle would rear its ugly head. It did – in the form of asparagus – and I was inwardly vexed. How did one eat it? It was the same conundrum that was raised in an aristocratic Officers' Club under the Nazis: how did the Führer eat his asparagus? I could not bring myself to plunge my fingers into the mess, as my host did without ado; so I proudly left it on the side of my plate.' Burton and Rowse (1903–97) would become friends in the last months of Burton's life, after appearing on American television together.
- 9 Terence Young (1915–94) was to direct Burton in The Klansman and was also director for the ill-fated film Jackpot.
- 0 Brook Williams (1938–2005), actor, son of Emlyn and Molly Williams, was a great friend of Burton's and

- acted alongside him in more than a dozen films starting with Cleopatra and ending with Wagner.
- 1 Sally, daughter of Stanley and Ellen Baker.
 - 2 Ethel Kennedy (1928—), widow of Robert F. Kennedy (1925–68), US Senator, candidate for the Democratic Party's nomination for President, who had been assassinated in June 1968.
 - 3 Aristotle Onassis (1904–75), shipping magnate, who was to marry Jackie Kennedy (1929–94), widow of President John F. Kennedy, in October 1968.
 - 4 The documentary film (which won an Oscar for Best Short Subject Documentary) was directed by Charles Guggenheim (1924–2002) and entitled Robert Kennedy Remembered.
 - 5 Hôtellerie du Bas Breau, Grande Rue, Barbizon, Fontainebleau.
 - 6 Dr Barrington Cooper (1923–2007), who had been introduced to Burton and Taylor by Joseph Losey.
 - 7 Hyral was Tom's second wife.
 - 8 This story is not true: the name comes from the German words pumpfern (to break wind) and Nickel (goblin).
 - 9 Mary (1542–87), Queen of Scots (1542–67).
 - 0 Nicholas Ray (1911–79), the director.
 - 1 Cambridge University has no record of Barry Cooper winning a Blue for rowing.
 - 2 This refers to the Crichton-Stuarts, Marquesses of Bute, whose family seat is Mount Stuart on the Isle of Bute.
 - 3 The term ‘non-U’ means not upper class. The distinction between ‘U’ and ‘non-U’ terminology and linguistic usage was popularised in the 1950s by the author Nancy Mitford (1904–73).
 - 4 Roscoe Lee Browne (1925–2007) had appeared alongside Burton and Taylor in The Comedians.
 - 5 P. G. Wodehouse, Do Butlers Burgle Banks? (1968).
 - 6 Winston Churchill, The World Crisis, 1911–1918 (1923).
 - 7 Burton was to co-star with Rex Harrison in Staircase.
 - 8 Richard Zanuck (1934–2012), son of Darryl F. Zanuck and President of Twentieth Century-Fox.
 - 9 John C. Shepridge had been executive producer of What's New Pussycat?
 - 0 Rue du Vertbois.
 - 1 Mia Fonssagrives (1942—), clothes designer on What's New Pussycat? and The Only Game in Town, partner of Vicky Tiel in the Paris boutique Mia and Vicky. George Davis: one of Taylor's secretaries.
 - 2 Rocky Brynner (1946—), son of Yul Brynner.
 - 3 George Stevens (1904–75), director of The Only Game in Town, who had also directed Taylor in A Place in the Sun and Giant.
 - 4 European Cup Holders Celtic beat St Etienne 4–0 at Celtic Park, Glasgow, in the second leg of their first round tie, winning 4–2 on aggregate.
 - 5 ‘W.B.’ is Warren Beatty. Elizabeth is teasing her sometimes jealous husband.
 - 6 Elliott Kastner (1930—) had produced Where Eagles Dare and would also produce Villain, Absolution, and the Taylor film X, Y and Zee.

- 7 Jim Benton, Burton's secretary, and partner of George Davis.
- 8 Pat Newcomb (1930—), press agent.
- 9 Justine (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1969), directed by George Cukor (1899–1983).
- 0 The Man From Nowhere was a screenplay that Joseph Losey was discussing with Burton at this time, but which fell through when Burton decided to act in Where Eagles Dare instead.
- 1 Jay Kanter, agent of Marlon Brando, who would produce the Burton film Villain and the Taylor film X, Y and Zee (1971).
- 2 Lew Wasserman (1913–2002), head of Universal Pictures. Ed Henry, senior executive at Universal Pictures.
- 3 Liz Smith (1923—).
- 4 Alexis Rosenberg, 2nd Baron de Redé (1922–2004), collector, socialite.
- 5 Marie-Hélène de Rothschild (1927–96), socialite and wife of Guy de Rothschild.
- 6 Maria Callas (1923–77), opera singer.
- 7 Paul-Emile Victor (1907–95), explorer, ethnologist.
- 8 Burton means Bora-Bora, in the Leeward Islands.
- 9 Florinda Bolkan (1937—), actor, had played alongside Burton in Candy. Oggi (Today) is an Italian magazine.
- 0 Burton is here referring to his published volumes A Christmas Story (1965) and Meeting Mrs Jenkins (1966).
- 1 Terry O'Neill (1938—), famed photographer of the 1960s.
- 2 Lester Piggott (1935—).
- 3 Bobby Charlton (1937—), of Manchester United and England. Billy Bremner (1942–97), of Leeds United and Scotland.
- 4 A reference to paintings owned by Burton and Taylor by Vincent Van Gogh (1853–90), Pablo Picasso (1881–1973), Claude Monet (1840–1926), Maurice Utrillo (1883–1955), and Augustus John (1878–1961). The Monet was Le Val de Falaise. The Picasso was La Famille de saltimbanques.
- 5 A reference to the Wall Street stock market 'crash' of 1929.
- 6 Sheran Cazalet had married Simon Hornby on 15 June 1968.
- 7 Sir Jacob Epstein (1880–1959) had cast a bust of Churchill in 1946. Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), painter.
- 8 Kevin McCarthy (1914–2010), actor. Hôtel La Voile d'Or, Avenue Jean Mermoz, Saint Jean Cap Ferrat.
- 9 Roderick Cameron, owner of Villa Fiorentina.
- 0 Lana Turner (1921–95), actor, at this time married to Robert P. Eaton. She had played alongside Burton in The Rains of Ranchipur.
- 1 George Hamilton (1939—), actor. Hamilton and Taylor would become companions in the 1980s.
- 2 Hal W. Polaire (1918–99), who had been assistant to the producer on Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Grant Tinker (1925—), producer and television executive, then married to Mary Tyler Moore (1936—).

- 3 Moore had played the part of Laura Petrie, wife of Rob Petrie, played by Dick Van Dyke (1925—) in The Dick Van Dyke Show (1961–6) and the part of Miss Dorothy Brown in Thoroughly Modern Millie (1967).
- 4 Cameron sold the villa in 1969 to Mr and Mrs Harding Lawrence. ‘Metteur-en-scene’ – scene setter. Stanley Donen (1924—), was producer-director of Staircase. He and Taylor had been romantically involved in 1951, from the time that he had directed her in Love is Better Than Ever.
- 5 Cathleen Nesbitt (1888–1982) played the part of Harry's mother (Burton being Harry) in Staircase. She would also act in Villain.
- 6 The Great White Hope began a run of 546 performances on Broadway on 3 October 1968.
- 7 Howard Sackler (1929–82), screenwriter and playwright.
- 8 Jones (born 1931) was in fact in his late thirties.
- 9 Smith drew on this for a column that appeared in the New York Times on 26 January 1969.
- 0 Joan Crosby (1934—), journalist and actor.
- 1 A Flea in Her Ear (Twentieth Century-Fox, 1968), directed by Jacques Charon (1920–75), starring Rex Harrison and Rachel Roberts.
- 2 Geneviève Bujold (1942—), was to play the part of Anne Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days.
- 3 Arne Lindroth (1910–85), a marine expert, was advising Burton on the seaworthiness of the Kalizma.
- 4 The film was Krasnaya Palatka (1969: US title The Red Tent), which starred Sean Connery (1930—) as Roald Amundsen (1872–1928) the Norwegian explorer, and first man to reach the South Pole.
- 5 Elizabeth Harris (1936—), daughter of David Rees-Williams, Baron Ogmores, and at this time married to the actor Richard Harris. She and Rex Harrison would marry in 1971 and divorce in 1976.
- 6 Burton means the Vatican newspaper the Osservatore della Domenica, which in 1962 had condemned Taylor for ‘erotic vagrancy’.
- 7 George Orwell, The Collected Essays, Journalism and Letters of George Orwell, edited by Sonia Orwell and Ian Angus (4 vols, 1968).
- 8 Ingrid Bergman (1915–82), actor.
- 9 Apollo 7, the first crewed Apollo flight, had launched on 11 October and would splash down on 22 October. The three astronauts were Walter Schirra (1923–2007), Donn Eisele (1930–87) and Walter Cunningham (1932—).
- 0 Robert Sargent Shriver (1915–2011), American Ambassador to France (1968–70), and husband of Eunice Kennedy (1921–2009), thus brother-in-law to both John F. and Robert F. Kennedy.
- 1 ‘In the dead vast and middle of the night’ is a line from Hamlet, Act I, scene ii, although it is often rendered ‘dead waste and middle of the night’.
- 2 Burton must mean Hubert Humphrey (1911–78), Vice-President of the USA and the Democratic Party candidate for the presidency in the 1968 election.
- 3 Charles Braswell (1924–74) played the part of Thomas J. Lockwood in The Only Game in Town.
- 4 Lucille Ball (1911–89), actor, television star. Angela Lansbury (1925—), actor. ETB: Elizabeth Taylor Burton.

- 5 This was Braswell's first major film role.
- 6 Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov (1899–1977), novelist, poet, literary scholar.
- 7 Rosemary Harris (1925—), who had appeared in A Flea in Her Ear, and who had played alongside Burton in the Old Vic production of Othello.
- 8 Maurice Chevalier (1888–1972), actor and singer, lived at Marnes-la-Coquette in the western suburbs of Paris, close to the Forest of Fausses-Reposes and to the Parc de Saint-Cloud.
- 9 Restaurant de la Tête Noire, Place Mairie, Marnes-la-Coquette.
- 0 Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia (1936—), later to enjoy a brief engagement to Burton.
- 1 Burton is referring here to the clenched fist salutes given on the podium by Black American sprinters Tommie Smith (1944—) and John Carlos (1945—), who had won gold and bronze medals respectively in the men's 200m at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City.
- 2 Fouquet's on the Champs-Élysées.
- 3 There were anti-war demonstrations outside the American Embassy in Grosvenor Square, London on 27 October. 'Bobby' is a British term for a police officer.
- 4 Francis Warner, tutor in English Literature at St Peter's College, Oxford, and a friend of Burton.
- 5 John Donne (1572–1631), Thomas Traherne (1637–94), Henry Vaughan (1621–95) and George Herbert (1593–1633), poets. The poem quoted (first two verses) is Herbert's 'Virtue'. The third verse includes the line 'A box where sweets compacted lie'.
- 6 A reference to the poem 'The Old Vicarage, Grantchester', by Rupert Brooke (1887–1915), which includes the line 'Green as a dream and deep as death'.
- 7 Peter Finch played the part of General Umberto Nobile (1885–1978), Arctic explorer.
- 8 Roderick Mann, The Headliner (1968). 'Burton Broadside', Evening Standard, 23 October 1968. Burton's mixed metaphor is quoted thus: 'Yet these particular rats, like the worms that Noah forgot to put on the Ark, are necessary. When, as it were, the chips are down, the rats can turn into Rajahs.'
- 9 A reference to the starvation crisis and civil war in Biafra, Nigeria that was taking place at the time.
- 0 Oscar Wilde (1854–1900), poet, dramatist, novelist, wit.
- 1 All Saints' Day (1 November) is a national holiday in France.
- 2 Secret Ceremony, the film starring Taylor, Mia Farrow and Robert Mitchum (1917–97) which had appeared earlier in the year.
- 3 The Train Bleu ran between Paris and Vintimille in Italy.
- 4 Cannes, city and port on the French Riviera, to the west of Monaco and Saint Jean Cap Ferrat.
- 5 Ramón Novarro (1899–1968), actor, had been murdered at his home in Laurel Canyon, Hollywood. Nice-Matin: the Nice daily paper.
- 6 Gordon Waller (1945–2009), formerly combined with Peter Asher in the pop duo 'Peter and Gordon'.
- 7 La Colombe d'Or, Saint-Paul-de-Vence, inland from Cagnes-sur-Mer on the Mediterranean coast.
- 8 Fernet Branca is an Italian brand of the spirit Fernet, often used for hangovers.
- 9 E. W. (Jim) Swanton (1907–2000), cricket writer and commentator. His Cricket from All Angles appeared in 1968.

- ⌋ Neville Cardus (1888–1975) and John Arlott (1914–91), both writers on cricket.
- ⌋ A reference to the Gunpowder Plot of 1605 in which an attempt was made by a number of conspirators including Guy Fawkes (1570–1606) to blow up the Houses of Parliament in London.
- ⌋ The Republican candidate Richard Nixon won 43.4% of the popular vote, 32 states, and 301 votes in the electoral college, as against 42.7% of the vote, 13 states (plus the District of Columbia) and 191 votes for the Democratic candidate Hubert Humphrey. George Wallace, running as an Independent, won 13.5% of the vote, 5 states and 46 votes.
- ⌋ Robinson Jeffers's (1887–1962) adaptation of the Greek tragedy of Medea for the stage (1947) and the 1797 opera Médée by Luigi Cherubini (1760–1842).
- ⌋ Robert Browning (1812–89), Pippa Passes (1841), includes the lines ‘The lark's on the wing; / The snail's on the thorn; / God's in his Heaven – / All's right with the world!’
- ⌋ John Bunyan (1628–88), Pilgrim's Progress (1678–84).
- ⌋ Geoffrey Warner (1937—), Pierre Laval and the Eclipse of France (1968). Alexander Werth (1901–69), De Gaulle: A Political Biography (1966).
- ⌋ Sir Oswald Mosley (1896–1980) My Life (1968).
- ⌋ A reference to Michael Foot (1913–2010), Labour Party politician and Member of Parliament for the South Wales constituency of Ebbw Vale at this time.
- ⌋ Shirley MacLaine (1934—), actor, sister of Warren Beatty.
- ⌋ Molière, pseudonym of Jean-Baptiste Poquelin (1622–73), playwright.
- ⌋ A conflict in the air between the German Luftwaffe and the Royal Air Force in the summer of 1940 over the UK.
- ⌋ A reference to the Zanuck suit against Burton and Taylor in the wake of Cleopatra.
- ⌋ Café Le Coq Hardy, Rue Notre Dame de Lorette, Paris.
- ⌋ Daniel C. Blum, A Pictorial History of the Silent Screen (1953).
- ⌋ James D. Watson, The Double Helix: A Personal Account of the Discovery of the Structure of DNA (1968).
- ⌋ Charles Percy (C. P.) Snow, Baron Snow of Leicester (1905–80), novelist.
- ⌋ Otto Christian Archibald von Bismarck (1897–1975), Prince of Bismarck from 1904 to his death. His wife Anne-Marie (1907–99).
- ⌋ A reference to Germany's ‘Iron Chancellor’, Otto Christian's grandfather, Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck (1815–98). Burton may also be referring to the 1940 novel from Iron in the Soul by Jean-Paul Sartre (1905–80).
- ⌋ ‘Toto and Nanette’ were chalkware figurines popular in the 1930s.
- ⌋ Hamlet, Act IV, scene v, when the King speaks the line: ‘There's such divinity doth hedge a king’.
- ⌋ Suzy Nickerbocker, the pen name of columnist Aileen Mehle (1921—).
- ⌋ A reference to the first line of the poem ‘The Lake Isle of Innisfree’ (1888) by William Butler Yeats (1865–1939): ‘I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree.’

- } Cathleen Nesbitt and Rupert Brooke (1887–1915) had been engaged to be married prior to his death. Brooke had written sonnets to Nesbitt. John Lennon (1940–80) of The Beatles had published In His Own Write in 1964.
- | Ipecacuana: a liquid used to induce vomiting.
- } James Wishart, a chartered accountant with the London firm of W. H. Jack & Co, an authority on tax issues, who had been advising Burton since the 1950s. James Bacon (1914—), journalist and actor, who wrote for the Hollywood Reporter and the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.
- } Stephen Lewis (1936—) played the part of Jack in Staircase. He had been a merchant seaman.
- } Julie Christie (1941—), most famous at this point for her roles in Billy Liar (1963) and Doctor Zhivago (1965). She had turned down the role of Anne Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days. Her relationship with Warren Beatty would last until 1974.
- } Princess Elizabeth would marry Neil Balfour (1944—), merchant banker and Conservative Party candidate in 1969.
- } Bonnie and Clyde (Warner Brothers, 1967), had starred Beatty and Faye Dunaway (1941—).
- } Sir Isaac Newton (1643–1727), scientist, mathematician, astronomer, who is credited with saying that: ‘I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea-shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.’
- | David René de Rothschild (1942—), Guy de Rothschild's son by his first marriage.
- } Philippe Sereys de Rothschild (1963—).
- } Lili Krahmer (1930–96), Guy de Rothschild's stepdaughter by his first marriage.
- | Lili's husband was Maurice Rheims (1910–2003), photographer.
- } Alberto de Rossi (d. 1975), make-up artist, who worked on Cleopatra, The Taming of the Shrew and Staircase and who would work on Divorce His, Divorce Hers, and on the Taylor film Ash Wednesday.
- } Raymond Marcellin (1914–2004) was Minister of the Interior from May 1968 to February 1974.
- } Claude Pompidou (1912–2007), wife of Georges Pompidou (1911–74), who had been Prime Minister of France from 1962 to July 1968 and would become President in June 1969. De Gaulle resigned the presidency in April 1969 and died in November 1970.
- } A very popular Welsh song, roughly translating as ‘Beside the sea red roses growing’.
- } Stanley Flink, journalist.
- } Lyndon Johnson (1908–73), President of the United States (1963–8), and his wife Lady Bird Johnson (1912–2007).
- | Ferndale, a mining village in the Rhondda Fach in South Wales, adjacent to Tylorstown, birthplace of Richard's first wife Sybil.
- } Dulcis Imperatrix: charming consort of the emperor. According to the traditional rhyme, ‘Sunday's child is full of grace’.
- } Poor Richard's Almanack (1733–58), published by Benjamin Franklin (1706–90).

- 1 Hebe Dorsey (1925–87), fashion editor of the International Herald Tribune. ‘Dwyer’ may refer to Paul O’Dwyer (1907–98), unsuccessful Democratic candidate for the Senate for New York, 1968 and 1970. His brother, William (1890–1964), had been Mayor of New York from 1946 to 1950.
- 2 Samuel Pizar (1929—).
- 3 Vice versa: the other way around.
- 4 Beverly Hills Hotel, Sunset Boulevard, Beverly Hills, California.
- 5 Director Tony Richardson had sacked Burton from the production of Laughter in the Dark for being in breach of contract.
- 6 A reference to the poem ‘Ring Out, Wild Bells’, by Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–92).
- 7 A reference to the role of Professor Henry Higgins which Rex Harrison had played in My Fair Lady.
- 8 Edie Goetz (1905–87), daughter of Louis B. Mayer (1884–1957), and wife of William Goetz (1903–69), film producer. Frank Sinatra had divorced Mia Farrow earlier in 1968.
- 9 A reference to the comic strip Peanuts by Charles Schulz (1922–2000).
- 10 Howard Young (1878–1972), art dealer and partner in business with Francis Taylor. In his will he bequeathed a sum in the region of $20m for the establishment of the Howard Young Medical Center, Wisconsin.
- 11 Burton means Oswald Mosley. Osbert Sitwell (1892–1969) was a poet and novelist.
- 12 J. B. S. Haldane (1892–1964), geneticist, biologist, and member of the Communist Party of Great Britain (1942–50). Ronald Clark’s JBS: The Life and Work of J. B. S. Haldane appeared in 1968.
- 13 Burton means ‘cwtched’ – the Welsh term for cuddling.
- 14 This refers to the trial of the character Charlie Dyer (played by Rex Harrison) in Staircase.
- 15 Marc Bohan (1926—), fashion designer.
- 16 Burton repeats with only one inaccuracy the lines spoken by Henry V in Shakespeare’s The Life of Henry the Fifth, Act IV, scene i: ‘Upon the King! Let us our lives, our souls, / Our debts, our careful wives, / Our children and our sins lay on the king! / We must bear all.’
- 17 Montreux, Swiss resort town at the eastern end of Lake Geneva.
- 18 Headmistress of the school attended by Liza and Maria.
- 19 Romain Gary (1914–80). Married to Jean Seberg (1938–79), actor, from 1962 to 1970. Seberg had been romantically involved with Clint Eastwood (1930—), actor, who had played alongside Burton in Where Eagles Dare.
- 20 La Baronne Thierry de Zuylen, sister-in-law of Marie-Hélène de Rothschild.
- 21 James Joyce (1882–1941), novelist. His Finnegans Wake was published in 1939.
- 22 A Welsh hymn popular with male voice choirs, translating as: ‘I need you every hour’.
- 23 Another Welsh hymn – ‘Bryn Calvaria’ or ‘The Hill of Calvary’. This line translates as ‘Revive me with a breeze from Calvary’.
- 24 A line used frequently in The Merchant of Venice, Act IV, scene i.
- 25 Act III, scene iv.

- ⌋ The Dorchester Hotel, Park Lane, London.
- ⌋ H.S. Hawker Siddeley.
- ⌋ ‘Saes’, abbreviated ‘Saeson’, Welsh for the English.
- ⌋ Windsor, Berkshire.
- ⌋ Horsley Towers, East Horsley, Surrey.
- ⌋ Craig Berkeley had a brief career in the 1980s and 1990s as a make-up artist, starting with the Burton mini-series Wagner.
- ⌋ Eton and Harrow are considered to be the top public schools in England.
- ⌋ By ‘Buck House’ Burton means Buckingham Palace.
- ⌋ Tony Pellissier (1912–88), actor, screenwriter, producer, director.
- ⌋ Le Bourget airport, Paris.
- ⌋ Ringo Starr (1940—), former Beatle and actor and his wife Maureen (1946–94). Starr had appeared with Burton in Candy.
- ⌋ Possibly Richard Marden (d. 2008), the film editor, who would work on Anne of the Thousand Days.
- ⌋ This is a reference to Hamlet, Act I, scene v, where the ghost tells Hamlet ‘I could a tale unfold whose lightest word / Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood’.
- ⌋ Charles Dickens, A Christmas Carol (1843).
- ⌋ Werner Keller, The Bible as History (1955).
- ⌋ Arthur Schlesinger (1917–2007), A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House (1965).
- ⌋ Cadonau, Promenade, Gstaad.
- ⌋ The Apollo 8 mission launched on 21 December and returned on 27 December, having orbited the moon. The astronauts were Frank Borman (1928—), James Lovell (1928—) and William Anders (1933—).
- ⌋ Princess Elizabeth's first husband was Howard Oxenberg (1919–2010).
- ⌋ Burton had been involved in a scuffle outside The Load of Hay public house, Praed Street, Paddington, London. Most accounts suggest this took place in January 1963.
- ⌋ Carter Brown, pseudonym of Alan Geoffrey Yates (1923–85), author of crime fiction.

1969

- 1 John Arthur Chapman (1900–72), drama critic of the Daily News, 1943–71. Tell It To Sweeney: The Informal History of the New York Daily News (1961).
- 2 C. S. Forester, pseudonym of Cecil Louis Troughton Smith (1899–1966). Lord Hornblower (1946). Herbert Ernest Bates (1905–74), Fair Stood the Wind for France (1944).
- 3 Avare: Miser.
- 4 Mary McCarthy (1912–89). Kevin McCarthy (1914–2010), divorced from his first wife in 1961, was not to remarry until 1979. His girlfriend in 1969 was Swedish.
- 5 Henry Longhurst (1909–78), had published Only on Sundays (1964), a collection of his pieces from the

- Sunday Times*, and Talking about Golf (1966), a collection from Golf Illustrated.
- 6 Harold Nicolson (1886–1968), The Age of Reason (1960).
- 7 Frederick II, known as Frederick the Great (1712–86), King of Prussia (1740–86). Catherine II, known as Catherine the Great (1729–96), Empress of Russia (1762–96). Peter I, known as Peter the Great (1672–1725), Emperor of Russia (1682–1725). Louis XIV, also known as the ‘Roi Soleil’, the Sun King (1638–1715), King of France (1643–1715).
- 8 ‘The Crazy Gang’: British entertainers including Bud Flanagan (1896–1968), and Chesney Allen (1893–1982) active from the mid-1930s to the late 1950s.
- 9 Dorado, also known as Mahi-Mahi, commonly known as the dolphin fish.
- 0 Mismaloya: a beach 40 miles south of Puerto Vallarta, where much of The Night of the Iguana was shot.
- 1 Jack Keyward (possibly Hayward) – also a friend and neighbour in Puerto Vallarta.
- 2 La Grande Cascade au Bois de Boulogne, Allée de Longchamp, Paris.
- 3 Belons: flat oysters.
- 4 Presumably a reference to the appearance of survivors of the Nazi death camp at Bergen-Belsen.
- 5 The pub in Richard's home village.
- 6 This is a rather inaccurate borrowing from Archibald MacLeish's (1892–1982) poem ‘The End of the World’, published in 1935. The relevant lines are ‘Those thousands of white faces, those dazed eyes, / There in the starless dark, the poise, the hover/ There with vast wings across the canceled skies, / There in the sudden blackness the black pall/Of nothing, nothing, nothing – nothing at all.’
- 7 Dic Bach y Saer – literally ‘little Dic the carpenter’, Richard's father.
- 8 The Galerie d'Elysée of Alex Maguy. Edouard Vuillard (1868–1940); Moise Kisling (1891–1953); Albert Marquet (1875–1947): painters.
- 9 Maurice de Vlaminck (1876–1958), French painter.
- 0 Maurice Utrillo (1883–1955), painter.
- 1 Ruth Hatfield of the Dalzell Hatfield Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles.
- 2 John Edward Reginald Wyndham, 6th Baron Leconfield and 1st Baron Egremont (1920–72).
- 3 Michael Innes, the pseudonym of J. I. M. Stewart (1906–94).
- 4 Paul C. Petrides (1901–93), art dealer, sole agent of Utrillo.
- 5 Possibly for the LP The World of Dylan Thomas, in Poetry and Prose (1971).
- 6 Thomas Thompson, ‘Power and Liz Burton’, Sunday Mirror, 19 January 1969.
- 7 David Ormsby-Gore (1918–95), 5th Baron Harlech.
- 8 A reference to the line by Sir Walter Raleigh (c.1552–1618), in ‘The Passionate Man's Pilgrimage’ (1604): ‘Give me my scallop-shell of quiet’.
- 9 ‘Like quills upon the fretful porpentine’, a line spoken by the Ghost in Hamlet, Act I, scene v. John of Gaunt, 1st Duke of Lancaster (1340–99), and a character in Shakespeare's Richard II.
- 0 ‘Whither thou goest, I will go’ – from the Book of Ruth in the Old Testament, Chapter I verse 16.
- 1 A reference to what was by this time known as the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, located at Fountain

Avenue, Los Angeles.

- 2 G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936), journalist, poet, novelist, critic. The line is usually rendered as ‘How beautiful it would be for someone who could not read.’
- 3 The Desert Inn, hotel and casino, Las Vegas (1950–2000).
- 4 The Pantages Theatre, built for the entrepreneur Alexander Pantages (1876–1936) in 1930. Phil Ober (1902–82), actor, married to his third wife, Jane Westover.
- 5 Charles Collingwood (1917–85), newscaster and writer. Louise Allbritton (1920–79), actor.
- 6 Ray Marshall, house agent in Puerto Vallarta.
- 7 Today a resort complex.
- 8 Burton's article, ‘Who Cares About Wales? I Care’, would appear in Look on 24 June 1969.
- 9 Gwyneth Jenkins, a close friend of Gwen, Ivor's wife and Richard's sister-in-law.
- 0 Ian Fleming (1908–64), You Only Live Twice (1964).
- 1 Nathaniel West, Miss Lonelyhearts (1933).
- 2 Red Smith (1905–82), sports journalist who had worked for the New York Herald Tribune.
- 3 Another version is that his last words were to ambulancemen: ‘Awfully sorry to trouble you chaps’.
- 4 Denis Brogan (1900–74), historian, academic, author of The Development of Modern France, 1870–1939 (1940), The French Nation, 1814–1940 (1957) and French Personalities and Problems (1946).
- 5 Philip Roth (1933—), Portnoy's Complaint (1969). Octavio Paz (1914–98), poet and essayist. The Labyrinth of Solitude: Life and Thought in Mexico, 1950; English translation 1961.
- 6 Simon Raven (1927–2001), novelist.
- 7 This would appear to be a paraphrase of Paz's argument rather than a direct quotation.
- 8 The quotation is not entirely accurate: it should be ‘certain principles, contained in brief formulas’, and ‘A person imprisoned by these schemes ... he cannot grow or mature’ (Labyrinth of Solitude, p. 25).
- 9 Michael Redgrave (1908–85), actor, father of Vanessa. Norman Charles Hunter (1908–71).
- 0 A Touch of the Sun (1958).
- 1 Presumably typed on the following day.
- 2 Hotel Rosita, Paseo Díaz Ordaz, Puerto Vallarta.
- 3 Mario Puzo (1920–99), The Godfather (1969).
- 4 Victor Wolfgang Von Hagen (1908–85), historian, anthropologist and writer. Burton might have been reading his The World of the Maya (1960).
- 5 Suzanne Blanc, The Rose Window (1968).
- 6 Georges Simenon (1903–89), author of, amongst other things, the Maigret detective stories.
- 7 Benito Pablo Juárez García (1806–72), President of Mexico. Emiliano Zapata (1879–1919), revolutionary leader.
- 8 James Baldwin (1924–87), novelist, playwright, essayist.
- 9 Sierra fish, also known as Pacific Sierra or Sierra Mackerel.
- 0 Presumably the ocean liner the SS France.

- 1 James Campbell (1951—), Talking at the Gates: A Life of James Baldwin (1991), having read (and quoted) the account of this incident relayed in Bragg's Rich, termed it (p. 231) a 'hideous accusation', suggesting that either Burton had made a mistake or that the thief was 'Baldwin's French friend – not quite "the same thing"'. He goes on (p. 232) to state that all of Baldwin's 'close associates who were asked for their opinion of the incident ... recoiled at the suggestion that Baldwin could be guilty of simple thieving'. The blame is then placed on the Frenchman, who, we are told, is later discovered to have been gaoled for armed robbery.
- 2 Letter not enclosed.
- 3 In excelsis: to a high degree.
- 4 Neither survive.
- 5 A reference to the lines from 'To His Coy Mistress' by Andrew Marvell (1621–78): 'But at my back I always hear / Time's wingèd chariot hurrying near'.
- 6 Mai Tai is a white and dark rum based cocktail also including curaçao, syrups and lime juice.
- 7 James 'Skip' Ward (1932–2003) had played the part of Hank Prosner in The Night of the Iguana. Stella Stevens (1938—), actor, glamour model.
- 8 Jalisco, the province in which Puerto Vallarta is situated.
- 9 Barbara Streisand (1942—), actor and singer.
- 0 William Shakespeare. King Lear, Act III, scene iv, a line spoken by Edgar, son of the Earl of Gloucester.
- 1 Gavin Maxwell (1914–69). The book referred to is probably The Rocks Remain, first published in 1963.
- 2 Posada Vallarta Hotel, Avenue de los Garzas, Puerto Vallarta.
- 3 Burro is Spanish for donkey, although it may also refer to a Mexican breed of donkey as opposed to those descended from European stock.
- 4 Professor Truetta, prominent orthopaedic surgeon.
- 5 A reference to a charity championed by Ben James.
- 6 Elizabeth, Lady Longford (1906–2002). Her biography, Victoria RI, was published in 1964.
- 7 Lytton Strachey, Queen Victoria (1921).
- 8 Antony Charles Robert Armstrong-Jones, 1st Earl of Snowdon (1930—), husband at the time of Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon (1930–2002). Mrs Armstrong-Jones is presumably Jennifer, the third wife and widow of the Earl of Snowdon's father Ronald (d. 1966), who was herself to remarry in June 1969. Mrs Ogmore-Pritchard is a character in Dylan Thomas's Under Milk Wood. Rather than Plas Newydd, Burton may mean the Armstrong-Jones home at Plas Dinas, Anglesey. Prince Charles (1948—) was invested as Prince of Wales at Caernarfon on 1 July 1969.
- 9 The Investiture came at a time when minority elements within the Welsh nationalist movement were active in planting bombs and threatening violence. Two members of Mudiad Amddiffyn Cymru (the Movement for the Defence of Wales) were killed when a bomb they were planting outside government offices in Abergele went off prematurely. Burton acted as narrator for Independent Television's coverage of the Investiture ceremony.

- 0 Charles Darwin (1809–82), The Origin of Species (1859).
- 1 Neither enclosed. Mira L. Waters (1945—), actor, singer and songwriter.
- 2 Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwlilllantisiliogogoch: a village on Anglesey in Wales.
- 3 Richard's primary school in Taibach.
- 4 Peter Maas (1929–2001), The Valachi Papers (1968).
- 5 Alfred Drake (1914–92) played Claudius, King of Denmark, in the 1964 production of Hamlet.
- 6 See diary entry for 20 October 1967.
- 7 Ezra Pound (1885–1972), poet.
- 8 Cunard Cottages, Cwmafan.
- 9 Michael Hordern was playing Thomas Boleyn in Anne of the Thousand Days and John Colicos (1928–2000) was playing Thomas Cromwell. Colicos would also act alongside Burton in Raid on Rommel.
- 0 The Governor of Jalisco was Francisco Medina Ascencio.
- 1 Evelyn Waugh (1903–66), Put Out More Flags (1942).
- 2 Evelyn Waugh, Decline and Fall (1928). The actual line (from p. 23 of the Penguin edition of 1937 is “‘That,’ said Dr Fagan [the headmaster of Llanabba Castle] with some disgust, “is my daughter.””
- 3 This is probably a reference to the line ‘The Lieutenant-Colonel looked at Basil with detestation, from Put Out More Flags, p. 64.
- 4 Cwlffyn is Welsh for ‘hunk’ or ‘lump’.
- 5 Evelyn Waugh. Scoop (1938); A Little Learning (1964); Officers and Gentlemen (1955); Men at Arms (1952).
- 6 Harry Karl (1914–82), businessman, running Karl's Shoe Stores retail chain, married (1960–73) to Debbie Reynolds (1932—), actor, singer, former wife of Eddie Fisher. A reference is also made to Queen Mary (Mary of Teck) (1867–1953), who had become Queen Dowager on the death of her husband, King George V (1865–1936), and to the ocean liner the RMS Queen Mary, in service 1936–67. Burton and Taylor had travelled on the Queen Elizabeth (not the Queen Mary) across the Atlantic in October 1964: Karl and Reynolds had been on the same voyage.
- 7 A reference to Julius Caesar, Act II, scene ii, where Caesar says ‘Cowards die many times before their deaths, / The valiant never taste of death but once.’
- 8 Aida, opera by Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901). Trumpet Voluntary by Henry Purcell (1659–95).
- 9 Burton may mean Charles Warwick Evans (1885–1974), cellist, who founded the London String Quartet, in 1908.
- 0 Adolph ‘Sailor’ Malan (1910–63), RAF fighter pilot in the Second World War. Group-Captain Leonard Cheshire (1917–92), RAF bomber pilot and recipient of the Victoria Cross, also from the Second World War. American Second World War hero Audie Murphy (1925–71). Siegfried Sassoon (1886–1967), First World War poet and recipient of the Military Cross.
- 1 Dick Hanley and John Lee.
- 2 Anthony Quayle (1913–89) was playing Cardinal Wolsey in Anne of the Thousand Days. He had produced

- and directed Burton at Stratford in a production of Henry IV (Part I), had played alongside him in that production and in Henry IV (Part 2), and had produced and directed him in Henry V.
- ‡ Mary Ure (1933–75), had played alongside Burton in Look Back in Anger and Where Eagles Dare.
 - ‡ Ava Gardner and Deborah Kerr (1921–2007) had played alongside Burton in The Night of the Iguana. Olivia de Havilland (1916—) had co-starred with him in My Cousin Rachel. Edith Evans (1888–1976) had had a part in Look Back in Anger. Fay Compton (1894–1978) had appeared on stage with Burton in Hamlet, King John, Coriolanus and The Tempest in 1953–4. Jean Simmons (1929–2010) co-starred with Burton in The Robe. Dorothy McGuire (1916–2001) had co-starred with Burton in Legend of Lovers. Helen Hayes (1900–93) had played opposite Burton in Time Remembered. Zena Walker (1934–2003) had appeared in a number of productions at the Old Vic, including Henry V in 1955–6.
 - ‡ Elisabeth Rachel Felix, known as Rachel (1821–58), Sarah Bernhardt (1844–1923), Eleanora Duse (1858–1924), actors.
 - ‡ Henry Mancini (1924–94), composer and conductor.
 - ‡ Eric Morecambe (1926–84) and Ernie Wise (1925–99), popular comedians who appeared in the Morecambe and Wise Show on British television.
 - ‡ A phrase from T. S. Eliot's The Waste Land (1922).
 - ‡ Margaret Furse (1911–74), costume designer for Anne of the Thousand Days. She was to receive an Oscar for her work on this film. She had been costume designer on Becket.
 - ‡ Hans Holbein the Younger (1498–1543), artist, who was King's Painter to Henry VIII.
 - ‡ Gore Vidal wrote three novels between 1952 and 1954 under the pseudonym Edgar Box. Morpheus: the Greek God of sleep and dreams.
 - ‡ Burton had played Heathcliff in a television production of Wuthering Heights for NBC in 1958
 - ‡ Siân Owen, daughter of Richard's sister Hilda.
 - ‡ Wynford Vaughan Thomas (1908–87), broadcaster, at this time Director of Programmes for HTV. Mike Towers was the co-ordinating director for ITV.
 - ‡ Shepperton Studios, Middlesex. The 'old house' is Littleton Park Manor, a seventeenth-century manor house.
 - ‡ Aston Clinton, Buckinghamshire. The road distance between Shepperton and Aston Clinton is about 48 miles. Ivor was a patient at Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Aylesbury, location of the national spinal injuries centre. The hospital is about four miles from Aston Clinton.
 - ‡ Hal Wallis (1898–1986), the producer. Charles Jarrott (1927—), the director.
 - ‡ This is a reference to the poems 'Pied Beauty' and 'Felix Randal' by Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844–89). 'Pied Beauty' includes the line 'All things counter, original, spare, strange' and ends with the line 'Praise him'. Felix Randal's last line is 'Didst fettle for the great grey drayhorse his bright and battering sandal!'
 - ‡ 'The baby' is a reference to Elizabeth.
 - ‡ Patricia, Joseph Losey's third wife.
 - ‡ Terence Hanbury White (1906–64), known as 'T. H.' or 'Tim', novelist, author of The Once and Future

King sequence of four novels (1938–58), on which was based the musical Camelot.

¶ In Verses (privately printed, 1962). ‘Vodka Poem To Richard Burton’ is the last in the volume (p. 43).

¶ Jason Robards (1922–2000), actor.

¶ Denis Quilley (1927–2003) played the part of Weston. Burton presumably means T. P. McKenna not O'Connor. McKenna (1929–2011) was playing the part of Norris. He would act alongside Burton again in Villain. However, Joseph O'Connor (1910–2001, sometimes O'Conor) was playing the part of Bishop Fisher in Anne of the Thousand Days. Cusack presumably refers to Cyril Cusack.

¶ Gary Bond (1940–95) played the part of Smeaton. He had appeared in Zulu. The unnamed actor might be Peter Jeffrey (1929–99), who played the part of Norfolk in Anne of the Thousand Days, and with whom Burton had worked on Becket.

¶ Tina Louise (1934—), actor, most famous for her role in the television series Gilligan's Island.

¶ Sir Henry Morgan (1635–88), Welsh buccaneer.

¶ A César Award for Best Actress.

- ‡ Margaret Hinxman, journalist, film critic, novelist.
- ‡ From Thomas Carlyle's (1795–1881) Signs of the Times (1829): 'The poorest Day that passes over us is the conflux of two Eternities.'
- ‡ Elia 'Gadge' Kazan (1909–2003), director, producer, playwright, novelist, and co-founder of the Actors' Studio.
- ‡ John Neville (1925–2011), who had acted with Burton in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night, Coriolanus, The Tempest, Henry V and Othello in the mid 1950s.
- ‡ Fergus Cashin (1925–2004), then working for the Daily Sketch, who would become one of Burton's biographers.
- ‡ The interview appeared as 'Richard Burton with Kenneth Tynan', in Hal Burton (ed.), Acting in the Sixties (1970).
- ‡ All Nazi concentration camps.
- ‡ Sidney Poitier (1927—).
- ‡ Lox cured salmon fillet, typically served in a bagel.
- ‡ The Guinea Grill, Mayfair.
- ‡ A more modest (though still well-appointed) motor vehicle.
- ‡ Burton's friend the actor Robert Hardy.
- ‡ Buck's Club, a gentlemen's club established in 1919 and situated at 18 Clifford Street, London.
- ‡ Possibly Richard's nephew, Gareth Owen.
- ‡ Burton provided the narrative for the 1969 son et lumière at Blenheim Palace.
- ‡ The Kalizma was berthed at Prince's Stairs, Rotherhithe.
- ‡ Institut Montesano, Gstaad, a girls' boarding school. Simmy: Simoleke Taylor.
- ‡ Neil Balfour.
- ‡ Burton is here referring to William Wordsworth's poem, 'Composed upon Westminster Bridge' (1802), which includes the lines 'The beauty of the morning: silent, bare', and 'Dear God! the very houses seem asleep; / And all that mighty heart is lying still!'.
- ‡ William Wordsworth, 'Michael: A Pastoral Poem' (1800).
- ‡ A reference to the lines from Wordsworth's 'Tintern Abbey' (1798): 'And I have felt / A presence that disturbs me with the joy / Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime / Of something far more deeply interfused, / Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns, / And the round ocean and the living air, / And the blue sky, and in the mind of man'.
- ‡ A reference to lines from the poem 'Lost in France' by Ernest Rhys (1859–1946): 'He had the ploughman's strength / in the grasp of his hand; / he could see a crow / three miles away'.
- ‡ William Somerset Maugham. (1874–1965), novelist, short story writer.
- ‡ Albert Camus (1913–60), novelist.
- ‡ Praxiteles, sculptor of Classical Greece, probably alive in the fourth century BC.
- ‡ Wendy and Derek Jenkins, the daughter-in-law and son of Gwyneth Jenkins, lived in East Molesey, Surrey.

- ⌋ The Leicester Arms Hotel, Penshurst, Tonbridge, Kent.
- ⌋ Hever Castle was the childhood home of Anne Boleyn. In 1969 it was owned by the Astor family, William Astor (1951—) being the 4th Viscount Astor. Penshurst Castle is usually known as Penshurst Place and is owned by the Sidney family. In 1969 the head of the family was William Sidney, 1st Viscount De L'Isle (1909–91).
- ⌋ Robert Shaw (1927–78) had played the role in A Man For All Seasons.
- ⌋ Usually written Shitsu or Shih-tzu.
- ⌋ Christopher Columbus (1451–1506), explorer.
- ⌋ La Guaira, Venezuela.
- ⌋ Leonardo Da Vinci (1452–1519), Renaissance man. Albert Einstein (1879–1955), physicist. Charles Darwin (1809–82), naturalist and scientist. Desiderius Erasmus (1466–1536), philosopher and theologian. Ivan Turgenev (1818–83), novelist. William Shakespeare (1564–1616), playwright. Alexander Pushkin (1799–1837), playwright, novelist, poet. Aristotle (384–322BC), philosopher. Pythagoras (c.570–c.495BC), mathematician and philosopher. Sigmund Freud (1856–1939), theorist of psychoanalysis. August Strindberg (1849–1912), novelist, essayist, playwright. ‘Fleurs du Mal’ is a reference to the poetry of Charles Baudelaire (1821–67). Stéphane Mallarmé (1842–98), poet. Socrates (469–399BC), philosopher. ‘The Huxleys’ is a reference to the multi-talented Huxley family, including Thomas Henry Huxley (1825–95), biologist, and his grandsons Julian Huxley (1887–1975), zoologist, biologist and humanitarian; Aldous Huxley (1894–1963), novelist and essayist; and Andrew Huxley (1917–2012), winner (together with two colleagues) of the 1963 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine for research into the central nervous system.
- ⌋ Liz Williams, Brook's wife, had a daughter from her previous marriage who suffered from cerebral palsy.
- ⌋ Jessica had been diagnosed (in the mid-1960s) as suffering from severe autism and schizophrenia.
- ⌋ Edwin ‘Buzz’ Aldrin (1930—) and Neil Armstrong (1930—) were members of the Apollo 11 moon landing mission and the first men to set foot on the surface of the moon, on 20 July 1969.
- ⌋ Edward ‘Teddy’ Kennedy (1932–2009), younger brother of John F. and Robert F. Kennedy, US Senator. In the early hours of 19 July 1969 he and his passenger, Mary Jo Kopechne (1940–69), had been involved in a car accident on Chappaquiddick Island, Massachusetts. Kopechne died and controversy surrounded Kennedy's actions in the immediate aftermath of the accident.
- ⌋ Pierre Salinger (1925–2004), Press Secretary to John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, briefly US Senator, campaign manager for Robert F. Kennedy's campaign in 1968. B. H. being Beverly Hills.
- ⌋ Alexander H. Cohen (1920–2000).
- ⌋ An adaptation of Henry David Thoreau's (1817–62) line, ‘The mass of men lead lives of quiet desperation’.
- ⌋ The Book of Isaiah 6: 6–7, in the King James version, ‘Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.’

-] George Moore (1852–1933), novelist, poet, playwright, who wrote that ‘a man travels the world in search of what he needs and returns home to find it’. John Millington Synge (1871–1909), playwright and poet.
-] Thomas Wolfe (1900–38), novelist, author of You Can't Go Home Again (1940).
-] A reference to the line in W. B. Yeats (1865–1939), The Second Coming (1919), ‘Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold.’
-] Laurie Lee (1914–97), As I Walked Out One Midsummer Morning (1969).
-] During the filming of Alexander the Great, which took place in Spain in 1955.
-] Coal hewer is an acceptable term for one who cut the coal, an alternative to collier, and more precise in its specification of the task than ‘coal miner’.
-] Thomas J. Roblin, choirmaster of the Afan Glee male choral society, who lived in Cwmafan and taught at the Cwmafan Boys’ School.
-] Burton is presumably here referring to Llywelyn ap Gruffudd (1230–82), Welsh prince, also known as Llywelyn ein llyw olaf (Llywelyn our last prince or Llywelyn the last).
-] Burton played Henry V at the Old Vic during the 1955–6 season. Arturo Toscanini (1867–1957), conductor. Lohengrin (1850), opera by Richard Wagner (1813–83).
-] Robert Burns (1759–96). The reference is to the lines from Burns’s poem ‘To a Mouse’ (1786): ‘Wee, sleekit, cow’rin, tim’rous beastie / O what a panic’s in thy breastie!’.
-] El Molar, due north of Madrid.
-] John Sullivan was a stuntman on Alexander the Great, also on The Longest Day and was Burton’s stunt double in Cleopatra.
-] General Francisco Franco (1892–1975), Head of State in Spain following the victory of the Nationalists over the Republicans in the Spanish Civil War in 1939.
-] David Ffolkes (1912—) was in charge of costumes for Alexander the Great.
-] A reference to the assassinations of President Abraham Lincoln (1809–65) in 1865, of President John F. Kennedy in 1963, of Robert F. Kennedy in 1968, and of Martin Luther King (1929–68), civil rights leader, in 1968. Macarthy is presumably Senator Joseph McCarthy (1908–57) of the 1950s anti-Communist witch-hunts, and Wallace is George Wallace (1919–98), Governor of Alabama (1963–7, 1971–9, 1983–7), 1968 candidate for the presidency. Wallace was the victim of an assassination attempt in 1972.
-] Lord Kinross (1904–76), Between Two Seas: The Creation of the Suez Canal (1968).
-] Ferdinand de Lesseps (1805–94), creator of the Suez Canal.
-] The taffrail is the aftermost portion of the poop-rail of a ship.
-] From Rupert Brooke’s ‘The Old Vicarage, Grantchester’ (1912): ‘To smell the thrilling-sweet and rotten / Unforgettable, unforgotten / River-smell’.
-] From Edmund Spenser, Prothalamian: ‘Sweet Thames, run softly, till I end my song’.
-] David Ryder, a 21-year-old victim of polio, walked from the length of mainland Britain from John O’Groats to Land’s End, leaving on 21 June and arriving on 22 August. An article featuring him appeared

- in the Sun on 26 July.
- [Sir Alan Patrick Herbert (1890–1971), writer, novelist and politician.
 -] The metric system had begun to be introduced into the United Kingdom in 1965.
 -] Quayle's autobiography, A Time to Speak (1990), mentions a holiday he spent with his mother's lover in Pontypridd.
 -] In London's Harley Street and Wigmore Street are to be found the practices of many leading doctors.
 -] Marne Maitland (1916–91) played the part of Campeggio. He had played the part of Euphranor in Cleopatra.
 -] Robert Beatty (1909–92) had played the part of Cartwright-Jones in Where Eagles Dare.
 -] A colloquial Welsh term for a very attractive woman.
 -] A reference to a line in Gerard Manley Hopkins's poem 'Pied Beauty' (1877): 'Fresh-firecoal chestnut-falls'.
 -] The line is from Shakespeare's Coriolanus, Act III, scene iii, spoken by Coriolanus: 'There is a world elsewhere'.
 -] Frederick F. Van de Water (1890–1968), Glory-Hunter: A Life of General Custer (1934). Although these are not direct quotations, they are true to the flowery style of the original. For example, p.67: 'Foremost rode the Michigan Brigade and at its head a youngster whose face was hardly less radiant than the newly risen sun.'
 - [Philip Hope-Wallace (1911–79), music and theatre critic.
 -] Dame Peggy Ashcroft (1907–91) had appeared with Taylor in Secret Ceremony. Dame Flora Robson (1902–84). Joan Plowright (1929—), who was to be made a Dame in 2004, had married Laurence Olivier in 1961. She would appear with Burton in the film Equus.
 -] Maggie Smith (1934—), had appeared with Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s.
 -] 'Charlie Brown', the central human character in the Peanuts comic strip.
 -] Richard Harris (1932–2002), actor, who would appear with Burton in The Wild Geese, and take over from him in the stage production of Camelot in 1981.
 -] William Squire (1916–89) played Thomas More in Anne of the Thousand Days. Squire had been born in Neath, had played alongside Burton in the Stratford productions of Henry IV (Part 2) and Henry V in 1951, and in the Old Vic productions of Hamlet, King John, Twelfth Night, and Coriolanus in 1953–4. He had also played the part of Thomas in Where Eagles Dare.
 -] Josip Broz (1892–1980), Marshal Tito, President of Yugoslavia.
 -] Shw'd ichi heddi is Welsh for literally 'How are you today?' In this context it means someone of easy charm, with a hint of superficiality and insincerity.
 -] Anthony Quayle had a leading role in Tarzan's Greatest Adventure (1959), in which Gordon Scott (1926–2007) played the part of Tarzan.
 -] The Marlowe Society is the Cambridge University equivalent of OUDS.
 - . Alan Badel (1923–82) had appeared at Stratford with Burton in Henry IV (Parts 1 and 2), The Tempest and

- Henry V*. He would also feature in The Medusa Touch.
- 2 Harry Fleetwood Andrews (1911–89) had appeared at Stratford with Burton in Henry IV (Parts 1 and 2).
He had played alongside him in Alexander the Great and would do so again in Equus.
- 3 Emile Zola (1840–1902), novelist.
- 4 Richard II, Richard III, Hamlet.
- 5 Ernest Christopher Dowson (1867–1900), poet. Alfred Edward Housman (1859–1936), poet. Burton presumably means William McGonagall (1825–1902), poet.
- 6 Marat/Sade, the Peter Weiss play, translated into English and directed by Peter Brook in 1964, which ran on Broadway from 1965 to 1967. Peter Brook also directed the 1967 film version. Simone Signoret (1921–85), actor.
- 7 Quayle's (second) wife was Dorothy Hyson (1914–96), actor.
- 8 From Francis Bacon (1561–1626), Of Studies.
- 9 Burton's nickname for Bob Wilson's wife Alice.
- 10 J. Paul Getty (1892–1976), industrialist and multimillionaire.
- 11 Roman Polanski (1933—). Sharon Tate (1943–69). Charles Manson (1934—) was the leader of the group that carried out the murders.
- 12 In which Michael related the story of his thwarted attempt to leave Hawaii, his desire to rejoin Elizabeth and Richard in Europe, and his discovery of 'Jesus and Universal Love'.
- 13 Colicos remained married to his wife, Mona McHenry, until 1981.
- 14 'Over the hills and far away' is an English song of the eighteenth century. 'Will ye no come back again' is a Scottish song, written in the nineteenth century, about the Jacobite Rebellion of 1745. 'Where is my wandering boy tonight' was a music hall song written by Clarence Wainwright Murphy and Albert Hall in 1894.
- 15 Burton was at South Moreton, Oxfordshire.
- 16 Molly and Emlyn Williams, Brook's parents.
- 17 An adaptation of Enobarbus's line about Cleopatra, in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, Act II, scene ii: 'Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale / her infinite variety'.
- 18 John Milton's epic poem Paradise Lost (1667) runs to 10 or 12 books.
- 19 The Bear at Home Inn, North Moreton.
- 20 This may refer to the fictional pool player, who appeared in Walter Tevis's novel The Hustler (1959) and in the 1961 film of the same name, or it may refer to Rudolf Walter Wanderone (1913–96), who had been known as 'New York Fats' until the popularity of The Hustler encouraged him to change his nickname, and who had become a minor celebrity by the late 1960s.
- 21 The Talk of the Town cabaret restaurant, on the corner of Charing Cross Road and Leicester Square.
- 22 This a reference to a Nehru jacket, a very fashionable cut at the time with a mandarin collar, named after the first Prime Minister of India, Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964).
- 23 'Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may!' Is the correct citation from The Confessions of Aleister

Crowley (1875–1947).

- ‡ A reference to the 1844 poem ‘The Day is Done’ by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (1807–82), which includes the lines ‘shall fold their tents, like the Arabs, and quietly steal away.’
- ‡ Roughly, ‘she is unattractive. She isn't unattractive but everyone to his own taste’.
- ‡ Didacticism.
- ‡ Khalil Gibran, The Prophet, (1923).
- ‡ The New Bell Inn, London Road, Aston Clinton.
- ‡ Carlos Baker, Ernest Hemingway: A Life Story (1969).
- ‡ Ernest Hemingway, For Whom The Bell Tolls (1940).
- ‡ St Tropez, Provence.
- ‡ Resorts in Corsica and Sardinia.
- ‡ Inn for Trouble (1960), directed by C. M. Pennington Richards (1911–2005), and starring Peggy Mount (1915–2001) and David Kossoff (1919–2005).
- ‡ Dr Alain Rossier (1930–2006), specialist in spinal injuries at Beausejour Hospital at the University of Geneva, himself paraplegic.
- ‡ Many studies of Mussolini appeared in English in the 1960s. Evelyn Waugh, Vile Bodies (1930).
- ‡ Alan Williams (1935—) had at this time published four thrillers. Eric Ambler (1909–98), author of espionage novels and screenwriter.
- ‡ A. E. Housman, A Shropshire Lad (1896).
- ‡ Esmond Knight (1906–87), who had acted with Burton in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold and Anne of the Thousand Days. He had been wounded while serving on the battleship the Prince of Wales during its encounter with the Bismarck.
- ‡ Stewart Alsop (1914–74), The Center: People and Power in Washington (1968).
- ‡ The Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Geneva.
- ‡ A reference to the docklands area of Cardiff.
- ‡ Dr J. J. Walsh, Ivor's doctor at Stoke Mandeville.
- ‡ Les Diablerets (3,210m), south of Gstaad.
- ‡ Charles Dickens (1812–70). Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832). Edward Gibbon (1737–94). George Grote (1794–1871), whose History of Greece ran to 12 volumes in its original publication (1846–56).
- ‡ Berliner Ensemble: German theatre company established by the playwright, theatre director and poet Bertolt Brecht (1898–1956).
- ‡ Jean-Paul Sartre (1905–80), writer and philosopher, recipient of the Nobel Prize for Literature, 1964. His play Le Diable et le Bon Dieu had been published in 1951. Jean-Louis Barrault (1910–94), French director and actor.
- ‡ Goetz is the central character in Sartre's play.
- ‡ Lev Tolstoy (1828–1910), novelist.
- ‡ Burton means L'Hôpital Cantonal.

- 1 Samuel Johnson (1709–84). Line (from 1777) ‘When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life; for there is in London all that life can afford.’
- 2 The leaf of the aspen tree is renowned for fluttering in very light wind.
- 3 A reference to St Vitus dance (also known as Sydenham's chorea), a complaint involving uncontrollable movements.
- 4 Cartier the jewellers. This was the ‘Taylor-Burton’ diamond of 69.42 carats.
- 5 The Ed Sullivan Show was a variety show that screened on CBS on Sunday nights from 1948 to 1971, presented by Ed Sullivan (1901–74).
- 6 Hjordis Niven (1921–97), wife of David Niven.
- 7 Cook, aged 23, of South Ruislip, Middlesex, had pleaded guilty to 11 charges of stealing cars and other property and asked for eight similar offences to be taken into consideration.
- 8 Margaret Katherine Kelly, known as ‘Peggy’ (1925–91). Lady Fford is possibly Lady Jean Fford (1920—), Countess of Arran.
- 9 Winthrop Rockefeller (1912–73), Governor of Arkansas, whose second wife was Jeannette McDonnell.
- 0 Hôtel Hermitage, Monaco.
- 1 M.C.: Monte Carlo.
- 2 A Man For All Seasons (1966), directed by Fred Zinnemann (1907–97), had won five Oscars. The Lion in Winter (1968), directed by Anthony Harvey (1931—), had won three Oscars.

1970

- 1 Burton and Taylor had spent a few days staying with Frank Sinatra at his home at Rancho Mirage, California.
- 2 Sinatra had been served with a subpoena by the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation and forced to appear before it in February.
- 3 Mike Romanoff (1890–1971), former Hollywood restaurateur, actor.
- 4 Encounter magazine (1953–91), co-founded by Stephen Spender.
- 5 Julie Andrews (1935—). The Sound of Music (1965) directed by Robert Wise (1914–2005). Andrews had won an Oscar for Mary Poppins (1964) and an Oscar nomination for The Sound of Music. She had then starred in Torn Curtain (1966), Hawaii (1966), Thoroughly Modern Millie (1967), Star! (1968) and Darling Lili (1969). The last two were not as successful as Andrews's previous films.
- 6 Blake Edwards (1922–2010), director, and (from 1969), husband of Julie Andrews, who had directed Darling Lili.
- 7 Yelapa, 20 miles south along the coast from Puerto Vallarta.
- 8 A palapa is a house or hut with a thatched roof made of palm leaves. It is typically open-sided.
- 9 Sherlock Holmes, fictional detective created by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle (1859–1930).
- 0 Christopher Wilding and Christopher Taylor, Elizabeth's nephew.

- 1 Quayle won a Drama Desk Award (for ‘excellence in theatre’) for his role in the play Sleuth, written by Anthony Shaffer (1926–2001).
- 2 The title was actually Madrigal's Magic Key to Spanish.
- 3 Collingwood's novel The Defector had been published in 1970. There is no record of the film ever being made.
- 4 Phil Ober (1902–82), actor.
- 5 A reference to the evangelical hymns of Ira D. Sankey (1840–1908) and Dwight L. Moody (1837–99).
- 6 The Shakespearean character Bardolph (Henry IV (Part 1)), who suffers from red blotches and carbuncles on his face.
- 7 The last quotation from Dylan (Marlais) Thomas's (1914–53) ‘Poem in October’ is inaccurate: ‘It was my thirtieth / Year to heaven stood there then in the summer noon / Though the town below lay leaved with October blood.’
- 8 A reference to Corinthians 1: 13.
- 9 Sylvia Townsend Warner (1893–1978), whose T. H. White had appeared in 1967, quotes White's lecture ‘The Pleasures of Learning’ (1963): ‘My parents loathed each other and were separated, divorced, when I was about fourteen or so. This meant that my home and education collapsed about my ears; and ever since I have been arming myself against disaster. That is why I learn.’ Warner also explains that in the lecture White quotes from The Sword in the Stone the passage beginning, “‘The best thing for being sad”, replied Merlyn, “is to learn something””.
- 0 Maureen Stapleton (1925–2006), actor, who suffered from alcoholism.
- 1 ‘Paddy’ might refer to Sir Marmaduke Nevill Patrick Somerville Coghill (1896–1981), elder brother of Nevill and 6th Baronet Coghill.
- 2 DMZ: the De-Militarized Zone between the states of North and South Vietnam. The Hien Luong Bridge crossed the Ben Hai River which formed part of the boundary between the North and the South.
- 3 Army Archerd (1922–2009), Hollywood columnist for Variety.
- 4 Bob Hope (1903–2003), actor and comedian.
- 5 John David Morley (1948—), later to become a novelist.
- 6 Anthony Quinn (1915–2001), actor. Thomas Wolfe, Of Time and the River (1935).
- 7 Jacqueline Bisset (1944—), is English, although her mother was part-French. Bisset was educated at a French school in London and speaks French fluently.
- 8 The Boys in the Band (1970), directed by William Friedkin (1935—), based on the play by Matt Crowley (1935—), which dealt with issues of male homosexuality.
- 9 Burton means Jo Roddy.
- 0 Z, directed by Costa-Gavras (1933—), won the Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film.
- 1 James Jones (1921–77), author of the novel From Here To Eternity (1951), made into a successful film in 1953.
- 2 Phyllis Diller (1917—), actor. Vincent Price (1911–93), actor.

- 3 John Wayne (1907–79), actor, nominated for Best Actor for his performance in True Grit. Sometimes known as ‘The Duke’.
- 4 Jon Voight (1938—) and Dustin Hoffman (1937—), both nominated for Best Actor for their performances in Midnight Cowboy.
- 5 Peter O’Toole was nominated for Best Actor for his performance in Goodbye Mr Chips.
- 6 Goldie Hawn (1945—), nominated for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Cactus Flower.
- 7 Liza Minnelli (1946—), daughter of actor Judy Garland (1922–69) and Vincente Minnelli, nominated for Best Actress for her performance in The Sterile Cuckoo.
- 8 Adlai Stevenson (1900–65), twice the Democratic candidate for the US presidency. ‘Birchite’ refers to the right-wing John Birch Society.
- 9 The Chandler family had published the LA Times since 1917. Otis Chandler (1927–2006) was in control in 1970.
- 0 Gig Young (1913–78) won Best Supporting Actor for his performance in They Shoot Horses, Don't They?
- 1 A reference to the annual almanac of cricket, Wisden.
- 2 Jennifer Salt (1944—), who had acted alongside Jon Voight in Midnight Cowboy. Waldo Salt (1917–87), had won his Oscar for the same film.
- 3 Rupert Crosse (1927–73), nominated for Best Supporting Actor for his performance in The Reivers. Elliott Gould (1938—), nominated for Best Supporting Actor for his performance in Bob and Ted and Carol and Alice. Susannah York (1939–2011). Jane Fonda (1937—), nominated for Best Actress for her performance in They Shoot Horses, Don't They? Sylvia Miles (1926—), nominated for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Midnight Cowboy. The Black Panther Party was a Marxist organization which aimed to articulate the grievances of Black Americans, and which was at the height of its influence in the late 1960s.
- 4 Elizabeth Longford (1906–2002), Wellington: The Years of the Sword (1969).
- 5 Garcia Barragán (1895–1979), Secretary of National Defense in Mexico (1964–70). By ‘P.R.O.’ presumably Burton means a public relations official. The city of Guadalajara, the capital of Jalisco, is about 160 miles east of Puerto Vallarta, and is over 5,000 feet above sea level.
- 6 Luis Echeverría (1922—), President of Mexico (1970–76).
- 7 Barragan's son's name was actually Carlos.
- 8 By 1970 there were four biographies of Fleming in print, all published in 1965 or 1966. Fabrica de Francia is a department store chain.
- 9 On the northern shore of the Bahia de Banderas, 2 miles from Puerto Vallarta.
- 0 Alan Moorehead (1910–83), Eclipse (1946; Burton was reading the 1967 abridged edition).
- 1 Joan Crawford (1905–77), who had appeared on Here's Lucy on 26 February 1968.
- 2 Jerry Paris (1925–86), director and actor.
- 3 Gary Morton (1924–99), comedian and television producer.
- 4 Ruth Berle (1921–89), wife of television comedian Milton Berle (1908–2002).

- 5 Rosalind Russell (1907–76), actor.
- 6 Gale Gordon (1906–95). Cliff Norton (1918–2003).
- 7 The Malibu Colony, Malibu, west of Santa Monica, California.
- 8 Norman Rockwell (1894–1978), artist, in part famous for his covers for the Saturday Evening Post, which offered reassuring portrayals of American society.
- 9 The poetry reading in 1964 at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, which was Taylor's first stage appearance.
- 0 Ernest K. Gann (1901–91), whose novel The Antagonists would be published in 1971. It became a TV mini-series (starring Peter O'Toole and Anthony Quinn) under the title Masada in 1981. Masada refers to Jewish resistance to the Roman Empire focused on the fortification of Masada in AD 72–73.
- 1 All honours in the British honours system. CBE: Commander of the British Empire. MBE: Member of the British Empire. OBE: Order of the British Empire. OM: Order of Merit. It is not clear what Burton means by 'CM': it might be CMG: Companion of the Order of St Michael and St George.
- 2 The four Beatles had been awarded the MBE in 1965. In 1969 John Lennon returned his in protest at American involvement in the Vietnam War and at British involvement in the conflict in Biafra.
- 3 James Stewart (1908–97), actor. Henry Fonda (1905–82), actor.
- 4 A reference to Mary Shelley's novel Frankenstein, or the Modern Prometheus, first published in 1818. In fact the original character is named Victor, although this did not remain consistent in all film versions of the story and its offshoots.
- 5 Conrad 'Nicky' Hilton (1926–69), socialite and businessman, Elizabeth Taylor's first husband.
- 6 Hilton's second wife, Patricia (the marriage ended 1965).
- 7 The Menninger Psychiatric Hospital, Houston, Texas.
- 8 Conrad Hilton (1887–1979), hotelier.
- 9 Howard Hughes (1905–76), businessman who had been a film producer and film director and was by this time a notorious recluse.
- 0 John D. Macdonald (1916–86), One Monday We Killed Them All (1961).
- 1 Harold Wilson (1916–95), British Labour Party politician, Prime Minister 1964–70, 1974–76.
- 2 Emlyn Williams had been appointed a CBE in 1962, but did not receive another honour. KBE: Knight Commander of the British Empire. Plaid Cymru, the Welsh Nationalist party, had won the parliamentary seat of Carmarthen in a by-election in 1966.
- 3 There were 36 parliamentary constituencies in Wales in 1970.
- 4 Edward Heath (1916–2005), British Conservative Party politician, Prime Minister 1970–74.
- 5 Aloysius is the name of Sebastian Flyte's teddy bear in Evelyn Waugh's Brideshead Revisited (1945).
- 6 Cliff Morgan (1930—), Welsh rugby player and broadcaster, was, with Geoffrey Nicholson, editing Touchdown and other Moves in the Game, to celebrate the centenary of the Rugby Football Union.
- 7 Tonmawr: a mining community in the Pelenna valley a mile due north of Pontrhydyfen.
- 8 Hugh 'Binkie' Beaumont (1908–73), theatre impresario and managing director of the H. M. Tennent theatrical agency, who had given Burton his first professional contract in 1948. John Perry (1906–95), playwright and theatre director, who adapted the Elizabeth Bowen play Castle Anna, in which Burton had starred in 1948.

9 Reader's Digest: a monthly magazine.

0 Jim Murray (1919–98), sports journalist writing for the LA Times. Hank Aaron (1934—), baseball player.

1 Willy Brandt (1913–92), Chancellor of West Germany (1969–74).

2 Tommy Aaron (1937—), golfer, won the Atlanta Classic tournament.

3 Rawhide was a television series that ran from 1959 to 1965, and which starred Clint Eastwood as the character Rowdy Yates.

4 Boris Karloff (1887–1969), actor. Bela Lugosi (1882–1956), actor. This might have been The Body Snatcher (1945), directed by Robert Wise.

5 Creature Features (1970–71).

6 President Nixon had announced his decision to invade Cambodia in April 1970. This led to furious protests, including student demonstrations at Kent State University, Ohio. There the National Guard had opened fire on demonstrators on 4 May, killing four people.

7 Harry Guardino (1925–95), actor, who appeared in Hell is for Heroes (1962), directed by Don Siegel (1912–91).

8 The city of Palm Springs, Riverside County, California, about 110 miles east of Los Angeles.

9 Sydney Guilaroff (1907–97), chief hairstylist at MGM studios, who had worked with Burton and Taylor on various films including The Night of the Iguana, The Sandpiper, and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, and before that with Taylor on Cat on a Hot Tin Roof and Butterfield 8.

0 Probably a reference to Elizabeth Taylor and Jim Benton.

1 The Dow Jones average had hit bottom on 26 May, having lost 30% of its value since the beginning of 1969. On 27 May it closed 32 points up.

2 It rose above 700 points on 29 May, and did dip below this in June, and again in July, but did not return to the low figure reached on 26 May, and from early July rose steadily.

3 Sir Henry Newbolt (1862–1938), poet. Burton is making a reference to a line from Newbolt's 'Drake's Drum' (1897): 'Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?'

4 Aldous Huxley's The Devils of Loudon (1952) had been written as a play (The Devils) by John Whiting (1917–63) and performed at Stratford in 1961. Anthony Shaffer (1926–2001), playwright, author of Sleuth (1970). Identical twin brother of Peter Shaffer (1926—), playwright, author of Equus (1973) which Burton would play on stage and on film.

5 Louis Solomon (1911–81), screenwriter and producer.

6 Burton is here referring to the 1963 CBS television documentary Elizabeth Taylor in London. Sidney Joseph Perelman (1904–79), author and screenwriter.

7 The Indianapolis 500 motor race, over a distance of 500 miles, held at Speedway, Indiana.

8 Jim Clark (1936–68), Formula One racing driver and winner of two World Championships, competed in the Indianapolis 500 five times and won it in 1965.

- 9 Henry Hathaway (1898–1985), director, who was to work with Burton on Raid on Rommel.
-] A backhanded reference to John Drinkwater (1882–1937), playwright and poet.
-] Neiman-Marcus, a luxury retail department store.
-] The journalist was Jo Roddy, whose article ‘How Do I Love Thee? Let Me Count the Ways’, appeared in Look’s issue of 16 June 1970. Jonah Ruddy was Hollywood correspondent for the New Musical Express.
-] George Sisler (1893–1973), baseball player, elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1939.
-] Desert Hospital, North Indian Canyon Drive, Palm Springs.
-] Absalom, third son of David, King of Israel, who rebelled against his father and was killed in battle.
-] Burton is referring here to his impending film. Raid on Rommel (1971), shot in Mexico.
-] Emmys: the awards of the (America) Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.
-] Patty Duke (1946—) received an Emmy for Outstanding Lead Actress for her role in My Sweet Charlie. Wuthering Heights had screened on NBC on 9 May 1958.
-] Albert Speer (1905–81), architect, Nazi Germany’s Minister of Armaments and War Production (1942–5), who had served 20 years’ imprisonment for war crimes after being sentenced at the Nuremberg trials.
-] None of these projects appear to have borne fruit.
-] Airport (1969), directed by George Seaton (1911–79). *M*A*S*H* (1970), directed by Robert Altman (1925–2006). Marooned (1969) directed by John Sturges (1911–92).
-] Catch 22 (1970), directed by Mike Nichols, based on the 1961 novel by Joseph Heller (1923–99). The article ‘Some are More Yossarian than Others’ appeared in Time for 15 June 1970. The relevant paragraph states: ‘Richard Burton remembers meeting Nichols and [Elaine] May [1932—, director, screenwriter, actor, who worked with Nichols] backstage when he was starring in Camelot. “Elaine was too formidable ... one of the most intelligent, beautiful and witty women I had ever met. I hoped I would never see her again.” Mike was less formidable, more agreeable. The mustard-colored eyes glinted, but the face had an unlined, almost feminine softness. The voice was as warm and resonant as a cello. Burton, who knows role playing when he sees it, was at first unconvinced by the proffered friendship and admiration. But eventually he enrolled Nichols in the Richard Burton fan club; it was an attachment that would one day pay off handsomely for Nichols.’ Later in the article there is another passage: ‘Richard Burton likes to retell the story of Walter Matthau, “a frenetic soul, and he finally blew his stack at Nichols’ Odd Couple direction. ‘You’re emasculating me,’ Walter cried. ‘Give me back my balls!’ From out front, Mike called back: ‘Props.’” ‘Mike was Burton’s kind of boy. As the Liz–Dick scandal deepened during the filming of Cleopatra, Burton recalls, “Ninety percent of our friends avoided our eyes. Mike flew to Rome from New York to be with us.” Nichols stayed by Elizabeth’s side when Burton went off to make another film. Favors like that one remembers. In 1966, the Welshman and his lady were signed for Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, and Elizabeth insisted on Nichols as director. Virginia Woolf could have been a mini-Cleopatra, but its below-the-belt punches intrigued critics and audiences.’
-] Morgan accepted the article as it stood, terming it ‘magic’.
-] Cyril Connolly (1903–74), literary critic and essayist.

- ⌋ This may refer to Emlyn Williams's unhappy experiences when taking over from John Gielgud in the part of the Headmaster in the play Forty Years On by Alan Bennett (1934—) at the Apollo. The play had run for nine months when Williams replaced Gielgud in September 1969, but it closed abruptly thereafter. Williams then spent some time in hospital undergoing an operation on his varicose veins.
- ⌋ King George VI (1895–1952) suffered from a stammer. Kenneth Kent (1892–1963), actor. Radie Harris (1904–2001), Hollywood journalist. Herbert Marshall (1890–1966), actor.
- ⌋ Esmé Percy (1887–1957), actor.
- ⌋ Wilfrid Hyde-White (1903–91), who had married the actor Ethel Drew in 1957.
- ⌋ In a first round game in Group 1, the hosts Mexico beat Belgium 1–0 with a penalty scored in the 14th minute.
- ⌋ The Rains of Ranchipur (1955), directed by Jean Negulesco (1900–93).
- ⌋ Both the actor Sybil Thorndike (1882–1976), and the choreographer and dancer Sir Frederick Ashton (1904–88) were admitted to the Order of the Companions of Honour in 1970.
- ⌋ Spartacus (1960), directed by Stanley Kubrick (1928–99). Ice Palace (1960), directed by Vincent Sherman (1906–2006).
- ⌋ Cover-bound,' referring to book.
- ⌋ Reputedly the cable read 'By the Lord Harry, Larry'.
- ⌋ Sir Donald Wolfitt (1902–68), actor and theatre manager, who had appeared alongside Burton in Becket.
- ⌋ About 23 miles west of Palm Springs.
- ⌋ The part of the medical officer in Raid on Rommel was to be played by Clinton Greyn (1936—).
- ⌋ Charlotte Brontë, (1816–55) Jane Eyre (1847).
- ⌋ Bermuda Dunes Hotel, Adams Street, Bermuda Dunes, Palm Springs.
- ⌋ A reference to William Wordsworth's preface to the 1802 edition of the Lyrical Ballads, in which he defined poetry as 'the spontaneous overflow of powerful feeling; it takes its origin in emotion recollected in tranquillity'.
- ⌋ Arthur Rimbaud (1854–91), French poet.
- ⌋ Jordan Christopher, Kate's stepfather.
- ⌋ Burton and Taylor had appeared on The David Frost Show on 19 March 1970.
- ⌋ The opening line of Kate's speech in The Taming of the Shrew, Act V, scene i: 'Fie, fie! Unknit that threat'ning unkind brow'.
- ⌋ 1955.
- ⌋ Despite playing the part of the American actor Edwin Booth, Burton hums the eighteenth-century Welsh love song 'Bugeilio'r Gwenith Gwyn' to his ailing wife Mary.
- ⌋ Zero Mostel (1915–77), actor.
- ⌋ Man of La Mancha (1972), directed by Arthur Hiller (1923—), starring Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren.
- ⌋ Enid Starkie (1897–1970), fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and an expert on Rimbaud. 'J'en ai trop pris' is perhaps better rendered as 'I have had enough'.

- l George Peppard (1928–94), who starred in Tobruk (1967), directed by Arthur Hiller.
- l In fact the Conservative Party won 330 seats against 287 for the Labour Party. With the support of the Ulster Unionists, Edward Heath (1916–2005) was able to form a government based on a parliamentary majority of 30.
- l This could refer to the film Batman (1966), directed by Leslie Martinson (1915—), or to the television series of the same name, featuring some of the same cast as the film, which ran from 1966 to 1968. Possibly Burton is referring to the National Auditorium in Mexico City, which was the venue for gymnastics events at the 1968 Olympic Games, or to the Arena Mexico, the venue for the boxing tournament at the Olympics, which remained a major boxing venue for many years.
- l Cornel Wilde (1912–89). Burton may be mistaken here. The 1962 film Marco Polo starred Rory Calhoun (1922–99) in the lead role. Marco Polo (1254–1324), explorer, traveller, merchant.
- l Vasco De Gama (c.1460–1524), Portuguese explorer.
- l Sébastien Japrisot (1931–2003), novelist.
- l Possibly Arthur Lubin (1898–1995), film director. Dustin Hoffman. Albert Finney (1936—), actor. Chaim Topol (1935—), actor.
- l Burton means the character of Dulcinea del Toboso.
- l Sam O'Steen (1923—), who had edited Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, The Graduate (1967) and Catch 22 (1970), amongst other films, and who went on to direct, mainly films for television.
- l Tony Jacklin (1944—), golfer, who had won the British Open in 1969, won his second (and final) 'major' at the US Open at Hazeltine in 1970.
- l Joe Morgenstern (1932—), film critic for Newsweek (1965–83).
- l Burton probably means 'household names'.
- l Cecil Smith (1917–2009), by this time television critic for the LA Times, but previously drama critic.
- l Brook Williams did play the part of Sergeant Joe Reilly. Christopher Cary (1930–2000) played the part of the 'C.O.' or conscientious objector, Corporal Peter Merrihew. He also played alongside Burton in Camelot on Broadway in 1960.
- l Carol Reed (1906–76), who produced and directed Odd Man Out in 1947. Jimmy Granger being the actor Stewart Granger (1913–93), whose real first name was James, and who would play alongside Burton in The Wild Geese. James Mason played the leading role of Johnny McQueen.
- l Des O'Connor (1932—) hosted seven American versions of his show in the summer of 1970.
- l John Colicos (1928–2000) played Sergeant Major Al MacKenzie.
- l A reference to Joxer Daly, a character in Sean O'Casey's (1880–1964) play Juno and the Paycock (1924), although the line (the final line in the play) 'th' whole worl's in a terrible state o' chassis' is spoken by Captain Boyle.
- l Leonid Brezhnev (1906–82), General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (1964–82). Spiro Agnew (1918–96), Vice-President of the USA (1969–73). By 'Fred' Kennedy presumably Burton means Edward 'Ted' Kennedy. By 'Humphreys' presumably he means Hubert Humphrey. Mao Tse Tung

- (now usually written as ‘Zedong’) (1893–1976), Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party (1943–76). By Cho en Lai Burton means Zhou Enlai (1898–1976), Premier of the People's Republic of China (1949–76). Uncle Tom Copley is a character from the song ‘Widdecombe Fair’ and is often used to suggest ‘many others’.
- ⌋ Rodomontade: a vainglorious boasting.
 - ⌋ Enoch Powell (1912–98), a Conservative MP and former minister who expressed strong opposition to immigration from Commonwealth countries into Britain, and who later moved to join the Ulster Unionists.
 - ⌋ Co-operative store.
 - ⌋ Burton is referring here to the industrial disputes of 1921 and 1926.
 - ⌋ Short quotations encapsulating the doctrine of Maoism were fashionable in leftist circles in the late 1960s and early 1970s.
 - ⌋ Sidney Webb, 1st Baron Passfield (1859–1947), Fabian socialist and Labour Party politician, who coined the phrase ‘the inevitability of gradualness’ in 1923.
 - ⌋ The more it changes the more it stays the same.
 - ⌋ A reference to the idealism of the founding of the American Republic.
 - ⌋ A reference to the Jesuit maxim, ‘Give me a child for the first seven years, and you may do what you like with him afterwards.’
 - ⌋ Turnout at the 1970 general election was 72%, as against 75.8% in 1966. It was to rise to 78.8% at the February 1974 general election. Labour support is generally thought to be more vulnerable than that of the Conservatives to a low turnout, and it was widely predicted by opinion pollsters during the campaign that there would be greater abstention amongst Labour supporters. In fact, as David Butler and Michael Pinto-Duchinsky note in their study The British General Election of 1970 (1971) (p.184): ‘The actual voting figures ... give no support to the idea that Labour abstention was the key factor in the results’, and suggest that there was a differential turnout of only 1% in the Conservatives’ favour.
 - ⌋ Frank Beard (1939—), Pro (1970).
 - ⌋ Arnold Palmer (1929—); Gary Player (1935—); Jack Nicklaus (1940—); Billy Casper (1931—), all golfers.
 - ⌋ Peter Ustinov played the part of the doctor in Hammersmith Is Out. Elizabeth Taylor played the part of Jimmie Jean Jackson, and Burton that of Hammersmith.
 - ⌋ Leslie Caron (1931—), actor and dancer. Daddy Long Legs (1955), film directed by Jean Negulesco.
 - ⌋ A reference to Ecclesiastes 9: 10: ‘Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.’
 - ⌋ King Richard speaking in Richard II, Act V, scene v.
 - ⌋ General Confession from Morning Prayer in the Book of Common Prayer (1662): ‘We have left undone those things which we ought to have done’.
 - ⌋ San Felipe, Baja California, Mexico.

- 7 John D. Macdonald (1916–86), who wrote a 21-vol. series featuring the character Travis Magee.
- 8 Erle Stanley Gardner (1889–1970), who published under many pseudonyms and created the character Perry Mason.
- 9 By ‘fave’ Burton means fava beans, also known as broad beans.
- 0 Alex Lucas would produce Hammersmith Is Out.
- 1 Mexicali, state capital of Baja California, and on the border between Mexico and the USA.
- 2 Karl-Otto Alberty (1933—) played the part of Captain Heinz Schröder. He would also play alongside Burton in Bluebeard.
- 3 Ruben's Campground Hotel, San Felipe.
- 4 Lewis Chester, Godfrey Hodgson and Bruce Page, An American Melodrama: The Presidential Campaign of 1968 (1969).
- 5 Buckingham Palace.
- 6 William F. Buckley (1925–2008), political columnist and writer.
- 7 Hotel Lucerna, Boulevard Benito Juarez, Mexicali.
- 8 Clinton Greyn (1936—), Welsh actor. Danielle De Metz (1938—) played the part of Vivi in Raid on Rommel.
- 9 Eugene McCarthy (1916–2005), US Senator (1959–71) and sometime candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency.
- 0 Ronald Reagan (1911–2004), at this time Governor of California, former film actor, and future President of the United States (1981–9).
- 1 The opening shot of the film.
- 2 Francis Clifford, The Naked Runner (1965). ‘Grapple-snapping’: a family term for snacking from the refrigerator.
- 3 Marlon Brando gave financial support to the Black Panthers and also spoke out in support of the rights of Native Americans.
- 4 Robert Emmet (1778–1803), United Irishman and leader of the 1803 Irish rebellion.
- 5 Brian Hutton (1935—) had directed Where Eagles Dare and would direct Elizabeth Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
- 6 James Barlow's 1968 novel was called The Burden of Proof. The film title was changed to Villain.
- 7 Southend-on-Sea, Essex. ‘The Smoke’: London.
- 8 Edna O'Brien (1930—), novelist and screenwriter. This was published in 1971 under the title Zee & Co and became the film of that name (in the USA), titled X, Y and Zee in Britain.
- 9 Robert Redford (1937—).
- 0 VJ Day: to mark Victory over Japan in the Second World War. Mafeking Night refers to the celebrations in Britain when news was received in May 1900 of the relief of the British garrison of Mafeking during the South African War of 1899–1902.
- 1 Refers to Siegfried Sassoon's poem, ‘Everyone Sang’ (1918).
- 2 The ‘Common Market’ was a familiar phrase at that time, used to describe what was then termed the

- European Economic Community, which the United Kingdom would join in 1973.
- § Romany Bain was a showbusiness journalist.
 - § This refers to the part of Brown played by Greg Mullavey (1932—).
 - § Michael Severeid (1940—) played the part of Wembley, so it is likely that Burton is confused here over the real name of the actor playing Brown.
 - § Rod McKuen (1933—).
 - § Hotel Arnold's Del Mar, San Felipe.
 - § John Orchard (1928–95) played the part of Dan Garth.
 - § Harry Tatelman (1914–97), the producer of Raid on Rommel.
 - § Easy Rider (1969), directed by Dennis Hopper (1936–2010).
 - § Possibly the name of Liza's horse. Taylor's second husband, Michael Wilding, had starred in the film Derby Day (1952).
 - § Nigel Green (1924–72) had played Private Wilkins in Bitter Victory. He had also appeared in Zulu.
 - § Leslie Howard (1893–1943), actor, renowned for playing archetypal English gentlemen.
 - § Sinatra had made a statement on 9 July that he was supporting Ronald Reagan in his bid for a second term as Governor of California.
 - § Joyce Haber (1931–93), Hollywood columnist for the LA Times.
 - § Jesse Unruh (1922–87), Democratic politician in California (Speaker of the State Assembly, 1961–9) and in 1970 unsuccessful candidate for Governor.
 - § A reference to the poem 'The Scholar-Gypsy' (1853) by Matthew Arnold (1822–88).
 - § William Manchester (1922–2004), The Arms of Krupp, 1587–1968 (1968).
 - § The actual reference is (p. 101): 'Now he [Alfred Krupp] was proposing to load his barrels from the rear. The officer corps considered the idea funny as a crutch.'
 - § This is a reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene ii: 'trippingly on the tongue'.
 - § Wolfgang Preiss (1910–2002) had previously appeared in The Longest Day, although not there playing the part of Rommel.
 - § Churchill had cited 'the saying', 'The Hun is always either at your throat or at your feet', in a speech before a Joint Session of Congress on 19 May 1943.
 - § A meerschaum is a name for an ornate pipe.
 - § William Faulkner (1897–1962), A Fable (1954), which won the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction and a National Book Award.
 - § Burton means a Kojah mink pelt.
 - § Ross MacDonald (1915–83).
 - § 'Charro': Mexican horseman.
 - § Allen Welsh Dulles (1893–1969), American intelligence operative in Switzerland during much of the Second World War, later the first civilian Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.
 - § Super Chief: passenger train from LA to Chicago. QE2: Queen Elizabeth II, ocean liner.

- }] Edward Gibbon's (1737–94) The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (1776–89).
- }] Burton means Frank Beetsom, unit production manager on Raid on Rommel.
- }] Laurence J. Peter (1919–90) and Raymond Hull (1919–85), The Peter Principle (1969) suggested that ‘in a hierarchy every employee tends to rise to his level of incompetence’.
- }] Cyril Northcote Parkinson (1909–93) expounded the notion, in his book Parkinson's Law (1958), that ‘work expands so as to fill the time available for its completion’.
- }] Hedda Hopper (1885–1966), actor, radio and television host and Hollywood columnist for the LA Times. Haber (no relation) had taken up this post in 1968.
- }] Burbank Airport, Burbank, Los Angeles County, California.
- }] Henry Wilding, Michael's father.
- }] Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (1969), directed by George Roy Hill (1921–2002) and starring Paul Newman (1925–2008) and Robert Redford.
- }] Beau Bridges (1941—) was to take the part of Billy Breedlove in Hammersmith Is Out.
- }] The Landlord (1970), directed by Hal Ashby (1929–88) and starring Beau Bridges.
- }] Jim Bouton (1939—), Ball Four (1969).
- }] Gallup and Albuquerque, both in New Mexico.
- }] Arthur Hailey (1920–2004), Airport (1970).
- }] The Broadway Limited was the passenger train operating between Chicago and New York.
- }] Penn Station, New York.
- }] Regency Hotel, Park Avenue, New York.
- }] Rumpelmeyer's was located in the St Moritz Hotel, Central Park South and Sixth Avenue.
- }] Shake Hands with the Devil (1959), directed by Michael Anderson (1920—).
- }] The Colony Restaurant was at Madison Avenue and 61st Street, New York.
- }] Alan Jay Lerner (1918–86), writer and lyricist, co-author (with Frederick Loewe, 1901–88) of Camelot (stage play and film). Lerner wrote an adaptation of The Little Prince which Burton narrated in 1974. The original work was a novella, Le Petit Prince, by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry (1900–44) (1943).
- }] Clint Eastwood did not appear in the film.
- }] John le Carré (1931—), The Looking-Glass War (1965). Le Carré had previously written the novel The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1963).
- }] National Velvet (1945), directed by Clarence Brown (1890–1987).
- }] A reference to the island of Elba, where Napoleon Bonaparte (‘Boney’) was exiled from April 1814 to February 1815. The ‘hundred days’ refers to Bonaparte’s final campaign, which began with his escape from Elba on 26 February 1815 and ended shortly after his defeat at the Battle of Waterloo on 18 June 1815.
- }] Theodore Harold White (1915–86), The Making of the President 1968 (1969).
- }] A blend of champagne and stout, usually Guinness.
- }] A brand of tear gas, often used for personal defence.

- 7 Burton means Portoferraio, Elba.
- 8 Villa dei Mulini.
- 9 Burton means 'motoscafo' – motor boat. Piombino is the port on the Italian mainland closest to Elba from which ferry services operate.
- 10 Rashomon (1950), directed by Akira Kurosawa (1910–98).
- 11 Burton must mean the island of Gorgona, approximately two-thirds of the way between Portofino and Elba.
- 12 Burton means a milometer and speedometer.
- 13 E. F. Goldman (1916–89), The Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson (1969).
- 14 Rio Marina, on the east coast of Elba.
- 15 Burton is referring to a mutinous incident aboard HMS Iveston, berthed in Ullapool, Scotland.
- 16 Hotel Les Aloes, Sal Les Aloes, Calvi.
- 17 On the west coast of Corsica roughly equidistant between Calvi and Ajaccio.
- 18 Hotel La Verniaz, Neuvecelle-Eglise, Evian-les-Bains, on the southern shore of Lake Geneva.
- 19 Burton is referring to the filming of Villain.
- 20 Elliott Kastner was executive producer of Villain.
- 21 Not entirely true, as also appearing in Villain were T. P. McKenna, Cathleen Nesbitt, and Brook Williams.

1971

- 1 Burton was playing the part of Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito, born Josip Broz (1892–1980), President of Yugoslavia (1953–80), in a film recreating the 1943 battle of Sutjeska (also known as the fifth anti-partisan offensive) between Tito's Partisans and German forces.
- 2 Saturday Review was an American weekly magazine published from 1924 to 1986.
- 3 Heathfield School, London Road, Ascot.
- 4 W. C. Fields (1880–1946), actor, comedian, writer. He is credited with a number of lines disparaging children, including 'I like children – fried'.
- 5 Christy Brown (1932–81), novelist, poet and artist who suffered from severe cerebral palsy. His autobiography, My Left Foot was published in 1954, and in 1970 was used as the basis for Brown's novel Down All the Days.
- 6 Mrs Diana Ladas (1913—), headmistress of Heathfield School.
- 7 Stan Stennett (1925—), actor and comedian. Porthcawl is a seaside town in South Wales, eight miles south-east of Taibach.
- 8 Stan Smith (USA) (1946—) beat Tom Gorman (USA) (1946—), 6–3, 8–6, 6–2 and John Newcombe (Australia) (1944—) beat Ken Rosewall (Australia) 6–1, 6–1, 6–3.
- 9 At the Swiss Open championships.
- 0 Anthony Shaffer, author of the screenplay for what would become the film Absolution, in which Burton

- starred. His brother Peter (later Sir Peter) would write Equus, which Burton would act in on stage and on film.
- 1 Joseph Losey would direct Burton in The Assassination of Trotsky, Burton playing the title role of Leon Trotsky (1879–1940).
 - 2 Beatrix Miller was the editor of the British edition of Vogue from 1965 to 1983. By the ‘Snowdons’ Burton means Princess Margaret and her husband, Antony Armstrong-Jones, the 1st Earl Snowdon. The article (which is bound amidst the pages of the diary) is a draft of ‘My Day’, an article that appeared in Vogue, 1 September 1971.
 - 3 John Newcombe (Australia) beat Tom Okker (Netherlands), 6–2, 5–7, 1–6, 7–5, 6–3 at the Swiss Open in Gstaad.
 - 4 John Kenneth Galbraith (1908–2006), economist and writer.
 - 5 Kingsley Amis (1922–95), The Green Man (1969).
 - 6 George Thomas (1909–97), Labour MP for Cardiff West, later Speaker of the House of Commons, and Viscount Tonypandy. Thomas had written to Burton in connection with the flotation on the Stock Exchange of HTV, asking Burton to use his influence to place HTV's business with the Hodge financial group, based in Cardiff.
 - 7 Llew Heycock (1905–90), a leading figure in the Labour Party in South Wales, who had been elevated to the peerage as Baron Heycock of Taibach in 1967.
 - 8 Telegram from Beatrix Miller enthusiastically accepting Burton's article.
 - 9 Assimil, a French publishing house specializing in language learning.
 - 0 Ici Paris: a weekly magazine.
 - 1 President Nixon (1913–94) would actually visit China in February 1972.
 - 2 A reference to the song ‘California, sweet homeland of mine’, which includes the lines ‘Neath the palm of the sheltering pine / California, sweet homeland of mine’.
 - 3 This film is probably Absolution.
 - 4 Dubrovnik, city on the Adriatic coast, in the then state of Yugoslavia (now in Croatia). Jersey, the Channel Islands.
 - 5 Maurice B. Solowicz, Fert & Cie, Voyages/Transports, of Rue Fendt, Geneva, Burton's car dealer.
 - 6 Tribune de Genève: Geneva's daily newspaper.
 - 7 Manège: a riding school.
 - 8 Absolution would eventually be made in 1978 but not released until 1981.
 - 9 ‘Tamping’ meaning mad, furious.
 - 0 Villefranche-sur-Mer: resort and port between Nice and Saint-Jean-Cap-Ferrat.
 - 1 Stavros Spyros Niarchos (1909–96), shipping tycoon. Creole was his luxury yacht, which he sold following the death of his wife in 1970.
 - 2 Beth Clutter, wife of Michael Wilding Jr.
 - 3 Nikola Popovic, producer of The Battle of Sutjeska.

- 4 Burton had owned 2, Squire's Mount Cottages, Hampstead, London since 1960, and it had been used as a home by Ivor and Gwen and, after Ivor's accident, by Gwen alone.
- 5 Sir William Deakin (1913–2005), The Embattled Mountain (1971).
- 6 Mad, a satirical magazine published in the USA. Hermann Hesse (1877–1962), novelist, perhaps most famous for Steppenwolf (1927). Aleister Crowley (1875–1947), writer on the occult, philosopher, mountain climber and explorer.
- 7 Cuernavaca, Mexican city.
- 8 By 'Blacke' Burton probably means William Blake (1757–1827), poet, mystical writer, artist.
- 9 By 'the Brass' Burton presumably means 'the top brass' – the highest-ranking officials.
- 0 Bevin boys were men conscripted to work in the coal industry, as opposed to being enlisted into the armed forces, during the Second World War.
- 1 The Official Secrets Act is a piece of legislation aimed at ensuring the restriction of sensitive information usually related to national security.
- 2 For more, in the same vein, see Anthony Shaffer, So What Did You Expect? (2001), pp. 14–17.
- 3 Christopher Miles (1939—). Sarah Miles (1941—). This could be intended to be either humourless or humorous.
- 4 Claude Gill Books, Oxford Street. The 'nameless' one being the baby.
- 5 The city of Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, today the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina. By Brioni Burton means the Brijuni islands in the northern Adriatic, location of Tito's summer residences. Brioni is the Italian spelling.
- 6 Burton probably means Pula, now in Croatia, a port on the mainland (with airport), close to the Brijuni islands.
- 7 Tito's (third) wife, Jovanka Broz (1924—).
- 8 Van Cleef & Arpels: French jewellery and watchmaking company.
- 9 Stipe Delić (1925—).
- 0 At the Tehran conference of November 1943, Churchill had suggested further Anglo-American operations in the eastern Mediterranean. US President Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) had raised the possibility of landing in Yugoslavia in order to lend support to Tito's partisans. Stalin resisted such proposals, which came to nothing.
- 1 'Perfidious Albion': a pejorative term for England (originally rendered in French – la perfide Albion), implying a lack of trustworthiness.
- 2 Spencer Tracy starred in Bad Day at Black Rock (1955), directed by John Sturges.
- 3 A reference to the speech of 9 February 1941 by Winston Churchill, which ended 'Give us the tools, and we will finish the job'.
- 4 Sukarno (1901–70), President of Indonesia (1945–67).
- 5 Draža Mihailović (1893–1946), leader of the Serbian Četnik movement, which opposed Tito's Partisans during the Second World War.

- 6 Michael Caine (1933—), who had starred in Zulu, and who was playing opposite Elizabeth Taylor in X, Y and Zee.
- 7 Suzy Kendall (1944—), actor. Her marriage to the comedian Dudley Moore (1935–2002) ended in divorce in 1972.
- 8 Paul Gallico (1897–1976), novelist and sports writer.
- 9 Possibly Ludmilla Nova (1949—), actor.
- 0 Prince of Players was released in 1955.
- 1 Moss Hart (1904–61), playwright, screenwriter and theatre director.
- 2 Richard and Elizabeth had apparently enjoyed a central role in a knife-throwing act at a Mexican circus, Richard having written about this in his article, ‘My Day’, for Vogue, 1 September 1971.
- 3 Porto Santo Stefano, on the western coast of Italy, due east of Corsica, some 100km from Rome.
- 4 Joseph L. Mankiewicz (1909–93), director of Cleopatra.
- 5 Anzio, Italian port city, 56 km south of Rome.
- 6 The island of Ischia, near Naples.
- 7 Belgrade, then capital of Yugoslavia, now capital of Serbia.
- 8 Messina, Sicily.
- 9 Heyman was 38.
- 0 Isaac Deutscher's (1907–67) trilogy on Trotsky was first published in separate volumes in 1954, 1959 and 1963.
- 1 L'Albergo della Regina Isabella, Piazza Santa Restituta, Ischia.
- 2 A. J. P. Taylor (1906–90) (ed.), Lloyd George: A Diary by Frances Stevenson (1971).
- 3 Mensheviks: the moderate wing of the Russian Social Democrat Party, opposed to the Bolsheviks.
- 4 Frances Stevenson (1858–1972), secretary to and second wife of British Prime Minister David Lloyd George (1863–1945).
- 5 House of Fabergé, the Russian jewellery designers.
- 6 Isaac Deutscher, Stalin (1949).
- 7 It is not clear here what Burton is referring to. Mihailovi Ć had been shot in 1946.
- 8 An unsuccessful Communist-backed coup, led by Hashem al-Atta, had been staged in the Sudan from 19 to 22 July 1971. Hashem al-Atta was executed following the coup's failure.
- 9 F. W. Deakin, The Embattled Mountain (1971), p. 115: ‘This meeting was the only occasion since our arrival when Tito displayed, in my presence, an explosion of temper.’
- 0 Lavrentiy Pavlovich Beria (1899–1953), head of the NKVD (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs) in the USSR.
- 1 John Howard: Australian photographer based in Rome.
- 2 Stepanjek may be Branimir Š Ćepanovi Ć, the screenwriter. ‘Vuko’ is later adjusted by Burton to ‘Vulkov’.
- 3 Mañana: a tomorrow which may never arrive.
- 4 Hardy Krüger (1928—). Krüger's wife at this time was the Italian painter Francesca Marazzi. Krüger and

- Burton would co-star in The Wild Geese, but Krüger did not appear in the final cut of The Battle of Sutjeska. Neda Arneric (1953—).
- 5 Death in Venice (1971), directed by Luchino Visconti (1906–76).
- 6 Audrey Hepburn (1929–93).
- 7 Constantin Stanislavski (1863–1938), actor and director, usually credited with inspiring the ‘method’ approach to acting. Stephen Haggard (1911–43), actor, poet and writer.
- 8 A reference to the Walt Disney film, One Hundred and One Dalmatians (1961).
- 9 Burton means Zabljak, now in Montenegro, which is at an altitude of 1,456 metres.
- 0 The director of Villain was Michael Tuchner (1934—).
- 1 Cavtat, port south of Dubrovnik. Carlo Ponti (1912–2007), producer, and his wife Sophia Loren. Ponti was to produce The Voyage, co-starring Burton and Loren.
- 2 Kupari, between Dubrovnik and Cavtat.
- 3 The dog was playing the part of Tito's dog ‘Lux’.
- 4 The Bay of Kotor, often referred to as the Fjord of Kotor, 40 km south along the coast from Dubrovnik.
- 5 The Verige strait is the narrowest section of the bay, separating the inner bay from the outer bay. A standard translation is ‘trammel’.
- 6 Shaw is usually credited with labelling Dubrovnik ‘paradise on earth’.
- 7 Mary Stewart (1916—), The Gabriel Hounds (1967). Ira Levin (1929–2007), Rosemary's Baby (1967).
- 8 Anton Chekhov (1860–1904), playwright and short-story writer.
- 9 The memorial is at Tjentiste, now in Bosnia-Herzegovina.
- 0 Johnny Green (1908–89), songwriter, composer, conductor, who was Music Director at MGM from 1949 to 1959.
- 1 Probably Karl E. Voldeng (1905–89) and his wife Mary Frances Voldeng.
- 2 Jack L. Warner (1892–1978), executive producer at Warner Bros.
- 3 Alun Lewis (1915–44), poet.
- 4 Everyone says that the President sometimes stays here. Jamais: never.
- 5 Royal Air Force.
- 6 Samuel Pepys (1633–1703), diarist, politician and public servant.
- 7 £1.
- 8 This may refer to some problems that Baker's company Oakhurst was encountering.
- 9 The Internationale: the socialist anthem.
- 0 The city of Niš, now in Serbia, the location of the Yugoslav National Theatre.
- 1 Cardiff Arms Park: the home of the Welsh rugby team.
- 2 Tab Hunter (1931—), actor, perhaps renowned more for his looks than his talent.
- 3 Burton is referring here to one of his childhood homes in Caradoc Street, Taibach.
- 4 Thursday was 9 September.
- 5 Friday was 10 September.

- ‡ Milena Dravić (1940—).
- ‡ Arthur Upfield (1890–1964) wrote 29 novels featuring Detective-Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte, set mostly in the Australian outback. Ivo Andrić, Bridge over the Drina (1961). Andrić had won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1961.
- ‡ Saturday was 11 September.
- ‡ The ‘bodyline’ controversy (over what some felt was unnecessarily aggressive and intimidatory bowling) erupted during England’s tour of Australia in 1932–3.
- ‡ International cricketers. Donald Bradman (1908–2001); Harold Larwood (1904–95); Stan McCabe (1910–68); Bill Voce (1909–84); Bill Ponsford (1900–91); Wally Hammond (1903–65); Gubby Allen (1902–89); Bill Bowes (1908–87); Douglas Jardine (1900–58).
- ‡ A reference to Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (1819–61), husband of Queen Victoria and Prince consort.
- ‡ Heavy Luger, meaning Hardy Krüger.
- ‡ A reference to Radie Harris (1904–2001), Louella Parsons (1881–1972) and Hedda Hopper, gossip columnists.
- ‡ Ambassador Hotel, Trg Kralja Milana Bb, Niš.
- ‡ The Gettysburg Address was delivered by President Abraham Lincoln on 19 November 1863 when dedicating the Soldiers’ National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.
- ‡ Emmeline Pankhurst (1858–1928), suffragette. Culver City is in Los Angeles county and was home to the MGM studios.
- ‡ Laurence Olivier was a founder and the first Artistic Director of the National Theatre. In October 1970 he had impetuously suggested that Burton might take over from him, and Burton had been interested in doing so, only to discover that the appointment was not in Olivier’s gift. Olivier’s letter, dated 16 July 1971, relayed the view of the Chairman of the National Theatre, Sir Max Rayne (1918–2003), that Burton did not have the appropriate experience to be seriously considered for the post. Rayne had in fact already identified Peter Hall (1930—) as his chosen successor to Olivier, this taking place in 1973.
- ‡ Rolf Hochhuth’s play Soldiers, Necrology on Geneva (1967), was a controversial treatment of the Allied bombing of Hamburg in the Second World War and also of the alleged involvement of Winston Churchill in the death of the Polish leader General Sikorski (1881–1943). The National Theatre production of Soldiers in 1967 had been cancelled by the board of the National Theatre, against Olivier’s wishes.
- ‡ Guys and Dolls, a musical by Frank Loesser (1910–69) which had premiered in 1950.
- ‡ A reference to former pupils of the English public school, Eton College.
- ‡ Robert Stephens (1931–95) and his then wife Maggie Smith (1934—).
- ‡ Edith Evans.
- ‡ A reference to the film The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (1969) which starred Robert Stephens and Maggie Smith. Smith had appeared with Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s.
- ‡ Paul Rogers (1917—); William Squire (1916–89).

- § Johnson is credited with saying ‘when a man knows he is to be hanged in a fortnight, it concentrates his mind wonderfully’.
- § This is the first half of Lewis's ‘Postscript: for Gweno’, which appeared in Raiders’ Dawn (1942).
- § James Joyce, (1882–1941), Ulysses (1922), the central character of which is Leopold Bloom.
- § Neil Simon, (1927—), playwright and screenwriter. The Gingerbread Lady (1970).
- § Terence Rattigan (1911–77), playwright.
- § The Sunset Tower Hotel, 8358 Sunset Boulevard, West Hollywood.
- § George Bernard Shaw, Arms and the Man (1894); Anton Chekhov, The Seagull (1896).
- § Rock Hudson (1925–85); James Dean (1931–55); both of whom co-starred with Taylor in Giant.
- § King of Kings (1961).
- § Rebel Without a Cause (1955).
- § The subject of the play was the socialist, secularist, Owenite and co-operator George Jacob Holyoake (1817–1906).
- § ‘The Magic of Meredith Jones’, Sunday Times, 17 June 1956.
- § Burton played Prince Albert in Time Remembered. Paul Scofield had played the same part at the Lyric Theatre and New Theatre in London in 1954 and 1955.
- § Eleonora Duse (1858–1924), actor.
- § T. H. White, The Once and Future King (1958). The Sword and the Stone (1938).
- § For his part as Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady (1964).
- § RMS Queen Mary, which operated between Southampton and New York from 1936 to 1967.
- § Julie Andrews.
- § Burton means Richard Collier, Duce! A Biography of Benito Mussolini (1971). Arnold Toynbee (1889–1975), A Study of History (1960 abridged edn). Oswald Spengler (1880–1936), The Decline of the West (first published in English in the 1920s, with further editions in the 1960s). Erle S. Gardner (1889–1970).
- § Hugh L’Etang (1917–96), The Pathology of Leadership (1970).
- § Collier, Duce!, p. 135, citing Field Marshal Werner von Blomberg.
- § The Italian invasion of Greece in October 1940 had not gone to plan for Mussolini, and had necessitated, in April 1941, German intervention. This is widely believed to have delayed the onset of Operation Barbarossa, the German invasion of the Soviet Union, and thus to have played a critical role in determining that the Germans would not win the campaign on the Eastern Front.
- § Eyties, (often ‘Eyeties’) is a derogatory term for the Italians.
- § Mussolini was executed on 28 April 1945 and his body placed on public show in Milan, where it was subjected to public abuse.
- § Sergio Soldano, furrier, clothes-designer, parfumer.
- § Bertrand Russell (1872–1970), philosopher. C. E. M. Joad (1891–1953), philosopher. John Maynard Keynes (1883–1946), economist.
- § A. A. Fair, one of the pseudonyms of the thriller writer, E. S. Gardner (1889–1970).

- 2 Jasper Ridley (1920–2004), Lord Palmerston (1970).
- 3 President De Gaulle twice vetoed Britain's application to join the European Economic Community, in 1963 and 1967.
- 4 Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918–2008), One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (published in English, 1963).
- 5 Crufts is an annual international dog show which has been held in England since 1886.
- 6 Burton is referring to Soviet interventions in Hungary (1956) and Czechoslovakia (1968).
- 7 A reference to Julius Caesar, Act III, scene ii.
- 8 The death of little Paul Dombey is a famous episode in Dickens's novel Dombey and Son (1847–8).
- 9 Mljet, to the west of Dubrovnik.
- 10 Coleen Gray (1922—), actor.
- 11 Young Bess (1953), directed by George Sidney (1916–2002).
- 12 George Bernard Shaw, Dramatic Opinions and Essays (1907), vol. 2, p. 52: 'With the single exception of Homer, there is no eminent writer, not even Sir Walter Scott, whom I can despise so entirely as I despise Shakespeare when I measure my mind against his.'
- 13 Lew Schreiber, the casting director of Twentieth Century-Fox. Louis Burt Meyer (1884–1957), film producer with MGM. Jack L. Warner (1892–1978), executive producer, Warner Bros.
- 14 It is generally believed that no fewer than 50,000 people were killed during the 1948 'purge' of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia.
- 15 Branko Spoljar (1914–85).
- 16 A reference to Saint Sava (c.1175–1235).
- 17 Milovan Djilas (1911–95), Yugoslavian partisan and communist, who had fallen out of favour in the 1950s and served a number of prison sentences. He was by 1971 living in Belgrade, a renowned dissident.
- 18 Burton is referring to E. M. Forster (1879–1970), novelist, biographer, essayist. However the Forster quoted (actually as saying that Dickens was 'the most popular novelist of the century, and one of the greatest humorists that England has produced'), was John Forster (1812–76), biographer. Alan Pryce-Jones (1908–2000), literary editor, critic and journalist. This is the 1964 edition of Dombey and Son, published by Signet.
- 19 Presumably the International Herald Tribune.
- 20 A reference to George Orwell's dystopian vision in 1984.
- 21 Metropolitan Museum of Art, Fifth Avenue, New York.
- 22 Robin Moore (1925–2008), The French Connection: A True Account of Cops, Narcotics and International Conspiracy (1969).
- 23 George Gordon, Lord Byron (1788–1824); Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822).
- 24 Roget's Thesaurus. Rex Stout (1886–1975), crime writer, whose novels often featured detective Nero Wolfe. Anthony Powell (1905–2000), novelist.
- 25 Ngaio Marsh (1899–1982), novelist. Herman Melville (1819–91) The Confidence Man: His Masquerade

- (1857).
- ⌋ Anthony Powell, A Question of Upbringing (1951).
 - ⌋ The character's name is Kenneth Widmerpool. There are 12 volumes in the A Dance to the Music of Time cycle.
 - ⌋ John Braine (1922–86), Life at the Top (1957).
 - ⌋ Wilfred Owen (1893–1918), poet.
 - ⌋ A reference to Lewis Carroll's 'The Walrus and the Carpenter' (1872) which includes the lines 'Of shoes—and ships—and sealing-wax — / Of cabbages—and kings'.
 - ⌋ George Baker (1931–2011), whose greatest success was on British television portraying Inspector Reginald Wexford (1987–2000), created by Ruth Rendell (1930—).
 - ⌋ Anthony Powell, Casanova's Chinese Restaurant (1960).
 - ⌋ Burton refers here to Evelyn Waugh, A Little Learning (1964), p. 201, where Waugh writes of Powell: 'In reading his brilliant series of novels I have sometimes thought – and indeed, have been so foolish as to state as much in a review – that the recurring seemingly haphazard conjunctions of human life, which comprise his theme, pass beyond plausibility. His hero's passage through youth and early manhood is continually recrossed in improbable circumstances by the same characters. After I had written the review expressing doubts of the authenticity of so many coincidences, I began to reflect on my own acquaintance with him and understood that his was genuine social realism.'
 - ⌋ Burton is using poetic licence here. The relevant passage which inspires his invented quotation comes in the first chapter of Powell's fourth novel, At Lady Molly's (1957), in which Mildred Haycock, once Mildred Blaides, arrives at a party with her fiancé, who happens to be Kenneth Widmerpool, younger than Mildred by about ten years, and known to the narrator, Nicholas Jenkins.
 - ⌋ Nicholas Monsarrat, Smith and Jones (1963).
 - ⌋ Agatha Christie, The Murder of Roger Ackroyd (1926).
 - ⌋ Oleg Lyalin (1937–95) of the KGB (the Soviet intelligence service) had been revealed as a defector on 30 September.
 - ⌋ Mostar: north-west of Dubrovnik and inland, today in Bosnia Herzegovina.
 - ⌋ Pop music associated with Liverpool in the 1960s.
 - ⌋ Wednesday was 6 October.
 - ⌋ Robert Newton (1905–56), who had acted with Burton in The Desert Rats. Bernard Lee (1908–81), who had acted with Burton in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold. Trevor Howard (1913–88). Errol Flynn (1909–59).
 - ⌋ Walter Mitty is the daydreaming character in James Thurber's American short story, 'The Secret Life of Walter Mitty' (1939). It is possible that Burton means something else entirely.
 - ⌋ This is a rather oblique reference to the central character in the Indian Sanskrit epic The Mahabharata.
 - ⌋ Juan Fangio (1911–95); Stirling Moss (1929—), racing drivers.
 - ⌋ Trotsky lived at Viena 45, Mexico City.

- § Burton had played the part of Sir Toby Belch in the Old Vic production of Twelfth Night, and Caliban in the Old Vic production of The Tempest.
- § Alain Delon (1935—), who would play Frank Jackson in The Assassination of Trotsky.
- § Romy Schneider (1938–82), who would play the part of Gita Samuels in The Assassination of Trotsky.
Delon and Schneider had been engaged from 1959 to 1963.
- § The film is Bloomfield (1971), directed by Richard Harris and Uri Zohar (1934—).
- § Bay of Biscay.
- § A reference to Zeus as a swan seducing Leda.
- § Rocco and His Brothers (1960), directed by Luchino Visconti. Renato Salvatori (1934–88) won many plaudits for his part in the film.
- § Delon had been questioned in connection with a police investigation into the murder of Stevan Marković (1937–68), one of his bodyguards, in 1968. Marković's body had been found outside Delon's Paris home. There had been a considerable press furore surrounding the murder, which had also involved Georges Pompidou.
- § Medea, Greek mythological princess of Colchis, with a reputation for hysteria vengeance and ruthlessness.
- § Liz: wife of Brook Williams. Mick: business partner of Brook Williams.
- § Friday was 8 October.
- § Victor Serge (1890–1947), Memoirs of a Revolutionary (1963). Serge's real name was Victor Lvovich Kibalchich.
- § The passage (reproduced accurately by Burton) is to be found on p. 195 of Serge's volume, and refers to Sergei Yesenin (1895–1925).
- § Burton is referring to the direction taken by the Russian Revolution of 1917.
- § Saturday was 9th October.
- § Marian, Richard's cousin, whose husband Carl Mastroianni died in 1971.
- § Burton may mean Sunningdale, near Ascot, in Berkshire, which is about 20 miles from Reading.
- § McDonald may refer to the art director on Boom!, Richard Macdonald, who was production designer on Secret Ceremony, would be production designer on The Assassination of Trotsky, and later on Exorcist II.
- § Losey had directed The Go-Between (1970).
- § Ho Chi Minh (1890–1969), Vietnamese revolutionary leader.
- § Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1958), directed by Richard Brooks (1912–92).
- § Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In was an American television comedy show.
- § Valentina Cortese (1923—) played the part of Natalia or Natasha Trotsky.
- § This may be what appeared in Harper's Bazaar (April 1972), 126–9, as 'Ten Years Since Scandal Time'.
- § Powell, The Military Philosophers (1968).
- § King Constantine II of Greece (1940—) and his wife Queen Anne-Marie (1946—), who had fled Greece in 1967. The Greek monarchy was abolished in 1973.
- § Farah Pahlavi (1938—), Shahbanu (rather than Shahrina) of Iran.

- ⌋ It may have been ‘the dust of eld’, used in the first chapter of The Military Philosophers.
- ⌋ Alexei Kosygin (1904–80) was attacked by Hungarian refugee Geza Matrai shouting ‘Freedom for Hungary!’
- ⌋ Hamlet, Act II, scene ii: ‘I have of late – but wherefore I know not – lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercise; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o’er hanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason, how infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a god! The beauty of the world, the paragon of animals – and yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust?’
- ⌋ The Savage is Loose was made into a film in 1974, directed by George C. Slott (1927–99).
- ⌋ This would become the film Divorce His, Divorce Hers (1973).
- ⌋ Jean Desailly (1920–2008) played Alfred Rosmer and Simone Valère (1921–2010) played Marguerite Rosmer. Desailly and Valère were real life partners, later husband and wife.
- ⌋ In fact it was Seva Trotsky, Trotsky’s nephew, played by Marco Lucantoni.
- ⌋ Jeffrey Archer (1940—), then MP for Louth.
- ⌋ Lew Grade (1906–98), of Associated Television (ATV). St John Ambulance, a charity teaching first aid and offering ambulance services.
- ⌋ Pablo Neruda (1904–73). Salvador Allende (1908–73), President of Chile.
- ⌋ In 1962 the Nobel Prize for Physiology or Medicine was awarded to Francis Harry Compton Crick (1916–2004), James Dewey Watson (1928—) and Maurice Hugh Frederick Wilkins (1916–2004), ‘for their discoveries concerning the molecular structure of nucleic acids’.
- ⌋ Alfred Nobel (1833–96) invented dynamite.
- ⌋ Winston Churchill actually won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1953.
- ⌋ Sunday was 24 October.
- ⌋ Harry Saltzman (1915–94), producer of Look back in Anger, and then all the James Bond films up to The Man with the Golden Gun (1974).
- ⌋ Baruch Spinoza (1632–77), Tractatus Politicus (1677), ‘I have striven not to laugh at human actions, not to weep at them, nor to hate them, but to understand them.’
- ⌋ Burton was agreeing to perform in a production for Harlech Television of what would become Divorce His, Divorce Hers.
- ⌋ The Compact OED was published in 1971, reducing the original 13 volumes to two.
- ⌋ Michael Linnit, theatrical agent. Linnit & Dunfee was a theatre management company.
- ⌋ Hermann Hesse (1877–1962), Steppenwolf (1927; English translation 1929).
- ⌋ Robin: Friend of Michael Wilding.
- ⌋ The diary entries from this day until 10 November are either typed in red or underlined in red.
- ⌋ Sheldon Harte, the character played by Carlos Miranda.

- ⌋ Time, 8 April 1940.
- ⌋ ‘Dear Abby’ was a syndicated advice column written at the time by Pauline Phillips (1918—) using the pen name Abigail Van Buren.
- ⌋ Cecil Gee, a London menswear store. John Elias o Fon (1774–1841), a famous Welsh Nonconformist preacher. Frankie Howerd (1917–92), actor and comedian.
- ⌋ Mr Micawber, in chapter 12 of Dickens's David Copperfield, says, ‘My advice is, never do to-morrow what you can do to-day. Procrastination is the thief of time.’
- ⌋ Fiumicino airport, Rome.
- ⌋ Stansted airport, Essex.
- ⌋ The ‘ould sod’: Ireland.
- ⌋ The Post Office Tower in central London was bombed by the IRA on 31 October 1971.
- ⌋ James Joyce. Gerard Manley Hopkins, ‘Pied Beauty’, includes the line ‘All things counter, original, spare, strange’.
- ⌋ Brigitte Bardot (1934—), actor and model. Roger Vadim (1928–2000), actor, director, husband of Bardot (1952–7), later of Jane Fonda (1965–73).
- ⌋ Charles Baudelaire (1821–67), Les Fleurs du Mal (1857). These lines do not appear to be a direct quotation from Les Fleurs du Mal, although they may owe something to Baudelaire's ‘Le Gouffre’.
- ⌋ Ohrbach's: an American department store.
- ⌋ Thursday was 4 November, as Burton had previously entered.
- ⌋ Frank Sinatra had announced his retirement on 12 June 1971. He returned in 1973.
- ⌋ Baroness Orczy (1865–1947), The Scarlet Pimpernel (1929). Adventures of the Scarlet Pimpernel was published in 1794.
- ⌋ Joseph Conrad (1857–1924) and Ford Hermann Hueffer (later Ford Madox Ford) (1873–1939), Romance (1903). F. Tennyson Jesse (1888–1958), Many Latitudes (1928).
- ⌋ George Eliot (1819–80), Adam Bede (1859). Francis Iles (1893–1971), Malice Aforethought (1931). John Wain (1925–94) had by this time published five novels.
- ⌋ Iris Murdoch (1919–99), A Severed Head (1961). Peggy Webling (1871–1949), The Story of Virginia Perfect (1909).
- ⌋ Fyodor Dostoevsky (1821–81). Marcel Proust (1871–1922). Honoré de Balzac (1799–1850). Alexandre Dumas (1802–70) Gustave Stendhal (1783–1842).
- ⌋ John Cottrell and Fergus Cashin, Richard Burton (1971).
- ⌋ Clara Cluck is a Disney character but this may well be a reference to Claire Bloom.
- ⌋ Portage la Prairie, Manitoba.
- ⌋ WAAF: Women's Auxiliary Air Force.
- ⌋ Hedy Lamarr (1914–2000), actor.
- ⌋ This would appear to be an inaccurate reference to a line from the hymn ‘Cwm Rhondda’: ‘death of death, and hell's damnation’, although it is possible that Burton was familiar with a different translation from the Welsh.

- [The first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima on 6 August 1945, the second on Nagasaki on 9 August 1945.
-] Henry Longhurst (1909–78), golf columnist. Hugh McIlvanney (1933—), sports journalist. Michael Parkinson (1935—) wrote a sports column for the Sunday Times from 1965.
-] Sir Harold Hobson (1904–92), drama critic of the Sunday Times (1947–76). Dilys Powell (1901–95), film critic of the Sunday Times (1939–76).
-] James Agate (1877–1947), theatre and film critic.
-] Jack Hulbert (1892–1978), actor.
-] Neil Porter (1895–1944), actor and producer.
-] Anna Neagle (1904–86), actor.
-] Maxine Audley (1923–92), actor.
-] Kenneth Tynan had joined the National Theatre in 1963 as its literary manager. He wrote Oh! Calcutta! (1969).
-] David Niven, The Moon's a Balloon (1971).
- [This passage is described on p. 297 of The Moon's a Balloon.
-] The scene is described on pp. 292–3 of The Moon's a Balloon (1972). Niven uses the phrase ‘the awed and grateful audience’.
-] ‘Dumbum’ or ‘Dum Bum’ was Bogart's Danish crewman on his yacht the Santana.
-] Proust's A La Recherche du Temps Perdu was published between 1913 and 1927. Burton considered a screenplay based on the novel, written by Harold Pinter (1930–2008), in 1972, but the film was not made.
-] Constant Lambert (1905–51), composer and conductor.
-] Thomas Love Peacock (1785–1866), Nightmare Abbey (1818). Burton appeared in the BBC Radio production on 7 November 1949, playing the part of Scythrop Glowry, generally regarded as a depiction of Shelley.
-] John Dearth (1920–84), who had played with Burton in Look Back in Anger.
-] The George, Oxford Circus.
-] Robert Farquarson (1878–1966). Ernest Thesiger (1879–1961), who co-starred with Burton in The Robe. Andrew Cruikshank (1907–88). Robert Speaight (1904–76). James Stephens (1882–1950), author of The Crock of Gold (1912). James McKechnie (1911–64).
-] The Savile Club, Brook Street.
- [John Ford (c.1586–c.1640), ‘Tis Pity She's a Whore (1633). George Chapman (c.1559–c.1634), The Tragedy of Bussy D'Ambois (1607). Geoffrey Chaucer (c.1343–1400). David Jones (1895–1974), In Parenthesis (1937); idem, Anathemata (1952). James Joyce, Finnegans Wake (1939).
-] Burton's father was 81 when he died in 1957.
-] The Unforgiven (1960), directed by John Huston and starring Burt Lancaster (1913–94) and Audrey Hepburn. It was filmed in Durango, Mexico.

- ⌋ Battistoni's boutique, Via Condotti.
- ⌋ Grace Kelly's birthday was 12 November.
- ⌋ Donald Zec (1919—) would publish a biography of Elizabeth Taylor in 1982.
- ⌋ Valentino's, Via del Babuino.
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ We will stay at home quietly with books, newspapers and this typewriter.
- ⌋ Irving Paul 'Swiftly' Lazar (1907–93), talent agent.
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ Carlo Cotti (1939—), who was proposing to act as director of a film on the last days of Mussolini.
- ⌋ Clara Petacci (1912–45).
- ⌋ Presumably Burton means Gewürztraminer.
- ⌋ Bernard Delfont (1909–94), theatrical impresario. Harold Pinter, playwright, who had written the screenplay of The Go-Between. John Heyman and Norman Priggen (1924–99) were credited as producers of the film.
- ⌋ Billy Wilder (1906–2002), producer.
- ⌋ Sight & Sound, a monthly film magazine (1932—).
- ⌋ Heading in red type.
- ⌋ Wilfred Wooller (1912–97), international rugby player and sports journalist for the Sunday Telegraph.
- ⌋ Alan Hoby (1914–2008), sports journalist for the Sunday Express. Danny Blanchflower (1926–93), international footballer and sports journalist.
- ⌋ Henry Brandon (1916–93), Washington correspondent for the Sunday Times. Philip Toynbee (1916–81), columnist for the Observer. A. J. P. Taylor (1906–90), historian, columnist for the Observer and the Daily Express.
- ⌋ Mrs Grundy, a character in Thomas Morton, Speed the Plough (1798), taken to mean someone who is extremely strait-laced and conventional. John Gordon (1890–1974), columnist in the Sunday Express.
- ⌋ A reference to the 1960 Peter Sellers and Sophia Loren single 'Goodness Gracious Me'.
- ⌋ Peter Sellers's third wife was Miranda Quarry (1948—).
- ⌋ Sellers's marriage to Britt Ekland had ended in 1968.
- ⌋ Huston and Sallis's son Danny (now an actor) was born in 1962.
- ⌋ Sallis is of mixed English and Indian descent.
- ⌋ Anna Kashfi (1934—) was born Johanna O'Callaghan in Darjeeling, India. Her family moved to Cardiff in 1947. She and Brando were married from 1957 to 1959. She has claimed that her father William, a London Irishman, was her stepfather and that her biological father was Indian.
- ⌋ President Franz Jonas (1899–1974). Giuseppe Saragat (1898–1988), President of the Italian Republic. Hotel Quirinale, Via Nazionale, Rome.
- ⌋ Ivor Novello (1893–1951), composer, actor, singer, whose musicals were renowned for their spectacular aspect.

- 1 Robin Stafford, foreign correspondent for the Daily Express.
- 2 The date is wrong. Thursday was 18 November.
- 3 Bert Mortimer was Peter Sellers's valet and driver.
- 4 Ritz Hotel, Place Vendôme, Paris.
- 5 A reference to The Diamond as Big as the Ritz (1922) by F. Scott Fitzgerald (1896–1940).
- 6 Charles Kenneth Scott Moncrieff (1889–1930), translator of Proust. Gerard Hopkins, translator.
- 7 Robert Graves, (1895–1985) I, Claudius (1934).
- 8 The film project Laughter in the Dark from which Richardson had sacked Burton.
- 9 Tom Jones (1963), which was edited by Antony Gibbs (1925—).
- 10 Heading in red type.
- 11 Heading in red type.
- 12 Josef Shaftel (1919–96), director.
- 13 Mario Soldati (1906–99), director, was writing the screenplay for the film on Mussolini.
- 14 Heading in red type.
- 15 Edward Dmytryk (1908–99) would direct Bluebeard. Robert Siodmak (1900–73), director.
- 16 William Gibson (1914–2008), Two for the Seesaw (1958). A Cry of Players (1968).
- 17 Malcolm Lowry (1909–57), Under the Volcano (1947).
- 18 Burton is confusing William Gibson with Wilfrid Wilson Gibson (1878–1962), the poet.
- 19 A reference to the last line of the 1913 poem ‘The Rolling English Road’ by G. K. Chesterton (1874–1936).
- 20 Budd Schulberg (1914–2009), writer, producer. He was actually born in New York.
- 21 A reference to the line spoken by Macbeth in Macbeth, Act V, scene v: ‘Creeps in this petty pace from day to day / To the last syllable of recorded time.’
- 22 Possibly by Di Rossi Burton means Grazia De Rossi, the hair stylist who had worked on the Taming of the Shrew.
- 23 Druan is ‘poor’ in Welsh. Dim ond yr arglwydd is ‘only the lord’.
- 24 This appears to refer to the passage on p. 350 of Cottrell and Cashin's biography in which they write of Dan-y-bont coming on to the market.
- 25 The Port Talbot Guardian and Glamorgan Gazette newspapers.
- 26 J. R. R. Tolkien (1892–1973), novelist, literary critic.
- 27 Heading in red type.
- 28 Burton had bought the Peregrina pearl for Taylor in January 1969 at a cost of $37,000.
- 29 Mary, Queen of Scots (1542–87), Queen of Scotland 1542–67, mother of James VI of Scotland and I of England.
- 30 Heading in red type.
- 31 Heading in red type.
- 32 César Ritz (1850–1918) built the Ritz Hotels in Paris and London. His son Charles C. Ritz (1891–1976)

- was President of the Ritz Chain from 1953 to 1976.
- ⌋ Maltha is the name of the nymph who nursed the infant Jupiter.
 - ⌋ Mags: possibly means majesties.
 - ⌋ Inter-Milan drew 0–0 with Borussia Mönchengladbach in the second leg of the quarter-final (played in West Berlin) on 1 December 1971.
 - ⌋ Heading in red type.
 - ⌋ The Shah of Iran (1919–80) had thrown a party in October 1971 to celebrate the 2,500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire. It was estimated to have cost $100m.
 - ⌋ Madame Louis Malle was Anne-Marie Deschodt who until 1967 had been married to the director Louis Malle (1932–95).
 - ⌋ Andy Warhol (1928–87), the artist.
 - ⌋ Sydney Smith (1771–1845), clergyman and essayist, whose character Lady Holland in Memoir (1855) states that marriage ‘resembles a pair of shears, so joined that they cannot be separated; often moving in opposite directions, yet always punishing anyone who comes between them’.
 - ⌋ Montesquieu (1689–1755). De l'Esprit des lois (1748). Burton's reading of Samuel Taylor Coleridge's The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798) had appeared on long-playing records in 1955 and 1960.
 - ⌋ Maurice Herzog (1919—), Himalayan mountaineer and politician. Jean-Paul Binet (1917–86), eminent cardiovascular surgeon, pioneer of heart surgery, member of the Académie des Sciences and art collector.
 - ⌋ ‘Est-ce-que quelle-qu'n qui a une plume?’ (Has anyone got a feather?) A joke meaning an old style pen.
 - ⌋ Elsa Martinelli (1935—), who had played alongside Burton and Taylor in The V.I.P.s, and alongside Burton in Candy.
 - ⌋ Jacqueline de Ribes (1931—), fashion designer. Pierre Salinger (1925–2004), White House Press Secretary to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. He had published With Kennedy (1966).
 - ⌋ Nureyev was friendly with the Kennedy family, and was particularly close to Princess Lee Radziwill (1933—), sister of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Nicholas and Alexandra (1971), produced by Sam Spiegel, has a running time of 189 minutes.
 - ⌋ Charlotte Rampling (1946—), actor.
 - ⌋ David Rothschild (1942—).
 - ⌋ Andrea Dotti (1938–2007), Hepburn's second husband.
 - ⌋ Cecil Beaton (1904–80), photographer.
 - ⌋ Gabrielle van Zuylen (1933—), wife of Thierry Van Zuylen van Nijeveld.
 - ⌋ All Souls College, Oxford.
 - ⌋ Paul Valéry (1871–1945). He had two sons: Claude and François.
 - ⌋ Harvey Lavan ‘Van’ Cliburn Jr (1934—), pianist.
 - ⌋ François-Marie Banier (1947—), author of Le Passé composé (1971).
 - ⌋ Word ‘Ritz’ in red type.
 - ⌋ Alexis von Rosenberg, Baron de Redé (1922–2004).

- Edouard Etienne de Rothschild (1957—) is Guy de Rothschild's son by his marriage to Marie-Hélène.
- Heading in red type.
- Richard L. Sterne had had a part as a Player Musician in the Broadway production of Hamlet and had written a book, John Gielgud Directs Richard Burton in Hamlet (1967).
- Marcel Marceau (1923–2007), actor and mime.
- Word ‘Ritz’ in red type, date underlined in red.
- Ursula Andress (1936—). Ann-Margret Olsson (1941—).
- It is possible that this refers to the 1973 television documentary Tennessee Williams’ South, which starred John Colicos, Maureen Stapleton and Michael York, and Williams himself. However it was written, directed and produced by Harry Rasky (1928–2007).
- Burton would eventually narrate The Little Prince, written by St Exupéry, which came out on a long-playing record in 1974.
- Tito was the son of Franjo and Marija Broz.
- Heading in red type.
- Liza Minnelli, singer and actor.
- Lena Horne (1917–2010), singer and actor.
- Hôtel Lambert, Paris.
- Maples was a well-known furniture store in Tottenham Court Road, London. It closed in the early 1990s.
- Salvador Dali (1904–89), artist.
- Burton may possibly mean Jean-Louis Barrault (1910–94), actor, who had appeared with Burton in The Longest Day, although the description renders this unlikely.
- Robert Hakim (1907–92), producer. His brothers Raymond (1909–80) and André (1915–80) were also producers. Together they held an option on the film rights to Under the Volcano.
- Heading in red type.
- Gianni Bulgari, chief executive of Bulgari.
- Heading in red type.
- Burton had been invited to write an article for the Daily Mail's Christmas number. It was published as ‘A Story of Christmas, in the Twenties’ on 23 December 1971.
- Heading in red type.
- Heading in red type.

1972

- 1 All headings in this diary are in red with the exception of the last, the entire day's entry being handwritten in black pen. Richard and Elizabeth had travelled to Arizona early in 1972 to visit Elizabeth's mother.
- 2 Sam Warmbrodt, Sara's father, a German engineer who migrated to the USA.
- 3 Mary Frances Voldeng.

- 4 A GS-2 was a steam train operated by the Southern Pacific Company, although it was retired in the 1950s so Burton may be mistaken here.
- 5 John Ford (1895–1973), director.
- 6 Newman was actually ten months older than Burton.
- 7 Susannah York, playing the part of Stella.
- 8 The film ends with Taylor's character (Zee) seducing Stella.
- 9 Hotel Negresco, Promenade des Anglais, Nice.
- 0 Arthur Hornblow Jr (1893–1976), former film producer, and his wife Leonora.
- 1 May's was a chain of department stores. Edie Goetz and Frank Sinatra were lovers. The film was Assault on a Queen (1966), starring Sinatra and Virna Lisi. The new cultural centre may be the Skirball Museum, established in 1972, now the Skirball Cultural Center.
- 2 Diamonds are Forever (1971), directed by Guy Hamilton (1922—).
- 3 Burton means the original novel by Ian Fleming, published in 1956.
- 4 Sean Connery (1930—), playing James Bond in the film.
- 5 This may refer to The Canterbury Tales (1972), written and directed by Pier Paolo Pasolini (1922–75).
- 6 A line uttered by the character Zee (played by Taylor) in X, Y and Zee, itself a reference to the line spoken by the character Rhett Butler (played by Clark Gable, 1901–60) in Gone With The Wind (1939).
- 7 The Diaries of Sir Alexander Cadogan, O.M., 1938–1945 (1972), ed. by David Dilks (1938—). Barry Commoner (1917), The Closing Circle (1971). The ‘something foxes’ was probably Ladislav Faragó (1906–80), The Game of the Foxes: The Untold Story of German Espionage in the United States and Great Britain during World War II (1971).
- 8 Barbara Tuchman (1912–89), Stilwell and the American Experience in China, 1911–45 (1971). ‘Creaseys’ are novels by John Creasey (1908–73), the crime and science fiction writer. By ‘Helen Macguiness’ Burton means Helen MacInnes (1907–85), the thriller writer.
- 9 A reference to the 1888 poem ‘Invictus’ by W. E. Henley (1849–1903), which includes the lines ‘I am the master of my fate: / I am the captain of my soul’.
- 0 Kotch (1971), directed by Jack Lemmon (1925–2001).
- 1 The French Connection (1971), directed by William Friedkin (1935—).
- 2 This refers to the Motion Picture Herald's annual ratings.
- 3 Gordon F. Newman, Sir, you bastard (1971).
- 4 Scotland had beaten France 20–9 on 15 January. Gerald Davies (1945—), Gareth Edwards (1947—), Welsh rugby internationals and British Lions.
- 5 The first ‘Golden Age’ of Welsh rugby began in 1900 and lasted until 1911. In that time Wales won the International Championship (played initially between the four home countries, joined by France in 1910) outright on six occasions, shared the title once, and also defeated New Zealand (1905) and Australia (1908).
- 6 Gareth Edwards had attended Millfield school. ‘Sevens’ is a rugby tournament where there are seven

- players on each team, rather than the usual 15, and the matches are shorter (usually seven minutes each way rather than 40) with more emphasis on running rugby. John Dawes (1940—), Welsh rugby international and British Lion who played for London Welsh Rugby Football Club.
- 7 Welsh rugby internationals Bleddyn Williams (1923–2009), Cliff Jones (1914–90), Cliff Morgan, Haydn Tanner (1917–2009), Wilfred Wooler (1912–97), Edward Verdun Watkins (1916–95), who played at ‘lock’ forward in the second row, David Watkins (1942—), who played in the position of ‘fly-half’, also known as ‘stand off’ or ‘outside half’.
- 8 All Welsh rugby internationals. David or ‘Dai’ Morris (1941—), played mostly as a ‘blind-side’ wing forward, Mervyn Davies (1946–2012), played at ‘Number Eight’, John Taylor (1945—), played as an ‘open-side’ wing forward. Barry John (1945—), played at ‘fly-half’, outside Gareth Edwards at scrum-half. John ‘J. P. R.’ Williams, (1949—), played at full back. John Bevan (1950—), played on the left wing, Gerald Davies mostly on the right wing.
- 9 Roy Bergiers (1950—) and Arthur Lewis (1941—) played in the centre.
- 0 Cliff Jones (1914–90), former Welsh rugby international, chairman of the Welsh Rugby Union's coaching committee and a selector, later President of the WRU. In this context ‘punny ball’ would appear to mean ‘have a great time’.
- 1 A. L. Rowse (1903–97), The Early Churchills (1968) and The Later Churchills (1958); Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918–2008), The First Circle (1968); Ivor Brown (1891–1974), Chosen Words (1961).
- 2 Stéphane Mallarmé (1842–98), French poet. Possibly Burton is referring here to Anthony Hartley (1925–2000) (ed.), The Penguin Book of French Verse, 3: The Nineteenth Century (1957).
- 3 Auberon Waugh (1939–2001), novelist, poet, critic.
- 4 Presumably Isaac Deutscher (1907–67), Red China, Russia and the West: A Contemporary Chronicle, 1953–1966 (ed. Fred Halliday, 1970).
- 5 A reference to the Soviet invasion of Hungary in 1956.
- 6 Joseph and Patricia Losey.
- 7 The ‘old man’ being Tito.
- 8 ‘Kremlin’ meaning the government of the USSR.
- 9 George Tabori (1914–2007), playwright and novelist, screenwriter for Secret Ceremony, also involved with The Man From Nowhere project and with Boom!
- 0 Dai John Philips, secretary of Aberavon Rugby Football Club.
- 1 Anatole De Grunwald (1910–67), writer and producer, who worked with Burton on The Last Days of Dolwyn and Now Barabbas and with Burton and Taylor on The V.I.P.s.
- 2 Burton played Captain Montserrat in Montserrat, written by Lillian Hellman (1905–84), which played at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, in April 1952.
- 3 Greta Garbo (1905–90), actor.
- 4 David Morgan Williams, also known as ‘Dai Mogs’.
- 5 Olivia de Havilland had won the Best Actress Oscar for her performances in To Each His Own (1946) and

The Heiress (1948).

- 6 De Havilland's first husband was Marcus Goodrich (1897–1991), novelist.
- 7 This may be a reference to Rex Harrison's troubled relationship with Twentieth Century-Fox, eventually terminated 'by mutual agreement'.
- 8 Charleville Boulevard, Beverly Hills. Jean Simmons, with whom Burton had an affair.
- 9 The Duna Hotel, now the Budapest Marriott.
- 0 Davenie Johanna or 'Joey' Heatherton (1944—), actor and singer, who played the part of Anne in Bluebeard.
- 1 Vicky Tiel was costume designer for Bluebeard.
- 2 Giovanni Antonio Canal (1697–1768), artist, known as Canaletto. Alexander Korda's brothers were Zoltan (1895–1961) and Vincent (1896–1979). His 'new wife' was Alexandra Boycun (1928–66), whom he married in 1953.
- 3 Alexandra Korda married David Metcalfe, whose father had been aide-de-camp to the Duke of Windsor. They were divorced in 1964. Her death in 1966 was due to an accidental overdose, not suicide.
- 4 Pörkölt: Hungarian meat stew.
- 5 A reference to the Nocturne series of paintings (many of the River Thames) by J. M. Whistler (1834–1903).
- 6 Raquel Welch (1940—), who played Magdalena in Bluebeard.
- 7 Marilyn Monroe (1926–62), actor.
- 8 The Goon Show, British radio comedy programme (1951–60), one of whose stars was Peter Sellers.
- 9 Norman Parkinson (1913–90), portrait photographer.
- 0 Princess Anne (1950—), daughter of Queen Elizabeth II.
- 1 Ezra Pound (1885–1972), poet.
- 2 'Smokin' Joe Frazier (1944–2011) had won the World Heavyweight Boxing Championship in 1968 and retained it until 1973. The book was probably Phil Pepe, Come out Smokin'. Joe Frazier: The Champ Nobody Knew (1972). John Dickson Carr's (1905–77) Hag's Nook (1933) features the detective Gideon Fell.
- 3 Saturday was 12 February.
- 4 Mike Todd Jr married again later in 1972 to Susan McCarthy.
- 5 Ann-Margret had received an Oscar nomination as Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Mike Nichols's 1971 film Carnal Knowledge.
- 6 A reference to the 1935 film Maria Marten, or The Murder in the Red Barn, directed by Milton Rosmer (1881–1971).
- 7 Mike Todd's first wife, Bertha Freeman, died in 1946, when Mike Todd Jr, was seventeen.
- 8 Bertie Wooster is a character in the stories of P. G. Wodehouse. Burton means 1954.
- 9 A reference to Macbeth's line, Act III, scene iv, 'But now I am cabined, cribbed, confined, bound in to saucy doubts and fears.'

- 0 A reference to a line from Duke Orsino's speech in Twelfth Night, Act I, scene i.
- 1 Rod Steiger (1925–2002), who had appeared like Burton in The Longest Day and with whom Burton would act in Breakthrough.
- 2 Steiger had won Best Actor for his performance in In the Heat of the Night (1967), directed by Norman Jewison (1926—).
- 3 Steiger had played Napoleon in Waterloo (1970), a role that Burton had considered.
- 4 A reference to the film Bequest to the Nation (1973, US title The Nelson Affair), directed by James Cellan Jones (1931—), and starring Peter Finch as Nelson and Glenda Jackson (1936—) as Lady Hamilton.
- 5 Terence Rattigan (1911–77) had written the play Bequest to the Nation in 1970.
- 6 Alcoholics Anonymous. Burton is referring to the colour of the typewriter ribbon.
- 7 Alun Lewis's poems 'All Day it has Rained' and 'For Gweno' appeared in the 1942 volume Raiders' Dawn and other poems.
- 8 'Spooner' is a reference to the Reverend W. A. Spooner (1844–1930) and his tendency to metathesis, the transposition of letters or sounds in a word, commonly known as 'Spoonerisms'. Mr Bindle is a cockney character in novels by Herbert Jenkins (1876–1923).
- 9 There is an x typed over the second d in shouldders.
- 0 Presumably Imre Kertesz (1929—), who would win the Nobel Prize for Literature in 2002. Albert Einstein (1879–1955), physicist.
- 1 The Abwehr was a German military intelligence unit.
- 2 According to Farago, The Game of the Foxes, p. 137, Arthur 'Johnny' Owens was freed in 1945 and went on to live in Ireland.
- 3 Friday was 18 February.
- 4 Wolf Mankowitz (1924–98).
- 5 Dick Makewater is Richard's nickname for Richard McWhorter. Lionel Couch (1913–89) was art director on Anne of the Thousand Days, for which he received an Oscar nomination for Best Art Direction.
- 6 Mankowitz was an authority on antique porcelain, and had published The Portland Vase and the Wedgwood Copies (1953) and co-edited (with R. G. Haggard), The Concise Encyclopaedia of English Pottery and Porcelain (1957).
- 7 Mankowitz had owned a shop selling porcelain in the Piccadilly Arcade in London.
- 8 Mankowitz's XII Poems had been published in London by the Workshop Press in 1971, and the printing had been carried out in Dublin.
- 9 Saturday was 19 February.
- 0 Arthur Koestler (1905–83), author of the novel Darkness at Noon (1940), five volumes of autobiography published between 1937 and 1954 and The Case of the Midwife Toad (1971), a study of biologist Paul Kammerer.
- 1 Elizabeth was of course about to turn 40.
- 2 Koestler, who was born in Budapest, had been a member of the Communist Party (in Germany) from 1931 to 1938.

- 3 Burton is referring here to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia.
- 4 Darkness at Noon has as its subject the Stalinist 'show-trials' of the 1930s.
- 5 Elizabeth's 40th birthday celebrations.
- 6 Clec-clecs is a Welsh term for a chat or a gossip.
- 7 Will Cross-eyes being Richard's brother Will, whose eyesight had been affected by a bullet wound he had suffered during the Second World War.
- 8 Michael Caine would marry Shakira Baksh (1947—) in January 1973. Layton is Howard and Mara Taylor's son. Christopher Wilding and Aileen Getty (1957—), who later married.
- 9 By 'Professor Warner' Burton means Francis Warner. Marilu Tolo played Brigitte in Bluebeard and had also appeared in Candy. Billy Williams (1929—), cinematographer, who would also work with Elizabeth Taylor on Night Watch.
-] Doctor of Letters: usually awarded for a substantial record of research and publication, it may also be an honorary degree.
-] Another inaccurate reference to the line from the hymn 'Cwm Rhondda': 'death of death, and hell's damnation'.
-] Actually Starkey.
-] President Nixon returned from a week's visit to China on 28 February 1972.
-] Simone de Beauvoir (1908–86), writer, philosopher. Pierre Overney had been shot dead on 25 February during a demonstration outside the Renault factory.
-] KBE: Knight Commander of the Order of the British Empire.
-] Alan Williams, son of Emlyn, had objected to Burton and Taylor's lack of interest in the oppression of the Hungarian people by Soviet-directed communism.
-] The volume was possibly Spender's The Generous Days (1971). The magazine was Index on Censorship (1972—).
-] Susannah York's husband was Michael Wells.
-] David is the patron saint of Wales.
-] It was ten years, Burton and Taylor's romance having begun in 1962.
-] The British Ambassador to Hungary was Derek Dodson (1920–2003). His wife was Julie Maynard Barnes. They attended the party.
-] Ivor, Richard's brother, had died, and Burton and Taylor returned to England for the funeral.
-] Wendy was another niece of Gwen. Her husband was Derek Jenkins.
-] Paul and Janine Filistorf.

1975

- 1 Elizabeth was filming The Blue Bird, directed by George Cukor and shot on location in Leningrad and

Moscow.

- 2 Elizabeth was suffering from severe amoebic dysentery.
- 3 Brook Williams.
- 4 T and E presumably being 'tired and emotional', or drunk.
- 5 Burton is keeping track of his weight.
- 6 To the school at Tournesol.
- 7 Burton must mean Founex, 3 kilometres south of Céligny.
- 8 Burton means bise, the north wind.
- 9 Vevey: 18 km east of Lausanne on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 Restaurant Le Vieux Moulin, Route Cantonale, Epesses.
- 1 The biography of Napoleon might have been Frank M. Richardson's Napoleon: Bisexual Emperor (1972), which is in Burton's library. Dick Francis (1920–2010), former jockey and thriller writer, who published Knockdown in 1974 and High Stakes in 1975. 'JB' Jeanne Bell (1943—), actor.
- 2 A Gibson is a type of Martini cocktail.
- 3 Norman Fruman, Coleridge: The Damaged Archangel (1971).
- 4 Commugny, 4 km south of Céligny.
- 5 The International School of Geneva, probably the La Châtaigneraie campus near Founex.
- 6 George Best (1946–2005). Michael Parkinson, Best: An Intimate Biography (1975).
- 7 A brand of Swiss watch.
- 8 Raymond Stross (1915–88), film producer.
- 9 Auberge du Raisin, Cully, east of Lausanne on the north shore of Lake Geneva.
- 0 Maurice Solowicz, legal adviser.
- 1 West Ham beat Fulham 2–0 in the FA Cup final.
- 2 Terence Young (1915–94) was director of Jackpot.
- 3 Robert Skidelsky, Oswald Mosley (1975).
- 4 This was a film project that had been circulating since at least 1972.
- 5 Leeds United lost 2–0 to Bayern Munich in the European Cup Final on 28 May 1975.
- 6 Elish being short for Elisheba, Burton's nickname for Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, although it might refer to Elizabeth Taylor. Possibly Hotel President Wilson, Geneva.
- 7 Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew, who had already been financially supported in his business ventures.
- 8 Possibly a book by Louis Auchincloss (1917–2010).
- 9 W. Somerset Maugham.
- 0 Romain Gary (1914–80), White Dog (1970).
- 1 Grundy won the Epsom Derby in 1975.
- 2 Hotel du Lac, Grand Rue, Coppet.
- 3 MG: a British sports car.
- 4 D-Day, the Allied invasion of Normandy, took place on 6 June 1944. The British referendum to ratify

- entry to the European Economic Community took place on 6 June 1975: the vote was 67% in favour and 33% against.
- 5 La Réserve, Route de Lausanne, Versoix.
- 6 Doctor.
- 7 Thun, at the north end of the Thuner See, 28 km south of Bern.
- 8 The Gare de Cornavin, railway station in Geneva.
- 9 Troy Bell, Jeannie's son.
- 0 Midnight.
- 1 Angela Davis: An Autobiography (1974).
- 2 Billie Jean King (1943—) beat Evonne Goolagong (1951—) in two sets to win the women's singles championship at Wimbledon.
- 3 Hertz car rental.
- 4 Possibly Maurice Hankey (1877–1963), civil servant and politician, the subject of a biography by Stephen Roskill (Hankey: Man of Secrets, 3 vols, 1970–4).
- 5 A car body shop.
- 6 Shirley MacLaine's You Can Get There From Here (1975) discussed her visit to China.
- 7 'WD' subscript under 'OK': meaning 'Will do'?
- 8 Crans-près-Céligny.
- 9 Au Domino, Coppet.
- 0 Restaurant d'Allèves, Céligny.
- 1 à l'heure: on time.
- 2 Sanka: decaffeinated coffee. The major biography of Kipling in print at this time was Charles Carrington, Kipling: His Life and Work (1955; new edn 1970), but Burton could also be referring to Kingsley Amis, Rudyard Kipling and His World (1975).
- 3 James A. Michener (1907–97), The Drifters (1971).
- 4 Probably William S. Burroughs (1914–97), Exterminator! (1974).
- 5 James George Frazer (1854–1941), The Golden Bough: A Study in Magic and Religion (1890; abridged edn 1922).
- 6 The film project was Abakarov, to be filmed in Israel, but it was never made.
- 7 Have inserted 'Christ' here – there is a mark which might be a cross.
- 8 Carwyn James (1929–83), Welsh rugby international, coach of Llanelli Rugby Football Club and of the British Lions tour to New Zealand in 1971.
- 9 Dorothy L. Sayers (1893–1957), crime writer, translator, playwright, essayist. The biography is by Janet Hitchman, 'Such a Strange Lady': An Introduction to Dorothy L. Sayers (1975).
- 0 Lindsay Anderson (1923–94), director.
- 1 Scorpio (1973), directed by Michael Winner (1935—), starring Paul Scofield and Burt Lancaster.
- 2 HW is Henry Wynberg (1935—) – Elizabeth Taylor's former consort.

- 3 Burton was to publish 'My Life at 50' in McCall's (December 1975).
- 4 Peter Lawford (1923–84), actor.
- 5 The President of South Africa at that time was Nicolaas Diederichs (1903–78), his wife Margaretha Potgieter.
- 6 Ringo Starr's marriage to Maureen ended in divorce in July 1975.
- 7 Chobe National Park, Botswana.
- 8 Fritz or Fred Knoessen, manager of the Chobe Game Lodge.
- 9 Richard Barrett (1933–2006), music producer, singer and songwriter, manager of The Three Degrees girl group.
- 0 The Kruger National Park, north-east South Africa.
- 1 A reference to the children's book The Story of Ferdinand (1936) by Munro Leaf (1905–76), where the bull prefers flowers to fighting.
- 2 Taylor suffered a temporary scare over her health when a chest X-ray was believed to reveal the possibility of lung cancer, only for this to be discounted within hours.
- 3 From Richard II, Act III, scene ii: 'And that small model of the barren earth / which serves as paste and cover to our bones.'
- 4 Public Relations Officer.
- 5 Elizabeth and Richard remarried on this day.
- 6 Antabus or antabuse is the proprietary name for the drug disulfiram, used to combat alcoholism.
- 7 Brian Graham organized wildlife tours from the lodge.
- 8 Douglas Reed (1895–1976), The Siege of Southern Africa (1974).
- 9 Gavin de Becker, Elizabeth's secretary.
- 0 Ambrose Masalila, district commissioner.
- 1 Serondela, in northern Chobe.
- 2 HW: Henry Wynberg.
- 3 Sausages, bread and butter.
- 4 He may mean vervet monkeys.
- 5 Hugo van Lawick (1937–2002), Solo: The Story of an African Wild Dog (1974).
- 6 Eugène N. Marais (1871–1936), My Friends the Baboons (1939).
- 7 Donald R. Morris (1924–2002), The Washing of the Spears: The Rise and Fall of the Zulu Nation (1965).
- 8 Burton means Chen Sam (d. 1996), who became Burton and Taylor's business manager and press spokesperson.
- 9 This is probably a reference to the Anglo-Zulu War of 1879 and the battles of Isandhlwana and Rorke's Drift.
- 0 Basil Davidson, Africa in History (1968).
- 1 Victoria Falls, waterfall on the Zambezi river between Zimbabwe and Zambia.
- 2 Elephant Hills Hotel, Victoria Falls.

- 3 Robbie Lantz (1914–2007), agent to both Burton and Taylor. Elizabeth Taylor, ‘Richard Again’, Ladies’ Home Journal, February 1976.
- 4 Die Landdrost Hotel, Johannesburg.
- 5 Richard had bought Elizabeth a pink diamond to mark their marriage. But she wished it to be returned and for the money to be used instead to finance a hospital-clinic in Botswana. Although the diamond was returned the clinic was never built.
- 6 John O’Hara (1905–70), novelist, short-story writer, screenwriter. Author of Butterfield 8 (1935), later a film starring Elizabeth Taylor.
- 7 Appointment in Samarra (1934).
- 8 Burton means the Evening Standard British Film Awards.
- 9 Albert Finney won the award for Best Actor for his performance in Murder on the Orient Express (1974), directed by Sidney Lumet (1924–2011), who would direct Burton in the film Equus. Burton presumably meant to write ‘never seen’.
- 0 Cancer.
- 1 Harvey Orkin died on 3 November 1975.
- 2 Frank Hauser (1922–2007), theatre director, based at the Oxford Playhouse from 1956 to 1973.
- 3 Jean-Paul Sartre, Kean (1953).
- 4 Naomi, daughter of Michael Wilding and his girlfriend Johanna, had been born earlier in 1975.
- 5 Scott’s Restaurant, Mount Street, Mayfair, London.
- 6 The Pedro Club, Rushmore Road, Hackney, established in 1929, and relaunched in the 1960s.
- 7 Match of the Day, the BBC football highlights programme shown on Saturday evenings.
- 8 Pusey, the home of Simon and Sheran Hornby.
- 9 The Old Manor House, Bampton, Oxfordshire, to the north of Pusey. Lord Blandford (James) may be a reference to Jamie Spencer-Churchill, Marquess of Blandford (1955—).
- 0 Bear Hotel, Park Street, Sunninghill, Woodstock, north-west of Oxford.
- 1 Elizabeth Sweeting (1914–95), general manager of the Oxford Playhouse. Helen Gardner (1908–86), Merton Professor of English Literature (1966–75), was a Fellow of St Hilda’s College, and held her chair in association with Lady Margaret Hall, both all-female colleges at this time.
- 2 The Taylor-Burton building opened during 1976, an annexe to the Oxford Playhouse.
- 3 This refers to unrealized plans (based on the concept of the geodesic dome, associated with the American scientist and designer Richard Buckminster Fuller, 1895–1983) for the building of the Samuel Beckett Theatre beneath a quadrangle in St Peter’s College.
- 4 The Castle Hotel, The Parade, Neath.
- 5 Today the Aberavon Beach Hotel.
- 6 This presumably refers to Burton’s previous engagement to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia.
- 7 Charlie Hockin.
- 8 The First Clown’s line from Hamlet, Act V, scene i: ‘But age with his stealing steps / Hath clawed me in his clutch’.

- 1 Burton means the Black Mountain, the westernmost range of the Brecon Beacons.
- 2 The Red Lion, Llangadog.
- 3 Michael was living at Ffynnon-Wen, Goginan, Ponterwyd.
- 4 Michael's girlfriend, Johanna.
- 5 Michael.
- 6 Bara Lawr: a laver bread recipe.
- 7 'Gareth the villain': probably reference to Gareth Owen, Richard's nephew. Bratu: Welsh for 'brat'.
- 8 T. H. J.: Thomas Henry Jenkins, Richard's brother.
- 9 Burton actually writes '1975' as the year, but the content of the entry indicates (along with a preceding marker in the original folder) that it was 1977.
- 10 Tom Pryce (1949–77) was a Welsh racing driver killed on 5 March during the Formula 1 South African Grand Prix at Kyalami. Susan Burton (1948—), Richard's third wife.
- 11 A reference to John Donne's poem, 'No man is an Island'. 'For whom the bell tolls' is the penultimate line.
- 12 Cecil Day Lewis (1904–72), who had been Poet Laureate (1968–72), published 20 detective novels under the pseudonym Nicholas Blake.
- 13 Looping being the process whereby film dialogue is re-recorded after the original shoot.
- 14 The Via Appia Antica and Via Appia Pignatelli, roads leading south-east from the city centre of Rome.

1980

- 1 Richard Attenborough (1923—). Graham Greene's 1938 novel Brighton Rock was made into a film in 1947, directed by John Boulting (1913–85), and released in North America with the title Little Scarface.
- 2 Frank Dunlop (1927—) was director of Camelot. Madison Square Garden: an events arena on Eighth Avenue, New York.
- 3 John Barber (1912–2005), chief dramatic critic of the Daily Telegraph (1968–86). David Rowe-Beddoe (1937—), President of the cosmetics company Revlon at this time.
- 4 Samuel Taylor Coleridge, The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798), part 5, includes the lines 'Oh Sleep! it is a gentle thing, / Beloved from pole to pole! / To Mary Queen the praise be given! / She sent the gentle sleep from Heaven, / That slid into my soul.' Burton had produced a long-playing record including this work in 1960.
- 5 'Come seeling night' are words spoken by Macbeth in Act III, scene ii.
- 6 Cauchemar: nightmare. Burton does not return to this, which is a reference to his having to leave the stage after five minutes in New York in July on one occasion, an episode which prompted much speculation about his alcoholism.
- 7 Edward Kennedy's bid for the Democratic nomination for the 1980 US presidential election ended with his withdrawal on 11 August.

- 8 Franz Kafka (1883–1924), novelist.
- 9 David Kissinger, later a television producer, son of Henry Kissinger (1923—) (US Secretary of State, 1973–7) and his first wife Ann. Arnold Weissburger (1907–81), theatrical lawyer. Milton Goldman (1914–89), theatrical agent. Lucy Kroll (1910–97), talent agent.
- 0 Kennedy's speech of 12 August at the Democratic Convention was hailed as one of his greatest.
- 1 US President James Earl 'Jimmy' Carter (1924—), elected 1976, was defeated by Ronald Reagan in 1980.
- 2 Second wife Nancy Kissinger (1934—).
- 3 John B. Anderson (1922—), Illinois Congressman and Independent candidate at the 1980 US presidential election.
- 4 Burton had met Kissinger while in Israel scouting locations for the film project Abakarov, which never materialized.
- 5 The 21 Club, West 52nd Street, New York.
- 6 The Riverhouse building, Battery Park City, New York.
- 7 The Dam Busters (1955), directed by Michael Anderson. Mogadon is a sedative.
- 8 Richard Muenz (1948—) played Lancelot du Lac.
- 9 Robert Fox played Mordred.
- 0 Thor Fields (1968—) played the part of Tom of Warwick.
- 1 Tom Wicker (1926–2011), political journalist. This refers to his On Press (1979), which opens with an account of the Convention.
- 2 Henry IV (Part 1), Act I, scene iii: a line spoken by Hotspur.
- 3 The Avengers was a British television series of the 1960s. It is likely that Burton was watching the 1970s series The New Avengers which was screening in the US from 1978. Cannon was an American television series of the 1970s.
- 4 Linda Ronstadt (1946—) actor. Kevin Kline (1947—), actor. Ronstadt and Kline were appearing together in the New York Shakespeare Festival's production of Gilbert and Sullivan's The Pirates of Penzance in Central Park, which later transferred to Broadway.
- 5 Christine Ebersole (1953—) played Guenevere.
- 6 Jerry Adler (1929—) was production supervisor.
- 7 Paxton Whitehead (1937—) played King Pellinore.
- 8 Hiraeth is a Welsh word which means a blend of nostalgia and longing.
- 9 This aphorism is to be found in 'Reflections on Sin, Pain, Hope and the True Way, 1917–20', on p. 147 of Kafka's The Great Wall of China, and Other Pieces (1933; London, 1946 edn).
- 0 John McClure was sound designer on Camelot.
- 1 Leonard Bernstein (1918–90), composer, conductor.
- 2 Cheryl Kennedy (1947—).
- 3 Luke 15: 29 includes the line 'Lo, these many years do I serve thee', as part of the parable of the Prodigal Son.

- 4 Burton refers to Francis Bacon, but he may be thinking of Lady Holland's comment in Sydney Smith's Memoir (1855) 'No furniture so charming as books' or indeed the novel Books Do Furnish A Room (1971) by Anthony Powell. Producer and screenwriter Ernest Lehman (1915–2005) had given Burton an original edition of Bacon's essays at the end of the filming of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? in 1965.
- 5 Burton may mean 'Hao yun'.
- 6 A reference to the line 'Something is rotten in the state of Denmark', Hamlet, Act 1, scene iv.
- 7 Variety magazine, published weekly in New York. Camelot ran at the New York State Theatre from 8 July to 23 August.
- 8 Nancy Seltzer, publicist.
- 9 Internal Revenue Service.
- 0 Onllwyn Brace (1932—), capped nine times for Wales, twice as captain, who succeeded Cliff Morgan as Head of Sport at BBC Wales.
- 1 Touch of Glory screened on the BBC on 31 October 1980.
- 2 Arie Crown Theater, Chicago.
- 3 Jean Cocteau (1889–1963), poet, playwright, novelist and filmmaker.
- 4 Harold Evans (1928—), editor of The Sunday Times (1967–81).
- 5 Patricia Buckley (1926–2007).
- 6 Nelson Rockefeller (1908–79), US Vice-President (1974–77), whose death in January 1979 from a heart attack was surrounded in controversy, there being a strong suspicion that he had died in intimate circumstances with a young female aide. Margaretta 'Happy' Rockefeller (1926—) was his second wife.
- 7 Palestine Liberation Organization.
- 8 Alger Hiss (1904–96), US government servant convicted in 1950 of perjury.
- 9 Dean Acheson (1893–1971) US Secretary of State (1949–53).
- 0 Buckley and Vidal had a long-running feud dating from televised debates in 1968.
- 1 William Manchester's American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur 1880–1964 had been serialized in the Sunday Times in 1979.
- 2 A reference to Hamlet, Act III, scene i, where Ophelia speaks the line 'The observed of all observers'.
- 3 Burton means zeugmatically.
- 4 A reference to Gerard Manley Hopkins's poem 'The Leaden Echo and the Golden Echo' (1882), which includes the lines 'drooping, dying, death's worst, winding sheets / Tombs and worms, and tumbling to decay'.
- 5 Burton presumably means Georgiana Cavendish, Duchess of Devonshire (1757–1806).
- 6 Franz Allers (1906–95), Musical Director of Camelot in both 1960 and 1980.
- 7 Burton appeared in an adaptation of Jean Anouilh's (1910–87) 1941 play Eurydice, retitled Legend of Lovers in New York in 1951–52.
- 8 James Valentine played the Friar.
- 9 Villages with lots of suburbs.

- 0 Dylan Marlais Thomas. Caradoc Evans (1878–1945), short story writer, novelist, playwright, journalist.
- 1 Taffy (1923), a play, certainly received a hostile reception from the London Welsh community (including Welsh students) when it premiered in London in 1923, and again when it was revived in 1925, although there is no record of Evans's works having been burned in public.
- 2 A reference perhaps to the poem 'Once Below a Time' by Dylan Thomas, or to the same phrase used in Thomas's 'Fern Hill'. New Quay/Ceinewydd, on the Cardiganshire coast.
- 3 Augustus John painted a portrait of Dylan Thomas, who married John's lover Caitlin Macnamara (1913–94).
- 4 Vivienne Van Dyk.
- 5 The Empire Strikes Back (1980), directed by Irvin Kershner (1923—), indeed a sequel to Star Wars (1977), directed by George Lucas (1944—).
- 6 William Parry (1947—) played Sir Dinidan.
- 7 The Phil Donahue Show, 1970–96, hosted by Phil Donahue (1935—).
- 8 'Vulgarian' superscript over 'you bum'.
- 9 Dick Cavett (1936—), talk show host.
- 0 The penultimate verse of Dunbar's 'Lament for the Makaris', which reads 'Sen he has all my brether tane, / He will naught let me live alane; / Of force I man his next prey be: – / Timor Mortis conturbat me.'
- 1 Ian Bannen (1928–99), had starred alongside Burton in The Voyage and Walk With Destiny, also known as The Gathering Storm. He had married Marilyn Salisbury in 1976.
- 2 Bannen took the part of Jim Prideaux in the BBC television adaptation of Le Carré's 1974 novel Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy, which was subsequently broadcast in the US.
- 3 Burton's article, 'To Play Churchill Is to Hate Him', appeared in the New York Times on 24 November 1974. It was extremely unflattering of Churchill and provoked a furious reaction in both the US and Britain.
- 4 Hallmark Cards co-produced the play with the BBC. In the USA it appeared as part of the series 'Hallmark Hall of Fame'.
- 5 A reference to Hamlet, speaking in Hamlet, Act III, scene i, 'What should such fellows as I do crawling between heaven and earth?'
- 6 T. S. Eliot, 'Rhapsody on a Windy Night', first published in 1917, includes the lines 'Regard the moon, / La lune ne garde aucune rancune, / She winks a feeble eye, / She smiles into corners, / She smooths the hair of the grass. / The moon has lost her memory. / A washed-out smallpox cracks her face'.
- 7 The line is 'Midnight shakes the memory / As a madman shakes a dead geranium.'
- 8 The line from 'The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock' is 'When the evening is spread out against the sky / Like a patient etherised upon a table;'.
- 9 Roger Moore (1927—), who had played alongside Burton in The Wild Geese, had previously played the character of Simon Templar in the television series The Saint (1960–69).
- 0 The 'Kup show' was Irv 'Kup' Kupcinet's television talk show, which ran from 1959 to 1986. Richard appeared on 12th September 1980.

- 1 Jack Brickhouse (1916–98), broadcaster, and his wife Pat. Forrest Tucker (1919–86), his daughter Brooke. Others present included Tony DeSantis (1914–2007), theatre owner, and his wife Lucille, and Mr and Mrs Bruce Goodman. The party was held at Café Angelo.
- 2 F Troop ran for 65 episodes from 1965 to 1967 but was much shown thereafter.
- 3 George C. Scott (1927–99), actor.
- 4 Robert Atkins (1886–1972), actor.
- 5 Robert De Niro (1943—). Al Pacino (1940—) played Richard III on Broadway.
- 6 A reference to Sardi's restaurant, New York, frequented by movers and shakers in the theatre world.
- 7 Paul Ferris (1929—), Dylan Thomas (1977). Burton had reviewed Constantine Fitzgibbon, (1919–83) The Life of Dylan Thomas (1965) on publication. According to Ferris's biography of Burton (p. 181), Burton scorned the suggestion in Ferris's biography that Thomas had had homosexual experiences as a young man.
- 8 Iraq invaded Iran on 22 September 1980. The war lasted until August 1988.
- 9 The theme song for the film Alfie (1966), written by Burt Bacharach (1928—) and performed by Cilla Black (1943—), also covered by Dionne Warwick (1940—).
- 0 The line 'the giant agony of the world' is from John Keats (1795–1821), The Fall of Hyperion: A Dream (1819).
- 1 From the Welsh hymn 'Diolch iddo', the line translates as 'Thanks be to him for ever remembering'.
- 2 World heavyweight champion Larry Holmes (1949—) stopped Muhammad Ali (formerly known as Cassius Clay) in ten rounds on 2 October 1980.
- 3 Thursday was 2 October.
- 4 Evelyn Waugh, Black Mischief (1932).
- 5 Peter de Vries (1910–93), Consenting Adults; or, The Duchess will be Furious (1980).
- 6 Kenneth Clark (1903–83), The Nude: A Study in Ideal Form (1956).
- 7 Edith Sitwell (1887–1964), poet and novelist.
- 8 D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930), novelist.
- 9 WASP: White Anglo-Saxon Protestant.
- 0 V. S. Pritchett (1900–97), short story writer, critic.
- 1 Igor Stravinsky (1882–1971), composer, conductor, pianist. Christopher Isherwood (1904–86), novelist.
- 2 Edward Estlin Cummings (1894–1962), poet.
- 3 Presumably the Brussels Restaurant, New York.
- 4 T. S. Eliot, 'The Journey of the Magi', written in 1927 and published in 1930.
- 5 Dylan Thomas, 'Lie Still, Sleep Becalmed' (1945), includes the following lines: 'Under the mile off moon we trembled listening / To the sea sound flowing like blood from the loud wound / And when the salt sheet broke in a storm of singing / The voices of all the drowned swam on the wind. // Open a pathway through the slow sad sail, / Throw wide to the wind the gates of the wandering boat / For my voyage to begin to the end of my wound’.

3 P. H. Burton, by this time living in Florida.

1983

1 Pierre Koessler, architect, son of Edouard Koessler.

2 Sally Hay (1948—), to become Burton's fourth wife.

3 This refers to the forthcoming trip that Burton and Hay were planning to make to Haiti, to the intended divorce that Burton was seeking from third wife Susan Hunt, and the trip to New York to allow Burton to play in Private Lives with Elizabeth Taylor.

4 D. Brynner is presumably Yul Brynner's second wife Doris, from whom he had been divorced in 1967.

5 John and Joan Dearth were about to visit Richard and Sally.

6 Brother Tom had died in 1980.

7 Milton Katselas (1933–2008) was the initial director of Private Lives, but would leave the production following disagreements with Taylor in Boston.

8 John Cullum (1930—) was to play the part of Victor Prynne in the play. He had played with Burton in the 1960 production of Camelot and in the Broadway production of Hamlet.

9 Mark Getty (1960—), businessman, brother of Aileen.

0 Burton had read Michael Parkinson, Best – An Intimate Biography on its first publication in 1975.

1 Ireland beat France 22–16 at Lansdowne Road, Dublin, and Wales beat Scotland 19–15 at Murrayfield.

2 Profile of a Superstar was a television film about Burton that screened on American television in 1983.

3 Taylor was making a TV movie, Between Friends.

4 Pope John Paul II visited Haiti in March 1983.

5 M. Vandal was dealing with Richard's divorce.

6 Albert Silvera, owner of El Rancho Hotel where Richard and Sally were staying in Haiti, who was attempting to persuade Burton to purchase his beach house.

7 Burton's divorce from Susan Hunt.

8 The President of Haiti was Jean-Claude Duvalier (1951—), also known as ‘Baby Doc’.

9 The cartoon was a ‘Gren’, (by the cartoonist Grenfell Jones (1934–2007) presumably from the Cardiff evening newspaper the South Wales Echo, dated 23 February 1982, in which a lawyer, sitting in a luxurious penthouse office suite, is explaining to a client, ‘I had nothing to begin with except an unshakeable belief in my ability and the Richard Burton Divorce Contract.’ The explanatory caption below the cartoon reads ‘Yet another Richard Burton divorce is announced.’

0 PV: Puerto Vallarta.

1 Nicolas Duvalier, born 31 January 1983.

2 François Latour (1944–2007), Haitian writer and actor. Leslie Gerson was US non-immigrant visa chief in Haiti. She and Latour subsequently married.

- 3 The President's wife was Michele Bennett Pasquet (1950—). Her brother, Frantz Bennett, had been convicted of drug trafficking in Puerto Rico in 1982 and was serving a three-year term of imprisonment.
- 4 Latour wrote in an accompanying letter (dated 4 March 1983), 'It is my pleasure to make it possible for you to have these books; I am so appreciative of the interest you are taking in my country.'
- 5 Noel Coward wrote Private Lives in 1933, when he was 34.
- 6 On 5 March Wales beat Ireland 23–9 at Cardiff, and Scotland beat England 22–12 at Twickenham.
- 7 Burton was to purchase Habitation Courvoisier, l'Etang du Jone, Petionville.
- 8 Willi Wichert, manager of the El Rancho Hotel, and his wife Chantal, sister-in-law to Albert Silvera.
- 9 Top of the Pops, the BBC TV pop music chart show.
- 0 Guy Malarly (1943–93), lawyer, assisting with the house purchase, later Minister of Justice (1991–3).
- 1 M.U.: make-up.
- 2 Burton presumably means maquilleuse, make-up girl.
- 3 Madeleine Harrison, to marry David Rowe-Beddoe in 1984. Valerie Douglas. Lisa Rowe-Beddoe, eldest daughter of David Rowe-Beddoe.
- 4 Kate Burton played the character of Mag in Winners, the first part of Lovers by Brian Friel (1929—), staged at the Roundabout Theatre, New York.
- 5 Maria Burton, who had married Steve Carson in 1982, had given birth to Eliza in 1983.
- 6 The Beresford, an apartment building on Central Park West, New York.
- 7 Zev Buffman (1930—), producer of Private Lives, who had previously directed Taylor in Little Foxes.
- 8 Kathryn Walker (1943—) played the part of Sybil Chase in Private Lives.
- 9 'Alka' was Richard's nickname for Nancy Seltzer, publicist, 'Alka Seltzer' being an effervescent antacid compound used for indigestion, headaches and hangovers.
- 0 Dashiell Hammett (1894–1961), crime writer. Fran 3 Kafka (1883–1924), novelist. The biography might have been Ronald Hayman, Kafka: A Biography (1982). Mark Twain (1835–1910), writer.
- 1 17 March is celebrated by people of Irish descent as St Patrick's Day, Patrick being the patron saint of Ireland.
- 2 The Cort Theater, West 48th Street, New York.
- 3 The play would start its run at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, on 7 April.
- 4 Wales lost to France 9–16 at the Parc des Princes on 19 March 1983. Ireland beat England 25–15 at Lansdowne Road.
- 5 Simon and Sheran Hornby.
- 6 Tennessee Williams had died on 25 February 1983 in New York.
- 7 The Night of the Iguana and Boom!
- 8 Christopher Wilding. If Burton is right then that would probably have been during the making of The Night of the Iguana.
- 9 Private Lives opened at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, New York, on 8 May.
- 0 Theoni V. Aldredge (1932—) was the costume designer for Private Lives.

- 1 Geraldine Fitzgerald (1913–2005), actor.
- 2 Jimmy Breslin (1930—), journalist, Hollywood columnist and writer, and friend of Burton.
- 3 The Thorn Birds was a TV mini-series that screened over four nights from 27 March 1983.
- 4 ‘Pangs of disprised love’ is a line from Hamlet's famous soliloquy in Act III, scene i.
- 5 A reference to Michael F. Ritchie (1958—). He and Kate married in 1985.
- 6 Katselas had been a Scientologist since 1965.
- 7 John Hurt (1940—), actor.

INDEX

NOTE: The initials RB signify Richard Burton; ET signifies Elizabeth Taylor

Aaron, Hank, (i)
Aaron, Tommy, (i)
Abakarov (proposed film), (i)n56
Abel, Elie: The Missile Crisis, (i)
Abercorn, Dukes of, (i)
Aberfan: disaster (1966), (i), (ii)
Abraham, William ('Mabon'), (i)
Absolution (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Academy Award: RB nominated for, (i)
Acheson, Dean, (i)
Ackerley, Joe Randolph: My Dog Tulip, (i)
Advice to a Married Man (filmed as A Guide for the Married Man), (i)
Agate, James, (i)
Agnew, Spiro, (i)
Alain, Pierre, (i)
Albee, Edward, (i), (ii)
Alberty, Karl-Otto, (i)n180, (ii), (iii), (iv)
Alcott, Joe, (i)
Alderson, Christian (Richard Alderson), (i)
Aldredge, Theoni, (i), (ii)
Aldrin, Edwin ('Buzz'), (i)
Alex (nurse), (i)
Alexander, A.V. (later Earl), (i)
Alexander the Great (film), (i), (ii)
Alexandre de Paris (Louis Alexandre de Raimon), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Alfie (film), (i)
Ali, Muhammad (earlier Cassius Clay), (i), (ii), (iii)
Alice in Wonderland (stage adaptation), (i)
Allbritton, Louise, (i)

Allende, Salvador, (i)
Allers, Franz, (i)
Allott, Kenneth, (i)
Alsop, Stewart: The Center, (i)
Amalia (cook's wife), (i)
Amis, (Sir) Kingsley: The Green Man, (i)
Amundsen, Roald, (i), (ii)
Anderson, John B., (i)
Anderson, Lindsay, (i)
Andre (Bernard Greenford's partner), (i)
Andress, Ursula, (i)
Andrews, Harry, (i), (ii)
Andrews, Julie, (i), (ii), (iii)
Andrić, Ivo: Bridge over the Drina, (i), (ii)
Ann-Margret (Ann-Margret Olsson), (i), (ii)
Anne, Princess, (i)
Anne of the Thousand Days (film): McWhorter discusses with Wallis, (i); RB's relations with Bujold in, (i), (ii); Universal threaten to sue RB over, (i), (ii); RB fitted for costumes, (i), (ii); filming, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); reception, (i), (ii); wins Oscar nomination, (i); see also Bujold, Geneviève
Anne-Marie, Queen of Greece, (i)
Anouilh, Jean: Legend of Lovers, (i); Time Remembered, (i)
Anzio, Italy, (i), (ii)
Archer, Jeffrey (later Baron), (i)
Archerd, Army, (i)
Arlott, John, (i)
Armstrong, Neil, (i)
Armstrong-Jones, Jennifer, (i)
Ash Wednesday (film), (i)
Ashcroft, Dame Peggy, (i)
Ashton, Sir Frederick, (i)
Assassination of Trotsky, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
Assault on a Queen (film), (i)
Astaire, Fred, (i)
Athens: RB and ET read poetry at Acropolis, (i)
Atkins, Robert, (i)
atom bomb: dropped on Japan, (i)
Attenborough, Richard (later Baron), (i)

Attlee, Clement (later 1st Earl), (i)
 Auden, Wystan Hugh, (i), (ii); About the House, (i)
 Audley, Maxine, (i)
 Aurelia, Madame, (i), (ii)
 Avriel, Ehud, (i), (ii)

Bacall, Lauren (Mrs Humphrey Bogart; ‘Betty’), (i), (ii)
 Bach, Johann Sebastian (housekeeper), (i)n5
 Bacon, Francis, (i)
 Bacon, James, (i)
 Bacon, Lloyd, (i)
 Badel, Alan, (i), (ii)
 Bader, Sir Douglas, (i), (ii)
 Bain, Romany, (i), (ii)
 Baker, Carlos: Ernest Hemingway, (i)
 Baker, George, (i)
 Baker, Sally, (i)
 Baker, Stanley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Baker, Terence, (i), (ii)
 Baldwin, James, (i), (ii)
 Balfour, Neil, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ball, Lucille, (i)
 Banier, François-Marie, (i)
 Bannen, Ian, (i)
 Barber, John, (i)
 Barbizon, Fontainebleau, (i)
 Barbosa, Arthur (‘Edward’), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bardot, Brigitte, (i)
 Barragán, Carlos, (i)
 Barragán, General Garcia, (i), (ii)
 Barrault, Jean-Louis, (i), (ii)
 Barrett, Richard, (i)
 Barzini, Luigi: The Italians, (i)
 Basi  (actor), (i)
 Bates, H. E.: Fair Stood the Wind for France, (i)
Battle of Sutjeska, The (film), (i), (ii)n82, (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Baudelaire, Charles: Fleurs du Mal, (i), (ii), (iii)

Bea (children's governess), (i)
 Beal, Charles Herbert, (i), (ii)
 Beaton, Sir Cecil, (i), (ii)
Beatriz of Bolivia (yacht), (i)
 Beatty, Robert, (i)
 Beatty, Warren, (i)n7, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Beaumont, Hugh ('Binkie'), (i), (ii)
 Beauvoir, Simone de, (i)
 Bebb, Dewi Iorwerth Ellis, (i)
 Becker, Gavin de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Becket (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); documentary on, (i)
 Behrens, Ulrich, (i)
 Bell, Jeannie, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bell, Troy, (i), (ii)
 Benin see Dahomey
 Bennett, Billy, (i)
 Benny, Jack, (i)
 Benthall, Michael, (i)
 Benton, Jim: makes martinis, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); flies to London with RB, (i); gives money to James Baldwin, (i); RB abuses, (i); entertains Geneviève Bujold, (i); and RB's purchasing ring for ET, (i); attends post-Oscar 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); looks at house in Palm Springs, (i); on Look article about ET's sickness, (i); in Mexico, (i); lacks charm, (i); watches X, Y and Zee, (i); hepatitis, (i)
 Bergman, Ingrid, (i)
 Beria, Lavrentiy, (i)
 Berkeley, Craig, (i), (ii)
 Berkeley, Leah, (i)
 Berkeley, Ron: makes up RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); relations with Vicky, (i), (ii); at Hanley's for birthday lunch, (i); eats and drinks with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB borrows apartment, (i); and RB's drinking, (i), (ii); bets RB unable to write book, (i); in Sardinia, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i), (ii); and Francis Taylor's funeral, (i); helps young Mike Wilding, (i); at 'Talk of the Town' with RB, (i); in San Felipe with RB, (i); RB rebukes for disorganization, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii); RB's fondness for, (i); in helicopter drama, (i); on Tito's shootings, (i); on Romy Schneider, (i); on Bardot, (i); and assassination scene in Trotsky, (i); drinking, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); legacy from RB, (i)
 Berkeley, Vicky, (i)
 Berle, Milton, (i)
 Berle, Ruth, (i)
 Berliner Ensemble, (i)

Bernstein, Leonard, (i), (ii)
 Bertrand (ET's chauffeur), (i)
 Besançon, André ('Bobo'), (i), (ii); suicide and funeral, (i), (ii)
 Best, George, (i), (ii)
 Best, Miss M. E., (i)
 Betti, Ugo: The Queen and the Rebels (play), (i)
 Beverly Hills Hotel, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Beynon, J., (i), (ii)
Bible: In the Beginning, The (film), (i)
 Binet, Jean-Paul, (i)
 Bismarck, Otto Christian Archibald, Prince von and Anne-Marie, Princess, (i)
 Bisset, Jacqueline, (i)
Bitter Victory (film), (i), (ii)
 Black, Daniel, (i)
 Blackmore, Ruth, (i)
 Blake, Robert: Disraeli, (i)
 Blake, William, (i)
 Blanc, Suzanne: The Rose Window, (i)
 Blandford, James Spencer-Churchill, Marquess of, (i)
 Blomberg, Field Marshal Werner von, (i)n152
 Bloom, Claire: relations with RB, (i), (ii), (iii)n21, (iv); RB meets in London, (i); RB works with, (i);
 appearance, (i)
Bluebeard (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Bobo, The (film), (i)
 Bogarde, Dirk, (i)
 Bogart, Humphrey, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bohan, Marc, (i)
 Bolkan, Florinda, (i)
 Bond, Gary, (i)
 Bonifacio, Corsica, (i)
Boom! (film): making, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); released, (i); shown and discussed, (i); fails at box office, (i)
 Boothby, Robert, Baron, (i)
 Bouton, Jim: Ball Four, (i)
 Bowditch (fellow pupil), (i)
 Bowen, Elwyn, (i)
 Bowen, Rees, (i)
Boys in the Band, The (film), (i)

Bozzacchi, Claudye (née Etti): RB lunches with, (i); woken by Maria, (i); marriage to Gianni, (i), (ii); and Robin Marlowe's request for contraceptive, (i); in Paris, (i); gives birthday presents to RB, (i), (ii); RB talks with, (i), (ii); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); on heavy rain, (i); bores RB, (i); in Ariel, (i); on Joey Heatherton, (i)

Bozzacchi, Gianni: marriage to Claudye, (i), (ii); Robin Marlowe requests contraceptives from for junior Michael Wilding, (i); in Paris, (i), (ii); gives birthday presents to RB, (i), (ii); accident with Mace, (i); carries restorative, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); bores RB, (i); on value of ET's furs, (i); unpaid, (i); on expenses in Yugoslavia, (i); Hebe Dorsey complains of non-payment by, (i); in Ariel, (i); on Joey Heatherton, (i); photographs, (i)

Brace, Onllwyn, (i), (ii)

Braddon, Russell, (i), (ii)

Bragg, George Henry, (i)

Bragg, Melvyn, Baron: biography of RB, (i), (ii); and RB's diaries, (i)

Braine, John: Life at the Top, (i)

Bramble Bush, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)

Brando, Marlon: in Italy with RB, (i), (ii), (iii); embarrasses Stark, (i); picks up New York Critics award for ET, (i); personality and appeal, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); ET calls on phone, (i); stage acting, (i); dependence on Kazan, (i); declines film parts, (i); intellect, (i); marriage to Anna Kashfi, (i); proposed to play Mussolini, (i); RB accuses of laziness, (i)

Brandon, Henry, (i)

Brandt, Willy, (i)

Braswell, Charles, (i)

Breakthrough (film), (i)

Bremner, Billy, (i)

Breslin, Jimmy, (i)

Brezhnev, Leonid, (i), (ii)

Brickhouse, Jack and Pat, (i)

Bridges, Beau, (i)

Brief Encounter (film), (i)

Brighton Rock (film), (i)

British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC): RB records for, (i); Third Programme, (i)

Britton, Eva, (i)

Britton, Jasper, (i)

Britton, Tony, (i), (ii)

Broadway Limited (railway train), (i)

Brogan, Denis, (i)

Brook, Peter, (i), (ii)

Brooke, Rupert, (i)
 Brown, Christy, (i)
 Brown, George Stanford, (i)
 Brown, Pamela, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Browne, Roscoe Lee, (i)
 Broz, Jovanka (Tito's wife), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bruhn, Erik Belton Evers, (i)
 Bryant, John, (i)
 Brynner, Doris, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Brynner, Rocky, (i), (ii)
 Brynner, Victoria, (i)
 Brynner, Yul, (i)
 Bucerias, Mexico, (i)
 Buckley, Patricia, (i)
 Buckley, William F., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Budapest, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Buffman, Zev, (i), (ii)
 Bujold, Geneviève: relations with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv);
 A. P. Herbert makes pass at, (i); behaviour, (i); unpopularity, (i); RB criticises, (i)
 Bulgari, Gianni, (i)
 Burroughs, William S.: Exterminator, (i)
 Burton, Hal (ed.): Acting in the Sixties, (i)
 Burton, Jessica (RB's daughter): birth, (i); in Paris, (i); christening, (i); RB's relations with, (i); letter to RB, (i); RB's hopes for, (i); in Switzerland with RB, (i), (ii); inheritance from RB, (i)
 Burton, Kate (RB's daughter): birth, (i); in Geneva, (i); christening, (i); and mother's remarriage, (i); RB's relations with, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); RB meets in USA, (i); visits to RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); correspondence with RB, (i), (ii); RB sends money to, (i); sculpture of, (i); seasick on yacht, (i); writes diary as child, (i); Ivor and Gwen take to New York, (i); ungenerous nature, (i); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); dislikes caviare, (i); RB takes to New York on Queen Elizabeth, (i); visits Ivor Jenkins, (i); takes small part in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i); manner, (i); writing, (i); appearance, (i), (ii); compliments RB, (i); in Mexico with RB, (i); leaves Mexico, (i); swearing, (i); view of parents, (i); lifestyle, (i); fourteenth birthday, (i); love of flying, (i); shows off before girlfriend, (i); in New York, (i); enters college, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); birthday (1975), (i); acts in Alice in Wonderland with RB, (i); acting in New York, (i); attends Tennessee Williams' funeral, (i); marriage to Michael F. Ritchie, (i)ⁿ⁵⁴; plays in Ellis Island with RB, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)
 Burton, Philip: background, (i); influence on RB, (i), (ii); RB moves into home and taken as ward, (i); teaches RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); stage productions, (i)ⁿ¹⁶⁷; directs RB in school play, (i), (ii); visits

London to see Shaw, (i); in Port Talbot YMCA, (i)n247, (ii)n252; and RB in New York, (i); moves to USA, (i); RB writes to from Sardinia, (i); visits RB in Italy, (i); praises ET in Secret Ceremony, (i); compared with Mrs Trench, (i); tells RB to be patient with Michael Wilding, (i); in Florida, (i); legacy from RB, (i)

Burton, Richard: diaries, (i), (ii), (iii); birth and family background, (i); sister Cis takes care of as child, (i); chapel-going, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi); musical interests, (i); rugby football-playing, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); leaves school and works in store, (i); Philip Burton's interest in, (i); works for Co-operative Wholesale Society, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); adopts surname Burton, (i); moves in with Philip Burton and becomes ward, (i); takes Oxford University short course, (i); trains as RAF navigator, (i); awards and nominations, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii); early stage and film parts, (i); marries Sybil Williams, (i); Shakespearean roles, (i), (ii); children with Sybil, (i); first meets ET, (i); moves to Céligny, Switzerland, (i), (ii); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx), (xxi), (xxii), (xxiii), (xxiv), (xxv), (xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii), (xxix), (xxx), (xxxi), (xxxii), (xxxiii), (xxxiv); first romance with ET, (i); romantic liaisons, (i); marries ET (1964), (i); Sybil divorces, (i); self-criticism, (i), (ii); early death, (i); proposed autobiography, (i); rows with ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii); supposed relations with leading ladies, (i); spelling, (i); complex character, (i); filmgoing as youth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv); plays Monopoly, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); works as paper-boy, (i); takes school exams, (i), (ii), (iii); plays tennis, (i), (ii); school sports, (i), (ii); collects horse manure, (i); cricket, (i), (ii), (iii); reading, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx), (xxi), (xxii), (xxiii), (xxiv), (xxv), (xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii), (xxix), (xxx), (xxxi), (xxxii), (xxxiii), (xxxiv), (xxxv), (xxxvi), (xxxvii), (xxxviii), (xxxix), (xl), (xli), (xlii), (xliii), (xliv), (xlv), (xlvi), (xlvii), (xlviii), (xlix), (l), (li), (lii), (liii), (liv), (lv), (lvi), (lvii), (lviii), (lix), (lx), (lxi), (lxii), (lxiii), (lxiv), (lxv), (lxvi), (lxvii), (lxviii), (lxix), (lxx), (lxxi), (lxxii), (lxxiii); in wartime air raids, (i), (ii); plays billiards, (i), (ii); swimming, (i), (ii); in school play, (i), (ii); takes School Certificate exam ('matric'), (i); quarrel with Elfed James, (i); installs Anderson air raid shelter, (i); lacks confidence in Welsh language, (i); fifteenth birthday, (i); joins YMCA, (i); smokes pipe as schoolboy, (i); takes first communion as member of Noddfa Chapel, (i); gambling, (i), (ii); learns to ski, (i); studies Russian, (i); ranking in Motion Picture Herald, (i); makes records, (i); watches rugby internationals, (i), (ii); ET praises, (i); honeymoon with ET, (i); plays Yahtzee (dice game), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); marriage relations with ET, (i); plays piano, (i), (ii); dislikes paparazzi, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); pet dogs, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii); celebrates 40th birthday, (i); attends ballet, (i); financial anxieties, (i); self-image, (i); preparations for film parts, (i); and shooting of Taming of the Shrew, (i); gives up drink temporarily, (i), (ii); takes Finalgon (drug), (i); depressions, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); smoking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); competes in father's race at Maria's school sports, (i); and death of sisters, (i), (ii); learns Italian, (i),

(ii); skin trouble, (i); loses taste for alcohol, (i), (ii), (iii); gives away money, (i); follows American baseball, (i); exercises, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); attitude to public figures, (i); bet to write book, (i); fears losing ET, (i); forty-first birthday, (i); defends pornography, (i); narration for documentary on Florence, (i); passion for ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); purchases yacht on cruise in Mediterranean, (i); sculpted by Rocchi, (i); arthritic arm and wrist, (i), (ii); loses weight, (i); dislikes flying, (i); gives money to Howard and Mara Taylor, (i); buys jet plane for ET, (i); buys jewellery for ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); and ET's hysterectomy, (i); knowledge of French, (i); desire for river barge, (i), (ii); earnings and wealth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x); Universal Pictures threatens to sue, (i), (ii); wears alopecic baldwig, (i), (ii); temper and ill behaviour, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); offered tutoring post at Oxford, (i), (ii); arthritis in hip, (i); forty-third birthday, (i); mink coat, (i); Zanuck sues for $55 million, (i); mimicry, (i); seduction technique, (i); political views, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); misses absent ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); hates the English, (i), (ii); ice-skating, (i); skiing, (i); Christmas in Gstaad, (i); eye damaged in fight, (i); disparages the French, (i); diets, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); cosmic pessimism, (i); attitude to acting, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); records for BBC, (i); writing, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii); visits dentist, (i); on national stereotypes, (i); grows beard, (i); charitable gifts, (i), (ii), (iii); dreams, (i), (ii), (iii); supports family financially, (i); punishes soldier at Paddington Station, (i); fitted for costume, (i); reaction to interviews, (i); religious scepticism, (i), (ii); lists worthwhile films, (i); singing voice, (i), (ii); talking, (i); plays badminton, (i), (ii); steals books from Foyle's, (i); performs in foreign languages, (i); gives speech in Geneva, (i); weight, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); gives up drink after health check-up (1970), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); learns Spanish, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); loses sexual urge, (i); at Oscars (1970), (i); appointed CBE, (i), (ii), (iii); given ticket for speeding, (i); attitude to reviewers, (i); dreams of retiring onto Kalizma, (i); learns German, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); relishes fame, (i); diminished sexual appetite, (i); on causes of illness, (i); uses exercise bike, (i); invested with CBE, (i); learns Serbo-Croat, (i), (ii), (iii); proposed as Director of National Theatre, (i), (ii); plays table tennis, (i), (ii); acquires TV movie machine, (i); in knife-throwing act, (i); and ET's overdosing on sleeping pills, (i); view of film directors, (i); creditors, (i); views on entourage, (i); in helicopter drama, (i); reflects on stage and film career, (i); stage acting, (i); criticised by press for wealth, (i); fighting, (i); dislikes museums, (i), (ii); pride in intellectual superiority, (i); memory lapses, (i); on film rewards, (i); wine drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); in Winnipeg as airman, (i); early sexual experience, (i); death foretold, (i), (ii); forty-sixth birthday, (i), (ii); newspaper reading, (i), (ii); plays in horror film (Bluebeard), (i), (ii); attends Rothschild party with Princess Grace, (i); acne, (i); catches photographer with rubber ball, (i); manners, (i); attempts to give up cigarettes, (i); box office position, (i); Korda offers contract to, (i); and brother Dai Morgan Williams, (i); affair with Jean Simmons, (i); learns Hungarian, (i), (ii); appearance, (i); loses hair, (i); eighth wedding anniversary (1972), (i); affairs, (i); resumes drinking, (i); rift with ET, (i); engagement to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, (i); ET divorces, (i); relations with Jeanne Bell, (i); cycling in Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii); teetotalism, (i); enters clinic, (i); struggles with drink problem, (i); eyes tested, (i); remarries ET in South

Africa, (i), (ii); fiftieth birthday (1975), (i); revisits Wales, (i); affair with Susan Hunt, (i); second divorce from ET and marriage to Susan Hunt, (i); pinched nerve, (i); effect on public in restaurants, (i); abruptness on telephone, (i); TV narration for wedding of Prince of Wales and Diana, (i); undergoes spinal surgery in Santa Monica, (i); marriage with Susan fails, (i); relations with Sally Hay, (i); divorce from Susan, (i), (ii); marries Sally, (i); cerebral haemorrhage and death, (i); estate, (i)

Burton, Sally (earlier Hay; RB's fourth wife): gives RB diaries to Swansea University, (i); reads RB's diaries, (i); RB meets, (i); anxieties over RB's divorce from Susan, (i); in Port au Prince, (i); in New York, (i); marries RB, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Burton, Susan (earlier Hunt; RB's third wife): RB reads to from diary, (i), (ii); marriage to RB, (i); flies to Geneva with RB, (i); in New York, (i), (ii), (iii); fourth wedding anniversary, (i); in Chicago, (i), (ii); under public scrutiny, (i); background and sensitivity to people, (i); and Bob Wilson, (i); dress, (i); on reviews of Camelot, (i); twin sister (Vivienne), (i); hurts spine, (i); fondness for Kupcinets, (i); in Dallas, (i); mollifies Merrick, (i); fears over-exposure, (i); marriage with RB fails, (i); divorce from RB, (i)n3, (ii); RB keeps silence on, (i)

Burton, Sybil (RB's first wife): marriage to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); moves to Switzerland, (i); and RB's romance with ET, (i); in Rome with RB, (i); divorces RB, (i); sees RB's diary, (i); RB telephones from New York, (i); joins RB in Paris, (i); RB misses, (i); takes possessions from Céligny, (i); remarries (Jordan Christopher), (i); and daughter Kate's visits to RB, (i); and Edie's death, (i); and Kate's visit to RB in Italy, (i); post-divorce relations with RB, (i); grey hairs, (i); birth of daughter, (i); disparages Lyndon B. Johnson, (i); relations with Kate, (i), (ii); takes RB's Welsh books to New York, (i); attempted suicide, (i); appearance, (i)

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (film), (i)

Butt, Ronald, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Cagney, James, (i)

Caine, (Sir) Michael, (i), (ii), (iii)

Callas, Maria, (i), (ii), (iii)

Camelot (stage musical), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); film version, (i), (ii)

Cameron, Roderick ('Rory'), (i)

Camus, Albert, (i)

Canada: RB in at war's end, (i)

Candy (film), (i)

Cannes, (i)

Capote, Truman, (i)

Capri, (i)

Cardiff, Jack, (i)

Cardus, Neville, (i)

Carey, Joyce (actress), (i)
Carlos, John, (i)
Carnal Knowledge (film), (i)
Caron, Leslie, (i)
Carter, Jimmy, (i)
Cashin, Fergus, (i)
Castle Anna (play), (i)
Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (film), (i)
Catania, Sicily, (i)
Catch 22 (film), (i)
Catherine II (the Great), Empress of Russia, (i)
Cavett, Dick, (i), (ii)
Cavtat, Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Cecil, Lord David, (i), (ii), (iii)
Céligny, near Geneva, (i)
Celina (Gstaad maid), (i)
Chamberlain, Neville, (i), (ii)
Chandler, Otis and family, (i)
Chaplin, Charlie, (i)
Chapman, John, (i)
Charles, Mr (of Dan-y-bont), (i)
Charles, Prince of Wales: investiture in Wales, (i), (ii); wedding with Diana, (i)
Charles, Uncle, (i), (ii)
Charlton, Bobby, (i)
Charon, Jacques, (i)
Chase, Richard, (i)
Cheshire, Group-Captain Leonard, (i)
Chester, Lewis, Geoffrey Hodgson and Bruce Page: An American Melodrama, (i), (ii)
Chesterton, G. K., (i)
Chevalier, Maurice, (i)
Chicago, (i), (ii)
Chichester, Sir Francis, (i)
Chimes at Midnight (film), (i)
Chobe National Park, South Africa, (i), (ii)
Christie, Agatha: The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, (i)
Christie, Julie, (i)
Christmas Story, A (RB), (i), (ii)

Christopher, Amy (Sybil-Jordan's daughter), (i)
 Christopher, Jordan (born Jordan Zankoff): marries Sybil, (i); birth of daughter, (i); Kate buys book for, (i)
Chronicle of an English Crown (Vivat Rex) (BBC radio programme), (i)
 Churchill, Randolph, (i)
 Churchill, (Sir) Winston: as Prime Minister (1940), (i); dismisses underlings, (i); RB proposed to play in film, (i), (ii); biography by son Randolph, (i); RB meets, (i), (ii); on Germans, (i); and Mediterranean strategy, (i); Tito meets, (i); and Hochhuth's Soldiers, (i); reputation, (i); wins Nobel Prize, (i); hair colour, (i); RB attacks, (i); RB plays, (i); The World Crisis, (i)
Circle of Two (film), (i)
 Clark, Jim, (i)
 Clark, Kenneth: The Nude, (i)
 Clay, Cassius see Ali, Muhammad
Cleopatra (film), (i), (ii)
 Cliburn, Harvey Lavan ('Van'), (i)
 Clifford, Francis: The Naked Runner, (i)
 Clift, Montgomery, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Clowes, Dick, (i)
 coal industry: South Wales, (i)
 Coburn, James, (i)
 Cochlin, D. A., (i)
 Coghill, Ambrose, (i)
 Coghill, Sir Marmaduke Nevill Patrick Somerville, (i)n21
 Coghill, Nevill, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)
 Cohen, Alexander H., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Cohen, Nat, (i)
 Colicos, John: in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); character, (i); RB's influence on, (i), (ii), (iii); Hathaway orders to have hair cut, (i); in Mexico for Raid on Rommel, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Collier, Richard: Duce, (i)
 Collingwood, Charles: in Las Vegas, (i); congratulates RB on writing on Wales, (i); and wife's drinking, (i); asks RB for opinion on novel, (i); resents RB's celebrity, (i), (ii); drinking, (i), (ii); interviews Speer, (i); The Defector, (i), (ii)
 Collingwood, Louise, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Columbia Pictures, (i)
 Columbus, Christopher, (i)
Comedians, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Compton, Fay, (i)
 Connery, (Sir) Sean, (i)

Connolly, Cyril, (i)
 Constantine II, King of Greece, (i)
 Cook, Anthony, (i)
 Cooper, Dr Barrington, (i)
 Cooper, Henry, (i)
 Cordy, K., (i)
 Corsica, (i), (ii)
 Cortese, Valentina, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Cotonou, Dahomey, (i), (ii)
 Cotti, Carlo, (i)
 Cottrell, John and Fergus Cashin: Richard Burton, (i), (ii)
 Cound, Truda, (i)
 Coward, (Sir) Noël: in Boom!, (i), (ii), (iii); time taken writing plays, (i); asked to write on Olivier, (i); RB's esteem for, (i); in RB's fantasy household, (i); ageing, (i); praises Rex Harrison, (i); Conversation Piece, (i); Hay Fever, (i); Private Lives, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Crawford, Andrew, (i)
 Crosby, Joan, (i)
 Crosse, Rupert, (i)
 Crowley, Dave, (i), (ii)
 Crowther, Bosley, (i)
 Cruikshank, Andrew, (i)
 Cuernavaca, Mexico, (i)
 Cukor, George, (i), (ii)
 Cullum, John, (i), (ii), (iii)
 cummings, e. e., (i)
 Cusack, Cyril, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Cusack, Maureen, (i)
 Custer, General George Armstrong, (i)
 Cwmafan: drowning tragedy (1940), (i)
 Czechoslovakia: Soviet invasion (1968), (i), (ii)
Daddy Long Legs (film), (i)

Dahomey (now Benin), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Daily American (Italian newspaper), (i)
Daily Mail, (i)
 Daley, Robert: The Whole Truth, (i)
 Dali, Salvador, (i)

Dallas, Texas, (i)
Dam Busters, The (film), (i)
Dan, Peter, (i)
Dark Summer (play), (i)
Darmanin, Peter, (i)
David Frost Show, The (TV programme), (i)
Davidson, Basil: Africa in History, (i)
Davidson, Lionel: A Long Way to Shiloh, (i)
Davies, ‘Archie’ Richard, (i), (ii)
Davies, Eifion H. N., (i)
Davies, Gerald, (i)
Davies, Huw, (i)
Davies, J. Vyrnwy (‘Tout’), (i), (ii), (iii)
Davies, John Eaton, (i)
Davies, Peggy, (i), (ii), (iii)
Davies, V. (‘second Tout’), (i)
Davis, Angela, (i)
Davis, George, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Davis, Sammy, Jr, (i), (ii), (iii)
Dawes, John, (i)
Day Lewis, Cecil, (i)
Deakin, Sir William, (i), (ii), (iii); The Embattled Mountain, (i)
Dean, James, (i)
Dear (or Deer), George, (i)
Dearth, Joan, (i)
Dearth, John, (i), (ii)
Death in Venice (film), (i)
de Gaulle, Charles, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
de Havilland, Olivia, (i), (ii), (iii)
Dehn, Paul, (i)
Delfont, Bernard, (i)
Deli  Stipe, (i), (ii), (iii)
Delon, Alain, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Delon, Nathalie, (i)
De Metz, Danielle, (i)
De Niro, Robert, (i)
DePaolis, Valerio, (i), (ii)

Derby, Edward John Stanley, 18th Earl of, (i), (ii)
De Rossi, Grazia, (i)
Des O'Connor Show (TV), (i)
Desert Rats, The (film), (i)
Deutscher, Isaac: Stalin, (i); Trotsky, (i)
de Vries, Peter, (i); Consenting Adults, (i)
Diamonds are Forever (film), (i)
Diana, Princess of Wales: wedding, (i)
Dick Cavett Show, The (USA), (i)
Dickens, Charles: Dombey and Son, (i), (ii)
Diller, Phyllis, (i)
Divorce His, Divorce Hers (TV film), (i), (ii)
Djilas, Milovan, (i)
Dmytryk, Edward, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Doctor Faustus (film) see Marlowe, Christopher
Don Quixote (film), (i), (ii)
Donahue, Phil, (i), (ii)
Donen, Stanley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Dorsey, Hebe, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Dotti, Andrea, (i)
Douglas, Valerie, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Drake, Alfred, (i)
Drew, Ethel, (i)
Dreyfuss, Richard, (i)
Dubrovnik, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Duke, Patty, (i)
Dulles, Alan, (i)
Dummer, Dillwyn, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Dummer, Edwin, (i)
Dummer, Edwina, (i)
Dundy, Elaine: The Old Man and Me, (i)
Dunlop, Frank, (i), (ii)
Dunn, Michael, (i), (ii)
Durrell, Lawrence, (i)
Duvalier, Jean-Claude ('Baby Doc'), (i), (ii)n18, (iii)
Duvalier, Nicolas, (i)
Dynevor, Richard Charles Uryan Rhys, 9th Baron, (i), (ii)

Eastern Boys' School, Port Talbot, (i), (ii)
Eastwood, Clint, (i), (ii), (iii)
Easy Rider (film), (i)
Ebersole, Christine, (i), (ii)
Eccles, Jeremy, (i)n144
Echeverria Alvarez, Luis, (i), (ii)
Ed Sullivan Show (US TV production), (i)
Eden, Anthony (later 1st Earl of Avon), (i)
Edwards, Blake, (i), (ii)
Edwards, Gareth, (i)
Edwards, Jack Jones, (i)
Egremont, John Wyndham, 1st Baron, (i)
Einstein, Albert, (i)
Eisenhower, Dwight D., (i)
Eisteddfodau, (i)
Ekland, Britt, (i), (ii)
Elba, (i)
Eldridge, Mildred (Mrs R. S. Thomas), (i)
Eliot, T. S., (i), (ii), (iii); 'The Journey of the Magi', (i); 'Rhapsody on a Windy Night', (i)
Elizabeth, Princess of Yugoslavia ('Elisheba'): visits RB, (i), (ii); RB on character of, (i), (ii); wishes to meet Warren Beatty, (i); at Curt Jurgens party, (i); marriage to Neil Balfour, (i); RB's engagement to, (i); RB's relations with, (i); ET complains about, (i)
Elizabeth Taylor in London (TV documentary), (i)
Ellin, Stanley, (i)
Ellis, Claire, (i)
Ellis, Osian Gwynn, (i)
Ellis, Rene, (i), (ii)
Ellis Island (TV series), (i)
Emmys (awards), (i)
Enzo (caretaker), (i)
Equus (film), (i)
Erdödy, Count Josip, (i)
Ettori, Claudye see Bozzacchi, Claudye
Evans ('Bumf'; physics teacher), (i)
Evans, A. Leslie ('Todd'), (i)
Evans, Caradoc, (i)
Evans, Edgar (or Charles Warwick Evans), (i)

Evans, Dame Edith, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Evans, Edith (née James; Aunt Edie), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Evans, Harold, (i)
 Evans, J. Derlwyn, (i)
 Evans, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Everyman's Library, (i), (ii)
 Evian, France, (i)
Exorcist II: The Heretic (film), (i)
 Eynon, Colin T. C., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Fair, A. A. (E. S. Gardner), (i)
 Fairbanks, Douglas, Jr, (i)
 Fallows, B., (i)
 Farah Pahlavi, Shahbanu of Iran, (i)
 Farquarson, Count Robert, (i)
 Farrow, Mia, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Faulkner, William: Fable, (i)
 Favez, Mme (of Geneva), (i)
 Fellini, Federico, (i)
 Ferris, Paul, (i)
 Fforde, Lady Jean, Countess of Arran, (i)
 Fields, Thor, (i)
 Fields, W. C., (i)
Fifth Column, The (TV adaptation of Hemingway), (i)
 Fillistorf, Janine, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Fillistorf, Paul, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Fillistorf, Roger, (i)
 Finch, Peter, (i)
 Finney, Albert, (i)
 Fiorentina, Villa La, Cap Ferrat, (i)
 Fisher, Eddie, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Fisher, Maria (ET's daughter): RB adopts, (i); photographer hits in face, (i); in Rome with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); wins money on horse race, (i); RB tells story of life to, (i); nervous temperament, (i), (ii); RB buys bike for, (i); in school sports, (i); makes up story of adoption, (i); in Gstaad, (i), (ii); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); addresses RB as Richard, (i); talkativeness, (i), (ii); stays with RB, (i); RB praises, (i); celebrates birthday, (i); RB writes to, (i), (ii); dislikes M.A.S.H., (i); in Mexico with RB, (i), (ii); view of parents, (i); grandmother's death, (i); buys books with RB, (i); in

Yugoslavia, (i), (ii); ET writes to, (i); religion, (i); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i); appearance, (i); with RB in Switzerland, (i); leaves for Leningrad, (i); marriage to Carson, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Fitzgerald, Geraldine, (i)

Fitzgibbon, Constantine, (i), (ii)

Flanagan, Agnes, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Flanagan, Frank, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); death, (i)

Flea in Your Ear, A (film), (i), (ii)

Fleming, Ian, (i); You Only Live Twice, (i)

Flink, Stanley, (i)

Florence: floods (November 1966), (i), (ii)

Flynn, Errol, (i)

Folliet, Pierre, (i)

Fonda, Henry, (i), (ii)

Fonda, Jane, (i), (ii)

Fonssagrives, Mia, (i)

Fonteyn, (Dame) Margot, (i), (ii)

Foot, Michael, (i)

Foot, Richard ('Don Ricardo'), (i), (ii)

Ford, John, (i)

Foreman, Carl, (i)

Forester, C. S.: Lord Hornblower, (i)

Forster, E. M., (i)

Forster, John, (i)n176

Forster, Robert, (i)

Forsyth (or Forsythe), Rosemary, (i)

Fothergill, Robert, (i)

Fox, Freddie, (i)

Fox, Robert, (i), (ii)

Foyle's bookshop, London, (i)

France: falls to Germany (1940), (i); see also Paris

Franco, General Francisco, (i)

Frankenheimer, John, (i), (ii)

Frankovich, Mike, (i)

Frazier, Joe, (i)

Frederick II (the Great), King of Prussia, (i)

French, Hugh: in New York, (i); as RB's and ET's agent, (i), (ii); upsets Frosch, (i); character, (i); in Italy, (i); loses girlfriend, (i); on Zanuck's praising Staircase, (i); on Universal's threat to sue RB, (i); drinking,

(i); on reviews of Staircase, (i); wishes ET to do TV show with Mancini, (i); in Malibu, (i); RB lunches with, (i); and Don Quixote, (i); on Ustinov and Hammersmith is Out, (i); RB dismisses, (i); on Yugoslav deviousness, (i)

French Connection, The (film), (i)

Freud, Sigmund, (i)

Frings, Kurt, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Frosch, Aaron: and RB's prospective biography, (i); opposes Sybil's marriage to Christopher (Zankoff), (i); in Rome, (i), (ii), (iii); Hugh French upsets, (i); drinking, (i); accompanies Kate to Monte Carlo, (i); seasick on Kalizma, (i); RB records Bobby Kennedy narration in house, (i); multiple sclerosis, (i); praises RB's intelligence, (i); in Paris, (i); and Bernard Greenford's financial problems, (i), (ii); on RB's finances, (i); and RB's purchase of ring for ET, (i); reports on RB and ET's wealth, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); decline, (i); on RB's overspending, (i); RB discusses film projects with, (i); in New York, (i), (ii); and RB's Tito film, (i); and Saltzman's bid for X, Y and Zee, (i); on biographer of RB, (i); RB stays at Long Island home, (i); RB writes to, (i); RB considers firing, (i); RB talks with in Céligny, (i); RB's exasperation with, (i)

Frosch, Bobby (Aaron's wife), (i), (ii)

Frost, (Sir) David, (i), (ii), (iii)

Fruman, Norman: Coleridge: The Damaged Archangel, (i)

Fry, Christopher: The Boy with a Cart, (i); The Lady's Not for Burning, (i)

Furse, Margaret, (i)

Furstenberg, Betsy von, (i)

Furstenberg, Princess Ira von, (i)

Galbraith, John Kenneth, (i)

Gallico, Paul, (i)

Gann, Ernest R.: The Antagonists, (i)

Garbo, Greta, (i)

Gardner, Ava, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Gardner, Erle Stanley, (i)

Gardner, Helen, (i)n110

Garland, Judy, (i)

Gary, Romain, (i); White Dog, (i)

Gassman, Vittorio, (i), (ii)

Gathering Storm, The/Walk with Destiny (drama-documentary), (i)

Gemini 4 (spacecraft), (i)

General Elections (British): (1966), (i), (ii); (1970), (i), (ii)

Geneva, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)

George, Trevor, (i), (ii), (iii)
 George VI, King: wartime speech, (i); stutter, (i)
 Germans: RB's view of, (i)
 Germany: in war, (i); bombing attacks on Britain, (i)
 Gerson, Leslie (later Latour), (i)n22, (ii)
 Getty, Aileen (later Wilding), (i), (ii)
 Getty, J. Paul, (i), (ii)
 Getty, Mark, (i)
 Gibbs, Philip Hamilton: Realities of War, (i)
 Gibran, Khalil: The Prophet, (i)
 Gibson, Wilfrid Wilson, (i)
 Gibson, William, (i)
 Gielgud, (Sir) John: directs Hamlet in Toronto, (i); love of dressing up, (i); proposes film of The Tempest, (i); asked to write on Olivier, (i); acting, (i), (ii); RB's view of, (i), (ii); gives dog to ET, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); on Marat-Sade, (i); influence on RB, (i); letter to RB, (i); voice, (i)
 Gillmore, Margalo, (i)
Gingerbread Lady (film), (i)
 Glavin, William (Bill), (i)
 Glenville, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Go-Between, The (film), (i), (ii)
 Goetz, Edie, (i), (ii)
 Goldberg, Harry, (i)
 Goldman, E. F.: The Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson, (i), (ii)
 Goldman, Milton, (i)
 Goldwyn, Sam, (i)
Goodbye Girl, The (film), (i)
 Gordon, Gale, (i)
 Gordon, John, (i)
 Gould, Elliott, (i), (ii)
 Grace, Princess of Monaco (Grace Kelly): RB describes, (i)n17; photographed with ET and Mara, (i); RB talks to at Ferrières, (i); Scorpio birth sign, (i); enjoys ET's company, (i); on Kalizma, (i); invites RB and ET to Red Cross ball, (i); status as film star, (i); cuts RB and ET during 'Scandale', (i); sends birthday telegram to RB, (i); at Rothschild party, (i), (ii); Duchess of Windsor disparages, (i); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i), (ii)
 Grade, Sir Lew (later Baron), (i), (ii)
 Graham, Brian, (i), (ii)
 Granger, Stewart, (i), (ii)

Grant, Cary, (i)
Graves, Robert, (i)
Gray, Colleen, (i)
Greece: Italy invades (1940), (i), (ii)
Green, Guy, (i)
Green, Johnny, (i)
Green, Kathy, (i)
Green, Nigel, (i)
Green Grow the Rushes (film), (i)
Greene, Graham, (i), (ii)
Greenford, Bernard, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Greenford, Claire, (i), (ii)
Greenford, Helen, (i), (ii)
Greenwood, Arthur, (i)
Grenier, Richard: Yes and Back Again (novel), (i)
Greyn, Clinton, (i), (ii), (iii)
Griffith, Miss E. E., (i)
Griffith, Hugh, (i)
Griffith, Kenneth, (i)
Griffiths, Morgan ('Mog'), (i), (ii)
Grimes, Stephen, (i)
Gronow, Milly, (i)
Gronow, Morwen, (i)
Gross, John (Simmy's fiancé), (i), (ii)
Grunwald, Anatole de, (i)
Gstaad, Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii)
Guadalajara, Mexico, (i)
Guardino, Harry, (i)
Guilaroff, Sydney, (i)
Guinness, (Sir) Alec, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Gunsberg family, (i)
Guys and Dolls (stage musical), (i)

Haber, Joyce, (i), (ii)
Haemophilia foundation, Oxford, (i)
Hagen, Victor Wolfgang von, (i)
Haggard, Stephen, (i)

Haggiag, Robert, (i), (ii)
 Hailey, Arthur: Airport, (i)
 Haiti, (i), (ii)
 Hakim, Robert, (i)
 Haldane, J. B. S., (i)
 Hall, Bob, (i)
 Hamilton, George, (i)
Hammersmith is Out (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Hammett, Dashiell, (i)
 Hankey, Maurice, (i)
 Hanley, Richard ('Dick'): calls from Greece, (i); sends money from Antibes, (i); helps with packing, (i); shows car to RB, (i); RB has birthday lunch with, (i); at meeting with Sharaff, (i); in Rome, (i); ET gives dragon pin to, (i); dines with RB, (i); gives short history of Africa to RB, (i); sails to Monte Carlo in Kalizma, (i); on Sardinia, (i); semi-invalid state, (i); on Jackie Kennedy-Onassis, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); orders plane to take RB to Geneva, (i); and Jane Swanson, (i); ET's affection for, (i); death, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); and John Lee's imagined dying, (i); on press reports on ET's health, (i); attends Henry Wilding's funeral, (i); bores RB, (i); on bread bill in Rome, (i)
 Hapgood, George M. ('Happy'), (i)
 Hardy, Liz, (i)
 Hardy, Robert ('Tim'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Hare, Glynis, (i)
 Harlech, David Ormsby-Gore, 5th Baron, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Harlech Television (company), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Elizabeth (later Harrison; née Rees-Williams), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Julie, (i)
 Harris, Michael, (i)
 Harris, Richard, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Rosemary, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harrison, Madeleine (later Rowe-Beddoe), (i)
 Harrison, Rachel (Rex's wife) see Roberts, Rachel
 Harrison, Rex: plays Julius Caesar in Cleopatra, (i), (ii); relations with RB, (i); wins Oscar, (i); attends press conference, (i); marriage to Rachel Roberts, (i); in Portofino, (i), (ii); in Paris, (i); wears toupée and make-up, (i), (ii); and filming of Staircase, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi); in A Flea in Your Ear, (i), (ii); ill behaviour and jealousy of ET's celebrity, (i); dress, (i); and RB's drinking, (i); manner, (i); power as actor, (i); competitiveness, (i), (ii); marriage to Eilizabeth Rees-Williams, (i); visits RB on Kalizma, (i); sings in My Fair Lady, (i); ageing, (i); earnings, (i); terminates contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, (i); temper, (i); in My Fair Lady, (i), (ii); RB praises, (i)

Hart, Moss, (i), (ii)
 Harte, Sheldon, (i)
 Hartley, Neil, (i)
 Harvey, Laurence, (i)
 Haszard, James, (i)
 Hatfield, Ruth, (i)
 Hathaway, Henry, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
 Hauser, Frank R., (i)
 Hawaii, (i), (ii)
 Hawn, Goldie, (i)
 Hay, Sally see Burton, Sally
 Hayes, Helen, (i), (ii)
 Heath, (Sir) Edward, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Heatherton, Davenie Johanna ('Joey'), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Heathfield School, Ascot, (i)
 Heffer, Richard, (i)
Hell is for Heroes (film), (i)
 Hellman, Lillian: Montserrat, (i)
 Hemingway, Ernest, (i), (ii)
 Henry, Ed, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Hepburn, Audrey, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Herbert, Sir Alan Patrick, (i)
 Herbert, George, (i)
 Herzog, Maurice, (i)
 Hesse, Hermann: Steppenwolf, (i)
 Hever Castle, Kent, (i)
 Heycock, Llew, Baron, (i), (ii)
 Heyman, David, (i)
 Heyman, John: meets RB in London, (i); arranges ET's introduction to Elie de Rothschild, (i); in Italy, (i); and Losey's fear of RB and ET, (i); Noël Coward on, (i); in Rome, (i), (ii); and Man from Nowhere, (i); on Tynan, (i); calls on RB on Elba, (i); re-established as RB's agent, (i), (ii); sends confusing messages to RB, (i); travels, (i); ambitions, (i); owes money to RB, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i); and Terence Baker, (i); and Romy Schneider, (i); on Losey's drinking, (i); introduces Michael Linnit, (i); pursues Suzy Kendall, (i)
 Heyman, Norma (John's wife; 'Fred'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)
 Hibberd, Mrs, (i)
 Hildyard, Dave, (i)
 Hildyard, Jack, (i)

Hilton, Conrad (father), (i)
Hilton, Conrad ('Nicky'), (i), (ii); death, (i), (ii)
Hilton, Patricia, (i)
Hinxman, Margaret, (i)
Hiss, Alger, (i)
Hitler, Adolf, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
Hobson, Sir Harold, (i)
Hochhuth, Rolf: The Soldiers, (i), (ii)
Hockin, Charles, (i), (ii)
Hoffman, Dustin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Hogg, Quintin (Baron Hailsham), (i)
Holder, Roy, (i)
Hollywood: RB in, (i), (ii); Oscars (1970), (i)
Holmes, Larry, (i)
Holroyd, Sir Michael: Lytton Strachey, (i), (ii)
Hope, Bob, (i)
Hope-Wallace, Philip, (i)
Hopkins, Gerard Manley, (i), (ii)
Hopkins, Mr & Mrs, (i)
Horan, Tom, (i)
Hordern, Michael, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Hornblower, Arthur and Leonora, (i)
Hornby, Ann Sheran (née Cazalet): sends Wodehouse book to RB, (i); unmarried state, (i); marriage to Simon, (i); with RB on Kalizma at Cap Ferrat, (i); on George Hamilton, (i); RB abuses, (i); dislikes cats, (i); RB disparages, (i), (ii); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i); RB asks to find house near Oxford, (i)
Hornby, Simon, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Horne, Lena, (i)
Housman, A. E.: A Shropshire Lad, (i)
Houston, Donald, (i)
Howard, John, (i)
Howard, Trevor, (i)
Howerd, Frankie, (i)
Howes, Sally Anne, (i)
Hudson, Rock, (i), (ii)
Hughes, Howard, (i)
Hughes, V., (i)
Hulbert, Jack, (i)

Humphrey, Hubert, (i)

Hungary: Soviet intervention (1956), (i); RB wishes to make film in, (i), (ii); RB's interest in, (i); RB films in, (i), (ii), (iii)

Hunt, James, (i)

Hunter, N. C., (i)

Hunter, Tab, (i)

Hurt, John, (i)

Huston, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Hutton, Brian, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Huxley, Aldous, (i); The Devils of Loudon, (i)

Hyde-White, Wilfrid, (i)

Ice Palace (film), (i), (ii)

Ici Paris (magazine), (i)

Inge, William Ralph, Dean of St Paul's, (i)

Innes, Michael (J. I. M. Stewart), (i), (ii)

IRA (Irish Republican Army), (i)

Iraq-Iran war (1980-8), (i)

Ischia, (i)

Israel: and Six Day War, (i), (ii); RB invited to, (i)

Italy: enters war, (i); war with Greece, (i), (ii); changes to summertime (1966), (i); floods (November 1966), (i); unwarlike nature, (i); political disorder, (i)

Jacklin, Tony, (i)

Jackpot (unfinished film), (i)

Jacks, Robert, (i)

Jackson, Bill, (i)

Jackson, Mrs (neighbour), (i), (ii)

James, Alan ('Dad'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Ben (Elfed's brother), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

James, Carwyn, (i)

James, Cecilia (née Jenkins; RB's sister; 'Cis'): birth, (i); RB moves in with as child, (i); religious observance, (i); RB shops for, (i), (ii); rows with Elfed, (i); rebukes RB, (i); and brother David's visit, (i); at Pyle Eisteddfod, (i); birthday, (i); at Cwm, (i), (ii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); RB helps with housework, (i); told of RB's eating chocolate, (i); goes to Dad James's, (i); moods, (i); quarrel with RB, (i); Verdun gives money to, (i); visits RB, (i), (ii); RB's relations with, (i); RB sends money to, (i); prospective death, (i); writes to RB in Mexico, (i)

James, Elfed (Cecilia's husband): marriage, (i); RB lives with as child, (i); chapel-going, (i); on Co-op management committee, (i); writes in RB's diary, (i), (ii); plays Monopoly, (i); row with Cis, (i); misses annual holiday, (i); protests at working conditions, (i); takes shelter in air raid, (i); RB collects pay for, (i), (ii); gathers blackberries with RB, (i); RB's breach with, (i); moods, (i); visits RB, (i), (ii); RB sends money to, (i)

James, Joe, (i)

James, Lorenzo, (i)n143

James, 'Mam' (Elfed's mother), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

James, Marian (Cis-Elfed's daughter), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Rhianon (Cis-Elfed's daughter), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Winifred ('Auntie'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Japrisot, Sébastien, (i)

Jarrott, Charles, (i), (ii)

Jeakins, Dorothy, (i)

Jeffrey, Peter, (i)n124

Jenkins, Arthur ('Boyo'; 'Bonehead'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Jenkins, Betty (Will's wife), (i)

Jenkins, Cassie (Tom's wife), (i), (ii)n1, (iii)

Jenkins, Catherine (RB's sister; 'Cassie'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Jenkins, Clive, (i)

Jenkins, David (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); RB takes money from, (i); letter to Sis, (i); home on holiday, (i), (ii); plays tennis with RB, (i); visits RB, (i); RB takes kit to Llantwit Major, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); turns Tory, (i)

Jenkins, Edith (RB's sister): birth, (i); RB sees, (i), (ii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); letter to RB, (i); expelled by brother Tom for smoking, (i); death and funeral, (i), (ii)

Jenkins, Edith Maud (née Thomas; RB's mother): background, (i); death, (i)

Jenkins, Emma (Wendy and Derek's daughter), (i)

Jenkins, Graham (RB's brother): birth, (i); shares bed with RB, (i); visits RB as child, (i), (ii), (iii); acquires new trousers, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); at Francis Taylor's funeral, (i); in Paris, (i); visits RB with friend, (i); talks to press, (i), (ii), (iii); drinking, (i); RB talks to on rugby film, (i); RB discusses brother Verdun's health with, (i)

Jenkins, Gwyneth (Gwen; Ivor's wife): visits RB as child, (i); RB eats with, (i); RB visits on Long Island, (i); accompanies Kate on travels, (i), (ii); in London, (i); on RB's boat, (i); at Besancon's funeral, (i); at granddaughter's christening, (i); arthritis, (i); RB requests Welsh books from, (i); at Aston Clinton, (i); visits Gstaad, (i), (ii); and Ivor's decline, (i); at Squire's Mount, Hampstead, (i), (ii); RB writes to, (i); RB visits, (i)

Jenkins, Hilary (Graham's wife), (i)

Jenkins, Hyral (Tom's second wife), (i), (ii), (iii)

Jenkins, Ivor (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); goes to Swansea, (i); RB visits, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); birthday, (i); at Cwm, (i); army service, (i); meets RB in Switzerland, (i), (ii); Cis and Elfed ignore, (i); on Sybil's second marriage, (i); in USA, (i); RB's relations with, (i), (ii); accompanies Kate to Italy, (i); takes Kate to New York, (i); teaching in London, (i); in Sardinia, (i); at Besancon's funeral, (i); paralysed in accident, (i), (ii), (iii); moves toenails, (i); prospective death, (i); condition improves, (i), (ii), (iii); and MacLeish poetry reading, (i); Kate Burton visits, (i); visits RB, (i); RB enquires about equipment for, (i), (ii); heart trouble, (i); decline, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); visits Gstaad, (i); on weakness in others, (i); leaves hospital, (i); wins book prizes, (i); RB writes to, (i); attacks waiter, (i); death and funeral, (i)n111, (ii)

Jenkins, Josie, (i)

Jenkins, Richard Walter see Burton, Richard

Jenkins, Richard Walter (RB's father): work as collier, (i), (ii); death, (i), (ii), (iii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); RB requests to take back, (i); buys shoes for RB, (i); RB's likeness to, (i)

Jenkins, Thomas Henry (RB's brother): birth, (i); marriage, (i); works as miner, (i); widowed, (i)n1; RB visits, (i), (ii), (iii); gives trousers to RB, (i); RB fails to return planks, (i); visits RB, (i); robbed, (i); gives money to RB, (i); expels Edie, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); second wife (Hyrall), (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); illness, (i); death, (i)

Jenkins, Verdun (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); gives money to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); comes into money, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); heart trouble, (i)

Jenkins, Wendy and Derek (daughter-in-law and son of Gwyneth), (i)

Jenkins, William (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); in army, (i); visits home, (i); returns to army, (i); sends money to RB, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); ageing and ill-health, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); acquires hearing aid, (i)

Joad, C. E. M., (i)

Johannesburg, (i), (ii)

Johannot, Colonel Louis, (i)

John, Augustus, (i)

Johnson, Lady Bird, (i)

Johnson, Lyndon B., (i), (ii)

Johnson, Samuel, (i), (ii)

Jonas, Franz, (i)

Jones, Cliff, (i)

Jones, David (Cwmafan neighbour), (i)

Jones, David (writer/artist), (i), (ii)

Jones, Ivor, (i)

Jones, James Earl, (i), (ii)

Jones, Jimmy, (i)

Jones, Mary Anne, (i)
 Jones, Meredith: RB writes on, (i)
 Jones, Owen, (i), (ii)
 Jones, Simeon, (i)
 Jones, Stanley, (i)
 Joyce, James, (i), (ii); Ulysses, (i), (ii)
 Joyce, William ('Lord Haw-Haw'), (i)
 Juárez García, Benito Pablo, (i)
 Judge, Diane, (i)
 Jurgens, Curt, (i), (ii), (iii)
Justine (film), (i)

Kafka, Franz, (i), (ii), (iii)
Kalizma (yacht earlier Odysseia): RB rents, (i), (ii); passes inspection, (i); life on, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii); stabilizers proposed, (i); flooded, (i); condition, (i)
 Kanter, Jay, (i)
 Karen (nurse), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Karl, Harry, (i)
 Karloff, Boris, (i)
 Kashfi, Anna, (i)
 Kastner, Elliott, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Katselas, Milton, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kazan, Elia ('Gadge'), (i), (ii)
 Kehl (German banker), (i)
 Keith, Brian, (i)
 Keller, Werner: The Bible as History, (i)
 Kelly, Margaret Katherine ('Peggy'), (i)
 Kendall, Kay, (i)
 Kendall, Suzy, (i), (ii)
 Kennamer, Dr Rexford, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Kennedy, Cheryl, (i)
 Kennedy, Edward, (i), (ii)
 Kennedy, Ethel, (i), (ii)
 Kennedy, John F., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Kennedy, Ludovic: Trial of Stephen Ward, (i)
 Kennedy, Robert: RB's friendship with, (i); RB meets in Italy, (i); at US premiere of Doctor Faustus, (i);

RB narrates for documentary on, (i); RB writes article on, (i); RB speaks at fund-raising dinner for, (i);
 seduces Fonteyn, (i); political compromises, (i); swaps mutual insults with RB, (i)
 Kent, Edward, Duke and Katherine, Duchess of, (i)
 Kent State University, Ohio: students killed, (i)
 Kerr, Deborah, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Keyword (or Hayward), Jack, (i)
 Khrushchev, Nikita S., (i)
King of Kings (film), (i), (ii)
 Kingsmill, Hugh, (i)
 Kinross, Patrick Balfour, 3rd Baron: Between Two Seas, (i)
 Kisling, Moise, (i)
 Kissinger, David, (i)
 Kissinger, Henry, (i), (ii)
 Kissinger, Nancy, (i)
Klansman, The (film), (i)
 Kline, Kevin, (i)
 Knight, Esmond, (i), (ii)
 Knoessen, Fritz (Fred), (i), (ii)
 Koessler, Edouard, (i)
 Koessler, Pierre, (i)
 Koestler, Arthur, (i)
 Korda, (Sir) Alexander, (i), (ii)
 Korda, Alexandra (later Metcalfe), (i)
 Kossoff, David, (i)
 Kosygin, Alexei, (i)
Kotch (film), (i)
 Kotor, Bay of, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Krahmer, Bettina: RB praises, (i), (ii); stays with RB, (i); takes trip round world, (i); RB protects in crowd,
 (i); as guest in boat, (i); lunches with RB, (i), (ii); disturbs ET and Guy de Rothschild in toilet, (i); at ET's
 40th birthday, (i)
 Krahmer, Lili (née de Rothschild), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Kroll, Lucy, (i)
 Krüger, Hardy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kruger National Park, South Africa, (i)
 Kupari, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Kupcinet, Irv ('Kup'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kurnitz, Harry, (i)

Labour Party (British): election victory (1966), (i), (ii)
 Ladas, Diana, (i), (ii), (iii)
Ladies' Home Journal, (i)
 Lambert, Constant, (i), (ii)
 Lambourne, Eric, (i)
 Lancaster, Burt, (i), (ii)
 Landis, Carole, (i)
Landlord, The (film), (i)
 Lane, Patrick A., (i)
 Lane, Tom, (i)
 Lansbury, Angela, (i)
 Lantz, Robbie, (i), (ii)
 La Rue, Frank, (i), (ii)
Last Days of Dolwyn, The (film), (i)
 Lastricati, Carlo, (i)
 Las Vegas, (i)
 Latour, François, (i)n22, (ii)
Laughter in the Dark (film), (i)
 Laurentiis, Dino de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Laval, Pierre, (i)
 Lawford, Peter, (i)
 Lawick, Hugo Van: Solo, (i)
 Lawrence, D. H., (i)
 Leblanc (journalist), (i)
 Le Carré, John: The Looking-Glass War, (i)
 Lee, Bernard, (i)
 Lee, John: shows new car to RB, (i); in Rome, (i); dines with RB, (i); drinking, (i); in Nice, (i); in Sardinia, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); observes sex act, (i); and Jane Swanson, (i); calls out doctor, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); attends Henry Wilding's funeral, (i)

Lee, Laurie: As I Walked Out One Midsummer Morning, (i)
 Lehman, Ernest, (i)
 Leigh, Vivien: death, (i); appearance, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); proposed for Montserrat, (i)
 Leighton, Margaret (Mrs Michael Wilding), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lerner, Alan Jay, (i), (ii)
 Lesley, Cole ('Coley'), (i)
 Lesseps, Ferdinand de, (i)
 Le Tourneur, Yves, (i)
 Levin, Ira: Rosemary's Baby, (i)
 Levine, Joseph, (i)
 Lewes, George Henry, (i)
 Lewin, David, (i), (ii)
 Lewis, A. E., (i)
 Lewis, Alun, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lewis, Stephen, (i)
 Lindroth, Arne, (i)
 Linnit, Michael, (i)
Lion in Winter, The (film), (i)
 Lisi, Virna, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Liston, Sonny, (i)
Little Foxes, The (stage production), (i)
 Lloyd, Leo, (i)
 Lloyd George, David, 1st Earl, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lodwig, David H., (i), (ii)
 Loewe, Fritz, (i)
 Logan, Joshua, (i), (ii)
 London: wartime Blitz on, (i)
 Longford, Elizabeth, Countess of, (i); Wellington: The Years of the Sword, (i)
 Longhurst, Henry, (i)
Look (magazine), (i), (ii), (iii)
Look Back in Anger (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Loos, Anita: A Girl Like I, (i)
 Loren, Sophia, (i), (ii)
 Los Angeles: RB in, (i), (ii); Camelot plays in, (i)
 Losey, Joseph: directs The Assassination of Trotsky, (i)n39, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); leaves drunken Rachel Roberts, (i); RB lunches with, (i); RB criticises, (i); falls ill, (i); and Man from Nowhere,
 (i); RB's fondness for, (i); at showing of Boom! with RB, (i); asks RB to play Trotsky, (i); and Romy

Schneider, (i); and Ron Berkeley, (i); drinking, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); entertains RB and ET, (i); dines with RB and ET, (i), (ii)

Losey, Patricia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Louis XIV, King of France, (i)

Louise, Tina, (i)

Loukes, Nicholas, (i)

Lowell, Jodi, (i)

Lowell, Robert, (i)

Lowry, Malcolm: Under the Volcano, (i), (ii)

Lublin, Ronald A., (i), (ii)

Lucas, Alex, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Lucas (of Christian Science Monitor), (i)

Lugosi, Bela, (i)

Lyalin, Oleg, (i)n195

Lynch, Alfred, (i)

Lyon, Sue, (i)

Maas, Peter: The Valachi Papers, (i)

Macaulay, Thomas Babington, 1st Baron, (i)

McCall's (magazine), (i)

McCann, Hugh Wray: Utmost Fish, (i)

McCarthy, Eugene, (i)

McCarthy, Kevin, (i), (ii)

McClure, Eres, (i), (ii)

McClure, John, (i), (ii)

McDivitt, James Alton, (i)n83

MacDonald, James Ramsay, (i)

Macdonald, John D., (i), (ii), (iii); One Monday We Killed Them All, (i), (ii); Travis Magee (series), (i)

Macdonald, Richard, (i)

MacDonald, Ross, (i), (ii)

McDowell, Roddy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

McGuire, Dorothy, (i)

Machen, Arthur: The London Adventure, (i)

Machiavelli, Niccolò, (i), (ii)

McIntosh, David, (i)n144

McKechnie, James, (i)

McKee, Alexander: Caen, (i)

MacKenna's Gold (film), (i)
 McKuen, Rod, (i)
 MacLaine, Shirley, (i); You Can Get There From Here, (i)
 Maclean, Fitzroy, (i)
 MacLeish, Archibald, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 MacNeice, Louis, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 McWhorter, Richard F.: in Rome for The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); at Hanley's birthday celebration, (i); manner, (i); writes to Zeffirelli, (i); talks to Wallis about Anne of Thousand Days, (i); RB feeds at barbecue, (i); and RB's visit to Ivor, (i); RB sees in Los Angeles, (i); in Hungary, (i)
 Mafia, (i)
 Magnani, Anna, (i)
 Maguy, Alex, (i)
 Mahoney, Gerry A., (i)
 Mai-Mai, (i)
 Mainwaring, Thomas H., (i), (ii)
 Maitland, Marne, (i)
 Malamud, Bernard: The Fixer, (i), (ii)
 Malan, Adolph ('Sailor'), (i)
 Malary, Guy, (i)
 Malibu, (i)
 Malle, Madame (Anne-Marie Deschodt), (i), (ii)
 Mallon, Thomas, (i)
Man for All Seasons, A (film), (i)
Man from Nowhere, The (proposed film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Man Who Would Be King, The (film), (i)
 Manchester, William, (i); The Arms of Krupp, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Mancini, Henry, (i)
 Mankiewicz, Joseph L., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Mankowitz, Wolf, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Mann, Roderick (Roddy), (i), (ii); The Headliner, (i)
 Mansfield, Jayne, (i)
 Mao Tse-tung, (i)
 Marais, Eugene N.: My Friends the Baboons, (i)
 Marceau, Marcel, (i)
 Marcellin, Raymond, (i)n142
Marco Polo (film), (i)
 Margaret, Princess, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)

Maria (stewardess), (i)

Marlowe, Christopher: Dr Faustus: RB in OUDS production, (i); Coghill adapts for screen, (i)n65; filming, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); Levine promises to back, (i); RB and ET support financially, (i); RB sees completed film, (i); film shown, (i), (ii); opening in Oxford, (i); American premiere, (i); failure, (i)

Marlowe, Robin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Marlowe, Stephen: The Shining, (i)

Marquand, Christian, (i)

Marquet, Albert, (i)

Marshall, Ray, (i)

Martin, Dean, (i)

Martinelli, Elsa, (i)

Masalila, Ambrose, (i)

M.A.S.H. (film), (i)

Mason, James, (i)

Massacre in Rome (film), (i)

Masters, David, (i)

Mastroianni, Marcello, (i)

Mastroianni, Marian (RB's cousin), (i)

Matthews, Gethin, (i)n232

Maugham, William Somerset, (i)

Mavroleon, Alessandra Maria (Ally), (i)

Maxwell, Gavin, (i); Ring of Bright Water, (i)

Mayer, Louis B., (i)

Mayer, Oscar, (i)

Mayne, Ferdy, (i)

Mayne, W. H. (ironmonger), (i)

Medusa Touch, The (film), (i)

Meeting Mrs Jenkins (RB), (i), (ii)

Mérimée, Prosper: Carmen, (i)

Merrick, Mike, (i), (ii)

Merrill, Robert, (i)

Merriman, Richard, (i)

Messina, (i)

Metcalf, David, (i)n53

Mexicali, California, (i), (ii)

Mexico: politics, (i), (ii); see also Puerto Vallarta

Meyer, R. J. O., (i)

Miami, (i)
Michelangelo (ship), (i)
Michener, James A.: The Drifters, (i)
Mihailovic, Draza, (i)
Miles, Christopher, (i)
Miles, Eddie, (i), (ii)
Miles, Sylvia, (i)
Miller, Beatrix, (i), (ii)
Millfield School, Somerset, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Minnelli, Liza, (i), (ii)
Mismaloya, (i), (ii)
Mitchell, Stephen, (i)
ML Club, London, (i), (ii)
Monaco, (i)
Monsarrat, Nicholas: Smith and Jones, (i)
Monte Carlo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Montenegro, (i)
Montesquieu, Madame de, (i)
Montreux, (i)
Moore, Dudley, (i)
Moore, Mary Tyler, (i)
Moore, Robin: The French Connection, (i)
Moore, Roger, (i)
Moorehead, Alan: Eclipse, (i)
More, George, (i)
Moreau, Jeanne, (i), (ii)
Morgan, Cliff, (i), (ii), (iii)
Morgan, Sir Henry, (i)
Morgan, John, (i), (ii)
Morgan, Mary, (i)
Morgan, Norman, (i)
Morgan, W. John, (i)
Morgenstern, Joe, (i)
Morley, John David, (i), (ii)
Morris, Alb, (i)
Morris, Donald R.: The Washing of the Spears, (i)
Morris, Oswald ('Ossie'), (i), (ii)

Morse, Nan, (i)
 Mortimer, Bert, (i)
 Mortimer, Henry, (i)
 Mortimer, Linda, (i)
 Morton, Gary, (i)
 Mosley, Sir Oswald, (i); My Life, (i), (ii)
 Mostar, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Mostel, Zero, (i)
 Mount, Peggy, (i)
 Mountain Ash, (i)
 Moyes, Patricia ('Penny'), (i)
 Muenz, Richard, (i), (ii)
 Muggeridge, Malcolm, (i); Tread Softly for You Tread on My Jokes, (i)
 Mugglestone, Ken, (i)
 Munster, Peggy, (i)
 Munster, Sarah, (i)
 Murdoch, (Dame) Iris, (i), (ii)
 Murphy, Audie, (i)
 Murray, Jim, (i)
 Mussolini, Benito, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
My Cousin Rachel (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
My Fair Lady (stage musical), (i), (ii), (iii)
 'My Life at 50' (RB; article), (i)n63

Nabokov, Vladimir, (i); Laughter in the Dark, (i), (ii)
 Narvik, Norway, (i)
 Nasser, Gamal Abdel, (i)
 National Eisteddfod, (i)
 National Theatre, London: RB proposed as Director, (i), (ii)
National Velvet (film), (i)
 Neagle, Dame Anna, (i)
 Nella (ET's maid), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Nelson, Eric, (i), (ii)
 Neruda, Pablo, (i)
 Nesbit, Cathleen, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Neshamkin, Paul, (i)
 Neville, John, (i), (ii)

New Orleans, (i)
New York: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
New York Drama Critics' Circle award (Tony), (i)
New York Times, (i)
Newbolt, Sir Henry, (i)
Newcomb, Pat, (i), (ii)
Newman, Gordon F.: Sir, you bastard, (i), (ii)
Newman, Paul, (i), (ii)
Newsweek (magazine), (i)
Newton, Robert, (i)
Niarchos, Stavros Spyros, (i)
Nicholas, Jack ('Tadpole'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Nicholas and Alexander (film), (i)
Nichols, Mike, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Nickerbocker, Suzy (Aileen Mehle), (i)
Nicolson, Sir Harold: The Age of Reason, (i)
Night of the Iguana, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Night Watch (film), (i)
1984 (film), (i)
Nino (guard), (i)
NiŠ, Serbia, (i), (ii)
Niven, David, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); The Moon's a Balloon, (i)
Niven, David, Jr, (i)
Niven, Hjordis, (i), (ii)
Nixon, Richard M., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Nobel, Alfred, (i)
Nobel Prize for Literature: awarded to Neruda, (i)
Nobile, Umberto, (i)
Norman, Barry, (i), (ii), (iii)
Norton, Cliff, (i)
Norway: in Second World War, (i)
Nova, Ludmilla, (i)
Novarro, Ramón, (i)
Now Barabbas (film), (i)
Nureyev, Rudolph, (i), (ii)

Oates, Hannah, (i)

Oates, Rhys, (i)
 Ober, Phil, (i), (ii)
 Oberon, Merle, (i)
 O'Brien, Edna, (i)
Observer (newspaper), (i)
 O'Connor, Caroline: as ET's nurse, (i), (ii); in Paris, (i); RB and ET discuss sex with, (i); gratitude to RB and ET, (i); life with Burton family, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); shares birthday gift for RB with Jane Swanson, (i); on Aaron Frosch's multiple sclerosis, (i); taken to Ferrières, (i); travels to Gstaad, (i); travels to Paris, (i); on Warren Beatty, (i)
 O'Connor, T. P., (i)
Odd Man Out (film), (i)
 O'Dwyer, Paul, (i)
Odysseia see Kalizma
Oedipus the King (film), (i)
 Ogmore by Sea, Glamorgan, (i)
 O'Hara, John, (i)
 Old Vic theatre, London, (i)
 Olivier, Laurence, Baron: love of dressing up, (i); schooling, (i); RB asked to write on, (i); acting, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); made life peer, (i); RB proposed as successor as Director of National Theatre, (i), (ii); presence, (i); qualities, (i); recommends RB to Korda, (i); offers TV film to ET, (i); voice, (i)
 Onassis, Aristotle, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Onassis, Jacqueline (earlier Kennedy), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 O'Neill, Patrick, (i)
 O'Neill, Terry, (i)
Only Game in Town, The (film), (i)n7, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Orchard, John, (i), (ii)
Orient Express (film), (i)
 Orkin, Harvey, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); death, (i)
 Ormond, John, (i)
 Ormsby-Gore, Alice, (i)
 Orwell, George, (i); A Clergyman's Daughter, (i); 1984, (i), (ii)
 Osborne, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); Look Back in Anger (film adaptation), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); A Subject of Scandal and Concern, (i), (ii), (iii); Separation, (i), (ii)
 Oscars (Motion Picture Academy Awards), (i)
Osservatore della Domenica, (i)
 O'Steen, Sam, (i)
 Ostia, Italy, (i)

O'Toole, Peter: in Becket film, (i); travels with RB, (i); at races in Paris, (i); nominated for Oscar, (i); and Romy Schneider, (i); abilities, (i); criticised for Macbeth, (i); voice, (i)

Owen (or Owens), Clifford W., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Owen, Dai (Hilda's husband), (i), (ii)

Owen, Gareth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Owen, Gerwyn (Dai-Hilda's son), (i), (ii)

Owen, H. (rugby selector), (i)

Owen, Hilda (née Jenkins; RB's sister): birth, (i); marriage, (i)ⁿ⁵⁴; visits Neath, (i); RB walks with, (i); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); in Swansea, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i)

Owen, Moira, (i)

Owen, Robert M. ('Bobby'), (i), (ii)

Owen, Sian (Hilda's daughter), (i)

Owen, Wilfred, (i)

Owens, Arthur ('Johnny'), (i)

Owens, Mr (woodwork teacher), (i)

Oxenberg, Howard, (i)ⁿ¹⁹²

Oxford: Taylor-Burton Building, (i)

Oxford English Dictionary: compact edition, (i), (ii), (iii)

Oxford University: RB takes wartime short course, (i); RB plays in Dramatic Society, (i); RB visits with ET, (i); RB offered tutoring post, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); St Peter's College, (i), (ii)

Pacino, Al, (i)

Palm Springs, California, (i), (ii)

Palmer, Lilli, (i)

Palmer, Raymond E., (i)

Palmer, Royston ('Plum'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Pan, Hermes, (i)

Pantage family, (i)

Paris: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)

Paris, Jerry, (i)

Parker, Joy see Scofield, Joy

Parkhouse, Glen, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Parkinson, Michael: Best: An Intimate Biography, (i), (ii)

Parkinson, Norman, (i), (ii)

Parr, Don, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Parrish, John, (i)

Parry, Bill, (i)

Patrice (Chris's girlfriend), (i)
Payn, Graham, (i)
Paz, Octavio: The Labyrinth of Solitude, (i)
Peacock, Thomas Love: Nightmare Abbey, (i)
Peck, Gregory, (i), (ii)
Pedro (steward), (i)
Pellissier, Tony, (i)
Pennington, William, (i)ⁿ⁶
Penshurst Castle, Kent, (i)
People (newspaper), (i)
Peppard, George, (i)
Pepper, Curtis Bill, (i)
Pepys, Samuel, (i)
Percy, Esmé, (i), (ii)
Perelman, Sidney Joseph, (i)
Perkins, Anthony, (i)
Perry, John, (i)
Petacci, Clara, (i), (ii)
Peter I (the Great), Tsar of Russia, (i)
Petrides, Paul C., (i)
Phil Donahue Show, The (US TV programme), (i)
Philips, Dai John, (i)
Phillips, Brinley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Phillips, Sian (Mrs Peter O'Toole), (i)
Phipps, B., (i)
Phipps, Nettie, (i)
Phoenix, Arizona, (i), (ii)
Picasso, Pablo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Pickles, Sheila, (i), (ii), (iii)
Piggott, Lester, (i)
Pignatelli, Princess Luciana, (i)
Pike, Mrs (Raymond's mother), (i)
Pike, Raymond, (i)ⁿ³, (ii), (iii)
Pinter, Harold, (i)
Pisar, Sam, (i)
Players Club, New York, (i)
Plowright, Joan, (i)

Podesta, Rosana, (i)
Poitier, Sidney, (i)
Polaire, Hal, (i)
Polanski, Roman, (i)
Pomona, Los Angeles, (i)
Pompidou, Claude, (i)
Pompidou, Georges, (i), (ii), (iii)
Ponti, Carlo, (i), (ii)
Pontrhydyfen, Glamorgan, (i), (ii)
Popovi Ć Nikola, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Port au Prince, Haiti, (i)
Port Talbot, Glamorgan, (i); suffers air raids, (i), (ii); YMCA, (i)
Port Talbot Secondary School, (i)
Porto Santo Stefano, Italy, (i)
Portoferraio, (i)
Portofino, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Positano, (i), (ii)
Poston, Ron, (i)
Pound, Ezra, (i)
Powell, Afan W. and Gwylfa P. (twins), (i), (ii), (iii)
Powell, Anthony, (i), (ii), (iii)
Powell, Dilys, (i)
Powell, Enoch, (i)
Powell, Jenkin, (i)n36
Powell, Sandy (Albert Powell), (i)
Preece, Susie, (i)
Preiss, Wolfgang, (i)
Price, Vincent, (i), (ii)
Prince of Players (film), (i), (ii)
Pritchett, Sir Victor S., (i)
Profile of a Superstar (TV film), (i)
Proust, Marcel, (i); A la recherche du temps perdu, (i)
Pryce, Tom, (i)
Pryce-Jones, Alan, (i)
Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Puzo, Mario: The Godfather, (i)
Pyne, Natasha, (i)

Quayle, (Sir) Anthony: at Stratford, (i); in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii); manner, (i); childhood in Pontypridd, (i); finances, (i); on plain actresses, (i); on Michael Redgrave, (i); plays in Tarzan film, (i); qualities, (i); runs Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, (i); on art needing form, (i); plays in Sleuth, (i)

Queen Elizabeth II, RMS, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Quilley, Denis, (i)

Quinn, Anthony, (i)

Quinn, Mannock, (i)

Quogue, Long Island, (i)

Raft, George, (i)

Raid on Rommel (film): Hathaway directs, (i), (ii), (iii); filming in Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); costumes, (i), (ii); RB speaks German in, (i), (ii); reception, (i); RB makes without ET, (i); RB sees as joke film, (i)

Raimon, Louis Alexandre de see Alexandre de Paris

Rainier, Prince of Monaco, (i)n17, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)

Rains of Ranchipur, The (film), (i)

Rampling, Charlotte, (i), (ii)

Rattigan, Sir Terence, (i), (ii)

Rattner, Dr, (i)

Raven, Simon, (i)

Rawhide (US TV series), (i)

Ray, Nicholas, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Raymond see Vignale, Raymond

Reagan, Ronald, (i), (ii), (iii)

Rebel Without a Cause (film), (i)

Redé, Alexis Rosenberg, 2nd Baron de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Redfield, William, (i)

Redford, Robert, (i), (ii), (iii)

Redgrave, Sir Michael, (i), (ii), (iii)

Redgrave, Vanessa, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Reed, Carol, (i)

Reed, Douglas: The Siege of Southern Africa, (i)

Rees, Dai, (i)

Rees, Revd Gwilym, (i)

Rees, Revd John Caerau, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Rees, Olive, (i), (ii)

Rees-Williams, Elizabeth see Harris, Elizabeth

Reflections in a Golden Eye (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Reynolds, Christopher T. ('Pop'), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Reynolds, Debbie, (i)
 Rheims, Maurice, (i)
 Ribes, Edouard, comte de, (i)
 Ribes, Jacqueline de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Richards, Evan, (i), (ii)n116
 Richardson, Sir Ralph, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Richardson, Tony: and Osborne's Subject of Scandal and Concern, (i); infatuation with Jeanne Moreau, (i);
 breach with RB, (i), (ii); as director, (i); and payment for RB's TV appearance, (i); invites RB to play in Antony and Cleopatra, (i)
 Ridley, Jasper: Palmerston, (i)
 Rimbaud, Arthur, (i), (ii)
 Ringer, Ron, (i)
 Ritt, Martin, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ritz, Carl, (i)
 Robards, Jason, (i), (ii), (iii)
Robe, The (film), (i), (ii)
 Roberti, Francesca, (i)
 Roberts, Evan, (i)n116
 Roberts, Meade, (i)
 Roberts, Rachel (Rex Harrison's wife): drinking, (i); in Paris, (i); abusive and outrageous behaviour, (i), (ii),
 (iii); barks at ET on telephone, (i); RB works with, (i)
 Roblin, Thomas J., (i)
 Robson, Dame Flora, (i)
 Rocchi, Gualberto, (i)
 Rockefeller, Margaretta ('Happy'), (i)
 Rockefeller, Nelson, (i)
 Roddy, Jo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Rodriguez, Martin, (i)
 Rogers, Paul, (i)
 Romanoff, Mike, (i)
 Rome: RB and ET in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii); traffic, (i)
 Ron (RB's brother-in-law), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ronstadt, Linda, (i)
 Rose, George, (i)
 Rosenberg, Marvin, (i)

Rossi, Alberto di, (i)
 Rossi, Gianetto de ('Gianni Props'), (i)
 Rossier, Dr Alain, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Rossiter, Bernard, (i)
 Roth, Philip: Portnoy's Complaint, (i)
 Rothschild, David René de, (i), (ii)
 Rothschild, Edouard Etienne de, (i)
 Rothschild, Baron Elie de, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Rothschild, Baron Guy de: in Paris, (i); entertains RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); at races, (i); ostracizes Onassis, (i); on sexual practices, (i); wit, (i); gives grand ball at Ferrières, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Rothschild, Baroness Marie-Hélène: entertains RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); at races, (i); ostracizes Onassis, (i); fears drunks, (i); infatuation with Warren Beatty, (i); appearance, (i); birthday celebrations, (i); gives grand ball at Ferrières, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); supposed hypochondria, (i)
 Rothschild, Philippe Sereys de, (i)
 Rowe-Beddoe, David, (i), (ii)
 Rowe-Beddoe, Lisa, (i)
 Rowse, A. L., (i)
 Royal Air Force: RB serves in, (i)
 Rudin, Milton ('Mickey'), (i)
 Russell, Bertrand, (i), (ii)
 Russell, Rosalind, (i)
 Ryan, Cornelius: The Last Battle, (i)
 Rye, Daphne, (i)

Sackler, Howard: Great White Hope, (i)
 St Exupéry, Antoine: The Little Prince, (i), (ii), (iii)
 St Jacques, Raymond, (i), (ii)
 Salinger, Pierre, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Salinger, Mrs Pierre, (i)
 Sallis, Zoe, (i)
 Salt, Jennifer, (i)
 Salt, Waldo, (i)
 Sam, Chen, (i)
 San Felipe, Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii)
 San Francisco, (i)
 Sanderson, Mervyn, (i)
Sandpiper, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Santayana, George, (i)

Sanz, Gaston: as RB's driver and bodyguard, (i), (ii); officiousness, (i); hides Easter eggs for children, (i); and change of clocks for summertime in Italy, (i); life with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB praises for helpfulness, (i); in Monte Carlo, (i); girl friends, (i); in Sardinia, (i); Rachel Roberts abuses, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); younger brother killed, (i); relations with ET, (i); and Geneviève Bujold, (i); at Aston Clinton, (i); crashes RB's Cadillac, (i); helps RB with French, (i); praises Hungarians, (i)

Saragat, Giuseppe, (i)

Sarajevo, (i), (ii), (iii)

Sardinia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Sartre, Jean-Paul: Le Diable et le Bon Dieu, (i); Kean, (i)

Sassoon, Siegfried, (i)

Sava, St, (i)

Schell, Maximilian, (i)

Scherz, Ernst Andrew, (i)

Schlesinger, Arthur: 1000 Days with Jack Kennedy, (i)

Schneider, Romy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Schreiber, Lew, (i), (ii)

Schreyeck, Elaine, (i)

Schulberg, Budd, (i)

Scofield, Joy (Joy Parker), (i), (ii)

Scofield, Paul: plays in A Man for All Seasons, (i); wins acting awards, (i), (ii); and RB's writing on actors, (i); dedicated to theatre, (i); suggested for Raid on Rommel, (i); acting, (i), (ii); as heir to Gielgud, (i); sulks, (i); appearance, (i); and Tynan's notices, (i); Sussex home, (i); in Scorpio, (i); voice, (i)

Scott, George, (i), (ii)

Scott, Gordon, (i)

Seberg, Jean, (i)

Second World War: setbacks (1940), (i), (ii)

Secret Ceremony (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Sellers, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Seltzer, Nancy ('Alka'), (i), (ii)

Serge, Victor (Victor Lvovich Kibalchich): The Memoirs of a Revolutionary, (i)

Sergio (Mexican boy): confirmation, (i)

Shaffer, Anthony, (i), (ii)

Shaffer, (Sir) Peter: Equus, (i); Sleuth, (i), (ii), (iii)

Shaftel, Josef, (i)

Shah of Iran (Mohammed Shah Pahlavi), (i)

Shakespeare, William: RB praises, (i); Antony and Cleopatra, (i); As You Like It, (i), (ii); Coriolanus, (i);

Hamlet, (i), (ii); King Lear, (i); Measure for Measure, (i); Richard II, (i), (ii); The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv); The Tempest, (i); Timon of Athens, (i)

Sharaff, Irene, (i), (ii), (iii)

Shaw, George Bernard: praises Kotor, (i); despises Shakespeare, (i); The Apple Cart, (i), (ii), (iii); Captain Brassbound's Conversion, (i)

Shaw, Robert, (i), (ii)

Shepridge, John ('Goulash'), (i)

Shimkus, Joanna, (i), (ii)

Shoes of the Fisherman, The (film), (i)

Shriver, Robert Sargent, (i)

Sica, Vittorio de, (i), (ii)

Sicre, Ricardo, (i)

Signoret, Simone, (i)

Silencers, The (film), (i)

Silvera, Albert, (i)

Simenon, Georges, (i), (ii)

Simmons, Jean, (i), (ii), (iii)

Simon, Neil: The Gingerbread Lady, (i)

Simpson, Charles, (i), (ii)

Sinatra, Frank: withdraws from The Only Game in Town, (i); fails to acknowledge Francis Taylor's death, (i); John F. Kennedy stays with, (i); suspected of associating with gangsters, (i), (ii); self-centredness, (i); supports Reagan, (i); announces retirement, (i); writing, (i); and Bogart, (i); Edie Goetz and, (i); provokes press-envy, (i); RB pays TV tribute to, (i)

Sinclair, Sir Archibald (later Viscount Thurso), (i)

Siodmak, Robert, (i)

Sisler, Dr, (i), (ii); son recites Shakespeare speech, (i), (ii)

Sitwell, Dame Edith, (i)

Skidelsky, Robert: Oswald Mosley, (i)

Smatt, Ernie, (i)

Smite (teacher's nickname), (i)

Smith, Basil Fenton, (i)

Smith, Cecil, (i)

Smith, Hardy William ('Bill'), (i)

Smith, Liz, (i)

Smith, (Dame) Maggie, (i), (ii)

Smith, Mick, (i)

Smith, Red, (i)
Smith, Tommie, (i)
Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, (i)
Snow, Charles P., Baron, (i)
Snowdon, Antony Armstrong-Jones, 1st Earl of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Soglo, Christophe, President of Dahomey, (i)
Soldano, Sergio, (i)
Soldati, Mario, (i)
Solomon, Louis, (i)
Solowicz, Maurice, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Solowicz, Maurice B., Fert & Cie (Geneva), (i)
Solzhenitsyn, Alexander: One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich, (i)
Sordi, Alberto, (i)
South Africa, (i)
South Wales: coal industry, (i); air raids on, (i), (ii); RB revisits, (i)
Southern Breeze (yacht), (i)
Spain: RB's love for, (i), (ii)
Spark, Muriel: The Public Image, (i)
Speaight, Robert, (i)
Speer, Albert, (i)
Spender, (Sir) Stephen, (i), (ii), (iii)
Spengler, Oswald: The Decline of the West, (i), (ii)
Spiegel, Sam, (i), (ii), (iii)
Spinetti, Victor, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Spoljar, Branko, (i)
Springer, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Spy Who Came in from the Cold, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Squire, William, (i), (ii)
Squire's Mount Cottages, Hampstead, London, (i), (ii)
Stafford, Robin, (i)
Staircase (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi)
Stalin, Josef, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Stanislavski (Kopnstantin Sergeyevich Alekseyev), (i)
Stapleton, Maureen, (i), (ii)
Stark, Ray, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Starkie, Enid, (i)
Starr, Ringo and Maureen, (i), (ii), (iii)

Steiger, Rod, (i)
 Stennett, Stan, (i)
 Stepanjek, Branimir, (i)
 Stephens, James, (i)
 Stephens, Robert, (i)
 Sterne, Richard L., (i)
 Stevens, George, (i), (ii)
 Stevens, Jack, (i)
 Stevens, Stella, (i)
 Stevenson, Adlai, (i)
 Stevenson, Frances (Countess Lloyd-George), (i)
 Stevenson, Robert Louis, (i)
 Stewart, James, (i)
 Stewart, Mary: The Gabriel Hounds, (i)
 Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Buckinghamshire, (i)
 Strachey, Lytton, (i); Queen Victoria, (i)
 Strasberg, Paula: death, (i)
 Strasberg, Susan, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Stratford-upon-Avon, (i)
 Streisand, Barbra, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Stross, Raymond, (i)
 Sullivan, Ed, (i)
 Sullivan, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
Sunday Express, (i)
Sunday Times, (i)
 Super-Chief (railway train), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Sutjeska, battle of (1943), (i)n1, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Swansea: bombed, (i), (ii)
 Swanson, Jane: in Rome, (i); in Sardinia, (i); in Gstaad, (i); and RB's new typewriter, (i); RB's regard for, (i); family house in Yugoslavia, (i); and ET's flight from Yugoslavia to see injured Liza, (i); gives present of books to RB, (i); watches horses parade in Rome, (i); forwards letters from Rome, (i); brings clothes to RB, (i)
 Swanson, Sarah, (i)
 Swanton, E. W., (i)
 Sweeting, Elizabeth, (i)
 Swerdlow, Dr, (i), (ii)
 Switzerland: RB resides in, (i), (ii), (iii); hygienic appearance, (i); see also Geneva; Gstaad

Synge, John Millington, (i), (ii)

Tabori, George, (i)

Taibach, Port Talbot, (i)

Taibach Co-operative Wholesale Society, (i), (ii)

Taming of the Shrew, The (film) see Shakespeare, William

Taormina, (i)

Tashorne, Brian, (i)

Tate, Sharon, (i)

Tatelman, Harry, (i)

Taylor, A. J. P., (i), (ii)

Taylor, Christopher (ET's nephew), (i)

Taylor, (Dame) Elizabeth: RB first meets, (i); in Cleopatra, (i), (ii); marriages and children, (i); romance with RB, (i); divorce from Eddie Fisher and marriage to RB, (i), (ii); contributes to RB's diary, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); gives 1965 diary to RB, (i); reads RB's diaries, (i), (ii), (iii); rows with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx); suspects RB of relationship with Geneviève Bujold, (i); cracks head on cupboard door, (i); RB reads with, (i); undergoes minor surgery, (i); watches rugby with RB, (i); honeymoon with RB, (i); celebrity, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); marriage relations with RB, (i); nicknames, (i)n70, (ii)n41, (iii)n43, (iv)n109, (v)n117; dental treatment, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); fittings for clothes, (i), (ii), (iii); with RB in USA, (i); RB teaches to play billiards, (i); in Rome with RB to film Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); curetage for bleeding, (i), (ii); medical examinations and tests, (i), (ii), (iii); loathes Zeffirelli, (i), (ii), (iii); Cyril Cusack threatens, (i); at Edith Jenkins's funeral, (i); cooking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); inheritance from Montgomery Clift, (i); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix); grey hairs, (i); takes British citizenship, (i); weeps at Aberfan disaster, (i); in Reflections in a Golden Eye, (i); RB fears losing, (i); Eddie Fisher sues for divorce, (i); in Dahomey to film The Comedians, (i); RB's passion for, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); wins New York Critics award for Virginia Woolf, (i); Oscar for Virginia Woolf, (i), (ii); shopping, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); RB lampoons in diary, (i); rebukes Rachel Roberts, (i); decorates yacht, (i); awards, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); Kate Burton sleeps alongside, (i); wart removed from finger, (i); weight, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); shows dislike of people, (i); plays in Boom!, (i); Coward admires, (i); in Corsica, (i); lionized in Paris, (i); jewellery, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi); hysterectomy, (i), (ii); plays in The Only Game in Town, (i), (ii), (iii); relations with Warren Beatty, (i), (ii), (iii); at races in Paris, (i); wealth, (i), (ii), (iii); fear of becoming cripple, (i); in Secret Ceremony, (i); RB beats at gin rummy, (i); gives mink coat to RB for birthday, (i); singing, (i); RB praises, (i); and father's death and funeral, (i), (ii); gives saint's day party, (i); dress, (i); RB misses when separated, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); fondness for daughter Liza, (i); incapacitated, (i), (ii); photographed kissing Duke of Windsor, (i); medication, (i), (ii);

lethargy and boredom, (i); newspaper article by Tommy Thompson, (i); reading, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); appearance, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); weeps at departure of children, (i); ill-health, (i); RB's understanding of, (i); personality and acting, (i); eating, (i), (ii); bleeding, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); effect on others, (i); as godmother to Emma Jenkins, (i); worthwhile films, (i); and David Lewin, (i); 37th birthday (1969), (i); considerateness, (i); similarity to RB, (i); on Quayle's imitation of Gielgud, (i); matron of honour at Bob Wilson-Alice wedding, (i); travels to Cornwall to meet polio victim, (i); in North Moreton, Oxfordshire, (i); RB chooses over Kate, (i); buys complete Everyman's Library for RB, (i); steals book for RB from Foyle's, (i); and Sinatra, (i); returns to Puerto Vallarta, (i); at Oscars (1970), (i); piles, (i), (ii), (iii); given presents in Mexico, (i); and Lucille Ball, (i); stage presence, (i); surgical operation in California, (i), (ii); recovers from operation, (i); Look article on, (i); in Hammersmith is Out, (i); joins RB in Mexico, (i), (ii); susceptibility to illness, (i); visit to Los Angeles, (i), (ii); as child actress in National Velvet, (i); attends Michael Wilding Jr's wedding, (i); back pain, (i), (ii); in Yugoslavia with RB, (i); in knife-throwing act, (i); overdoses on sleeping pills, (i); and Tito film, (i), (ii); acquires kitten, (i); mother's illness, (i); lassitude in Yugoslavia, (i); models for Italian furrier and wears furs, (i); in pain in Yugoslavia, (i); conscious of cultural background, (i); flies to England following Liza's riding accident, (i), (ii); Shahbanu of Iran follows, (i); and bid for X, Y and Zee, (i); with son Michael and grandchild, (i); stops drinking, (i), (ii); defends Sinatra, (i); has hair streaked, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); cyst and mole removed, (i), (ii); religious affiliation, (i); at Rothschild party with Princess Grace, (i); behaviour and manners, (i); converts to Judaism, (i); visits Voldengs, (i); gives $5000 to Orchestral Fund of Phoenix, (i); box office position, (i); in Budapest, (i), (ii); late-night exercises, (i); photographed by Parkinson, (i), (ii); and Wolf Mankowitz, (i); fortieth birthday celebrations (1972), (i); eighth wedding anniversary (1972), (i); consorts with Onassis, (i); in Los Angeles hospital, (i); rift with RB, (i); divorce from RB, (i); dysentery, (i); calls RB in Céligny, (i); RB's view of after separation, (i); RB sees again after divorce, (i); visits RB in Céligny, (i); RB remarries in South Africa, (i), (ii); stay in South Africa, (i); lung cancer scare, (i); illness in South Africa, (i); writes journal, (i); affair with Darmanin, (i), (ii); second marriage to RB fails, (i); writing, (i); marries John Warner, (i); excites press envy, (i); in stage production of The Little Foxes, (i); rehearses for Coward's Private Lives, (i), (ii); admits to loneliness, (i); RB re-encounters in New York, (i); troubled state during rehearsals, (i); loses teeth, (i)

Taylor, Francis (ET's father), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); death, (i)

Taylor, Howard (ET's brother): RB and ET visit in San Diego, (i); plays in Boom!, (i)n60; visits RB and ET in Europe, (i), (ii); RB gives money to, (i); adopts Simoleke, (i); RB's fondness for, (i); and father's funeral, (i); at Voldengs' in Phoenix, Arizona, (i); awareness of lesbianism in X, Y and Zee, (i); marriage relations, (i); travels to Hawaii, (i); appearance, (i); celebrates ET's 40th birthday, (i); gives straight talk to ET, (i); on 'grapple-snapping', (i)

Taylor, Layton (Howard-Mara's son), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Taylor, Mara (Howard's wife), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)

Taylor, Sara (ET's mother): RB lunches with, (i); sends birthday present to RB, (i); and husband's death, (i),

(ii); with Duke of Windsor, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); buys paintings, (i); lunches with RB, (i); influence on ET, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); illness and recovery, (i); impending death, (i); RB's final visit to, (i), (ii); sees X, Y and Zee, (i); decline, (i); garrulity, (i)

Taylor, Simoleke (Howard-Mara's adopted daughter): adopted by Howard and Mara, (i); stays with RB and ET, (i); laughs on film set, (i); brings boyfriend to stay, (i); engagement (to John Gross), (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); expelled from school, (i); untidiness, (i)

Teuber, Andreas, (i), (ii)

Tey, Josephine: A Shilling for Candles, (i)

Thatcher, Tina, (i)

Thesiger, Ernest, (i)

Thomas, Alun, (i)

Thomas, Charles, (i)

Thomas, Dylan: Coghill praises, (i); loathes Vaughan-Thomas, (i); RB's view of, (i); on museums, (i); at ML Club, (i), (ii); RB quotes, (i); biographies, (i); The Beach of Falesa, (i); 'Poem in October', (i); Under Milk Wood, (i), (ii)

Thomas, George (later Viscount Tonypandy), (i), (ii)

Thomas, Gwydion, (i), (ii)

Thomas, Gwyn, (i)

Thomas, R. S., (i)

Thomaster (headmaster), (i)

Thompson, Tommy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Thomson of Fleet, Roy, Baron, (i)

Thoreau, Henry David, (i)

Thorndike, Dame Sybil, (i)

Thorneycroft, Peter, Baron, (i)

Thoroughly Modern Milly (film), (i)

Thorp, Roderick: The Detective, (i)

Tiel, Vicky, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)

Time (magazine), (i)

Tinker, Grant, (i)

Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy (TV adaptation), (i)

Tito, Josip Broz: RB plays in film, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); Liza chooses as historical character for school, (i); RB meets, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); appearance, (i); gives cigar-holder to ET, (i); releases German prisoners, (i); accommodation, (i), (ii), (iii); unveils Sutjeska memorial, (i); at Tjentiste ceremony, (i); RB gives Alsatian puppy to, (i); disorder expected following death, (i); popularity, (i); charm, (i); RB's accent for, (i); supposed aristocratic paternity, (i); and Princess Elizabeth ('Elisheba'), (i)

Tiziani, Evan Roberts, (i), (ii)

‘To Play Churchill is to Hate Him’ (RB; article), (i)n72

Tobruk (film), (i)

Today show (USA), (i)

Todd, Liza (ET's daughter): horseriding, (i), (ii); accompanies RB to studio, (i); stays with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); swimming, (i); homework, (i); Eddie Fisher sues ET for custody of, (i); in Gstaad, (i), (ii), (iii); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); buys present for Maria (stewardess), (i); calls RB ‘daddy’, (i), (ii); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); RB takes to New York, (i); writes to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); RB writes to, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB's fondness for, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); performs at school, (i); fondness for mother, (i); appearance, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); RB's concern over intelligence, (i); eleventh birthday, (i); smoking, (i); growing up, (i), (ii); troubles, (i); watches RB's films, (i); attempts to reconcile RB and ET, (i); untidiness, (i); promised horse, (i); character, (i), (ii); treatment of RB, (i); and ET's tiger, (i); with RB in Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii); adolescence, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); school report, (i); comforts ET, (i); sends late birthday present to RB, (i); RB disowns, (i); reading, (i); returns to England from Yugoslavia, (i); ET writes to, (i); injures head in fall from horse, (i), (ii); RB's sex talk with, (i); RB offers to set up on farm with horses, (i); in Rome, (i); returns to school from Rome, (i); chooses Tito as historical character, (i); poor handwriting, (i); religious indifference, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); in London, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); birthday (1975), (i); height, (i); leaves for Leningrad, (i); with RB in Pusey, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Todd, Mike, (i), (ii)

Todd, Mike, Jr: produces TV film on father, (i); visits RB, (i); wife's death, (i)

Todd, Sarah Jane, (i)

Tolo, Marie Lou, (i)

Tom Jones (film), (i)

Tonight (BBC TV programme), (i)

Toronto, (i)

Tourneur, Yves le, (i)

Toynbee, Arnold: A Study of History, (i), (ii)

Toynbee, Philip, (i)

Tracy, Spencer, (i)

Trench, Mrs (headmistress), (i), (ii)

Tristan and Isolt (film), (i)

Troques, Dr, (i)

Trotsky, Leon, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Truetta, Professor, (i)

Truman, Harry S.: Memoirs, (i)

Tuchman, Barbara: Stilwell and the American Experience in China, (i)

Tucker, Brooke, (i)

Tucker, Forrest, (i)
Turner, Lana, (i), (ii)
Turner, Mrs, (i)
Twain, Mark, (i)
Twentieth Century-Fox: employs RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB and ET's disputes with, (i)
Tynan, Kenneth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Umberto D (film), (i)
Under Milk Wood (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Under the Volcano (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

United States of America: RB travels in, (i); presidential election (1968), (i); Civil Rights Bill, (i);
crossword puzzles, (i); RB considers living in, (i); RB's disenchantment with, (i)
Universal Pictures, (i), (ii)
Unruh, Jesse, (i)
Upfield, Arthur, (i)
Ure, Mary, (i)
Ustinov, (Sir) Peter: in Switzerland, (i); in Dahomey, (i); imitations, (i); rotundity, (i); and Hammersmith is Out, (i), (ii), (iii)
Utrillo, Maurice, (i)

Vadim, Roger, (i)
Valachi, Joe, (i)
Valentine, James, (i)
Valéry, Paul, (i)
Van Cleef and Arpel (company), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Van de Water, Frederick F.: Glory-Hunter, (i)
Van Dyk, Vanessa (Vivienne's daughter), (i), (ii)
Van Dyk, Vivienne (Susan Burton's twin sister), (i), (ii)
Van Dyke, Dick, (i)
Van Gogh, Vincent, (i)
Van Zuylen, Gabrielle, (i)
Vandal, M. (lawyer), (i)
Vaughan-Thomas, Wynford, (i)
Venice, (i)
Verga, Giovanni: La Lupa (play), (i)
Vessna (Yugoslav interpreter), (i), (ii), (iii)
Vickery, Walter, (i)
Victor, Collette, (i), (ii), (iii)

Victor, Paul-Emile, (i), (ii), (iii)

Victoria Falls, (i)

Vidal, Gore, (i), (ii), (iii)

Vietnam, (i)

Vignale, Raymond: ET orders RB not to shout at, (i); in Palm Springs, (i); finds lost diaries, (i); criticises new cook, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB attacks, (i); ageing, (i); bores RB, (i); unpaid, (i); and ET's flight to see injured Liza, (i); and Jeffrey Archer's wish to see RB, (i); surgery for sciatica, (i); takes children dancing in Céligny, (i)

Villain (film), (i)n196, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Villefranche, (i)

Vincent, Roy, (i)

V.I.P.s, The (film), (i), (ii)

Visconti, Luchino, (i)

Vitti, Monica, (i)

Vlaminck, Maurice de, (i)

Vogue (magazine), (i), (ii)

Voight, Jon, (i), (ii)

Voldeng, Karl E. and Mary Frances, (i), (ii)

Voyage, The (film), (i)

Vuillard, Edouard, (i)

Wagner (film), (i)

Wain, John, (i)

Wales: rugby team, (i); see also South Wales

Walker, Alexander, (i)

Walker, Kathryn, (i), (ii)

Walker, Zena, (i)

Waller, Gordon, (i)

Wallis, Hal B., (i), (ii)

Walsh, Dr J. J., (i)

Walter (publicity man), (i)

Walter, Stanley T. J., (i)

Walters, D., (i)

War of the Worlds, The: RB narrates, (i)

Ward, James ('Skip'), (i)

Ward, Sir John Guthrie and Daphne Norah, Lady, (i)

Warhol, Andy, (i)

Warmbrodt, Sam, (i)
 Warner Brothers film corporation, (i)
 Warner, Francis, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Warner, Jack L., (i), (ii)
 Warner, John: marries ET, (i)
 Warner, Sylvia Townsend, (i)n19
 Wasserman, Lew, (i), (ii)
Waterfront (film), (i)
Waterloo (film), (i)
 Waters, Mira L., (i)
 Watson, James D.: The Double Helix, (i)
 Waugh, Don, (i)
 Waugh, Evelyn: RB admires writing, (i); on Anthony Powell, (i); Black Mischief, (i); Vile Bodies, (i)
 Wayne, John, (i)
 Webb, Alan, (i), (ii)
 Webb, Sidney (Baron Passfield), (i)
 Webling, Peggy: The Story of Virginia Perfect, (i)
 Weibel, Berenice, (i), (ii)
 Weibel, René, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Weiller, Commandant Paul-Louis, (i)
 Weiss, Peter: Marat-Sade, (i)
 Weissburger, Arnold, (i)
 Welch, Raquel, (i)n17, (ii), (iii)
 Welles, Orson, (i), (ii)
 Wellington, Wyndham, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Wendy (nurse), (i), (ii)
 Werner, Oskar, (i), (ii)
 West, Morris: Shoes of the Fisherman, (i)
 West, Nathaniel: Miss Lonelyhearts, (i)
Where Eagles Dare (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Wherle, Colin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 White, Edward Higgins, (i)n83, (ii)
 White, Nat and Louise, (i)
 White, Terence Hanbury, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); The Once and Future King, (i)
 White, Theodore Harold: The Making of the President 1968, (i)
 Whitehead, Paxton, (i), (ii)
 ‘Who Cares about Wales? I Care’ (RB; article), (i)n37

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (film): RB and ET in, (i); RB reads, (i); ET reads, (i); filming, (i); reception, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); nominated for Oscars, (i), (ii); Mike Nichols directs, (i); success, (i)
Wichert, Willi and Chantal, (i)n28

Wicker, Tom, (i)

Wigmoller, Jorgen, (i)

The Wild Ones (pop group), (i)

Wilde, Cornel, (i)

Wilde, Oscar, (i)

Wilder, Billy, (i)

Wilding, Beth (née Clutter, Michael Jr's wife): marriage, (i); birth of daughter, (i); and Michael's untrustworthy behaviour, (i); visits Rome, (i)

Wilding, Christopher (ET's son): horseriding, (i); RB gives compass key-ring to, (i); RB takes to cinema, (i); accompanies RB to work, (i); appears in Taming of the Shrew, (i); writes to RB, (i); holidays from school, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); popularity, (i); girl friends, (i), (ii); attends Millfield school, (i), (ii); in London, (i); on valuing beautiful days, (i); RB writes to, (i); grows, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); retains American accent, (i); withdrawn from Millfield, (i); in Puerto Vallarta, (i); RB's fondness for, (i); character and manner, (i), (ii); visits RB, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); RB phones for Mark Getty's number, (i); Tennessee Williams makes pass at as boy, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Wilding, Henry (Michael's father), (i)

Wilding, Leyla (Michael-Beth's daughter), (i)

Wilding, Michael, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Wilding, Michael, Jr (ET's son): horseriding, (i); RB gives compass key-ring to, (i); RB takes to cinema, (i); accompanies RB to work, (i); in Rome, (i); appears in Taming of the Shrew, (i); RB writes to, (i), (ii); holidays from school, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); RB meets in Rome, (i); expelled from school, (i), (ii); dates girl, (i); attends Millfield school, (i), (ii); in London, (i); and Claudye, (i); grows, (i); sick from drinking, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); artistic interests, (i); anglicized, (i); manner, (i), (ii); withdrawn from Millfield, (i); religious views, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); writes from Hawaii, (i); appearance, (i); returns from Hawaii, (i); in Gstaad, (i); behaviour, (i); letter of farewell to RB, (i); RB dreams of being dead, (i); travels in Asia, (i); marriage (to Beth Clutter), (i), (ii); aspires to be pop musician, (i); RB's concern for lifestyle, (i); takes drugs, (i); bohemian life, (i); visits Rome with wife and baby, (i); in Wales, (i)

Wilding, Naomi (Michael Junior's daughter), (i)

Williams, Alan, (i), (ii)

Williams, Arthur Neville, (i)

Williams, Billy, (i)

Williams, Brook: writes in RB diary, (i); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); and birth of child, (i); RB attacks, (i), (ii); RB praises, (i), (ii); RB visits in Oxfordshire, (i); career and ambitions, (i); plays badminton with

RB, (i), (ii); visits RB in Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); RB explains baseball to, (i); and ET's tiger, (i); attends rehearsals for Oscars, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); in Mexico and California with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); and Lucille Ball, (i); gives typewriter to RB, (i); on British politics, (i); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii); plays in Raid on Rommel, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); on Clinton Greyn, (i); travels to Chicago, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); ET attacks, (i); RB's disenchantment with, (i); reports accident to Liza, (i); in Rome, (i); and father's selling South Moreton cottage, (i); and RB's filming Jackpot, (i); drives MG sports car, (i); on RB's audience with Duvalier, (i); in New York, (i), (ii)

Williams, Dai Morgan ('Dai Mogs'), (i)

Williams (William), David, (i)

Williams, Elizabeth (Brook's wife; 'Liz'; 'Lillabetta'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii)

Williams, Elmo, (i)

Williams, Emlyn: speaks at RB's memorial service, (i); RB auditions with, (i); sends scripts to RB, (i), (ii); meets RB in Switzerland, (i); RB's view of, (i); RB meets, (i); prospective honour, (i), (ii); ageing and nervous collapse, (i), (ii); revue numbers, (i); influence on RB, (i); RB offers to buy Oxfordshire cottage, (i); RB acts for, (i); The Druid's Rest, (i)

Williams, Freddie, (i), (ii)

Williams, Gerwyn ('Gin'; 'Ginger'), (i), (ii)

Williams, Hugh, (i)

Williams, I., (i)

Williams, Jack, (i)

Williams, Jake, (i), (ii), (iii)

Williams, Ken, (i)

Williams, Molly (née Shan), (i), (ii)

Williams, Stan, (i)

Williams, Tennessee, (i), (ii)

Wilson, Alice ('Gwladys'), (i), (ii)

Wilson, Edmund: RB criticises, (i); Europe Without Baedeker, (i); Memoirs of Hecate County, (i)

Wilson, Harold (later Baron), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Wilson, Otis, (i)

Wilson, Robert (Bob): in Rome, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); predicts outcome of Ali-Cooper fight, (i); drinking with RB, (i), (ii), (iii); RB's rudeness to, (i); accompanies RB home, (i); limited helpfulness, (i); at Cap Ferrat, (i); in Sardinia, (i), (ii); gives birthday present to RB, (i), (ii); in London with RB, (i); uses ET's Rolls Royce, (i); RB attacks, (i); wedding, (i); entertains Geneviève Bujold, (i); in San Felipe with RB, (i); RB's view of, (i); and Romany Bain, (i); awareness of prejudice, (i); in New York, (i), (ii); legacy from RB, (i)

Wilson, Sally, (i), (ii), (iii); death, (i)
 Windsor, (i)
 Windsor, Edward, Duke of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
 Windsor, Wallis, Duchess of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Winnipeg, Canada, (i)
 Wishart, James, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Wodehouse, P. G., (i), (ii); Do Butlers Burgle Banks?, (i)
 Wolf, Nero, (i)
 Wolfe, Thomas, (i)
Woman with No Name, The (film), (i)
 Wood, Natalie, (i)
 Woodstock, Oxfordshire, (i)
 Woolf, Virginia, (i)
 Woollcott, Alexander, (i)
 Wooller, Wilfred, (i)
 Wordsworth, William, (i)
 Worsthorne, (Sir) Peregrine, (i), (ii)
 Wynberg, Henry, (i), (ii), (iii)
X, Y and Zee (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)

 Yeats, William Butler, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Yesenin, Sergei, (i)
 York, Michael, (i)
 York, Susannah, (i), (ii)ⁿ⁷, (iii), (iv)
Young Bess (film), (i)
 Young, Gig, (i)
 Young, Howard, (i)
 Young, Nicholas, (i), (ii)
 Young, Terence, (i), (ii)
 Yugoslavia: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); purge (1968), (i); character of people, (i), (ii); political unrest, (i); RB's affection for, (i)
Z (film), (i)

 Zabljak, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Zanuck, Darryl Francis, (i), (ii)
 Zanuck, Richard, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Zapata, Emiliano, (i)
 Zec, Donald, (i)

Zeffirelli, Franco: directs The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); RB lunches with, (i); Irene Sharaff dislikes and quarrels with, (i), (ii); RB's view on, (i), (ii), (iii); sends memo to RB on showing rushes, (i); McWhorter writes to, (i); produces Barber's Antony and Cleopatra at Metropolitan Opera, New York, (i); calls on RB and ET, (i), (ii); on Fellini, (i); awarded Mask of Silver, (i); on Florence floods, (i); documentary on Florence, (i); shows Taming of the Shrew at Cannes, (i); Cotti admires, (i)

Zola, Emile, (i)

Zuylen, Baron Thierry de, (i)

INDEX

NOTE: The initials RB signify Richard Burton; ET signifies Elizabeth Taylor

Aaron, Hank, (i)
Aaron, Tommy, (i)
Abakarov (proposed film), (i)n56
Abel, Elie: The Missile Crisis, (i)
Abercorn, Dukes of, (i)
Aberfan: disaster (1966), (i), (ii)
Abraham, William ('Mabon'), (i)
Absolution (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Academy Award: RB nominated for, (i)
Acheson, Dean, (i)
Ackerley, Joe Randolph: My Dog Tulip, (i)
Advice to a Married Man (filmed as A Guide for the Married Man), (i)
Agate, James, (i)
Agnew, Spiro, (i)
Alain, Pierre, (i)
Albee, Edward, (i), (ii)
Alberty, Karl-Otto, (i)n180, (ii), (iii), (iv)
Alcott, Joe, (i)
Alderson, Christian (Richard Alderson), (i)
Aldredge, Theoni, (i), (ii)
Aldrin, Edwin ('Buzz'), (i)
Alex (nurse), (i)
Alexander, A.V. (later Earl), (i)
Alexander the Great (film), (i), (ii)
Alexandre de Paris (Louis Alexandre de Raimon), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Alfie (film), (i)
Ali, Muhammad (earlier Cassius Clay), (i), (ii), (iii)
Alice in Wonderland (stage adaptation), (i)
Allbritton, Louise, (i)

Allende, Salvador, (i)
Allers, Franz, (i)
Allott, Kenneth, (i)
Alsop, Stewart: The Center, (i)
Amalia (cook's wife), (i)
Amis, (Sir) Kingsley: The Green Man, (i)
Amundsen, Roald, (i), (ii)
Anderson, John B., (i)
Anderson, Lindsay, (i)
Andre (Bernard Greenford's partner), (i)
Andress, Ursula, (i)
Andrews, Harry, (i), (ii)
Andrews, Julie, (i), (ii), (iii)
Andri Ć, Ivo: Bridge over the Drina, (i), (ii)
Ann-Margret (Ann-Margret Olsson), (i), (ii)
Anne, Princess, (i)
Anne of the Thousand Days (film): McWhorter discusses with Wallis, (i); RB's relations with Bujold in, (i), (ii); Universal threaten to sue RB over, (i), (ii); RB fitted for costumes, (i), (ii); filming, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); reception, (i), (ii); wins Oscar nomination, (i); see also Bujold, Geneviève
Anne-Marie, Queen of Greece, (i)
Anouilh, Jean: Legend of Lovers, (i); Time Remembered, (i)
Anzio, Italy, (i), (ii)
Archer, Jeffrey (later Baron), (i)
Archerd, Army, (i)
Arlott, John, (i)
Armstrong, Neil, (i)
Armstrong-Jones, Jennifer, (i)
Ash Wednesday (film), (i)
Ashcroft, Dame Peggy, (i)
Ashton, Sir Frederick, (i)
Assassination of Trotsky, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
Assault on a Queen (film), (i)
Astaire, Fred, (i)
Athens: RB and ET read poetry at Acropolis, (i)
Atkins, Robert, (i)
atom bomb: dropped on Japan, (i)
Attenborough, Richard (later Baron), (i)

Attlee, Clement (later 1st Earl), (i)
 Auden, Wystan Hugh, (i), (ii); About the House, (i)
 Audley, Maxine, (i)
 Aurelia, Madame, (i), (ii)
 Avriel, Ehud, (i), (ii)

Bacall, Lauren (Mrs Humphrey Bogart; ‘Betty’), (i), (ii)
 Bach, Johann Sebastian (housekeeper), (i)n5
 Bacon, Francis, (i)
 Bacon, James, (i)
 Bacon, Lloyd, (i)
 Badel, Alan, (i), (ii)
 Bader, Sir Douglas, (i), (ii)
 Bain, Romany, (i), (ii)
 Baker, Carlos: Ernest Hemingway, (i)
 Baker, George, (i)
 Baker, Sally, (i)
 Baker, Stanley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Baker, Terence, (i), (ii)
 Baldwin, James, (i), (ii)
 Balfour, Neil, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ball, Lucille, (i)
 Banier, François-Marie, (i)
 Bannen, Ian, (i)
 Barber, John, (i)
 Barbizon, Fontainebleau, (i)
 Barbosa, Arthur (‘Edward’), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bardot, Brigitte, (i)
 Barragán, Carlos, (i)
 Barragán, General Garcia, (i), (ii)
 Barrault, Jean-Louis, (i), (ii)
 Barrett, Richard, (i)
 Barzini, Luigi: The Italians, (i)
 Basi  (actor), (i)
 Bates, H. E.: Fair Stood the Wind for France, (i)
Battle of Sutjeska, The (film), (i), (ii)n82, (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Baudelaire, Charles: Fleurs du Mal, (i), (ii), (iii)

Bea (children's governess), (i)
 Beal, Charles Herbert, (i), (ii)
 Beaton, Sir Cecil, (i), (ii)
Beatriz of Bolivia (yacht), (i)
 Beatty, Robert, (i)
 Beatty, Warren, (i)n7, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Beaumont, Hugh ('Binkie'), (i), (ii)
 Beauvoir, Simone de, (i)
 Bebb, Dewi Iorwerth Ellis, (i)
 Becker, Gavin de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Becket (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); documentary on, (i)
 Behrens, Ulrich, (i)
 Bell, Jeannie, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bell, Troy, (i), (ii)
 Benin see Dahomey
 Bennett, Billy, (i)
 Benny, Jack, (i)
 Benthall, Michael, (i)
 Benton, Jim: makes martinis, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); flies to London with RB, (i); gives money to James Baldwin, (i); RB abuses, (i); entertains Geneviève Bujold, (i); and RB's purchasing ring for ET, (i); attends post-Oscar 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); looks at house in Palm Springs, (i); on Look article about ET's sickness, (i); in Mexico, (i); lacks charm, (i); watches X, Y and Zee, (i); hepatitis, (i)
 Bergman, Ingrid, (i)
 Beria, Lavrentiy, (i)
 Berkeley, Craig, (i), (ii)
 Berkeley, Leah, (i)
 Berkeley, Ron: makes up RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); relations with Vicky, (i), (ii); at Hanley's for birthday lunch, (i); eats and drinks with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB borrows apartment, (i); and RB's drinking, (i), (ii); bets RB unable to write book, (i); in Sardinia, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i), (ii); and Francis Taylor's funeral, (i); helps young Mike Wilding, (i); at 'Talk of the Town' with RB, (i); in San Felipe with RB, (i); RB rebukes for disorganization, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii); RB's fondness for, (i); in helicopter drama, (i); on Tito's shootings, (i); on Romy Schneider, (i); on Bardot, (i); and assassination scene in Trotsky, (i); drinking, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); legacy from RB, (i)
 Berkeley, Vicky, (i)
 Berle, Milton, (i)
 Berle, Ruth, (i)
 Berliner Ensemble, (i)

Bernstein, Leonard, (i), (ii)
 Bertrand (ET's chauffeur), (i)
 Besançon, André ('Bobo'), (i), (ii); suicide and funeral, (i), (ii)
 Best, George, (i), (ii)
 Best, Miss M. E., (i)
 Betti, Ugo: The Queen and the Rebels (play), (i)
 Beverly Hills Hotel, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Beynon, J., (i), (ii)
Bible: In the Beginning, The (film), (i)
 Binet, Jean-Paul, (i)
 Bismarck, Otto Christian Archibald, Prince von and Anne-Marie, Princess, (i)
 Bisset, Jacqueline, (i)
Bitter Victory (film), (i), (ii)
 Black, Daniel, (i)
 Blackmore, Ruth, (i)
 Blake, Robert: Disraeli, (i)
 Blake, William, (i)
 Blanc, Suzanne: The Rose Window, (i)
 Blandford, James Spencer-Churchill, Marquess of, (i)
 Blomberg, Field Marshal Werner von, (i)n152
 Bloom, Claire: relations with RB, (i), (ii), (iii)n21, (iv); RB meets in London, (i); RB works with, (i);
 appearance, (i)
Bluebeard (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Bobo, The (film), (i)
 Bogarde, Dirk, (i)
 Bogart, Humphrey, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bohan, Marc, (i)
 Bolkan, Florinda, (i)
 Bond, Gary, (i)
 Bonifacio, Corsica, (i)
Boom! (film): making, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); released, (i); shown and discussed, (i); fails at box office, (i)
 Boothby, Robert, Baron, (i)
 Bouton, Jim: Ball Four, (i)
 Bowditch (fellow pupil), (i)
 Bowen, Elwyn, (i)
 Bowen, Rees, (i)
Boys in the Band, The (film), (i)

Bozzacchi, Claudye (née Etori): RB lunches with, (i); woken by Maria, (i); marriage to Gianni, (i), (ii); and Robin Marlowe's request for contraceptive, (i); in Paris, (i); gives birthday presents to RB, (i), (ii); RB talks with, (i), (ii); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); on heavy rain, (i); bores RB, (i); in Ariel, (i); on Joey Heatherton, (i)

Bozzacchi, Gianni: marriage to Claudye, (i), (ii); Robin Marlowe requests contraceptives from for junior Michael Wilding, (i); in Paris, (i), (ii); gives birthday presents to RB, (i), (ii); accident with Mace, (i); carries restorative, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); bores RB, (i); on value of ET's furs, (i); unpaid, (i); on expenses in Yugoslavia, (i); Hebe Dorsey complains of non-payment by, (i); in Ariel, (i); on Joey Heatherton, (i); photographs, (i)

Brace, Onllwyn, (i), (ii)

Braddon, Russell, (i), (ii)

Bragg, George Henry, (i)

Bragg, Melvyn, Baron: biography of RB, (i), (ii); and RB's diaries, (i)

Braine, John: Life at the Top, (i)

Bramble Bush, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)

Brando, Marlon: in Italy with RB, (i), (ii), (iii); embarrasses Stark, (i); picks up New York Critics award for ET, (i); personality and appeal, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); ET calls on phone, (i); stage acting, (i); dependence on Kazan, (i); declines film parts, (i); intellect, (i); marriage to Anna Kashfi, (i); proposed to play Mussolini, (i); RB accuses of laziness, (i)

Brandon, Henry, (i)

Brandt, Willy, (i)

Braswell, Charles, (i)

Breakthrough (film), (i)

Bremner, Billy, (i)

Breslin, Jimmy, (i)

Brezhnev, Leonid, (i), (ii)

Brickhouse, Jack and Pat, (i)

Bridges, Beau, (i)

Brief Encounter (film), (i)

Brighton Rock (film), (i)

British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC): RB records for, (i); Third Programme, (i)

Britton, Eva, (i)

Britton, Jasper, (i)

Britton, Tony, (i), (ii)

Broadway Limited (railway train), (i)

Brogan, Denis, (i)

Brook, Peter, (i), (ii)

Brooke, Rupert, (i)
 Brown, Christy, (i)
 Brown, George Stanford, (i)
 Brown, Pamela, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Browne, Roscoe Lee, (i)
 Broz, Jovanka (Tito's wife), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Bruhn, Erik Belton Evers, (i)
 Bryant, John, (i)
 Brynner, Doris, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Brynner, Rocky, (i), (ii)
 Brynner, Victoria, (i)
 Brynner, Yul, (i)
 Bucerias, Mexico, (i)
 Buckley, Patricia, (i)
 Buckley, William F., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Budapest, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Buffman, Zev, (i), (ii)
 Bujold, Geneviève: relations with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv);
 A. P. Herbert makes pass at, (i); behaviour, (i); unpopularity, (i); RB criticises, (i)
 Bulgari, Gianni, (i)
 Burroughs, William S.: Exterminator, (i)
 Burton, Hal (ed.): Acting in the Sixties, (i)
 Burton, Jessica (RB's daughter): birth, (i); in Paris, (i); christening, (i); RB's relations with, (i); letter to RB, (i); RB's hopes for, (i); in Switzerland with RB, (i), (ii); inheritance from RB, (i)
 Burton, Kate (RB's daughter): birth, (i); in Geneva, (i); christening, (i); and mother's remarriage, (i); RB's relations with, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); RB meets in USA, (i); visits to RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); correspondence with RB, (i), (ii); RB sends money to, (i); sculpture of, (i); seasick on yacht, (i); writes diary as child, (i); Ivor and Gwen take to New York, (i); ungenerous nature, (i); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); dislikes caviare, (i); RB takes to New York on Queen Elizabeth, (i); visits Ivor Jenkins, (i); takes small part in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i); manner, (i); writing, (i); appearance, (i), (ii); compliments RB, (i); in Mexico with RB, (i); leaves Mexico, (i); swearing, (i); view of parents, (i); lifestyle, (i); fourteenth birthday, (i); love of flying, (i); shows off before girlfriend, (i); in New York, (i); enters college, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); birthday (1975), (i); acts in Alice in Wonderland with RB, (i); acting in New York, (i); attends Tennessee Williams' funeral, (i); marriage to Michael F. Ritchie, (i)ⁿ⁵⁴; plays in Ellis Island with RB, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)
 Burton, Philip: background, (i); influence on RB, (i), (ii); RB moves into home and taken as ward, (i); teaches RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); stage productions, (i)ⁿ¹⁶⁷; directs RB in school play, (i), (ii); visits

London to see Shaw, (i); in Port Talbot YMCA, (i)n247, (ii)n252; and RB in New York, (i); moves to USA, (i); RB writes to from Sardinia, (i); visits RB in Italy, (i); praises ET in Secret Ceremony, (i); compared with Mrs Trench, (i); tells RB to be patient with Michael Wilding, (i); in Florida, (i); legacy from RB, (i)

Burton, Richard: diaries, (i), (ii), (iii); birth and family background, (i); sister Cis takes care of as child, (i); chapel-going, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi); musical interests, (i); rugby football-playing, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); leaves school and works in store, (i); Philip Burton's interest in, (i); works for Co-operative Wholesale Society, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); adopts surname Burton, (i); moves in with Philip Burton and becomes ward, (i); takes Oxford University short course, (i); trains as RAF navigator, (i); awards and nominations, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii); early stage and film parts, (i); marries Sybil Williams, (i); Shakespearean roles, (i), (ii); children with Sybil, (i); first meets ET, (i); moves to Céligny, Switzerland, (i), (ii); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx), (xxi), (xxii), (xxiii), (xxiv), (xxv), (xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii), (xxix), (xxx), (xxxi), (xxxii), (xxxiii), (xxxiv); first romance with ET, (i); romantic liaisons, (i); marries ET (1964), (i); Sybil divorces, (i); self-criticism, (i), (ii); early death, (i); proposed autobiography, (i); rows with ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii); supposed relations with leading ladies, (i); spelling, (i); complex character, (i); filmgoing as youth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv); plays Monopoly, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); works as paper-boy, (i); takes school exams, (i), (ii), (iii); plays tennis, (i), (ii); school sports, (i), (ii); collects horse manure, (i); cricket, (i), (ii), (iii); reading, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx), (xxi), (xxii), (xxiii), (xxiv), (xxv), (xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii), (xxix), (xxx), (xxxi), (xxxii), (xxxiii), (xxxiv), (xxxv), (xxxvi), (xxxvii), (xxxviii), (xxxix), (xl), (xli), (xlii), (xliii), (xliv), (xlv), (xlvi), (xlvii), (xlviii), (xlix), (l), (li), (lii), (liii), (liv), (lv), (lvi), (lvii), (lviii), (lix), (lx), (lxi), (lxii), (lxiii), (lxiv), (lxv), (lxvi), (lxvii), (lxviii), (lxix), (lxx), (lxxi), (lxxii), (lxxiii); in wartime air raids, (i), (ii); plays billiards, (i), (ii); swimming, (i), (ii); in school play, (i), (ii); takes School Certificate exam ('matric'), (i); quarrel with Elfed James, (i); installs Anderson air raid shelter, (i); lacks confidence in Welsh language, (i); fifteenth birthday, (i); joins YMCA, (i); smokes pipe as schoolboy, (i); takes first communion as member of Noddfa Chapel, (i); gambling, (i), (ii); learns to ski, (i); studies Russian, (i); ranking in Motion Picture Herald, (i); makes records, (i); watches rugby internationals, (i), (ii); ET praises, (i); honeymoon with ET, (i); plays Yahtzee (dice game), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); marriage relations with ET, (i); plays piano, (i), (ii); dislikes paparazzi, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); pet dogs, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii); celebrates 40th birthday, (i); attends ballet, (i); financial anxieties, (i); self-image, (i); preparations for film parts, (i); and shooting of Taming of the Shrew, (i); gives up drink temporarily, (i), (ii); takes Finalgon (drug), (i); depressions, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); smoking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); competes in father's race at Maria's school sports, (i); and death of sisters, (i), (ii); learns Italian, (i),

(ii); skin trouble, (i); loses taste for alcohol, (i), (ii), (iii); gives away money, (i); follows American baseball, (i); exercises, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); attitude to public figures, (i); bet to write book, (i); fears losing ET, (i); forty-first birthday, (i); defends pornography, (i); narration for documentary on Florence, (i); passion for ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); purchases yacht on cruise in Mediterranean, (i); sculpted by Rocchi, (i); arthritic arm and wrist, (i), (ii); loses weight, (i); dislikes flying, (i); gives money to Howard and Mara Taylor, (i); buys jet plane for ET, (i); buys jewellery for ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); and ET's hysterectomy, (i); knowledge of French, (i); desire for river barge, (i), (ii); earnings and wealth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x); Universal Pictures threatens to sue, (i), (ii); wears alopecic baldwig, (i), (ii); temper and ill behaviour, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); offered tutoring post at Oxford, (i), (ii); arthritis in hip, (i); forty-third birthday, (i); mink coat, (i); Zanuck sues for $55 million, (i); mimicry, (i); seduction technique, (i); political views, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); misses absent ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); hates the English, (i), (ii); ice-skating, (i); skiing, (i); Christmas in Gstaad, (i); eye damaged in fight, (i); disparages the French, (i); diets, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); cosmic pessimism, (i); attitude to acting, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); records for BBC, (i); writing, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii); visits dentist, (i); on national stereotypes, (i); grows beard, (i); charitable gifts, (i), (ii), (iii); dreams, (i), (ii), (iii); supports family financially, (i); punishes soldier at Paddington Station, (i); fitted for costume, (i); reaction to interviews, (i); religious scepticism, (i), (ii); lists worthwhile films, (i); singing voice, (i), (ii); talking, (i); plays badminton, (i), (ii); steals books from Foyle's, (i); performs in foreign languages, (i); gives speech in Geneva, (i); weight, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); gives up drink after health check-up (1970), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); learns Spanish, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); loses sexual urge, (i); at Oscars (1970), (i); appointed CBE, (i), (ii), (iii); given ticket for speeding, (i); attitude to reviewers, (i); dreams of retiring onto Kalizma, (i); learns German, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); relishes fame, (i); diminished sexual appetite, (i); on causes of illness, (i); uses exercise bike, (i); invested with CBE, (i); learns Serbo-Croat, (i), (ii), (iii); proposed as Director of National Theatre, (i), (ii); plays table tennis, (i), (ii); acquires TV movie machine, (i); in knife-throwing act, (i); and ET's overdosing on sleeping pills, (i); view of film directors, (i); creditors, (i); views on entourage, (i); in helicopter drama, (i); reflects on stage and film career, (i); stage acting, (i); criticised by press for wealth, (i); fighting, (i); dislikes museums, (i), (ii); pride in intellectual superiority, (i); memory lapses, (i); on film rewards, (i); wine drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); in Winnipeg as airman, (i); early sexual experience, (i); death foretold, (i), (ii); forty-sixth birthday, (i), (ii); newspaper reading, (i), (ii); plays in horror film (Bluebeard), (i), (ii); attends Rothschild party with Princess Grace, (i); acne, (i); catches photographer with rubber ball, (i); manners, (i); attempts to give up cigarettes, (i); box office position, (i); Korda offers contract to, (i); and brother Dai Morgan Williams, (i); affair with Jean Simmons, (i); learns Hungarian, (i), (ii); appearance, (i); loses hair, (i); eighth wedding anniversary (1972), (i); affairs, (i); resumes drinking, (i); rift with ET, (i); engagement to Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, (i); ET divorces, (i); relations with Jeanne Bell, (i); cycling in Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii); teetotalism, (i); enters clinic, (i); struggles with drink problem, (i); eyes tested, (i); remarries ET in South

Africa, (i), (ii); fiftieth birthday (1975), (i); revisits Wales, (i); affair with Susan Hunt, (i); second divorce from ET and marriage to Susan Hunt, (i); pinched nerve, (i); effect on public in restaurants, (i); abruptness on telephone, (i); TV narration for wedding of Prince of Wales and Diana, (i); undergoes spinal surgery in Santa Monica, (i); marriage with Susan fails, (i); relations with Sally Hay, (i); divorce from Susan, (i), (ii); marries Sally, (i); cerebral haemorrhage and death, (i); estate, (i)

Burton, Sally (earlier Hay; RB's fourth wife): gives RB diaries to Swansea University, (i); reads RB's diaries, (i); RB meets, (i); anxieties over RB's divorce from Susan, (i); in Port au Prince, (i); in New York, (i); marries RB, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Burton, Susan (earlier Hunt; RB's third wife): RB reads to from diary, (i), (ii); marriage to RB, (i); flies to Geneva with RB, (i); in New York, (i), (ii), (iii); fourth wedding anniversary, (i); in Chicago, (i), (ii); under public scrutiny, (i); background and sensitivity to people, (i); and Bob Wilson, (i); dress, (i); on reviews of Camelot, (i); twin sister (Vivienne), (i); hurts spine, (i); fondness for Kupcinets, (i); in Dallas, (i); mollifies Merrick, (i); fears over-exposure, (i); marriage with RB fails, (i); divorce from RB, (i)n3, (ii); RB keeps silence on, (i)

Burton, Sybil (RB's first wife): marriage to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); moves to Switzerland, (i); and RB's romance with ET, (i); in Rome with RB, (i); divorces RB, (i); sees RB's diary, (i); RB telephones from New York, (i); joins RB in Paris, (i); RB misses, (i); takes possessions from Céligny, (i); remarries (Jordan Christopher), (i); and daughter Kate's visits to RB, (i); and Edie's death, (i); and Kate's visit to RB in Italy, (i); post-divorce relations with RB, (i); grey hairs, (i); birth of daughter, (i); disparages Lyndon B. Johnson, (i); relations with Kate, (i), (ii); takes RB's Welsh books to New York, (i); attempted suicide, (i); appearance, (i)

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (film), (i)

Butt, Ronald, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Cagney, James, (i)

Caine, (Sir) Michael, (i), (ii), (iii)

Callas, Maria, (i), (ii), (iii)

Camelot (stage musical), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); film version, (i), (ii)

Cameron, Roderick ('Rory'), (i)

Camus, Albert, (i)

Canada: RB in at war's end, (i)

Candy (film), (i)

Cannes, (i)

Capote, Truman, (i)

Capri, (i)

Cardiff, Jack, (i)

Cardus, Neville, (i)

Carey, Joyce (actress), (i)
Carlos, John, (i)
Carnal Knowledge (film), (i)
Caron, Leslie, (i)
Carter, Jimmy, (i)
Cashin, Fergus, (i)
Castle Anna (play), (i)
Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (film), (i)
Catania, Sicily, (i)
Catch 22 (film), (i)
Catherine II (the Great), Empress of Russia, (i)
Cavett, Dick, (i), (ii)
Cavtat, Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Cecil, Lord David, (i), (ii), (iii)
Céligny, near Geneva, (i)
Celina (Gstaad maid), (i)
Chamberlain, Neville, (i), (ii)
Chandler, Otis and family, (i)
Chaplin, Charlie, (i)
Chapman, John, (i)
Charles, Mr (of Dan-y-bont), (i)
Charles, Prince of Wales: investiture in Wales, (i), (ii); wedding with Diana, (i)
Charles, Uncle, (i), (ii)
Charlton, Bobby, (i)
Charon, Jacques, (i)
Chase, Richard, (i)
Cheshire, Group-Captain Leonard, (i)
Chester, Lewis, Geoffrey Hodgson and Bruce Page: An American Melodrama, (i), (ii)
Chesterton, G. K., (i)
Chevalier, Maurice, (i)
Chicago, (i), (ii)
Chichester, Sir Francis, (i)
Chimes at Midnight (film), (i)
Chobe National Park, South Africa, (i), (ii)
Christie, Agatha: The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, (i)
Christie, Julie, (i)
Christmas Story, A (RB), (i), (ii)

Christopher, Amy (Sybil-Jordan's daughter), (i)
 Christopher, Jordan (born Jordan Zankoff): marries Sybil, (i); birth of daughter, (i); Kate buys book for, (i)
Chronicle of an English Crown (Vivat Rex) (BBC radio programme), (i)
 Churchill, Randolph, (i)
 Churchill, (Sir) Winston: as Prime Minister (1940), (i); dismisses underlings, (i); RB proposed to play in film, (i), (ii); biography by son Randolph, (i); RB meets, (i), (ii); on Germans, (i); and Mediterranean strategy, (i); Tito meets, (i); and Hochhuth's Soldiers, (i); reputation, (i); wins Nobel Prize, (i); hair colour, (i); RB attacks, (i); RB plays, (i); The World Crisis, (i)
Circle of Two (film), (i)
 Clark, Jim, (i)
 Clark, Kenneth: The Nude, (i)
 Clay, Cassius see Ali, Muhammad
Cleopatra (film), (i), (ii)
 Cliburn, Harvey Lavan ('Van'), (i)
 Clifford, Francis: The Naked Runner, (i)
 Clift, Montgomery, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Clowes, Dick, (i)
 coal industry: South Wales, (i)
 Coburn, James, (i)
 Cochlin, D. A., (i)
 Coghill, Ambrose, (i)
 Coghill, Sir Marmaduke Nevill Patrick Somerville, (i)n21
 Coghill, Nevill, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)
 Cohen, Alexander H., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Cohen, Nat, (i)
 Colicos, John: in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); character, (i); RB's influence on, (i), (ii), (iii); Hathaway orders to have hair cut, (i); in Mexico for Raid on Rommel, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Collier, Richard: Duce, (i)
 Collingwood, Charles: in Las Vegas, (i); congratulates RB on writing on Wales, (i); and wife's drinking, (i); asks RB for opinion on novel, (i); resents RB's celebrity, (i), (ii); drinking, (i), (ii); interviews Speer, (i); The Defector, (i), (ii)
 Collingwood, Louise, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Columbia Pictures, (i)
 Columbus, Christopher, (i)
Comedians, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Compton, Fay, (i)
 Connery, (Sir) Sean, (i)

Connolly, Cyril, (i)
 Constantine II, King of Greece, (i)
 Cook, Anthony, (i)
 Cooper, Dr Barrington, (i)
 Cooper, Henry, (i)
 Cordy, K., (i)
 Corsica, (i), (ii)
 Cortese, Valentina, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Cotonou, Dahomey, (i), (ii)
 Cotti, Carlo, (i)
 Cottrell, John and Fergus Cashin: Richard Burton, (i), (ii)
 Cound, Truda, (i)
 Coward, (Sir) Noël: in Boom!, (i), (ii), (iii); time taken writing plays, (i); asked to write on Olivier, (i); RB's esteem for, (i); in RB's fantasy household, (i); ageing, (i); praises Rex Harrison, (i); Conversation Piece, (i); Hay Fever, (i); Private Lives, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Crawford, Andrew, (i)
 Crosby, Joan, (i)
 Crosse, Rupert, (i)
 Crowley, Dave, (i), (ii)
 Crowther, Bosley, (i)
 Cruikshank, Andrew, (i)
 Cuernavaca, Mexico, (i)
 Cukor, George, (i), (ii)
 Cullum, John, (i), (ii), (iii)
 cummings, e. e., (i)
 Cusack, Cyril, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Cusack, Maureen, (i)
 Custer, General George Armstrong, (i)
 Cwmafan: drowning tragedy (1940), (i)
 Czechoslovakia: Soviet invasion (1968), (i), (ii)
Daddy Long Legs (film), (i)

Dahomey (now Benin), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Daily American (Italian newspaper), (i)
Daily Mail, (i)
 Daley, Robert: The Whole Truth, (i)
 Dali, Salvador, (i)

Dallas, Texas, (i)
Dam Busters, The (film), (i)
Dan, Peter, (i)
Dark Summer (play), (i)
Darmanin, Peter, (i)
David Frost Show, The (TV programme), (i)
Davidson, Basil: Africa in History, (i)
Davidson, Lionel: A Long Way to Shiloh, (i)
Davies, ‘Archie’ Richard, (i), (ii)
Davies, Eifion H. N., (i)
Davies, Gerald, (i)
Davies, Huw, (i)
Davies, J. Vyrnwy (‘Tout’), (i), (ii), (iii)
Davies, John Eaton, (i)
Davies, Peggy, (i), (ii), (iii)
Davies, V. (‘second Tout’), (i)
Davis, Angela, (i)
Davis, George, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Davis, Sammy, Jr, (i), (ii), (iii)
Dawes, John, (i)
Day Lewis, Cecil, (i)
Deakin, Sir William, (i), (ii), (iii); The Embattled Mountain, (i)
Dean, James, (i)
Dear (or Deer), George, (i)
Dearth, Joan, (i)
Dearth, John, (i), (ii)
Death in Venice (film), (i)
de Gaulle, Charles, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
de Havilland, Olivia, (i), (ii), (iii)
Dehn, Paul, (i)
Delfont, Bernard, (i)
Deli  Stipe, (i), (ii), (iii)
Delon, Alain, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Delon, Nathalie, (i)
De Metz, Danielle, (i)
De Niro, Robert, (i)
DePaolis, Valerio, (i), (ii)

Derby, Edward John Stanley, 18th Earl of, (i), (ii)
 De Rossi, Grazia, (i)
Des O'Connor Show (TV), (i)
Desert Rats, The (film), (i)
 Deutscher, Isaac: Stalin, (i); Trotsky, (i)
 de Vries, Peter, (i); Consenting Adults, (i)
Diamonds are Forever (film), (i)
 Diana, Princess of Wales: wedding, (i)
Dick Cavett Show, The (USA), (i)
 Dickens, Charles: Dombey and Son, (i), (ii)
 Diller, Phyllis, (i)
Divorce His, Divorce Hers (TV film), (i), (ii)
 Djilas, Milovan, (i)
 Dmytryk, Edward, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Doctor Faustus (film) see Marlowe, Christopher
Don Quixote (film), (i), (ii)
 Donahue, Phil, (i), (ii)
 Donen, Stanley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Dorsey, Hebe, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Dotti, Andrea, (i)
 Douglas, Valerie, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
 Drake, Alfred, (i)
 Drew, Ethel, (i)
 Dreyfuss, Richard, (i)
 Dubrovnik, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Duke, Patty, (i)
 Dulles, Alan, (i)
 Dummer, Dillwyn, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
 Dummer, Edwin, (i)
 Dummer, Edwina, (i)
 Dundy, Elaine: The Old Man and Me, (i)
 Dunlop, Frank, (i), (ii)
 Dunn, Michael, (i), (ii)
 Durrell, Lawrence, (i)
 Duvalier, Jean-Claude ('Baby Doc'), (i), (ii)n18, (iii)
 Duvalier, Nicolas, (i)
 Dynevor, Richard Charles Uryan Rhys, 9th Baron, (i), (ii)

Eastern Boys' School, Port Talbot, (i), (ii)
Eastwood, Clint, (i), (ii), (iii)
Easy Rider (film), (i)
Ebersole, Christine, (i), (ii)
Eccles, Jeremy, (i)n144
Echeverria Alvarez, Luis, (i), (ii)
Ed Sullivan Show (US TV production), (i)
Eden, Anthony (later 1st Earl of Avon), (i)
Edwards, Blake, (i), (ii)
Edwards, Gareth, (i)
Edwards, Jack Jones, (i)
Egremont, John Wyndham, 1st Baron, (i)
Einstein, Albert, (i)
Eisenhower, Dwight D., (i)
Eisteddfodau, (i)
Ekland, Britt, (i), (ii)
Elba, (i)
Eldridge, Mildred (Mrs R. S. Thomas), (i)
Eliot, T. S., (i), (ii), (iii); 'The Journey of the Magi', (i); 'Rhapsody on a Windy Night', (i)
Elizabeth, Princess of Yugoslavia ('Elisheba'): visits RB, (i), (ii); RB on character of, (i), (ii); wishes to meet Warren Beatty, (i); at Curt Jurgens party, (i); marriage to Neil Balfour, (i); RB's engagement to, (i); RB's relations with, (i); ET complains about, (i)
Elizabeth Taylor in London (TV documentary), (i)
Ellin, Stanley, (i)
Ellis, Claire, (i)
Ellis, Osian Gwynn, (i)
Ellis, Rene, (i), (ii)
Ellis Island (TV series), (i)
Emmys (awards), (i)
Enzo (caretaker), (i)
Equus (film), (i)
Erdödy, Count Josip, (i)
Ettori, Claudye see Bozzacchi, Claudye
Evans ('Bumf'; physics teacher), (i)
Evans, A. Leslie ('Todd'), (i)
Evans, Caradoc, (i)
Evans, Edgar (or Charles Warwick Evans), (i)

Evans, Dame Edith, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Evans, Edith (née James; Aunt Edie), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Evans, Harold, (i)
 Evans, J. Derlwyn, (i)
 Evans, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Everyman's Library, (i), (ii)
 Evian, France, (i)
Exorcist II: The Heretic (film), (i)
 Eynon, Colin T. C., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Fair, A. A. (E. S. Gardner), (i)
 Fairbanks, Douglas, Jr, (i)
 Fallows, B., (i)
 Farah Pahlavi, Shahbanu of Iran, (i)
 Farquarson, Count Robert, (i)
 Farrow, Mia, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Faulkner, William: Fable, (i)
 Favez, Mme (of Geneva), (i)
 Fellini, Federico, (i)
 Ferris, Paul, (i)
 Fforde, Lady Jean, Countess of Arran, (i)
 Fields, Thor, (i)
 Fields, W. C., (i)
Fifth Column, The (TV adaptation of Hemingway), (i)
 Fillistorf, Janine, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Fillistorf, Paul, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Fillistorf, Roger, (i)
 Finch, Peter, (i)
 Finney, Albert, (i)
 Fiorentina, Villa La, Cap Ferrat, (i)
 Fisher, Eddie, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Fisher, Maria (ET's daughter): RB adopts, (i); photographer hits in face, (i); in Rome with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); wins money on horse race, (i); RB tells story of life to, (i); nervous temperament, (i), (ii); RB buys bike for, (i); in school sports, (i); makes up story of adoption, (i); in Gstaad, (i), (ii); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); addresses RB as Richard, (i); talkativeness, (i), (ii); stays with RB, (i); RB praises, (i); celebrates birthday, (i); RB writes to, (i), (ii); dislikes M.A.S.H., (i); in Mexico with RB, (i), (ii); view of parents, (i); grandmother's death, (i); buys books with RB, (i); in

Yugoslavia, (i), (ii); ET writes to, (i); religion, (i); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i); appearance, (i); with RB in Switzerland, (i); leaves for Leningrad, (i); marriage to Carson, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Fitzgerald, Geraldine, (i)

Fitzgibbon, Constantine, (i), (ii)

Flanagan, Agnes, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Flanagan, Frank, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); death, (i)

Flea in Your Ear, A (film), (i), (ii)

Fleming, Ian, (i); You Only Live Twice, (i)

Flink, Stanley, (i)

Florence: floods (November 1966), (i), (ii)

Flynn, Errol, (i)

Folliet, Pierre, (i)

Fonda, Henry, (i), (ii)

Fonda, Jane, (i), (ii)

Fonssagrives, Mia, (i)

Fonteyn, (Dame) Margot, (i), (ii)

Foot, Michael, (i)

Foot, Richard ('Don Ricardo'), (i), (ii)

Ford, John, (i)

Foreman, Carl, (i)

Forester, C. S.: Lord Hornblower, (i)

Forster, E. M., (i)

Forster, John, (i)n176

Forster, Robert, (i)

Forsyth (or Forsythe), Rosemary, (i)

Fothergill, Robert, (i)

Fox, Freddie, (i)

Fox, Robert, (i), (ii)

Foyle's bookshop, London, (i)

France: falls to Germany (1940), (i); see also Paris

Franco, General Francisco, (i)

Frankenheimer, John, (i), (ii)

Frankovich, Mike, (i)

Frazier, Joe, (i)

Frederick II (the Great), King of Prussia, (i)

French, Hugh: in New York, (i); as RB's and ET's agent, (i), (ii); upsets Frosch, (i); character, (i); in Italy, (i); loses girlfriend, (i); on Zanuck's praising Staircase, (i); on Universal's threat to sue RB, (i); drinking,

(i); on reviews of Staircase, (i); wishes ET to do TV show with Mancini, (i); in Malibu, (i); RB lunches with, (i); and Don Quixote, (i); on Ustinov and Hammersmith is Out, (i); RB dismisses, (i); on Yugoslav deviousness, (i)

French Connection, The (film), (i)

Freud, Sigmund, (i)

Frings, Kurt, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Frosch, Aaron: and RB's prospective biography, (i); opposes Sybil's marriage to Christopher (Zankoff), (i); in Rome, (i), (ii), (iii); Hugh French upsets, (i); drinking, (i); accompanies Kate to Monte Carlo, (i); seasick on Kalizma, (i); RB records Bobby Kennedy narration in house, (i); multiple sclerosis, (i); praises RB's intelligence, (i); in Paris, (i); and Bernard Greenford's financial problems, (i), (ii); on RB's finances, (i); and RB's purchase of ring for ET, (i); reports on RB and ET's wealth, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); decline, (i); on RB's overspending, (i); RB discusses film projects with, (i); in New York, (i), (ii); and RB's Tito film, (i); and Saltzman's bid for X, Y and Zee, (i); on biographer of RB, (i); RB stays at Long Island home, (i); RB writes to, (i); RB considers firing, (i); RB talks with in Céligny, (i); RB's exasperation with, (i)

Frosch, Bobby (Aaron's wife), (i), (ii)

Frost, (Sir) David, (i), (ii), (iii)

Fruman, Norman: Coleridge: The Damaged Archangel, (i)

Fry, Christopher: The Boy with a Cart, (i); The Lady's Not for Burning, (i)

Furse, Margaret, (i)

Furstenberg, Betsy von, (i)

Furstenberg, Princess Ira von, (i)

Galbraith, John Kenneth, (i)

Gallico, Paul, (i)

Gann, Ernest R.: The Antagonists, (i)

Garbo, Greta, (i)

Gardner, Ava, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Gardner, Erle Stanley, (i)

Gardner, Helen, (i)n110

Garland, Judy, (i)

Gary, Romain, (i); White Dog, (i)

Gassman, Vittorio, (i), (ii)

Gathering Storm, The/Walk with Destiny (drama-documentary), (i)

Gemini 4 (spacecraft), (i)

General Elections (British): (1966), (i), (ii); (1970), (i), (ii)

Geneva, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)

George, Trevor, (i), (ii), (iii)
 George VI, King: wartime speech, (i); stutter, (i)
 Germans: RB's view of, (i)
 Germany: in war, (i); bombing attacks on Britain, (i)
 Gerson, Leslie (later Latour), (i)n22, (ii)
 Getty, Aileen (later Wilding), (i), (ii)
 Getty, J. Paul, (i), (ii)
 Getty, Mark, (i)
 Gibbs, Philip Hamilton: Realities of War, (i)
 Gibran, Khalil: The Prophet, (i)
 Gibson, Wilfrid Wilson, (i)
 Gibson, William, (i)
 Gielgud, (Sir) John: directs Hamlet in Toronto, (i); love of dressing up, (i); proposes film of The Tempest, (i); asked to write on Olivier, (i); acting, (i), (ii); RB's view of, (i), (ii); gives dog to ET, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); on Marat-Sade, (i); influence on RB, (i); letter to RB, (i); voice, (i)
 Gillmore, Margalo, (i)
Gingerbread Lady (film), (i)
 Glavin, William (Bill), (i)
 Glenville, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Go-Between, The (film), (i), (ii)
 Goetz, Edie, (i), (ii)
 Goldberg, Harry, (i)
 Goldman, E. F.: The Tragedy of Lyndon Johnson, (i), (ii)
 Goldman, Milton, (i)
 Goldwyn, Sam, (i)
Goodbye Girl, The (film), (i)
 Gordon, Gale, (i)
 Gordon, John, (i)
 Gould, Elliott, (i), (ii)
 Grace, Princess of Monaco (Grace Kelly): RB describes, (i)n17; photographed with ET and Mara, (i); RB talks to at Ferrières, (i); Scorpio birth sign, (i); enjoys ET's company, (i); on Kalizma, (i); invites RB and ET to Red Cross ball, (i); status as film star, (i); cuts RB and ET during 'Scandale', (i); sends birthday telegram to RB, (i); at Rothschild party, (i), (ii); Duchess of Windsor disparages, (i); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i), (ii)
 Grade, Sir Lew (later Baron), (i), (ii)
 Graham, Brian, (i), (ii)
 Granger, Stewart, (i), (ii)

Grant, Cary, (i)
Graves, Robert, (i)
Gray, Colleen, (i)
Greece: Italy invades (1940), (i), (ii)
Green, Guy, (i)
Green, Johnny, (i)
Green, Kathy, (i)
Green, Nigel, (i)
Green Grow the Rushes (film), (i)
Greene, Graham, (i), (ii)
Greenford, Bernard, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Greenford, Claire, (i), (ii)
Greenford, Helen, (i), (ii)
Greenwood, Arthur, (i)
Grenier, Richard: Yes and Back Again (novel), (i)
Greyn, Clinton, (i), (ii), (iii)
Griffith, Miss E. E., (i)
Griffith, Hugh, (i)
Griffith, Kenneth, (i)
Griffiths, Morgan ('Mog'), (i), (ii)
Grimes, Stephen, (i)
Gronow, Milly, (i)
Gronow, Morwen, (i)
Gross, John (Simmy's fiancé), (i), (ii)
Grunwald, Anatole de, (i)
Gstaad, Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii)
Guadalajara, Mexico, (i)
Guardino, Harry, (i)
Guilaroff, Sydney, (i)
Guinness, (Sir) Alec, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Gunsberg family, (i)
Guys and Dolls (stage musical), (i)

Haber, Joyce, (i), (ii)
Haemophilia foundation, Oxford, (i)
Hagen, Victor Wolfgang von, (i)
Haggard, Stephen, (i)

Haggiag, Robert, (i), (ii)
 Hailey, Arthur: Airport, (i)
 Haiti, (i), (ii)
 Hakim, Robert, (i)
 Haldane, J. B. S., (i)
 Hall, Bob, (i)
 Hamilton, George, (i)
Hammersmith is Out (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Hammett, Dashiell, (i)
 Hankey, Maurice, (i)
 Hanley, Richard ('Dick'): calls from Greece, (i); sends money from Antibes, (i); helps with packing, (i); shows car to RB, (i); RB has birthday lunch with, (i); at meeting with Sharaff, (i); in Rome, (i); ET gives dragon pin to, (i); dines with RB, (i); gives short history of Africa to RB, (i); sails to Monte Carlo in Kalizma, (i); on Sardinia, (i); semi-invalid state, (i); on Jackie Kennedy-Onassis, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); orders plane to take RB to Geneva, (i); and Jane Swanson, (i); ET's affection for, (i); death, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); and John Lee's imagined dying, (i); on press reports on ET's health, (i); attends Henry Wilding's funeral, (i); bores RB, (i); on bread bill in Rome, (i)
 Hapgood, George M. ('Happy'), (i)
 Hardy, Liz, (i)
 Hardy, Robert ('Tim'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Hare, Glynis, (i)
 Harlech, David Ormsby-Gore, 5th Baron, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Harlech Television (company), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Elizabeth (later Harrison; née Rees-Williams), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Julie, (i)
 Harris, Michael, (i)
 Harris, Richard, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harris, Rosemary, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Harrison, Madeleine (later Rowe-Beddoe), (i)
 Harrison, Rachel (Rex's wife) see Roberts, Rachel
 Harrison, Rex: plays Julius Caesar in Cleopatra, (i), (ii); relations with RB, (i); wins Oscar, (i); attends press conference, (i); marriage to Rachel Roberts, (i); in Portofino, (i), (ii); in Paris, (i); wears toupée and make-up, (i), (ii); and filming of Staircase, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi); in A Flea in Your Ear, (i), (ii); ill behaviour and jealousy of ET's celebrity, (i); dress, (i); and RB's drinking, (i); manner, (i); power as actor, (i); competitiveness, (i), (ii); marriage to Eilizabeth Rees-Williams, (i); visits RB on Kalizma, (i); sings in My Fair Lady, (i); ageing, (i); earnings, (i); terminates contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, (i); temper, (i); in My Fair Lady, (i), (ii); RB praises, (i)

Hart, Moss, (i), (ii)
 Harte, Sheldon, (i)
 Hartley, Neil, (i)
 Harvey, Laurence, (i)
 Haszard, James, (i)
 Hatfield, Ruth, (i)
 Hathaway, Henry, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
 Hauser, Frank R., (i)
 Hawaii, (i), (ii)
 Hawn, Goldie, (i)
 Hay, Sally see Burton, Sally
 Hayes, Helen, (i), (ii)
 Heath, (Sir) Edward, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Heatherton, Davenie Johanna ('Joey'), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Heathfield School, Ascot, (i)
 Heffer, Richard, (i)
Hell is for Heroes (film), (i)
 Hellman, Lillian: Montserrat, (i)
 Hemingway, Ernest, (i), (ii)
 Henry, Ed, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Hepburn, Audrey, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Herbert, Sir Alan Patrick, (i)
 Herbert, George, (i)
 Herzog, Maurice, (i)
 Hesse, Hermann: Steppenwolf, (i)
 Hever Castle, Kent, (i)
 Heycock, Llew, Baron, (i), (ii)
 Heyman, David, (i)
 Heyman, John: meets RB in London, (i); arranges ET's introduction to Elie de Rothschild, (i); in Italy, (i); and Losey's fear of RB and ET, (i); Noël Coward on, (i); in Rome, (i), (ii); and Man from Nowhere, (i); on Tynan, (i); calls on RB on Elba, (i); re-established as RB's agent, (i), (ii); sends confusing messages to RB, (i); travels, (i); ambitions, (i); owes money to RB, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i); and Terence Baker, (i); and Romy Schneider, (i); on Losey's drinking, (i); introduces Michael Linnit, (i); pursues Suzy Kendall, (i)
 Heyman, Norma (John's wife; 'Fred'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)
 Hibberd, Mrs, (i)
 Hildyard, Dave, (i)
 Hildyard, Jack, (i)

Hilton, Conrad (father), (i)
Hilton, Conrad ('Nicky'), (i), (ii); death, (i), (ii)
Hilton, Patricia, (i)
Hinxman, Margaret, (i)
Hiss, Alger, (i)
Hitler, Adolf, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
Hobson, Sir Harold, (i)
Hochhuth, Rolf: The Soldiers, (i), (ii)
Hockin, Charles, (i), (ii)
Hoffman, Dustin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Hogg, Quintin (Baron Hailsham), (i)
Holder, Roy, (i)
Hollywood: RB in, (i), (ii); Oscars (1970), (i)
Holmes, Larry, (i)
Holroyd, Sir Michael: Lytton Strachey, (i), (ii)
Hope, Bob, (i)
Hope-Wallace, Philip, (i)
Hopkins, Gerard Manley, (i), (ii)
Hopkins, Mr & Mrs, (i)
Horan, Tom, (i)
Hordern, Michael, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Hornblower, Arthur and Leonora, (i)
Hornby, Ann Sheran (née Cazalet): sends Wodehouse book to RB, (i); unmarried state, (i); marriage to Simon, (i); with RB on Kalizma at Cap Ferrat, (i); on George Hamilton, (i); RB abuses, (i); dislikes cats, (i); RB disparages, (i), (ii); at ET's 40th birthday celebrations, (i); RB asks to find house near Oxford, (i)
Hornby, Simon, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Horne, Lena, (i)
Housman, A. E.: A Shropshire Lad, (i)
Houston, Donald, (i)
Howard, John, (i)
Howard, Trevor, (i)
Howerd, Frankie, (i)
Howes, Sally Anne, (i)
Hudson, Rock, (i), (ii)
Hughes, Howard, (i)
Hughes, V., (i)
Hulbert, Jack, (i)

Humphrey, Hubert, (i)

Hungary: Soviet intervention (1956), (i); RB wishes to make film in, (i), (ii); RB's interest in, (i); RB films in, (i), (ii), (iii)

Hunt, James, (i)

Hunter, N. C., (i)

Hunter, Tab, (i)

Hurt, John, (i)

Huston, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Hutton, Brian, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Huxley, Aldous, (i); The Devils of Loudon, (i)

Hyde-White, Wilfrid, (i)

Ice Palace (film), (i), (ii)

Ici Paris (magazine), (i)

Inge, William Ralph, Dean of St Paul's, (i)

Innes, Michael (J. I. M. Stewart), (i), (ii)

IRA (Irish Republican Army), (i)

Iraq-Iran war (1980-8), (i)

Ischia, (i)

Israel: and Six Day War, (i), (ii); RB invited to, (i)

Italy: enters war, (i); war with Greece, (i), (ii); changes to summertime (1966), (i); floods (November 1966), (i); unwarlike nature, (i); political disorder, (i)

Jacklin, Tony, (i)

Jackpot (unfinished film), (i)

Jacks, Robert, (i)

Jackson, Bill, (i)

Jackson, Mrs (neighbour), (i), (ii)

James, Alan ('Dad'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Ben (Elfed's brother), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

James, Carwyn, (i)

James, Cecilia (née Jenkins; RB's sister; 'Cis'): birth, (i); RB moves in with as child, (i); religious observance, (i); RB shops for, (i), (ii); rows with Elfed, (i); rebukes RB, (i); and brother David's visit, (i); at Pyle Eisteddfod, (i); birthday, (i); at Cwm, (i), (ii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); RB helps with housework, (i); told of RB's eating chocolate, (i); goes to Dad James's, (i); moods, (i); quarrel with RB, (i); Verdun gives money to, (i); visits RB, (i), (ii); RB's relations with, (i); RB sends money to, (i); prospective death, (i); writes to RB in Mexico, (i)

James, Elfed (Cecilia's husband): marriage, (i); RB lives with as child, (i); chapel-going, (i); on Co-op management committee, (i); writes in RB's diary, (i), (ii); plays Monopoly, (i); row with Cis, (i); misses annual holiday, (i); protests at working conditions, (i); takes shelter in air raid, (i); RB collects pay for, (i), (ii); gathers blackberries with RB, (i); RB's breach with, (i); moods, (i); visits RB, (i), (ii); RB sends money to, (i)

James, Joe, (i)

James, Lorenzo, (i)n143

James, 'Mam' (Elfed's mother), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

James, Marian (Cis-Elfed's daughter), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Rhianon (Cis-Elfed's daughter), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

James, Winifred ('Auntie'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Japrisot, Sébastien, (i)

Jarrott, Charles, (i), (ii)

Jeakins, Dorothy, (i)

Jeffrey, Peter, (i)n124

Jenkins, Arthur ('Boyo'; 'Bonehead'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Jenkins, Betty (Will's wife), (i)

Jenkins, Cassie (Tom's wife), (i), (ii)n1, (iii)

Jenkins, Catherine (RB's sister; 'Cassie'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Jenkins, Clive, (i)

Jenkins, David (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); RB takes money from, (i); letter to Sis, (i); home on holiday, (i), (ii); plays tennis with RB, (i); visits RB, (i); RB takes kit to Llantwit Major, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); turns Tory, (i)

Jenkins, Edith (RB's sister): birth, (i); RB sees, (i), (ii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); letter to RB, (i); expelled by brother Tom for smoking, (i); death and funeral, (i), (ii)

Jenkins, Edith Maud (née Thomas; RB's mother): background, (i); death, (i)

Jenkins, Emma (Wendy and Derek's daughter), (i)

Jenkins, Graham (RB's brother): birth, (i); shares bed with RB, (i); visits RB as child, (i), (ii), (iii); acquires new trousers, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); at Francis Taylor's funeral, (i); in Paris, (i); visits RB with friend, (i); talks to press, (i), (ii), (iii); drinking, (i); RB talks to on rugby film, (i); RB discusses brother Verdun's health with, (i)

Jenkins, Gwyneth (Gwen; Ivor's wife): visits RB as child, (i); RB eats with, (i); RB visits on Long Island, (i); accompanies Kate on travels, (i), (ii); in London, (i); on RB's boat, (i); at Besancon's funeral, (i); at granddaughter's christening, (i); arthritis, (i); RB requests Welsh books from, (i); at Aston Clinton, (i); visits Gstaad, (i), (ii); and Ivor's decline, (i); at Squire's Mount, Hampstead, (i), (ii); RB writes to, (i); RB visits, (i)

Jenkins, Hilary (Graham's wife), (i)

Jenkins, Hyral (Tom's second wife), (i), (ii), (iii)

Jenkins, Ivor (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); goes to Swansea, (i); RB visits, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); birthday, (i); at Cwm, (i); army service, (i); meets RB in Switzerland, (i), (ii); Cis and Elfed ignore, (i); on Sybil's second marriage, (i); in USA, (i); RB's relations with, (i), (ii); accompanies Kate to Italy, (i); takes Kate to New York, (i); teaching in London, (i); in Sardinia, (i); at Besancon's funeral, (i); paralysed in accident, (i), (ii), (iii); moves toenails, (i); prospective death, (i); condition improves, (i), (ii), (iii); and MacLeish poetry reading, (i); Kate Burton visits, (i); visits RB, (i); RB enquires about equipment for, (i), (ii); heart trouble, (i); decline, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); visits Gstaad, (i); on weakness in others, (i); leaves hospital, (i); wins book prizes, (i); RB writes to, (i); attacks waiter, (i); death and funeral, (i)n111, (ii)

Jenkins, Josie, (i)

Jenkins, Richard Walter see Burton, Richard

Jenkins, Richard Walter (RB's father): work as collier, (i), (ii); death, (i), (ii), (iii); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); RB requests to take back, (i); buys shoes for RB, (i); RB's likeness to, (i)

Jenkins, Thomas Henry (RB's brother): birth, (i); marriage, (i); works as miner, (i); widowed, (i)n1; RB visits, (i), (ii), (iii); gives trousers to RB, (i); RB fails to return planks, (i); visits RB, (i); robbed, (i); gives money to RB, (i); expels Edie, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); second wife (Hyrall), (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); illness, (i); death, (i)

Jenkins, Verdun (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); gives money to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); comes into money, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); heart trouble, (i)

Jenkins, Wendy and Derek (daughter-in-law and son of Gwyneth), (i)

Jenkins, William (RB's brother): birth, (i); works as miner, (i); in army, (i); visits home, (i); returns to army, (i); sends money to RB, (i); at sister Edie's funeral, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); ageing and ill-health, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); acquires hearing aid, (i)

Joad, C. E. M., (i)

Johannesburg, (i), (ii)

Johannot, Colonel Louis, (i)

John, Augustus, (i)

Johnson, Lady Bird, (i)

Johnson, Lyndon B., (i), (ii)

Johnson, Samuel, (i), (ii)

Jonas, Franz, (i)

Jones, Cliff, (i)

Jones, David (Cwmafan neighbour), (i)

Jones, David (writer/artist), (i), (ii)

Jones, Ivor, (i)

Jones, James Earl, (i), (ii)

Jones, Jimmy, (i)

Jones, Mary Anne, (i)
 Jones, Meredith: RB writes on, (i)
 Jones, Owen, (i), (ii)
 Jones, Simeon, (i)
 Jones, Stanley, (i)
 Joyce, James, (i), (ii); Ulysses, (i), (ii)
 Joyce, William ('Lord Haw-Haw'), (i)
 Juárez García, Benito Pablo, (i)
 Judge, Diane, (i)
 Jurgens, Curt, (i), (ii), (iii)
Justine (film), (i)

Kafka, Franz, (i), (ii), (iii)
Kalizma (yacht earlier Odysssea): RB rents, (i), (ii); passes inspection, (i); life on, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii); stabilizers proposed, (i); flooded, (i); condition, (i)
 Kanter, Jay, (i)
 Karen (nurse), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Karl, Harry, (i)
 Karloff, Boris, (i)
 Kashfi, Anna, (i)
 Kastner, Elliott, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Katselas, Milton, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kazan, Elia ('Gadge'), (i), (ii)
 Kehl (German banker), (i)
 Keith, Brian, (i)
 Keller, Werner: The Bible as History, (i)
 Kelly, Margaret Katherine ('Peggy'), (i)
 Kendall, Kay, (i)
 Kendall, Suzy, (i), (ii)
 Kennamer, Dr Rexford, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
 Kennedy, Cheryl, (i)
 Kennedy, Edward, (i), (ii)
 Kennedy, Ethel, (i), (ii)
 Kennedy, John F., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Kennedy, Ludovic: Trial of Stephen Ward, (i)
 Kennedy, Robert: RB's friendship with, (i); RB meets in Italy, (i); at US premiere of Doctor Faustus, (i);

RB narrates for documentary on, (i); RB writes article on, (i); RB speaks at fund-raising dinner for, (i);
 seduces Fonteyn, (i); political compromises, (i); swaps mutual insults with RB, (i)
 Kent, Edward, Duke and Katherine, Duchess of, (i)
 Kent State University, Ohio: students killed, (i)
 Kerr, Deborah, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Keyword (or Hayward), Jack, (i)
 Khrushchev, Nikita S., (i)
King of Kings (film), (i), (ii)
 Kingsmill, Hugh, (i)
 Kinross, Patrick Balfour, 3rd Baron: Between Two Seas, (i)
 Kisling, Moise, (i)
 Kissinger, David, (i)
 Kissinger, Henry, (i), (ii)
 Kissinger, Nancy, (i)
Klansman, The (film), (i)
 Kline, Kevin, (i)
 Knight, Esmond, (i), (ii)
 Knoessen, Fritz (Fred), (i), (ii)
 Koessler, Edouard, (i)
 Koessler, Pierre, (i)
 Koestler, Arthur, (i)
 Korda, (Sir) Alexander, (i), (ii)
 Korda, Alexandra (later Metcalfe), (i)
 Kossoff, David, (i)
 Kosygin, Alexei, (i)
Kotch (film), (i)
 Kotor, Bay of, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Krahmer, Bettina: RB praises, (i), (ii); stays with RB, (i); takes trip round world, (i); RB protects in crowd,
 (i); as guest in boat, (i); lunches with RB, (i), (ii); disturbs ET and Guy de Rothschild in toilet, (i); at ET's
 40th birthday, (i)
 Krahmer, Lili (née de Rothschild), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Kroll, Lucy, (i)
 Krüger, Hardy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kruger National Park, South Africa, (i)
 Kupari, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Kupcinet, Irv ('Kup'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Kurnitz, Harry, (i)

Labour Party (British): election victory (1966), (i), (ii)
 Ladas, Diana, (i), (ii), (iii)
Ladies' Home Journal, (i)
 Lambert, Constant, (i), (ii)
 Lambourne, Eric, (i)
 Lancaster, Burt, (i), (ii)
 Landis, Carole, (i)
Landlord, The (film), (i)
 Lane, Patrick A., (i)
 Lane, Tom, (i)
 Lansbury, Angela, (i)
 Lantz, Robbie, (i), (ii)
 La Rue, Frank, (i), (ii)
Last Days of Dolwyn, The (film), (i)
 Lastricati, Carlo, (i)
 Las Vegas, (i)
 Latour, François, (i)n22, (ii)
Laughter in the Dark (film), (i)
 Laurentiis, Dino de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Laval, Pierre, (i)
 Lawford, Peter, (i)
 Lawick, Hugo Van: Solo, (i)
 Lawrence, D. H., (i)
 Leblanc (journalist), (i)
 Le Carré, John: The Looking-Glass War, (i)
 Lee, Bernard, (i)
 Lee, John: shows new car to RB, (i); in Rome, (i); dines with RB, (i); drinking, (i); in Nice, (i); in Sardinia, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); observes sex act, (i); and Jane Swanson, (i); calls out doctor, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); attends Henry Wilding's funeral, (i)

Lee, Laurie: As I Walked Out One Midsummer Morning, (i)
 Lehman, Ernest, (i)
 Leigh, Vivien: death, (i); appearance, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); proposed for Montserrat, (i)
 Leighton, Margaret (Mrs Michael Wilding), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lerner, Alan Jay, (i), (ii)
 Lesley, Cole ('Coley'), (i)
 Lesseps, Ferdinand de, (i)
 Le Tourneur, Yves, (i)
 Levin, Ira: Rosemary's Baby, (i)
 Levine, Joseph, (i)
 Lewes, George Henry, (i)
 Lewin, David, (i), (ii)
 Lewis, A. E., (i)
 Lewis, Alun, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lewis, Stephen, (i)
 Lindroth, Arne, (i)
 Linnit, Michael, (i)
Lion in Winter, The (film), (i)
 Lisi, Virna, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Liston, Sonny, (i)
Little Foxes, The (stage production), (i)
 Lloyd, Leo, (i)
 Lloyd George, David, 1st Earl, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Lodwig, David H., (i), (ii)
 Loewe, Fritz, (i)
 Logan, Joshua, (i), (ii)
 London: wartime Blitz on, (i)
 Longford, Elizabeth, Countess of, (i); Wellington: The Years of the Sword, (i)
 Longhurst, Henry, (i)
Look (magazine), (i), (ii), (iii)
Look Back in Anger (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Loos, Anita: A Girl Like I, (i)
 Loren, Sophia, (i), (ii)
 Los Angeles: RB in, (i), (ii); Camelot plays in, (i)
 Losey, Joseph: directs The Assassination of Trotsky, (i)n39, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); leaves
 drunken Rachel Roberts, (i); RB lunches with, (i); RB criticises, (i); falls ill, (i); and Man from Nowhere,
 (i); RB's fondness for, (i); at showing of Boom! with RB, (i); asks RB to play Trotsky, (i); and Romy

Schneider, (i); and Ron Berkeley, (i); drinking, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); entertains RB and ET, (i); dines with RB and ET, (i), (ii)

Losey, Patricia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Louis XIV, King of France, (i)

Louise, Tina, (i)

Loukes, Nicholas, (i)

Lowell, Jodi, (i)

Lowell, Robert, (i)

Lowry, Malcolm: Under the Volcano, (i), (ii)

Lublin, Ronald A., (i), (ii)

Lucas, Alex, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Lucas (of Christian Science Monitor), (i)

Lugosi, Bela, (i)

Lyalin, Oleg, (i)n195

Lynch, Alfred, (i)

Lyon, Sue, (i)

Maas, Peter: The Valachi Papers, (i)

Macaulay, Thomas Babington, 1st Baron, (i)

McCall's (magazine), (i)

McCann, Hugh Wray: Utmost Fish, (i)

McCarthy, Eugene, (i)

McCarthy, Kevin, (i), (ii)

McClure, Eres, (i), (ii)

McClure, John, (i), (ii)

McDivitt, James Alton, (i)n83

MacDonald, James Ramsay, (i)

Macdonald, John D., (i), (ii), (iii); One Monday We Killed Them All, (i), (ii); Travis Magee (series), (i)

Macdonald, Richard, (i)

MacDonald, Ross, (i), (ii)

McDowell, Roddy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

McGuire, Dorothy, (i)

Machen, Arthur: The London Adventure, (i)

Machiavelli, Niccolò, (i), (ii)

McIntosh, David, (i)n144

McKechnie, James, (i)

McKee, Alexander: Caen, (i)

MacKenna's Gold (film), (i)
 McKuen, Rod, (i)
 MacLaine, Shirley, (i); You Can Get There From Here, (i)
 Maclean, Fitzroy, (i)
 MacLeish, Archibald, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 MacNeice, Louis, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 McWhorter, Richard F.: in Rome for The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); at Hanley's birthday celebration, (i); manner, (i); writes to Zeffirelli, (i); talks to Wallis about Anne of Thousand Days, (i); RB feeds at barbecue, (i); and RB's visit to Ivor, (i); RB sees in Los Angeles, (i); in Hungary, (i)
 Mafia, (i)
 Magnani, Anna, (i)
 Maguy, Alex, (i)
 Mahoney, Gerry A., (i)
 Mai-Mai, (i)
 Mainwaring, Thomas H., (i), (ii)
 Maitland, Marne, (i)
 Malamud, Bernard: The Fixer, (i), (ii)
 Malan, Adolph ('Sailor'), (i)
 Malary, Guy, (i)
 Malibu, (i)
 Malle, Madame (Anne-Marie Deschodt), (i), (ii)
 Mallon, Thomas, (i)
Man for All Seasons, A (film), (i)
Man from Nowhere, The (proposed film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Man Who Would Be King, The (film), (i)
 Manchester, William, (i); The Arms of Krupp, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Mancini, Henry, (i)
 Mankiewicz, Joseph L., (i), (ii), (iii)
 Mankowitz, Wolf, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Mann, Roderick (Roddy), (i), (ii); The Headliner, (i)
 Mansfield, Jayne, (i)
 Mao Tse-tung, (i)
 Marais, Eugene N.: My Friends the Baboons, (i)
 Marceau, Marcel, (i)
 Marcellin, Raymond, (i)n142
Marco Polo (film), (i)
 Margaret, Princess, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)

Maria (stewardess), (i)

Marlowe, Christopher: Dr Faustus: RB in OUDS production, (i); Coghill adapts for screen, (i)n65; filming, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); Levine promises to back, (i); RB and ET support financially, (i); RB sees completed film, (i); film shown, (i), (ii); opening in Oxford, (i); American premiere, (i); failure, (i)

Marlowe, Robin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Marlowe, Stephen: The Shining, (i)

Marquand, Christian, (i)

Marquet, Albert, (i)

Marshall, Ray, (i)

Martin, Dean, (i)

Martinelli, Elsa, (i)

Masalila, Ambrose, (i)

M.A.S.H. (film), (i)

Mason, James, (i)

Massacre in Rome (film), (i)

Masters, David, (i)

Mastroianni, Marcello, (i)

Mastroianni, Marian (RB's cousin), (i)

Matthews, Gethin, (i)n232

Maugham, William Somerset, (i)

Mavroleon, Alessandra Maria (Ally), (i)

Maxwell, Gavin, (i); Ring of Bright Water, (i)

Mayer, Louis B., (i)

Mayer, Oscar, (i)

Mayne, Ferdy, (i)

Mayne, W. H. (ironmonger), (i)

Medusa Touch, The (film), (i)

Meeting Mrs Jenkins (RB), (i), (ii)

Mérimée, Prosper: Carmen, (i)

Merrick, Mike, (i), (ii)

Merrill, Robert, (i)

Merriman, Richard, (i)

Messina, (i)

Metcalf, David, (i)n53

Mexicali, California, (i), (ii)

Mexico: politics, (i), (ii); see also Puerto Vallarta

Meyer, R. J. O., (i)

Miami, (i)
Michelangelo (ship), (i)
Michener, James A.: The Drifters, (i)
Mihailovic, Draza, (i)
Miles, Christopher, (i)
Miles, Eddie, (i), (ii)
Miles, Sylvia, (i)
Miller, Beatrix, (i), (ii)
Millfield School, Somerset, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Minnelli, Liza, (i), (ii)
Mismaloya, (i), (ii)
Mitchell, Stephen, (i)
ML Club, London, (i), (ii)
Monaco, (i)
Monsarrat, Nicholas: Smith and Jones, (i)
Monte Carlo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Montenegro, (i)
Montesquieu, Madame de, (i)
Montreux, (i)
Moore, Dudley, (i)
Moore, Mary Tyler, (i)
Moore, Robin: The French Connection, (i)
Moore, Roger, (i)
Moorehead, Alan: Eclipse, (i)
More, George, (i)
Moreau, Jeanne, (i), (ii)
Morgan, Cliff, (i), (ii), (iii)
Morgan, Sir Henry, (i)
Morgan, John, (i), (ii)
Morgan, Mary, (i)
Morgan, Norman, (i)
Morgan, W. John, (i)
Morgenstern, Joe, (i)
Morley, John David, (i), (ii)
Morris, Alb, (i)
Morris, Donald R.: The Washing of the Spears, (i)
Morris, Oswald ('Ossie'), (i), (ii)

Morse, Nan, (i)
 Mortimer, Bert, (i)
 Mortimer, Henry, (i)
 Mortimer, Linda, (i)
 Morton, Gary, (i)
 Mosley, Sir Oswald, (i); My Life, (i), (ii)
 Mostar, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Mostel, Zero, (i)
 Mount, Peggy, (i)
 Mountain Ash, (i)
 Moyes, Patricia ('Penny'), (i)
 Muenz, Richard, (i), (ii)
 Muggeridge, Malcolm, (i); Tread Softly for You Tread on My Jokes, (i)
 Mugglestone, Ken, (i)
 Munster, Peggy, (i)
 Munster, Sarah, (i)
 Murdoch, (Dame) Iris, (i), (ii)
 Murphy, Audie, (i)
 Murray, Jim, (i)
 Mussolini, Benito, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
My Cousin Rachel (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
My Fair Lady (stage musical), (i), (ii), (iii)
 'My Life at 50' (RB; article), (i)n63

Nabokov, Vladimir, (i); Laughter in the Dark, (i), (ii)
 Narvik, Norway, (i)
 Nasser, Gamal Abdel, (i)
 National Eisteddfod, (i)
 National Theatre, London: RB proposed as Director, (i), (ii)
National Velvet (film), (i)
 Neagle, Dame Anna, (i)
 Nella (ET's maid), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Nelson, Eric, (i), (ii)
 Neruda, Pablo, (i)
 Nesbit, Cathleen, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Neshamkin, Paul, (i)
 Neville, John, (i), (ii)

New Orleans, (i)
New York: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
New York Drama Critics' Circle award (Tony), (i)
New York Times, (i)
Newbolt, Sir Henry, (i)
Newcomb, Pat, (i), (ii)
Newman, Gordon F.: Sir, you bastard, (i), (ii)
Newman, Paul, (i), (ii)
Newsweek (magazine), (i)
Newton, Robert, (i)
Niarchos, Stavros Spyros, (i)
Nicholas, Jack ('Tadpole'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Nicholas and Alexander (film), (i)
Nichols, Mike, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Nickerbocker, Suzy (Aileen Mehle), (i)
Nicolson, Sir Harold: The Age of Reason, (i)
Night of the Iguana, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Night Watch (film), (i)
1984 (film), (i)
Nino (guard), (i)
Niš, Serbia, (i), (ii)
Niven, David, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); The Moon's a Balloon, (i)
Niven, David, Jr, (i)
Niven, Hjordis, (i), (ii)
Nixon, Richard M., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Nobel, Alfred, (i)
Nobel Prize for Literature: awarded to Neruda, (i)
Nobile, Umberto, (i)
Norman, Barry, (i), (ii), (iii)
Norton, Cliff, (i)
Norway: in Second World War, (i)
Nova, Ludmilla, (i)
Novarro, Ramón, (i)
Now Barabbas (film), (i)
Nureyev, Rudolph, (i), (ii)

Oates, Hannah, (i)

Oates, Rhys, (i)
 Ober, Phil, (i), (ii)
 Oberon, Merle, (i)
 O'Brien, Edna, (i)
Observer (newspaper), (i)
 O'Connor, Caroline: as ET's nurse, (i), (ii); in Paris, (i); RB and ET discuss sex with, (i); gratitude to RB and ET, (i); life with Burton family, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); shares birthday gift for RB with Jane Swanson, (i); on Aaron Frosch's multiple sclerosis, (i); taken to Ferrières, (i); travels to Gstaad, (i); travels to Paris, (i); on Warren Beatty, (i)
 O'Connor, T. P., (i)
Odd Man Out (film), (i)
 O'Dwyer, Paul, (i)
Odysseia see Kalizma
Oedipus the King (film), (i)
 Ogmore by Sea, Glamorgan, (i)
 O'Hara, John, (i)
 Old Vic theatre, London, (i)
 Olivier, Laurence, Baron: love of dressing up, (i); schooling, (i); RB asked to write on, (i); acting, (i), (ii); plays at Stratford, (i); made life peer, (i); RB proposed as successor as Director of National Theatre, (i), (ii); presence, (i); qualities, (i); recommends RB to Korda, (i); offers TV film to ET, (i); voice, (i)
 Onassis, Aristotle, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Onassis, Jacqueline (earlier Kennedy), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 O'Neill, Patrick, (i)
 O'Neill, Terry, (i)
Only Game in Town, The (film), (i)n7, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Orchard, John, (i), (ii)
Orient Express (film), (i)
 Orkin, Harvey, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); death, (i)
 Ormond, John, (i)
 Ormsby-Gore, Alice, (i)
 Orwell, George, (i); A Clergyman's Daughter, (i); 1984, (i), (ii)
 Osborne, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); Look Back in Anger (film adaptation), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); A Subject of Scandal and Concern, (i), (ii), (iii); Separation, (i), (ii)
 Oscars (Motion Picture Academy Awards), (i)
Osservatore della Domenica, (i)
 O'Steen, Sam, (i)
 Ostia, Italy, (i)

O'Toole, Peter: in Becket film, (i); travels with RB, (i); at races in Paris, (i); nominated for Oscar, (i); and Romy Schneider, (i); abilities, (i); criticised for Macbeth, (i); voice, (i)

Owen (or Owens), Clifford W., (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Owen, Dai (Hilda's husband), (i), (ii)

Owen, Gareth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Owen, Gerwyn (Dai-Hilda's son), (i), (ii)

Owen, H. (rugby selector), (i)

Owen, Hilda (née Jenkins; RB's sister): birth, (i); marriage, (i)ⁿ⁵⁴; visits Neath, (i); RB walks with, (i); gives money to RB, (i), (ii); in Swansea, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i)

Owen, Moira, (i)

Owen, Robert M. ('Bobby'), (i), (ii)

Owen, Sian (Hilda's daughter), (i)

Owen, Wilfred, (i)

Owens, Arthur ('Johnny'), (i)

Owens, Mr (woodwork teacher), (i)

Oxenberg, Howard, (i)ⁿ¹⁹²

Oxford: Taylor-Burton Building, (i)

Oxford English Dictionary: compact edition, (i), (ii), (iii)

Oxford University: RB takes wartime short course, (i); RB plays in Dramatic Society, (i); RB visits with ET, (i); RB offered tutoring post, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); St Peter's College, (i), (ii)

Pacino, Al, (i)

Palm Springs, California, (i), (ii)

Palmer, Lilli, (i)

Palmer, Raymond E., (i)

Palmer, Royston ('Plum'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Pan, Hermes, (i)

Pantage family, (i)

Paris: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)

Paris, Jerry, (i)

Parker, Joy see Scofield, Joy

Parkhouse, Glen, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Parkinson, Michael: Best: An Intimate Biography, (i), (ii)

Parkinson, Norman, (i), (ii)

Parr, Don, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Parrish, John, (i)

Parry, Bill, (i)

Patrice (Chris's girlfriend), (i)
Payn, Graham, (i)
Paz, Octavio: The Labyrinth of Solitude, (i)
Peacock, Thomas Love: Nightmare Abbey, (i)
Peck, Gregory, (i), (ii)
Pedro (steward), (i)
Pellissier, Tony, (i)
Pennington, William, (i)n6
Penshurst Castle, Kent, (i)
People (newspaper), (i)
Peppard, George, (i)
Pepper, Curtis Bill, (i)
Pepys, Samuel, (i)
Percy, Esmé, (i), (ii)
Perelman, Sidney Joseph, (i)
Perkins, Anthony, (i)
Perry, John, (i)
Petacci, Clara, (i), (ii)
Peter I (the Great), Tsar of Russia, (i)
Petrides, Paul C., (i)
Phil Donahue Show, The (US TV programme), (i)
Philips, Dai John, (i)
Phillips, Brinley, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix)
Phillips, Sian (Mrs Peter O'Toole), (i)
Phipps, B., (i)
Phipps, Nettie, (i)
Phoenix, Arizona, (i), (ii)
Picasso, Pablo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Pickles, Sheila, (i), (ii), (iii)
Piggott, Lester, (i)
Pignatelli, Princess Luciana, (i)
Pike, Mrs (Raymond's mother), (i)
Pike, Raymond, (i)n3, (ii), (iii)
Pinter, Harold, (i)
Pisar, Sam, (i)
Players Club, New York, (i)
Plowright, Joan, (i)

Podesta, Rosana, (i)
Poitier, Sidney, (i)
Polaire, Hal, (i)
Polanski, Roman, (i)
Pomona, Los Angeles, (i)
Pompidou, Claude, (i)
Pompidou, Georges, (i), (ii), (iii)
Ponti, Carlo, (i), (ii)
Pontrhydyfen, Glamorgan, (i), (ii)
Popovi Ć Nikola, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Port au Prince, Haiti, (i)
Port Talbot, Glamorgan, (i); suffers air raids, (i), (ii); YMCA, (i)
Port Talbot Secondary School, (i)
Porto Santo Stefano, Italy, (i)
Portoferraio, (i)
Portofino, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Positano, (i), (ii)
Poston, Ron, (i)
Pound, Ezra, (i)
Powell, Afan W. and Gwylfa P. (twins), (i), (ii), (iii)
Powell, Anthony, (i), (ii), (iii)
Powell, Dilys, (i)
Powell, Enoch, (i)
Powell, Jenkin, (i)n36
Powell, Sandy (Albert Powell), (i)
Preece, Susie, (i)
Preiss, Wolfgang, (i)
Price, Vincent, (i), (ii)
Prince of Players (film), (i), (ii)
Pritchett, Sir Victor S., (i)
Profile of a Superstar (TV film), (i)
Proust, Marcel, (i); A la recherche du temps perdu, (i)
Pryce, Tom, (i)
Pryce-Jones, Alan, (i)
Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Puzo, Mario: The Godfather, (i)
Pyne, Natasha, (i)

Quayle, (Sir) Anthony: at Stratford, (i); in Anne of the Thousand Days, (i), (ii), (iii); manner, (i); childhood in Pontypridd, (i); finances, (i); on plain actresses, (i); on Michael Redgrave, (i); plays in Tarzan film, (i); qualities, (i); runs Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, (i); on art needing form, (i); plays in Sleuth, (i)

Queen Elizabeth II, RMS, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Quilley, Denis, (i)

Quinn, Anthony, (i)

Quinn, Mannock, (i)

Quogue, Long Island, (i)

Raft, George, (i)

Raid on Rommel (film): Hathaway directs, (i), (ii), (iii); filming in Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); costumes, (i), (ii); RB speaks German in, (i), (ii); reception, (i); RB makes without ET, (i); RB sees as joke film, (i)

Raimon, Louis Alexandre de see Alexandre de Paris

Rainier, Prince of Monaco, (i)n17, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)

Rains of Ranchipur, The (film), (i)

Rampling, Charlotte, (i), (ii)

Rattigan, Sir Terence, (i), (ii)

Rattner, Dr, (i)

Raven, Simon, (i)

Rawhide (US TV series), (i)

Ray, Nicholas, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Raymond see Vignale, Raymond

Reagan, Ronald, (i), (ii), (iii)

Rebel Without a Cause (film), (i)

Redé, Alexis Rosenberg, 2nd Baron de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Redfield, William, (i)

Redford, Robert, (i), (ii), (iii)

Redgrave, Sir Michael, (i), (ii), (iii)

Redgrave, Vanessa, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Reed, Carol, (i)

Reed, Douglas: The Siege of Southern Africa, (i)

Rees, Dai, (i)

Rees, Revd Gwilym, (i)

Rees, Revd John Caerau, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Rees, Olive, (i), (ii)

Rees-Williams, Elizabeth see Harris, Elizabeth

Reflections in a Golden Eye (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Reynolds, Christopher T. ('Pop'), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Reynolds, Debbie, (i)
 Rheims, Maurice, (i)
 Ribes, Edouard, comte de, (i)
 Ribes, Jacqueline de, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Richards, Evan, (i), (ii)n116
 Richardson, Sir Ralph, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Richardson, Tony: and Osborne's Subject of Scandal and Concern, (i); infatuation with Jeanne Moreau, (i);
 breach with RB, (i), (ii); as director, (i); and payment for RB's TV appearance, (i); invites RB to play in Antony and Cleopatra, (i)
 Ridley, Jasper: Palmerston, (i)
 Rimbaud, Arthur, (i), (ii)
 Ringer, Ron, (i)
 Ritt, Martin, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ritz, Carl, (i)
 Robards, Jason, (i), (ii), (iii)
Robe, The (film), (i), (ii)
 Roberti, Francesca, (i)
 Roberts, Evan, (i)n116
 Roberts, Meade, (i)
 Roberts, Rachel (Rex Harrison's wife): drinking, (i); in Paris, (i); abusive and outrageous behaviour, (i), (ii),
 (iii); barks at ET on telephone, (i); RB works with, (i)
 Roblin, Thomas J., (i)
 Robson, Dame Flora, (i)
 Rocchi, Gualberto, (i)
 Rockefeller, Margaretta ('Happy'), (i)
 Rockefeller, Nelson, (i)
 Roddy, Jo, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Rodriguez, Martin, (i)
 Rogers, Paul, (i)
 Romanoff, Mike, (i)
 Rome: RB and ET in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii); traffic, (i)
 Ron (RB's brother-in-law), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Ronstadt, Linda, (i)
 Rose, George, (i)
 Rosenberg, Marvin, (i)

Rossi, Alberto di, (i)
 Rossi, Gianetto de ('Gianni Props'), (i)
 Rossier, Dr Alain, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Rossiter, Bernard, (i)
 Roth, Philip: Portnoy's Complaint, (i)
 Rothschild, David René de, (i), (ii)
 Rothschild, Edouard Etienne de, (i)
 Rothschild, Baron Elie de, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Rothschild, Baron Guy de: in Paris, (i); entertains RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); at races, (i); ostracizes Onassis, (i); on sexual practices, (i); wit, (i); gives grand ball at Ferrières, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Rothschild, Baroness Marie-Hélène: entertains RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); at races, (i); ostracizes Onassis, (i); fears drunks, (i); infatuation with Warren Beatty, (i); appearance, (i); birthday celebrations, (i); gives grand ball at Ferrières, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); supposed hypochondria, (i)
 Rothschild, Philippe Sereys de, (i)
 Rowe-Beddoe, David, (i), (ii)
 Rowe-Beddoe, Lisa, (i)
 Rowse, A. L., (i)
 Royal Air Force: RB serves in, (i)
 Rudin, Milton ('Mickey'), (i)
 Russell, Bertrand, (i), (ii)
 Russell, Rosalind, (i)
 Ryan, Cornelius: The Last Battle, (i)
 Rye, Daphne, (i)

Sackler, Howard: Great White Hope, (i)
 St Exupéry, Antoine: The Little Prince, (i), (ii), (iii)
 St Jacques, Raymond, (i), (ii)
 Salinger, Pierre, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Salinger, Mrs Pierre, (i)
 Sallis, Zoe, (i)
 Salt, Jennifer, (i)
 Salt, Waldo, (i)
 Sam, Chen, (i)
 San Felipe, Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii)
 San Francisco, (i)
 Sanderson, Mervyn, (i)
Sandpiper, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Santayana, George, (i)

Sanz, Gaston: as RB's driver and bodyguard, (i), (ii); officiousness, (i); hides Easter eggs for children, (i); and change of clocks for summertime in Italy, (i); life with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB praises for helpfulness, (i); in Monte Carlo, (i); girl friends, (i); in Sardinia, (i); Rachel Roberts abuses, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); younger brother killed, (i); relations with ET, (i); and Geneviève Bujold, (i); at Aston Clinton, (i); crashes RB's Cadillac, (i); helps RB with French, (i); praises Hungarians, (i)

Saragat, Giuseppe, (i)

Sarajevo, (i), (ii), (iii)

Sardinia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Sartre, Jean-Paul: Le Diable et le Bon Dieu, (i); Kean, (i)

Sassoon, Siegfried, (i)

Sava, St, (i)

Schell, Maximilian, (i)

Scherz, Ernst Andrew, (i)

Schlesinger, Arthur: 1000 Days with Jack Kennedy, (i)

Schneider, Romy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Schreiber, Lew, (i), (ii)

Schreyeck, Elaine, (i)

Schulberg, Budd, (i)

Scofield, Joy (Joy Parker), (i), (ii)

Scofield, Paul: plays in A Man for All Seasons, (i); wins acting awards, (i), (ii); and RB's writing on actors, (i); dedicated to theatre, (i); suggested for Raid on Rommel, (i); acting, (i), (ii); as heir to Gielgud, (i); sulks, (i); appearance, (i); and Tynan's notices, (i); Sussex home, (i); in Scorpio, (i); voice, (i)

Scott, George, (i), (ii)

Scott, Gordon, (i)

Seberg, Jean, (i)

Second World War: setbacks (1940), (i), (ii)

Secret Ceremony (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Sellers, Peter, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Seltzer, Nancy ('Alka'), (i), (ii)

Serge, Victor (Victor Lvovich Kibalchich): The Memoirs of a Revolutionary, (i)

Sergio (Mexican boy): confirmation, (i)

Shaffer, Anthony, (i), (ii)

Shaffer, (Sir) Peter: Equus, (i); Sleuth, (i), (ii), (iii)

Shaftel, Josef, (i)

Shah of Iran (Mohammed Shah Pahlavi), (i)

Shakespeare, William: RB praises, (i); Antony and Cleopatra, (i); As You Like It, (i), (ii); Coriolanus, (i);

Hamlet, (i), (ii); King Lear, (i); Measure for Measure, (i); Richard II, (i), (ii); The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv); The Tempest, (i); Timon of Athens, (i)

Sharaff, Irene, (i), (ii), (iii)

Shaw, George Bernard: praises Kotor, (i); despises Shakespeare, (i); The Apple Cart, (i), (ii), (iii); Captain Brassbound's Conversion, (i)

Shaw, Robert, (i), (ii)

Shepridge, John ('Goulash'), (i)

Shimkus, Joanna, (i), (ii)

Shoes of the Fisherman, The (film), (i)

Shriver, Robert Sargent, (i)

Sica, Vittorio de, (i), (ii)

Sicre, Ricardo, (i)

Signoret, Simone, (i)

Silencers, The (film), (i)

Silvera, Albert, (i)

Simenon, Georges, (i), (ii)

Simmons, Jean, (i), (ii), (iii)

Simon, Neil: The Gingerbread Lady, (i)

Simpson, Charles, (i), (ii)

Sinatra, Frank: withdraws from The Only Game in Town, (i); fails to acknowledge Francis Taylor's death, (i); John F. Kennedy stays with, (i); suspected of associating with gangsters, (i), (ii); self-centredness, (i); supports Reagan, (i); announces retirement, (i); writing, (i); and Bogart, (i); Edie Goetz and, (i); provokes press-envy, (i); RB pays TV tribute to, (i)

Sinclair, Sir Archibald (later Viscount Thurso), (i)

Siodmak, Robert, (i)

Sisler, Dr, (i), (ii); son recites Shakespeare speech, (i), (ii)

Sitwell, Dame Edith, (i)

Skidelsky, Robert: Oswald Mosley, (i)

Smatt, Ernie, (i)

Smite (teacher's nickname), (i)

Smith, Basil Fenton, (i)

Smith, Cecil, (i)

Smith, Hardy William ('Bill'), (i)

Smith, Liz, (i)

Smith, (Dame) Maggie, (i), (ii)

Smith, Mick, (i)

Smith, Red, (i)
Smith, Tommie, (i)
Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, (i)
Snow, Charles P., Baron, (i)
Snowdon, Antony Armstrong-Jones, 1st Earl of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Soglo, Christophe, President of Dahomey, (i)
Soldano, Sergio, (i)
Soldati, Mario, (i)
Solomon, Louis, (i)
Solowicz, Maurice, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Solowicz, Maurice B., Fert & Cie (Geneva), (i)
Solzhenitsyn, Alexander: One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich, (i)
Sordi, Alberto, (i)
South Africa, (i)
South Wales: coal industry, (i); air raids on, (i), (ii); RB revisits, (i)
Southern Breeze (yacht), (i)
Spain: RB's love for, (i), (ii)
Spark, Muriel: The Public Image, (i)
Speaight, Robert, (i)
Speer, Albert, (i)
Spender, (Sir) Stephen, (i), (ii), (iii)
Spengler, Oswald: The Decline of the West, (i), (ii)
Spiegel, Sam, (i), (ii), (iii)
Spinetti, Victor, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Spoljar, Branko, (i)
Springer, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)
Spy Who Came in from the Cold, The (film), (i), (ii), (iii)
Squire, William, (i), (ii)
Squire's Mount Cottages, Hampstead, London, (i), (ii)
Stafford, Robin, (i)
Staircase (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi)
Stalin, Josef, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
Stanislavski (Kopnstantin Sergeyevich Alekseyev), (i)
Stapleton, Maureen, (i), (ii)
Stark, Ray, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Starkie, Enid, (i)
Starr, Ringo and Maureen, (i), (ii), (iii)

Steiger, Rod, (i)
 Stennett, Stan, (i)
 Stepanjek, Branimir, (i)
 Stephens, James, (i)
 Stephens, Robert, (i)
 Sterne, Richard L., (i)
 Stevens, George, (i), (ii)
 Stevens, Jack, (i)
 Stevens, Stella, (i)
 Stevenson, Adlai, (i)
 Stevenson, Frances (Countess Lloyd-George), (i)
 Stevenson, Robert Louis, (i)
 Stewart, James, (i)
 Stewart, Mary: The Gabriel Hounds, (i)
 Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Buckinghamshire, (i)
 Strachey, Lytton, (i); Queen Victoria, (i)
 Strasberg, Paula: death, (i)
 Strasberg, Susan, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Stratford-upon-Avon, (i)
 Streisand, Barbra, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Stross, Raymond, (i)
 Sullivan, Ed, (i)
 Sullivan, John, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
Sunday Express, (i)
Sunday Times, (i)
 Super-Chief (railway train), (i), (ii), (iii)
 Sutjeska, battle of (1943), (i)n1, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Swansea: bombed, (i), (ii)
 Swanson, Jane: in Rome, (i); in Sardinia, (i); in Gstaad, (i); and RB's new typewriter, (i); RB's regard for, (i); family house in Yugoslavia, (i); and ET's flight from Yugoslavia to see injured Liza, (i); gives present of books to RB, (i); watches horses parade in Rome, (i); forwards letters from Rome, (i); brings clothes to RB, (i)
 Swanson, Sarah, (i)
 Swanton, E. W., (i)
 Sweeting, Elizabeth, (i)
 Swerdlow, Dr, (i), (ii)
 Switzerland: RB resides in, (i), (ii), (iii); hygienic appearance, (i); see also Geneva; Gstaad

Synge, John Millington, (i), (ii)

Tabori, George, (i)

Taibach, Port Talbot, (i)

Taibach Co-operative Wholesale Society, (i), (ii)

Taming of the Shrew, The (film) see Shakespeare, William

Taormina, (i)

Tashorne, Brian, (i)

Tate, Sharon, (i)

Tatelman, Harry, (i)

Taylor, A. J. P., (i), (ii)

Taylor, Christopher (ET's nephew), (i)

Taylor, (Dame) Elizabeth: RB first meets, (i); in Cleopatra, (i), (ii); marriages and children, (i); romance with RB, (i); divorce from Eddie Fisher and marriage to RB, (i), (ii); contributes to RB's diary, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); gives 1965 diary to RB, (i); reads RB's diaries, (i), (ii), (iii); rows with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix), (xx); suspects RB of relationship with Geneviève Bujold, (i); cracks head on cupboard door, (i); RB reads with, (i); undergoes minor surgery, (i); watches rugby with RB, (i); honeymoon with RB, (i); celebrity, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix); marriage relations with RB, (i); nicknames, (i)n70, (ii)n41, (iii)n43, (iv)n109, (v)n117; dental treatment, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); fittings for clothes, (i), (ii), (iii); with RB in USA, (i); RB teaches to play billiards, (i); in Rome with RB to film Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); curetage for bleeding, (i), (ii); medical examinations and tests, (i), (ii), (iii); loathes Zeffirelli, (i), (ii), (iii); Cyril Cusack threatens, (i); at Edith Jenkins's funeral, (i); cooking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); inheritance from Montgomery Clift, (i); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii), (xiv), (xv), (xvi), (xvii), (xviii), (xix); grey hairs, (i); takes British citizenship, (i); weeps at Aberfan disaster, (i); in Reflections in a Golden Eye, (i); RB fears losing, (i); Eddie Fisher sues for divorce, (i); in Dahomey to film The Comedians, (i); RB's passion for, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); wins New York Critics award for Virginia Woolf, (i); Oscar for Virginia Woolf, (i), (ii); shopping, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); RB lampoons in diary, (i); rebukes Rachel Roberts, (i); decorates yacht, (i); awards, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); Kate Burton sleeps alongside, (i); wart removed from finger, (i); weight, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); shows dislike of people, (i); plays in Boom!, (i); Coward admires, (i); in Corsica, (i); lionized in Paris, (i); jewellery, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi); hysterectomy, (i), (ii); plays in The Only Game in Town, (i), (ii), (iii); relations with Warren Beatty, (i), (ii), (iii); at races in Paris, (i); wealth, (i), (ii), (iii); fear of becoming cripple, (i); in Secret Ceremony, (i); RB beats at gin rummy, (i); gives mink coat to RB for birthday, (i); singing, (i); RB praises, (i); and father's death and funeral, (i), (ii); gives saint's day party, (i); dress, (i); RB misses when separated, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); fondness for daughter Liza, (i); incapacitated, (i), (ii); photographed kissing Duke of Windsor, (i); medication, (i), (ii);

lethargy and boredom, (i); newspaper article by Tommy Thompson, (i); reading, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); appearance, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); weeps at departure of children, (i); ill-health, (i); RB's understanding of, (i); personality and acting, (i); eating, (i), (ii); bleeding, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); effect on others, (i); as godmother to Emma Jenkins, (i); worthwhile films, (i); and David Lewin, (i); 37th birthday (1969), (i); considerateness, (i); similarity to RB, (i); on Quayle's imitation of Gielgud, (i); matron of honour at Bob Wilson-Alice wedding, (i); travels to Cornwall to meet polio victim, (i); in North Moreton, Oxfordshire, (i); RB chooses over Kate, (i); buys complete Everyman's Library for RB, (i); steals book for RB from Foyle's, (i); and Sinatra, (i); returns to Puerto Vallarta, (i); at Oscars (1970), (i); piles, (i), (ii), (iii); given presents in Mexico, (i); and Lucille Ball, (i); stage presence, (i); surgical operation in California, (i), (ii); recovers from operation, (i); Look article on, (i); in Hammersmith is Out, (i); joins RB in Mexico, (i), (ii); susceptibility to illness, (i); visit to Los Angeles, (i), (ii); as child actress in National Velvet, (i); attends Michael Wilding Jr's wedding, (i); back pain, (i), (ii); in Yugoslavia with RB, (i); in knife-throwing act, (i); overdoses on sleeping pills, (i); and Tito film, (i), (ii); acquires kitten, (i); mother's illness, (i); lassitude in Yugoslavia, (i); models for Italian furrier and wears furs, (i); in pain in Yugoslavia, (i); conscious of cultural background, (i); flies to England following Liza's riding accident, (i), (ii); Shahbanu of Iran follows, (i); and bid for X, Y and Zee, (i); with son Michael and grandchild, (i); stops drinking, (i), (ii); defends Sinatra, (i); has hair streaked, (i); gives birthday present to RB, (i); cyst and mole removed, (i), (ii); religious affiliation, (i); at Rothschild party with Princess Grace, (i); behaviour and manners, (i); converts to Judaism, (i); visits Voldengs, (i); gives $5000 to Orchestral Fund of Phoenix, (i); box office position, (i); in Budapest, (i), (ii); late-night exercises, (i); photographed by Parkinson, (i), (ii); and Wolf Mankowitz, (i); fortieth birthday celebrations (1972), (i); eighth wedding anniversary (1972), (i); consorts with Onassis, (i); in Los Angeles hospital, (i); rift with RB, (i); divorce from RB, (i); dysentery, (i); calls RB in Céligny, (i); RB's view of after separation, (i); RB sees again after divorce, (i); visits RB in Céligny, (i); RB remarries in South Africa, (i), (ii); stay in South Africa, (i); lung cancer scare, (i); illness in South Africa, (i); writes journal, (i); affair with Darmanin, (i), (ii); second marriage to RB fails, (i); writing, (i); marries John Warner, (i); excites press envy, (i); in stage production of The Little Foxes, (i); rehearses for Coward's Private Lives, (i), (ii); admits to loneliness, (i); RB re-encounters in New York, (i); troubled state during rehearsals, (i); loses teeth, (i)

Taylor, Francis (ET's father), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); death, (i)

Taylor, Howard (ET's brother): RB and ET visit in San Diego, (i); plays in Boom!, (i)n60; visits RB and ET in Europe, (i), (ii); RB gives money to, (i); adopts Simoleke, (i); RB's fondness for, (i); and father's funeral, (i); at Voldengs' in Phoenix, Arizona, (i); awareness of lesbianism in X, Y and Zee, (i); marriage relations, (i); travels to Hawaii, (i); appearance, (i); celebrates ET's 40th birthday, (i); gives straight talk to ET, (i); on 'grapple-snapping', (i)

Taylor, Layton (Howard-Mara's son), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

Taylor, Mara (Howard's wife), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)

Taylor, Sara (ET's mother): RB lunches with, (i); sends birthday present to RB, (i); and husband's death, (i),

(ii); with Duke of Windsor, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); buys paintings, (i); lunches with RB, (i); influence on ET, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); illness and recovery, (i); impending death, (i); RB's final visit to, (i), (ii); sees X, Y and Zee, (i); decline, (i); garrulity, (i)

Taylor, Simoleke (Howard-Mara's adopted daughter): adopted by Howard and Mara, (i); stays with RB and ET, (i); laughs on film set, (i); brings boyfriend to stay, (i); engagement (to John Gross), (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); expelled from school, (i); untidiness, (i)

Teuber, Andreas, (i), (ii)

Tey, Josephine: A Shilling for Candles, (i)

Thatcher, Tina, (i)

Thesiger, Ernest, (i)

Thomas, Alun, (i)

Thomas, Charles, (i)

Thomas, Dylan: Coghill praises, (i); loathes Vaughan-Thomas, (i); RB's view of, (i); on museums, (i); at ML Club, (i), (ii); RB quotes, (i); biographies, (i); The Beach of Falesa, (i); 'Poem in October', (i); Under Milk Wood, (i), (ii)

Thomas, George (later Viscount Tonypandy), (i), (ii)

Thomas, Gwydion, (i), (ii)

Thomas, Gwyn, (i)

Thomas, R. S., (i)

Thomaster (headmaster), (i)

Thompson, Tommy, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Thomson of Fleet, Roy, Baron, (i)

Thoreau, Henry David, (i)

Thorndike, Dame Sybil, (i)

Thorneycroft, Peter, Baron, (i)

Thoroughly Modern Milly (film), (i)

Thorp, Roderick: The Detective, (i)

Tiel, Vicky, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii)

Time (magazine), (i)

Tinker, Grant, (i)

Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy (TV adaptation), (i)

Tito, Josip Broz: RB plays in film, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); Liza chooses as historical character for school, (i); RB meets, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); appearance, (i); gives cigar-holder to ET, (i); releases German prisoners, (i); accommodation, (i), (ii), (iii); unveils Sutjeska memorial, (i); at Tjentiste ceremony, (i); RB gives Alsatian puppy to, (i); disorder expected following death, (i); popularity, (i); charm, (i); RB's accent for, (i); supposed aristocratic paternity, (i); and Princess Elizabeth ('Elisheba'), (i)

Tiziani, Evan Roberts, (i), (ii)

‘To Play Churchill is to Hate Him’ (RB; article), (i)n72

Tobruk (film), (i)

Today show (USA), (i)

Todd, Liza (ET's daughter): horseriding, (i), (ii); accompanies RB to studio, (i); stays with RB and ET, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); swimming, (i); homework, (i); Eddie Fisher sues ET for custody of, (i); in Gstaad, (i), (ii), (iii); schooling, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); buys present for Maria (stewardess), (i); calls RB ‘daddy’, (i), (ii); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); RB takes to New York, (i); writes to RB, (i), (ii), (iii); RB writes to, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB's fondness for, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v); performs at school, (i); fondness for mother, (i); appearance, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii); RB's concern over intelligence, (i); eleventh birthday, (i); smoking, (i); growing up, (i), (ii); troubles, (i); watches RB's films, (i); attempts to reconcile RB and ET, (i); untidiness, (i); promised horse, (i); character, (i), (ii); treatment of RB, (i); and ET's tiger, (i); with RB in Mexico, (i), (ii), (iii); adolescence, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); school report, (i); comforts ET, (i); sends late birthday present to RB, (i); RB disowns, (i); reading, (i); returns to England from Yugoslavia, (i); ET writes to, (i); injures head in fall from horse, (i), (ii); RB's sex talk with, (i); RB offers to set up on farm with horses, (i); in Rome, (i); returns to school from Rome, (i); chooses Tito as historical character, (i); poor handwriting, (i); religious indifference, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); in London, (i); visits RB in Switzerland, (i); birthday (1975), (i); height, (i); leaves for Leningrad, (i); with RB in Pusey, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Todd, Mike, (i), (ii)

Todd, Mike, Jr: produces TV film on father, (i); visits RB, (i); wife's death, (i)

Todd, Sarah Jane, (i)

Tolo, Marie Lou, (i)

Tom Jones (film), (i)

Tonight (BBC TV programme), (i)

Toronto, (i)

Tourneur, Yves le, (i)

Toynbee, Arnold: A Study of History, (i), (ii)

Toynbee, Philip, (i)

Tracy, Spencer, (i)

Trench, Mrs (headmistress), (i), (ii)

Tristan and Isolt (film), (i)

Troques, Dr, (i)

Trotsky, Leon, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Truetta, Professor, (i)

Truman, Harry S.: Memoirs, (i)

Tuchman, Barbara: Stilwell and the American Experience in China, (i)

Tucker, Brooke, (i)

Tucker, Forrest, (i)
Turner, Lana, (i), (ii)
Turner, Mrs, (i)
Twain, Mark, (i)
Twentieth Century-Fox: employs RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB and ET's disputes with, (i)
Tynan, Kenneth, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
Umberto D (film), (i)
Under Milk Wood (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Under the Volcano (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)

United States of America: RB travels in, (i); presidential election (1968), (i); Civil Rights Bill, (i);
crossword puzzles, (i); RB considers living in, (i); RB's disenchantment with, (i)
Universal Pictures, (i), (ii)
Unruh, Jesse, (i)
Upfield, Arthur, (i)
Ure, Mary, (i)
Ustinov, (Sir) Peter: in Switzerland, (i); in Dahomey, (i); imitations, (i); rotundity, (i); and Hammersmith is Out, (i), (ii), (iii)
Utrillo, Maurice, (i)

Vadim, Roger, (i)
Valachi, Joe, (i)
Valentine, James, (i)
Valéry, Paul, (i)
Van Cleef and Arpel (company), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
Van de Water, Frederick F.: Glory-Hunter, (i)
Van Dyk, Vanessa (Vivienne's daughter), (i), (ii)
Van Dyk, Vivienne (Susan Burton's twin sister), (i), (ii)
Van Dyke, Dick, (i)
Van Gogh, Vincent, (i)
Van Zuylen, Gabrielle, (i)
Vandal, M. (lawyer), (i)
Vaughan-Thomas, Wynford, (i)
Venice, (i)
Verga, Giovanni: La Lupa (play), (i)
Vessna (Yugoslav interpreter), (i), (ii), (iii)
Vickery, Walter, (i)
Victor, Collette, (i), (ii), (iii)

Victor, Paul-Emile, (i), (ii), (iii)

Victoria Falls, (i)

Vidal, Gore, (i), (ii), (iii)

Vietnam, (i)

Vignale, Raymond: ET orders RB not to shout at, (i); in Palm Springs, (i); finds lost diaries, (i); criticises new cook, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); RB attacks, (i); ageing, (i); bores RB, (i); unpaid, (i); and ET's flight to see injured Liza, (i); and Jeffrey Archer's wish to see RB, (i); surgery for sciatica, (i); takes children dancing in Céligny, (i)

Villain (film), (i)n196, (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Villefranche, (i)

Vincent, Roy, (i)

V.I.P.s, The (film), (i), (ii)

Visconti, Luchino, (i)

Vitti, Monica, (i)

Vlaminck, Maurice de, (i)

Vogue (magazine), (i), (ii)

Voight, Jon, (i), (ii)

Voldeng, Karl E. and Mary Frances, (i), (ii)

Voyage, The (film), (i)

Vuillard, Edouard, (i)

Wagner (film), (i)

Wain, John, (i)

Wales: rugby team, (i); see also South Wales

Walker, Alexander, (i)

Walker, Kathryn, (i), (ii)

Walker, Zena, (i)

Waller, Gordon, (i)

Wallis, Hal B., (i), (ii)

Walsh, Dr J. J., (i)

Walter (publicity man), (i)

Walter, Stanley T. J., (i)

Walters, D., (i)

War of the Worlds, The: RB narrates, (i)

Ward, James ('Skip'), (i)

Ward, Sir John Guthrie and Daphne Norah, Lady, (i)

Warhol, Andy, (i)

Warmbrodt, Sam, (i)
 Warner Brothers film corporation, (i)
 Warner, Francis, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Warner, Jack L., (i), (ii)
 Warner, John: marries ET, (i)
 Warner, Sylvia Townsend, (i)n19
 Wasserman, Lew, (i), (ii)
Waterfront (film), (i)
Waterloo (film), (i)
 Waters, Mira L., (i)
 Watson, James D.: The Double Helix, (i)
 Waugh, Don, (i)
 Waugh, Evelyn: RB admires writing, (i); on Anthony Powell, (i); Black Mischief, (i); Vile Bodies, (i)
 Wayne, John, (i)
 Webb, Alan, (i), (ii)
 Webb, Sidney (Baron Passfield), (i)
 Webling, Peggy: The Story of Virginia Perfect, (i)
 Weibel, Berenice, (i), (ii)
 Weibel, René, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Weiller, Commandant Paul-Louis, (i)
 Weiss, Peter: Marat-Sade, (i)
 Weissburger, Arnold, (i)
 Welch, Raquel, (i)n17, (ii), (iii)
 Welles, Orson, (i), (ii)
 Wellington, Wyndham, (i), (ii), (iii)
 Wendy (nurse), (i), (ii)
 Werner, Oskar, (i), (ii)
 West, Morris: Shoes of the Fisherman, (i)
 West, Nathaniel: Miss Lonelyhearts, (i)
Where Eagles Dare (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Wherle, Colin, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 White, Edward Higgins, (i)n83, (ii)
 White, Nat and Louise, (i)
 White, Terence Hanbury, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); The Once and Future King, (i)
 White, Theodore Harold: The Making of the President 1968, (i)
 Whitehead, Paxton, (i), (ii)
 ‘Who Cares about Wales? I Care’ (RB; article), (i)n37

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (film): RB and ET in, (i); RB reads, (i); ET reads, (i); filming, (i); reception, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); nominated for Oscars, (i), (ii); Mike Nichols directs, (i); success, (i)

Wichert, Willi and Chantal, (i)n28

Wicker, Tom, (i)

Wigmoller, Jorgen, (i)

The Wild Ones (pop group), (i)

Wilde, Cornel, (i)

Wilde, Oscar, (i)

Wilder, Billy, (i)

Wilding, Beth (née Clutter, Michael Jr's wife): marriage, (i); birth of daughter, (i); and Michael's untrustworthy behaviour, (i); visits Rome, (i)

Wilding, Christopher (ET's son): horseriding, (i); RB gives compass key-ring to, (i); RB takes to cinema, (i); accompanies RB to work, (i); appears in Taming of the Shrew, (i); writes to RB, (i); holidays from school, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); popularity, (i); girl friends, (i), (ii); attends Millfield school, (i), (ii); in London, (i); on valuing beautiful days, (i); RB writes to, (i); grows, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); retains American accent, (i); withdrawn from Millfield, (i); in Puerto Vallarta, (i); RB's fondness for, (i); character and manner, (i), (ii); visits RB, (i); at ET's 40th birthday, (i); RB phones for Mark Getty's number, (i); Tennessee Williams makes pass at as boy, (i); inheritance from RB, (i)

Wilding, Henry (Michael's father), (i)

Wilding, Leyla (Michael-Beth's daughter), (i)

Wilding, Michael, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)

Wilding, Michael, Jr (ET's son): horseriding, (i); RB gives compass key-ring to, (i); RB takes to cinema, (i); accompanies RB to work, (i); in Rome, (i); appears in Taming of the Shrew, (i); RB writes to, (i), (ii); holidays from school, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); RB meets in Rome, (i); expelled from school, (i), (ii); dates girl, (i); attends Millfield school, (i), (ii); in London, (i); and Claudye, (i); grows, (i); sick from drinking, (i); travels to Geneva with RB, (i); artistic interests, (i); anglicized, (i); manner, (i), (ii); withdrawn from Millfield, (i); religious views, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); writes from Hawaii, (i); appearance, (i); returns from Hawaii, (i); in Gstaad, (i); behaviour, (i); letter of farewell to RB, (i); RB dreams of being dead, (i); travels in Asia, (i); marriage (to Beth Clutter), (i), (ii); aspires to be pop musician, (i); RB's concern for lifestyle, (i); takes drugs, (i); bohemian life, (i); visits Rome with wife and baby, (i); in Wales, (i)

Wilding, Naomi (Michael Junior's daughter), (i)

Williams, Alan, (i), (ii)

Williams, Arthur Neville, (i)

Williams, Billy, (i)

Williams, Brook: writes in RB diary, (i); attends Besancon's funeral, (i); and birth of child, (i); RB attacks, (i), (ii); RB praises, (i), (ii); RB visits in Oxfordshire, (i); career and ambitions, (i); plays badminton with

RB, (i), (ii); visits RB in Switzerland, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); RB explains baseball to, (i); and ET's tiger, (i); attends rehearsals for Oscars, (i); invited to post-Oscars 'Thanksgiving' dinner, (i); in Mexico and California with RB, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi); and Lucille Ball, (i); gives typewriter to RB, (i); on British politics, (i); drinking, (i), (ii), (iii); plays in Raid on Rommel, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); on Clinton Greyn, (i); travels to Chicago, (i); in Yugoslavia, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); ET attacks, (i); RB's disenchantment with, (i); reports accident to Liza, (i); in Rome, (i); and father's selling South Moreton cottage, (i); and RB's filming Jackpot, (i); drives MG sports car, (i); on RB's audience with Duvalier, (i); in New York, (i), (ii)

Williams, Dai Morgan ('Dai Mogs'), (i)

Williams (William), David, (i)

Williams, Elizabeth (Brook's wife; 'Liz'; 'Lillabetta'), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi), (xii), (xiii)

Williams, Elmo, (i)

Williams, Emlyn: speaks at RB's memorial service, (i); RB auditions with, (i); sends scripts to RB, (i), (ii); meets RB in Switzerland, (i); RB's view of, (i); RB meets, (i); prospective honour, (i), (ii); ageing and nervous collapse, (i), (ii); revue numbers, (i); influence on RB, (i); RB offers to buy Oxfordshire cottage, (i); RB acts for, (i); The Druid's Rest, (i)

Williams, Freddie, (i), (ii)

Williams, Gerwyn ('Gin'; 'Ginger'), (i), (ii)

Williams, Hugh, (i)

Williams, I., (i)

Williams, Jack, (i)

Williams, Jake, (i), (ii), (iii)

Williams, Ken, (i)

Williams, Molly (née Shan), (i), (ii)

Williams, Stan, (i)

Williams, Tennessee, (i), (ii)

Wilson, Alice ('Gwladys'), (i), (ii)

Wilson, Edmund: RB criticises, (i); Europe Without Baedeker, (i); Memoirs of Hecate County, (i)

Wilson, Harold (later Baron), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)

Wilson, Otis, (i)

Wilson, Robert (Bob): in Rome, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); predicts outcome of Ali-Cooper fight, (i); drinking with RB, (i), (ii), (iii); RB's rudeness to, (i); accompanies RB home, (i); limited helpfulness, (i); at Cap Ferrat, (i); in Sardinia, (i), (ii); gives birthday present to RB, (i), (ii); in London with RB, (i); uses ET's Rolls Royce, (i); RB attacks, (i); wedding, (i); entertains Geneviève Bujold, (i); in San Felipe with RB, (i); RB's view of, (i); and Romany Bain, (i); awareness of prejudice, (i); in New York, (i), (ii); legacy from RB, (i)

Wilson, Sally, (i), (ii), (iii); death, (i)
 Windsor, (i)
 Windsor, Edward, Duke of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii)
 Windsor, Wallis, Duchess of, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x)
 Winnipeg, Canada, (i)
 Wishart, James, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi)
 Wodehouse, P. G., (i), (ii); Do Butlers Burgle Banks?, (i)
 Wolf, Nero, (i)
 Wolfe, Thomas, (i)
Woman with No Name, The (film), (i)
 Wood, Natalie, (i)
 Woodstock, Oxfordshire, (i)
 Woolf, Virginia, (i)
 Woollcott, Alexander, (i)
 Wooller, Wilfred, (i)
 Wordsworth, William, (i)
 Worsthorne, (Sir) Peregrine, (i), (ii)
 Wynberg, Henry, (i), (ii), (iii)
X, Y and Zee (film), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii), (ix), (x), (xi)

 Yeats, William Butler, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv)
 Yesenin, Sergei, (i)
 York, Michael, (i)
 York, Susannah, (i), (ii)ⁿ⁷, (iii), (iv)
Young Bess (film), (i)
 Young, Gig, (i)
 Young, Howard, (i)
 Young, Nicholas, (i), (ii)
 Young, Terence, (i), (ii)
 Yugoslavia: RB in, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv); purge (1968), (i); character of people, (i), (ii); political unrest, (i); RB's affection for, (i)
Z (film), (i)

 Zabljak, Yugoslavia, (i)
 Zanuck, Darryl Francis, (i), (ii)
 Zanuck, Richard, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v)
 Zapata, Emiliano, (i)
 Zec, Donald, (i)

Zeffirelli, Franco: directs The Taming of the Shrew, (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), (vii), (viii); RB lunches with, (i); Irene Sharaff dislikes and quarrels with, (i), (ii); RB's view on, (i), (ii), (iii); sends memo to RB on showing rushes, (i); McWhorter writes to, (i); produces Barber's Antony and Cleopatra at Metropolitan Opera, New York, (i); calls on RB and ET, (i), (ii); on Fellini, (i); awarded Mask of Silver, (i); on Florence floods, (i); documentary on Florence, (i); shows Taming of the Shrew at Cannes, (i); Cotti admires, (i)

Zola, Emile, (i)

Zuylen, Baron Thierry de, (i)